his ancestors for their lands in Coupland. And the same year (1203-4) he obtained a grant from the king to himself and Ada, his wife, daughter and co-heir of Hugh de Morville, of the forestership of Cumberland. The next year he paid nine hundred marks and five palFREYs to have livery of the property of the said Ada, and to enjoy the forestership of Cumberland as amply as Hugh de Morville had it, without any partition whatsoever. He died in or before the 15th of King John (1213-14), for then Ada, his widow, gave a fine of five hundred marks for livery of her inheritance; as also for her dowry of his lands, and that she might not be compelled to marry again, she espoused, without compulsion however, and without the king's license, Thomas de Multon, in consequence of which the castle of Egremont, and her other lands, were seized by the crown. But upon paying a compensation they were restored, and she had livery of them again. Her first husband, Richard de Lucy, left two daughters, his co-heirs, who became wards to her second husband on his payment of 1,000 marks to the crown, and were married to his sons. Amabil espoused the eldest, Lambert, and conveyed to him the lordship of Egremont; Alice was married to the younger, Alan, and their son, Thomas de Multon, assumed the surname of his maternal family, and was ancestor of the Barons Lucy of Cockermouth.

Multon.

"Thomas de Multon, lord of Multon, co. Lincoln, before his marriage with Ada, widow of the above Richard Lucy, in the 17th King John, being in arms with the rebellious barons, was taken prisoner and confined in Corfe Castle; but on the accession of Henry III. he obtained his liberty and restitution of his lands. Three years after his marriage, he paid £100 fine to the king, and one palFREY, for the office of forester of Cumberland, it being the inheritance of Ada, his wife. In the 17th Henry III., he was sheriff of Cumberland, and remained in office for several succeeding years. Moreover, he was one of the justices of the King's Court of the Common Pleas, from the 8th Henry III., and a justice itinerant for divers years, from the ninth of the same reign. Matthew Paris says of him, 'In his youth he was a stout soldier, afterwards very wealthy, and learned in the laws; but overmuch coveting to enlarge his possessions, which lay contiguous to those of the monks of Crowland; he did them great wrong in many respects.' By his wife . . . he had issue as above stated; and the issue of his second marriage were—

"Thomas, ancestor of the Multons of Gilsland; and "Julian, married to Robert le Vavasour.

He died in 1240, and was succeeded by his eldest son.

"Lambert de Multon, who, as before stated, married Amabil, eldest daughter and co-heiress of Richard Lucy. In the year 1246, he obtained an extraordinary privilege from the Pope, that no one should have power to excommunicate him, but by a special mandate from his holiness. But he, who had this liberty, says Matthew Paris, to sin without punishment, and to do injury to others, riding with rich trappings very proudly, from a trial at law, no sooner alighted from his horse, but (meriting God's judgment) was suddenly smitten with a grievous disease, of which falling to the ground, he died before his spurs could be taken off, being then at his house at Multon, in Lincolnshire. By his first wife he had a son, Thomas, his successor. He espoused secondly, Ida, widow of Geoffrey de Oilli, but had no issue. His death occurred in 1247, when he was succeeded by his son,

"Thomas de Multon, designated 'of Egremont,' who, in 49th Henry III., was in arms against his sovereign. In the 42nd Edward III., he had a grant of free warren in all his demesne lands at Egremont. He married . . . and dying in 1294, was succeeded by his son, Thomas.

"Thomas de Multon, son and heir, was summoned to Parliament from the 27th Edward I., 1299, to the 14th Edward II., 1320; after the 1st Edward II. with the addition of 'de Egremund.' He was previously summoned in the 25th Edward I.; but, says Nicolas, it is doubtful if that writ was a regular summons to Parliament. He was much engaged in the Scottish wars. Lord Multon died in 1332; and was succeeded by

"John de Multon, son and heir, second baron, who was summoned to Parliament from 6th Edward III., 1332, to 8th Edward III., 1334, as 'Johanni de Multon.' He married Annabel, daughter and heiress of Lawrence de Holbeche; but dying without issue, in 1334, his estates, including the manors of Thurstaneston, in Suffolk, and Egremont and Cockermouth, in Cumberland, were divided amongst his three sisters, thus, viz.:—

"Joane, wife of Robert, Baron Fitz Walter, had for her share the castle of Egremont, with the third part of that manor, and the third part of other manors.

"Elizabeth, married to Robert, eldest son of Sir John de Harrington, of Harrington, knight (died before his father), had certain lands at Gosforth, parcel of the manor of Egremont, and a proportion of other manors.

"Margaret, married Thomas, Lord Lucy, had certain lands in Cumberland and parcel of the manor of Egremont, besides a proportion of other estates.

"Among their descendants and representatives, the barony of Multon, of Egremont, is now in abeyance.

'Thus,' says Mr. John Denton, 'this barony was broken into parts, which from the conquest had continued entire, except Loweswater and the lands between Cocker and Derwent, and the five towns granted to Waltheof, as aforesaid; but now of late it is re-united by the earls of Northumberland, who are lords thereof by gift and purchase, but not by descent from any of the co-heirs.'

"Thomas Lord Lucy, second baron, who married one of the sisters and co-heiresses of the last male heir of the Multons of Egremont, as stated above, had issue by her—

"Anthony, who succeeded as third baron.

"Maud, or Matilda, who was twice married—firstly, to Gilbert de Umfraville, earl of Angus, who died without children; and secondly, to Henry Percy, first earl of Northumberland. Upon the marriage of this lady, then sole heiress of the barons Lucy, with the Earl of Northumberland, it was stipulated that the castle and honour of Cockermouth, part of her inheritance, should be settled upon the earl and herself, and the heirs male of their two bodies; failing which, upon the heirs of her body; and in case she should die without issue, then upon Henry Lord Percy, the earl's son and heir by his first wife, and the heirs male of his body, upon condition that the said Henry and his heirs male should bear the arms of Percy quarterly with the arms of Lucy, viz., 'gules, three lucies, ar.' in all shields, banners, &c. The said Maud died without issue.

"Thomas Lord Lucy died in 1365, and was succeeded by his son Anthony.

"Anthony Lord Lucy, third and last baron, was never summoned to Parliament. He was joined with Roger de Clifford in the guardianship of 'the marches towards Cumberland and Westmoreland.' He died 1368, leaving by Joane his wife, widow of William Lord Grey-stoke, an infant daughter, who died in the following year, when the above Maud, countess of Angus, succeeded to the barony of Lucy and the honour of Cockermouth, with the other estates.

Percy.

"The illustrious family of Percy, says Burke, is descended from one of the Norman chieftains (William de Percy) who accompanied William the Conqueror into England in 1066; and it derives its name from the village of Percy, near Villediere. The family of Percy, of Normandy, deduced its pedigree from Geoffrey (son of Mainfred, a Danish chieftain), who assisted Rollo in 912 in subjugating that principality, and acquiring considerable possessions there.

"Henry Percy, fourth Lord Percy of Alnwick, earl marshal, was advanced to the earldom of Northumberland on the day of the coronation of Richard II. in 1377; and was made K. G. in the 7th Richard II. He was appointed lord high constable for life in 1390.

By his first wife, Margaret, daughter of Ralph Lord Nevill of Raby, he had issue,

"Sir Henry, K.G., the gallant and renowned Hotspur, who married Philippa, daughter of Edmund Mortimer, earl of March. He fell at the battle of Shrewsbury, in 1403, during the lifetime of his father, leaving issue,

"Henry, who succeeded as second earl.

"Elizabeth, married firstly, to John Lord Clifford; and secondly to Ralph Nevill, second earl of Westmoreland.

"Sir Thomas, who married a daughter and co-heiress of the Earl of Athol.

"Sir Ralph, who married the other daughter and co-heiress.

"Alan.

"Margaret.

"The earl married secondly, Maud, sister and co-heiress of Anthony Lord Lucy, as stated above. Some years afterwards, however, being proclaimed a traitor, and his lands declared forfeited by King Richard, his lordship, in conjunction with his son, Sir Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur, and Henry Duke of Lancaster, accomplished the dethronement of that monarch, and placed the crown upon the head of Henry Duke of Lancaster, under the title of Henry IV.

"The Earl of Northumberland fell (in 1407-8) in arms against that king, in assisting to place whom on the throne he had been so eminently conspicuous; when his honours became forfeited under an attainer, but were restored in 1414, to his grandson, only son of the valiant Hotspur.

"Henry Percy, second earl of Northumberland, married the lady Eleanor Nevill, widow of Richard Lord Spencer, and daughter of Ralph Nevill, first earl of Westmoreland, K.G. His lordship was made lord high constable by Henry VI.; he was present at the battle of Agincourt, and fell at St. Albans, 23rd May, 1455, fighting under the banner of that monarch. Of the issue of this earl the following curious account is given in a MS. in the British Museum, stated to be extracted 'Ex Registro Monastery de Whitby':— 'Of this Alianor, his wife, he begat IX sonnes and III daughters, whose names be Johanne, that is buried at Whitby; Thomas (created) Lord Egremont; Ratheyne Gray of Ruthyn (wife of Edmund Lord Gray, afterwards Earl of Kent); Sir Rafie Percy; William Percy, a byshop; Richard Percy; John, that dyed without issue; another John called by Vincent, in his MS. baronage in the Herald's Office, John Percy, senior, of Warkworth; George Percy, clerk; Henry, that dyed without issue; besides the eldest sonne and successor, Henry, third earl of Northumberland.'

"He was succeeded by his eldest surviving son,

"Henry Percy, third earl, who had married Eleanor, daughter and sole heiress of Richard Poynings, who died in the lifetime of his father, Lord Poynings; by which marriage the baronies of Poyning, Fitzpayne, and Bryan, came into the family of Percy; and Sir Henry Percy was summoned to Parliament, while his father, the Earl of Northumberland, yet lived (29th Henry VI.), as Baron Poynings. His lordship fell, leading the van of the Lancastrians, sword in hand, at the battle of Towton, on the 29th March, 1461, and his honours became subsequently forfeited by an act of attainder, but were restored to his only son,

"Henry Percy, fourth earl, K.G., who was confined in the Tower from the death of his father until 1469, when he was restored to his freedom and dignity. He married Maud, daughter of the Lord Herbert, and had issue four sons and three daughters. He was slain in a riot at his house, at Coxlodge, co. York, 28th April, 1489, having rendered himself unpopular by the discharge of his duties as lord-lieutenant of the county, in levying a tax for the king's service. His lordship was buried at Beverley; and was succeeded by his eldest son,

"Henry-Algernon Percy, fifth earl, K.G., who married Catherine, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Robert Spencer, Knt., of Spencer-Combe, Devon, by Eleanor, his wife, daughter, and at length co-heir, of Edmund Beaufort, duke of Somerset, by whom he had issue—

"Henry, his successor.

"Thomas (Sir), executed for Ask's conspiracy, 29th Henry VIII., leaving two sons,

"Thomas, } Successively earls of Northumberland.

"Henry, }

"Ingelram (Sir).

"Margaret, married to Henry Clifford, first earl of Cumberland.

"Maud, married to Lord Coniers.

"His lordship died in 1527, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

"Henry-Algernon Percy, sixth earl, K.G. This nobleman married Mary, daughter of George Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury; but dying without issue, in 1537, and his brother, Sir Thomas Percy, having been previously attainted and executed, all the honours of the family became forfeited, and the dukedom of Northumberland was conferred by King Edward VI. upon John Dudley, earl of Warwick; but that nobleman having forfeited his life and honours by treason against Queen Mary, 1553, her majesty was pleased to advance, by letters patent,

Thomas Percy, seventh earl, K.G., son of the attainted Sir Thomas Percy (second son of the fifth earl). He was created, by letters patent bearing date 30th April, 1557, Baron Percy, of Cockermouth and Petworth; Baron Poynings, Lucy, Bryan, and Fitz-Payne; and, on the following day, Earl of Northumberland. His lordship married Anne, daughter of Henry Somerset, second earl of Worcester, by whom he had issue. He was made lord warden of the marches; but being concerned in the rebellion with the Earl of Westmoreland, he was attainted in 1571, and beheaded at York in the following year.

"Henry Percy, eighth earl, brother and heir, succeeded, notwithstanding the attainder of his brother, in consequence of the special entail to him in the patent. He married Katherine, eldest daughter and co-heiress of John Nevill, baron Latimer, by whom he had a numerous family. He remained loyal during the defection of his brother, but, falling under suspicion of favouring the cause of Mary Queen of Scots, he was confined in the Tower, where he was found dead in his bed, having been shot through the heart, 21st June, 1585.

"Henry Percy, ninth earl, K.G., son and heir, married Dorothy, sister of the Earl of Essex, and widow of Sir Thomas Perrot, Knight, by whom he had issue. Although he was a Protestant, yet having a kinsman, Henry Percy, concerned in the gunpowder plot, he fell under suspicion of treason, and, like his predecessor, was confined in the Tower, and sentenced to pay a fine of £30,000. By a singular coincidence, his death occurred on the anniversary of the day which had cost him so much trouble—5th November, 1632.

"Algernon Percy, tenth earl, K.G., son and heir, succeeded his father. He was twice married—firstly, to Anne, daughter of William Cecil, earl of Salisbury; and secondly, to Elizabeth, daughter of Theophilus Howard, earl of Suffolk, the mother of his heir, and through whom he became possessed of Northumberland House, Charing Cross, built by Henry Howard, earl of Northampton. His lordship died 13th October, 1668, and was succeeded by his only son, "Josceline Percy, eleventh earl, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Wriothesley, earl of Southampton, by whom he had an only daughter, Elizabeth. The earl died 21st May, 1670, aged twenty-six.

"The Lady Elizabeth Percy, his sole daughter and heiress, married, 1682, Charles Seymour, sixth duke of Somerset, of whom hereafter.

Seymour.

"Charles Seymour, sixth duke of Somerset, K.G., married the sole heiress of the last earl of Northumberland, by whom he had issue—

"Algernon, who was summoned, on the death of his mother, as Baron Percy, and afterwards succeeded as Duke of Somerset.

"Percy, } Died unmarried.
"Charles, }

"Elizabeth, married to Henry O'Brien, earl of Thomond, who died without children.

"Katherine, married to Sir William Wyndham, Bart., and had issue—

"Charles, second earl of Egremont, of whom hereafter.
"Percy O'Brien, created Earl of Thomond, who died unmarried.

"Frances, died unmarried.

"Anne, married Peregrine Osborn, marquis of Carmarthen, and afterwards Duke of Leeds.

"The duke married, secondly, Charlotte, daughter of Daniel Finch, earl of Winchelsea, and had two daughters—

"Frances, married to John Manners, the celebrated Marquis of Granby, and was mother of Charles, fourth duke of Rutland.

"Charlotte, married Heneage Finch, earl of Aylesford.

"His grace, who was known as 'the proud duke,' died in 1748, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

"Algernon Seymour, seventh duke, who married Frances Thynne, granddaughter of Thomas, first Viscount Weymouth, by whom he had issue—

"Elizabeth, married to Sir Hugh Smithson, Bart., afterwards created Duke of Northumberland, K.G., grandfather of the present duke.

"George, who died during the lifetime of his father, unmarried.

"On the 2nd October, 1749, he was created Baron Warkworth and Earl of Northumberland, with remainder to his son-in-law, Sir Hugh Smithson, Bart., aforesaid; and the next day he was created Baron Cocker-mouth and Earl of Egremont, with remainder to the sons (Charles and Percy, aforesaid) of his sister, the Lady Katherine Wyndham. He died 7th February, 1750, when the dukedom of Somerset descended to the heir male, Edward, and the earldoms of Egremont and Northumberland according to their respective limitations.

Wyndham.

"The family of Wyndham, which is traced back to the time of the Conquest, is of Saxon origin. Ailwardus de Wymondham, being possessed of lands at Wymondham, now Wyndham, co. Norfolk, soon after that period assumed that surname from his possessions.

"On the death of Algernon, seventh duke of Somerset, who was created Earl of Egremont and Baron Cocker-mouth, which occurred 7th February, 1750, those titles devolved on

"Charles Wyndham, second earl, son of Sir William Wyndham, third baronet, M.P., (master of the buck hounds to Queen Anne, and chancellor of the exchequer, 1713,) by his wife, Katherine, daughter of Charles, sixth duke of Somerset. Sir William died 17th July, 1740. His lordship was born in 1710; was secretary of state, 1761; and lord-lieutenant of Cumberland and Sussex. He married, 12th March, 1751, Almeria, sister of George Carpenter, first earl of Tyronnel, and by her (who re-married in 1767, Count Brühl, of Saxony, and died 1784,) had issue,

"George O'Brien, his successor.

"Elizabeth Alicia Maria, married Henry Herbert, first earl of Carnarvon.

"Frances, married Charles Marsham, first earl of Romney.

"Percy Charles.

"Charles William, married, firstly, Anne Barbara Frances, daughter of George Bussy Villiers, fourth earl of Jersey; and widow of William Henry Lambton, Esq.

"William Frederick, married, firstly, Frances Hartford, daughter of Frederick Calvert, Lord Baltimore; and, secondly, Julia de Smorsowski, countess de Spyterki; by the first marriage he had issue,

"George Francis, captain R.N., married Jane, daughter of the Rev. William Roberts, vice-provost of Eton College.

"Frances, married William Miller, Esq.

"Laura, married the Rev. Charles Boulbee.

"This earl, while a commoner, represented the borough of Cockermouth in one Parliament, chosen 21st George II. On the 30th April, 1751, his lordship took the oaths before the king, at St. James's, as lord-lieutenant and custos-rotulorum of the county of Cumberland. His lordship died 21st August, 1763, and was succeeded in his titles by his son, "George O'Brien Wyndham, third earl, F.R.S., and F.S.A., who was born 18th December, 1751, and educated at Eton. His Majesty George II. was sponsor at his baptism.

"On the death of Charles, duke of Richmond, his lordship was appointed lord-lieutenant of Sussex, 6th November, 1819. He executed that important office until, in 1835, his increasing infirmities compelled him to resign it. During the two following years his health rapidly declined until his death, which occurred at the advanced age of eighty-five, 11th November, 1837, at Petworth. His lordship's remains were deposited on the 21st, in a vault built by himself at Petworth.

"The Earl of Egremont was distinguished no less for the princely style of magnificence in which his correct taste patronised the fine arts than for the countless acts of charity and liberality which brought down upon him the blessings of the needy living in the neighbourhood of his palace—the 'princely Petworth,' described as 'the temple of the noblest productions of genius, of whatever the scholar, the sculptor, and the painter could produce.' Had he not been possessed of a splendid fortune, with a rental, of late years, of £81,000 per annum, his liberal spirit could not have derived enjoyment from dispensing, during the last sixty years of his life, the immense sum of £1,200,000 in acts of charity and liberality.

"By a lady, now deceased, who bore the name of Mrs. Wyndham (daughter of the Rev. — Iliff, of Westminster school), the earl had issue,

"George, a colonel in the army.

"Henry, a major-general in the army, of whom hereafter as Lord of Egremont.

"Charles, a colonel in the army.

"Frances, married to Sir Charles Merrick Burrell, Bart., and has issue.

"Mary, married to George Earl of Munster, eldest son of his late Majesty William IV., and has issue.

"Charlotte, married to John King, Esq.

"The earl left by will, Petworth, and the adjoining estates, to Colonel George Wyndham, his lordship's eldest son; the Cumberland estates to Major-General Wyndham, the second son; to Colonel Charles Wyndham, the youngest son, the whole of his funded property, amounting to about £230,000. To each of his daughters he left £45,000.

"An excellent portrait of the noble earl is engraved in mezzotint, by Reynolds, from a painting by T. Phillips, Esq., R.A.; a smaller copy of the same is in Fisher's National Portrait Gallery.

"The present earl, George Francis, his lordship's nephew, being the son of the Hon. Frederick William Wyndham (born 30th August, 1785), succeeded to the old family estate of Orchard-Wyndham, co. Somerset, and others in Cornwall and Devonshire.

"Major-General Henry Wyndham, second son of George, third earl of Egremont, succeeded, on the death of his father, in 1837, to the lordship of the barony of Egremont, and the honour of Cockermouth, with other his estates in Cumberland. General Wyndham is one of that annually-decreasing number of field officers who were present at the brilliant achievements which have immortalised the field of Waterloo. His Cumberland residence is Cockermouth Castle—a baronial fortress supposed to have been built soon after the Conquest,—the seat of the lords of Allerdale, and whose history is closely connected with that of Egremont, having been possessed by William de Meschines, Fitz-Duncan, the Lucys, the Maultons, the Percys, the Seymours, and the Wyndhams.

The castle of Egremont, the ancient baronial seat of the lords of Egremont, occupies the summit of an eminence a short distance to the south-west of the town, and was formerly a place of great strength and importance. It was built by William de Meschines, soon after the Norman conquest, and is supposed to stand upon the site of a Roman camp or station, but this is only conjecture. The approach and grand entrance, from the south, was by a drawbridge over a deep moat; and the entrance to the castle was by a semicircular archway, with a groined roof, guarded by a strong square tower, which is the principal part of the fortress now standing. The outer wall enclosed a large square area, but has suffered so much from the destroying hand of time that we are completely ignorant of the manner in which it was fortified. On the side next the town are the remains of a postern; and on the west are three narrow gateways, which have communicated with the outworks, and are of a more modern style of architecture than the other portions of the ruins. Beyond these gates is an artificial mount, on which there formerly stood a circular tower, seventy-eight feet in perpendicular height above the ditch. Though but little now remains of this once strong structure, enough is still visible to give a very fair idea of what it was when in the days of its pride and glory. It was at the gate of this castle that the horn was hung in crusading days which was twice blown by Sir Eustace de Lucy. As tradition tells us, Sir Eustace and his brother Hubert rode forth together to the holy wars; and Sir Eustace blew the horn, saying to his brother, "If I fall in Palestine, do thou return and blow the horn, and take possession, that Egremont may not be without a Lucy for its lord." In Palestine, ambition of the wide domain of this lordship so took possession of Hubert, that he hired ruffians to drown his brother in the Jordan, and the ruffians assured him that the deed was done. He returned home, and stole into the castle by night—not daring to sound the horn. But he soon plucked up spirit, and drowned his remorse in revels. In the midst of a banquet, one day, the horn was heard—sounding such a blast that the echoes came back from the fells, after startling the red deer from its covert and the wild boar from his drinking at the tarn. Hubert knew that none but Eustace could or would sound the horn; and he fled by a postern, while his brother Eustace entered by the gate. Long after, the wretched Hubert came to ask forgiveness from his brother, and, having obtained it, retired to a convent, where he practised penance until he died.

THE TOWN OF EGREMONT.

The ancient market town of Egremont, which consists principally of one wide street, is pleasantly situated on the west bank of the river Ehen, over which there is a bridge of two arches, six miles south-east of Whitehaven, and about three miles from the western coast. Despite its Roman name—the Mount of Sorrow—it has a very cheerful appearance. It is stated to have been a borough at the period when parliamentary representatives were remunerated for their services; and that, to avoid the expense of a member, the burgesses petitioned to have the town disfranchised, which was accordingly done. About the reign of King John, Richard Lucy, lord of Egremont, granted to the burgesses of the town a charter of privileges, by the provisions of which Egremont was for a long time governed. This charter appears to have granted burghage tenure in the town upon condition of the burgesses finding armed men for the defence of the castle forty days at their own charge. The lord was entitled to forty days' credit for goods and no more; and the burgesses might refuse to supply him till the debt which had exceeded that date was paid. They were bound to aids for the redemption of the lord and his heir from captivity, for the knighthood of one of the lord's sons, and for the marriage of one of his daughters. They were to find him twelve men for his military array, and were to hold watch and ward. They were prohibited from entering the forest with bow and arrow. They were restrained from cutting off their dogs' feet within the borough, as being a necessary and customary defence; this restriction points out that within the limits of forests, the inhabitants keeping dogs for defence were to lop off one foot or more, to prevent their chasing the game; which did not spoil them for the defence of a dwelling. A singular privilege appears in the case of a burgess committing fornication with the daughter of a rustic, one who was not a burgess, that he should not be liable to the fine imposed in other cases for that offence, unless he had seduced by promise of marriage. The fine for seducing a woman belonging to the borough was three shillings to the lord. By the rule for inspecting the dyers, weavers, and fullers, it seems those were the only trades at that time within the borough under the character of craftsmen. The burgesses who had ploughs were to till the lord's demesne one day in the year, and every burgess to find a reaper—their labour was from morning to the hour of noon, or in other works from six in the morning till three in the afternoon. The inquisition made in 1578, and mentioned in our account of the barony at page 380, tells us that, "There is an ancient borough and burgesses at Egremont, and they have there (as they allege) an ancient corporation, by name of bailiff and burgesses, and have by the said officers the use of the market and direction of the order of the fair at Ravenglass which they now occupie and exercise, and have at Ravenglass in the meadows there (in the time of the fair) certain dailes or swarths of grass for their horses with other duties, and they have also certain liberties in the borough, in the demesnes, &c., at Egremont, with divers ordinances and laws confirmed to them by charters." The market, which was held in ancient times on Wednesday, is now held on Saturday.

and is well supplied with corn, butchers' meat, and other provisions. Annual fairs for horses, cattle &c., are held on the 17th of February, and the third Friday in May. On the three days following the 18th of September, a sort of feast is kept, when the burgesses are allowed to sell ale without a license. A hiring for servants is held on one of the market days at Whitsuntide and Martinmas. A court baron for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held here by adjournment every sixth Friday, under General Wyndham, the lord of the barony of Egremont. A court leet and a customary court for the purpose of appointing inspectors of nuisances, &c., are held annually in the spring, at the King's Arms Inn. Formerly the tenants paid 1d. each to the lord yearly, for the burgage tenements. Two bailiffs together with constable, hedge and corn viewers, and assessors of damages, are chosen annually at the court leet. The office of borough sergeant, though still preserved, is not now an annual appointment. Here are the flax and tow spinning-mills of Messrs. Robert Brisco and Co., and Messrs. Thomas W. C. Chapman and Co.; the former employ about 200 hands, and the latter about eighty. There are also three tanneries, a skin yard, and a brewery in the town, as also a corn-mill. The Woodend iron-ore mine, worked by Messrs. James H. Atwood and Son, contains two shafts, of the respective depths of ten and fourteen fathoms. The vein of ore varies in thickness from two to fourteen feet. About seventy persons are employed here. Egremont is lighted with gas, the works being established in 1853, by a company of shareholders, in 120 shares at £10 each. There are thirty town lamps; and the quantity of gas consumed is about 1,300,000 cubic feet per annum.

THE CHURCH.

Egremont church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a neat edifice, consisting of a nave, chancel, and square tower, containing two bells, one of which is ancient and bears a Latin inscription. The interior is well pewed, and has a handsome appearance. Gas fittings were introduced in 1854. There are several mural monuments to members of the Hartley, Poole, Birley, and Benson families. At an early period the church of Egremont was given by William de Meschines to the priory of St. Bees, a cell of the abbey of St. Mary, at York. After the dissolution, Edward VI., in the second year of his reign (1548-9) granted to William Ward and Richard Venables, one messuage, one garden, and two acres of land in Brisco, in the county of Cumberland, which had previously belonged to a chantry priest in the church of Egremont, and had been assigned to him for his support. The same king, in the following year, granted to Henry Tanner and Thomas Becker, messuages and tenements in the parish of Egremont, in the possession of different persons, late belonging to a stipendiary in St. Mary's Church, at Egremont. In 1426 the abbot of St. Mary's presented to this church. The presentation subsequently came to the ears of Northumberland, and from them passed to the crown, and in 1569 Queen Elizabeth presented. In 1673 the Earl of Essex and William Pierpont occur as presenting; and in 1685 the Duke and Duchess of Somerset. The advowson has since remained in the lords of the barony, and is now held by General Wyndham. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the King's book at £9 11s. It was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £45 15s. 10d., and is now worth about £249 a year. The tithes have been commuted for a yearly rent charge of £206 4s. 3d. The parish register commences in 1630.

RECTORS.—Edmund Metcalfe, occurs 1335; — Antrobus occurs about 1642; — Halsell,¹ —; Richard Tickell, 1673; Richard Tickell, 1685; Henry Ogley, 1692; Thomas Robinson, 1700; Joseph Ritson, 1737; Thomas Jameson, 1758; Nicholas Turner, 1787; Robert C. Herbert, 1789; Alexander Scott, —; William Henry Leech, 1836.

The rectory is a commodious building situated near the church.

The Primitive Methodists and Wesleyan Association have places of worship here.

The parish school was rebuilt in 1844. There is also an infant school, which was established in 1855, in the old poorhouse.

CHARITIES.

Speaking of Egremont, the Charity Commissioners observe: "In our inquiries into the charities belonging to this parish we met with considerable difficulties, owing to the loss of nearly all the documents relating thereto. The following account, which is the best we have been enabled to collect, is in many respects defective." We subjoin their account.

"Donor unknown.—There are two pieces of land, situate in the parish of St. John's, in Cumberland, called Doredale and Low Close, consisting of about three acres, which are supposed to have been bought for £32 10s., by the churchwardens and overseers of this parish, in the beginning of the last century. It is understood that the purchase money was part of a fund called the parish stock, the whole amount of which is unknown, as well as its origin. This property was let from year to year, from 1779 to the time of our inquiry, at £2 10s. per annum; the rent having previously been £2 5s. Since our inquiry, it has been let in public for £5 10s. per annum. For the whole period through which we could trace the application of this rent, it appears to have been, and is now, distributed every year, on Easter Sunday, amongst poor persons of Egremont who have not regularly received parochial relief.

¹ Ejected, in 1662, for nonconformity.

"Thomas Benn's Charity.—By an inscription in the church it appears that the Rev. Thomas Benn, vicar of Millom, who died in 1743, left £25, the interest thereof to be given in bread, on Sundays, to such poor people as should come to church.

"John Nicholson's Charity.—The date as well as the particulars of this bequest are unknown. It is supposed that one John Nicholson left by will £100, to be applied in putting out apprentices, by lending £10 to the master of any boy, for seven years, without interest. The loan of £10 is so trifling an object to any person taking an apprentice, that it has been found impossible to comply with the supposed directions of the testator; and, in consequence thereof, the sum of £100 has been put out to interest for many years, and the produce thereof applied in the education of poor children. The interest is applied, together with other sums raised annually by voluntary subscription, in the support of a school; and, from these sources, £40 per annum is paid to a school-master, who teaches all the poor children of the parish without any additional charge.

"Margaret Richardson's Charity.—Mrs. Margaret Richardson, by will, dated 12th August, 1784, bequeathed to the poor householders of Egremont the sum of ten guineas. There is no entry in the parish-book of this date, relating to the receipt of this legacy. It appears, however, in the trust account delivered by the executor of the testatrix to her residuary legatee, that the executor took credit to himself for the sum in question as having been paid by him; and it is supposed that the money was distributed at the time amongst the objects of the testatrix's charity.

"The National School.—This school, which is chiefly supported by voluntary subscriptions, affords education to about sixty-five children. It has an endowment of about £6 per annum, for which six poor boys are taught free.

"Mrs. Jane Birley's Charity.—Mrs. Jane Birley, of Carleton Lodge, who died in 1833, left by will the interest of £50, to be distributed annually, on Good Friday, to the poor of the parish who are not receiving parochial relief."

There is a mechanics' institution, which was founded in 1846. It now numbers about sixty members, and has a library of about 450 volumes. The members are of two sorts—ordinary, paying seven shillings a year; and honorary, paying ten shillings.

Gillfoot, situated near the town, is the property of the trustees of the late Thomas Hartley, Esq., and is at present occupied by his widow and family.

Hartley of Gillfoot.

The late THOMAS HARTLEY, Esq., of Gillfoot, was born September 29th, 1802, and married April 10th, 1830, Georgianna, youngest daughter of George Rimmington, Esq., of Tyne Field House. He was a magistrate for the county, and served the office of high sheriff of Cumberland in 1839. Mr. Hartley was the son of Thomas Hartley, Esq., by Anne, his wife, eldest daughter of Thomas Hartley, Esq., of Gillfoot, and grandson of John Hartley, Esq., of Whitehaven, and Elizabeth Milham, his wife. Mr. Hartley had two brothers—Wilfrid, M.A., in holy orders; and Grayson, died in New South Wales, October, 1838; and three sisters, viz., Elizabeth, married in November, 1836, to the Rev. J. Carter; Catherine, married in July, 1831, to the late Very Rev. R. Parkinson, D.D.; and Anne Eliza, married in May, 1834, to D'Arcy Boulton, Esq. Mr. Hartley died in 1855.

Arms.—Arg. on a cross, gu., pierced, of the field, four cinquefoils, or, in the 1st and 4th quarters, a martlet, sa.

Crest.—A martlet, sa., holding in the beak a cross-crosslet, fitchés, or.

Springfield, four miles south-south-east of Whitehaven, is the seat and property of Henry Jefferson, Esq.

Park House, about the same distance from Whitehaven as Springfield, is the seat of John Stirling, Esq.

Catgill Hall, now a farm-house, is the property and residence of Mr. Thomas Nelson.

GOSFORTH PARISH.

THE parish of Gosforth is bounded on the north by Penrith, on the west by the Irish Sea, on the south by Drigg, and on the east by Irton and Nether Wasdale. It possesses no dependant townships, but comprises the four constablenicks of Gosforth, Boonwood, High Bolton, and Low Bolton, whose united area is 8,626 acres. The inhabitants are much scattered over the parish, and are engaged in agricultural pursuits—they attend the markets at Whitehaven. The Whitehaven and Furness Junction railway runs through the parish, and has a station at Seascales.

The population of Gosforth in 1801 was 652; in 1811, 685; in 1821, 888; in 1831, 935; in 1841, 1,113; and in 1851, 1,116. The rateable value is £4,589 10s. 8d. This parish, though not mountainous, has rather a high situation. The soil is chiefly of a light red sand, and is watered by several rivulets, which follow an easterly direction, and fall with the Bleng into the Irt. Large quantities of freestone are found here, but neither coal nor limestone.

The manor of Gosforth was held in ancient times by a family bearing the local name, the last of whom, Robert Gosforth, left his lands to be divided among his five co-heirs, viz., Mariot, the wife of Allan Caddy, his eldest daughter; Isabel, wife of Henry Hustock, his second daughter; Johan, wife of Adam Garth, the third daughter; Eleanor, wife of William Kirkby, the fourth daughter; and John Multon, son of Agnes Eastholme, the fifth co-heir. In the 2nd year of Edward III. (1328), Sarah, the widow of Robert Leyburn, held Caddy's part; John Pennington held Kirkby's part; and the said John Multon the residue. An inquisition taken in 1578 informs us that at that date, "The tenants of the lands in Gosforth hold the said lands by like service and by the rent of 12s. 8d. for free rent, cornage, seawake, and sergeants' food, de propria Dni. Fitzwater." In Mr. John Denton's time the manor was held by Pennington, Kirby, and Senhouse of Seascale. A Mr. Robert Copley, who was for many years steward to Sir William Pennington, of Muncaster, and who held the office of chief bailiff of Copeland Forest under the Earl of Northumberland, purchased that portion of the manor of Gosforth which had belonged to the Kirkbys, and is said to have erected a large handsome house and gardens, but these had become ruinous in 1776. The manorial rights are now possessed by the freeholders, but General Wyndham is lord paramount, and the landowners attend his court, but pay no fines. Gosforth Hall adjoins the church, and is now used as a farmhouse. From its appearance it seems to have been erected in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and most probably by the Copleys. Over an old chimney-piece are the initials, R. C. J. (Richard and Jane Copley), and the date 1673.

Bolton is another manor in this parish, and appears to have been possessed at an early period by the Wayberghwaite family, one of whom, William de Wayberghwaite in the 23rd year of the reign of Edward I. (1294-5), held £10 lands there of Thomas de Multon, of Gilsland, and his land in Wayberghwaite of the lord of William. In the 35th Henry VIII. (1543-4), William Kirkby held the manor of Bolton of the king, as of his castle of Egremont, by knight's service, paying yearly

10s. cornage, and seawake, homage, and suit of court, and witnessman. At the same time he held lands in Gosforth and Cleator, by the like homage, fealty, and suit of court, and paying to the king a fee farm rent of 8s. for the lands in Gosforth, and 2s. for the lands in Cleator; and 2s. seawake, and also pature of two sergeants. It subsequently became the property of Lancelot Senhouse, whose father was third brother to the house of Seascales, and he had it by grant from the lord thereof, his brother. The manor came afterwards to the Lutwidge family, one of whom, Charles Lutwidge, Esq., held it in 1777, from whom it passed successively to his younger brothers, Henry and Admiral Skeffington, coming ultimately to the nephew of the latter, Major Skeffington Lutwidge.

The manor of Seascales and Newton was anciently the seat of the family of Senhouse, by whom it was held for many generations. In 1578 "Thomas Senhouse held the manor of Newton by homage, fealty, and suit of court, and by knights' service, paying yearly for cornage, 5s.; seawake, 3s.; serjeant's food, and free rent, which wholly belongs to the lord pro partia Dni. de Lucy." In 1688 Seascales was the seat of John Senhouse, Esq. It was subsequently purchased by Mr. Blaylock, a merchant of Whitehaven, whose daughter and heiress married Augustus Earl, Esq., from whom it passed to his two sisters, co-heiresses, and eventually to the Lutwidge family. After the death of Charles Lutwidge, Esq., the manor of Seascales and Newton came, by purchase, to Sampson Senhouse, Esq., of London. It is now the property of Anthony Benn Steward, Esq., of Chapel House, who, in 1853, purchased the manor, with the estates, from Lady Senhouse. Seascales Hall is now a farmhouse. On the wall is an escutcheon, cut in stone, bearing the arms of Senhouse and Ponsonby quarterly, and the initials T. S. and M. S., and the date 1606. This old building has lately undergone considerable repair, at a cost of about £1,000, by the present owner, A. B. Steward, Esq.

General Wyndham is lord of the common land, and lord paramount of the whole parish, with the exception of the manor of Seascales and Newton. The landowners are Anthony Benn Steward, Esq.; Thomas Brocklebank, Esq.; the trustees of the late Dr. Robinson; Captain Charles Parker; Samuel Irton, Esq.; Captain Scott; Messrs. Joseph Youngusband, J. and J. Gaitskill; Rev. John Fox; John Singleton; the trustees of the late Isaac Hartley; John Hartley, Wm. Poole, Joseph Jackson, John Tyson, Martin Ashburn, Isaac Leech, John Colebank, John Sherwen, John Walker, Isaac Leech, Edward Robinson, and Matthew Sherwen. The commons were enclosed in 1811.

The village of Gosforth is situated on the southern declivity of a gentle eminence near the Whitehaven and Ulverstone road, about six miles south-south-east of Egremont, and five miles north of Ravenglass. It is large, and contains several good houses, and two cornmills. The plague seems to have been very violent here in 1599, for we learn from the parish register, that in that year, no fewer than 100 persons, out of a population of 600, fell victims to the pestilence.

THE CHURCH.

Gosforth church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a neat structure, consisting of a nave and chancel, and a bell turret, containing three bells. It underwent considerable alterations in 1789, when nearly all the external marks of antiquity were destroyed. In the interior we have, however, the ancient chancel arch, the piers of which are Norman, though the arch itself is pointed. There are three galleries, the one at the west end containing the organ. There are a few mural monuments. In an old chest kept in the church is a black letter copy of the Book of Homilies, folio, 1633. In the churchyard, on the south side of the church, is a cross, supposed to be of Danish origin.¹ It is about fourteen feet in height and about fourteen inches in mean diameter; the lower part, which is fixed in a pedestal of three steps, is rounded, but the upper part, being rather more than half the length, is nearly square. The four sides are enriched with various guilloches and other ornaments, besides several figures of men and animals in bas relief. It is remarkable that the figure of a man on horseback is represented upside down, and another is represented in the same manner on the west side. Formerly another column stood at the distance of about seven feet from the existing cross, and between the two was a stone placed horizontally, on which was rudely sculptured the figure of a large and antique sword. The rector has in his possession fragments of one or two other crosses, supposed to have been found in different parts of the churchyard; as also some other remains of bygone days which have been found in the neighbourhood. The parish registers commence in 1571. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £17 14s. 7d., and was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at the yearly value of £35; and to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, at £85 per annum. In 1334 William Pennington, Esq., of Muncaster, died seized of the advowson of this church. The patronage seems afterwards to have become vested in the crown; and in 1552 Edward VI., by his letters patent, granted the advowson and right of patronage to Fergus Greyme, gentleman, his heirs and assigns. In March, 1564, a license was granted to Fergus Greyme empowering him to alienate the same to Thomas Senhouse, gentleman, for the fine of 16s. 10d. paid into the exchequer. In this manner the advowson became the property of the Senhouse family, the representatives of the late Sir H. F. Senhouse being patrons.

Patrons.—Edward Kelliel occurs 1595; John Benn, 1602; Thomas Morland, 1654; Christopher Denton, 1791; Peter Murtwade, 1793; Charles Cobb Churchhill, 1772; Henry Bragg, 1808; Charles Leathley Senhouse, 1847; Francis Forl Pinder, 1835.

The rectory is a pleasant residence, adjoining the churchyard.

CHARITY.

Previously to the year 1797, there was a sum of £61, the interest of which was given away to poor householders of Gosforth not receiving parish relief. It is not known from what source this fund was derived. In 1797 Henry Lutwidge, in whose hands the money had been placed, died insolvent, and £32 11s. was the whole that the parish could recover. The expenses of prosecuting this claim was paid out of the poor rates. The sum of £32 11s. is now out at interest, and produces £1 7s. per annum, which is distributed by the parish officers and the minister, on the Sunday after Easter, amongst four or five poor householders not receiving parish relief.

High Bolton and Low Bolton are two constablewicks in this parish, respectively one mile south-east and one mile south of Gosforth. Boonwood is another constablewick, one mile north. At this latter place fairs are held twice a year, viz., on the 25th of April for cattle, and on the 18th October for cattle and horses. When the commons were enclosed, in 1811, six acres were allotted for these fairs.

At a short distance from the village of Gosforth is a neat modern mansion called Seascale, the residence of Lady Senhouse; and within about a mile south-east is Park Nook, the residence of Captain Charles Parker. Near the railway station at Seascales is the Scawfell Hotel, the property of Mr. John Tyson, which affords excellent accommodation to the numerous visitors who now frequent this place.

¹ Engraved in Lyson's Magna Britannia, and in the Gentleman's Magazine, for 1709.

HALE PARISH.

THIS parish, which extends about four miles from east to west, and one mile and a half from north to south, is bounded by the parishes of Egremont, St. John's, St. Bridget's, and St. Bees. It contains the joint townships of Hale and Wilton, and is watered by several small streams. The soil is in general of a light gravelly nature, well adapted for barley, wheat, and turnips. Freestone and Limestone are found here. A few of the houses in the village of Beckermere are in this parish.

The area of Hale, or Haile, is 3,220 acres, and its rateable value £1,727. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 220; in 1811, 247; in 1821, 249; in 1831, 272; in 1841, 305; and in 1851, 330.

Shortly after the Conquest, the manor of Hale, with Gosforth, Bolton, and Santon, was granted, by the first lords of Egremont, to Thomas Multon of Gilsland. It subsequently came into the possession of a family who assumed the name of Hale, and in the reign of Henry III. we find it held by Alexander de Hale; and in the 23rd of Edward I. (1294-5), Agnes and Constance, his daughters, held it of Thomas de Multon. In an inquisition post mortem of John de Multon, in the reign of Edward II., the name of Christian occurs as proprietor. Agnes, one of the co-heiresses of the above named Alexander de Hale, brought her share to the Ponsonby family, who eventually became sole proprietors. In "1578 Simon Ponsonby held the hamlet of Hale, for which he paid 2s., de proportia Dni. Fitzwater." At the same time he also held "the moiety of Wilton, late the lands of Alexander Hale, rendering for them per annum, de proportia Dni. Fitzwater, 1s. 6d." Richard Hale held at Wilton one tenement, for which he paid 8d. a year; and Roger Kirkby and others held there a tenement, for which they rendered 4d. Miles Ponsonby, Esq., is the present lord of the manor; besides whom, William Walker, Esq., Messrs. William Russell, Thomas Walker, John Johnson, John Smith, Richard Jackson, John Wood, William Bragg, Frederick G. Brydle, John Birkett, William Benn, Henry Mossop, Anthony Lewthwaite, Peter Sherwen, Mrs. Eleanor Thompson, and the Lowther charity, are the principal landowners. The parish was enclosed in 1811, when lands were allotted to the Earl of Lonsdale, as impropricator of the tithes.

The village of Hale is about two and a half miles south-east by south of Egremont, where there is a small school.

THE CHURCH.

Hale parish church is a plain building, standing in a beautiful and secluded situation, a short distance from the village, with a turret, containing two bells. As early as the year 1345, the church of Hale was appropriated, by the Archdeacon of Richmond, to the priory of Conishead, in Lancashire, reserving to himself a yearly pension of £6 8s. The benefice is not mentioned in the King's Book. It was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £7, but is now worth about £83 a year. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale, who is also impropricator, and incumbency of Rev. John Fox, M.A. The parish registers commence in 1545.

CHARITY.

Poor Money.—In a parish book containing accounts of the distribution of the poor money, commencing in 1715, is the following entry, dated December 21st, 1718:—"Then disbursed of 30s., being the interest of £30, left to be disposed of, every St. Thomas's Day, to the poor of the parish of Haile, and to other pious and charitable uses, at the discretion of the lord of the said manor of Haile, curate, and churchwardens."

Hale Hall, the seat and property of Miles Ponsonby, Esq., is a neat mansion, occupying a pleasant situation, and has for many ages been the residence of the Ponsonby family.

Ponsonby of Ponsonby and Hale.

The Ponsonbys are descended from an ancient and noble family of Picardy, in France, and were established in England by one of the companions in arms of William the Conqueror. At an early period they settled at Hale, where they assumed the name of Ponsonby, from the lordship of Ponsonby, which they possessed, and had the office of barber to the King of England conferred upon them. Owing to a change of the name from Ponsonby to De Hale, it is not easy to give the descent of this family regularly.

There was one PONSON, in the reign of King Stephen and Henry I. His son JOHN FITZ-PONSON, lived in the reign of Henry II. This is probably he who gave the church of Ponsonby to the priory of Conishead.

ALEXANDER, son of Richard Ponsonby, lived about the time of Edward II., WILLIAM in the reign of Edward III., and ROBERT in that of Richard II.

During the reign of Henry III. Hale was the property of ALEXANDER DE HALE. His daughters, Agnes and Constance, held it of Thomas de Multon of Gilsland, in the reign of Edward I., at which time the Ponsonbys got Agnes's part; and in the time of Richard II. they became possessed of the whole.

JOHN PONSONBY, Esq., of Hale, was father of SIMON PONSONBY, Esq., of Hale, who married Anne Edlesfield, of Alneburgh Hall, Cumberland, and had a son, HENRY PONSONBY, Esq., who married Dorothy Sandys, of Rottington, in Cumberland, by whom he had two sons, both of whom were officers of rank in Cromwell's army, and accompanied him to Ireland in 1649, viz., JOHN (Sir), of whom we treat, and Henry, ancestor of the Croto family. The elder,

SIR JOHN PONSONBY, Knt., born in 1608, colonel of horse in Cromwell's army, went with his regiment, which he raised for the service of the Commonwealth, to Ireland, in 1649, and became sheriff of the counties of Wicklow and Kildare in 1651. He represented the co. Kilkenny in the first Parliament in 1661. Sir John married, firstly, Dorothy, daughter of John Briscoe, Esq., of Crofton, co. Cumberland, and by her had a son JOHN, of whose line we treat. He married, secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of John Folliott, and widow of Richard, son and heir of Sir Edward Wingfield, and by this lady was ancestor of the earls of Bessborough. Sir John died in 1678. His son by his first wife,

JOHN PONSONBY, Esq., of Hale, married Anne Copley, of Gosforth, and had, with other issue, a son and heir,

JOHN PONSONBY, Esq., of Hale, who married Isabella, daughter of Thomas Patrickson, Esq., of Scalegill Hall, co. Cumberland, and was father, with other children, of

JOHN PONSONBY, Esq., of Hale, who married Dorothy, daughter of Miles Wilson, Esq., of Ashness, co. Cumberland, and had (with three daughters, Mary, Isabella, and Dorothy, married to — Steel, Esq., of Cockermouth) four sons, John, died a minor; MILES, of whom presently; Anthony, and William. The second son, MILES PONSONBY, Esq., of Hale Hall, J.P. and D.L., married

Catherine, daughter of Wilfred Clementson, Esq., of Cockermouth, and had issue five sons, who all died without issue, and five daughters. The third daughter, DOROTHY PONSONBY, of Hale, married, 1805, John Fisher, Esq., of Whitehaven, J.P. and D.L., who, in her right, and under the will of his father-in-law, assumed the surname of Ponsonby. They had issue,

- i. Thomas, died a minor.
- ii. MILES, heir to his father.
- iii. John.
- i. Mary.
- ii. Catherine.
- iii. Dorothy.

Mr. Ponsonby died 10th November, 1848. Mrs. Ponsonby died 30th January, 1852.

MILES PONSONBY, Esq., of Hale Hall, J.P., born 6th December, 1808; married 30th May, 1837, Barbara, daughter of the late Christopher Wilson, Esq., of Rigmaden Park, co. Westmoreland, and has issue,

- i. MILES DE HALE, born 11th May, 1841.
- ii. Henry, born 23rd March, 1851.
- i. Catherine Cumpstone Florence.
- ii. Dorothy Jane.
- iii. Barbara Ellen.

Arms.—Gul., a chev., between three combs, arg.

Crest.—On a ducal coronet, or, three arrows, one impale, and two in saltire, the points downwards, entwined by a serpent, pur.

Motto.—Pro rege, lege, grege.

Wilton is a hamlet in this parish, about two miles east of Egremont. Here is a small school, erected in 1854.

HARRINGTON PARISH.

THE parish of Harrington is bounded on the north by Workington, on the west by the Irish Sea, on the south by Moresby, and on the east by Workington and Distington. It extends about two miles and a half along the sea coast, and is about one mile in breadth: containing the small port of Harrington, at the mouth of a small rivulet called the Wyre. It possesses no dependent townships. The commons, which formed the greater part of this parish, were enclosed about the year 1770, and it still retains a bare appearance from its want of trees.

The area of Harrington is 2,790 acres, and its rateable value £5,580. The population in 1801 was 1,357; in 1811, 1,621; in 1821, 1,845; in 1831, 1,756; in 1841, 1,934; and in 1851, 2,169. In this parish, near Parton, are situated the Lowca Engine Works, established in 1799, by Messrs. Adam, and Crosby, Heslop, and Co. They were carried on by Messrs. Tulk and Ley till the year 1857, when they became the property of Messrs. Fletcher, Jennings, and Co., the present occupiers, who employ about 150 persons. The works consist of an extensive foundry, for iron and brass. Marine, stationary, and locomotive engines are manufactured on the premises. In 1843 there was an iron vessel built on the adjoining shore by Messrs. Tulk and Ley, the proprietors at that period. Great facilities are afforded for carrying on the works, by the fact of the Whitehaven and Maryport railway passing through them. Messrs. Williamson and Son have a shipbuilding yard, situated near the harbour, commenced by them in 1838, and affording employment to 150 hands. Ships of from 500 to 700 tons burden are built here. There is also a blast furnace, a tannery, and a corn-mill. Large quantities of coal are raised in the parish. The Harrington Colliery consists of two pits—the "John," and "Hodson;" the former is 95 fathoms deep, in the middle seam stone drift, and the coal is four feet thick. This seam is the lowest of any in the neighbourhood, being only thirty fathoms above the great limestone deposit, which in 1824 was partially wrought five fathoms lower, and is now extensively worked at Distington, Dean, and Brigham. "Hodgson" pit is 60 fathoms deep, and the coal four feet thick. The "yard-band," 33 inches thick, is 38 fathoms above this seam, and 30 fathoms below the four-feet working in the middle seam of the "John" pit.

Shortly after the Norman conquest, the manor of Harrington, together with Workington, was granted to the Talebois family, barons of Kendal, in Westmoreland, and was held as a fee of Workington. At an early period it passed to the family of Harrington, of which house there were several branches, resident at Beaumont in Cumberland, Witherslack in Westmoreland, Aldingham in Lancashire, and at two other places in Rutlandshire and Lincolnshire. The first of this family who held Harrington married the heiress of — Seaton, in the parish of Camerton. She died in the lifetime of her grandfather, Thomas, son of Gospatric. The next of the family upon record is Robert de Harrington, who, in the reign of Edward I., married the heiress of Cancefield, Agnes, sister and heiress of William, son of Richard de Cancefield, who married Alice, sister and heir of Sir Michael le Fleming, son of William, son of the first Sir Michael le Fleming, of Beckermert, Knt. He had a son and heir, John de Harrington, Knt., first baron by writ, who was summoned to Parliament from 30th December, 1324 to 13th November, 1345. In the early writs he is styled "John of Haverington." His eldest son, Robert, married Elizabeth, one of the three sisters and co-heiresses of John de Multon of Egremont, and died in the lifetime of his father, leaving John, son and heir, his successor. This John de Harrington was summoned to Parliament in 1348 and the following years, and died in 1363, leaving issue a son and heir, Sir Robert de Harrington, Knt., who received the honour of knighthood at the coronation of Richard II., and was summoned to Parliament from 1377 until his death in 1405. He married Isabel, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Nigel Loring, Knt., by whom he had issue Sir John de Harrington, Knt., who died without children in 1418. Sir William de Harrington, his brother, who succeeded him, was summoned to Parliament from 1421 to 1439. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Neville, Knt., of Hornby, by whom he had issue a daughter, Elizabeth, who married William Lord Bonville, and in this manner brought to that family the estates of the Harringtons, Flemings, and Cancefields, a third part of the great estate of Multon, and a moiety of that of Loring. Sir William died in 1457, without male issue, leaving his grandson his next heir, who became Baron Harrington in right of his mother.

William Lord Bonville, Baron Harrington, married Catherine, daughter of Richard Neville, earl of Salisbury, and left an only daughter, Ciceley, who married Thomas Grey, first marquis of Dorset, by whom she had issue Thomas Grey, second marquis of Dorset, K.G., father of Henry Grey, third marquis, who was created Duke of Suffolk in 1551. This nobleman married Frances, daughter and co-heir of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, by Mary, Queen Dowager of France, and sister of Henry VIII., by whom he had three daughters, Jane, Katherine, and Mary. The Lady Jane Grey, his eldest daughter, was proclaimed queen of England, on the demise of Edward VI., and was soon afterwards beheaded. Her father also suffered death as a traitor; and his estates, including the manor of Harrington, were forfeited to the crown. Philip and Mary, by letters patent, bearing date in the third and fourth years of their reign, granted to Henry Curwen, Esq., the manor of Harrington, with its appurtenances, being at that time of the yearly value of £18 14s. 8d., with the exception of the advowson of the living, to be held in capite, by the fortieth-part of a knight's fee, for all rents, services, and demands. It has since continued to be held by the Curwens of Workington; Henry Curwen, Esq., being the present lord of the manor. The demesne is within the enclosure of Workington Park, which bounds this parish on the north. Henry Curwen, Esq., is the principal landowner.

The small and flourishing port of Harrington, about three miles south from Workington, is a creation of modern times, being the growth of a single century, for in 1700 there was not one house here, nor a single vessel belonging to the port. In 1794 the number of vessels belonging to Harrington was about sixty, averaging 100 tons burthen; in 1822 the number was thirty-eight, of an aggregate burden of 4,976 tons; in 1828 the number had increased to forty-three, and their burden was equal to 5,479 tons; in 1840 there were forty-four vessels belonging to the port, and their burden was 6,052 tons; in 1850 the number of vessels was thirty-five, and the aggregate burden was 6,000 tons; and in 1858 we find there were thirty vessels, with a burden of 5,780 tons. The harbour is well constructed, and the houses mostly modern and well built. Coal and lime are exported. In the coal trade, which is carried on chiefly with Irish ports, upwards of forty vessels are employed; and in the lime trade, which is carried on with the opposite coast of Scotland, there are a large number of sloops. The ship-building yard and other works we have spoken of above. The port is under Whitehaven.

tectural feature of Irton Hall is a quadrangular tower built in the castellated style, with embrasures, which, from its great antiquity, and from the fact that the other parts of the mansion being of various and more modern dates, is generally supposed to have constituted the principal part of the manorial hall. In front of the hall is the trunk of an old gigantic oak, whose girth three men can scarcely encompass with their arms extended. The following account of the Irton family will clearly shew the descent of the manor:—

Irton of Irton.

The Irtons have been seated at Irton from a period antecedent to the Conquest, and have since that period been, in a direct line, successive lords thereof. The first of this family mentioned by Mr. Wharton, Somerset herald, is

BARTRAM D'YRTON, who lived in the beginning of the reign of Henry I.; and RICHARD is mentioned soon after the Conquest, as appears by a deed of gift in the exchequer of lands given to the abbey at York by Andrew de Morwick, to which Bartram was an evidence. He was succeeded by

ADAM D'YRTON of Yrtou, who was one of the knights of St. John of Jerusalem; and, attending Godfrey of Boulogne and the other Christian princes to the Holy Land, was at the siege of Jerusalem. During the war he slew a Saracen general, and is said to have severed at one blow the infidel's head from his body. He married Joan Stutville, and was father of

HUGH D'YRTON, who married Gertrude Tilliol, of an ancient and eminent family, which possessed Scaley Castle and a large estate on the borders, and was succeeded by his son,

EDMUND D'YRTON, who joined the crusade, under Richard I., and participated in all that monarch's wars. He lost his life in the journey to Jerusalem; and left, by his wife, the daughter of Edmund Dudley of Yauwath, in Westmorland, a son and successor,

STEPHEN D'YRTON, who married Jane Daere, and had two sons, namely, ROGER, his heir, and Randolph, or Ralph, constituted in 1280 Bishop of Carlisle. The elder son,

ROGER D'YRTON, married, and had a son and successor,

WILLIAM D'YRTON, who married Grace Hamner of Shropshire, a near relative of the Hammers of Hamner, in Flintshire, and was succeeded by his son,

ROGER D'YRTON, living in 1292, who married Susan, daughter of Sir Alexander Basinthwaite. By this lady Roger D'Yrtou acquired the manors of Basinthwaite, Loweswater, Unthank, and divers other lands of considerable value; and had a son and heir, ADAM D'YRTON, who married Elizabeth, sole heiress of Sir John Copeland, and obtained with her the manors of Birker, Birkby, and Santon. He left two sons, of whom the younger, Alexander, married a lady of the family of Odingsels, and settled at Wolverly, in Warwickshire. The elder,

RICHARD D'YRTON, married Margaret, daughter of John Broughton of Broughton, in Staffordshire, and was father of

CHRISTOPHER IRTON of Irton, who married Margaret, daughter of Richard Redman of Herwood Castle, and was succeeded by his son, NICHOLAS IRTON of Irton, who married a daughter of William Dykes of Wardell, and was succeeded by his son,

JOHN IRTON, Esq., of Irton, living temp. Edward IV., who married Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Lamplugh, Knt., by Eleanor his wife, daughter of Sir Henry Fenwick of Fenwick, and had (with another son, Joseph, who left two daughters—Elizabeth, married to William Armorer, Esq.; and Mary, married to John Skelton, Esq., of Armathwaite Castle), a son,

WILLIAM IRTON, Esq., of Irton, who was appointed, in 1493, general to the Duke of Gloucester, and (as appears by an old grant in the family) his deputy-lieutenant. He married a daughter of the ancient house of Fleming of Rydal, and was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS IRTON of Irton, who received the honour of knighthood from the Earl of Surrey, at Flodden Field, and was slain in a skirmish at Kelso, with the Scotch. He died without children, and was succeeded, in 1503, by his brother,

RICHARD IRTON of Irton, who served as sheriff for Cumberland, 22nd Henry VIII. He married Anne, daughter of Sir William Middleton, Knt., of Stokeld Park, and left a son and heir,

CHRISTOPHER IRTON, Esq., of Irton, who married, in 1549, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Millory, Knt., of Studley Park, and was succeeded by his son,

JOHN IRTON, Esq., of Irton, who married, in 1577, Anne, daughter of Richard Kirby, Esq., of Kirby, by Mary his wife, daughter of Sir Roger Bellingham, and was father of

JOHN IRTON, Esq., of Irton, who married, in 1638, Anne, sister of Sir Harry Ponsonby, ancestor to the earls of Bessborough, and left a son and successor,

JOHN IRTON, Esq., of Irton, who married, in 1658, Elizabeth, daughter of Musgrave of Mearlrig, youngest brother of Sir William Musgrave, Knt., of Crookdake, and was succeeded by his son,

GEORGE IRTON, Esq., of Irton, who married Eliza, daughter of Thomas Lamplugh, Esq., of Lamplugh, and was succeeded by his son,

GEORGE IRTON, Esq., of Irton, high sheriff of Cumberland in 1753, who married, in 1695, Elizabeth, daughter of David Poole, Esq., of Knottingley, and Syke House, co. York, and had two sons and five daughters. He was succeeded by the eldest,

SAMUEL IRTON, Esq., of Irton, who married Frances, only daughter and heiress of Robert Tuhman, Esq., of Cockermouth, and had three sons and as many daughters. The eldest surviving son,

EDMUND LAMPLUGH IRTON, Esq., of Irton, married, firstly, Miss Hodgson of Hawkhead, and by her had a daughter, Anne Frances, married to Joseph Gunson, Esq., of Ingwell. He married, secondly, 2nd Aug. 1787, Harriet, daughter of John Hayne, Esq., of Ashbourne Green, co. Derby. By the latter (who died 8th November, 1840) he had issue, SAMUEL, his heir; Richard, lieutenant-colonel in the rifle brigade, married Selina, daughter of Joseph Sabine, Esq., and is deceased; and Frances, married, 6th October, 1842, to Sir E. S. Prideaux, Bart. Mr. Irton died 2nd November, 1820, and was succeeded by his son, SAMUEL IRTON, Esq., of Irton Hall, J.P. and D.L., M.P. for the western division of the county from 1833 till 1857, when he retired. Born 25th September, 1798. Married, 25th July, 1825, Eleanor, second daughter of Joseph Tiffen Senhouse, Esq., of Calder Abbey.

Arms.—Arg., a fesse, sa., in chief, three mullets, gu.

Crest.—A Saracen's head.

Motto.—Semper constans et fidelis.

THE CHURCH.

Irton church, dedicated to St. Paul, is a handsome modern structure, consisting of nave, chancel, and square tower, re-built in 1795. It contains several monuments to the memory of different members of the Irton, Lutwidge, Winder, and Mossop families. As we learn from Tanner, the church of Irton, which he tells us was dedicated to St. Michael, was appropriated in the year 1227, to the nunnery of Seaton or Leaky. On the suppression of the monastic institutions it was granted to the Penningtons of Muncaster, ancestors of the present Lord Muncaster. The tithes and the right of advowson remained in that family until they were purchased by Samuel Irton, Esq., the present patron. There is no mention made of Irton in the King's Book; but it was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at the annual value of £4 13s. 4d. When the parish was enclosed, in 1809, an allotment of land was given in lieu of tithes. The living was formerly rectorial, but is now only a perpetual curacy, valued at £96 a year. The parish registers commence in 1697. In the churchyard is an ancient cross, nearly ten feet in height, and ornamented with some rich carving, representing elegant scroll work, knots, and frets, very much in the style of some of the Runic crosses found in the Isle of Man.

INCUMBENTS.—John Benson, 1676; Joseph Benn, 1681; Edward Burrough, 1730; John Steble, 1775; Clement Watts, 1780; John Grace, 1797; Henry W. Hodgson, —; Robert G. Calthrop, 1856.

CHARITIES.

Poor Money.—The interest of £17 is given away annually at Easter, amongst poor householders of the parish of Irton, not receiving parochial relief.

Bread and Cheese Money.—The sum of 3s. 4d. is paid annually, under the description of bread and cheese money, out of the Muncaster estate. The origin of the payment is unknown.

School.—Henry Caddy, by deed, dated 4th December, 1716, gave £150 towards the maintenance of a master, to teach a free English and grammar school for the benefit and advantage only of so many of the parishioners of Irton and Santon, who should proportionably contribute to the building of a school-room, to be erected upon Irton Moor; and he appointed George Irton of Irton, his heirs and successors, and William Caddy, his heirs and successors, owners of Gasketh, perpetual trustees, with three other persons to be nominated from time to time; and he directed that any parishioner, who had not contributed to the building of the school, if he wished to be free thereof, should not pay less than 30s. for his freedom; the interest whereof was to be paid to the schoolmaster. And he further directed that all poor persons' children, within Irton and Santon, should be free of the school, the said trustees to judge who should go under that denomination. Articles of agreement were entered into on the same day by the subscribers to the building of the school to the same effect. The sum of £150, by accumulation of interest and additional bequests, has increased to £181. In addition to the interest of the money above-mentioned, amounting to £9 1s., the schoolmaster receives £3 as the rent of an allotment of land containing about one and a half acre. This allotment was given in respect of the school upon the enclosure of an adjoining common; it is let for £3 a year. No children, though they are considered as entitled to their freedom, are taught entirely free, a small quarterage is paid for them; for others, the master charges a higher quarterage. The average number of scholars is about fifty; they are instructed in reading, writing, and accounts; and, if it is required, classics and mathematics are taught; but for the latter, the master makes his own terms. The Rev. Stanley Burrough, formerly master of Rugby, left to this school £10 per annum, payable out of land. This was paid for a short time, but it is now refused, as having been a void bequest under the statute of mortmain.

Admiral Lutwidge's Charity.—Admiral Lutwidge, by will, left three guineas per annum, charged upon land, to be distributed annually at Christmas amongst six poor widows of this parish. This is regularly paid, and applied according to the directions of his will.

SANTON AND MELTHWAITE.

The acreage, population, and rateable value of Santon and Melthwaite are returned with the parish. The township contains the village of Holm Rook and several scattered houses on the north side of the Irt, about three miles north-by-east of Ravensglass.

The manor of Santon appears to have been held in the time of Henry III. by Alan de Copeland, who resided in Bootle parish, and "held of Thomas de Multon of Gilsland, who held over of the lord of Egremont." He was succeeded by his sons Alan and Richard, and they by John and Richard. In the 22nd Richard II. (1398-9) Alan, son of Richard Copeland, held lands here. From a survey taken in 1578 we learn that Roger Kirkby, Esq., held Santon, certain lands in Gosforth, Hale, and other places, by homage, fealty, and suit of court, and by the payment of 6s. 8d. for fee farm, cornage, seawake, serjeant's food, &c., all of the purparty of the Lord Fitzwater. In the year 1777 Santon was held by the families of Irton and Winder; the moiety held by the latter having been purchased of -- Lotus, Esq., who bought it of the Lancaster family. It is now the property of Captain H. Lutwidge.

The village of Holmrook is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Irt, and the high road from Ravensglass to Egremont.

Holmrook Hall, the seat of Captain H. Lutwidge, is situated on the northern bank of the Irt, three miles north-east from Ravensglass.

Lutwidge of Holmrook.

THOMAS LUTWIDGE, Esq., J.P., of Whitehaven, born in 1670, an extensive merchant and ship-owner; high-sheriff of the co. Cumberland, 12th George I. He married 1stly Hannah Rumbold, and had by her a son, Palmer, born 19th January, 1700 or 1703, and died 10th April, 1704. He married 2ndly, 6th February, 1721, Lucy, youngest daughter of Sir Charles Houghton, Bart., of Houghton Tower, co. Lancaster, (by Mary, his wife, eldest daughter of J. Skeffington, viscount Massereene) and by her (who died 17th September, 1750) he had issue,

- i. CHARLES, born 29th January, 1722, J.P., and D.L. of the co. Cumberland, receiver and surveyor-general, &c., of the Isle of Man, and surveyor and comptroller-general of the coasts of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and the part of Lancashire, &c.; he possessed considerable landed property near Whitehaven, and elsewhere in the co. of Cumberland, and purchased, 1769, sea-sumner residence, Holmrook, near Ravensglass, with the manor of Bolton, which estate still remains in the family. He died, unmarried, in October, 1784.

- ii. Henry, formerly of Cooper's Hill, Walton-le-Dale, near Preston, born 17th June, 1724; married, 8th September, 1767, Jane, second daughter and co-heiress of Rigby Molineux, of Preston, captain of infantry, (eldest son of Thomas, third son of Sir J. Molineux, third baronet of Teveral, Notts., by Mary, daughter of Oliver Merton, Esq., of Lancaster, for many years M.P. for that town) born in 1745, died in 1791. He died 1st August, 1798, having had issue,

1. Charles, born 15th June, 1768, major in the 1st regiment of Royal Lancashire Militia, and afterwards collector of customs at the port of Kingston-upon-Hull. He succeeded to Holmrook, and ultimately sold the estate to his uncle, Admiral Lutwidge. Mr. Charles Lutwidge married, 15th January, 1795, Elizabeth Anne, daughter of the Rt. Rev. Charles Dodgson, lord bishop of Elylin, and died 7th September, 1848, having had issue,

Charles Henry, (R.N.) steward of East Farleigh, co. Kent, born 21st March, 1802, died at Hastings, 15th January, 1848. He married, 3rd November, 1831, Ann Louisa, only daughter of Robert Raikes, Esq., of Welton House, Yorkshire, and had issue, CHARLES ROBERT FLETCHER, present representative of the family.

Caroline Louisa.

Robert Wilfred Skeffington Lutwidge, barrister-at-law, born 17th January, 1802.
Elizabeth Frances, married, 17th February, 1825, Thomas, eldest son of Robert Raikes, Esq., of Welton House, Yorkshire, and has issue, Charles, born 17th November, 1828, officer of artillery, E.I.Co.'s service.

Frederick, born 13th August, 1830; died 27th March, 1841.
Elizabeth Lucy.

Frances Jane, married, 5th April, 1827, her cousin, the Ven. Archdeacon Dodgson, rector of Croft, Yorkshire (eldest son of Charles Dodgson, captain of Dragoons, eldest son of Charles, Bishop of Elylin), by Lucy, daughter of James Hume, Esq., chairman of the Board of Customs, and died 26th January, 1861, leaving issue, Lucy. Charlotte Menella.

Margaret Anne. Henrietta Mary.

2. Skeffington, D.L., born 23rd May, 1770, of Holmrook, late major 11th Native Infantry, E.I.Co.'s Service, and deputy judge advocate-general of the Madras army, married, 19th March, 1811, Mary Margaret, daughter of Gen. Lockhart, of co. Lanark, and died without issue 3rd February, 1854.

3. Henry Thomas, born 14th October, 1780; captain R.N.; was present at Lord Bridport's action in June, 1795, and at Admiral Sir J. Jervis's action off Cape St. Vincent, 13th February, 1797; shipwrecked on the French coast, in the "Husar" frigate, in February, 1804, taken prisoner, and detained in France till the end of the year; married, 23rd June, 1804, Mary, youngest daughter of John Taylor, Esq., of Townhead co. Lancaster, by Dorothy, daughter of Sir Thomas Rumbold, Bart., governor of Madras.

1. Charlotte Jane, died 5th January, 1851; married, 18th May, 1788, William Benn, Esq., of Hensingham, near Whitehaven (who died in 1790); and 2ndly, Thomas Coe, Esq., of Osbaston Hall, co. Leicester, who died 10th May, 1837.

2. Lucy, died 10th April, 1831; married, in 1812, the Rev. William Grieve, vicar of Irton, co. Cumberland, and left a daughter.

3. Margaret, married to J. E. Carter, Esq., of Leicester, and died without issue 5th June, 1809.

4. Cordelia, died in 1777.

5. Henrietta Octavia, died 18th September, 1848; married, 5th January, 1801, Charles Poole, Esq., of The Grove, Stanmore, Middlesex (who died 17th May, 1808), and had issue.

- iii. Thomas, born 5th October, 1735; died, unmarried, March, 1749.

- iv. John, born 23rd July, 1738; died, unmarried, 1st July, 1749.
- v. Samuel, born 15th November, 1730; lieutenant, R.N., served under Admiral Watson in the East Indies, one of the volunteers from the squadron who joined the (then Colonel) Clive in his attack upon Calcutta, in which he was severely wounded. He died of his wounds, and unmarried, 10th March, 1757.

- vi. Walter, born 17th December, 1733; died young and unmarried.

- vii. Skeffington, born 13th March, 1737; admiral of the red, commanded the Caracass bomb-ship, in Commander Phipps's voyage of discovery to the North Pole, in 1773. This gallant seaman, the friend of Nelson, commanded the Terrible, 74, in Lord Hood's fleet, and was eventually appointed commander-in-chief of the Downs. He married Catherine, sister of the late Sir Robert Bateson Harvey, Bart., of Langley Park, Bucks, and died, without issue, at Holmrook, 16th August, 1814.

1. Margaret, born in 1735; died, unmarried, at Whitehaven, in 1801.

- ii. Cordelia, born 5th March, 1732; died 2nd December, 1732.

- iii. Lucy, born 30th April, 1735; died 18th August, 1736.

Mr. Lutwidge died and was succeeded by his son, CHARLES ROBERT FLETCHER, Esq., born 2nd August, 1835.

Arms.—Az., three chaplains, or caps of maintenance or turned up erin.

Crest.—A lion, rampant, gu.

Motto.—Deo, patria, amicis.

Opposite to Irton Hall, but in this township, are the extensive nursery grounds of the Messrs. Gaitskill, which are laid out in a very neat and elegant manner. The conservatory of rare and valuable exotics is very attractive. Lower down is the beautiful villa of Greenlands, the property of Thomas Brocklebank, Esq.

Santon Bridge, where there are a few dispersed houses, and a small Methodist chapel, erected in 1828, is four miles from Ravensglass. There is a corn-mill here, and another at Holmrook.

LAMPLUGH PARISH.

This parish of Lamplugh is bounded on the north by Dean, on the west by Arleedon, on the south by Ennerdale, and on the east by Loweswater. It is divided into the four townships of Lamplugh, Murton, Kelton, and Winder, which are united for the relief of the poor, but are separate for highway purposes. The parish contains 6,354 acres, including upwards of 1,500 acres of enclosed land, belonging in common to the townships of Lamplugh and Murton. The mineral royalty of the unenclosed land containing the mountains called Blake Fell and Knock Murton belongs to J. L. L. Raper, Esq. The common land of Kelton is enclosed and apportioned; the mineral royalty belongs to the Earl of Lonsdale.

The rateable value of the parish is £3,625⁶ 17s. 6d.; the gross estimated rental is £3,922 3s. The population in 1801 was 535; in 1811, 532; in 1821, 661; in 1831, 624; in 1841, 645; and in 1851, 616. The soil is principally gravel and loam, incumbent on limestone. It is interspersed, in some places, with pieces of peat earth. In 1855, as some workmen were excavating for mining purposes, at Smaithwaite, they found embedded in peat earth, at the distance of twelve feet from the surface, a quantity of hazel nuts, which it is supposed were relics of an ancient forest. There are iron ore workings in operation at Knock Murton, belonging to Mr. Thomas Carmichael. There is not a sunk pit, but the ore is drifted in from the breast of the mountain, and run out by men. The number of workmen employed is about twenty. The greater part of the ore is carted to Workington, but some of it has also been carried to the furnace on Cleator Moor. Agnes Pit, belonging to Messrs. Fletchers, Miller, and Co., is in the south-western extremity of this parish, but it is very near the Yatehouse mines, in Frisington, belonging to the same firm.

Mr. John Denton supposes that "the place was originally named Glau-Flough, or Glan-Fillough, of the Irish inhabitants before the conquest, which word signifies the Wet Dale—vallis humida; and thereof is formed the present word, Lamplugh, or Landfogh." The same writer also says: "Lamplugh in the fells is that manor-house and seignory in the barony of Egremont which gave name to the ancient family of Lamplughs; a race of valorous gentlemen, successively for their worthiness knighted in the field, all or most of them." On an eminence in the Stockhow Hall estate, in this parish, are the remains of a Druidical circle, called Standing Stones. Only the northern portion is now visible, the remainder having been blasted and removed several years ago, to make fences with. The part remaining consists of six large stones, of the kind provincially called the smooth blue cobble, placed at irregular distances, varying from eighteen paces to one, and the circle, when perfect, may have been a hundred paces in diameter. The stones are mostly of an oblong figure, placed endwise in the circumference of the circle; four of the largest are nearly four feet in height above ground, and are supported in an upright position by other large stones around their bases underground. The neighbouring rock is of limestone. We can ascertain no tradition relating to the stones beyond the name, which is common to similar erections in other parts of the kingdom. There is a tradition of an oak tree having grown in the forest, on the steep southern side of Blake Fell, where now is nothing but the naked and moving debris of the slate rock, and from which a table was made of a single plank, nearly four feet in width and several yards in length, to grace the hall of the manorial residence of the Lamplughs. On the demolition of the ancient residence, for materials wherewith to erect the modern house and farm buildings, the table was cut into two lengths, and the half of it now stretches entirely across the roomy farm kitchen—a noble though much diminished specimen of the growth of the oak in the day when the squirrel was chased from Lamplugh Fells to Moresby without its alighting on the ground: so closely was the country covered with noble forest trees for many miles where now are only stunted hedgerows. The Roman road from Egremont to Cockermouth passed through this parish. Its remains are visible on the south side of Rowrah, and from thence to the Scallow, whence they run to the west of Murton and Whinnah, and to the east of Gatra and Woodend, in direction of Streetgate. A great part of this parish is very elevated, and commands an extensive prospect in Scotland, and on the Irish Sea, including the Isle of Man. Near Lamplugh Hall is a mineral spring, of a powerful astringent quality. An ancient cross, which until lately remained in the parish, has shared the same fate as the old hall, and has been wantonly destroyed.

LAMPLUGH.

The population, acreage, and rateable value of Lamplugh township is included in the parish returns. The earliest recorded possessor of Lamplugh manor is William de Lancaster, baron of Kendal, who appears to have given it, with Workington, in exchange for Middleton in Lonsdale, to Gospatric, son of Orme, lord of Seaton, in Derwent Ward. William de Lancaster seems to have taken a conspicuous part in the times in which he lived, and it is on record that he was "a great commander under Henry II. in the wars against David of Scotland, and Earl Henry, his son, and helped to recover the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland from the Scots, which King Stephen had given them." Gospatric died in possession of Lamplugh, and his son, Thomas, gave it to Robert Lamplugh and his heirs, on condition of their "paying yearly a pair of gilt spurs to the lord of Workington." In 1578 John Gatefold held certain lands and tenements in Lamplugh, by homage, fealty, and suit of court, paying for the same 1s. 4d. a year. J. L. L. Raper, Esq., is lord of the manor of Lamplugh and Merton, but the customary rents of the old enclosed lands, together with the right of working the minerals contained therein, were purchased free of Thomas Lamplugh, by the respective owners of the soil, about the year 1718. J. L. L. Raper, Esq., and John Dickinson, Esq., are the principal landowners, but A. B. Steward, Esq., and Messrs. W. F. Dickinson, John Bowman, John Nicholson, Peter Dodgson, Joseph Robinson, and Mrs. Ann Roger, have each an estate here.

Lamplugh of Lamplugh.

The pedigree of this family, certified by John Lamplugh, Esq., at Sir William Dugdale's visitation, in 1665, is as follows:—

Sir ROBERT DE LAMPLUGH, Knt., lord of Lamplugh and of Halesdale, co. Lancaster, temp. Henry II. and Richard I., who was succeeded by his son, Sir ADAM DE LAMPLUGH, Knt., who lived in the reigns of Richard I. and King John. He had a confraternity of Lamplugh to him and his heirs, with many privileges, from Richard de Lucy, lord of Copeland.

Sir ROBERT DE LAMPLUGH, Knt., occurs 43rd Henry III. He married Meliora . . . "an inheritrix; for on her marriage her husband paid a relief to Henry III."

RAIHL DE LAMPLUGH, 7th Edward I. Margaret, his widow, was impleaded by the lord of Workington for the wardship of Robert, her son, whereby she lost the tuition of him.

Sir ROBERT DE LAMPLUGH, Knt., married Constance . . . and had issue, JOHN, Raphe, William, and a daughter, Christian.

Sir JOHN DE LAMPLUGH, Knt., 9th Edward I.

RAFHE DE LAMPLUGH, 13th Edward III., married Elizabeth, daughter of . . . Preston.

JOHN DE LAMPLUGH.

Sir THOMAS DE LAMPLUGH, Knt., had issue, JOHN, Robert, Nicholas, Thomas, William, and Raphe.

JOHN DE LAMPLUGH, 20th Richard II.

HUGH DE LAMPLUGH, 12th Henry IV., married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Pickering.

Sir JOHN DE LAMPLUGH, Knt., married Margaret, daughter of John Edgfield.

THOMAS DE LAMPLUGH, 7th Edward IV.; married Eleanor, daughter of Henry Fenwick.

JOHN DE LAMPLUGH, 19th Edward IV.

JOHN DE LAMPLUGH, 1st Henry VII.; married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Pennington, Knt., and had issue,

1. JOHN, his heir.

2. Thomas of Skelsmore, whose son,

1. Adam, marrying Agnes, daughter of Robert Ben, had, with two daughters, Jane and Mary, a son, Thomas, of Little Rison, in co. York, anno. 1584, who married Jane, daughter of Robert Fairfax, Esq., of Pockthorpe, and had issue, Christopher of Rison, in 1612, who married Anne, daughter and co-heir of Thomas Raper, of Oulton.

Thomas, who purchased the manor of Rison, and died in 1670, aged 63, leaving by Agnes, his wife, (with another son, Richard, who married Frances, daughter of Sir Christopher Lowther, Bart., of Whitehaven.)

Thomas, D.D., Archbishop of York, who married Catherine, daughter of Edward Davenant, bishop of Salisbury, and had a son and successor.

Thomas Lamplugh, D.D., archbishop of Richmond, born in 1601, who married a lady named Margaret; and by her had, with other issue, a son and heir, Thomas Lamplugh, rector of Bolton Percy, and canon residentiary of York, of whom hereafter, as inheritor of Lamplugh, under the devise and under the devise of Thomas Lamplugh, Esq.

John de Lamplugh was succeeded by his son,

Sir JOHN DE LAMPLUGH, Knt., of Lamplugh, sheriff of Cumberland 29th Henry VIII., who married, firstly, Isabella, daughter of Sir Christopher Curwen of Workington, and had by her a son, JOHN, his heir. He married, secondly, Catherine, daughter and co-heir of Guy Forster of Howsam, and had three daughters, viz., Mary, married to Thomas Skelton; Mable; and Frances, married to David Fleming, third son of Hugh Fleming. Sir John was succeeded by his son,

JOHN LAMPLUGH, Esq., of Lamplugh, who was twice married. By his first wife, Jane Blennerhasset, he had one son, Edward, who died without issue; and by the second, Isabel, daughter of Christopher Stapleton of Wighill, another son, his successor,

RICHARD LAMPLUGH, Esq., of Lamplugh, father, by Alice Maude, his wife, of

JOHN LAMPLUGH, Esq., of Lamplugh, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Edward Musgrave, Knt., and dying in 1636, was succeeded by his son,

JOHN LAMPLUGH, Esq., of Lamplugh, born in 1619. This gentleman, devoted to the royal cause during the civil war, was colonel of a regiment of foot under Prince Rupert, and fought at Marston Moor, in 1644, when he received several wounds, and was taken prisoner. He married 1st, Jane, daughter of Roger Kirby, Esq., of Lancashire; 2ndly, Frances, Lady Lowther, daughter of Christopher Lancaster, Esq., of Sockbridge, in Westmoreland; and 3rdly, Frances, daughter of Thomas Lamplugh, Esq., of Ribton. By the last only he had issue, viz.,

1. THOMAS, his heir.

2. Edward, died unmarried.

3. John, died without issue.

1. Elizabeth, second wife of Henry Brougham, Esq., of Seales. Upon the demise of Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Lamplugh, in 1773, the male line failing, this Elizabeth became heir general of the senior branch of the house of Lamplugh, which is now represented by the eldest male descendant, Henry Lord Brougham and Vaux.

2. Phoebe, appears to have died unmarried.

Colonel Lamplugh was succeeded at his decease by his eldest son,

Thomas Lamplugh, Esq., born in 1657, who served the office of sheriff of Cumberland, 13th William III. His son and successor,

THOMAS LAMPLUGH, Esq., of Lamplugh, by Frances, his wife, had an only daughter and heiress, ELIZABETH, married to George Irton, Esq., of Irton, but died s.p. devising by will, dated 6th Nov. 1773, her estate at Dovenby, to the Rev. Thomas Lamplugh, of Copgrove, co. York, for life, with remainder, in default of male issue, to Peter Brougham, descended from Elizabeth Lamplugh, of Lamplugh. He succeeded in 1783, and died in 1791, s.p., when Dovenby passed to his niece and heiress, Mary Dykes.

Mr. Lamplugh died in 1737, and bequeathed by will, dated 1734, "the capital messuage of Lamplugh Hall, and the demesne lands of Lamplugh, &c., to his, the testator's cousin,"

The Rev. THOMAS LAMPLUGH, rector of Bolton Percy, and canon residentiary of York. This gentleman married 17th April, 1721, Honor, daughter of William Chaloner, Esq., of Gainsbro', co. York, and had issue,

I. THOMAS, his heir.

II. Honor, died unmarried, 2nd January, 1705.

III. Mary, died unmarried before 1783.

IV. Katherine, co-heir with her brother Thomas, married the Rev. Godfrey Wolley, rector of Thorsnoose, and of Warmsworth, and, dying in 1804, left issue,

1. Edward Wolley, of Fulford Grange, and Nether Hall, co. York, who, in 1810, assumed the name and arms of Copley. He died in 1813.

2. Thomas Wolley, vice-admiral of the white, married, and has issue.

3. Godfrey Wolley, in holy orders, rector of Hulton Bushel, died in 1822.

4. Isaac Wolley, captain R.N., married, and had issue.

1. Honor Wolley, married to the Rev. A. F. Eyre.

2. Cordelia Wolley, married to George Bower, Esq.

3. Katherine Wolley, married to John Raper, Esq., of Lotherton, and mother of the present John Lamplugh Lamplugh Raper, Esq., of Lamplugh.

4. Mary Wolley.

ANNE, co-heir with her brother Thomas, who married 8th October, 1750, John Raper, Esq., of Aberford, co. York, and dying in July, 1783, left a son, John Raper, of Aberford and Lotherton, who succeeded his uncle, Thomas Lamplugh, at Lamplugh.

Jane, married to Samuel Pawson, of York, merchant.

Sarah, died young.

The Rev. Thomas Lamplugh was succeeded by his only son,

The Rev. THOMAS LAMPLUGH, of Lamplugh, rector of Copgrove and Gouldsbro', and prebendary of Wistow, who married Mary, daughter of James Collins, of Knaresbro' and Foleyfote, but dying without issue in 1783, was succeeded by (the son of his sister Anne) his nephew,

JOHN RAPER, of Aberford and Lotherton; who then became of Lamplugh. He married 16th October, 1789, Katherine, third daughter of the Rev. Godfrey Wolley, by Katherine, his wife, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Lamplugh of Lamplugh, and had two sons and one daughter, viz. —

I. JOHN LAMPLUGH RAPER, his heir.

II. Henry Raper, of Lincoln's Inn, barrister-at-law, born 12th February, 1796, married 16th December, 1824, Georgiana, third daughter of John Moore, Esq., captain in the 5th Regiment of Dragoon Guards.

I. Ann Raper, married to James Brooksbank, merchant, of London, second son of Benjamin Brooksbank, of Healaugh Hall, in the West Riding of York.

Mr. Raper died July, 1824, and was succeeded by his son, JOHN LAMPLUGH LAMPLUGH RAPER, Esq., of Lamplugh and Lotherton, born 19th July, 1790; married 25th October, 1813, Jane, second daughter of Benjamin Brooksbank, Esq., of Healaugh Hall, West Riding of York. This gentleman, whose patronymic is Raper, assumed by sign manual, 10th March, 1825, the additional surname and arms of Lamplugh.

Arms.—Or, a cross fleury sa.

Crest.—A goat's head, arg., stired and bearded, or.

THE CHURCH.

Lamplugh church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient edifice, standing near the hall. It consists of a nave and chancel, the latter of which is the most ancient, and is said to have been the family chapel of the Lamplughs when the parish church stood at Kirkland, three miles distant. The Lamplugh vault, which is at the south-east corner of the chancel, is surmounted by two elaborately-carved marble monuments, one of which is to the memory of Mrs. Margaret Brisco, daughter of Thomas and Frances Lamplugh, and wife of Sir Richard Brisco; the other is to the memory of Thomas and Frances Lamplugh. The living is a rectory, and the patronage has always been annexed to the manor. In the King's Book it is valued at £10 4s. 7d., but was returned in 1835 at £256. The tithes were commuted in 1839 for a rent charge of £300 a year. The parish registers commence in 1581.

RECTORS.—Robert Layburn occurs 1593; — Braithwaite occurs about 1642; Galfrid Wibergh, 1700; David King, 1701; Thomas Jefferson, 1790; Richard Dickenson, 1768; Joseph Giblancs, 1817; Walter Brooksbank, 1854.

The rectory was erected in 1822, at a cost of about £700, by J. L. L. Raper, Esq., the patron of the living, who took in exchange for the erection and four acres of land, the old parsonage house, adjoining the churchyard, and thecroft opposite.

CHARITIES.

Richard Brisco's Charity.—Richard Brisco, Esq., of Lamplugh Hall, by deed, dated 23rd February, 1747, granted to trustees a rent charge of £12, issuing out of Skelsmoor demesne lands in Lamplugh, to be applied as follows:—£6 8s. to the school, £3 12s. to poor widows not receiving parochial relief, and £2 for books to the school.

There is a friendly society, which was instituted in 1788, held at Lamplugh Cross. Its members pay 10s. entrance and 1s. 3d. per month afterwards (excepting the first eighteen months, when it is double). It allows 8s. per week during sickness, and to its superannuated members a pension of 2s. weekly during life; also £8 for funeral expenses. It numbers about a hundred members, and possesses a fund of about £700.

KELTON.

The area, population, &c., of this township are included in the parish returns.

Keton, or Ketel's Town, was in ancient times parcel of the manor of Lamplugh, from which it was severed by Ketel, grandson of Ivo de Talebois, baron of Kendal, and it was held as a fee of Beckermest, as that was of Egremont. Kelton being in the Harrington division of the Multon estate, came from them by an heiress to the Bonville family, and from them to the Greys, marquises of Dorset; and by the attainder of Henry, the third marquis, it was forfeited to the crown, as is seen in the account of Harrington manor, at page 394. Philip and Mary granted Kelton to Christopher Morys (or Moorhouse) and Elizabeth his wife, and their heirs. In the 20th of Elizabeth (1578) John Moorhouse held Kelton by homage, fealty, and suit of court, and by the rent of two shillings for cornage and seawake and serjeant's food, belonging wholly to the Lord Fitzwater. It was subsequently held by the families of Leigh, Salkeld, and Patrickson, from the latter of whom it was purchased by Sir John Lowther, from whom it has descended to the Earl of Lonsdale, the present lord of the manor; besides whom, J. L. L. Raper, Esq., Mr. Joseph Bowman, and eight others, are landowners. Most of the ancient enclosed land here is freehold; the minerals therein belonging chiefly to the owners of the soil.

This township comprises a number of dispersed houses and the hamlet of Kirkland, which is about six miles north-east of Whitehaven.

MURTON.

For population, acreage, rateable value, &c., see returns for the parish.

Murton, or Moortown, is parcel of the manor of Lamplugh, and is held of the barony of Egremont. It was long held by a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed in the reign of Edward II. to the Lamplughs, who have since continued its possessors. In 1578 John Lamplugh held Murton, with its appurtenances, by homage, fealty, and suit of court, by the rent of 6s. for cornage, and other services. The landowners in the township are Messrs. Daniel Rogers, John Wood, Stanley Dodgson, John Southward, and eleven others. The customary rents of the old enclosed lands here, together with the right of working the minerals contained therein, were purchased of Thomas Lamplugh, by the respective owners of the soil, about the year 1718.

Murton township comprises the small hamlets of Smaithwaite, Lund, Winnah, and several scattered dwellings, distant about eight miles east-by-north of Whitehaven. There is a forge at Lane Foot for the manufacture of spades, shovels, and edge tools, carried on by Messrs. Hatton and Cookson, of Liverpool. In the township is iron ore.

Here is a school, which is supported by the quarterage of the scholars, by subscription, and a permanent endowment of £7 4s. 8d. The average attendance is upwards of forty children. It is proposed to build a new school at a short distance from the old one.

WINDER.

For the acreage, &c., of Winder township, see the parish returns. The Earl of Lonsdale is lord of the manor, but most of the ancient enclosed land is also freehold, the minerals therein belonging chiefly to the owners of the soil. The landowners are Messrs. Skelton, Lewthwaite, Armistead, Turner, and six others. The township is about six and a half miles east-by-north of Whitehaven, containing the small hamlet of Rowrah, and nine farms, each of which bears a separate name.

MILLOM PARISH.

MILLOM parish is bounded on the north by the river Esk, on the west by Waberthwaite, Corney, Bootle, Whitbeck, and Whicham; and on the south and east by the mouth of the Duddon. It occupies the extreme southern point of the county, and comprises the four townships of Birker and Austhwaite, Chapel Sucken, Millom Below, Millom Above, and the two chapelrys of Thwaites and Ulpha. The southern part of the parish is in general fertile, but a large portion of the north consists of wastes and pasture grounds. Extensive pastures are found in Thwaites Chapelry, as also in that of Ulpha, which in addition contains extensive woodlands. Limestone is abundant, and is extensively quarried. Iron ore has been obtained at Hotbarrow and Millom Park. Copper has also been found. By the regulation adopted at the quarter sessions held at Carlisle October 20th, 1857, the townships of Birker and Austhwaite, Millom, and Ulpha, in this parish, were assigned to the newly-formed Bootle Ward. The Whitehaven and Furness railway runs through this parish, and has stations at Holborn Hill, Under Hill, and Green Road.

The lordship of Millom, the largest within the barony of Egremont, contains the parishes of Millom, Bootle, Whicham, Whitbeck, Corney, and Waberthwaite. It is of a triangular form, about eighteen miles in length, and its greatest breadth is about eight miles. It is bounded on the east by the Duddon, on the south by the Isle of Walney and the Fife of Fouldra, on the west by the Irish Sea, and on the north by the Esk, and the mountains Hardknott and Wrynose. It contains several manors, which are holden immediately of the lordship of Millom, as Millom is of Egremont, with some difference of service. This lordship anciently enjoyed great privileges: it was a special jurisdiction into which the sheriff of the county could not enter; its lords had the power of life or death, and enjoyed jura regalia in the six parishes forming their lordships. Mr. Denton, writing in 1688, says that the gallows stood on a hill near the castle, on which criminals had been executed within the memory of persons then living. To commemorate the power anciently possessed by the lords of this lordship, a stone has been recently erected, with this inscription—"Here the lords of Millom exercised jura regalia." Mr. John Denton gives the following account of this lordship:—"This great manor, in the time of King Henry I. was given by William Meschines, lord of Egremont, to — de Boyvill, father to Godard de Boyvill (named in ancient evidences Godardas Dapifer), who being lord of Millum, did give unto the abbot and monks of Furness a carucate of land there, with the appurtenances, called yet to this day Monk Force, which Arthur, the son of Godard, confirmed unto the abbey, and after him, in like sort, his son and heir, Henry, the son of Arthur, reserving only the harts and hinds, wild boars and their kinds, and all aeries of hawks. But whatsoever the lord of Egremont, William Meschines, reserved upon the first grant of the Boyvills, whether demesne or forest liberties, Dame Cicely Romeley (one of the co-heirs of William Fitz-Duncan) countess of Albermarle, to whose posterity this Millum was allotted by partition, gave and fully confirmed the same to the said Arthur Fitz-Godard, and to Henry, his son, and their heirs, by her charter yet extant, under seal, bounding the same thus:—"Dedi et concessi Henrico filio Arthuri et Hæredibus suis jus Hæreditarium, viz. totam terram et totum feodum inter Esk et Doddon cum p'tinentiis," &c. And Dame Hawise her sole daughter and heir, then the wife of William de Mandeville, advised her husband to confirm it. And for a recognition of the said grant made to the Boyvills, Arthur, and Henry, his son, by Dame Cicely, the countess, they paid to King Henry II. for a post fine, one hundred pounds, and five couples of hounds, the records terming them decem fugatores. And an old tradition makes these Boyvills to have been very near of kin to the lords of Egremont, and gives us an account of the occasion upon which Millum was transferred to the said Boyvills, which is said to be thus: The baron of Egremont being taken prisoner beyond the seas by the infidels, could not be redeemed without a great ransom, and being far from England, entered his brother or kinsman for his surety, promising, with all possible speed, to send him money to set him free; but upon his return home to Egremont he changed his mind, and most unnaturally and unthankfully suffered his brother to lie in prison, in great distress and extremity, until his hair was grown to an unusual length, like to a woman's hair. The Pagans being out of hopes of the ransom, in great rage most cruelly hanged up their pledge, binding the long hair of his head to a beam in the prison, and tied his hands so behind him, that he could not reach to the top where the knot was fastened to loose himself. During his imprisonment, the Paynim's daughter became enamoured of him, and sought all good means for his deliverance, but could not enlarge him; she understanding of this last cruelty, by means made to his keeper, entered the prison, and taking her knife to cut the hair, being hastened she cut the skin of his head, so as with the weight of his body he rent away the rest, and fell down to the earth half dead; but she presently took him up, causing surgeons to attend him secretly till he recovered his former health, beauty, and strength, and so entreated her father for him that he set him at liberty. Then desirous to revenge his brother's ingratitude he got leave to depart to his own country, and took home with him the hatterell of his hair, rent off as aforesaid, and a bugle-horn, which he commonly used to carry about him, when he was in England, where he shortly arrived, and coming towards Egremont Castle about noontide of the day, where his brother was at dinner, he blew his bugle-horn, which (says the tradition) his brother, the baron, presently acknowledged, and thereby conjectured his brother's return; and then sending his friends and servants to learn his brother's mind to him, and how he had escaped, they brought back report of all the miserable torment which he had endured for his unfaithful brother the baron, which so astonished the baron (half dead before with the shameful remembrance of his own disloyalty and breach of promise) that he abandoned all company, and would not look on his brother, till his just wrath was pacified by diligent entreaty of his friends. And to be sure of his brother's future kindness, he gave the lordship of Millum to him and his heirs for ever. Whereupon the first lords of Millum gave for their arms the horn and the hatterell. But whatever the occasion of the grant was, the Boyvills were from the place called De Millum, and have anciently held the same with great liberties, and had jura regalia there. John Hudleston did prescribe thereto in the 20th year of King Edward I., and was allowed before Hugh de Cressingham in the pleas of quo warranto, holden for the king." The Boyvilles or Boisvilles took their surname from the place, and were styled De Millom; they held the same in their issue male from the reign of Henry I. to the reign of Henry III., a space of one hundred years, when the name and family ended in a daughter.

Goyhill, Lords of Millom.

The first of this family upon record is,

GODARD DE BOYVILLE, to whom William de Meschines granted the lordship of Millom. He gave the manor of Kirsanton to his second son, William, in whose posterity it remained until the reign of Edward II.

GODARD DE BOYVILLE, second lord of Millom, gave Monk Force to the abbey of St. Mary, in Furness, as aforesaid, with the churches of Bootle and Whicheam; "all the parishes between the Esk and Millum, to the abbey of St. Mary's, York;" to which abbey Matilda, his wife, gave also Anderst or Agnes Seat. He is called in ancient evidences Godardus Depifer.

ARTHUR BOYVILLE, or de Millom, son of Godard, confirmed his father's grants to the abbays of Furness and York. To the former abbey he granted the services of Kirsanton in Millom, which Robert de Boyville, his cousin-german, then held of him, and soon after he mortgaged the same to the abbot of Furness, until his return from the Holy Land.

HENRY DE MILLOM, son of the above, confirmed the grants of his ancestors, and enfeoffed Ranulph Corbett and his heirs of the manor of Brattaby, in Millom, with the appurtenances. "He also gave Raistwaite, in Dundersdale, to one Orme, the son of Dolphin; and Leakley to Henry Fitz-William in frank marriage with his daughter, Goynhild Boyville, with shields for her cattle, and common of pasture in 'Croch-beege and the forest,' which Goynhild afterwards (being a widow) gave to the abbey of Holme Cultram, and William de Millum (the son of Henry de Millum, the son of Arthur de Millum) brother of the said Goynhild, did after confirm the same. And afterwards John Huddleston, and Joan, his wife, sole daughter of Adam de Millum, son and heir of the said Henry, confirmed Leakley, and the liberties aforesaid (so granted by Goynhild) unto the abbot and convent of Holme Cultram and his successors. The said Henry Fitz-Arthur gave the other lands in Leakley, now called Seaton, unto the nuns of Leakley, or Seaton, which of late were granted unto Sir Hugh Askew, Knight. The deed of feoffment, made by the said Henry Fitz-Arthur to Goynhild, his daughter, approves the same, for therein is excepted as follows:—'Excepta terra in Leakley quam dedi sanctis monialibus servientibus Deo et Sancte Marie in Leakleya.'"

WILLIAM DE MILLOM, son of the above.

ADAM DE MILLOM, brother and heir of William.

JOAN DE MILLOM, daughter and heiress of the above, married Sir John Huddleston, Knight, and thus transferred the lordship into that family, with whom it continued for a period of about 500 years.

Mr. John Denton says "all the residue of the fees of Millum were thus granted by the Boyvills, lords of Millum, to their kinsmen or friends, or with their daughters or sisters in marriage; and accordingly by the Huddlestons and their heirs, some as manors, and some as lesser freeholds, as namely, Ulfhay, Thwaite, Dale-garth, and Wayberghthwaite, and some in mortmain, as Leakley and Kirsanton, all which places gave surname to the posterity of the feeoffees, as Thwaite of Thwaite, Wayberghthwaite of Wayberghthwaite, and the rest whereof some do yet remain, and some names are worn out; but ancient records report and remember them." In Mr. Sandford's M.S. we have the following account:—"Eastward from Seaton you goe into Millome lordship, twenty miles to the head of the foresaid Dudden great river: the land and freeholds of the lord of Millome Castle, great-great-grandchild of the said Sir John Huddleston, of grand estate: but he gave much away with his daughters; and married Dalavise of Southam besides Teuxberry, £500 per annum, in Gloucestershire. And yet it is a lord-like living, £3,000 per annum, and £500 per annum, at Hasley, some £10 miles beyond Oxford. And Ffardinando now lord thereof, and all the estate of Millome Castle at it, and some of S^r William Huddleston, and a daughter of Montcastré, and colonel of a regiment of horse and foote; and seven brothers, captains under him, in the royal armies. And his grandfather, a great swash buckler in Queen Elizabeth's time, and a great gamester, lived at a rate beyond his income. A great countess, his friend, asking him how he lived so gallantly: quoth he, of my meat, and my drink!" Quoth she, 'I even looked for such an answer.'

Huddleston, Lords of Millom.

The pedigree of this very ancient family¹ is traced back to five generations before the Conquest. The first, however, of the name who was lord of Millom was,

SIR JOHN HUDDLESTON, Knight, who was the son of Adam, son of John, son of Richard, son of Reginald, son of Nigel, son of Richard, son of another Richard, son of John, son of Adam, son of Adam de Hodelston, in co. York. The five last named (according to the York M.S.) were before the Conquest.

SIR JOHN DE HUDDLESTON, Knight, in the year 1270, was witness to a deed in the abbey of St. Mary, in Furness. By his marriage with the Lady Joan, Sir John became lord of Anneyes, in Millom. In the 20th Edward I. (1292) he proved before Hugh Cressingham, justice itinerant, that he possessed jura regalia within the lordship of Millom. In the 25th (1297) he was appointed by the king warden or governor of Galloway, in Scotland. In the 27th (1299) he was summoned as baron of the realm to do military service. In the next year (1300) he was present at the siege of Carlaverock. In the 29th (1301), though we have no proof that he was summoned, he attended the parliament at Lincoln, and subscribed as a baron the celebrated letter to the pope, by the title of lord of Anneys. He was still alive in the 14th of Edward IV. (1311). Sir John had three sons. John, who died early, and Richard and Adam.

¹ The Huddlestons of Hutton John were descended from a younger branch of the family at Millom; as were the Huddlestons of Swanton, co. Cambridge, who settled there (temp. Henry VIII.) in consequence of a marriage with one of the co-heiresses of the Marquis Montague.

RICHARD HUDLESTON, son and heir, succeeded his father. Both he and his brother Adam are noticed in the later writs of Edward I. They were both of the faction of the Earl of Lancaster, and obtained in the 7th Edward II. (1313) a pardon for their participation with him in the death of the king's favourite, Gaveston. Adam was taken prisoner with the earl in the battle of Boroughbridge, in 1322, when he bore for arms—gules, fretted with silver, with a label of azure. Richard was not at that battle, and in the 19th of the king (1326), when Edward II. summoned the knights of every county to the Parliament at Westminster, was returned the first among the knights of Cumberland. He married Alice, daughter of Richard Troughton, in the 13th Edward II. (1319-20), and had issue, JOHN HUDLESTON, son of the above-named Richard, who succeeded his father in 1337, and married a daughter of Henry Fenwick, lord of Fenwick, co. Northumberland.

RICHARD HUDLESTON, son of John.

Sir RICHARD HUDLESTON, Knight, served as a banneret at the battle of Agincourt, in 1415. He married Anne, sister of Sir William Harrington, K.G., and served in the wars in France, in the retinue of that knight.

Sir JOHN HUDLESTON, Knight, son of Richard, was appointed to treat with the Scottish commissioners on border matters, in the 4th Edward IV. (1464); was knight of the shire in the 7th (1467); appointed one of the conservators of the peace on the borders in the 20th (1480); and again in the 2nd of Richard (1484); and died on the 6th of November, in the 9th of Henry VII. (1494). He married Joan, one of the co-heirs of Sir Miles Stapleton, of Ingham, in Yorkshire. He was made bailiff and keeper of the king's woods and chases in Barnoldswick, in the county of York, sheriff of the county of Cumberland by the Duke of Gloucester for his life, steward of Penrith, and warden of the west marches. He had three sons,

1. Sir RICHARD, K.B., who died in the lifetime of his father, 1st Richard III. He married Margaret, natural daughter of Richard Nevill, earl of Warwick, and had one son and two daughters, viz.,

Richard, married Elizabeth, daughter of Lady Mabel Dacre, and died without issue, when the estates, being entailed, passed to the heir male, the descendant of his uncle John.

John, married to Hugh Fleming, Esq., of Rydal.

Margaret, married to Lancelot Salkeld, Esq., of Whitehall.

11. Sir John.

12. Sir William.

Sir JOHN HUDLESTON, second son of Sir John and Joan his wife, married Joan, daughter of Lord Fitz Hugh, and, dying the 5th Henry VIII. (1513-14), was succeeded by his son,

Sir JOHN HUDLESTON, K.B., espoused, firstly, the Lady Jane Clifford, youngest daughter of Henry Earl of Cumberland, by whom he had no issue. He married, secondly, Joan, sister of Sir John Seymour, Knt, and aunt of Jane Seymour, queen consort of Henry VIII., and by her he had issue,

ANTHONY, his heir.

Andrew, who married Mary, sister and co-heiress of Thomas Hutton, Esq., of Hutton-John, from whom descended the branch at that mansion.

A daughter, who married Sir Hugh Askew, Knt., yeoman of the cellar to Henry VIII.; and Ann, married to Ralph Latus, Esq., of the Beck.

Sir John died 38th Henry VIII. (1546-7).

ANTHONY HUDLESTON, Esq., son and heir, married Mary, daughter of Sir William Barrington, Knight, and was succeeded by his son, WILLIAM HUDLESTON, Esq., knight of the shire, in the 43rd Elizabeth, who married Mary, daughter of — Bridges, Esq., of Gloucestershire.

FERNANDO HUDLESTON, son and heir, was also knight of the shire, in the 21st James I. He married Jane, daughter of Sir Ralph Grey, Knight, of Chillingham, and had issue nine sons, WILLIAM, John, Ferdinando, Richard, Ralph, Ingleby, Edward, Robert, and Joseph, all of whom were officers in the service of Charles I. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir WILLIAM HUDLESTON, a zealous and devoted royalist, who raised a regiment of horse for the service of his sovereign, as also a regiment of foot; the latter he maintained at his own expense during the whole of the war. For his good services and his great personal bravery at the battle of Edgehill, where he retook the royal standard, he was made a knight banneret by Charles I., on the field. He married Bridget, daughter of Joseph Pennington, Esq., of Muncaster. He had issue (besides his successor) a daughter, Isabel, who married Richard Kirkby, Esq., of Furness, and was succeeded by his son,

FERNAND HUDLESTON, Esq., who married Dorothy, daughter of Peter Hunley, merchant, of London, and left a sole daughter and heiress, Mary, who married Charles West, Lord Delaware, and died without issue. At his decease the representation of the family reverted to,

RICHARD HUDLESTON, Esq., son of Colonel John Hudleston, Esq., (second son of Ferdinando Hudleston and Jane Grey, his wife). This gentleman married Isabel, daughter of Thomas Hudleston, Esq., of Bainton, co. York, and was succeeded by his son, FERNANDO HUDLESTON, Esq., who married Elizabeth, daughter of Lyon Falconer, Esq., co. Rutland, by whom he had issue, WILLIAM HUDLESTON, Esq. This gentleman married Gertrude, daughter of Sir William Meredith, Bart., by whom he had issue two daughters, Elizabeth and Isabella. Elizabeth, the elder, married Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart., who, in 1774, sold the estate for little more than £20,000 to Sir James Lowther, Bart., by whom it was devised to his successor, the Earl of Lonsdale.

Milloom Castle, considerable remains of which are still in existence, is pleasantly situated in the township of Milloom Below, near the mouth of the Duddon. It was fortified and embattled in 1335, by Sir John Hudleston, who obtained a license from the king for that purpose. In ancient times it was surrounded by a fine park. Here, for many centuries, the lords of Milloom held their feudal pomp and state, undisturbed "by war's tempestuous breath," from which the more northerly parts of the county suffered so severely and so often; and we do not hear that the castle was ever attacked previous to the wars of the Parliament, when it appears to have been invested, though no particulars respecting the occurrence have been recorded. It is at this period that the old vicarage house, which was in the neighbourhood of the castle, was pulled down, "lest the rebels should take refuge therein." Mr. Thomas Denton tells us that in 1688 the castle was much in want of repair. He also informs us that the gallows, where the lords of Millom exercised their power of punishing criminals with death, stood on a hill near the castle, and that felons had suffered there shortly before the time at which he was writing. He describes the park as having within twenty years abounded with oak, which to the value of £4,000 had been cut down to serve as fuel at the iron forges. When John Denton wrote the castle appears to have been in a partly ruinous state, although the lords still continued to reside there occasionally. In 1739 the old fortress appears to have been in much the same condition as it is in our own times. In 1774, when Nicolson and Burn published their history, the park was well stocked with deer, and this state of things continued till the year 1802, when it was disparked by the Earl of Lonsdale. The old feudal stronghold of the Boyvilles and Hudlestons now serves as a farmhouse; the principal part remaining is a large square tower, formerly embattled, but at present terminated by a plain parapet. The chief entrance appears to have been in the east front, by a lofty flight of steps. In a wall of the garden are the arms of Hudleston, as also in the wall of an outhouse. On the south and west sides traces of the moat are still visible. The lordship of Millom still retains its own coroner.

MILLOM BELOW.

The area of this township is included in the parish returns. The rateable value is £2,340. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was, inclusive of Millom Above township, 589; in 1811, 884; in 1821, of Millom Below alone, 320; in 1831, 400; in 1841, 411; and in 1851, 416. This township, which contains the village of Holborn Hill, the parish church, and several detached houses, occupies the most southern portion of the county of Cumberland, which is here about four miles in breadth only. In 1250 Millom had a charter for holding a market here weekly on Wednesday, and a fair for three days at the festival of the Holy Trinity. The market has long been obsolete.

THE CHURCH.

Millom church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is situated close to the castle, in the township of Millom Below. It is a venerable structure, consisting of a nave and chancel, a south aisle, and a modern porch, with a bell turret containing two bells. This church has suffered much from the tasteless alterations which it has undergone from time to time—the circular headed north door has been walled up, and most of the old windows has been replaced by modern substitutions.

Near the eastern window is the ancient piscina, and at the west end of the church is an octagon stone font, ornamented with quatrefoils, and a shield charged with the arms of Hudleston and a label. The church contains an ancient mural tablet, to the memory of several members of the Hudleston family, and near to it is an altar tomb ornamented with Gothic tracery, &c., on which recline the effigies of a knight and his lady, but in a very mutilated condition. In the churchyard are the remains of a cross, the shaft of which is charged with four shields. The church of Millom was rectorial till the year 1298, when it was given to the abbey of St. Mary, in Furness. One moiety was appropriated by Walter, de Grey, archbishop of York, to that monastery to have the right of presentation; the other (which the archbishop reserved for his own disposal) he assigned, in 1230, for the maintenance of three chaplains, with clerks and other charges, for the support of his chantry of St. Nicholas in the metropolitan church of York. The living, a vicarage, was valued in the King's Book at £8 5s. 8d., and was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the annual value of £26 1s. 8d. About the year 1731 it was augmented with £256 left by the Rev. John Postlethwaite, master of St. Paul's School, London; and, about the same time, with £200 from the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty; both of which sums were expended in the purchase of an estate called Fawcett Bank, near Sedbergh, in Yorkshire, the yearly rent of which is paid to the vicar. The total income of the living is now about £170 a year. The tithes have been commuted for £128 per annum. The Queen, as Duchess of Lancaster, exercises the right of patronage. The parish register commences in 1598.

VICARS.—Edmund Staneforth occurs 1535; Roger Askew, 1661; William Wells, 1670; Joseph Taylor, 1699; Thomas Benn, 1713; Matthew Postlethwaite, 1743; Edward Nicholson, 1778; John Smith, 1781; John Bolton, 1797; John Smith, 1821; Henry Dixon, 1822; Henry Pickthall, 1836; Edmund Edward Allen, B.A., 1855.

The vicarage is a cottage of very rough construction and inadequate size, which, with the glebe attached to it, was purchased about the year 1781, for the sum of £240; £200 of which was obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, and the remainder was paid by the then vicar. There are four day-schools in the parish, attended by about 140 children collectively.

CHARITIES.

The School at Millom Below.—Joseph Hudleston, Esq., of Millom Castle, who died in 1700, endowed this school with £100; but that endowment has been irrecoverably lost, by the insolvency of a person in whose hands it was deposited. It now enjoys, in common with the two schools at Millom Above and Thwaites, a share of a bequest of £900, bequeathed in 1811, by the late Mr. William Atkinson of Bog House, who ordered it to be invested in government stock, and the interest, with the exception of £2 12s., to be applied half-yearly for the education of poor boys and girls in these three townships, at the discretion of the trustees, provided "that not more than 4s. be given for teaching any poor scholar for a quarter of a year, nor even that if the scholars can be well and diligently taught for less." Fifty shillings of the interest is to be given annually to the customers at Upper Beckstones mill; no family to have more than three shillings nor less than one shilling.

The Grammar School of Whicham and Millom.—For an account of this charity, see our account of Whicham parish, at a subsequent page.

Poor Stock.—In 1722 it was certified that there was a poor stock of £30 2s. belonging to this parish, the donors of which were unknown.

School at Rally Green.—On December 4th, 1809, this school was opened, being solely instituted and supported by the Rev. — Myers, of Shipley Hall, for the instruction of twenty girls in all the necessary and useful branches of female education, the children of sober and industrious labourers belonging to this parish.

Mrs. Huddleston's Bequest.—Mrs. Bridget Huddleston, about the year 1714, left £100 for the support of a school at Millom. This sum was lent on bond, and the whole was lost.

Holborn Hill is a large village, on an eminence, eight miles south-south-east of Bootle, and is said to derive its name from Holborn Hill in London. Here is a station on the Whitehaven and Furness railway.

Burrow Crail, or Barwick Rails, is a natural harbour or creek in this township, eight miles south-south-east of Bootle, where slate, corn, &c., have been shipped, and coals imported, in vessels of small tonnage. A coast-waiter is stationed at Holborn Hill, which is nearly a mile north-north-west; and a little above the harbour is the farmhouse called Burrow Crails.

From an eminence near New Hall are extensive views of the Duddon Sands, the Lancashire coast, the Isle of Man, and the Welsh mountains. In 1824 an ancient British battle-axe, thirteen and a half inches long, was dug up at Lowscates, and several other relics have been found in the same neighbourhood.

MILLOM ABOVE.

For the area of this township see the parish returns. The rateable value is £2,073. The population in 1801, inclusive of Millom Below, was 589; in 1811, 884; in 1821, of this township alone, 460; in 1831, 515; in 1841, 511; and in 1851, 564. This township contains two small villages, called The Hill and The Green, besides a number of scattered houses, about four miles south-south-west of Broughton, in Lancashire. The Hill is about eight miles south-east-by-south of Bootle. Near Underhill is a sulphur ore mine, which was opened in 1851. The ore lies at a depth of from ten to forty yards, and the vein is from six to twenty-two feet thick, producing a large quantity annually, which is sent to Newcastle to undergo the chemical process of extracting the sulphur. It employs about thirty hands. There are several springs in this township, below Marshside, impregnated with salt, and of an aperient quality. There is also a similar one at Hotbarrow. They are called holy wells by the people of the neighbourhood.

BIRKER AND AUSTHWAITE.

This township lies between the river Esk and Ulpha chapelry; the first-named forming its boundary on the north and west, and the latter on the east. The area is included in the parish returns. The rateable value is £546. In 1801 its population was 98; in 1811, 109; in 1821, 101; in 1831, 102; in 1841, 105; and in 1851, 118. The inhabitants have the privilege of marrying, burying, &c., at the neighbouring chapel of Eskdale (part of the parish of St. Bees), in consequence of their distance from Millom parish church or its subordinate chapels. The small lake of Devoke Water and the falls of Stanley Gill and Birker Force, are in this township. Devoke Water is a lonely tarn, with a rocky island in the centre. Stanley Gill fall has much the character of Ara Force, and its immediate neighbourhood may perhaps be rivalled by other waterfalls in the Lake District; but the glen itself is indisputably the finest in the region. Birker Force is a fine cascade.

In 1102 the manor of Austhwaite was granted by one of the Boyvilles, lords of Millom, to a family who assumed the local name, styling themselves De Austhwaite, and continued in possession till about the year 1345, when, male issue failing, the heiress of the Austhwaite brought it in marriage to Nicholas Stanley, Esq., from whom it has descended to Edward Stanley, Esq., the present lord of the manor; besides whom, Messrs. John Sharpe, Thomas Lyson, Edward Sharpe, the trustees of the late William Bateman, the heir of the late Edward Lyson, John Vicars, and others, are the landowners. Dalegarth Hall, the ancient seat of the Austhwaite and Stanleys, has been converted into a farmstead. For an account of the Stanley family, see Ponsonby parish.

There is a corn-mill situated at the west end of the township.

This township is about seven miles east-by-north of Ravenglass; and, according to the arrangement made at the quarter sessions held at Carlisle, October 20th, 1857, is included in the newly-formed Bootle Ward.

CHARITY.

Poor Money.—The inhabitants of the township of Birker and Austhwaite, though parishioners of Millom, attend chapel in the township of Eskdale, in the parish of St. Bees. Several legacies have been left for the poor of these townships, the particulars of which will be found in our account of Eskdale. The sum of £2 is received yearly by the chapelwardens for Birker and Austhwaite, as a moiety of the interest of those legacies, and is distributed on the first Sunday after Easter, amongst poor householders not receiving parochial relief.

THWAITES CHAPELRY.

THWAITES Chapelry extends along the Duddon, south of Ulpha, from Duddon Grove to Millom Green, and contains the small hamlets of Duddon Bridge, Hall Thwaites, and Lady Hall, with several dispersed houses. The area of the chapelry is returned with that of Millom parish; its rateable value is £2,000. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 523; in 1811, 334; in 1821, 315; in 1831, 324; in 1841, 356; and in 1851, 361. At Duddon Bridge is an iron furnace. A little above Duddon Grove is Hans Bridge, which spans the river with two arches, springing from perpendicular rocks.

The manor of Thwaites was held under the lords of Millom by a family bearing the local name, who occur here as early as the reign of Edward I. In the 35th Henry III. (1250-1), Eleanor, wife of John Boyville and Michael de Corne, passed this manor by a fine; and in the 16th Edward I. (1287-8) John Hudleston implored William, son of John Thwaites, for 200 acres of pasture here. The manor was conveyed by the Hudlestons, in the seventeenth century, to Sir John Lowther, Bart., from whom it has descended to the present possessor, the Earl of Lonsdale. The principal landowners are Rev. George Millers, John Lewthwaite, Robert Postlethwaite, and Thomas Dixon, Esqrs.

THE CHAPEL.

Thwaites chapel, dedicated to St. Anne, is situated near Hall Thwaites, about three miles distant from the parish church. It was erected in 1853-4, and is a handsome stone building in the early English style, with porch, and bell turret carrying two bells. The interior consists of nave, chancel, and one aisle; the nave is separated from the chancel by a lofty perpendicular arch; and the aisle is divided from the nave by four perpendicular stone arches. The CHAPEL SUCKEN.

The area of Chapel Sucken or Sanken is 2,054 acres, and its rateable value £1,521. The population was not returned separately till 1821, in which year it was 251; in 1831, 291; in 1841, 214; and in 1851, 275. This township is long and narrow, stretching between a small rivulet and the sea, six miles south by east of Bootle, and comprises the hamlets of Kirk Santon and Haverigg, at the former of which places there is a small tumulus, on the summit of which are two stones standing perpendicularly, about eight feet in height, and a distance from each other of about fifteen feet. Hutchinson tells us that several other large stones formerly stood here. A church or chapel is supposed to have stood at Kirk Santon in ancient times, but beyond tradition, and the name itself, we have nothing which would lead to that conclusion.

east window, which is lancet-shaped and of three lights, is filled with stained glass; the centre compartment contains a representation of the Crucifixion; the remainder being various passages from the life of our Saviour. In the nave is also a stained glass window, with the following inscription:—"To the glory of God, and in memory of Agnes Postlethwaite, Sep. 13, 1853." The seats are open and of wood, which, with the reading-desk and roof, are stained to represent oak; the pulpit and font are of Caen stone, both handsomely carved; the latter is sufficiently large for immersion, and is supported by four columns of Purbeck marble. The chancel is laid with encaustic tiles and filled up with open benches, having carved ends, for the choristers. The roof, which is of great height, is lighted with clerestory windows, of quartrefoil-shape; the aisle contains four handsome windows with trefoil headings; the windows of the nave are lancet-shaped, of two lights each and trefoil heads; over the principal entrance are three windows, considerably elevated, of the same design; above them is a handsome circular window filled with stained glass. The altar-cloth is of rich crimson velvet, with gold-coloured fringe, on the centre of the antependium is the monogram, with the letters I.H.S. beautifully wrought in gold. The chancel contains a handsome marble mural tablet, in the memory of W. Lewthwaite, Esq., and his wife, Eleanor of Broadgate. In 1715 the chapel was certified as having no endowment. Subsequently it was endowed with the sum of £200; it has also received £800 from Queen Anne's Bounty; and, in 1825, a parliamentary grant of £1,000. In 1835 it was returned as of the annual value of £99. The patronage is vested in the proprietors of the estates of Beck-Bank, Broadgate, Oaks, and Greystone House, and the Earl of Lonsdale, who, as lord of the manor and lay-rector, has a casting vote. The registers commence in 1724.

INCUMBENTS.—Daniel Steele, 17—; Daniel Stephenson, about 1755; John Parke, 1778; Henry Borrowdale, 1815; John Ormrod, 1822; — Sanders, 1847; Jonathan Stackhouse, 1840.

The parsonage house, situated at Bridge End, in Milloom Above township, was erected in 1847.

CHARITIES.

Ann Smithson's Charities.—Ann Smithson, in 1778, bequeathed £20 to the most needy poor of Thwaites, the interest thereof to be distributed in bread on the first Sunday after the 13th day of February; and the further sum of £20, the interest thereof to be paid to the schoolmaster there. These legacies formed part of £400 which was laid out, in 1788, in purchase of lands in Milloom, for the augmentation of this curacy.

Wenington and Benson's Charities.—John Wenington gave £30 for the use of the poor of this chapelry; and Bernard Benson gave £5 for the like purpose. These sums are secured upon two tenements in the neighbourhood.

A small library was founded here about a century ago by the associates of Dr. Bray, but the books are now entirely lost, with the exception of a few volumes.

Buckman Brow School is a neat building in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1845, by Miss Frances E. Millers, who also left £2,000 for the instruction of girls between the ages of five and sixteen years in reading, writing, arithmetic, sewing, and the Church Catechism. Thirty pounds a year and a residence were to be allowed to a governess. The number and mode of admission of the children are regulated by the trustees, who are the ministers of the respective chapelries of Broughton in Furness, and Thwaites, and the owners of the estates of Duddon Hall, Ulpha, and Broadgate.

Hall Thwaites hamlet is about four miles south-west, and Lady Hall hamlet three miles south-by-west of Broughton.

Duddon Hall, the residence of J. J. Rawlinson, Esq., J.P., is delightfully situated on the banks of the river from which it derives its name, about two miles from Broughton, and six from Milloom church and castle, and is surrounded by conservatories, beautiful grounds, and the most picturesque scenery.

At Swineside, in this chapelry, are the remains of a Druidical circle, or temple. It consists of fifty large stones, with several small ones lying among them, and forms a circle of about eighty-four feet in diameter, the entrance to which is about five feet wide. The largest stone is conical in form, and nearly nine feet high. There is a great similarity between this circle and that in the neighbourhood of Keswick, with the exception of the rectangular recess which is possessed by the latter, and which is, we believe, peculiar to it.

Lewthwaite of Broadgate.

This family appears, from ancient documents, to have held lands in various parts of Cumberland from an early period.

THOMAS LEWTHWAITE of Whicham, married a daughter of — Newby of Haverigg, and had a son,

THOMAS LEWTHWAITE, born 8th December, 1588, married a daughter of — Askew of Greymains. This Thomas purchased Broadgate, and settled there. He died in 1667, having had three children,

I. John, a captain in a regiment of foot raised by Sir William Holleston of Milhou Castle, for the service of King Charles I., in which loyal cause he was slain at Edgehill, in 1642, without issue.

II. JAMES, who succeeded his father.

I. Margaret, married William Benson of Wabberthwaite.

JAMES LEWTHWAITE of Broadgate, married Agnes, daughter of William Dickson, Esq., of Beckbank, and had issue,

I. John, who succeeded his father.

II. Ralph, who died in London, without issue.

III. William, born 7th December, 1607; married Catherine, daughter of Sir Gilfrid Lawson, Bart., of Brayton, and had issue,

1. Alfred, who died an infant.

2. John, a merchant at Whitehaven; married Grace, daughter of Robert Jackson, Esq., of Bransby House, and had a son Gilfrid, drowned at Whitehaven.

IV. James, of Lady Hall, married a daughter of Myles Wenington, Esq., of Greystone House, and had two sons: James, settled in Chester, and had issue; and John, married Elizabeth, daughter of James Lancaster, and had issue two sons: John, settled in London; and George, of Ulverstone.

V. Anthony, died at Lancaster, without issue.

I. Elizabeth,

II. Agnes, } All died without issue.

III. Margaret, }

IV. Ellen, married William Robinson of Wabberthwaite, and had a daughter, Elizabeth, married John Halled, and had issue one son, who died in Dublin, in 1730, without issue.

JOHN LEWTHWAITE of Broadgate, married Eleanor, daughter of John Winesfield Esq., of Woodland, in the parish of Kirby Ireth, co. Lancaster, and had issue,

- i. James, died young.
- ii. WILLIAM, succeeded his father.
- iii. Eleanor, married John Lewis, of St. James-street, London, and had issue, Charles Lee Lewis, a celebrated comedian, married and had issue; and Elizabeth Lewis, married — Dawkins, and died without issue.
- iv. Elizabeth, married John Addison, gentleman, of Ravensglass, and had issue, Henry Addison, died in London, without issue; John Addison, died in London, without issue; Elizabeth Addison, married George Fenwick, Esq., of Lambton, co. Durham, and had issue, William Fenwick, George, John, Addison, Ralph, and Robert; Elizabeth.

WILLIAM LEWTHWAITE, of Broadgate, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Towers, Esq., of Hooker Hall, co. Lancaster, and had issue,

- i. JOHN, who succeeded his father.
- ii. WILLIAM, of whom hereafter.
- iii. George, a merchant in Antwerp, and died there, without issue.
- iv. Eleanor, married William Postlethwaite, of Ellenfoot, gentleman, and had issue, Thomas Postlethwaite, died in London, unmarried; William, died in London, unmarried; Elizabeth, died unmarried; Agnes, married John Wilde, Esq., of Broughton, and died without issue.
- v. Elizabeth, married William Hunter, Esq., of Cross House, in Millom, and died without issue.
- vi. Agnes, married Thomas Bailey, of Broughton, in Furness, and died without issue.
- vii. Margaret, married — Taylor, a solicitor, in Liverpool, and died without issue.

JOHN LEWTHWAITE, a merchant, in Lancaster, died on his plantation, at Checkhall, in the island of Dominica, in June, 1781. Having married Mrs. Grice, of the island of Antigua, and leaving no issue, he was succeeded by his brother, WILLIAM LEWTHWAITE, of Broadgate and Whitehaven, J.P., married Mary, daughter and co-heir of Joseph Nicholson, Esq., of Milholm, in Bootle, and had issue,

- i. WILLIAM, who succeeded his father at Broadgate.
- ii. John, married Margaret, eldest daughter of Roger Taylor, Esq., of Stott Park, Lancashire, and had issue, William, Gilfrid, Marianne, and Frances Jane.

III. George, rector of Adcl. co. York, J.P., married Martha, daughter of Thomas Birley, Esq., of Kirkham, Lancashire, and had issue, William Henry, George, and Margaret.

- iv. Joseph, a merchant, in the West Indies, died in 1810, unmarried.
- i. Agnes, married to the Rev. F. Armistead, rector of Morebly.
- ii. Mary, married to William Hantley, Esq., of Rose Hill.
- iii. Ann, married to Peter Dixon, Esq., of Newington, Surrey, and died in 1805, without issue.
- iv. Margaret, married to Peter Taylor, Esq., of Balfield, Westmoreland, major in the Royal Westmoreland Militia, and died in 1835, without issue.
- v. Frances, died young.
- vi. Betsey of Hazel Mount.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM LEWTHWAITE, Esq., of Broadgate, J.P., married Eleanor, daughter of Thomas Cragg, Esq., of Lowscales, and by her (who died 1830) had issue,

- i. JOHN, of Broadgate.
- ii. Mary, married to William Postlethwaite, merchant, of Ulverston.
- iii. Agnes, married to Robert Postlethwaite, Esq., of Broughton.
- iv. Eleanor, died unmarried.
- v. Elizabeth, died unmarried.

Mr. Lewthwaite died 1845, and was succeeded by his son, JOHN LEWTHWAITE, Esq., of Broadgate, J.P. and D.L., born 1792; married 1820, Anne, daughter of William Kirkbank, Esq., D.L., of Beckside, and has issue,

- i. WILLIAM, married Mary, daughter of William Chaloner, Esq.
- ii. Joseph.
- iii. George.
- iv. Elizabeth.
- v. Eleanor, married to Robert Francis Calrow, Esq.
- vi. Ann.
- vii. Agnes.

Arms.—Erms., a cross-floory, az., fretty, or.

Crest.—A garb, bound by a serpent, nowed, ppr., holding in the mouth, a cross-croset, fitchy, gu.

Motto.—Tendens ad ethera virtus.

Seat.—Broadgate.

ULPHA CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry is bounded on the north by Eskdale, on the west by Birket and Ansthwaite, on the south by Thwaites chapelry, and on the east by the Duddon, which divides it from Lancashire. It is about eleven miles in length by three in breadth, and comprises about one-third of the parish. The lower part is very woody and good land, the upper part more rocky and barren, being terminated by the mountains of Hardknott and Wrynose, to the west and south-west of which are Birker Fell, Harter Fell, and several smaller eminences. The area is returned with Millom parish. The rateable value is £1,295. The population in 1801 was 292; in 1811, 298; in 1821, 268; in 1831, 405; in 1841, 373; and in 1851, 370. By the arrangements of wards made at the October quarter sessions, 1857, Ulpha was transferred from the ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent to the newly-formed Bootle Ward. Here is a bobbin-mill, worked by Mr. William Russell; and there are also a corn and saw-mills. Copper has been extensively worked in this chapelry, but at present the working is discontinued. Ulpha, like many other places in Cumberland, is remarkable for the longevity of its inhabitants.

Mr. J. Denton informs us that "Ulpha was granted to one Ulf, the son of Evard, whose posterity enjoyed it till the time of King Henry III. Ulf had issue Ailward and Ketell. Ailward paid to King Henry

III., in the 17th year of his reign (1232-3), twenty marks for a fine assessed upon him for an attain. Ketell had divers sons, Bennett, William, and Michael; Bennett lived in King John's time, and had a son named Allan. But now the land is reduced to demesne again, and Mr. Hudleston, the present lord of Millom, and divers of his ancestors, have made there a park, inclosed for deer, which yet to this day is called Ulphay Park." Having reverted to the lords of Millom, Ulpha was again constituted part of that manor, and remained connected with it till sold by Sir Hedworth Williamson and his wife (heiress of the Hudlestons) to Mr. Singleton of Drigg. It was subsequently purchased from Miss Singleton by Lord Muncaster, who, in his turn disposed of it to Joseph Burrow, Esq., of Carlton Hall, who sold it to George Harrison, Esq., of Linethwaite, near Whitehaven, who afterwards sold it to Lord Lonsdale, the present lord of the manor. The old hall, now a farm-house, bears marks of great antiquity, and was probably the seat of the lords of Ulpha in days now long departed. Near to it is a well, bearing the name of the Lady's Dub, where tradition says a lady was killed by one of the numerous wolves that formerly infested this region. The principal landowners are Lord Muncaster, W. Rawlinson, Esq., Mr. W. Dawson, and Mr. Gunson.

The small hamlet of Ulpha Kirk, is situated about seven miles from Broughton. The river Duddon is here spanned by a bridge, which discloses a beautiful view up and down. "Ulpha Kirk," says Harriet Martineau, "is one of the primitive places where the old manners of the district may be traced more clearly than in most road-side settlements. The people still think it no sin to do their farm work on Sundays, when the weather—so precarious here—is favourable; and the familiar style of 'the priest' in these parts makes the transition from work to worship very natural. Some time since there was a blind 'priest' settled there. One Sunday morning, the bell rang before the people were all ready; and especially the stoutest farmer in the neighbourhood, who, detained by some cow, pig, or sheep, entered the church last of all, 'thunnerin' down the aisle.' 'Wha's comin' now?' asked the blind priest; and being informed by the clerk that it was John T——, he inquired further, 'a-foot or a-horse back?' Odd sprinklings of learning are found in these by-places, as in Scotland. Some students staying at the little inn here, and wanting to settle their account, wrote a note in Latin to the landlord, asking for the bill, and sent it by the girl who waited. Mr. Gunson, the landlord, immediately sent in the bill in Greek. It was too much for the students, who were obliged to ask to have it in English. There was a 'heigh-larned' woman, not far from hence; who married a farmer on the moor. When everybody was lamenting the hard times, she declared that, for her part, she would be contented if she could only obtain food and raiment, whereupon her husband rebuked her presumption. 'Thoo fule,' said he, 'thoo dusn't think thoo's to hev more than other folk. I'se content wi' meat and claes.'"

THE CHAPEL.

Ulpha chapel, dedicated to St. John, is distant seven miles north of the mother church of Millom. Wordsworth, in one of his beautiful sonnets, tells us that—

The kirk of Ulpha to the pilgrim's eye
Is welcome as a star, that doth present
Its shining forehead through the peaceful rent
Of a black cloud diffused o'er half the sky;
Or as a fruitful palm tree, towering high
O'er the parched waste beside an Arab's tent;
Or the Indian tree, whose branches downward bent
Take root again, a boundless canopy.
How sweet were leisure, could it yield no more Than mid that wave-washed churchyard to recline,
From pastoral graves extracting thoughts divine;
Or there to pace, and mark the summits hoar
Of distant moonlit mountains faintly shine,
Sooth'd by the unseen river's gentle roar.

The chapel of Ulpha was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the annual value of £5; £3 6s. 8d. of which was the ancient chapel salary. It has been since augmented from Queen Anne's Bounty, and in 1835 was returned as worth £49 per annum. The benefice is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the vicar of Millom. The Rev. Jeremiah Walker is the present incumbent. The registers commence in 1703. At the time the chapel was consecrated it was endowed with the small tithes of the district, or rather a modus in lieu of them, as it is a fixed annual payment from every landowner and teneement in the chapelry.

The Wesleyans have a place of worship here.

There was a Baptist school erected in this chapelry, in 1855, by Mrs. Wilson.

CHARITY.

William Danson's Bequest.—William Danson, of the parish of St. Clement Danes, Westminster, by will, dated November 17th, 1793, left £3 per annum, chargeable upon the Folds estate, to be distributed amongst the most needy of the poor of Ulpha, his native place.

A library was established here in 1761, by the associates of Dr. Bray, but the books have long been lost.

On the summit of the first ascent of Hardknott, a mountain near the northern extremity of the parish, are the remains of a British or Roman fort, known as Hardknott Castle.¹ Bishop Gibson supposes these remains to have belonged to some church or chapel which formerly stood here; and Gough, in his Additions to Camden, supposes the ruins may be those of a chapel or cross erected upon this mountain, as was the case upon Cross Fell. Be this as it may, Hardknott Castle commands a magnificent view of Scawfell and the Pike—the loftiest mountains in the Lake District—as also of the Irish Sea. Formerly the pack-horses which went from Kendal to Whitehaven crossed Wrynose and Hardknott, a road now only seldom visited except by the shepherd and the adventurous tourist.

¹ Hardknott Castle is on an estate belonging to Edward Stanley, Esq., of Penrith, called Brothere Keld, a sheep-farm containing about 14,000 acres, which was presented to the Stanley family on the dissolution of Furness Abbey.

From the road over Stoneside a very fine view of Ulpha and the valleys of Lewthwaite and Donnerdale is obtained. After climbing the rugged ascents over which the road leads, these delightful valleys, which are near the river Duddon, burst on the sight, embosomed amid barren mountains, and forming pictures of surpassing beauty, on which the eye loves to dwell, and the recollection of which fully illustrates the truth of the saying that “a thing of beauty is a joy for ever.” Donnerdale, verdant and well cultivated, looks like a rich garden; while, beyond, the mountains stretch away far to the north. The river Duddon, which forms the eastern boundary of this chapelry, as well as of the parish of Milom, is well known, wherever the English language is spoken or read, by the sonnets of Wordsworth, according to whom it may be compared to any river of equal length of course in any country. Speaking of his sonnets, he says: “The reader who may have been interested in the foregoing sonnets, will not be displeased to find in this place a prose account of the Duddon, extracted from Green’s Comprehensive Guide to the Lakes, lately published. ‘The road leading from Coniston to Broughton is over high ground, and commands a view of the river Duddon; which at high water is a grand sight, having the beautiful and fertile lands of Lancashire and Cumberland stretching each way from its margin. In this extensive view the face of nature is displayed in a wonderful variety of hill and dale, wooded grounds and buildings; amongst the latter, Broughton Tower, seated on the crown of a hill, rising elegantly from the valley, is an object of extraordinary interest. Fertility on each side is gradually diminished and lost in the superior heights of Blackcomb in Cumberland and the high lands between Kirby and Ulverstone. The road from Broughton to Seathwaite is on the banks of the Duddon, and on its Lancashire side it is of various elevations. The river is an amusing companion—one while brawling and tumbling over rocky precipices, until the agitated water becomes again calm by arriving at a smoother and less precipitous bed; but its course is soon again ruffled, and the current thrown into every variety of foam which the rocky channel of a river can give to water.’

“After all, the traveller would be most gratified who should approach this beautiful stream, neither at its source, as is done in the sonnets, nor from its termination, but from Coniston over Walna Scar; first descending into a little circular valley, a collateral compartment of the long winding vale through which flows the Duddon. This recess, towards the close of September, when the after-grass of the meadows is still of a fresh green, with the leaves of many of the trees faded, but perhaps none fallen, is truly enchanting. At a point elevated enough to show the various objects in the valley, and not so high as to diminish their importance, the stranger will instinctively halt. On the foreground, a little below the most favourable station, a rude foot-bridge is thrown over the bed of the noisy brook foaming by the way-side. Russet and craggy hills, of bold and varied outline, surround the level valley, which is besprinkled with grey rocks plumed with birch trees. A few homesteads are interspersed, in some places peeping out from among the rocks like hermitages, whose site has been chosen for the benefit of sunshine as well as shelter; in other instances the dwelling-house, barn, and byre compose together a cruciform structure, which with its embowering trees, and the ivy clothing part of the walls and roof like a fleece, call to mind the remains of an ancient abbey. Time, in most cases, and nature everywhere, have given a sanctity to the humble works of man that are scattered over this peaceful retirement. Hence a harmony of tone and colour, a perfection and consummation of beauty, which would have been marred had aim or purpose interfered with the course of convenience, utility, or necessity. This unvisited region stands in no need of the veil of twilight to soften or disguise its features. As it glistens in the morning sunshine it would fill the spectator’s heart with gladness. Looking from our chosen station he would feel an impatience to rove among its pathways, to be greeted by the milkmaid, to wander from house to house, exchanging ‘good morrows,’ as he passes the open doors; but at evening, when the sun is set, and a pearly light gleams from the western quarter of the sky, with an answering light from the smooth surface of the meadows—when the trees are dusky, but each kind still distinguishable—when the cool air has condensed the blue smoke rising from the cottage chimneys—when the dark mossy stones seem to sleep in the bed of the foaming brook; then he would be unwilling to move forward, not less from a reluctance to relinquish what he beholds than from an apprehension of disturbing by his approach the quietness beneath him. Issuing from the plain of this valley the brook descends in a rapid torrent, passing by the churchyard of Seathwaite. The traveller is thus conducted at once into the midst of a wild and beautiful scenery which gave occasion to the sonnets from the 14th to the 20th inclusive. From the point where the Seathwaite brook joins the Duddon is a view upwards into the pass through which the river makes its way into the plain of Donnerdale. The perpendicular rock on the right bears the ancient British name of The Pen; the one opposite is called Wallabarrow Cragg, a name that occurs in several places to designate rocks of the same character. The chaotic aspect of the scene is well marked by the expression of a stranger, who strolled out while dinner was preparing, and at his return, being asked by his host 'What way he had been wandering?' replied, 'as far as it is finished!'

"The bed of the Duddon is here strewn with large fragments of rocks fallen from aloft, which, as Mr. Green truly says, 'are happily adapted to the many-shaped waterfalls (or rather waterbreaks, for none of them are high) displayed in the short space of half a mile.' That there is some hazard in frequenting these desolate places I myself have had proof, for one night an immense mass of rock fell upon the very spot where, with a friend, I had lingered the day before. 'The concussion,' says Mr. Green, speaking of the event (for he also, in the practice of his art, on that day sat exposed for a still longer time to the same peril), 'was heard, not without alarm, by the neighbouring shepherds.'"

MORESBY PARISH.

The parish of Moresby is bounded on the north by the parishes of Harrington and Distington, on the west by the sea, on the south by the township of Whitehaven, and on the east by Arleedon. It contains about three square miles, being about a mile and a half in length and breadth. The land towards the sea is rich and fertile, being partly loam and gravel; but on the east side of the parish it is cold and sterile. The commons were enclosed about the year 1774, since which time the land here has been much improved by careful cultivation. Coal is abundant, and there is a quarry of excellent freestone. There are two coal pits, the "Countess" and "Moresby" pits, worked by the Earl of Lonsdale. The former was opened in 1835 and the latter in 1849, and afford employment to about 160 persons. The "Countess" is now nearly worked out, but the "Moresby" produces from 30,000 to 40,000 tons of coal per annum. This parish comprises the townships of Moresby and Parton, whose united area is 2,187 acres.

MORESBY.

The area of the township is 2,157 acres; its rateable value £3,021 15s. The population in 1801 was 371; in 1811, 409; in 1821, 438; in 1831, 424; in 1841, 512; and in 1851, 533. Moresby township contains several handsome villas.

The first possessor of the manor of Moresby upon record is one Morris, who is stated to have been seated at Moresby in the time of William Rufus, and from him the family of Moresby, Morisceby, Moricebi, or Mauriceby, derived their origin. His successor bore the name of Urkman, and probably was his son or grandson. The opinion that he was lord of the fee is strengthened by his name being preserved in the chartulary of the abbey of Holme Cultram, among those of its earliest patrons, as enriching the monastery with a grant of land in Harrays, now written Harris, in Moresby, and of common in the same manor. He is followed by Hugone de Moricebi, who occurs as witness to a charter, dated A.D. 1192, from William de Fortibus, earl of Albermarle (in right of his wife Hawise, baron of Egremont), confirming to the priory at St. Bees the grants theretofore made by that lady's ancestors, De Meschines and De Romeley. The lord of Moresby, whom ancient records next disclose, is one whose name is appended to a deed without a date (but which, in the annals of the old house of Le Fleming of Rydal and Coniston, is assigned to the reign of King John), made by Sir John le Fleming of Bockermest, respecting certain lands in Cumberland. To that document a Sir Hugh de Moriceby appears as witness, together with Robert Prior of St. Bees, Sir Peter de Wyrkyngton, Sir Adam de Millom, and Sir Richard de Coupland. Whether to his father's name and estates another Hugh must now be considered to have succeeded, or whether it was the person last-named, who testified to the following deed, no evidence has been met with to certify the fact. But about 1240 the name of Hugone de Morisceby is found among other witnesses, set to a deed, whereby John de Hodleston, first lord of Millom, of that name, in right of his wife Joan, heiress of the old family De Boisville, or De Millom, confirmed to God and the monks of Holme Cultram all the lands of Lekeley, or Seaton, in Cumberland, which had been given to them by Gunilda, or Goynhilde, daughter to Harry de Millom. Another lord arises in the person of Nicholas de Moresby, who, about A.D. 1250, witnessed a deed by which the charter of Gunilda above-mentioned was confirmed by Joan, then widow of John de Hodleston of Millom—and whose attestation, along with those of Johanne de Lamplugh, Benedicte de Rotington, and others, likewise found to a charter of Gilbert de Hothwayt and Christiana his wife, confirming certain lands to the religious institutions of the Blessed Marie, at York, and to St. Bega, in Coupland. The next inheritor is named Hugh, who, it is very likely was son to the foregoing. At least the lands at Moresby acknowledged his rightful possession; for, continuing the bounty of his family to Holme Cultram Abbey, he, in 1257, bestowed lands in Crombec and Waver, and subsequently gave six acres of arable and four acres of meadow land in Distington to that monastery, in whose chartulary these offerings are registered. A deed, relating to part of the estates of the monastery of St. Mary, in Furness, attests that he likewise owned certain rights to minerals in that district; as by an instrument done in the said abbey, the 14th October, 1270, Robert de Leybourne quitted claim to St. Mary's Abbot, all right of getting iron and copper within that dignitary's jurisdiction, except a limited quantity which he had by grant from Hugh de Morecebi, with consent of the abbot and convent during the life of the said Hugh. The witnesses to the said deed being John de Hodleston, Allan de Coupland, and Robert de Harrington, all men of knightly degree. Besides the lands to which they have given their name, the Moresbys also held, as one of their earliest possessions, the adjoining manor, or moiety of the manor of Distington which centred in them, either by grant or purchase, in Henry III.'s reign, and there they resided in the formidable stronghold, whose fragmentary remains, pleasingly cresting a slight knoll in the centre of the expanded head of the vale which reaches from Moresby to Distington, still remain. The inheritance of Moresby seems afterwards to have descended upon Adam de Moresby. He was likewise possessed of the adjoining manor, or moiety of the manor, of Hensingham, though by what title has not been discovered, as in 1272 Robert de Branthwaite, lord of the neighbouring seignior of that name, is recorded to have held the half of Hensingham as a vassal of the said Adam, who,

with this brief mention, retires out of sight. From the succeeding notice respecting the family, which, in chronological order, has fallen under review, it is gathered that Thomas de Moresby, who had married Margaret, daughter of Thomas de Lucy, lord of Cockermouth, by Margaret, one of the daughters and co-heirs of John de Multon, last baron of Egremont of that name, came next to the estate, and about 1278 acquired the adjacent lordship of Distington, if reliance is to be placed upon the statement by Denton, quoted in the local history, that "Ada de Morville, wife of Richard de Lucy, Dandraw, and he had issue Ada de Dundraw, wife of Stephen de Crofton, who gave their part of Distington to Thomas de Moresby and Margaret de Lucy, his wife, anno 6th Edward I., Margaret did exchange it with her brother, Thomas Lucy, for lands in Thackthwaite, and Thomas the same in Moresby for Brackenthwaite in Loweswater;" or, in other words, Thomas Lucy again exchanged Distington with the Moresbys for Brackenthwaite. It is, however, difficult to reconcile Denton's account with the information derived from the chartulary of Holme Cultram, which manifests that, several years previously, Hugh de Moresby had given lands in Distington to that institution—a donative it is improbable he would have bestowed had he not possessed the fee. John de Moresby is the next of the family upon record. His wife was Helena, daughter to William D'Aubeny, a man sprung from a house not inferior to that with which his own had blended. After De Moresby's decease, his widow married Nicholas Veteripontes, lord of Alston, who died in 1315, leaving a son, Robert, twelve years old at his father's death. The pedigree of the Alston Veteripontes is silent respecting the family of which that lady was a descendant, though it certifies that she had an interest in lands at Kescliffe and Dufton, in Westmoreland, as well as in Kirkthwaite, Lyvethwaite, and Johnby, in Cumberland, and that she did not die till 1367. We have no further information respecting this John de Moresby. He upon whom, in the course of hereditary succession, the estates next devolved, bore the name of Hugh. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Asby of Asby, in Westmoreland, receiving with her the estates of the Asbys; but, dying without children, his wife, as we learn from an old deed, exercised, in her own right, seigniorial jurisdiction over the manor so far back as the year 1291. In A.D. 1293 De Moresby was one of the three knights selected by his kinsman of Cockermouth (the others being Hugh de Lowther and Richard de Denton) to assist in the surprise of the castle of Carlisle, and the arrest of Andrew de Hercla, its governor. Culgaith, near Penrith, was in 1324 granted to Sir Hugh of Moresby, for his "bravery, good services, and loyalty" on the occasion referred to. In the fifteenth and nineteenth years of the following reign the command of the castle of Carlisle was confided to him by the martial sovereign who then ruled the destinies of England. In 1329 and 1337 he was knight of the shire of Westmoreland. In 1335 he was elected to the same honourable post for Cumberland; for which county, in the 7th and 18th Edward III., he likewise served what, at that time, was the warlike and onerous office of sheriff; and in the last-mentioned year he was also one of the escheators appointed by the crown, on the death of Lord Clifford, to inquire into and survey his estates. In 1343 Sir Hugh was deceased, though the inquisition post mortem, under which it was found that he had been seised of Moresby and the other lands therein mentioned, was not taken until 1349; as in the former year a fine was levied of the manor of Great Asby, between his son Christopher and Isabel his wife of the one part, and Margaret, widow of Sir Hugh, of the other part, to hold to the said Christopher and Isabel, and the heirs of their bodies, remainder to the heirs of the said Margaret (who is said to have survived until 1375), in fee. On the demise of Sir Hugh, the possession of his augmented estates rested upon his son Christopher, who in his father's lifetime was affianced to Isabel, daughter to John de Derwentwater, lord of the manors of Castlerigg and Tallantire, in Cumberland, and of Bolton, in Westmoreland. On the contract of marriage, a deed in Norman French, extant among the muniments of John Hill, Esq., the present lord of Asby, was made and interchangeably sealed at Bolton, on the Monday next before the feast of Saint Michael, in the fifteenth year of the reign of King Edward III., between Mons. Hugh de Moriscoeby of the one part, and Mons. Jehn de Derwentwater of the other part, by which the former covenanted that Christopher, his son and heir, should marry Isabel, daughter to the latter, who agreed to give with her a portion of 180 marks—a large sum in an age when the mark was valued at thirty shillings of the money of that day. During the next quarter of a century their ancestral vault seems to have closed over the seigneurs de Moresby in rapid succession; otherwise it is not easy to account for the frequent change of name in those who, but for a brief space each, appear to have retained the estates, there being no less than three disclosed within a few years; though in such unfixed outline that, but for the escheats issued after their respective deaths, the hold which they have upon attention is little more than nominal. Probably

Christopher, the inheritor who is next recorded, was son to the afore-named Christopher and Isabel; as among the returns to the inquisitions of the year 1353 is one which finds that Thomas de Lucy was seised, "pro Christophero de Moricebi," of the manor of Moresby, and others. In the 34th, 35th, 36th, and 37th Edward III., he served the office of sheriff for Cumberland, and in the two first of those years was also knight of the shire for Westmoreland. Little more concerning him is known than that he was deceased in the 43rd Edward III., as in that year he was found, by escheat, to have held the lordships and lands already mentioned; and that, in 1374, Stephen de Melburn is recorded to have been instituted to the living of Asby, on the king's presentation, in right of the heir of Christopher de Moresby, then in wardship to the crown. On attaining his majority Hugh came into possession of his patrimony; there being, in a return to an inquisition taken 49th Edward III., after the decease of Joan, widow of John de Coup-land, to whom the king had granted that portion of the barony of Kendal afterwards known as the Richmond fee, a finding that Hugh de Moresby held of the said Joan the manor of Hatton Roofs, by homage and fealty, and the service of 8s. a year, as of her manor of Kirby in Kendal. After Hugh, of whom the above is all that is recorded, attention is drawn to another Christopher, who sat in Parliament for Westmoreland in A.D. 1391, and likewise filled the sheriffalty of Cumberland the same year. His wife's name, if any he had, has eluded research, as well as the time of his death, or where he was interred. Upon his decease the estates seem to have vested in another Christopher, who was one of a numerous armed band of gentlemen of name, from the counties of Westmoreland and York, against whom, in A.D. 1414, the abbot of Saint Mary, at Fountains, petitioned Parliament, for having, with his confederates, violently broken into and plundered that famed religious house of all its plate, jewels, and other valuables, and ill-treated the conventual inmates. All the redress, however, which the abbot obtained, was answer referring him for remedy to the common law of the land. Christopher, with his brother Robert, in July of the following year, attended by a small band of military retainers, rode into Southampton, and joined the armament there assembling, under Henry V., for the invasion of France. On the 11th August the king and his army sailed from that port. On the 14th they landed near Harfleur, in Normandy, from which place their subsequent progress forms one of the most glorious pages in our island's history. In the same remarkable year Sir Christopher is likewise enumerated, by the eminent northern historian, Surtees, as having been present, with certain of the gentry of Northumberland, Durham, and Westmoreland, to assist Sir Ralph Elbrie and two others "in taking sayesenne and possession, for the bishop's use," of the third part of Tyne Bridge, with the tower on the south end, which Cardinal Thomas Langley, bishop of Durham, had recovered, by suit in the king's court, against the mayor and commonalty of Newcastle. In the 3rd, 7th, and 17th Henry VI., he served the office of sheriff for Cumberland; and in 1438 he, in conjunction with his neighbour, Sir Christopher Curwen, and others of the first men on the English borders, was one of the conservators of the truce entered into with the Scots. A previous notice of him likewise occurs in the return to an inquisition taken after the death of John Lord Clifford, 10th Henry V., wherein, among other matters, the juror found that, belonging to the castle of Brougham there was a certain rent of twenty quarters of oats and 30s. to be received yearly out of the villis of Clyburne, Wynanderwath, and Brougham, which rent, as well of oats as money, together with the custody of the office of head forester of Winfell, were granted to Christopher de Moresby for life; the reversion to Thomas, son and heir to the said John de Clifford, and his heirs. What was the after career of Christopher Moresby, whom he married, or when his towers mourned for their lord, we have no records to show. A son named Christopher, or James (for the information supplied by the provincial antiquaries is imperfect and conflicting), contracted the splendid matrimonial alliance with the heiress of the Tylliols, which is peculiarly noticeable in the annals of the Moresbys, as it contributed so much to enlarge the possessions and importance they already enjoyed. This lady, Margaret Tylliol, died 5th August, 1460, as certified under an inquisition taken after her decease, and preserved among the palatinate records in the library of the dean and chapter at Durham. To the large domains of his house, his union with their wealthy heiress enabled Moresby to add a moiety of the lordship of Layton, Witton Gilbert, Hetton-le-Hole, Ebchester, the East Hall and the West Hall of Great Lumley, with other lands in Durham, while the Cumbrian manors of Upmanby, Ricardby, Solport, and Torpenhow, with the castle and demesne of Scaleby, one of the most interesting of the ancient edifices in Cumberland. Little more has been ascertained respecting the owner of those accumulated estates than that, on the floor of the nave in Greystoke church, near the pulpit, is the following legend, on a plate of brass:—"Of your charite pray for the souls of James Moresby and Margaret, his wife, on whose souls Jesu have mercy. Amen." But whether that monumental chronicle relates to James Moresby and Margaret Tylliol, or to Margaret Colville, who espoused the Moresby of a later day we have no means of ascertaining. Christopher, the eldest son of the alliance alluded to, now appears. He attained his majority in 1460, and seems scarcely to have done so when, in 1461, he died; as, on an inquest to prove his age, taken 10th March, 1462, and enrolled among the archives at Durham, one Nicholas Crozier, aged fifty, deposed that he was present in Cockermouth church, with the rector, when Christopher Moresby was baptised, on the feast of St. Thomas à Beckett, 1439. Who was his wife has not been discovered, though it appears he was married, as, after his decease, Christopher, his son, was found under age. But of that Moresby further mention must be postponed until his son also has been passed in review. That son likewise bore the name of Christopher. The tomb claimed him for its own in the lifetime of his father, but not until after his own espousal to Elizabeth, one of the daughters and co-heiresses of Sir Henry Fenwick, Knt., of Fenwick, in Northumberland. By that lady, who survived him (and subsequently married John Warton, Esq., of Kirbythorne, in Westmoreland, to whom she had a family, and in whose pedigree she is styled relict of Sir Christopher Moresby, Knt.), he had not any children. Her name, however, appears thus united with his on their monument in Penrith church:—"Orate pro anima Christophori Moresby, militis, et Elizabethæ uxoris, quorum Animabus propitiatur Deus. Amen." Attention must now be thrown back to Sir Christopher Moresby, father to the last-named individual, who along with the Hudelstons of Millom, Broughtons of Broughton, the Whartons of Warthon, Parr baron of Kendal, the Harringtons of Wraysholme, Yewbarrow, and Arnside Towers, the Dacres of Dacre, Greystoke of Greystoke, Musgrave of Musgrave and Eden Hall, Strickland of Siergh, and his relatives, the Ratcliffes of Derwentwater, took part with the House of York in the wars of the Roses. By Edward IV. and Richard III. he was distinguished by several manifestations of their special favour and regard, and had several offices of trust and emolument conferred upon him. In 1455, he, with the flower of the northern English chivalry, followed to the field the last-named sovereign, and was in the list of those firm and faithful supporters who, on the eve of the fight at Bosworth, "swore that Richard should wear the crown." Having survived the contest between the rival factions, he ultimately weathered all the storms of the times. He was also a tried and valiant soldier in the wars with Scotland, and was, moreover, held in so great consideration by the various sovereigns that he was frequently entrusted with the execution of many momentous public employments, especially in 1484, 1487, and 1497, when, with several of the first men in the realm, he was appointed to treat of peace with the Scots. In the 6th Edward IV. he represented Westmoreland in Parliament, and in the 11th of the same reign, as well as in the 1st, 3rd, and 11th of Henry VII., he discharged the office of sheriff for Cumberland. His wife was Margaret, uterine sister to the "Shepherd Lord Clifford," and daughter to Sir Lancelot Threlkeld of Threlkeld, by Margaret Dowager Lady Clifford, who descended from the old Lords Vesci, of Alnwick, was in her own right Baroness de Vesci, in Yorkshire. By that lady Sir Christopher had two children—a son, who, as before stated, died before his father, and one daughter. Thus left the sole male heir of his race, he expired in the last year of the 15th century, and the blazoned marble, with its "Hic jacet Christophorus Moresby miles, qui obiit 26^o die mensis Julii, A.D. 1499, Jesu Maria," which shadows his grave, is, with the brief evidences collected in these pages, and some fugitive traditions, tinged with memories of its greatness, the sole remembrance that time has spared to tell the tale of the house of Moresby. With the decease of Sir Christopher the lineal male line of his flourishing family became extinct, and the vast heritage of her ancestors was, by his only daughter and heiress, Anne Moresby, bestowed, together with her hand, on Sir Christopher Pykerynge, the representative of a knightly Westmoreland house. Distinguished in local genealogy from a very early period, the family of Pykerynge, whose escutcheon—gerent, ermine, a lion rampant azure, crowned, or—was now loaded with the rich quarterings of the Moresbys and their alliances, had their chief place of residence at Killington, in the parish of Kirby Lonsdale, where the remnants of their ancestral hall lies embedded in its narrow vale, amid the bleak hills, over which wends the road from Sedburgh to Kendal. The site of this sequestered edifice, whose ivy-shrouded walls add the charm of romantic association to landscape of exceeding loveliness, is on the verge of a rocky, tree-fringed dell, which, at a short distance from the hall, opens into the splendid valley of Lunedale. No part of the original fabric of the Pykerynges is now remaining, save one roofless tower, which, retaining some of its early features, proclaims its date to the time of the third Edward. Wearing the changeful hue and marks of bygone days, this affecting memorial of ancient grandeur stands annexed to buildings constructed by the Ritsons, into whose hands it and the manor, vested, by purchase from intermediate owners, in Charles I.'s reign, and the initial letters of their name, with the date 1640, are on one of the gables in front of the later structure. On this small seigniory the family had been settled since A.D. 1260, when Peter de Brus, baron of Kendal, granted to William de Pykerynge, to hold in fee, on condition of rendering for the same a pair of gilt spurs yearly, and doing military service for the twentieth part of one knight's fee. From that ancestor, after many descents, the manor and other extensive domains fell, in the course of succession, upon Sir Christopher, or, as Dr. Burn calls him, Sir James Pykerynge, who married the heiress of Moresby, by whom he had six children, who all allied themselves with the first families in Westmoreland. For two generations the descendants of Sir Christopher and Anne enjoyed their large estates, and occasionally made the hall at Moresby their abode, where, during their periodical visits, the tradition of the neighbourhood avers they lived in a style so profusely magnificent, and made the old mansion the scene of such festive revellings, as most probably laid the foundation of the necessity under which their posterity seem to have been obliged to alienate their lands. Be, however, the cause of such ultimate dispersal what it might, the memory of their great doings still lives as a proverb among the inhabitants of that part of Cumberland adjoining the house, where splendour of living in man or woman is generally expressed by the significant term that "they are as great as Moresby Ha' folk," a saying which, to this day, attests at least the popular faith in the story; and even a hand at whist, when containing many of the court cards, is joyfully spoken of as being full of the same "folk." Sir Christopher, who married the wealthy heiress of the Moresbys, died in 1512, and was buried in Penrith church, where the solemn memorial above his grave is still extant, with the legend—"Orate pro anima Christophori Pykeryng militis qui obiit VII. die mensis Sept. Anno Dom. milles^o D^o XII." To him succeeded his eldest son, likewise named Christopher, whose wife was Eleanor, daughter and sole heiress of Roger Lewknor, Knt., one of the co-heirs of the barony of Camoys. He died in the reign of Henry VIII., but the place of his sepulture is unknown; and although the chapel at Killington was then in existence, there are not in it any monuments that revive its memory. On his decease, the lineal male line of the house of Pykeryng of Killington also terminated, when the inheritance descended upon Anne, or, as she has been by some writers erroneously named, Eleanor, his only child and heiress, respecting some of the circumstances of whose life there is but little uncertainty. Endowed with an ample inheritance, her hand was early sought in marriage, and, as if the number of her mother's espousals, who had been three times married, was to be her daughter's rule, the wealthy heiress of the house of Killington formed no exception to the maternal example, for she likewise was thrice married. Her first husband was Sir Francis Weston, Knt., of Sutton Place, in Surrey, the head of a family which had been seated for many generations in that county. Her second husband was Sir Henry Knyvett, Knt., of East Horsley, in Surrey, second son to Sir Thomas Knyvett, of Buckenham Castle, in the county of Norfolk, who was master of the horse to Henry VIII., by his wife Muriel, daughter of Thomas Howard, duke of Norfolk, and widow of Grey, viscount Lisle. To her second husband Lady Anne bore two sons and two daughters—Sir Henry, the eldest, and Sir Thomas, who by James I. was, in 1607, created Baron Knyvett of Escrick, in the county of York; Margaret, wife of Henry Varasour, of Copenthorpe, in Yorkshire, and Katharine, united first to Henry Lord Paget, and secondly to Sir Edward Carey, Knt., master of the Jewel House. Sir Henry Knyvett espoused Elizabeth, the only child and heiress of Sir James Stumpe, of Charleton, in the county of Wilts. Besides three children, who died in infancy, Sir Henry Knyvett was the father also of three daughters, named Katharine, Elizabeth, and Frances, who all attained to the honours of the peerage; and on the brows of Lady Anne's descendants yet rest the coronets which of yore encircled the heads of her three granddaughters of the house of Knyvett—respectively countesses of Suffolk, Lincoln, and Rutland. Thirteen years after the death of his first wife, Sir Henry, as the herald's certificate, yet extant, tells us, died at his manor of Charlton, the 14th day of June, 1598. Lady Anne's third husband was John Vaughan, Esq., of Porthamell, in the county of Brecknock, and of Sutton-upon-Darwen, in the county of York—a scion of one of the oldest Welsh families; on the issue of which union the Westmoreland estates appear to have been settled. By Vaughan, who also died in her lifetime, she had two children: a son, called Francis, who chose for his wife, Anne, daughter to Sir Thomas Baynton, of the county of York, and who was subsequently slain in the Irish wars, in Queen Elizabeth's reign, leaving, with other children, a son, three years old, in 1585, and a daughter, Frances, the wife of Thomas Lord Burgh, deputy of Ireland. She died in 1582. The Cumberland estates had been previously aliened. They had been put into settlement on her first marriage, and in her lifetime, her son, Sir Henry Weston, with her concurrence, disposed of all in that shire, and among them sold the hall, manor, and advowson of Moresby to William Fletcher, Esq., in 1576, from whom the Fletchers of Moresby descended. His son, named Henry or John, it is not clear which, as the pedigrees are somewhat obscure and at variance on the subject, came next to the succession, and is considered to have been the rebuilder of the front of the hall. William, his eldest son, died unmarried, when the inheritance devolved upon his second son, Henry, who, like his more noted kinsman of the house of Hutton, ranged himself under the royal banner, and fought gallantly for King Charles, in the civil wars of the seventeenth century. Excepting, however, the enumeration of his name in a list of those who sent in provisions to the garrison at Carlisle in 1643 and the following year, there does not occur any further notice of him in those stormy times. On the death of the stout royalist, Moresby became the property of his son William, who, about the end of the seventeenth century espoused his kinswoman Anne or Frances, daughter to Sir Henry Fletcher of Hutton. And on his decease in 1703, a monumental tablet of brass was affixed to the north wall of the chancel of the old parish church of Moresby. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, also designated Fletcher of Hutton, who took to wife the youngest daughter of George Middleton Oldfield, Esq., of Cheshire, and of Beetham Hall, in Westmoreland. With him the family ended, and dying a childless man, about the year 1720, the Fletchers of Moresby, like their predecessors in the manor, also became extinct. We must now revert to Thomas, the sixth and youngest son to Henry Fletcher, the host of the Queen of Scotland. That gentleman, who, with his father, was also a merchant and manufacturer in Cocker-mouth, was the immediate root from which sprang the Fletchers of Clea Hall, who descend from the male line, and the Fletcher Vases of Hutton and Armathwaite Halls, who derive through a female branch. Sir Richard Fletcher, Knt., his eldest son, lived in the reign of James I., and removed to Hutton, which estate (anciently hold of the crown by the service of maintaining the paling or fences of the royal forest of Plumpton, and holding the king's stirrup when he mounted his horse in his castle of Carlisle, a feudal service since commuted into a small chief rent, payable to the lord paramount) he purchased in 1605. On his decease his eldest son, Henry, inherited the Hutton estate. He pulled down the old mansion in Cocker-mouth, to which the brief residence of Mary of Scotland had imparted a degree of interesting celebrity, and rebuilt it. After a time the new structure likewise obtained the name of the Old Hall. Having lain in a neglected state for a long period, it was sold in lots some years ago by the late Sir Frederick Fletcher Vane, and having since being divided into tenements, scarce a vestige is now to be descried of its former respectability. Sir Henry, who filled the office of sheriff of Cumberland in 1617, was one of the numerous band of gentry upon whom, in 1610, King Charles I. conferred the honour of baronetcy. Having, along with the majority of the ancient landed aristocracy of the country, perilled his blood and fortune for the cause of his monarch, in the disastrous wars that followed, he fell in 1645, at Rowton Heath, leaving, besides other children, a daughter Frances, subsequently united in marriage to William Fletcher of Moresby. George, his eldest son and heir followed, and died in 1700, leaving a son Henry, on whom, as third and last baronet, the title and estates devolved. Three daughters also survived him, of whom Catherine, the youngest, became the wife of Lionel Vane, Esq., of Long Newton, in the county of Durham, and from that union the present Sir Ralph Harry Fletcher Vane, Bart., is descended. Sir Henry, who was the last lineal male survivor of his branch of the family, never married. "He was," says the pedigree of his house, "reputed to be a person of whom great hopes and expectations were formed." For several years it was his custom to leave London for a season and visit his estates in the north, but having become wearied with the world, he tired of rural diversions, and his personal convictions in favour of its creed having become deep and engrossing, he, without the knowledge of any of his friends, embraced the Roman Catholic faith; and, when his inclinations were suspected, he refused to admit any argument to the contrary. Shortly after his father's death he retired to Douay, where his thoughtful and devout spirit sought a home in the solemn cloister, and having taken the vows, he died a monk in the English monastery in that place, where he lies buried under a sumptuous tomb in a chapel he built for the institution at his own expense. Before he made his monastic profession, he settled his estates at Hutton and elsewhere upon his relative, Thomas Fletcher of Moresby, the head of the eldest house of his name and blood, reserving only a small annuity, and on his death the honours and male line of the Fletchers of Hutton ended. On the demise of Sir Henry, the monk, Henry Vane, second son of Lionel and Catherine Vane, assumed the name of Fletcher, and contested at law the disposition of his uncle's property. The suit was, however, terminated by an arrangement that Fletcher of Moresby should retain Hutton and the other estates; and if he should die without male issue, they should then revert to the adverse claimant. Mr. Fletcher thereupon continued in the undisturbed use and enjoyment of those lands as long as he lived, and on his decease without children, the right of possession fell to Henry Fletcher Vane, in accordance with the agreement.

The antique hall, whose early owners history has thus faithfully limned, is situated to the north of the road leading from Whitehaven to Workington, where it is the chief and most interesting architectural ornament of the district, and, as old Dugdale would say, "for beauty and state much exceedeth any in these parts." It rests upon the eastern slope of what once was the Roman Castrum of Morbium. The front of the mansion is said to have been erected from the designs of Inigo Jones, who was in the north of England in the train of Anne, consort of James I., on her visit at Brougham Castle in 1617. This extensive front was probably, therefore, built in the reign of James I. by the second Fletcher, who inherited the manor, on the site of the principal portion of the more ancient hall of the Moresbys; while other parts, which in the thickness of their walls, narrow circular stone stairs, and low wide stone mullioned windows, unveil indications of greater age, are remnants of the anterior structure. Among these may be noticed, tapering in stages from the ground, an immense buttressed chimney. An old gate of the seventeenth century, whose heavy rustic piers are surmounted by large stone globes which rest on projecting cornices, affords means of approach into the court before the house. On the western side of this open space, placed after the fashion of similar buildings of the same age, extends a range of ancient stables, now converted into the useful adjuncts of a modern farmery, but whose few decorative traces, as well as utile unsightliness, are in a great measure hidden by folds of mantling ivy. Within the present century this was quite a wilderness, in which all spoke of dilapidation and neglect. Its green sward was partially overgrown with brambles, or strewn with rubbish and other deformities, while the air of desolation around gave an uncomfortable idea of the habitation to those who passed by. It is now transformed into a smiling pleasure or flower garden, whose fair and scented ornaments blending their sweetest charms of form and fragrance attest the horticultural taste displayed in their careful nurture, whilst cognate dispositions have been made on other sides that relieve the time-worn edifice from the extreme look of forsaken ruin it had at that period recalled.

Turning through the gateway, a hundred paces brings the visitor to the door, whose rich though mutilated appearance causes a vain regret that the heraldic adornments, as well as much of the more fragile and elaborate parts of the sculpture, have been destroyed. The grand front, which in sober dignity faces the south, exhibits an elevation of three stories. Though marred by the plain-looking farm offices that adjoin, it presents a tasteful example of architecture in what is called the Anglo-Italian manner of the seventeenth century, an era especially to be noticed, when great incongruity of style was often produced in connecting buildings that retained much of what is denominated the Gothic manner of an earlier age, with changes newly introduced from more classic lands, and of which corrupt heterogeneous union this mansion endures with but one inferior exception, so unique a specimen in this part of England. Fabricated with what has once been handsome light-coloured sandstone, now tinted by exposure with every imaginable variety of hue, and on which a sharp cutting of the mason's chisel has been abraded by the hand of time, this sumptuous façade is stamped by a certain vigour and breadth, for which character it is indebted, as well to the width of the piers between the windows, which gives it dignity and repose, as to a horizontally rusticated cornice of the Attic order, that accords it much unity of expression, while a boldness, as well as finish of surface is also produced by the smooth intersecting rustic work, with which the whole front beneath the cornice is covered. The windows and doorway, which in the Italian are equivalent to what the orders are in the Temple architecture of antiquity, are predominant features in the composition. There are three windows on each side of the entrance, surrounded by architraves and lintels ornamented with Doric tryglyphs. Seven windows are on the second floor, and an equal number of smaller ones on the upper story. They are all filled with lozenges of plain glass, and are divided into two lights each by upright stone mullions, those on the first and second floors being likewise crossed by transoms at two-thirds of their height. The windows on the second floor are more highly decorated and of loftier proportions than the others. They have enriched elbow architraves set on moulded sills or side dressings, and are alternately capped by triangular and segmented pediments. The pedented head over the centre window is broken at the crown, so as to admit the top of the scutcheon, and being supported on consoles, is, with its heraldic achievements, a more conspicuous feature than the rest. The armorial cognizance of the Fletchers, graven on an ornamented shield, once formed a suitable and highly characteristic finish over the door; but that perishing evidence of the glory of other times, on whose sculptured blazonry their sons looked as upon lofty and ennobling influences, having become partially defaced by the wasting agencies of atmospheric action, was removed when the last alterations were effected in the house, though a repetition of the same elegant enrichment, smaller and less elegantly adorned, still forms a prominent and interesting fenestral embellishment over the stately centre window on the principal floor. A soft and living air is also lent to the chaste outline of this Palladian edifice by luxuriant clusters of sober looking passion flowers, mingled with the waving tendrils of ivy, which, clambering in graceful festoons along the walls, and bowing over the ornate architecture of the door and antique casements, contend, with broad effect of contrasting hues, in brilliant rivalry with red and blue convolvuli, roses, honeysuckle, jasmine, and that ruin-loving plant, whose constancy and

"—— simple faith is dear
To roofless tower, and to prostrate shrine," the fragrant wallflower, to enliven with a riant charm the aspect of the whole building. The demesne around the hall, which formerly abounded in all the qualities of the ancient chase; shadowy woods, avenues of stately trees and bright sunlit glades through which the deer browsed and bounded in every direction, and which in 1774 was described by the local antiquaries as "large and woody," has since been enclosed and divided into fields; and the old timber having also fallen, that adjunct to its sylvan magnificence has been but sparingly supplied by a spring of new wood along the river, and in some other sheltered situations. On entering the house admission is obtained into a spacious stone-floored hall, lighted by two windows in front. This apartment at one time contained an ample fire-place, adorned with a mantelpiece of heavy stonework, carved with the arms of the Fletchers. That, likewise, was removed; and, in the progress of such destructive alterations, several skeletons, embedded in the floor, were dug up, which, having lain for some time exposed to view, were subsequently re-interred in the adjacent cemetery. Of the history of those to whom such mouldering fragments of humanity belonged no trace has been fallen upon, as neither relic nor legend was found associated with them that threw any light upon their story. From the mode of sepulture, however—each being enclosed between four stones or slates—it is a probable supposition they were those of some of the primitive British inhabitants, whose earthly existence had terminated ages before even the oldest hall was erected over their unnoticed graves. On each side is a large parlour, in one of which only are traces discernible of its former style of ornamentation. Crossing the hall, an inner one is reached, from whence ascends the spacious staircase leading to the rooms above. On one side of this hall is an approach to the kitchens and domestic offices, and on the opposite a door permits egress into a small irregularly-constructed interior court, which has likewise undergone curtailment of its pristine form and extent, and along two of whose sides are disposed portions of the older buildings. Throughout the seventeenth century the hall continued to be the seat of the chief family of Fletchers, by whom it was kept up with all the dignified respectability of their times. In the commencement of the following age, that branch of the family having died out, it, along with the manor, was sold under a decree of chancery, to John Brougham, Esq., of Scales Hall. The property, nevertheless, was soon destined to fall into the ownership of another, as, about 1737, Mr. Brougham, who shortly before had purchased the estate at Brougham, on which his grand-nephew, the present noble and eminent Lord Brougham and Vaux, has recently erected the mansion which adds another classic as well as architectural charm to the beauties of Westmoreland, disposed of Moresby to Sir James Lowther, Baronet, of Whitehaven. Since that period, the hall, demesne lands, and manorial rights have been held as part of the vast possessions of the house of Lowther, whose patrician head has, with appropriateness, been styled "the provincial monarch of unmeasured lands."

The village of Moresby is pleasantly situated about two and a half miles north-by-east of Whitehaven, on the road to Workington. About seventy years ago it consisted of a few indifferent cottages, but now possesses some very good dwellings, principally occupied by gentry. Moresby House is a modern mansion in the village, the residence of Mrs. Hartley. Rose Hill is another delightfully-situated residence in this township, and the residence of G. W. Hartley, Esq.

THE CHURCH.

The church of Moresby, dedicated to St. Bridget, occupies an open cheerful situation on the western side of the hall, and on the south-east angle of the area once occupied by the Roman fort. It is a plain-looking building, erected in 1832. The old church for which this edifice was substituted, presented in its plan the same simple details as many others in the county. It consisted of a nave, with a south porch that was seated, and had an arch at the entrance. A chancel, connected with the nave by a pointed arch of a simple chamfered order, springing from half-circular or engaged piers, and a bell turret at the west end carrying two bells, under which a west porch, approached up a flight of steps, gave admittance into the gallery. It was rebuilt, or more probably repaired, in the seventeenth century, as was inferred from the date 1656 being carved upon a stone built into the upper part of the belfrey, but having become decayed, and too small for the increasing population, was removed; and all that remains of it is the solitary chancel arch, which was left standing to indicate the site of the older church. In the progress of the work of demolition, a sculptured gravestone, or cover of a stone coffin, now in the garden at Rose Hill, was discovered and taken out of the wall. It is of early date, and cut in high relief carries the device of a cross and a pair of shears. The small dimensions of the slab would show that it had covered the grave of a child, as it measures only three feet in length by ten inches broad at the head, from whence it narrows to the bottom. From a comparison with other similar memorials, the age of this gravestone may be nearly assumed, for it could not have been placed in the church or its cemetery before the first quarter of the eleventh century, the time when such sepulchral slabs are said to have first come into use in England, nor later than the thirteenth, when shields with armorial bearings being introduced upon the sides of tombs, they were gradually disused. There can be little doubt that this stone had been placed over a grave in the churchyard, which may have been disturbed when the church was rebuilt, and may have been used in the reconstruction of that edifice, not so much for the sake of material as from a wish to preserve whatever might have been connected with religious uses, just as we know that relics of other kinds have been often secreted by being built up in the walls of churches. In what age or by what pious founder the first Christian church was erected on this deserted stronghold of Paganism, or whether that which was taken down in 1822 was the earliest religious structure, or was only built after the custom of antiquity on the site of a still older fane, there are not any authentic records that afford information, the ecclesiastical archives of the diocese being without any information on the subject. As, however, the advowson has always been appendant to the manor, it is beyond the uncertainty of conjecture that the edifice was first founded and endowed by the Moresbys in the early ages of Christianity in the north; it being the almost universal practice, in the centuries immediately following the introduction of the Christian religion into England, for the possessor of a manor to erect upon it a church, and charge the lands for ever with the maintenance of a priest. The earliest authentic notice relating to the church at Moresby is afforded by the Taxatio Ecclesie of Pope Nicholas IV., about 1291, in which it is returned as of the annual value of £4 13s. 4d., subject to a pension of 16s. payable to the prior of Huntingdon. In the Nova Taxatio of the northern benefices, undertaken in 1318, chiefly on account of the sufferings of the clergy from the unremitting ravages of the Scots, by which they were rendered unable to repay the former tax, it is set down as worth "nichil;" and in the Valor Ecclesiasticus, taken in the reign of Henry VIII., the living is returned as a rectory, of the annual value of £6 2s. 3½d., of which Charles Martindale is named rector, and the church stated to be dedicated to St. Bridget. It was subsequently certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the clear yearly value of £23, and is now worth £120 a year. The parochial registers commenced in 1717 only. The Earl of Lonsdale is patron. The tithes have been commuted for a yearly rent charge of £69 5s. There are not any monuments within its walls deserving of especial notice, though there was a tablet of brass, encrusted by damp and dirt, affixed to the north wall of the chancel of the old church, immediately over the burial place of the Fletchers, charged with a long inscription, commemorative of William Fletcher, Esq., who died in 1703, and of his ancestors. When that edifice was taken down the brass was removed into the new building, where, after lying for some years, thrown by and uncared for, it was, so late as 1840, taken away by some person unknown, and all clue to it is now lost.

RECTORS.—Charles Martindale occurs 1535; Ra. Calvert, 1668; Francis Yates, 1711; Peter Farrish, 1720; Francis Yates, 1738; Peter Richardson, 1735; W. Watts, 1754; Henry Nicholson, 1789; Richard Arnisteal, died 1831; — Thompson, —; Andrew Huddleston, —; Fletcher Woodhouse, 1837.

The Roman camp at Moresby occupies an elevated position commanding extensive prospects. Its western and southern ramparts are still good. The parish church and churchyard border upon its eastern wall. A sculptured stone, evidently chiselled by Roman hands, lies upon the spot, under the ruined chancel arch of the old church. This important slab, bearing the name of the Emperor in the genitive case, was found in digging for the foundations of the present church. A military way ran along the coast from this station by way of Maryport to the extremity of the Roman wall at Bowness. By this means the defence of the coast could be more perfectly secured. As the distance between Maryport and Bowness is considerable, a small camp was planted at Malbray, which is about midway between the places. The site of it is now a ploughed field. The station or camp at Moresby is identified by inscriptions found on the site with the Moribum of the Notitia, a place occupied by the cavalry called Equites Cataphractarii.

PARTON.

The rateable value of Parton is £560 4s. 5d., its area (thirty acres) is returned with that of the parish. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 860; in 1811, 472; in 1821, 496; in 1831, 559; in 1841, 663; and in 1851, 778.

The village of Parton is situated on the sea shore, one mile and a half north-by-east of Whitehaven, and is more ancient than the latter place. Previous to 1795 several vessels were employed in the coal trade here; but in that year the pier was washed away by an unusually high tide, and the harbour has been since deserted, the neighbouring ports engrossing the coal trade. The Whitehaven and Maryport railway skirts the village.

There is a free school in the village, erected in 1818, by Joseph Williamson, Esq., who endowed it with a freehold estate, in Arlecdon parish, which now produces about £45 a year. The founder's nephew, Chilwell Williamson, Esq., of Luton, in Bedfordshire, has since bequeathed a house in Parton for the residence of the master, who, by the deed of settlement, is to teach sixty free scholars, under the superintendence of three resident trustees and five other respectable gentlemen. The benefit of this charity is restricted to the children of Parton. The trustees, &c., hold an anniversary meeting on the first Tuesday in June. There are sixty free scholars. The village also possesses an infant school and a girls' school of industry, erected in 1837. This useful institution was established by Miss Mary Robinson, and is supported by voluntary subscription, with a small weekly payment by the children. The average attendance at the infant school is about seventy, and at the school of industry thirty.

PONSONBY PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north and west by the river Calder, on the south and east by Gosforth. The prevailing soil is a rich mould, except near the sea, where a strong clay prevails, which produces wheat and other grain equal to any in the county. Freestone is abundant, but there is neither coal nor limestone, though the neighbouring parishes produce large quantities of both. The air is pleasant and salubrious. Since the latter end of last century the parish has been extensively planted with trees, being previously but indifferently wooded. The parish possesses no dependent townships, but is divided into two quarters or constablenicks, Ponsonby and Calder.

The parish comprises an area of 2,265 acres, and its rateable value is £1162 5s. The population in 1801 was 78; in 1811, 147; in 1821, 150; in 1831, 180; in 1841, 187; and in 1851, 190. The inhabitants, who are chiefly engaged in agriculture, attend the markets at Whitehaven. On Infell, in this parish, are the remains of what tradition says was a Roman encampment, but no inscriptions or other evidences have been brought to light to warrant the supposition.

The manor of Ponsonby belonged, at a very early period, to the family of Ponson, who gave their name to the place, which thus became Ponsonby. From a deed bearing date 1388, we learn that Nicholas Stanleigh, lord of Austhwaite, bought the manor and demesne of Ponsonby of Adam de Eskdale, and the property has since belonged to his family. An inquisition taken in 1578, informs us that at that date Thomas Stanley, gentleman, held the manor of Ponsonby by homage, fealty, and suit of court, and by the sixth part of a knight's fee, sergeants' food, and witnesses. The manor of Ponsonby is now held by Edward Stanley, Esq. The tenements were mostly either purchased or enfranchised by George Edward Stanley, Esq. Two or three tenements in the parish of Gosforth belong to the manor of Ponsonby. Besides the lord of the manor, Messrs. Thomas Robinson, John Gunson, J. Nicholson, John Dixon, Jonathan Watson, Thomas Watson, and Henry Bateman are landowners.

Ponsonby Hall, the seat of Edward Stanley, Esq., is situated in a beautiful park about half a mile from Calder Bridge. It was erected in the year 1780 by the father of the present proprietor, and commands extensive and varied prospects of sea and land, including the beautiful ruins of Calder Abbey, the mountains of Wales, and the Isle of Man. The park is entered through a gateway, the pillars of which are surmounted by the crest of the family. The entablature of the portico of the hall is supported by four columns thirteen and a half feet in height, cut out of one solid block of stone. In the hall is preserved a very curious carved oak bedstead, which has been brought from Dalegarth Hall—the pillars are massive, and the carvings unusually rich. The cornice is decorated with shields bearing the arms of the Stanleys quartered with Austhwaite. It bears the date 1345 rudely carved on the back. The apartments contain many valuable paintings, including six on copper by Holbein,—Henry VIII., Anne Boleyn, his queen; Chaucer, Ben Jonson, Latimer, and Cranmer; John Stanley, Esq., the royalist; Sir George Fleming, Bart.; Bishop of Carlisle, by Vanderbank; the late George Edward Stanley, Esq., by Opie; and his lady, by Romney; Edward Stanley, Esq., by Lonsdale; and Mrs. Stanley, by Mrs. Carpenter; Henry Lord Viscount Lonsdale; Mrs. Dacre; and Mr. Stanley. The gardens are laid out with great taste, and are especially rich in choice flowers. The walks embrace both sides of the Calder, which is here crossed by a rustic bridge.

Stanley of Dalegarth and Ponsonby.

The Stanleys rank amongst the most ancient and influential families in the kingdom. They were of consequence, says Camden, half a century before the Conquest; and they have invariably held an eminent place in history. The branch of which we are more immediately about to treat has been located in the north for several centuries; and the most ancient of their estates in Cumberland have descended through an unbroken succession of father and son, over a period of not less than five hundred years, to the present proprietor.

JOHN STANLEIGH, second son of John Stanleigh, lord of Stanley and Stourton, and younger brother of Sir William Stanley, ancestor of the noble house of Derby, purchased lands at Greysouthen, in Cumberland, and represented the city of Carlisle in Parliament, 20th Edward III. His grandson,

NICHOLAS STANLEIGH of Greysouthen, marrying Constance, daughter and heiress of Thomas de Austhwaite, lord of Austhwaite, acquired that manor (now denominated Dalegarth), as appears by deed dated A.D. 1345. In 1788 Nicholas Stanleigh obtained by purchase the manor and demesne of Ponsonby. He was succeeded by his son, THOMAS STANLEIGH, Esq., lord of Austhwaite, temp. Henry VI., and M.P. for Carlisle.

NICHOLAS STANLEIGH, Esq., lord of Austhwaite, his son and heir, was father of

THOMAS STANLEY, Esq., of Dalegarth, who, marrying Ann, daughter of Sir Richard Hudleston, Knt., was succeeded by his son,

WILLIAM STANLEY, Esq., of Austhwaite and Dalegarth, 17th

Henry VII., who married Alice, daughter of Sir Richard Duckett, Knt., and had a son,

THOMAS STANLEY, Esq., of Dalegarth, who married Margaret, daughter of John Fleming, Esq., and had issue, JOHN, his successor, and Thomas of Greysouthen, appointed master of the mint in 1570; his only daughter and heiress, Mary, married Sir Edward Herbert, afterwards created Earl of Powis. The eldest son,

JOHN STANLEY, Esq., of Dalegarth, married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Senhouse, Esq., and was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS STANLEY, Esq., of Dalegarth, who married Isabel, daughter of John Leake, Esq., of Edmonton, and was succeeded by his son,

EDWARD STANLEY, Esq., of Dalegarth, who married Ann, daughter and co-heiress of Thomas Briggs, Esq., of Cawmire, in Westmoreland, and had a son,

JOHN STANLEY, Esq., of Dalegarth, an active and zealous royalist, who married, 1stly, Mary, daughter of Thomas Stanley, Esq., of Lea, in Sussex; and 2ndly, Dorothy, daughter of Henry Fetherstonehaugh, of Fetherstonehaugh, in Northumberland. He was succeeded, at his decease, by his son,

EDWARD STANLEY, Esq., of Dalegarth, who was high sheriff for co. Cumberland at the Revolution, and proclaimed William III. He married Isabel, eldest daughter of Thomas Curwen, Esq., of Sella Park, and had a son and successor,

JOHN STANLEY, Esq., of Dalegarth and Ponsonby. He married Dorothy, co-heiress of Edward Holt, Esq., of Wigan, co. Lancaster, and had three sons,

I. EDWARD, his successor.

II. John, in holy orders, rector of Workington, who married Clara, daughter of John Philipson, Esq., of Calgarity, co. Westmoreland, and had a son Edward, who married Julia, daughter of John Christian, Esq., of Unerigg, and had several children.

III. Holt, a Lieut. in Brigadier-gen. Wentworth's Regiment of Foot, died unmarried, in the expedition against Portobello.

The eldest son,

EDWARD STANLEY, of Dalegarth, married Mildred, youngest daughter of Sir George Fleming, Bart., bishop of Carlisle, and dying 1751, left a daughter, Dorothy, wife of Lieut. Joseph Dacre, and a son,

GEORGE EDWARD STANLEY, Esq., of Ponsonby and Dalegarth, born March, 1748, high sheriff 1774, who married, 1stly, 1774, Dorothy, youngest daughter of Sir William Fleming, Bart., of Rydal, by whom (who died in 1780) he had two daughters, Mildred and Elizabeth. He married 2ndly, 1789, Elizabeth, daughter of Morris Evans, Esq., of Middlesex, and had further issue,

I. EDWARD, his successor.

II. George, born 1791.

I. Jane.

EDWARD STANLEY, of Dalegarth and Ponsonby, J.P. and D.L., late M.P. for the county, and high sheriff 1823, born 1790; married Dec. 1821, Mary, daughter of William Douglas, one of the judges in the East Indies, and has had, with three daughters, three sons, viz.:-

I. EDWARD, born in September, 1822; died 1825.

II. William, born September 15, 1829.

III. George Edward, born November 21, 1831.

Arms.—Arg., on a bend, az., cotised, vert, three bucks' heads cabossed, or, quartering the AUSTRIAN arms, viz., gu., two bars, arg., in chief three mullets of six points, pierced, or.

Crest.—A stag's head, arg., attired, or, collared, vert.

Motto.—Sans changer.

THE CHURCH.

Ponsonby church, the dedication of which appears to be unknown, is situated in the park, about the centre of the parish, and a short distance from the hall. It is an ancient structure, but has undergone several repairs and alterations, which give it a comparatively modern appearance. It consists of nave, chancel, and western tower and spire, the latter of which were erected in 1840 at the expense of Mr. Stanley. The arch separating the nave and chancel is pointed. The east window contains some stained glass, emblazoned with the arms of the Stanley, Brigg, and Hutton families. On the north wall of the nave is a monumental brass, with an inscription commemorating Frances Patryckson, daughter of Sir Thomas Wyet, Knt., privy councillor to King Henry VIII. There are also mural monuments to the memory of various members of the Stanley family, and one to Thomas Curwen, Esq., one of the Curwens of Workington. The church of Ponsonby was given by John Fitz-Pouson to the priory of Conishead in Furness. We are not informed to whom it was granted at the dissolution; but in the year 1689 a presentation from the crown was procured to this church as a vicarage, but it was afterwards revoked. The living was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £9 12s., viz., £6 paid by the improprator, £3 given by William Cleator, M.D., for monthly sermons, and 2s. surplice fees. In 1717 it was certified that the William Cleator just mentioned, gave by his will £100 to the minister for preaching twelve sermons a year till the impropriation should be restored to the church, when it was to be transferred to the use of a school in the parish; but a part of this money was lost, together with another sum given by the Stanleys. In 1789 the income appears to have amounted to £22, besides the surplice fees, viz., £6 by the improprator. It has since been augmented with £1,000 from Queen Anne's Bounty, given in sums of £200 each, in the years 1744, 1780, 1790, 1791, and 1792, besides two benefactions of £200 each, given in 1790 and 1792, making a total of £1,400, with which the Nun House estate, in the parish of Dent, Yorkshire, and the Green Moor Side estate, in St. Bridget Beckermest, were purchased; £200 being given for the former in 1774, and £1,200 for the latter in 1793. The present value of the living is about £113. Nearly 200 acres of the parish are tithe free, and the tithes of the remainder were commuted, in 1846, for a yearly rent charge £19 0s. 1d. The benefice is a perpetual curacy in the impropriation and patronage of Edward Stanley, Esq. The parish registers commence in 1723.

INCUMBENTS.—George Cannell occurs 1733; Matthew Hall, 1780; John Gantkell, 18—; John Fleming, 1822; A. Middleton, 1857.

Calder is a small hamlet in this parish, four and a half miles south-south-east of Egremont, and one mile south of Calder Bridge, which connects this parish with that of St. Bridget, Beckermot.

There is a corn-mill in this parish, known as New Mill.

ST. BEES PARISH.

ST. BEES parish, the largest in the county of Cumberland, is very irregular in form, and extends ten miles along the coast, from Braystones, near Beckermot, to Whitehaven, from which place it stretches inland in a south-easterly direction to Eskdale, a distance of about eighteen miles. Its western portion lies between the river Ehen and the sea; and the eastern part, which consists chiefly of a long range of mountains and valleys, contains the lakes of Ennerdale, West Water, and Burn Tarn. The land in nearly every part of the parish is generally high, and without much wood, but the soil towards the sea is fertile. Coal, freestone, and limestone are abundant; iron ore is obtained at Eskdale, and lead ore is raised at Kinniside. Besides the large and opulent town of Whitehaven, the parish contains the five chapelries of Ennerdale, Eskdale, Hensingham, Nether Wasdale, and Wasdale Head; and is divided into the following thirteen townships, viz., St. Bees, Ennerdale, Eskdale, Hensingham, Kinniside, Lowside Quarter, Nether Wasdale, Preston Quarter, Rottington, Sandwith, Wasdale Head, Weddlear, and the town of Whitehaven. Eskdale and Wasdale townships have been transferred to Bootle Ward by the new arrangement of Wards made at the Quarter Sessions held at Carlisle, October, 1857.

ST. BEES.

St. Bees township comprises 1,405 acres of land, and its rateable value is £2,627 9s. 9d. Its population in 1801 was 409; in 1811, 425; in 1831, 655; in 1831, 517; in 1841, 557; and in 1851, 971. The manorial rights are vested in the governors of St. Bees Grammar School. The Earl of Lonsdale, Major Spedding, Mrs. Harrison, and William Fox, are the principal landowners.

St. Bees, like many other places in England, owes its origin to a religious community, one of which was founded here long anterior to the compilation of Domesday Book, or the landing of the Normans. The parish takes its name from Bega,¹ an Irish saint, who founded a small nunnery here about the year 650. She seems to have led a life of piety and virtue, and after her decease a church was dedicated to God under her invocation. There are many accounts given of the foundation of the original convent of St. Bees. Some of them are very contradictory. The common version is that given in Sandford's MSS.,² and which is as follows:—"This Abbie, by tradition, built upon this occasion [for the time I refer you to the chronicles];—That there was a pious and religious lady-abbess, and some of her sisters with her, driven in by stormy weather at Whitehaven, and [the] ship cast away i'th' harbour, and so destitute. And so she went to the lady of Egremont Castle for reliefe. That lady, a godly woman, pitied her distress, and desired her lord to give her some place to dwell in, which he did, at the now St. Bees. And she and her sisters sewed and spinned, and wrought carpets and other work, and lived very godly lives, as gott them much love. She desired Lady Egremont to desire her lord to build them a house, and they would lead a religious life together, and many wolde joine with them if they had but a house and land to live upon. Wherewith the Lady Egremont was very well pleased, and spoke to her lord he had land enough, and [should] give them some to lye up treasure in heaven. And the Lord laughed at the Ladye, and said he would give them as much land as snow fell upon the next morning, and in Midsummer Day. And on the morrow looked out at the castle window to the sea-side, two miles from Egremont, all was white with snow for three miles together. And thereupon builded this St. Bees Abbie, and gave all those lands was snowen unto it, and the town and haven of Whitehaven; and, sometimes after, all the tithes thereabout, and up the mountains and Inerdale Forest, eastward, was appropriated to this abbey of St. Bees; which was got by one Mr. Dacres, of kindred to the Lords Dacres; gott a long lease of it at fall of Abbies, and married one Mrs. Latos of the Beck Hall, Millom; who afterwards married Squire

¹ From the calendar of saints' days it appears that St. Bega, or St. Bees, is commemorated on the 6th of September; and St. Bega, virgin, on the 23rd of November.—"Life of the Saint." Ingulphus mentions a little bell at Croyland, which is called Bega.

² Dean and Chapter Library, Carlisle.

Wybridge [Wybergh] of Clifton, in Westmorland, who purchased the inheritance of this Abbe of the crowne, and sold it to old Sir John Lowther, who gave it to his younger son, Sir Christopher Lowther, Kt.-bart., soon after."

Mr. Jefferson, in his Allerdale Ward-above-Derwent, makes the following remarks on the account given by Sandford of the foundation of St. Bees:—"That snow is occasionally seen even now," he says, "on Midsummer Day, on the Cumberland mountains, is certain. A correspondent of the Carlisle Journal states that on Midsummer Day, 1838, the snow was lying two feet thick upon Glencowendale Fell. Whether, however, the parish is indebted to the legend for its singular form, or whether the legend has been invented from the shape of the parish, cannot be decided. One thing is certain, that the name of St. Bega is inseparably connected with the miracle of snow: all accounts agree in this. The life of St. Bega places the snow miracle many hundred years after the death of the mild saint, in the time of Randolph Meschines. The monkish historian relates that certain persons had instilled into the ears of that nobleman that the monks had unduly extended their possessions. A dispute arose on this subject, for the settlement of which, by the prayers of the religious, the whole land became white with snow, except the territories of the church, which stood forth dry."

History is entirely silent respecting the convent of St. Bees during the time of the Anglo-Saxon domination in England. There is little doubt that it suffered during the numerous invasions of the Northmen. Its nearness to the sea would invite their attacks. The nun, and the monk, and the priest were the persons towards whom they exercised the greatest cruelty. Of this fact the history of England furnishes us with numerous examples. On their conversion to Christianity the fierce sons of the north gave a name to this place in their own language, and Kirkby Beges, Kirkby Begock, or Kirkbybetok, the churchtown of Bees, the name by which it is known in the ancient records, proves that round the church and altar which their forefathers so ruthlessly destroyed, the Christian Danes formed themselves into a community, or town, in which they dwelt, mixed up, no doubt, with a goodly number of Angles, till the time when the Norman brought England into subjection, and parcelled out its fair fields among his followers.

We have nothing beyond the name of the place to guide us in tracing out the history of St. Bees, till the reign of Henry I., when the conventual church and monastery were restored by William de Meschines, who made it a cell of the celebrated Benedictine abbey of St. Mary at York.¹ At this time the community of St. Bees consisted of a prior and six monks. In the charter of foundation William de Meschines "granted to God, St. Mary of York, and St. Bega, and the monks serving God there, all the wood within their boundaries, and everything within the same, except hart and hind, boar and hawk; and all liberties within their bounds which he himself had in Copeland, as well on land as on the water, both salt and fresh." Besides this, William de Meschines granted to the priory of the church of St. Bees seven carucates of land there, the chapel of Egremont and the tithes of his demesne in Copeland, and the manor of Anenderdale. Waltheof granted the church [chapel] of Stainburn; Ketel the church of Preston; Reiner two bovates of land and one villen in Rottington; Godard the churches of Whittington and Botele; and William de Lancaster, son of Gilbert, gave them Swarthoft. All these gifts were confirmed by Ranulph, son of the William de Meschines mentioned above, and he also gave them "all the woods within their boundaries, from Cuningshaw to the sike between Preston and Hensingham, which runs down to Whitehaven and there falls into the sea; and whatever they could take in those woods, except hart, hind, boar, and hawk."² About the year 1192 William de Fortibus, earl of Albermarle, by charter confirmed to the community of St. Bees the grants made by his ancestors,—"fourteen salmons which they had by the gift of Alan son of Waltheof; and, by the same gift, half a carucate of land in Aspatria; and six acres of land in the same vill, by the gift of the said Alan; and six salmons, which they had by the gift of the Lady Alice de Romeley; and half a mark of silver, by the same donation, out of the fulling mill at Cockermouth, and one messuage in the same vill. He also granted to them one mark of silver out of the said fulling mill yearly." This charter is witnessed by the Lord Galfrid de Chandever; the Lord Thomas Keret; the Lord William de Ireby; William de Driffeld, seneschal of Cockermouth; Alan, parson of Caldbeck; Hugone de Moriceby; Ada de Haverington [Harrington]; Galfrid de Tallantire; John de Brigham; and many others.³

About the year 1200 a dispute appears to have arisen

¹ The priory of Neddrum, in Ulster, was a cell to the priory of St. Bees, having been granted by Sir John de Courcy, a descendant of William Meschines. Respecting this Irish dependency of St. Bees, a small parchment roll, considerably mutilated, remains in the Cottonian Collection. It consists of nine documents very closely written, concluding with a bull of Pope Honorius III., dated 1216, confirming the endowment.

² Dugdale's "Monasticon," p. 395.

³ Dugdale's "Monasticon," p. 390.

respecting the right of burial at Haweshead, which was twenty miles distant from the mother church of Dalton. A commission was appointed by Pope Honorius to settle the dispute, and we learn from theoucher book of Furness Abbey that the prior of St. Bees was one of the commissioners. During the wars between England and Scotland this part of Cumberland seems to have suffered severely. In 1315, the time of the invasion of Bruce, the priory of St. Bees and the manor houses of Cleator and Stainburn were visited by a party of Scots commanded by James Douglas, and we are told that the priory was pillaged and the manor houses destroyed. An insepimus was dated at St. Bees, September 10th, 1473, by Henry Percy, fourth earl of Northumberland, and lord of the honour of Cockermouth, of the charter of William de Fortibus, earl of Albermarle. In the reign of Henry IV. a Richard Hunte was appointed to St. Bees, as a free chapelry in the gift of the crown, but the abbot of St. Mary's, at York, remonstrated with the king, and the grant was revoked. Bishop Turner informs us that, under St. Bees, there was a small nursery situate at Rottington, about a mile from the mother church. This is confirmed by the ancient names of places still retained there, but few other vestiges are now to be found. Whilst speaking of the priors of St. Bees, we must not overlook the fact that they held the rank of barons in the Isle of Man, and as such were obliged to give their attendance upon the kings and lords of Man whensoever they required it, or, at least, upon every new succession in the government. The neglect of this important privilege would probably involve the loss of the tithes and lands in that island, which the devotion of the kings had conferred upon the priory of St. Bees. An abbot from Ireland and another from Scotland were also constrained, by the same religious liberality, to appear in Man as barons when called upon.

About the year 1523 the monks of St. Bees appear to have been alarmed by a meditated invasion of this "angle of Cowplande." The following letter¹ was written by the prior, Alanby, to the Lord William Dacre, lord-warden of the west marches, praying for help:—

"To the Lord Dacres,

"My right honorable and myst special good Lord, in my most lawley manner I recomende me unto your good Lordship, ever more beseking our Lords God to reward your good Lordship for me at all tymes. And now as especially as I can think, I besiche your good Lordship for your good continuance. For my good Lord, it is thus of surrie, that great nombre of Shippis are sene upon this Cost both upon Frydaye and Saturdaye last past. And we have warning that they are of the Duke of Albany's company, and will land upon us here in Cowplande and destroye us utterly. Wherefore my speciall good Lorde, I besiche your good Lordship, to regard this poun cost and cuntry, whiche belongeth unto your merchies and undre your protection, and is not accustomed with siche werres, but only such certein gentilmen and their company, as your said Lordship have called upon heretofore at your time of nede, that ye wol be good Lorde nowe, so as to assigne and command Mr. Christopher Carwen of Wirkington, and Mr. John Lamplew leutenannt of Cockermouth, and Mr. Richard Skelton of Branthwate, to give attendance with the help and aide with the best company of this little Angle of Cowplande, to resist and defende the cuntry with the grace of God and prayer of his holy saintes, to whome your Lordship now may hynde us ever more to pray for your good preservation and good spede. And els I cannot see, but this cuntry shal be utterly destroyed for ever, which God forbid, whom I hartly besiche to preserve and prosper your good Lordship, with all goodnes, after your desire. Amen. Sentylst in hast at Sanct Bees upon Sainct Luke day the evangelist.

by your awne dayely bedeman,

DER ROBERT ABBAY, prior of Sainet

Bees afore-said.²

From this time till the beginning of the sixteenth century we have nothing recorded relating to St. Bees. In the King's Book the priory of St. Bees was valued at £143 16s. 2d. At the time of the Dissolution its revenues, according to Dugdale, amounted to £143 17s. 2d.; or, according to Speed's valuation, £149 19s. 6d. From these statements it appears that there were only two religious houses in the county more amply endowed than the priory of St. Bees; these were the abbey of Holme Cultram and the priory of St. Mary, Carlisle.

In the year 1553 Edward VI. granted to Sir Thomas Chaloner, Knt., "the manor, rectory, and cell of St. Bees, with all its rights, members, and appurtenances, and all the possessions belonging to the same in St. Bees and Ennerdale, and elsewhere in the county of Cumberland (not granted away by the Crown before), to hold to the said Thomas Chaloner, his heirs and assigns, in fee farm for ever, of the king, his heirs, and successors, as of his manor of Sheriff Hutton, in Yorkshire, in free and common socage, by fealty only, and not in capite; paying to the crown yearly the fee farm rent of £143 16s. 2d." On the demise of Edward VI. his successor, Mary, in 1557, granted to Cuthbert Scott, bishop of Chester, and his successors in the see, the yearly rent just mentioned, subject to the payment of £43 8s. 4d. per annum to the crown. From the Chaloners the estates passed to the Wybergh family, who mortgaged it to the Lowthers, and on a suit instituted by Sir John Lowther, of Whitehaven, the equity of redemption was foreclosed, and the estate decreed to him and his heirs, in the year 1663, since which period it has continued in the possession of his family, and now forms part of the possessions of the Earl of Lonsdale.

¹ From a scarce book, "Duo rerum Anglicarum scriptores veteres." Oxon, 1732.

² This letter, according to Hume, was written A.D. 1523, 15th Henry VIII.

The village of St. Bees lies in a narrow valley near the shore, four miles to the south of Whitehaven, and near the rocky promontory of St. Bees Head. From very early times it has been distinguished for its religious and scholastic foundations. A bridge over the rivulet Pow, or Poe, in the village, bears the date 1535, and the arms of Archbishop Grindal. This small stream, known locally as the Pow Beck, divides the church, school, and college of St. Bees from the village. It is remarkable that it flows towards the sea by two separate channels. Rising near the middle of the vale, it is fed in its course by Myre's Beck and Lowball Gill Beck, and, having received these small streams, it forms, or rather is absorbed in, a large pool, called Scalegill Pit, which serves to supply the steam-engines employed in the collieries with water. From this pool, as from a centre, the river issues in two streams, one of which, passing by the church, &c., falls into the ocean at St. Bees; the other flows towards Whitehaven, where, for about a mile from the town, it is arched over, passing under the Market Place, and then mingles with the ocean in the harbour.

THE CHURCH.

The priory church of St. Bees, now the parish church, is situated in Preston Quarter, near the village. It is a cruciform building, of considerable size and beauty—a rude but noble work of that interesting period in which the Norman style of architecture passes gradually away into the Early English. The several parts of it are given below, with the estimated dates of their erection:—1. Nave and Aisles: West door, south wall and buttresses, tower piers (internal masonry and bases now hidden), Late Norman, circa 1150; west end, circa 1200; six arches on each side, with five pillars of various designs, Early English, circa 1250. Clerestory windows, and the north wall of north aisle, Debased, probably 1611. 2. Tower: The casing of piers, arches, and lower part of staircase turret, circa 1200. The upper part is of later date, but the Debased windows of 1611 have been built up, and the tower has been carried up to the height of more than a hundred feet, 1858. Its eastern arch is filled up with a rubble wall, in which are a round-headed door (now hidden) and two windows of Debased work. The pier capitals are of very unusual design, but genuine and curious. 3. North Transept: Circa 1200; genuine and interesting both outside and in.

Some remains of colouring have been discovered, and some relics. A plain and mutilated aumbry has left a trace in the north wall. 4. South Transept: West wall, circa 1200; east wall, Debased, 1611; south wall, new. In the old walling has been found nearly all the upper part of a fine Transition door, brought as rubble from the old priory buildings. 5. The chancel, or Lady chapel, has a south aisle, now ruined, of the fourteenth century. The original chancel is a very noble edifice of circa 1200, and ranks high among contemporary buildings—not, indeed, for size, or delicacy of workmanship, but for beauty of design. The interior (and especially the east end) is very striking. In the north wall is one window of Transitional character (circa 1200), and formerly of two lights, which possibly gave light to the altar of the choir; and certainly, by the difference of design, suggests the idea of some corresponding internal arrangements. When the priory was dissolved the whole church was unroofed, and became an utter ruin. The tower fell, crushing the east wall of the south transept, and the clerestory and the north wall of the nave disappeared. About 1611 the need of a parish church seems to have been felt. The chancel was left in ruins; through it the parishioners went, entering the church through the east tower arch. A wall was run up one bay from the west end, and the holy table was there placed. The necessary re-building was done in a rude but substantial way; the old domestic buildings serving for a quarry. The church, thus reversed, remained in use till about forty years ago, when the altar was removed to the eastern end of the nave, and a diminutive chancel formed for it by an alcove. The upper part of the western wall of 1611 was broken down, to make room for a gallery, the font set in its right place, and other alterations made; which, though not worthy of this fine church, show perhaps as much taste and knowledge as were possible at that time. In 1849 a handsomely-carved oak reading-desk was presented by the late Rev. Dr. Parkinson; and in the following year a pulpit to match it was erected, the gift of persons connected with the place, including the late Rev. Dr. Fox, provost of Queen's College, Oxford. In 1855 the transepts were repaired, re-roofed, and added to the parish church. In 1858 a fine peal of eight bells was purchased by subscription, and the tower raised to receive them. These restorations have been carried out after the design of Mr. Butterfield. A handsome font has been presented by Mr. Howes, contractor for the restorations; the font-cover is the gift of the late Captain Fitchet. The communion plate appears to have been presented by the benevolent archbishop whose memory is so intimately connected with the place as the founder of the Free Grammar School. It bears the date 1571, and the arms of the archiepiscopal see of York, impaled with those of Grindal. Some fragments of the ecclesiastical buildings anterior to the Norman priory still exist. A Saxon impost, with a bas-relief of Beowulf (?) and the dragon, is built into the south aisle wall of the nave, outside; and two fragments of crosses, found in the foundations of the west end, are placed close to the west door, inside, with some sepulchral stones of very early date. The lower part of a churchyard cross, of the seventh or eighth century, stands in its ancient place, to the north of the church. Its unusual situation probably shows a change in the position of the church. A bust of the late Rev. William Ainger, D.D., by Lough, is placed in the church, over a monumental slab bearing the following inscription:—

TO THE MEMORY OF WILLIAM AINGER, D.D.,

Late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Canon of Chester,

And for 21 years Incumbent of the Parish,

And Principal of the Clerical Institution of St. Bees,

Who died Oct. 25, 1840. Aged 55 years.

Exemplary in all the relations of social life,

Gifted with a kind temper, of sound learning, and high principles,

He gained the love and respect of all who had the privilege of his friendship.

As a Parish Priest he was faithful in preaching the doctrines

And steadfast in upholding the discipline of the Apostolical Church;

And he continued during the best years of his life

To sustain the cause of religious Truth

By his writings and public teaching; above all

By his unwearied devotedness to the Good of the Clerical Institution,

Which was begun under his superintending care,

And where he trained for the Ministry of the Church,

Both in England and its Colonies, several hundred Labourers,

Who entered on their sacred duties

Strengthened by his lessons of wisdom,

Animated by his zeal, and guided by his example.

To commemorate such important services, and labours so highly blessed,

This monument was erected by a subscription

Of his sorrowing friends and pupils.

May I die the death of the righteous, and may my last end be like his.

In 1622 Bishop Bridgman, who then held the see of Chester, ordered the inhabitants of the five chapelries of Eskdale, Ennerdale, Wasdale Head, Nether Wasdale, and Loweswater, to contribute to the repairs of this the mother church. In 1705 St. Bees was certified by the impropriator as worth £12 a year. The benefice is a perpetual curacy in the impropriation and patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale, and is now worth about £103 per annum. The parish registers commence in 1538, and are perhaps the most perfect in the county.

INCUMBENTS.—Richard Jackson, from 1704 to 1767; William Scott, to 1770; Robert Scott, —; Daniel Birkett, —; William Harrison, 1785; Peter Danson, 1806; James Page, 1807; Peter Danson, 1810; William Wilson, 1811; William Ainger, D.D., 1816; Robert P. Buddicom, M.A., F.S.A., 1840; Richard Parkinson, D.D., F.S.A., 1846; George H. Ainger, M.A., 1858.

ST. BEES COLLEGE.

This college was founded by Bishop Law, in the year 1816, endowed by the Earl of Lonsdale with the incumbency of the parish of St. Bees, and recognized by act of Parliament (3rd and 4th Vic. cap. 77). Its object is to supply a good and economical education for candidates for holy orders. The time necessary to be spent in the college is in all cases, not less than two years. This period is divided into four terms; during which residence is indispensable. The first term commences about the 25th of January, and ends towards the 5th of May; the second begins about the 25th of August, and closes about the 5th of December. The third and fourth are like the first and second. Students are required to be in residence sometime before the commencement of lectures, which begin punctually (Sundays excepted) on the 1st of February, and the 1st of September. Students are admitted at the commencement of either term. There being no collegiate buildings, each student furnishes himself with a house or lodgings in the village, under the direction and control of the principal. The expense of board and lodgings, with moderate economy, may be from eighteen shillings to twenty-four shillings a week, for each student. The fee for tuition is £10 a term, paid each term in advance: three guineas are paid by each student when he comes into residence, in aid of a fund for keeping the college in repair, and increasing the library; the cap and gown cost about £1 10s.; this, with the additional cost of some prescribed books, includes all the necessary expenses. The librarian, who is generally a distinguished student of the college, is exempted from the payment of the college fee. Before any application for admission can be entertained, the principal must be furnished with testimonials from two clergymen of the Church of England; one of these must certify (after a long and intimate acquaintance) that the person in whose behalf it is given is a man of unblemished morality and consistent piety; that he is cordially attached to the Church of England; and fitted, by his general habits, character, and attainments, for the office of the ministry. It must also specify his age and condition, as well as his pursuits from the time when he left school to that in which the certificate is granted. The other testimonial is to certify, after a sincere and bona fide examination, that the individual desiring admission is able to construe the Greek gospels and Grotius "De Veritate" readily and grammatically; and that he has a correct knowledge of the rudiments of Latin composition. No student can continue a member of the college whose conduct is not in all respects satisfactory to the authorities. The limits of age are twenty-one and thirty-five. It is desirable that the testimonials should be sent in as early as possible before the commencement of that term in which the student proposes to begin his residence. The course of study during the four terms embraces scriptural and ecclesiastical history; the evidences of religion, external and internal; an expository knowledge of the New Testament; lectures on the creeds, and the articles of religion; theology, doctrinal and pastoral; and Latin and English composition, especially that of sermons. The lectures of the college are delivered in what was formerly the chancel of the priory church, which was fitted up for the purpose in 1810, when the college was founded. One of the lecture rooms serves as the library, and contains some valuable books. Wordsworth, in the preface to his poem of St. Bees, tells us that "the old conventual church is well worthy of being visited by any strangers who might be led to the neighbourhood of this celebrated spot." In that poem the history of the ecclesiastical buildings of St. Bees is thus summarized:—

When Beza sought of yore the Cumbrian coast,
Tempestuous winds her holy passage cross'd:
She knelt in prayer—the waves their wrath appease;
And from her vow, well weigh'd in heaven's decrees,
Rose, where she touch'd the strand, the chantry of St. Bees.

When her sweet voice, that instrument of love,
Was glorified, and took its place above
The silent stars, among the angelic quire,
Her chantry blazed with sacrilegious fire,
And perished utterly: but her good deeds
Had sown the spot that witness'd them with seeds,
Which lay in earth expectant, till a breeze,
With quickening impulse, answer'd their mute pleas,
And lo! a stately pile, the Abbey of St. Bees.

Who with the ploughshare clove the barren moors,
And to green meadows changed the swampy shores?
Thine'd the rank woods; and for the cheerful grange
Made room where wolf and boar were used to range?
Who taught and showed by deeds, that gentler chains
Should bind the vassal to the lord's domains?
The thoughtful monks intent their God to please,
For Christ's dear sake, by human sympathies Poured from the bosom of thy Church of St. Bees.

But all availed not; by a mandate given
Through lawless will, the brotherhood was driven Forth from their cell; their ancient house laid low
In reformation's sweeping overthrow.

But now once more the local Heart revives,
The inextinguishable spirit strives.
Oh, may that Power who hush'd the stormy seas,
And clear'd a way for the first Votaries,
Prosper the new-born College of St. Bees.

The following have filled the office of principal of St. Bees' College:—

PRINCIPALS.—William Ainger, 1816; Robert P. Baddicom, 1840; R. Parkinson, 1840; G. H. Ainger, 1858.

THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

The Grammar School of St. Bees was founded by Archbishop Grindal in 1587, under a charter from Queen Elizabeth, which provided that there should be seven governors, the provost of Queen's College, Oxford, and the rector of Egremont for the time being, always to be two. By the provisions of the same charter it was provided that after the founder's demise the nomination of the master should be vested in the provost of Queen's College, Oxford, if "a person of learning" and a native of one of the four counties of Cumberland, Westmoreland, York, or Lancaster; and if he should neglect for two months, then the master of Pembroke Hall is to nominate. The statutes and ordinances drawn up by the archbishop for the government of the school bear date July 3rd, 1583; and the founder appointed certain lands, &c., to be purchased, of the yearly value of £50, for the maintenance of his school, to be employed as follows:—"For the finding of one fellow and two scholars in Pembroke Hall, £20; to the schoolmaster, £20; to the usher, £3 6s. 8d.; to the receiver, for his fee, £1; for the dinner at the annual meeting of the governors, 19s. 4d.; total, £45. The residue, with all the penalties and fines paid, to be appropriated in repairs and other necessary charges." Archbishop Grindal died July 6th, 1588, before the foundation was fully completed, leaving £500 in the hands of his executors, for the purchase of lands of the annual value of £30, for the further maintenance of the school. In 1555 a second patent was granted by Queen Elizabeth. James I., by letters patent dated June 25th, 1604, in augmentation of the endowment, granted to the school sixteen messuages or tenements in Sandwith, previously belonging to the priory of St. Bees, with pasture for 300 sheep on Sandwith Marsh; forty-eight messuages in the manor of St. Bees, with divers quit rents, &c.; and 16s. 8d., called "Walk Mill Silver," payable yearly by the tenants of the manor; a rent of 24s. out of the manor of Hensingham; with four messuages at Hensingham and Wray. These premises were parcel of the lands and possessions of Sir Thomas Chaloner, Knt., then deceased, and of the yearly value of £28 8s. 0½d., and were to be held as of the manor of Sheriff Hutton, co. York, in free socage. These grants were shortly afterwards confirmed by act of Parliament. Sir John Lowther, who died in 1705, gave a valuable library to this school, and it has since been augmented by other donors. The site of the school and master's house was given by T. Chaloner, Esq., and the late Earl of Lonsdale is said to have expended a considerable sum in repairing and enlarging the school, which forms the north wing of the present building. It is now very comfortable and complete, and will accommodate about forty boarders. There are two exhibitions, of £25 per annum each, at Queen's College, Oxford, founded by Dr. Thomas Bishop, of Rochester, for the sons of clergymen of the diocese, and educated at the grammar schools of St. Bees and Carlisle. A St. Bees scholar has also the privilege of becoming a candidate for one of the five valuable exhibitions founded by Lady Elizabeth Hastings, in 1739. The late Rev. J. Dixon, Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, left by will, in 1858, the sum of £1,000, to found a scholarship at Queen's College, Oxford, for a native of Whitehaven who had been educated at St. Bees school; and also £1,000 to found another scholarship at the same college in Oxford, for a native of Whitehaven, educated at St. Bees or any other school. At Pembroke College, Cambridge, there are three exhibitions, worth £28 a year, and tenable for three years; and when the present Grindal fellowship becomes vacant, the college, in lieu of it, is bound to give to the school £200 a year, to be divided by the governors of the school among boys going up from the school to Cambridge, in such a way as the governors may think fit. The late provost, Dr. Fox, a few years before his death, founded a scholarship for the benefit of this school; the value of it is the perpetual interest of £1,000. In 1815 the revenue of the school was £112 10s., exclusive of a house and about five acres of land, arising chiefly from coal pits, and partly from lord's rents. Its accounts in 1858 were as follow:—Amount of rents, dividends from funds, and returns of property tax, £139 0s. 2d; balance in receiver's hands, £1,211 6s. 3d.; amount of stock in the Three-per-cent Consols, to the account of the school, £22,382 6s. 2d.; and amount to the sinking fund account, £2,694 13s. 1d. There were during the same year £850 received from the foundation scholars, and £289 3s. 2d. as balance due from accounts of last year. The number of boys in the school at Christmas, 1858, was 156, of which forty-two were on the foundation. We subjoin the rules for regulating the admission and continuance of scholars on the foundation:—"1. No boy will be admitted on the foundation under the age of nine years, nor above the age of fourteen years (except under particular circumstances); and all boys so admitted are considered in a probationary position for the first six months, after which time, if their conduct and diligence be satisfactory, their nomination is confirmed. 2. Candidates for admission are required to produce certificates of their baptism and birth within either of the counties of Cumberland or Westmoreland, together with testimonials of good conduct from the minister of their parish, or their schoolmaster, accompanied by the written application of a parent or guardian. 3. The charge for board and lodging is fixed for the present at the sum of £20 per annum, which must be paid half yearly in advance. This sum includes all expenses of maintenance, attendance, washing, and education, except for books and stationery, and the sum of 2s. 6d. payable to the head master on each scholar's admission. 4. Vacancies are filled up at the two half yearly meetings of the governors, in the months of June and December; and all applications for admission, together with the certificates, testimonials, and application mentioned in rule 2, must be forwarded (postage free) to the head master, or to the clerk, before the end of the first week in those months. 5. Boys must bring with them a sufficient supply of clothing, in good serviceable condition, to be renewed and kept in repair at the expense of their parents.—It is requested that before the removal of a foundation scholar the parents do give a month's previous notice to the clerk, in order that the vacancy may be filled up." Boys from any county are received into the school as boarders with the head master. The school house is a plain substantial building near the church. The door is surmounted with the founder's initials and the following inscription:—

E 1587 G.
IN MEMORIAM OF PROPRIETORS.

HEAD MASTERS.—Nicholas Copeland, 1586; William Briscoe 1593; William Lickbarrow, 1612; Francis Radcliffe, 1630; Bernard Gilpin, 1679; Jonathan Banks, 1681; Richard Jackson, 1686; Alan Fisher, 1738; John James, —; Robert Scott, 1773; John Hutchinson, 1778; John Barnes, 1791; William Wilson, 1811; Thomas Bradley, 1817; John Fox, 1830; Miles Atkinson, 1843; G. H. Heslop, 1856.

The existence of the Grammar School precludes the necessity of a boy's national school in the township, except for infants, as the village boys, above seven years of age, who are able to read fairly, are at once received into the English department, on the foundation. Boys resident in the village and not natives of the counties, pay a quarterage.

There is a girls' and infant school in St. Bees village, in connection with the national society. The mistress is appointed by the incumbent of St. Bees.

This school has lately been endowed with the perpetual interest of £500, by Mrs. Thompson, of St. Bees.

There is a missionary association for collecting subscriptions from the college and parish, under the control of the principal of the college, of which the bishop of the diocese is the president, and the Archbishop of Canterbury the patron. The public meetings held in connection with this association are two at St. Bees, two at Sandwith, and one at Nethertown annually. It transmits about £100 a year to the parent missionary societies.

There is also a clothing club for the benefit of those parents who have children in any of the three national schools; it has been working well for some time.

Edwin Sandys, or Sands, archbishop of York, was a native of St. Bees, and probably educated at the Grammar School here. He was the founder of Hawkeshead School, and died in 1588.

LOWSIDE QUARTER.

The area of this township is 2,666 acres, and its rateable value £2,145 12s. In 1801 it contained 226 inhabitants; in 1811, 311; in 1821, 353; in 1831, 229; in 1841, 299; and in 1851, 362. This township extends from Egremont to Braystones, and contains the ruins of Egremont Castle. It is intersected by the Whitehaven and Furness junction railway. General Wyndham is lord of the manor. The landowners are Robert Brisco, Esq.; — Brocklebank, Esq.; and H. Jefferson, Esq. Here is a flax spinning mill, carried on by Messrs. Robert Brisco and Co.

The hamlets in the township, with their distance and bearing from Egremont, are as follow:—Middletown, one mile and a half south-west; Nethertown, two miles south-west; Coulderton, two and a quarter miles south-west-by-west; with part of the hamlet of Lowmill, one mile south.

Rothersyke, the residence and property of Henry Jefferson, Esq., is about seven miles south of Whitehaven.

Here is a school, used as a day-school, for children of both sexes. It is conducted by a master, and serves also as a Sunday-school on Sunday afternoons, when service is performed by one of the clergy from St. Bees, as in the case of Sandwith.

PRESTON QUARTER.

The area of this township is 2,699 acres, and its rateable value £5,076. It contained in 1801, 1,886 inhabitants; in 1811, 3,261; in 1821, 4,256; in 1831, 4,323; in 1841, 4,547; and in 1851, 5,102. This township extends northward from St. Bees to Whitehaven, to which town it forms a populous suburb. The Earl of Lonsdale possesses extensive collieries in the township, and is also the principal landowner, but W. Lamb, Esq., and Mrs. Burton have also estates here. The manorial rights and privileges are possessed by the Earl of Lonsdale.

The Whitehaven Union Workhouse is situated in this township, on the St. Bees road, one mile south of Whitehaven. It is a good substantial stone structure, erected in 1855-6, and possesses accommodation for 400 persons. The cost of erection amounted to £8,140, inclusive of the site. It is considered the finest building of the kind in the north. There are two fever wards, one for males and the other for females.

Preston Quarter township also includes the Whitehaven Cemetery, which is about a mile from the town. It covers an area of eleven acres, and is very tastefully laid out, commanding good views of the surrounding country. There are two very neat Gothic chapels for the Church of England and the Dissenters, and a neat lodge. The cost of the whole, inclusive of the purchase of the land, was £6,100. The cemetery was consecrated on the 18th November, 1835.

Banks Hall, or Green Banks, is the seat and property of William Lamb, Esq.

ROTTINGTON.

The area of Rottington is 735 acres, and its rateable value £540. The population in 1801 was 48; in 1811, 52; in 1821, 56; in 1831, 45; in 1841, 52; and in 1851, 49.

The manor of Rottington belonged, in ancient times, to a family bearing the local name. From the Rottingtons it passed in marriage to the Sands, originally of Burgh-upon-Sands. In 1573 Robert Sands, gentleman, held the hamlet of Rottington, late the property of John Fleming, by homage, fealty, and suit of court. The Sands sold it to the Curvens for the sum of £700. Henry Curven, Esq., devised it to Henry Pelham, Esq., from whom it was purchased, in 1762, by Sir James Lowther, Bart., afterwards Earl of Lonsdale, from whom it has descended to the present earl, who is also the principal landowner. The tithes of the township have been commuted for £24, payable to the lord of the manor.

Rottington Hall, supposed to have been, in olden time, a residence of the Mossop family, has been superseded by a modern farmhouse, the residence of Mr. Henry Mossop, who derives his descent from a branch of the Mossop family.

SANDWITH.

The area of Sandwith township is 1,406 acres, and its rateable value £3,417. The population in 1801 was 180; in 1811, 233; in 1821, 358; in 1831, 328; in 1841, 316; and in 1851, 374. This township lies north of that of Rottington, and extends to St. Bees Head. It is included in that portion of the manor of St. Bees which belongs to the governors of St. Bees Grammar School. Mrs. Hartley, A. Thompson, Esq., and the Rev. H. Lowther, are the principal land-owners.

There were formerly three coal pits in this township, the Fox Pit, the Wilson Pit, and the Croft Pit; the two former have been laid in for many years. The Croft Pit is still working. It has one shaft, of the perpendicular depth of 150 fathoms. It employs about 200 hands, and produces about 300 tons of coal per day.

Here is a school for girls and infants, the mistress of which is appointed by the incumbent of St. Bees. It is used as a Sunday-school on Sunday afternoons, and in the evening full church service is performed here by one of the clergy from St. Bees. This afternoon school and evening service are supplemental to the service at the parish church, and to the Sunday-school in the morning.

On St. Bees Head, in this township, in latitude 54° 31' north, longitude 3° 39' west, is a lighthouse, the light of which is stationary and 333 feet above water mark; it is seen twenty-three miles, with a range from north-north-east seaward to south-south-east. This lighthouse was erected in 1822, in place of a former one, which had been burnt down. The cliffs abound with sea-fowl.

WEDDICAR.

Weddicar comprises an area of 925 acres, and its rateable value is £626. Its population in 1801 was 34; in 1811, 46; in 1821, 52; in 1831, 55; in 1841, 59; and in 1851, 49.

The manor of Weddicar formerly belonged to the Ponsoby family. By an inquisition post mortem of Thomas de Multon of Egremont, taken in the 15th Edward II. (1321-2), it appears that John, son of Rayner le Fleming, held of the said Thomas the hamlets of Rottington, Weddicar, Beckermert, Frisington, and Arledon, by homage, fealty, and suit of court at Egremont. In 1578 John Patrickson held the hamlet of Weddicar by homage, fealty, and suit of court. The manor is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale, who, with the Baroness de Sternberg, is the principal proprietor.

The township contains only eight scattered houses, a cottage, and a mill belonging to Messrs. Randelson and Forster, in which dyewood, colours, &c., are ground.

ENNERDALE CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north by Eskdale, Salter, and Esktatt (extra parochial), and Winder and Kelton, in the parish of Lamplugh; on the north-east by Loweswater and Buttermere chapelry; on the east by Borrowdale; on the south by Kinniside, the extra parochial district of Copeland Forest, Nether Wasdale, and Eskdale and Wasdale. It comprises the townships of Ennerdale and Kinniside, and has been considered by some to form a separate parish, or parochial chapelry; but that it is dependent on St. Bees is proved by a verdict given at Carlisle in 1690, and in the population returns it is always given as a chapelry of the ancient parish of St. Bees. The principal land-owners of the chapelry are Lord Lonsdale; John Dickinson, Esq.; Henry Attwood, Esq.; Thomas Ainsworth, Esq.; Messrs. William Towerson, Richard Shepherd, and Henry Steel.

ENNERDALE.

The area of the township is 17,782 acres, and the rateable value, inclusive of Kinniside township, is £1,021 18s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 190; in 1811, 189; in 1821, 209; in 1831, 192; in 1841, 183; and in 1851, 193.

Ennerdale appears to have been forest land in old times, and in the Sandford MSS. we find several references to the bow bearer of Ennerdale Forest, and also to the fact that the forest and mountains of Ennerdale were "stocked with deer, harts, and stags." Ennerdale lake, two miles distant from the church, was little known to tourists until within the last few years. A comfortable and commodious inn was erected about 1855, on its borders, and is much resorted to. The lake covers 1,400 acres of land. The water is considered the purest in the north, and from it the town of Whitehaven receives its supply. It is of no great depth, but abounds with fine trout and other fish. The river Ehen takes its rise here, and the Liza forms a tributary stream to the lake. The passage winding round the base of the mountains affords a variety of narrow pastoral scenes overlooked by scowling rocks and precipices, of which those called the Pillar, Sty

Head, Honister Crag, Wasdale, Red Pike, and Steeple, are the great landmarks of this tract, and the most remarkable.

The manor of Ennerdale, or rather a portion of it, was given by Ranulph, son of William de Meschines, to the priory of St. Bees; the other portion passing in the division of the barony of Egremont to the Harringtons of Harrington, from them came by successive heiresses to the Boyvilles and Greys, and was ultimately forfeited to the crown, in 1554, by the attainder of Henry Duke of Suffolk. The whole of the manor is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale.

Castle How, another manor in the township, was long the seat and property of the Patrickson family, by whom it was sold to Joseph Tiffin, Esq. It was subsequently purchased by Joseph Senhouse, Esq., of Calder Abbey, who rebuilt the capital messuage of Castle How, or How Hall, and saved many of the antiquities of the place.

The village of Ennerdale is situated on the banks of the river Ehen, one mile west of the lake from which it derives its name, and eight miles south-south-east of Whitehaven. An annual sheep fair is held here on the second Tuesday in September.

THE CHAPEL.

Ennerdale chapel, distant about six miles from the mother church of St. Bees, is a neat Norman structure, erected in 1858, upon the site of the old chapel, and was consecrated by the Bishop of Carlisle, in July of the same year. The seats are open, sufficiently numerous to accommodate about 300 persons, and are uniform in construction. The exterior includes a turret in which the original bell of the old chapel has been placed. On removing the bell to its new position, it was found to bear an inscription round the rim to the following effect:—"Sancta Bega, ora pro nobis"—St. Bega, pray for us. Interiorly the chapel consists of a nave and apse, in the latter of which stands the communion table. Mr. C. Eaglesfield, of Maryport, was the architect, and Mr. J. Cape, of Cockermouth, the contractor. The funds for the reconstruction of the edifice were raised by subscription among the residents of the neighbourhood, assisted by a grant of £60 from the Church Building Society. Ennerdale chapel was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £4 13s. 4d., which was paid by the impropriator; and was returned to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as of the annual value of £84. In 1846 the tithes were commuted for a yearly rent charge of £143, viz., £68 for Ennerdale, and £75 for Kinniside. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Henry Curwen, Esq. The registers of the chapelry commence in 1548. The Rev. William Malone Jukes is the present incumbent.

The parsonage house, of no particular style of architecture, was erected in 1843.

The parish school, supported by the quarter pence of the children, is attended by about thirty scholars.

CHARITY.

Ennerdale and Kinniside (donor unknown).—There is in this township, the sum of £27, the interest of which, £1 1s. 9d., is given away yearly on Easter Tuesday, to the poor who do not receive parochial relief.

KINNISIDE.

The area of Kinniside is 11,950 acres. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 172; in 1811, 209; in 1821, 225; in 1831, 227; in 1841, 223; and in 1851, 239. This township is about five and a half miles east-south-east of Whitehaven. Here is a lead mine leased by the London Lead Company, of General Wyndham, who is lord of the manor. The soil belongs mostly to resident yeomen.

In an inquisition taken in 1578, Kinniside is returned as within the forest of Copeland, and it is stated that the tenants there paid yearly to the lord "for the freelege of their tolls through all the markets and fairs in Copeland a certain custom called Doortoll, viz., for every tenements' door 2d.," which then amounted to 6s. 10d. The sum total of the rents, &c., in Kinniside amounted to £6 18s. 5d.

ESKDALE CHAPELRY.

Eskdale chapelry is bounded on the north by Ennerdale and Crosthwaite; on the west by Nether Wasdale, Irton, and Muncester; and on the south and east by Birker and Anthwaite, in the parish of Millom. Eskdale and Wasdale Head form a joint township, which contains the hamlets of Boot, Gatehouse Green, and Mitordale, with a few scattered dwellings in the romantic vale of the Esk. Under the new arrangement of wards which was effected in 1857, Eskdale and Wasdale Head were included in Boodle Ward. Copper is worked in the vale of the Esk by the Birker Copper Mining Company. The lake of Wastwater is partly in Nether Wasdale, and partly in Eskdale and Wasdale. Seawfell is in Eskdale and Wasdale.

The area of Eskdale is 13,000 acres, and its rateable value £1,892 13s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was, inclusive of Wasdale Head, 232; in 1811, 238; in 1821, 296; in 1831, 351; in 1841, of Eskdale alone, 340; and in 1851, 374. General Wyndham is lord of the manors of Eskdale and Miterdale, as parcel of his barony of Egremont, but the farms have been enfranchised, and are now discharged of fines, heriots, and customary services, except the payment of doortoll and greenhew, doing suit and service at the courts leet and baron, &c., at Ravenglass. An inquisition taken in 1578 records that at that period the tenants of Eskdale paid yearly for every tenement or householder doortoll, for which they were free in all the fairs and markets within the lordship of Copeland, and which doortoll amounted to 5s. 2d. per annum. The sum total of the rents in Eskdale at the time mentioned was £7 15s. 4½d. The same inquisition further informs us that the tenants of Miterdale enjoyed the same privileges of freedom from toll, &c., by paying a doortoll amounting to 1s. 4d. a year; the sum total of the rents of Miterdale being £3 4s. 5d. The landowners in the township are General Wyndham, Rev. Joseph Kitchen, Messrs. Stephen Nicholson, John Towers, Joseph Sharpe, John Sharpe, John Russell, Joseph Rodgers, Jonathan Benson, John Porter, and several small proprietors.

THE CHAPEL.

Eskdale chapel, dedicated to St. Catherine, is situated in the centre of the dale, about fourteen miles from the mother church of St. Bees. It is a very ancient structure, with bell turret carrying two bells, and possesses accommodation for about 200 persons. There are thirty free sittings. Some of the windows contain stained glass, on which is depicted the figure of the patron saint of the chapel, with the wheel, her distinguishing symbol. In the neighbourhood of the chapel is St. Catherine's Well. The chapel was certified in 1717 at £9 per annum, of which sum £5 arose from the interest of £100 given by Edward Stanley, Esq., in the reign of William III. It possesses a small glebe, and the benefice has been augmented by Queen Anne's Bounty. The living is a perpetual curacy, the presentation to which was anciently in the parishioners; but the patronage, which has been some time in the Stanley family, is now vested in Edward Stanley, Esq., of Ponsonby. In 1792 the benefice was worth about £30 a year; it is now worth about £70. The great tithes belong to Edward Stanley, Esq. The registers of the chapelry commence in 1626.

INCUMBENTS.—Thomas Parker, died 1769; Aaron Marshall, 1770; Robert Powley, 1814.

In 1849 a small Wesleyan chapel was erected at the west end of the township; and there are two schools.

CHARITIES.

For the Poor.—A table of benefaction in Eskdale chapel contains the following charities for the use of the poor. Edward Stanley, Esq., in 1715, left to the poor of Eskdale and Birker £40, the yearly interest to be distributed in bread on Easter even; John Hartley, of Church-house, in 1733, to the poor of Eskdale £10; — Tidy, prior to 1715, left to the poor of Birker £7 10s.; Edward Hartley, of Spout House, in 1752, left to the poor of Eskdale and Birker £20; some person or persons unknown left to the poor of Eskdale and Birker £20; in 1795 the trustees deducted from the interest to increase the principal £2 10s.; total, £100. Birker, the place mentioned above, is in the chapelry of Eskdale, but is no part of that township, as it forms, with Austhwaite, a hamlet in the parish of Millom. Half of the interest is given away the first Sunday after Easter, by the minister and chapelwardens of Eskdale and Birker, amongst poor householders of Eskdale, and the other half amongst poor householders of Birker and Austhwaite. The money is not given to any person who has received parochial relief in the course of the year. The name of every person who has received this charity, with the sum given, has been entered regularly in the chapel book, at least from the year 1751.

School.—It is inscribed on the tablet of benefactions above-mentioned that Edmund Wilson of Gillbank, prior to 1723, left by will to Eskdale School £100. Edward Hartley of Spout House, in 1752, left to the said school £30, the yearly interest thereof "for the use of the schoolmaster in Eskdale, who should teach poor children in Eskdale free." The sums of £7 and £1, arising from savings during a vacancy in the school, have been added to the principal. The interest of this money is regularly paid to the teacher of the school.

WASDALE HEAD.

Wasdale Head is a joint township with Eskdale, and contains an area of 7,000 acres. The population till 1841 was returned with Eskdale: in that year it was 35, and in 1851, 47, inhabiting seven houses. Iron ore has been found here, but has not been worked since 1855. The township possesses a bobbin manufactory, a woollen manufactory, and a corn-mill.

¹ This gentleman was blind for twenty years before his decease, yet during that time he preached and performed every ministerial duty, with the exception of reading the psalms and lessons, which were read by his son.

Wasdale Head forms part of the manor of Eskdale, belonging to General Wyndham. Mr. John Denton informs us that Wasdale was a place full of red deer; "the inheritance of the Earls of Northumberland; and before the Lucys' lands being parcel of their third part of the barony of Egremont, which Thomas Lucy got with his wife Margaret, one of the daughters and co-heirs of John Moulton, last of that name, baron of Egremont." In 1578 an inquisition was taken, from which we subjoin the following particulars relating to Wasdale Head:—"The tenants of Wasdale Head hold a great parcel of the lord's waste called forest male, being (as they alledge) a common only proper to themselves, and render per annum 17s." The same document also gives the "sum total of the rents in Wasdale Head" at £7 7s.; and it further informs us that "then hath been (and also is at this day) paid unto the said earl heriots at the several deaths of every tenant in Nether Wasdale, Miterdale, and Wasdale Head, which custom continueth. There is yearly paid unto the Queen's [Elizabeth] majesty, out of one common in Wasdale Head, called forest male, 3s. 4d." The chapelries of Wasdale Head, Nether Wasdale, and Eskdale, adjoin each other, and form a mountainous region of about forty square miles. Green tells us that the vale of Wasdale Head is fruitful, and if divested of its stone walls and better planted would truly be a pastoral paradise; all its inhabitants are shepherds, and live at the feet of the most stupendous mountains. Hutchinson tells us that in his time one of the land-owners, whose name was Fletcher, derived "the family possessions here from a course of not less than 700 years."

The small hamlet of Wasdale Head is situated at the head of Wastwater, twelve miles north-east of Ravenglass, and fourteen miles east-by-south of Egremont, and consists of the chapel, a few scattered homesteads, and a school.

THE CHAPEL.

Wasdale Head Chapel is a small unpretending structure, containing only eight pews, and unprovided with a burial-ground, the dead being interred at the chapel of Nether Wasdale. It was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the annual value of £3, and to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners at £49; the Clergy List gives its present value at £80 a year. The tithes belong to Edward Stanley, Esq., of Ponsonby. The benefice is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The registers commence in 1721. The Rev. Joseph Kitchen is the present incumbent, being appointed in 1819.

Boot is a hamlet in this township, seven miles east-north-east of Ravenglass; a fair is held here on the 2nd of September. Gatehouse Green is another hamlet five miles north-east of the same place. Miterdale is a beautiful glen, lying between the screes and the hills on the north side of Eskdale. It contains a few farmhouses, seven miles north-east of Ravenglass.

On a stone near Buck Crag are the impressions of the foot of a man, a boy, and a dog, which appear to be the work of nature. Doe Crag and Earn Crag are two remarkable precipices, the former being 480 feet in perpendicular height, and the latter 360 feet.

Burnmoor Tarn is in this township.

The aggregation of mountains, called collectively Scawfell, which stand at the head of Wasdale, in this township, form four several summits bearing separate names. The most southerly of the four is Scawfell, 3,100 feet high; the next is Scawfell Pike, 3,160 feet; Lingmell, of considerably lower elevation, is more to the west, forming a sort of buttress for the support of the loftier heights; and Great End is the advanced guard on the north, having its aspect towards Borrowdale. The whole mass is composed of hard dark slate. The Pike is the highest summit in England, and is marked as such by a staff set up on a pile of stones by the ordnance surveyors. The summit is bare of everything that grows, except moss. Not a blade of grass is to be seen; and, such being the case, it follows that the herdsman and shepherd have never to come here after their charge. Blocks and inclined planes of slate rock compose the peak. With regard to the view from it, we cannot do better than transcribe portions of that Letter to a Friend which Wordsworth published many years ago, and which is the best account we have of the greatest mountain excursion in England. The weather was, however, unusual. The guide said, when on the summit, "I do not know that in my whole life I was ever, at any season of the year, so high upon the mountains on so calm a day." It was the 7th of October. "On the summit of the Pike," says the letter, "which we gained after much toil, though without difficulty, there was not a breath of air to stir even the papers containing our refreshment, as they lay spread out upon a rock. The stillness seemed to be not of this world. We paused and kept silence, to listen, and no sound could be heard. The Scawfell cataracts were voiceless to us, and there was not an insect to hum in the air. The vales which we had seen from Esk Hause lay yet in view; and, side by side with Eskdale, we now saw the sister vale of Donnerdale, terminated by the Duddon Sands. But the majesty of the mountains below, and close to us, is not to be conceived. We now beheld the whole mass of Great Gable from its base, the Den of Wasdale at our feet—a gulf immeasurable; Grasmere, and the other mountains of Crummock; Ennerdale and its mountains; and the sea beyond! . . . While we were gazing around, 'Look,' I exclaimed, 'at yon ship upon the glittering sea!' 'Is it a ship?' replied our shepherd guide. 'It can be nothing else,' interposed my companion; 'I cannot be mistaken, I am so accustomed to the appearance of ships at sea.' The guide dropped the argument; but, before a minute was gone, he quietly said, 'Now look at your ship—it is changed into a horse!' So it was—a horse with a gallant neck and head. We laughed heartily; and I hope, when again inclined to be positive, I may remember the ship and the horse upon the glittering sea, and the calm confidence, yet submissiveness, of our wise man of the mountains, who certainly had more knowledge of the clouds than we, whatever might be our knowledge of ships. I know not how long we might have remained on the summit of the fike, without a thought of moving, had not our guide warned us that we must not linger, for a storm was coming. We looked in vain to espy the signs of it. Mountains, vales, and sea, were touched with the clear light of the sun. 'It is there!' said he, pointing to the sea beyond Whitehaven; and there we perceived a light vapour, unnoticeable but by a shepherd accustomed to watch all mountain bodings. We gazed around again, and yet again, unwilling to lose the remembrance of what lay before us in that mountain solitude, and then prepared to depart. Meanwhile the air changed to cold, and we saw that tiny vapour swelled into mighty masses of cloud, which came boiling over the mountains. Great Gable, Helvellyn, and Skiddaw were wrapped in storm, yet Langdale and the mountains in that quarter remained all bright in sunshine. Soon the storm reached us. We sheltered under a crag; and, almost as rapidly as it had come, it passed away, and left us free to observe the struggles of gloom and sunshine in other quarters. Langdale had now its share; and the Pikes of Langdale were decorated by two splendid rainbows. Before we again reached Esk Hause, every cloud had vanished from every summit."

HENSINGHAM CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry is bounded on the north by Weddicar and Moresby; on the west by Preston Quarter and a small detached portion of Sandwith township; on the south by Egremont, and township of St. Bees; and on the east by Frisington and Cleator. It comprises the township of Hensingham only. There are numerous gentlemen's seats.

The area of Hensingham township is 956 acres, and its rateable value £4,296. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 590; in 1811, 826; in 1821, 860; in 1831, 936; in 1841, 1,019; and in 1851, 1,336.

The earliest recorded possessor of the manor of Hensingham is one Gillesbeuth, whose sons, Roger and William, granted to the abbey of St. Mary at York two bovates of land here. The tenants appear to have been included in this grant. Other authorities inform us that Alan, son of Ketel, at the instance of Christian, his wife, gave millstones to the abbot and monks of Holme Cultram out of his lands at Hensingham. The Moresby family appear to have held land here. In the reign of Edward I. we find a moiety of the manor held of Adam de Moresby by the Branthwaites. From the last-named family this moiety descended to the Whittrigs, lords of Little Bampton, from whom it passed by marriage to the Skeltons of Branthwaite, who in the reign of Henry VI. held it of the abbey of St. Mark at York, by the fourth part of a knight's fee. It was purchased of the Skeltons by the Salkelds of Brayton, whose co-heiresses, about the year 1688, sold it to Sir Wilfrid Lawson, in whose family it continued till the year 1748, when it was purchased by Anthony Benn, Esq. Subsequent to this a dispute arose concerning the manor between the Benns and the Lowther family, which was terminated by the purchase of the share held by the former, and the manor has since been held by the successive Earls of Lonsdale. The principal landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale; F. L. B. Dykes, Esq.; Major Spedding; Anthony B. Steward, Esq.; A. Thompson, Esq.; George Harrison, Esq.; Daniel Bell, Esq.; Charles Dean, Esq.; General Scott; Mrs. Isabella Milward; and Captain Walker.

The village of Hensingham is about a mile south-east of Whitehaven. It stands on elevated ground, commanding a good view of the town and harbour of Whitehaven, and contains many good houses and detached mansions.

¹ Low Keele is an extra-parochial place containing about thirty-nine acres, the property of Charles Dean, Esq. It is bounded on the north by Hensingham, on the south and west by Egremont, and on the east by Cleator.

THE CHAPEL.

Hensingham chapel, dedicated to St. John, is a neat stone structure, in the Early English style. It contains about 1,000 sittings, 160 of which are free and unappropriated. It possesses an endowment valued at £100 per annum, arising from an estate given by the Earl of Lonsdale, and is worth about £126 a year. The benefice is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the lord of the manor. The registers commence in 1811.

INCUMBENTS.—Charles Church, 1811; George Whitehead, 1817; Robert Whitehead, 1832; J. M. Lowther, 1851.

There is a Wesleyan chapel, a neat stone building, erected in 1856, situated in Marina Terrace.

The parochial school was erected by subscription and a grant of £55 from the National Society, in 1851, on the site of the old one, at a cost of £470. It is a good building, containing rooms for boys and girls, capable of accommodating 200 children. There is a teacher's house attached. The school is supported by the children's payments, aided by subscriptions.

Hensingham Hall, situated in the village, is a large building belonging to the Earl of Lonsdale, now divided into two dwelling-houses.

Hensingham has the honour of being the birth-place of Archbishop Grindal, who was born here in 1519. He filled the sees of York, London, and Canterbury, and founded the Grammar School of St. Bees. He died in 1583.

The seats in this township are—Ingwell, F. L. B. Dykes, Esq., situated three miles south-east of Whitehaven; ¹ Linethwaite, George Harrison, Esq.; Chapel House, Anthony B. Steward, Esq.; Summergrove, Major Spedding; Hollins, Mrs. Bell; The Cross, Anthony Thompson, Esq.; Richmond Hill, Mrs. Isabella Milward. All these residences, with the exception of the two first named, are from one and a half to two miles of Whitehaven.

Spedding of Summergrove.

This family, which came originally from Ireland, was afterwards resident for some generations in Scotland. The first who settled in Cumberland, about the year 1685, was

EDWARD SPEDDING, who married Sarah Carlisle, a co-heiress, and had issue,

- i. John, High-sheriff of Cumberland in the year 1758, from whom have descended the Speddings of Armathwaite Hall and Murehouse.

¹ See Doxey for an account of the Dykes family.

- | | | |
|--------------------|----------------|---------------|
| ii. George. | iii. Lancelot. | iv. CARLISLE. |
| And two daughters. | | |

The fourth son,

CARLINE SPEDDING, married Sarah, daughter of Edward and Jane Towerson, and had issue,

- i. John, who died young.
 - ii. JAMES.
 - iii. Thomas, in holy orders.
- And two daughters.

The eldest surviving son,

JAMES SPEDDING, married, 1stly, Mary, daughter of Henry Todd, of St. Bees, by whom he had a daughter, Elizabeth, married to Peter John Heywood, of the Nunery, Isle of Man, one of his majesty's deemsters for that island; and, 2ndly, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas and Lucy Harrington, of Carlisle, a descendant of the ancient family of Harrington¹ of Harrington, by whom he had issue,

- i. JAMES SPEDDING, present representative of the family.
- ii. Carlisle, lieutenant-colonel in the army, who served as captain in the 4th Regiment of Dragoons, under the Duke of Wellington, in Spain and Portugal, during nearly the whole of the Peninsular war, was present at most of the actions and sieges, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Albuera, in 1811. He married Sarah, daughter of Hugh Parkin, Esq., of Skirrigg House, Cumberland, and has issue, Carlisle Harrington, an officer in H.M.'s 68th Regiment, Sarah Elizabeth.

- i. Sarah, married to Baldwin Wake, M.D., son of Drury Wake, Esq., formerly of the 17th Dragoons, and nephew to Sir William Wake, Bart., of Courteen Hall, Northamptonshire.
- ii. Anne, married to Charles Wake, M.D., brother of the above Dr. Wake, and died in 1824.
- iii. Elizabeth, married to John Cowham Parker, Esq., of Hull.

On Mr. Spedding's decease, he was succeeded by his son,

JAMES SPEDDING, Esq., of Summergrove, co. Cumberland, J.P. and D.L., late captain in the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards, and major of the Royal Westmoreland Militia, born 13th October, 1779. He served in the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards, on the continent, under General Sir Ralph Abercrombie and his Royal Highness the Duke of York, and in the Mediterranean, under General Sir John Moore, and was severely wounded in the engagement on the 2nd of October, 1799, near Ergmont-op-Zee, in North Holland. He married, 15th November, 1808, Mary Dykes, daughter of Lawson Dykes Ballantyne, Esq., of Cockermouth, and Crookdale Hall, in the same shire, and has issue,

- i. James, captain Royal Westmoreland Militia, born 25th October, 1810, married Emily, youngest daughter (by his second wife, Julia Countess Spytke) of the Hon. William Frederick Wyndham, fourth son of Charles Earl of Egremont, and died in France, October 6, 1851, leaving issue,

¹ The branch of the Harrington family by which the above Elizabeth Harrington is descended, settled at an early period in Cartmell, in Furness, co. Lancaster, where, after residing some generations, Thomas Harrington became attained in the rebellion of Martin Swartz, 2nd Henry VII., and lost his lands in Cartmell by forfeiture, dying without issue. His nephew, Thomas Harrington, dwelt at Wollay, or Woolock, in Cumberland, and died in 1543, leaving a son, James Harrington, who married Grace, daughter of Lancelot Lancaster, of Sockbridge, from the issue of which marriage the above Elizabeth Harrington is descended; and this branch may be considered extinct, by the death, in 1836, of her first cousin, Robert Harrington, M.D., of Carlisle.

- I. James Wyndham Harrington Percy, born 18th April, 1849.
2. Carlisle James Scott, born 23rd June, 1852.

3. Mary Jane Hamilton, married to Mark Hibblesy Quayle, Esq., of Ceshktown, in the Isle of Man, clerk of the rolls of that island.
- iv. Sarah Anne.
- iii. Elizabeth.
- iv. Lucy Isabella Harrington.
- v. Emily Frances Ballantine, married to Captain Arthur Wyndham, H.E.L.C.S., son of the above Hon. William Frederick Wyndham, son of Charles Earl of Egremont and his second wife, the Countess Zpytecka.

Arms.—Gules, on a fesse, engr., between three acorns, slipped, or, a mural crown, between two roses, of the field.

Crest.—Out of a mural crown, or, a dexter arm, embowed, in armour, the right hand grasping a scimitar, and the arm charged with three acorns, one and two, and entwined by a branch of oak, all ppr.

Motto.—Utile dulci.

NETHER WASDALE CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north by the extra-parochial district of Copeland Forest and Ennerdale; on the east by Eskdale and Wasdale; on the west by Gosforth; and on the south by Irton. There is also a small detached portion of this township, nearly half a mile distant southwards, surrounded by Irton, Eskdale, and Wasdale. It comprises the township of Nether Wasdale, which includes the romantic lake of Wastwater.

The area of Nether Wasdale is 10,000 acres, and its rateable value £660 10s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 137; in 1811, 159; in 1821, 211; in 1831, 185; in 1841, 203; and in 1851, 200. An inquisition taken in 1578 informs us that the tenants of Nether Wasdale pay yearly, for the freedom of tolls in all the markets and fairs in Copeland, a certain custom called door-toll, viz., for every tenement or householder's door 2d., which at that period amounted to 7s. At the same date the sum total of the rents of the tenants-at-will in Nether Wasdale amounted to £5 9s. 5d. The manorial rights are vested in General Wyndham. The land-owners are Stansfield Rawson, Esq., Messrs. Robert Fletcher, Isaac Coalbank, Joseph Porter, William Nicholson, the trustees of the late William Tyson, John Coalbank, John Jackson, Isaac Taylor, John Millar, Henry Mossop, the trustees of the late Dr. Whittaker, Joseph Jackson, John and Henry Nicholson, and Miss Ann Wasdale.

Wasdale Hall, the beautiful seat of the late Stansfield Rawson, Esq., is now the property of his trustees.

For a full description of Wastwater, which is in this township, see page 55.

Nether Wasdale is at the foot of Wastwater, about nine miles north-east-by-north of Egremont. A sheep fair is held here on the first Monday in September.

THE CHAPEL.

The chapel of Nether Wasdale is about ten miles distant from the mother church of St. Bees. It is an ancient edifice, in a mixed style of architecture, with a bell gable containing two bells. Internally it consists of a nave, chancel, and one aisle, the latter being added a few years ago, at the expense of the late Stansfield Rawson, Esq. The chancel contains two handsome marble tablets to the memory of members of the Rawson family. The font, which is of stone, and handsomely carved, was erected in 1855, at the expense of Mrs. Rawson. The chapel was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £5 per annum, and in 1835 was returned as of the annual value of £66. The living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the incumbent of St. Bees, and in the impropriation of Edward Stanley, Esq., of Ponsonby, whose ancestor purchased the tithes from Sir Thomas Challoner, to whom they had been granted on the dissolution of the priory of St. Bees. The registers commence in 1711. The Rev. Frederick Lipscomb, M.A., is the present incumbent.

The parish school is a very neat building, erected by the late S. Rawson, Esq. It is supported by the children's quarter pence. There is also a Sunday-school held in the building.

CHARITY.

Donor Unknown.—There was in this township the sum of £20, the interest of which was given away to poor householders. It is not known from what source this money was derived. In the year 1773 about four acres of land in Hallow Bank Quarter, in Kentmere, in Westmoreland, were purchased for £47 10s., of which £27 was the sum above-mentioned, and £20 10s. was money belonging to the chapelry of Nether Wasdale; and it was subsequently agreed that £1 0s. 6d. should be paid out of the rents to the curate of Nether Wasdale, and the residue for the use of the poor.

WHITEHAVEN.

THE township of Whitehaven comprises an area of 267 acres, and its rateable value is £27,487 6s. 1d. The population in 1801 was 8,742; in 1811, 10,106; in 1821, 12,498; in 1831, 11,393;¹ in 1841, 11,854; and in 1851, 14,190.

The manor of Whitehaven formerly belonged to the priory of St. Bees. On the dissolution of the religious houses the manor was taken possession of by the crown. It was subsequently purchased, in his father's lifetime, by Sir Christopher Lowther, second son of Sir John Lowther, of Lowther in Westmoreland, who erected a mansion near the town for his own residence. He was created a baronet in 1642, and died in 1644. Sir John, his son, removed his residence to the site of "the Castle," which is now the seat of the Earl of Lonsdale. Sir James, second son of Sir John, being the fourth and last baronet of this branch, died without issue, in 1755;² and was succeeded in his estates at Whitehaven by Sir James Lowther, Bart., who in 1784 was created Earl of Lonsdale. By a subsequent patent in 1797 he was created Viscount Lowther of Whitehaven, with remainder to the heirs male of the Rev. Sir William Lowther, Bart., of Swillington. The earl dying without issue in 1802, was succeeded in the title of Viscount Lowther by Sir William Lowther, Bart., eldest son of Sir William above mentioned, to whom he bequeathed almost the whole of his princely fortune. Whitehaven passed under the will of Sir James Lowther, who died in 1755. William Viscount Lowther was in 1807 created Earl of Lonsdale; and, dying March 19th, 1844, was succeeded by his son, the present Earl of Lonsdale, who is lord of the manor of Whitehaven.³

Whitehaven Castle,⁴ the Earl of Lonsdale's seat at Whitehaven, and where he occasionally resides, is a large quadrangular building, pleasantly situated near the south-eastern entrance of the town. The principal portion was erected by James, first earl of Lonsdale. The castle is surrounded by a fine lawn, with pleasure-grounds and ornamental gardens. The front, which is towards the town, has a handsome appearance. In the entrance hall is a Roman altar and a centurial stone, the former of which was found at Ellenborough, and is said to be the largest discovered in Britain, being no less than five feet in height. It is described at page 325, and the inscription given. The centurial stone was found at Moresby, by the Rev. George B. Wilkinson, who presented it to the Earl of Lonsdale. It has this inscription:—

IMP CAES	Of the emperor Cæsar
TRAIN IIADRI	Trajanus Hadri.
ANI AUG P.P.	anus Augustus, father of his country
LEG. XX VV.	The twentieth legion, the valiant and victorious.

The staircase and apartments of the castle contain several fine paintings by eminent masters, among which we may mention the Marriage at Cana, by Tintoretto; Hero and Leander, by Guido; and fine large groups of animals, by Snyders. Among the family portraits are those of William, late earl of Lonsdale, in his robes, by Hoppner; Sir Christopher Lowther, first baronet; Sir William Lowther, fourth baronet; James, first earl of Lonsdale; Mrs. Hannah Lowther, of Marske, who died in 1757, aged 103 years; and some others.

THE BOROUGH OF WHITEHAVEN.

This market town, sea port, and parliamentary borough is situated on a level inlet between rocky and precipitous cliffs, in 54° 33' north latitude, and 3° 35' west longitude. It is distant thirty-eight miles south-west from Carlisle, 294 miles north-north-west from London by road, and 340 miles by the North-Western and connected railways, via Carlisle. Its population in 1851 was 18,916, of whom 8,898 were males and 10,018 females, inhabiting 3,627 houses; 152 houses being uninhabited and nineteen in course of erection.

The town of Whitehaven, like that of Maryport, is of comparative modern date. Its buildings are without antiquity. Its history extends over little more than two centuries. In the time of Elizabeth it was a small fishing village, consisting of about six or seven houses, and was of so little consequence that Camden does not notice it. It contributed a vessel of ten tons to the fleet raised to meet the Spanish Armada. It is close upon two hundred years since the first step was taken which led to Whitehaven attaining its present importance. In 1666 Sir John Lowther procured a grant of such lands as had belonged to the monastery of St. Bees, and still continued in the crown, for he had conceived a project of extending the collieries in the neighbourhood of Whitehaven. In 1678 a further grant of

¹ This decrease of population is attributed to the absence of 800 seamen in vessels.

² He was interred at Trinity Church, Whitehaven, where there is a monument to his memory.

³ A full account of the Lowther family will be found in the history of Lowther, at a subsequent page.

⁴ This mansion, described by Mr. T. Denton, in 1688, as "a stately new pile of building called the Flatt," was then made the manor-house. The former manor house had been at the west end of the town, at the foot of the rock.—Denton's MS.

land (about 150 acres) was obtained, consisting of all the derelict land lying between high and low water-mark for some distance in the vicinity of the harbour. These things being accomplished, Sir John commenced his great work, and lived to see the small, obscure village of a few thatched cottages, grow up into a thriving and populous town, which in 1693 contained 2,222 inhabitants. The founder of the prosperity of Whitehaven died in 1705, his second son succeeding to the estates, and about 1725 to the title, on the decease of Sir Christopher, the eldest son, who had been disinherited. By prosecuting with zeal his father's plans, extending the operations of the collieries, and improving the harbour, he caused such an influx of trade and such an increase of population, that at his death, in 1755, the town is said to have contained about 11,000 inhabitants; the shipping of the port having increased, between that period and 1685, from forty-six vessels carrying 1,871 tons burden, to 260 sail of nearly 30,000 tons. We are told that in 1785 Whitehaven contained nearly 17,000 inhabitants. Acts of Parliament for improving the town and harbour of Whitehaven were passed in 1708 and 1711; another act, for making the former more effectual and repairing the roads leading to the town, passed in 1740. The increasing importance of the town seems to have been well known at this period. A few years afterwards, in 1778, it was visited by the American privateer, Paul Jones, who with about thirty men from his ship, the Ranger, set fire to three of the ships in the harbour, with the intention of destroying the whole number. He was, however, betrayed by one of his crew, who fled into the town and alarmed the inhabitants. This becoming known to Jones and his companions, they retreated to their ship, having first spiked all the guns in one of the batteries. This descent of the American privateer caused the inhabitants to put the harbour in a proper state of defence, at a cost of £857, which they subscribed for the purpose. Since the visit of Paul Jones much has been done for the improvement of Whitehaven, which will be found fully noticed in our account of the harbour, &c. We can only say here that the town is well built; most of the streets are broad and straight, intersecting each other at right angles, and since the iron ore of the surrounding district has been brought for shipment by railway, are kept in a tolerably good condition. The houses are chiefly built of stone, and roofed with blue slate, and some of the public buildings are handsome and spacious structures. The principal approach to the town is on the north side, by a fine spacious road of gradual descent, between two eminences, the banks on one side being laid out as gardens and the other overshadowed with trees. The entrance to the town is by a fine arch, of freestone, with a rich entablature, ornamented with the family of the Lowther family. This arch was erected as a viaduct from the colliery to the harbour, but since the construction of the railways its use is entirely ornamental.

Whitehaven owes its present proud position amongst the towns of Cumberland to the coal trade, and such being the case we will first take a short review of that branch of industry. On the first attempt to work coal near Whitehaven, a level or water course was driven from the bottom of the valley, near the Pow Beck, till it intersected a seam of coal, known as the "Bannock Band," and drained a considerable field of coal, which was drawn out of pits from twenty to sixty yards deep. After this, another level was driven westward, from near the farm-house called Thicket, across the seam called the Main Band. This level also effectually drained a large bed of coal, which was raised from the pits by means of windlasses, and then carried to the ships on the backs of galloways, in packs of fourteen stones each. A later attempt to get coals here was made at the Ginns, where both the coal and water were drawn from the pits by means of horses and vertical machines, called ginns, a name that has since been borne by the populous suburb which has arisen upon the spot. The employment of horses in pumping water from the mines was superseded by the steam-engine, which was introduced into Whitehaven by Sir James Lowther, and the town is said to have possessed the second machine of the kind erected in England. Another powerful engine was subsequently erected near the Ginns, and by this means the drainage of a considerable extent of coal was effected. The Parker pit was afterwards opened, and a tramway, or railway, for the more easy passage of coal waggons was extended from it to the harbour staith. Another pit, about 420 feet deep, was sunk at Salton about the year 1714, and this was followed by the Howgill and Whingill collieries, the former situated to the south-west of the town, and the latter to the north-east. They have both been very successful. There are in the neighbourhood of Whitehaven four collieries, which, so to say, belong to the port. Three of these are the property of the Earl of Lonsdale; but two, those known as the "Whitehaven Collieries," will alone demand our attention in this place. These collieries consist of the "William" and the "Wellington" pits. The former is 103 fathoms in depth. There are three seams of coal worked; the "Bannock Band," about five and a half feet thick; the "Main Band," from nine to ten feet thick; and the "Six Quarters," or "Low Bottom," averages about five feet in thickness. There are two engines to this pit, one of seventy horse power for raising the coal, the other of 120 horse power for pumping water. The number of hands employed amounts to 216, and there are twenty-eight horses. The Wellington pit has two shafts of 142 fathoms each. The seams are similar to those worked in the William pit, and bear the same names. Besides the seams mentioned there is another called the "Yard Band," which has not been worked for some time. The Wellington pit also possesses two engines of sixty and forty-eight horse power respectively. It is worked by 634 hands and forty-eight horses. When these pits are in full work, they together produce nearly 1,000 tons of coal per day. The workings extend in a north-westerly direction about a mile under the bed of the sea. The Salton pit is now used only for pumping from the Wellington, and the James pit serves as a furnace shaft. In connexion with these pits there are sixteen coke ovens. The buildings in connection with the Whitehaven collieries are, we believe, unique. Near to the noble West Pier, the attention of every stranger is attracted by the appearance of a series of towers and castellated erections, of a style of architecture, magnificence of design and execution, rarely to be seen, presenting the appearance, seaward, of extensive fortifications. In relation to the shipment of the coal, a great improvement has been effected, by the removal of the old unsightly hurries which formerly stood on the south side of the harbour, and the substitution in their stead of a substantial iron roadway, supported by pillars, with close iron hurries, for delivering coals into the vessels; thus opening a good access to the baths, and to the unequalled promenade on the West Pier, and its spacious parapet, where a walk of nearly a quarter of a mile direct out to sea from the old quay is afforded. The first iron hurry was erected here in 1837. On the north wall the coals are lowered to the ship's hatchways by an hydraulic arrangement, invented by the late Mr. Matthewson, some time engineer to Messrs. Tulk and Ley. The coals are dropped from a wagon into a box supported by an unseen rod, which, on turning a tap, is permitted to descend, by forcing water from a cylinder below into an ornamental tank placed on columns over the wagon; when the coals are allowed to fall into the hold, the water, again descending, raises the empty box. On the south of the harbour various mechanical devices are in operation for returning the empty wagons by the descent of the laden ones; and an air cylinder is applied as an effectual break on the steep inclined plane. In the history of the coal trade we find a few incidents worth notice. One is the sending of Fredamp, as is called, enclosed in bladders to the Royal Society, in 1733, for examination by the learned chemists who then held their meetings in Crane Court. And about the middle of last century Mr. Spedding, colliery agent, lighted his office with gas led from the pits by pipes, and he offered to lay on a supply for the whole town; but his offer, as we can easily believe, was not accepted. The average quantity of coal exported from Whitehaven from 1781 to 1792, was 80,000 chaldrons. For the five years ending December, 1814, 100,000 waggon loads; in 1826, upwards of 135,000 chaldrons; in 1827, 114,692 chaldrons of forty-eight cwt. each; in 1846, the quantity entered at the custom-house for Whitehaven, Harrington, and Workington, was 321,835 tons of coal, and 4,832 tons of culm. We subjoin the statistics of the coal trade of Whitehaven from 1850 to the present time:—

Year.	Coals. tons.	Culm. tons.
1850	252,392	4,156
1851	317,266	8,948
1852	215,539	6,004
1853	220,494	2,593
1854	212,754	2,790
1855	204,750	1,622
1856	207,046	775
1857	197,480	1,400
1858	179,567	778

Having thus given a rapid résumé of the principal trade of the town, we will call attention to the hematite iron ore, for which the Whitehaven district is famous. A full account of this mineral will be found at page 76, with the statistics of the iron trade of the county. The total quantity of iron ore shipped from Whitehaven in 1852, was 84,960 tons; in 1853, 115,731 tons; in 1854, 145,526 tons were shipped; and 46,785 tons, 12 cwt., passed over the Whitehaven Junction railway, for use in the iron furnaces of Netherumberland and Durham; in 1855, the quantity shipped amounted to 129,409 tons; in 1856, 152,875 tons were shipped, 65,675 sent away by rail, and 39,617 tons were used at the iron-works in the district; in 1857, the total quantity shipped amounted to 193,850 tons, 66,651 were sent by railway out of the district, 56,511 were used at iron-works, Cleator Moor, Harrington, and Seaton, and 6,800 tons were carted from mines, making a total of 328,812 tons; in 1858, 197,905 were shipped at Whitehaven.

Shipbuilding is the next important branch of industry, and is prosecuted to a considerable extent. There are three shipbuilding yards, carried on by Messrs. Thomas and John Brocklebank, Messrs. Lumley, Kennedy, and Co., and Mr. Hugh Williamson, employing in the aggregate 300 hands. The Earl of Lonsdale has erected a patent slip here, which will admit four vessels of 150 tons burden, and by which vessels of any burden may be drawn out of the water into the yard to be repaired. The other branches of Whitehaven trade include manufactures of sail-cloth, checks, ropes, cabinet goods, earthenware, colours, snuff and tobacco, soap, candles, anchors, cables, nails, &c.

During the progress of the trade and manufactures of Whitehaven, the shipping and shipping stock of the port must have proportionally increased. As early as the tenth century "Wythophaven" is named as being resorted to by ships. In the twelfth century the Nevilles of Raby sailed from this place to Ireland, when called upon to attend the king, Henry II., in his expedition to that country. In the reign of Elizabeth, when the maritime towns of England were summoned to furnish vessels for the fleet then being collected to defend the country against the Spanish Armada, mention is made of one vessel being found at Whitehaven, but whether that was the only vessel belonging to the port, or the only vessel in the port, we are not informed. In the year 1772 Whitehaven possessed 197 vessels; in 1790, 216 vessels; in 1810, 188 vessels, with a burden of 29,312 tons; in 1822, 181 vessels, tonnage 26,220; in 1821, 195 vessels, tonnage 30,960; in 1840, 217 vessels, tonnage 36,800; in 1846, there were 267 vessels registered at Whitehaven, with a tonnage of about 42,000. The following table, made up from the custom-house returns since 1846, exhibits the annual number of vessels, foreign and coastwise, which have entered and cleared from Whitehaven, the number and registered tonnage of vessels belonging to the port, and the amount of customs duties received:

Year.	CARGOES (INWARDS.)		CARGOES (OUTWARDS.)		VESSELS REGISTERED.		Duties Received.
	Foreign.	Coasting.	Foreign.	Coasting.	No.	Tons.
1846	30	872	10	2948	344	54,335	596,517
1847	34	813	16	2802	333	53,781	70,692
1848	24	965	11	2714	337	53,884	67,344
1849	26	949	10	3166	329	55,755	70,692
1850	23	809	12	3580	220	35,129	66,349
1851	46	962	14	3395	213	33,868	61,224
1852	27	854	12	3323	206	33,570	62,468
1853	22	756	14	3015	200	32,057	63,953
1854	31	863	18	3615	191	30,791	66,809
1855	35	928	21	3587	173	27,571	70,854
1856	23	913	17	3391	172	27,953	73,903
1857	36	1030	13	3782	175	27,127	75,767
1858	28	1014	23	3829	181	28,300	73,569
1859	17	958	11	3627			66,481

Maryport was constituted an independent port on the 3rd of February, 1842; and Workington with Harrington attached, on the 6th of April, 1850. The decrease in the above returns arises from Maryport, Workington, and Harrington having been constituted independent of this port, and the vessels belonging to those ports struck off the list each year, as they have been required to be registered de novo at their own ports.

The principal imports direct are brandy, wine, hemp, timber, &c. Sugar, coffee, tea, currants, raisins, tobacco, wine, and spirits, &c., received coastwise under bond, and also general goods of colonial and foreign produce received coastwise duly paid, and also general British goods.

The first account we have of the harbour of Whitehaven is furnished by Mr. Denton, who tells us that a pier was erected here before 1687, which rendered the harbour sufficiently commodious to contain a fleet of 100 sail. Two acts of Parliament, passed in the seventh and eleventh years of the reign of Queen Anne, established a tonnage duty for the improvement of the harbour, and in consequence many additional works were erected. In 1767 the New Quay was lengthened, and in 1784 the north wall was finished. In 1792 the Old Quay was made longer. In 1809 many other improvements were carried out. The new West Pier was commenced in 1824, and after a labour of fifteen years was completed in 1839. It is a noble work of great strength, extending about 300 yards northward from the West Pier, and terminates in a round head, the erection of which is stated to have cost £30,000. On this head is a lighthouse with a revolving light. There is another half-tide lighthouse on one of the inner piers, and another on St. Bees Head. The new North Pier is also a splendid structure, finished in 1841, and has a lighthouse or harbour guide. Indeed, no town, perhaps, in England can boast of two such splendid piers as Whitehaven; and, taken altogether, the harbour here is one of the largest and most convenient pier harbours in the kingdom. On the west and north the piers just noticed afford sufficient protection, while six others intersect the enclosed, and greatly facilitate the loading and unloading of vessels, and the transaction of the other business of the port. The port of Whitehaven, as regulated by a treasury order of March 30th, 1850, and board's order April 20th of the same year, extends from the mid-stream of the river Duddon, and three miles seaward to a stream called Lowen Beck, which separates the two parishes of Moresby and Harrington.

The government of the town and harbour of Whitehaven was provided for by the acts 7 Anne, c. 5, and 10 Anne, c. 3, the provisions of which were subsequently amended and extended by other acts; and continued in force till the present year, when a new act was passed for the government of the town and harbour. As this is of great importance we subjoin the act in full:—

ANNO VICESIMO SECUNDO VICTORIE REGINÆ.

CHAP. XIV.—An Act for transferring the Government of the new Limits of the Harbour of Whitehaven in the county of Cumberland to the Harbour Trustees; for making better Provision for the Election of Trustees; and for the Alteration of certain Rates and Duties payable in respect of the said Harbour and in the Town of Whitehaven.

[19th April, 1859.]

WHEREAS by an act of Parliament passed in the thirty second year of the reign of his majesty King George the Third, intitled “An Act for Enlarging and Improving the Harbour of Whitehaven in the County of Cumberland,” after reciting or referring to divers acts of Parliament relative to the said harbour (including an act passed in the second year of his said majesty), by which acts it had, amongst other things, been enacted to the effect that from and after the time therein mentioned, and long since past, on every first Friday in the month of August in every third year successively, fourteen persons to be chosen and appointed by ballot by the majority of the inhabitants of the town of Whitehaven in the said county, of such description as therein mentioned, together with James Earl of Lonsdale, his heirs and assigns, lord of the manor of Saint Bees in the county of Cumberland aforesaid, for the time being, or any person deputed by him or them, and six other persons to be nominated and appointed by the said James Earl of Lonsdale, his heirs and assigns as aforesaid, by writing or writings under his or their hand and seal, and from time to time to be changed or altered as he or they should think proper, should be trustees for carrying the said acts into execution, it was by the said act now in recital, amongst other things, enacted that the new limits and the new extent of the said harbour, should thenceforth for ever thereafter extend and be as follows; (that is to say,) from Redness Point, on the outside of a wall, then intended to be erected until it reached within one hundred and twenty yards of the then outward works of the pier or quay of the then harbour, and from thence in a line until it came within forty yards of the then outward quay or pier, and from thence to the north side of the Sugar House bulwark, and from thence along the Sugar House bulwark, and along the seashore, until it met the aforesaid Redness Point; and that the same should be from thenceforth appropriated to the lying, anchoring, and mooring of all such ships, vessels, and boats as might have occasion, at any time or times thereafter, to make use of the said harbour; and it was by the said act now in recital further enacted, that the new limits and new extent thereby made part of the said harbour, and all moles, wharfs, and quays which might be erected by virtue of the said act, with all things appertaining thereto, should be under the direction and government of the owner or owners of the soil for the time being, and that the said owners should be invested with the same powers and authority over all such new limits and extent, and all such moles, wharfs, and quays, and things as aforesaid, as the said trustees were, by virtue of the said thereinbefore recited acts, invested with, over other parts of the said harbour of Whitehaven, and the moles, wharfs, quays, and other places and things therein mentioned; and by the same act it was further enacted, that the owner or owners of such soil as aforesaid might erect, build, or alter, from time to time, as occasion might require, such buildings and erections as he, she, or they should think necessary for the improvement or benefit of such new limits or extent as aforesaid: And whereas by a certain award, bearing date the twenty-second day of October one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, and made under the respective hands and seals of Sir Joseph Senhouse, (knight) and George Vickers, (gentleman), who had been duly appointed arbitrators for the purpose, under the provisions of the said recited act, the exact boundaries of such new limits and extent as aforesaid were fully and finally set forth and determined as in such award is particularly mentioned: And whereas another act of Parliament relative to the said town and harbour was passed in the fifty sixth year of his said majesty, by which it was, amongst other things, enacted that from and after the twenty-ninth day of September one thousand eight hundred and sixteen, there should be payable to the said trustees for and upon all goods, wares, merchandise, and commodities whatsoever imported from parts beyond the seas, or brought coastwise into the said port of Whitehaven, or exported to parts beyond the seas from such port, the several rates and duties respectively mentioned in the two several schedules thereto annexed, and respectively distinguished by the letters A. and B.; and it was by the said act now in recital further enacted that so much of the said respective acts of the second year and the forty-sixth year of the reign of his said majesty as authorised the said trustees to assess and levy rates upon and from the inhabitants of the said town of Whitehaven, for the purpose of watching, paving, lighting, and securing the same against fire, should be repealed, and that for paying such expenses and supplying the said town with water, it should be lawful for such of the said trustees as therein mentioned, to cause money to be raised by such a rate or assessment as therein also mentioned, on the owners, inhabitants, or occupiers of tenements within the limits of the powers and jurisdictions of the said trustees: And whereas in schedule (A.) to this act annexed are mentioned the several acts relating to the port, harbour, and town of Whitehaven, and it is expedient that the said acts, so far as certain things therein authorised require the consent of the lord of the manor of St. Bees, should be repealed: And whereas it is also expedient that the mode of election of trustees under the said acts and the right of voting in the election of trustees should be altered in manner hereinafter provided: And whereas it is expedient that the government of the whole of the said harbour of Whitehaven, including such new limits and new extent as aforesaid, should be vested in one body; and it is also expedient that the rates on goods, wares, merchandises, and commodities, and on tenements, so respectively imposed or authorized to be imposed by the said recited act of the fifty-sixth year of the reign of his said majesty as herein-before is mentioned or referred to, should be respectively altered or authorised to be altered in the manner hereinafter mentioned or referred to respectively: And whereas it is also expedient that so much of the said acts of the second, forty-sixth, and fifty-sixth years of King George the Third as relates to the rates and assessments on the inhabitants of the said town of Whitehaven should be repealed, and other rates and duties paid in lieu thereof; but these purposes cannot be effected without the authority of Parliament: May it therefore please your Majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows; that is to say,

1. The said several acts in schedule (A.) mentioned (except so far as they are hereby altered or repealed), shall continue in full force and effect.

II. The trustees for carrying into execution and effect the said several acts, and thereby elected and appointed, shall be and they are hereby declared to be trustees for carrying into effect the powers, authorities, provisions, regulations, and purposes of the said acts and of this act, and shall continue in office as such trustees until the first Tuesday in November one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine.

III. The day of election of trustees shall be the first Tuesday in November in each year, and the first election shall take place on that day in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, and the number of trustees to be elected in manner herein-after provided shall be fifteen, of whom three shall be elected for each ward.

IV. And whereas by the acts mentioned in the schedule (A.) (herein-after called the said acts) the consent of the lord of the manor of St. Bees, either singly or in conjunction with a certain number of trustees, is essential to the carrying into effect of several of the provisions of the said acts, therefore the said acts, so far as such consent is requisite and necessary, shall be and the same are hereby repealed.

V. All acts of the trustees to be done in virtue of the said acts or of this act, and all the powers and authorities by the said acts and this act vested in the said trustees, may be done and exercised by them, or a major part of them, at any meeting whereat eleven or more of them shall be present.

VI. The lord of the manor of Saint Bees for the time being shall on and after the first Tuesday in November one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine nominate, appoint, and change from time to time, as in the said acts mentioned, five persons to be trustees, instead of six, as in the said acts provided.

VII. Every person who if resident would be entitled to vote in the election of trustees shall be qualified to be elected a trustee under this act, provided he resides within seven miles from the parliamentary boundary of the borough of Whitehaven, and may be elected a trustee for any ward whatsoever, whether he be resident or registered within such ward or not, but this qualification shall not extend to the case of any trustee appointed or to be appointed by the lord, for the time being, of the manor of Saint Bees.

VIII. The town of Whitehaven shall, for the election of trustees under this and the said acts, be divided into five wards, to be called as follows; (that is to say).—St. James' ward, St. Nicholas' ward, Trinity ward, Newtown ward, and Harbour ward, which wards are delineated on a plan of the town, signed by the Right Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons, in duplicate, one of which plans shall be deposited by the trustees in the private bill office, and the other at the harbour office of the said trustees, and the limits of the said wards are described in schedule (B.) to this act annexed; and the names of the said wards respectively are mentioned on the said plan.

IX. The persons entitled to vote in the election of trustees shall be as follows (that is to say):—

The master of every vessel belonging to and registered at the port of Whitehaven, who shall have resided within the limits of the parliamentary borough for six months immediately preceding the first day of September next before the day appointed for the said election.

Every person owning not less than four sixty-fourth shares of any such vessel, who shall have been a registered owner of such shares, and who shall have resided within such limits as aforesaid, for six months immediately preceding the said first day of September.

Every person residing within the limits of any of the said wards who shall occupy any house, shop, office, counting-house, warehouse, or other building within any of the said wards, and shall in respect of such occupation be rated at a net annual rateable value of not less than six pounds per annum in the rate in force for the relief of the poor made and published immediately preceding the said first day of September, and shall have been rated for such period as hereinafter mentioned.

X. On the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, and so in every year thereafter, the overseers of the poor of the parishes and townships within which the limits of the said wards are comprised, shall make out an alphabetical list, from the rate-book then in force for their several parishes and townships, of every person who shall occupy any house, shop, office, counting-house, warehouse, or other building within the limits of any of the said wards, and who shall in respect of such occupation be rated at a net annual rateable value of not less than six pounds per annum, and shall deliver such list to the clerk of the trustees, on or before the tenth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, and so in every year thereafter; provided that no person shall be entitled to have his name placed on such list unless he shall have been rated for six months, within the limits of some ward, next immediately preceding the said first day of September.

XI. Upon the receipt of the said lists the said clerk shall forthwith divide and arrange the names therein according to the different wards in which such persons shall respectively occupy, and shall also make out a separate list in respect of such wards, and shall omit from such list the name of any person who shall not then reside within the limits of any of the said wards, and shall add to each of such lists the name of every person being a master or owner of any vessel qualified to vote as aforesaid, and who shall reside in such ward respectively; and if any such master or owner shall not reside within any of the said wards, the said clerk shall include his name in the list of the ward to the limits of which his residence shall in his judgment be the nearest; and the said clerk shall, on or before the twenty-fourth day of September in each year, publish the said lists, and such lists are hereinafter called the register, and the persons whose names are included therein are hereinafter called the voters; and the register shall be printed by the trustees, and copies thereof shall be furnished to parties requiring the same, at a rate not exceeding one shilling for the register applicable to each ward.

XII. The rate collectors, or persons appointed by them, shall attend at the elections under this act, and, in the event of any dispute, assist in ascertaining that the persons presenting themselves to vote, as occupiers rated as herein-before mentioned to the relief of the poor in each such ward, are persons duly qualified to vote at such election.

XIII. On the day of election of trustees the voters for each ward who are desirous of voting shall meet at the place appointed for such election, and shall then and there nominate two voters of such ward, who shall be then present, as fit and proper persons to be inspectors of votes; and the person appointed to preside at such election shall, immediately after such nomination as aforesaid by the said voters, nominate two other such voters to be such inspectors.

XIV. Any person whose name shall not appear upon the said register, and who shall claim to vote at the election in any ward, shall, immediately after such nomination, be entitled to prove his right to vote before the presiding officer, and the inspectors of votes shall hear and decide upon such claim, and such decision shall be final; and if the presiding officer and the said inspectors, or the major part of them, shall decide the claim to vote to be valid, the presiding officer shall add such name to the register accordingly.

XV. Any person whose name shall appear upon the register of any ward may object to the name of any voter which is included therein, by giving a written notice of such his intention to the said clerk by leaving the same at the harbour-office, and to the said voter by leaving the same, or sending such notice by post to the address specified in the said list; and the proof of posting such notice shall be prima facie evidence of the sending of such notice; and such person so objected to shall attend before the said returning officer and the inspectors of votes for the ward in which such voter so objected to shall be registered, and the person so objecting, or some one on his behalf, shall prove the service of such notice, and shall also support his objection; and the voter objected to, or anyone on his behalf, may support his right to vote before such presiding officer and inspectors of votes, who shall thereupon hear and decide upon such objection, and such decision shall be final; and if the presiding officer and the said inspectors, or the major part of them, shall decide in favour of such objection, the presiding officer shall expunge such name from the register accordingly, but if not, such name shall be retained thereon.

XVI. The presiding officer is hereby empowered to examine upon oath any person claiming a right to vote or making an objection to a right to vote, and also any witness tendered on behalf of or against any such claim or objection, and every person authorised by law to make an affirmation instead of taking an oath shall make an affirmation in lieu thereof; and if any person taking any such oath or making any such affirmation shall wilfully swear or affirm falsely, such person shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be punished accordingly.

XVII. The register when amended shall be conclusive evidence of the right to vote.

XVIII. After such nominations and claims as aforesaid (if any), the voters shall elect such duly qualified persons as they shall think proper, and who are there proposed for the office of trustees, the presiding officer shall declare the persons who shall have been elected trustees by the majority of votes at such meeting to be trustees under this and the said recited acts.

XIX. Provided always, that any five voters may then and there, in writing or otherwise, demand a poll, which shall be taken by ballot on the day next following the day of such election, and shall commence at eight of the clock in the forenoon and close at four o'clock in the afternoon, each voter depositing, as herein-after provided, a folded paper containing the names of the persons for whom such voter shall vote as fit and proper persons to be such trustees; and each voter shall have one vote in respect of each trustee to be elected at such meeting, but no nevertheless as not to give more than one vote in favour of each trustee.

XX. Every person entitled to vote in the election of trustee as a rated occupier, shall vote for trustees for that ward wherein he shall reside; and every master and owner qualified to vote as aforesaid shall vote in the ward in which he shall be registered; and if any person shall be registered in more than one ward he may vote for trustees for any one of such wards, but having so voted he shall not afterwards, at the same election, vote for a trustee for any other ward, and any vote so afterwards given by him shall be void.

XXI. The persons voting shall deposit such folded papers in a ballot glass or box, which shall be closed at the times herein-before fixed for the closing of the poll; and the inspectors of votes for each ward shall forthwith meet together and proceed to examine the said votes, and if necessary shall continue the examination by adjournments from day to day, not exceeding two days, until they shall have decided upon the persons who may have been chosen to fill the office of trustees.

XXII. In case an equality of votes appear to the inspectors to be given for any two or more persons to fill the office of trustee, the inspectors shall decide by lot upon the person to be chosen.

XXIII. If any person knowingly personate and falsely assume to vote in the name of any voter entitled to or claiming to vote in any election under this act, or forge or in any way falsify any names or writings in any papers purporting to contain the vote or votes of any voters voting in any such election, or by any contrivance attempt to obstruct or prevent the proceedings at any such elections, the person so offending shall, upon conviction before any two or more justices of the peace having jurisdiction in the said ward or any part thereof, be liable to any penalty of not less than ten pounds and not more than fifty pounds, and in default of payment thereof shall be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six nor less than three months.

XXIV. The inspectors in each ward shall, immediately after they have decided upon whom the aforesaid elections have fallen, deliver to the clerk of the said trustees a list of the persons chosen by the voters to act as such trustees in each ward respectively, and the said list shall be preserved by the said clerk, and a copy thereof shall be published, as herein provided; and if any trustees be elected for any ward without ballot, the clerk shall in like manner publish the names of such trustees.

XXV. If any inspector wilfully make or cause to be made an incorrect return of the said votes, every such offender shall, upon information laid by any person before two or more justices of the peace having jurisdiction in the ward in which such election is held, and upon conviction for such offence, be liable to a penalty of not less than twenty-five pounds and not exceeding fifty pounds, and in default of payment shall be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months nor less than three months.

XXVI. The trustees shall provide in each ward fit and proper places for the holding of the elections under this act, and holding of the poll thereof; and the expenses of providing such places, of publishing notices, of taking the poll, and of making the returns at elections of the said trustees, shall be paid out of the respective rates levied under the said recited acts and this act, in such proportions as the trustees shall determine.

XXVII. The trustees shall take an account of the reasonable expenses incurred by the said clerk and by the overseers in carrying into effect the several provisions of this act, and shall order the same to be paid out of the moneys coming into their hands by virtue of the said acts and this act, in such proportions as the trustees shall think fit.

XXVIII. If any churchwarden, overseer, rate collector, or other parish officer, or the said clerk shall refuse or neglect to call any meeting, or prepare any list, or give any notice, or do any other act required of him, under the provisions of this act, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

XXIX. The following provisions of the "Commissioners' Clauses Act, 1847," save so far as the same are expressly excepted or varied by this act, or are inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of this act, are hereby incorporated with this Act; (that is to say.)

With respect to the election and rotation of the commissioners, where the commissioners are to be elected by the ratepayers or other like class of electors, except sections twenty-one, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, thirty, and thirty-one.

With respect to access to the special act:

Provided, that the day on which the elected trustees shall go out of office shall be the first Tuesday in November in each year.

XXX. The following words and expressions in the provisions incorporated with this act of "The Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847," shall have for the purpose of this act the following meanings, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say,)

"The Special Act" shall mean and include the said acts and this act;

"The Commissioners" shall mean the trustees from time to time elected, appointed, and nominated under this act for executing the said acts and this act respectively.

XXXI. At the first or other meeting of the trustees after the passing of this act they shall, by the majority of the votes of the trustees present, elect one of the entire body of trustees to be their chairman until the next election of the trustees, and so after each such election the said trustees shall, in like manner, elect a chairman until the period of the then next election, and in case the chairman die, or resign, or cease to be a trustee, or otherwise become disqualified to act as such chairman, the trustees present at the meeting next after the occurrence of such vacancy shall choose some other of their body to fill such vacancy, and the chairman so elected shall continue in office so long only as the person in whose place he was elected would have been entitled to continue chairman; and if at any meeting of the trustees the chairman be not present, one of the trustees present shall be elected chairman of such meeting by the majority of the votes of the trustees present at such meeting.

XXXII. The chairman so to be appointed shall be the returning officer at the first election after this act, and shall have for the purposes of such election all the powers of "the chairman of commissioners under the Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847."

XXXIII. The present trustees shall be eligible for re-election as trustees under this act.

XXXIV. In consideration of the hurries, coal spouts, and other works to be made and maintained by the trustees, as hereinafter provided, for the accommodation of the collieries belonging to the owner for the time being of the soil of the new limits and extent mentioned or referred to in the said recited act of the thirty-second year of the reign of his said majesty, and of the minerals, merchandise, and goods, shipped or unshipped, by or on behalf of such owner, his lessees, tenants, or agents, such owner shall, as soon as may be after the passing of this act, transfer and make over to such trustees the whole government and direction of such new limits and extent, so and to the intent and effect that the government and direction of such new limits may thenceforth be absolutely vested in such trustees, in the same manner, to all intents and purposes, and with the like powers and authorities, as the government and direction of the remainder of the said harbour (exclusively of such new limits and extent), but subject and always without prejudice to any other rights or interests of such owner or owners, irrespective of such government and direction: provided always, that it is hereby enacted, that the validity and effect of any such transfer as aforesaid shall be in no way affected or prejudiced by the fact of the transferor or transferors, or any of them, being a trustee or trustees, or holding or exercising any other jurisdiction under the said acts, or any of them.

XXXV. The trustees, after the government and direction of such new limits and extent shall have been transferred to them as aforesaid, and before they shall open to the public any dock to be constructed by them upon or within such new limits and extent, shall if required so to do by William Earl of Lonsdale, his heirs and assigns, make and maintain, in connexion with such new dock, and within such new limits, for the loading and unloading, shipping and unshipping into and from vessels using the said dock, the coals, minerals, goods, and merchandises of and belonging to William Earl of Lonsdale, his heirs and assigns, and their lessees, tenants, and occupiers, in such part or parts of the wet dock as may be agreed upon by the said trustees and the said William Earl of Lonsdale, his heirs and assigns, the works following: (that is to say),

Two sufficient and properly constructed hurries or spouts, with all necessary and convenient loading berths, waggon-ways, and approaches thereto.

XXXVI. The trustees shall likewise, if required so to do as aforesaid, make and maintain, for the launching into such new dock all such ships or vessels as shall be built in or upon the shipbuilding yards situated on the east side of the site of the proposed new dock, and now in the several occupations of Messrs. T. and J. Brocklebank, Messrs. Lumley, Kennedy and Co., and John Johnston Peile, in such part or parts of the said new dock, as may be agreed upon by the said trustees, and the said William Earl of Lonsdale, his heirs and assigns, the works following: (that is to say), Six proper and sufficient launching slips or launching places, with all necessary and proper accommodation for launching vessels from the said yards into the said new dock.

XXXVII. Provided always, that the said William Earl of Lonsdale, his heirs and assigns, shall not be entitled to require the making of such new hurries or spouts, and other works connected therewith, or such proper and sufficient launching places as aforesaid, in addition to the hurries and staiths, and approaches thereto, and works connected therewith, which the said William Earl of Lonsdale now uses and enjoys upon and adjoining to the eastern side of the limits of the present harbour, upon a part in the said plan hereinafter mentioned, called the North Pier.

XXXVIII. This act, except so far as it relates to the election and nomination of trustees, shall come into effect and operation on the first day of August one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, and not earlier, and after that day there shall be payable and paid to the said trustees for the time being, or to their collectors or deputies, for and upon all goods, wares, merchandises and commodities whatsoever imported from parts beyond the seas or brought coastwise into the port of Whitehaven aforesaid, or exported to parts beyond the seas from the said port by the owner or owners, consignee or consignees, of such goods, wares, merchandises, or other commodities, in lieu of the rates and duties authorised or imposed under or by virtue of the said recited act of the fifty-sixth year of the reign of his said Majesty, the several rates and duties particularly specified and set forth in the two schedules herunto annexed, and respectively distinguished by the letters C and D, so far as such goods, wares, merchandises, and commodities so to be imported or exported as aforesaid are particularised in the said schedules, or either of them; and all such of the said goods, wares, merchandises, and commodities, so to be imported or exported as aforesaid, as are not particularised and set forth in the said schedules, or either of them, shall be charged with and pay a rate or duty on their being so imported or exported into or out of the said port equal to the rate or duty rated or affixed on goods, wares, merchandises, and commodities of a similar nature, package, and quality, in and by the said schedules, or one of them.

XXXIX. Such parts and so much of "The Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847," as is or are hereinafter particularly mentioned or referred to, shall be incorporated with and form part of this act; that is to say, the clauses numbered twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty, with respect to the rates to be taken; and the clauses numbered thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, thirty-nine, forty, forty-one, forty-three, forty-four, forty-five, forty-six, forty-seven, and forty-eight, with respect to the collection and recovery of rates.

XL. Such parts and so much of the said recited act of the fifty-sixth year of the reign of his said Majesty as authorises the trustees therein mentioned to assess, levy, or raise rates upon or in respect of any lands, houses, shops, wharves, warehouses, buildings, and erections within the said town of Whitehaven, and the limits of the jurisdiction of such trustees, shall be, and the same are and is, hereby repealed; and for paying and defraying the expenses for the several purposes of lighting, paving, and cleansing the said town and the streets, lanes, and places within the said town of Whitehaven, and within the limits of the powers, authorities, and jurisdictions of the said trustees, as given by the said recited act of the fifty-sixth year of the reign of his said Majesty, and providing security against fire in the said town and harbour, and within the limits aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for the said trustees, and they are hereby authorised and required twice or oftener in every year, as they shall see occasion, to cause such sum and sums of money to be raised by a rate or assessment on all and every the person or persons who do or shall inhabit, hold, occupy, or enjoy any land, house, shop, wharf, warehouse, or other tenement within the said town of Whitehaven, and within the limits aforesaid, not exceeding in the whole in any one year (such year to be computed from the eleventh day of November), the sum of two shillings and sixpence in the pound on the annual value of such lands, houses, shops, wharves, warehouses, buildings, and erections: provided always, that the owners of all rateable property, of which the full net annual value does not exceed the sum of six pounds, or which shall be let to weekly or monthly tenants, or in separate apartments, shall be rated to and be liable to pay the rates by this act directed to be made, instead of the occupiers thereof, but so, nevertheless, that three-fourth parts of the said rate only shall be collected from and be payable by such owners.

XLI. And whereas the wards described in the schedule (B.) to this act annexed comprise the limits within which the trustees at present exercise the power of rating: And whereas, under the provisions of the act of the fifty-sixth George the Third, chapter forty-four, the said trustees have power to extend such limits for the purposes of rating from time to time, and it is desirable that all persons so liable to be rated, upon being brought within the limits of the said acts, should vote in the election of trustees, therefore, when and so often as any new limits shall be constituted by the said trustees: The said trustees shall be and they are hereby empowered to declare by writing, under the hand of their chairman for the time being, that such new limits shall be included within such of the adjoining wards for all the purposes of this act as the said trustees shall at any meeting resolve and determine, and immediately thereupon all persons within such new limits shall have all the same and the like privileges as to voting, residence, and otherwise, as any person has by this act, if occupying or resident within the limits of any of the said wards.

XLII. Such parts and so much of "the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847," as are or is hereinafter particularly mentioned or referred to, shall be incorporated with and form part of this act (that is to say), the clauses numbered one hundred and sixty-seven, one hundred and sixty-eight, one hundred and sixty-nine, one hundred and seventy, one hundred and seventy-one, one hundred and seventy-two, one hundred and seventy-three, one hundred and seventy-four, one hundred and seventy-five, one hundred and seventy-six, one hundred and seventy-seven, one hundred and seventy-eight, one hundred and eighty, one hundred and eighty-two, one hundred and eighty-three, and one hundred and eighty-four, with respect to the manner of making rates; the clauses numbered one hundred and eighty-five, one hundred and eighty-six, one hundred and eighty-seven, one hundred and eighty-eight, one hundred and eighty-nine, and one hundred and ninety, with respect to the appeal to be made against any rate; and the clauses numbered one hundred and ninety-one, one hundred and ninety-two, one hundred and ninety-three, one hundred and ninety-four, one hundred and ninety-five, one hundred and ninety-six, one hundred and ninety-seven, and one hundred and ninety-eight, with respect to the recovery of rates.

XLIII. The said rates or assessments not exceeding two shillings and sixpence in the pound, upon the persons inhabiting and dwelling in the said town, and within the limits aforesaid, shall be applied by the said trustees, and be disposed of for the several purposes of defraying the costs, charges, and expenses of paving, lighting, and cleansing the said town, and the several streets, lanes, passages, and places within the limits aforesaid, and for providing the means of security against fire, and of defraying other costs, charges, and expenses, incurred by effecting and executing such several purposes, and all such rates and assessments shall be paid to the respective collectors, appointed by the said trustees, by virtue of the acts relating to the said town and harbour, and such moneys shall be by every such collector paid over to the said trustees of the said port, harbour, and town of Whitehaven, or to such other persons at such time and in such manner as any five or more of the said trustees shall from time to time appoint and direct: Provided always, that the trustees may, if they think proper, light the lamps authorised by them to be provided within the said town and harbour and the liberties and precincts thereof, from sun-setting to sun-rising, during the whole or any part of the year.

XLIV. Nothing herein contained shall at any time hereafter prejudice or affect the right of the said trustees to recover any rates or duties which may become due, or be payable, or recoverable, under the said recited act of the fifty-sixth year of the reign of his said majesty or any other or others of the said acts before or up to the said first day of August one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine.

XLV. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to exempt the said harbour and docks from the provisions of any general act relating to harbours, or dues on shipping, or on goods carried in ships now in force, or which shall be passed in the present or any future session of Parliament, or from any future revision and alteration under the authority of Parliament of the rates and duties authorized by this act.

XLVI. Except as is by this act expressly provided, this act, or anything therein, shall not take away, lessen, prejudice, or affect any of the estates, rights, franchises, powers, and privileges of the lord of the manor of Saint Bees, for the time being, or any right he may now have of using any of the present hurries or stiaiths and approaches thereto.

XLVII. Nothing herein contained shall prejudice the rights or interests of any mortgagee or other person having any lien or claim on any of such rates or duties which may be altered or otherwise affected by the passing of this act and every such mortgagee or other person shall have the same or like lien or claim, on any substituted rates or duties to be imposed or levied under the authority of this act, which he previously had on any rates or duties imposed under any former act or acts for which other rates or duties shall be substituted under this act.

XLVIII. In citing this act for any purpose whatsoever, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Whitehaven Town and Harbour Act, 1859."

XLIX. The expenses of applying for and obtaining this act, and incidental thereto, shall be defrayed by the trustees for the time being out of the funds of the trustees.

The Schedules to which the foregoing Act refers.

SCHEDULE A.—Acts relating to the port, harbour, and town of Whitehaven, in the county of Cumberland.

7 Anne, c. 5.	32 Geo. III., c. 75.
10 Anne, c. 3.	46 Geo. III., c. 115.
13 Geo. II., c. 14.	56 Geo. III., c. 44.
1 Geo. III., c. 44.	58 Geo. III., c. 15.
2 Geo. III., c. 87.	12 Vict. c. 17.
28 Geo. III., c. 61.	21 Vict. c. 2.

SCHEDULE B.—Description of Walls.—1. St. James Ward comprises those parts of the town which are bounded as follows (that is to say):—By a line commencing at the south-east end of Duke-street, proceeding in a northerly direction along the walls of White Park and Harris Park, unto and round the north-east corner of Hilton Terrace; thence in a westerly direction along Hilton Terrace to the boundary of Whitehaven township, near Wheelbarrow Brow; thence along such boundary in a northerly direction to the wall of the turnpike road leading from Whitehaven to Moresby; thence along the south wall of the said turnpike road in a westerly direction to a point opposite the Railway Hotel at Bransby; thence across the turnpike road, and proceeding northerly to a point between the Bransby ropery and Whitehaven gasworks; thence in a westerly direction to the Whitehaven junction railway, and along the boundary thereof to the arch near William Pit; thence westerly to high-water mark of the sea shore, and along the said high-water mark and shore, in a south-westerly direction, to the North Pier; thence along the strand, between the harbour and the shipbuilding-yards occupied by Messrs. Lumley, Kennedy, and Company, to the north-west corner of Duke-street, and thence along the centre of Duke-street to the point first beforenamed.

2. St. Nicholas ward comprises those parts of the town which are bounded as follows (that is to say):—By a line commencing at the south-east corner of Roper-street; thence proceeding along the centre of Scotch-street to the centre of Duke-street; thence along the centre of Duke-street, in a northerly direction, to the south-west end of Duke-street, near the Dulwark; thence in a westerly direction, between the town and the harbour, as far as East Strand; thence along East Strand, across the Market Place, and along the centre of Roper-street, to the point first named.

3. Trinity ward comprises those parts of the town which are bounded as follows (that is to say):—By a line commencing at the south east end of Roper-street; thence proceeding along the centre of Scotch-street to the centre of Duke-street; thence along the centre of Duke-street, in a southerly direction, to the land of the Earl of Lonsdale, adjoining to Somerset House; thence in a southerly direction, along the boundary of the township of Whitehaven, to the turnpike road near Corickle; thence across such road, and proceeding in a southerly direction along the south-west side thereof, to the Retreat, round the Retreat to Fox Houses and Meadow House, and along the western boundary fence of the garden at Meadow House, and from thence in a northerly direction to the coach road, across the said coach road to the south boundary wall of ironworks and land in the occupation of Mr. John Johnston Peile; thence along such boundary wall in a western direction, across the Whitehaven and Furness junction railway, to Poe Beck; thence in a northerly direction, along Poe Beck and across the railway station, to the north-western corner at the cricket ground; thence in an easterly direction by the boundary walls of Mill-street and the militia barracks, and thence in a northerly direction to the north-west corner of the Castle Meadow; thence in an easterly direction, along the boundary walls of houses in Irish-street, to the point near Trinity Church first named.

4. Newtown ward comprises those parts of the town which are bounded as follows (that is to say):—By a line commencing at the south-east end of Roper-street, and proceeding along the western boundary wall of Trinity Churchyard to the Castle Meadow; thence in a westerly direction, along the boundary walls of properties in Irish-street, to the north-west corner of the Castle Meadow; thence in a southerly direction, along the eastern wall of the militia barracks, to the cricket ground; thence along the north-western sides of the cricket ground to the railway station; thence in a southerly direction, across the railway and along the centre of Poe Beck, to the south-east corner of Mr. John Wilkinson's pottery, at the Ginns; thence in a westerly direction to the highway leading from Whitehaven to St. Bees; thence across such road to the south-west corner of the new houses, and thence along the west side of the back row of the new houses in Preston Quarter, and in a straight line to a point in the land of the Earl of Lonsdale in the line of the centre of Albion-street; thence in an easterly direction, across the said land and along the centre of Albion-street, to the centre of James-street; thence in a southerly direction to Irish-street; thence along the centre of Irish-street, in an easterly direction, to the point first named.

5. Harbour ward comprises those parts of the town which are bounded as follows (that is to say):—By a line commencing at the south-east end of Roper-street; thence proceeding in a north-westerly direction along Roper-street, across the Market Place, to the patent slip yard situated in the East Strand; thence along the custom-house quay and the West Strand to and round the wash and bath houses on the east side thereof, and so round the houses near the south end of the West Pier; thence in a south-westerly direction, along high-water mark of the seashore, to the boundary of the township of Whitehaven, near Wellington Pit; thence in a southern direction along such boundary, through the coal yard and coal stiaiths of the Earl of Lonsdale, to Mount Pleasant, and along the west side of Mount Pleasant to Rosemary-lane, across the said lane, in a southerly direction, to a point in the land of the Earl of Lonsdale opposite to the centre of Albion-street; thence in an easterly direction, across the said land and along the centre of Albion-street, to the centre of James-street; thence in a southerly direction to Irish-street; thence along the centre of Irish-street, in an easterly direction, to the first named point at the south-east end of Roper-street.

CHURCHES AND CHAPELS.

St. Nicholas's Church is a large plain structure, with a spacious burial-ground ornamented with trees, situated in the neighbourhood of Church-street, Lowther-street, and Queen-street. It was erected in 1687-93, at an expense of £1,006 16s. 2½d., which was defrayed by Sir John Lowther and the inhabitants. In the same year a petition was presented to Parliament, praying that Whitehaven might be constituted a separate and distinct parish, but the prayer was refused. The church has, externally, no pretensions to architectural elegance; the interior is, however, handsomely fitted up. The organ is a fine-toned instrument, built by Snetzler, and was placed here in 1756. There are several mural monuments to members of the Richardson, Hartley, Gale, Griffin, Hudleston, Littledale, Lutwidge, and Benn families. St. Nicholas's was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at about £60 per annum, £40 of which arose from seats, and £20 from contributions. It has since received a Parliamentary grant of £800, and is now worth about £188 a year. The benefice is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The registers commence in 1694. The three churches in Whitehaven became separate and distinct parishes for all ecclesiastical purposes on the 10th of June, 1835, by an act passed some time previously, which enabled the Queen in council to form new parishes. Under this new arrangement St. Nicholas's Church had an ecclesiastical district attached to it, which is bounded on the north by Duke-street, on the west by the sea, and on the south by the ecclesiastical district attached to the Trinity Church. The population of the parish of St. Nicholas, in 1851, was 4,482. The number of males was 1,925, of females, 2,557; there were at the same period 800 inhabited houses, seventy-nine uninhabited, and four in course of erection.

INCUMBENTS. — Yates, 1693; Francis Yates, —; Curwen Hudleston, 1798; Wilfred Hudleston, 1771; Andrew Hudleston, 1811; Frederick W. Wicks, 1851.

Holy Trinity Church, situated at the junction of Scotch-street, Irish-street, and Roper-street, was erected in 1715, and is in style very similar to St. Nicholas's. The communion table occupies an apse, or semicircular recess, and is surmounted by a painting of the Ascension, by Reed. The organ is by Wrenn of Manchester. The church contains several mural monuments; one of which, near the tower, is to the memory of Sir James Lowther, the fourth and last baronet of this branch of the family, who died without issue in 1755. The families commemorated on the monuments and tablets are Harrison, Benn, Church, Moore, Littledale, Spedding, Bateman, and Pennyfeather. Holy Trinity Church was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at about £60, of which £10 arose from sittings, and the remainder from contributions. In 1831 the living was returned as of the annual value of £250, having been augmented by William Earl of Lonsdale, and with £400 received from Queen Anne's Bounty. The presentation to the living is vested in the Earl of Lonsdale and the seat-holders, who present alternately. By an order in council, bearing date June 10, 1855, an ecclesiastical district was attached to this church, and it was constituted a separate and distinct parish for all ecclesiastical purposes. The district is bounded by the higher part of Lowther-street, and part of Scotch-street, Carter Lane, part of Queen-street, part of Roper-street, down through the marketplace to the sea; and on the south by the limits of the borough. In 1851 Holy Trinity parish comprised a population of 4,306 persons, of whom 2,063 were males, and 2,243 females. The number of inhabited houses at the same period was 818, of uninhabited, forty-five, and two were in course of erection.

INCUMBENTS.—John Dalton, 1715; William Briscoe, 1729; Thomas Sewell, 1745; Charles Cobbe Church, 1781; Thomas Harrison, 1808; Thomas Dalton, 1840.

St. James's Church was erected in 1752, and occupies an elevated situation at the top of Queen-street. In style it is somewhat similar to the two churches just described; and it contains monuments to the memory of the Rev. Thomas Spedding, the Rev. Richard Armitstead, and various members of the Dixon, Wood, Grundy, Brown, Harrison, Forster, Sarjeant, and Richardson families. This church, like that of St. Nicholas, received a grant of £800, and an augmentation from William Earl of Lonsdale. The living is a perpetual curacy, returned to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as of the annual value of £300. The Earl of Lonsdale is patron. Attached to this church there is an ecclesiastical district, which, by an order in council dated June 10th, 1835, was created a separate and independent parish for all ecclesiastical purposes. This new parish is bounded on the north by Moresby parish, on the north-west by the sea, on the south by Duke-street, and on the south-east by the turnpike-road to Hensingham, including part of that village. In 1851 the parish comprised 6,020 inhabitants, 2,757 of whom were males, and 3,263 females, inhabiting 1,241 houses, 17 being uninhabited, and 9 building.

INCUMBENTS.—Thomas Spedding, 1752; Richard Armitstead, 1783; William Jackson, 1821; John Jenkins, 1833; John Robinson, 1852; Charles Augustus Perring, 1855.

Christ Church, situate in Preston-street, is a neat structure in the Norman style, erected in 1847, at a cost of about £2,200, all raised by subscription, with the exception of £700 obtained from the Diocesan and Incorporated Societies. It will seat nearly 1,000 persons. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of England with £200 a year, and was in the alternate patronage of the queen and the bishop of the diocese, until the Earl of Lonsdale purchased the patronage in 1858. Attached to this church is an ecclesiastical district, formed by order in council, dated August 5th, 1845, and which, on the consecration of the church, in 1847, became a separate and independent parish for all ecclesiastical purposes. It is bounded on the north by Whitehaven township, on the west by the sea, on the south by the township of Sandwith and part of Preston Quarter, and on the east by the turnpike-road from Whitehaven to Hensingham. In 1851 this parish contained 3,969 inhabitants, of whom 1,933 were males, and 2,036 females, inhabiting 739 houses; ten being uninhabited, and four building. The Rev. John Rimmer is the first, and present incumbent.

St. Mary's (Catholic) is in Duke-street, and is a very poor building. It was erected about the year 1780, and enlarged in 1844.

St. Gregory's (Catholic) is situated at the south-eastern extremity of the town, on the road leading from Güns to Corkicle. It was built in 1834, on land given by the Earl of Lonsdale, who also contributed £100 towards the erection. It is a plain building, capable of accommodating about 650 persons. The enclosure contains a small burial ground, with presbytery or priests' residence. The Revs. T. M. Shepherd and J. B. Jolley are the present priests.

The Baptist (English) Chapel is situated in Charles-street. It was erected in 1754, but was rebuilt and enlarged in 1842, at a cost of £300, which was defrayed by subscription. It is a plain stone structure, with accommodation for 300 persons. This congregation was formed in 1751. There is a Sunday-school in connection with the chapel.

The Scotch Baptists have a chapel in Gore's Buildings.

The Independent Chapel, Duke-street, was built in 1793, and enlarged in 1838, at a cost of about £650. It will accommodate about 800 persons. This chapel originally belonged to Lady Huntingdon's Connexion. It has a good Sunday-school attached, which is numerously attended.

James's-street Presbyterian Church. About the latter end of the seventeenth century four or five families of Presbyterians from the north of Ireland settled in Whitehaven, and shortly afterwards received a grant of land from Sir John Lowther, lord of the manor, upon which they erected a church, in 1695. About sixty years afterwards, in consequence of the increased numbers of the congregation, the church was considerably enlarged, and a manse erected for the residence of the minister; the cost of this alteration being defrayed by a bequest from one of the congregation, named Hicks. In 1857 the church was again enlarged, beautified, and otherwise improved by the erection of a front in the Gothic style, at a cost of upwards of £800. The wood work in the interior is all stained, and there are several stained glass windows. The church will seat about 800 persons. The Rev. James Burns is the present minister.

The United Presbyterian Church is in High-street. It is a plain stone building, erected about the year 1760, and possesses accommodation for about 700 persons. The Rev. W. Drummond is the minister.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel, situated in Mill-street, was erected in 1859, at a cost of about £500, and will accommodate about 600 persons.

The Society of Friends have a meeting-house in Sandhill Lane. It was erected in 1727, and has a small burial ground attached, which ceased to be a place of sepulture under the Health of Towns Act, in 1855. The society have now a plot of ground specially set apart in the new cemetery. Prior to the erection of the present place of worship, the members of this religious body were principally engaged in agriculture, and their place of worship was at Crossfield, near Keeble Grove, about two miles distant from the town, where the site of the burial ground may still be observed.

The Wesleyan Association Chapel is situate in Catherine-street. It was built in 1836, the year after the secession, at a cost of £1,700, and is a neat structure, possessing accommodation for 1,000 persons. Behind the chapel there is a spacious building which serves as a Sunday-school. In 1858 the congregation of this chapel united themselves with the Methodist Reformers, who now bear the title of the United Methodist Free Church.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, in Michael-street, was rebuilt in 1818. It is galleried all round, and has sittings for 1,000 persons. The Sunday-school attached to this chapel was the first established in Whitehaven.

The Birdites, so called from their attachment to the doctrines and views put forward by the late Rev. George Bird, have a place of worship at the Guinea Warehouse.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Foremost among the schools of Whitehaven, in point of age, stands the Marine School. It was founded in 1817, by Matthew Piper, Esq., of Whitehaven, a member of the Society of Friends, who munificently endowed it with £2,000 navy five-per-cent. annuities, vested in the hands of fifteen trustees, "for the education of sixty poor boys resident in the town of Whitehaven, or the neighbourhood, in reading, writing, arithmetic, guaging, navigation, and book-keeping." In 1859 an additional bequest was made by the late Mrs. Benson of Sandwith, of £100, the interest to go towards the education of three additional scholars. The school, which is situated in High-street, was erected by the Earl of Lonsdale, and opened in 1822. Prior to being admitted, every boy must be able to read the New Testament, and be above eight years of age—none are allowed to remain more than five years. "Although the school is intended to convey such material instruction as shall qualify its pupils to act as mates and masters of vessels, they are not placed under any obligation to go to sea, as the name of the institution may be supposed to imply."

The National School occupies a large building at the top of Wellington Row, erected in 1824, and is a good stone building, of two stories high, and eighty-four feet long; the girls' school is held on the second floor. It was cemented and palisaded in front in 1835, by the late Mr. John Pennyfeather, at a cost of £150. In 1852 the late Rev. Andrew Huddleston, D.D., incumbent of St. Nicholas, left £1,000 invested in the harbour bonds at four per cent. towards the support of this school. It will accommodate 500 children. The number in attendance is 120 boys and 100 girls. St. James's Sunday-school is also held here.

St. Nicholas's Infant and Sunday-school, in Scotch-street, which was erected in 1846, at a cost of £930, is a neat building, possessing accommodation for 300 children. The average number in attendance is 240. It is under government inspection, and is conducted by one master, aided by four pupil-teachers.

The Refuge School, for children of both sexes, is situate in James-street. It was erected in 1852, and enlarged in 1859, upon a site granted by the Earl of Lonsdale, on a lease for ninety-nine years, at a cost of £1,200, defrayed by subscription, and will accommodate 400 children; the average number in attendance being 80 on weekdays, and 250 on Sundays. The school is in connexion with the Church of England.

The Dissenters have a Refuge Sunday-school, held for some time in the Temperance Hall, but now held in an adjoining room.

The Whitehaven Colliers' School for the education of the children of the workpeople employed in the coal mines of the Earl of Lonsdale, was commenced by his lordship in 1853, the old glasshouse in the Ginns being altered and made suitable for that purpose. There are rooms for boys and girls, capable of accommodating 500 pupils. The children pay a small charge weekly. The schools are conducted by a master and mistress, with assistants. The average attendance is about 300.

Holy Trinity National School, situated in Howgill street, was erected in 1852, the cost being defrayed by the money received from the railway company for the old schools, and a grant from the Committee of Council on education. The amount incurred in the erection, inclusive of teachers' residences, was £1,500. The schools are under government inspection, and are conducted by a master and mistress, with nine pupil teachers, five males and four females. The average attendance is, boys 214, girls 150.

St. Nicholas's Schools, in Scotch-street, were built in 1847, at a cost of £1,000, and form a substantial stone building, capable of accommodating 300 children; the average number in attendance is about 160.

The Catholic School, held in the chapel, Duke-street, is supported by subscription, and is attended by about 100 children. Efforts are being made to erect a new school.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

The Whitehaven and Westmoreland Infirmary occupies a large building in Howgill-street, and has a dispensary, and house of recovery, or fever hospital attached. A dispensary has existed in the town since 1783, and a house of recovery since 1819, but the Infirmary was only established in 1850, and the great benefit of such an invaluable institution has become more apparent every year. The building was enlarged in 1857, by the addition of new wards, erected by the late Baroness de Steinberg, at a cost of upwards of £6,000. The same benevolent lady paid £50 a year to a chaplain, and previous to her decease endowed the chaplaincy for ever. During the first thirteen years of its existence, the number of patients averaged between forty and fifty annually. In 1844 the number of patients admitted was 104. From the report for the year 1858 we learn that the number of out-patients who attended at the surgery was more numerous than that of the preceding year, whilst the patients attended at their own homes, though fewer than in the previous year, were above the average. The spring and summer months were unusually fatal to consumptive patients, although the town was at that time comparatively healthy. The diseases commonly so prevalent in autumn were less severe than usual. During the last two months of the year there was a great amount of sickness among children, especially infants. This may partly be attributed to the epidemics of scarlatina and measles which began to be prevalent about the end of September; and although the mortality from these diseases was slight, they left much weakness behind them, which predisposed children to numerous other complaints. A large proportion of infantile diseases occurred in the vicinity of the Market Place; in one street nearly every house had one or two inmates invalided, and the deaths were nearly one third of the number attended. This contrasts with what occurred in the higher part of the town, which suffered so much from the epidemic of small pox in 1857. The number of patients admitted into the wards was smaller than the year previous, owing to there having been few cases of fever. An ambulance was obtained in 1858, which will add much to the comfort of patients who have to be conveyed to the infirmary from a distance. The following are the number of in-patients admitted within the year 1858:—remaining on the books, December 31st, 1857, 11; since admitted, 86; total, 97. They are classified as follow:—accidents and operations, 26; other cases, 71; of whom 72 were cured, 1 relieved, 1 unrelieved, 9 died, and 11 remained on the books at the close of the year. The statistics of the out-patients are as follow:—remaining on the books, December 31st, 1857, 43, since admitted, 1,611; total, 1,654. The accidents and operations number 74; skin diseases, 61; measles, 56; scarlatina, 29; consumption, 22; other cases, 1,410; of whom 1,424 were cured, 18, relieved, 69 re-admitted, 65 dead, and 78 remain on the books. Of the above number, 600 were attended at their own homes. The dental report gives the number of teeth and stumps extracted at 664. The receipts for the year ending December 31st, 1858, amounted to £627 9s. 1d.; the expenditure for the same period, £549 13s. 9d.; balance in favour of the institution, £77 15s. 4d.

In 1815 the Earl of Lonsdale established an hospital in the Back Row for the benefit of those who met with accidents in his lordship's employment.

Besides the Infirmary, Whitehaven possesses the Ladies' Charity, which affords relief and assistance to married women in childbed, in their own houses, and to widows whose husbands have died during their pregnancy, resident in the town and suburbs. It was instituted in 1805. There are also a Ladies' Benevolent Society, for visiting and relieving the sick poor, formed in 1818; and a Blanket and Clothing Society, which not only supplies the poor with cheap clothing, but also enables them to deposit small sums, and to pay for articles of clothing by such instalments as they can conveniently spare. There is also a Soup Kitchen, in Queen-street, which furnishes the poor with nutritious soup in winter, pursuant to a bequest of the benevolent Matthew Piper, Esq., who left the interest of £1,000 for that purpose.

RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE SOCIETIES, &c.

The Copeland District Committee for the promotion of Christian Knowledge, was established in 1824, and is supported by the clergy and others of the Established Church in this deanery. The annual subscription is not less than one guinea, and the number of books distributed during the year 1858 was 230 Bibles, 140 Testaments, 350 Prayer-books, 5,060 miscellaneous books and tracts. The receipts for the same year amounted to £110. The depository is in Lowther-street.

The Independents have a branch of the London Missionary Tract Society, and there are missionary and other societies belonging to the Wesleys, Baptists, &c.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The Town Hall is a fine building, in Duke-street, now in the hands of trustees, and in its rear, in Scotch-street, is the police station. The petty sessions are now held in a new office, erected in 1859, behind the police station.

The County Court, situate in Sandhill Lane and Scotch-street, is a good substantial stone building, erected in 1857, at a cost of £2,000. It contains the public offices, registrars' offices, and court-room.

The Temperance Hall, rebuilt in 1857, is a neat building, with sitting accommodation for 500 persons.

The Lonsdale Hotel, one of the largest and finest buildings of the kind in the north of England, was erected in 1846-7. It is in the Lombardian style of architecture, and was built by the Earl of Lonsdale, at a great expense, from a design by, and under the superintendence of, Mr. Barnes, of London; Mr. Hugh Todhunter, of Whitehaven, being the builder. It covers an area of 6,000 superficial feet; is 100 feet in length, and sixty in width. There are about eighty rooms, including a spacious ball-room, a large public coffee-room, &c. It is situate at Bransty, contiguous to the Whitehaven Junction Railway Station, and is a great ornament to the town and harbour. This fine building is now (1859) closed, and it is rumoured that it is intended to convert it into a part of the intended new railway station, when it will serve as offices, &c.

NEWSPAPERS.

The press of Whitehaven comprises four newspapers, all weeklies. The Cumberland Packet, published every Tuesday, by Mr. Robert Foster, King-street, is the oldest newspaper in the county, having been established in 1774, by Mr. Ware, and is conservative in politics; its circulation is very extensive. The Whitehaven Herald, established in 1830, is published every Saturday, by Mr. William Smith, Lowther-street—it favours the whig or liberal policy. There are also two penny papers, published on Thursday, the Whitehaven Times, and the Whitehaven News. Two other weekly newspapers have been published here, viz., the Chronicle, which only lived for a short period, and the Gazette, which continued from 1819 to 1826, when it was purchased by the proprietor of the Packet.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTION, &c.

The Whitehaven Mechanics' Institution, situated in Lower Queen-street, was established in March, 1845. Its objects are "the diffusion of useful knowledge in general literature, the sciences, and the arts, by means of a library, a reading-room, and news-room, a museum, the delivery of lectures, discussions, and the reading of essays, &c., by the formation of classes for the study of any art and science, and such other means as the committee for the time being may deem expedient." The members are divided into honorary, who pay a subscription of 10s. each per annum; ordinary, paying 6s. per annum; females, paying 4s. per annum; juvenile, who, being under sixteen years of age, or apprentices, pay 4s., and subscribers to the news-room, who pay 4s. per annum. The institution is supported by the subscriptions of its members, the number of whom is now about 300. The library contains about 2,000 volumes, and is rapidly increasing. There are several elementary classes held during the winter season. The reading-room is well supplied with quarterly, monthly, and weekly periodicals, and the news-room with the various metropolitan and local papers. The institution is in connection with the Society of Arts, London.

The Whitehaven Christian Improvement Society was founded in 1858, and holds its meetings in the room above the Guinea Warehouse. It is instituted to promote the mental and religious improvement of young men, by means of readings in Scripture, discussions, conversations, essays, and lectures. The affairs of the society are managed by a president, vice-president, treasurer, and secretary, with a committee of ten members, the whole of the officers being elected by ballot. The number of members at present (1859) is sixty; the subscription, one shilling a year.

The Subscription Library was founded in 1797, and now occupies a handsome building, in Catharine-street, erected by the late Earl of Lonsdale. It comprises about 10,000 volumes, and has at present 132 members, subscribing one guinea each per annum. The entrance fee is one guinea.

The News Room, in the upper part of the public office, Lowther-street, is very elegantly fitted up and ornamented with paintings of William IV., her present Majesty, and the late Earl of Lonsdale. It is attended by subscribers of one guinea each per annum, and is well furnished with the various London and provincial papers, &c.

COURTS OF LAW, &c.

The sessions for the county were removed to Carlisle in 1858. Petty sessions are held here every Monday and Thursday. A Court Baron for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held monthly, under the lord of the manor. The County Court for the recovery of debts under £50 is also held here monthly. The police establishment consists of a superintendent, inspector, two sergeants, and twelve men, for the borough.

BANKS, MARKETS, FAIRS, &c.

There are three banks in the town, viz., the Bank of Whitehaven, the Whitehaven Joint Stock Bank, and a branch of the Carlisle Old Bank (J. M. Head & Co.) established in 1849. The first bank established in Whitehaven was opened in 1786, by Messrs. T. Hartley, M. Hartley, and S. Potter. Another was established in 1793, by Messrs. Moore, Hamilton, Harrison, Sergeant and Co.; another under the firm of Johnston, Adamson, and Co., suspended payment during the panic of 1825, and the commercial institutions now in the town are concentrated in the banks above-mentioned. There is also a Savings' Bank, which was established here in 1818, its deposits now amount to £79,537, belonging to 2,462 depositors, including charitable and friendly societies.

The markets are held on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, and are well supplied with all kinds of provisions, especially on Thursday, which is the principal market day. The Market Place, which is surrounded with well-stocked retail shops, is tolerably spacious, having been enlarged and rendered more commodious about a century ago, by throwing an arch over the Pow Beck, which runs under this part of the town. It now extends from King-street to Irish-street, and contains a neat market house, designed by Smirke, which is devoted to poultry, butter, eggs, &c. The Corn Market is held in Duke-street. Chapel-street divides the shambles into two parts, viz., the Low Market, extending to King-street, and George's Market, which leads to Church-street. The two butcher markets are private property; they have slaughter-houses attached. Formerly the harbour occupied that part of the town on which the buildings between Strand-street and Chapel-street now stand. The gut which separated them was filled up early in the last century. The stone bridge which crossed the Pow Beck, opposite the Golden Lion, was removed, and the stream covered over as at present. Fairs are held annually on the 12th of August.

The Whitehaven and West-Cumberland Benefit Land and Building Society was established in 1854, and it now numbers about 200 shares at £30 each.

RAILWAYS, GAS, WATERWORKS, &c.

Whitehaven is the centre of a railway system which connects it with the north and south of the county, and the other parts of England. These lines, which will be found fully described at page 66, are the Whitehaven and Furness, the Whitehaven Junction, and the Whitehaven, Cleator, and Egremont. The railway station, which is totally unworthy the wealth and importance of the town, is situate at Bransty, and it is hoped will, before long, give place to a better and more convenient structure. The Furness line had a station in Preston-street till 1856, when it was annexed to Bransty, by means of a tunnel from that station to Corkicle, the tunnel also serving as a means of communication between Bransty and the Whitehaven, Cleator, and Egremont line.

Until 1831 Whitehaven was lighted with oil lamps, but in the year just named gas works were erected at a cost of £8,000, raised by a company in £20 shares. These works are situated at Bransty, and comprise twenty-six retorts, which supply two gasometers, capable of containing 2,500 cubic feet of gas. A new gas-works was established in 1853, in the Preston Quarter, and the competition between the two companies has been of the greatest value to the public, who are supplied with gas at two shillings and two shillings sixpence per 1,000 feet.

The Whitehaven Water Works, situated in the Preston Quarter, between Hensingham and Whitehaven, and one mile from the latter place, were commenced in 1849, and finished in 1850, at a cost of £25,000. They are under the superintendence of the town trustees. The water is conveyed from Ennerdale Lake, a distance of eight miles, and has a fall of thirty feet per mile. There are filtering beds at Wath, from which place pipes, ten inches in diameter, convey it to the town. Hensingham is also supplied with water from the same source, by steam power attached to the works. The daily supply averages one million gallons.

While speaking of the water works we may advert to the baths and washhouses, in Newtown, erected by the Earl of Lonsdale, in 1858, for the use of his work-people; and though last not least in our estimation, the public drinking fountains, seven of which have been erected and opened in Whitehaven. The first of these in point of time is that in the Green Market, which was erected by the Loyal Lebanon Tent of the Order of Rechabites in Whitehaven, at a cost of about £10. It is a handsome upright of cast iron, painted dark green, the upper part being ornamented with a variety of griffin-like faces, from the open mouth of one of which flows a sparkling jet of mountain water fresh from Ennerdale. A white metal ladle of shell pattern hangs by a chain from each side. The fountain was opened May 12th, 1859, by Mrs. Bateman Wilson, in the presence of a numerous concourse of spectators.

On the West Strand is a convenient suite of cold, warm, and shower salt water baths, erected by the town and harbour trustees in 1814.

Whitehaven Cemetery is situated in Preston Quarter, and will be found noticed at page 492.

PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION.

Previous to 1832 Whitehaven was without a representative in the Imperial Parliament, but by the Reform Bill, passed in that year, it was invested with the privilege. The parliamentary borough of Whitehaven consists of the township of Whitehaven, and part of the township of Preston Quarter, containing 4,726 inhabitants. The population is 18,916; the number of electors being 535. We subjoin a list of the members of Parliament from 1832 to the present time:—1832-35, M. Attwood, Esq.; 1835-37, M. Attwood; 1837-41, M. Attwood; 1841-47, R. C. Hildyard; 1847-56, R. C. Hildyard; 1856-7, R. C. Hildyard; 1857, G. Lyall; 1859, G. Lyall.

POOR-LAW UNION.

The Whitehaven Poor-law Union embraces four sub-districts, viz., Harrington, including Harrington, Distington, Arlecdon, Lamplugh, Salter and Eskat, Ennerdale, Kinniside, Weddicar, Moresby, and Parton; Whitehaven, which includes the township of Whitehaven; St. Bees, comprising Hensingham, Preston Quarter, Sandwith, Rottington, Lowside Quarter, and St. Bees; and Egremont, containing Cleator, Egremont, Hale, St. John Beckermat, St. Bridget Beckermat, Ponsoby, Gosforth, and Nether Wasdale. The area of the union is 99,203 statute acres. Its population in 1851 was 35,014, of whom 17,108 were males, and 18,506 females. The number of inhabited houses at the same period was 6,743, of uninhabited 260, and there were 47 in course of erection. The total receipts of the union in the year 1858 amounted to £7,941 9s. 8s.; and the expenditure to £7,900 10s. 9d. Until 1855-6 there was no new workhouse erected in this union from the time of its formation, the old workhouses being considered sufficiently capacious. The new workhouse, situated in Preston Quarter, was erected in the years just named. It is a good substantial stone structure, possessing accommodation for 400 persons, and cost £8,140 inclusive of the site. It is considered the finest building of the kind in the north. The number of inmates at present (1859) is 260. There are two fever wards, one for males and the other for females.

CHARITIES.

Mrs. Gale's Charity.—Mrs. Elizabeth Gale, by will dated 30th February, 1735, left £200 to trustees on trust to place out the same, and pay the interest at Christmas yearly for the augmentation of the salary of the minister of the old chapel in Whitehaven, and his successors, provided that he and his successors should continually cause twelve poor children at least to be instructed to read English, and should yearly on Christmas Eve, within the said chapel, distribute 40s. to and amongst so many of the poor inhabitants of Whitehaven, as he and they should think meet; and the testatrix expressed her desire that the said £200 should be laid out in obtaining Queen Anne's bounty for the said chapel, the minister still being subject to the provision before-mentioned. At a vestry-meeting held in 1752, it was agreed that this bequest should be laid out in building on a vacant spot of ground near twelve yards square, behind the minister's house, and belonging to the said chapel, fronting Church-street, and that the income should be applied for the augmentation of the minister's salary, subject to the provisos in the will. It appears that an application had been made to obtain Queen Ann's bounty, but without effect. Some buildings were erected on the spot, which are now chiefly divided into small rooms, and if all were properly let, they might be worth seven guineas a year; but the present minister does not receive so much as two-thirds of that sum. The premises being occupied by poor persons, it is difficult to obtain any rent at all. It is not quite clear what buildings were erected with this bequest, and what were previously existing there. The minister distributes annually on the Epiphany 40s. to forty poor widows, and the same distribution appears to have been made regularly; but we do not find that any children have ever been instructed according to Mrs. Gale's will. This latter condition was not known to the minister till the enquiry of the Charity Commissioners took place; and it is clear that the bequest would be far from an augmentation to his salary if he were obliged to provide for the education of twelve children, which would not cost less than £12 a year. The bequest would be an injury to the minister on such terms; and if on failing to comply with the condition, he were called upon to give up the advantage of this donation, we do not see how the rent of buildings could be separated from the land belonging to the chapelry on which they are built. The mode in which this bequest was laid out, appears not to have been well considered, as these buildings may, very probably, be an injury rather than an advantage to the incumbent.

Mrs. Grace Towerson's Charity.—Mrs. Grace Towerson, by will dated 12th April, 1776, gave to the Rev. Wilfred Hudleston, and Henry Littledale, £100 in trust, that they and the survivor of them should place out the same on good security, and apply the interest yearly towards putting to school and educating such and so many poor children belonging to the town of Whitehaven as they should think proper; and the further sum of £100 upon trust, to pay the interest thereof yearly unto such and so many poor widows of the town of Whitehaven, as they should judge the most deserving. The amount of these bequests was paid to Mr. Hudleston, who then resided at Whitehaven. Mr. Littledale died many years ago, and the whole management rested with Mr. Hudleston, in whose hands the money remained. The sum of £4 has been distributed regularly on the 4th of June, as interest of £100, amongst poor widows of Whitehaven, in sums varying from 2s. 6d. to 10s. No money was for many years applied for putting boys to school, and £100 was added as arrears of interest for twenty years, to the principal sum of £100 in the trustees' hands for the purpose of putting boys to school. The sum of £200, together with the £100 before-mentioned, was subsequently laid out in the purchase of £358 4s. 2d. four-per-cent. stock, (£119 8s. for the poor widows, and £238 16s. 2d. for putting boys to school) and the charity is now carried out as directed by the testator.

Joseph Glaister's Charity.—Joseph Glaister, by will dated 22nd January, 1773, gave £5 yearly for ever, to be distributed every Christmas Eve to poor housekeepers in the town of Whitehaven, at the discretion of the minister and chapelwardens of Trinity Chapel for the time being; and he directed his trustees to vest in some of the public funds, or place out at interest in the harbour or turnpike of Whitehaven, in the name of the minister and chapelwardens of Trinity Chapel, as much as would be sufficient from the yearly interest or dividends to pay the said sum yearly to poor housekeepers in Whitehaven. By a codicil to his will, the testator directed that a ticket or instrument for £200, entitling the possessor to receive £4 10s. per cent from the trustees appointed by act of Parliament, for enlarging and preserving the Maryport harbour, should be appropriated as a fund to secure the payment of 50s. annually to poor housekeepers of Cockermouth, as mentioned in his will, and for the above charity of £5 a year for poor housekeepers of Whitehaven; and he directed that no less a sum than 5s. should be given to each poor housekeeper, and whatever yearly interest should accrue from the said ticket.

Mrs. Sewell's Charity.—Mrs. Susannah Sewell, by will dated 17th December, 1782, bequeathed to the Rev. James Sedgwick, then lately elected minister of Trinity Chapel, £200, upon trust to place the same out on good public or private security, and distribute the interest on St. Thomas's Day unto and amongst twenty poor families or single persons who should keep house, in such proportions as he should think suitable to their circumstances; and in case the said James Sedgwick should resign or be removed from the said chapel, the testatrix gave the same to the next succeeding minister and chapelwardens of the said chapel, and their successors, upon the same trusts. The sum received under this bequest was invested in 1786 in the purchase of £190 stock in the five-per-cents, in the names of the minister and chapelwardens. In 1810 it became necessary to have the stock transferred into the names of new trustees, by which an expense was incurred of £8 18s. 5d. The dividends arising from Mrs. Sewell's bequest, and the annual payment left by Mr. Glaister, are distributed together on St. Thomas's Day, by the minister and chapelwardens of Trinity Chapel. The money is divided amongst twenty poor persons. As Mrs. Sewell's donation is limited to twenty persons and Mr. Glaister's is directed to be given away in sums not less than 5s. to each person, it is thought advisable to adopt this mode of distribution. The trustees generally select widows for the objects of this charity, and it is their wish to give to those who do not receive parochial relief; but this is not strictly attended to.

AMUSEMENTS, CUSTOMS, &c.

The Theatre is a neat structure, in Roper-street, erected in 1769.

The Cricket-ground and Bowling-green, at the end of Howgill-street, covers an area of about six acres, and has been given for the purpose by the Earl of Lonsdale. It affords healthy recreation to the young gentry of the town, and is well supported by 160 members, who pay a yearly subscription of ten shillings each.

At Christmas the old custom of "mumming" is still kept up—the mummers going about among the country houses, and exhibiting their dramatic powers in the halls of kitchens. The very curious and simple kind of drama which they perform is of very ancient date, somewhat resembling the old Miracle Plays. On Christmas Eves the whole town seems alive and waking till near dawn—music of all kinds, merry-making and psalm-singing, and a constant crowd parading the streets, make the sleep of the soberer inhabitants a thing almost impossible. There is a superstition among the inhabitants of Whitehaven, concerning a very remarkable and unearthly noise, which until the last few years was often heard at night by them. It is called the "Newtown Bogle," (Bogle being a common word for some uneasy spirit) and is supposed to be some wicked and restless ghost; though the traditions of its origin are various and uncertain. The noise, however, is by no means a fiction, as, though it has not been heard for eight or ten years, it is distinctly vouched for by many persons as a wild and fearful scream, beginning in a low wail, and gradually rising to a higher pitch. The only practical solution of the mystery is, that it may have been caused by the escape of air from the numerous coal-workings with which the foundations of the town are honeycombed. Some such general source it would seem there must be for so widely-extended a result, though in this case, it is not known why it should now have ceased.

EMINENT MEN.

Among the eminent men connected with Whitehaven, we may mention the following:—

Bacon, Anthony, Esq., who was born in this town, and raised himself, after his thirtieth year, by his talents, from the position of a master mariner to the rank of one of the first merchants in London, and to a seat in the House of Commons during three successive parliaments.

Bacon, Thomas, author, who published in a large folio volume, "A Digest of the Laws of Maryland," a volume of sermons, and the "System of the Revenue in Ireland."

Brownrigg William, M.D., F.R.S., physician, who, while in practice in this town, fully investigated the nature of the exhalations which produced such extraordinary effects in the coal mines. He also applied himself to the study of mineral waters, and is said to have been the first to discover the nature of chalybeate springs. He died in 1800, aged eighty years.

Nutter, Henry, a celebrated portrait painter.

Dixon, J., Esq., M.D., physician, author of a "Life of Dr. Brownrigg," and a treatise on air, fevers, &c.

Spedding, James, Esq., well known for his philosophical attainments. He died in 1789.

Williamson, Rev. David, pastor of the United Secession Church in this town, author of "Lectures on Civil and Religious Liberty," political debates, and correspondence with the Rev. John Newton, of London.

Chambers, William, schoolmaster, author of several works on algebra, navigation, and kindred subjects.

The celebrated Dean Swift is said to have received the rudiments of his education in Whitehaven.

ST. BRIDGET BECKERMET PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Hale and St. John Beckermets, on the west by the Irish Sea, on the south-east by the river Calder, which separates it from Ponsonby, and on the east by the mountains of Copeland Forest. The soil on its western side is light and fertile, but towards the east it is cold and sterile. Freestone is found here: towards the eastern extremity of the parish are Cald Fell and Wasdale Fells, which afford pasturage to large flocks of sheep. The parish possesses no dependent townships.

The area of St. Bridget Beckermets is 5,025 acres, and its rateable value £3,496. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 490; in 1811, 469; in 1821, 545; in 1831, 574; in 1841, 630; and in 1851, 664; who are chiefly congregated in the villages of Beckermets and Calder Bridge, and the hamlets of Sella Park, or Sella Field, Prior Scales, Yotton Fews, and Scalderskew. Agriculture is the principal employment, and Whitehaven the market usually attended.

The manor of Great Beckermets, so called to distinguish it from that of Little Beckermets, in the adjoining parish of St. John, has never been severed from the demesne of the barony of Egremont, and in consequence is now held by General Wyndham. One estate, known as the Calder Lordship, belongs to the Earl of Lonsdale. The landowners in the parish are Captain Irwin, John Sharp, Esq., Edward Stanley, Esq., Thomas Brocklebank, Esq., Miles Ponsonby, Esq., Messrs. Isaac Bateman, Thompson and Snooks, Henry Gunson, George Jackson, Robert Sherwen, the executors of the late Jacob Benson, Isaac Powe, Charles Mossop, William Nicholson, Joseph Watson, Clement Mossop, Thomas Douglas, John Dalzell, John Dixon, Isaac Atkinson, Robert Bone, John Chester, Joseph Hartley, John Poole, Russell Atkinson, Mrs. Mary Shepherd, Mrs. Iredale, and Miss Hannah Brocklebank.

The village of Beckermets is partly in this parish and partly in that of St. John, 2½ miles south of Egremont.

Calder Bridge is a pleasant village four miles south-south-east of Egremont, on the high road, where the river Calder is crossed by a good bridge, and hence its name. For the convenience of tourists and others there are two good inns, one of which is on the south side of the Calder in Ponsonby Parish.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. Bridget, is situated in the village of Calder Bridge. It was erected in 1842, at the sole expense of Thomas Irwin, Esq., of Calder Abbey, and is a very neat cruciform structure, with a square tower, surmounted with pinnacles. The exterior of the church has a chaste and elegant appearance, as has also the interior; the communion table is of oak, beautifully carved, and there is an excellent organ. The church contains two monuments, one to the late Rev. Sharp Mossop, first minister of the new church, recently erected by the parishioners and his friends; the other to the memory of Joseph Tiffin Senhouse, Esq., and his eldest daughter, erected by Mrs. Irwin. The old church, which is now used only for interments, is situated about half-a-mile south-west of the village of Beckermets. On the south side of the churchyard is an interesting monument, consisting of the remains of an ancient cross of the Anglo-Saxon times. It is in its present state a cylindrical column, bevelled to a square near the top, and on one of the bevels may be traced an inscription in Runic characters, like all these early inscriptions in verse, and commemorating, as it has been read and translated by the Rev. Daniel H. Haigh, of Erdington,¹ Tuda, bishop of the Northumbrians, who perished in the terrible pestilence which ravaged the whole island in the year 664. The inscription mentions the pestilence, and is doubly valuable as identifying Beckermets as the site, hitherto unknown, of the early monastery of Pægnalech, where Bede says that Bishop Tuda was buried "honourably." There is nothing on record relative to the first foundation of the church of St. Bridget Beckermets, but, as we have seen, the ruined cross in its churchyard connects it with Anglo-Saxon times. It appears to have been appropriated to the abbey of Calder previous to 1202, and continued so till the time of the Dissolution, during the whole of which period this parish, and those of St. John and Arlecdon, were under the spiritual supervision of the community of the abbey. On the suppression of the monastic institutions, the parish fell into a state of great poverty, as the revenues of the church were not restored after being granted to the Flemings of Rydal. In the time of Bishop Bridgman, who held the see of Chester from 1619 to 1657, the parishes of St. Bridget and St. John paid synodals and procurations jointly, but, since that period, they have been exempt, "by reason of their poverty." From the time of the Dissolution till 1842 these two parishes were supplied by one curate, who officiated at each church alternately. John Fleming, Esq., gave the church of St. Bridget to Sir Jordan Crossland, Knt., on his marriage with his daughter, whose coheiresses sold it to Richard Patrickson, Esq. It subsequently became the property of the families of Todd and Gaitskell, and in 1840 was purchased by Thomas Irwin, Esq., of Calder Abbey, the present patron. The living is not mentioned in the King's Book, excepting as being appropriated to the Abbey of Calder. It was returned to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the annual value of £7. Henry Gaitskell is the impropriator of the tithes, except those belonging to the Calder Abbey estate. The Rev. John Hutchinson is the present incumbent.

"About a mile from Calder Bridge stand the ruins of Calder Abbey, the way to which is through the churchyard, and along the banks of the Calder, where again the most beautiful tricks of light are seen, with brown water and its white foam, red precipitous banks, and the greenest vegetation, with a wood crowning all. The scene is thoroughly monastic. There is no sound at noon-day besides the gushing water, but the woodman's axe, and the shock of a falling tree, or the whirr of the magpie, or the pipe of the thrush: but at night the rooks on their return to roost fill the air with their din. The ruins are presently seen, springing sheer from the greenest turf. Relics from the abbey are now placed beside the way; and the modern house appears at hand. The ruins should be approached from the front, so that the lofty pointed arches may best disclose the long perspective behind of grassy lawn and sombre woods. The abbey is built of the red sandstone of the neighbourhood, now sobered down by time into the richest and softest tint that the eye could desire. . . . The church was small, as the scanty remains show; and the monastery, which now looks like a continuation of the same building, could not have contained a numerous company. From the fragments of effigies preserved, it appears that some eminent persons were buried here; but who these knights and nobles were, there is no record that can tell,—carefully as these memorials were wrought to secure the immortality of this world. The eye is first fixed by the remains of the tower, from whose roofless summit dangles the ivy, and whose base is embossed by the small lilac blossoms of the antirrhinum; but at last the great charm is found in the aisle of clustered pillars. Almost the whole aisle is standing, still connected by the cornice and wall which supported the roof. The honeysuckle and ivy climb till they fall over on the other side. There is a sombre corner where the great ash grows over towards the tower, making a sort of tent in the recess. There are niches and damp cells in the conventual range. It is a small ruin, but thoroughly beautiful: and when the stranger looks and listens, as he stands in the green level between woods, he will feel how well the old monks knew how to choose their dwelling places, and what it must have been to the earnest and pious amongst these Cistercians to face their river bank, and to attune their thoughts to the unceasing music of the Calder flowing by. In the broad noon it is a fine thing to see the shadows flung, short and sharp, on the sward, and to catch the burnish of the ivy, and woo the shade of the avenue: and in the evening, it is charming to see how the last glow in the west brings out the projections and recesses of the ruins, and how the golden moon hangs over the eastern mass of tree tops, ready to take her turn in disclosing the beauties of the monastic retreat." Such is the description given of Calder Abbey by the gifted Harriet Martineau, and we may now add such an account of its rise and fall as we have been able to glean from the records of the past and from the works of those who have preceded us. Calder Abbey was founded about the year 1134, by the second Ranulph de Meschines, for monks of the Cistercian order, but it is said not to have been finished till the time of Thomas de Multon, one of its benefactors. Its church, like all other Cistercian churches in ancient and modern times, was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. It was a filiation from the abbey of Furness. West, in his history of that abbey, gives the following account of the settling of the new community at Calder. He tells us that "Gerold, abbot of Calder, having been detached from the abbey of Furness, anno 35th Henry I. (1134-5), with twelve monks, to found the abbey of Caldre in Coupland, in the county of Cumberland, which, as has been observed, they had by the gift of William, nephew to David King of Scots, and where they remained four years, when David, making an inroad into those parts, Gerold, with his brethren, returned to the mother monastery in Furness. This happened about the 3rd of King Stephen. The abbot of Furness refused to receive Gerold and his companions, reproaching them with cowardice for abandoning the monastery, and alleging that it was rather the love of that ease and plenty which they expected in Furness than the devastation of the Scottish army, that forced them from Caldre. Some writers say that the abbot of Furness insisted that Gerold should divest himself of his authority, and absolved the monks from their obedience to him as a condition of their receiving any relief, or being again admitted into their old monastery. This Gerold and his companions refused to do, and turning their faces from Furness, they, with the remains of their broken fortune, which consisted of little more than some clothes and a few books, with one cart and eight oxen, taking Providence for their guide, went in search of better hospitality. The result of their next day's resolution was to address themselves to Thurstan, archbishop of York, and beg his advice and relief. The reception they met with from him answered their wishes; the archbishop graciously received them, and charitably entertained them some time, then recommended them to Gundrede de Aubigny, who sent them to Robert de Alneto, her brother, a hermit, at Hode, where she supplied them with necessaries for some time. Gerold afterwards went to Salo, abbot of Savigni, who received his dependance on that house, anno 1142; but dying at York on his return, Roger, one of his companions in Caldre, succeeded him in his abbacy. The abbot of Furness, understanding that Gerold had obtained a settlement at Hode, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, sent another colony, with Hardred, a Furness monk, for their abbot, to settle at Caldre. After Roger had quitted Hode, and obtained a seat at Byland, Hardred, abbot of Caldre, challenged a jurisdiction over his house at Byland, in right of filiation, as belonging to the abbey of Caldre, from whence they had departed; but after some altercation, Hardred renounced all right to Roger. The abbot of Furness still claiming a subjection from Roger and his monks, the question was at last submitted to a reference, of which Aldred, abbot of Reival, was umpire; when, in presence of several abbots and monks of different monasteries, judgment was given against the abbot of Furness." From a charter of confirmation granted to the abbey by Henry II., we learn that it possessed the following previous to that confirmation: "By the gift of Ranulph de Meschines, the ground on which the abbey stood, and Bemerton and Holgate with the appurtenances, one house in Egremont, two salt works of Whithane, a fishing in Derwent, another in Egre, pasture for the cattle in the forest of the said Ranulph as much as required, necessaries for their salt works and fisheries and building of their houses, and liberty for their hogs without pannage. By the gift of John, son of Ada and Matthew his brother, all the land of Stavenage with the appurtenances. By the gift of Robert Bonekill, one carucate of land in Lesser Gilcrux, and twelve acres one perch more in the same; and one acre of meadow between the Greater and Lesser Gilcrux, and pasture for twenty oxen, twelve cows, and six mares, with their young of one year. By the gift of Roger, son of William, lands in Ikelinton and Brackampton, and part of the mill of Brackampton. By the gift of Richard de Lucy, one moiety of the mill of Ikelinton, with all things thereunto appertaining. By the gift of Beatrix de Mollé, five bovates of land in Lesser Gilcrux, and a fourth part of the mill of Greater Gilcrux. By the gift of Thomas, son of Gospatrick, a toft in Worlington, and twenty salmon yearly at the feast of St. John the Baptist, and one net in Derwent between the bridge and the sea. By the gift of Thomas de Multon, a moiety of the vill of Dereham, with the advowson of the church there." In 1242 Sir John le Fleming, Knt., of Beckermert, gave lauds in Great Beckermert to this abbey, and in the year 1262 the churches of St. John Baptist, Beckermert, and St. Michael, Arleedon, were appropriated to the same institution. Besides the benefactors to the abbey mentioned above we have the following:—William de Esseyby and Hectrat his wife gave Beckermert and its appurtenances; Richard de Boisville gave nine acres in his part of Caldretun, with common of pasture and other appurtenances; John de Hudleston gave pasture for four horses and six cows, and their calves of one year old, and for forty sheep and their lambs until one year old, in the common pasture of Millom, on condition of the community not keeping a greater quantity of cows, horses, or sheep as appendages to their salt pans there, saving to the monks there the other privileges granted to them in the charters of his ancestors, and further granting to them that their place for carrying on their salt works at Sandslof should contain two acres, and that they might turn the Rattanpul in such manner that it should do no injury to their said works. In 1291 John, son of John de Hudleston, assigned to the abbot and monks of Calder, William, son of Richard of Loftscates, with all his retinue and chattels, "so that from this time they may be free, and exempt from all state servitude and reproach of villeinage" from the grantor or his heirs. From this period till the time of Henry VIII. we have nothing recorded of Calder Abbey. In the King's Book, compiled by order of that monarch, we find the possessions of the abbey described as worth £50 9s. 3d. It is very probable that Calder Abbey was dissolved in 1536, when Henry VIII. suppressed about 380 of the lesser monastic institutions. The revenues of the abbey were valued by Dugdale at £50 9s. 3d., and by Speed at £64 3s. 9d. By letters patent bearing date July 26th, 1538, the king granted to "Thomas Leigh, L.L.D., and his heirs, the demesne and site of the late abbey or manor of Calder, and the church, steeple, and churchyard thereof, and all messuages, lands, tenements, houses, buildings, barns, dove-cotes, gardens, orchards, waters, ponds, mills, ground and soil, as well within as nigh unto the site and precinct of the said monastery; as also all lands, tenements, granges, meadows, pastures, woods, common of pasture, with divers enclosures by name, containing in the whole 217 acres, at Calder aforesaid (with divers granges elsewhere) of the clear yearly value of £13 10s. 4d., to hold of the king in capite by the tenth part of one knight's fee and the rent of £27 0s. 1d. in the name of tenths, to be paid into the court of augmentations." Sir Ferdinand Leigh, grandson of the Dr. Leigh, to whom the grant of Calder was made by Henry VIII. sold the property to Sir Richard Fletcher, Knt., of Hutton, who gave it in marriage with his eldest daughter, Bridget, to John, second son of Thomas Patrickson, Esq., of Castlehow. His son sold it to Mr. Tiffin of Cockermouth, by whom it was given to his grandson, John Senhouse, Esq. On the marriage of Mary, eldest daughter of Joseph Tiffin Senhouse, Esq., with Thomas Irwin, Esq., she brought the estate to that gentleman, who is now the proprietor of Calder Abbey, where he resides, a modern mansion having been erected on the south side of the ruins.

¹ In a paper on "The Saxon Cross at Bewcastle," published in the transactions of the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Twinn of Justustown and Calder Abbey.

Thomas Irwin, Esq., of Justustown, and in right of his wife, of Calder Abbey, J.P., high sheriff, 1836, born 19th Nov., 1789, married 16th April, 1823, Mary, only daughter and heiress of the late Joseph Senhouse, Esq., of Calder Abbey, who died 15th March, 1803. Mr. Irwin is a captain on half pay of the Enniskillen Dragoons. He is son of the late Thomas Irwin, Esq., of Justustown (who married in 1788, Jane, second daughter of John Senhouse, Esq., of Calder Abbey, and died 3rd January, 1832), and grandson of Thomas Irwin, Esq., of Mossie and Justustown. Captain Thomas Irwin has had two brothers and three sisters, viz., John, lieutenant E. I. Co.'s service, died 21st September, 1824; Joseph, lieutenant R. N., married Emily Dillon (of an Irish family); Jane; Mary, wife of W. N. Hodgson, Esq., of Carlisle; and Sarah, wife of T. A. Hoskins, Esq., of Higham, near Cockermouth.

Arms.—Arg., three holly leaves, ppr.

Crest.—A dove holding an olive branch in its beak.

Motto.—Hand ullis labantia ventis.

Sella Park, an ancient retired mansion, situated one mile and a half from the mouth of the Calder, was formerly the property of the community of Calder Abbey, who had a deer park here. On the suppression of the monastic institutions, Sella Park was granted to Sir Henry Curwen, Knt., of Workington, whose grandson, Darcy Curwen, built the present mansion, which has however fallen from its high estate, and now serves as a farm-house. Having been purchased from the Curwens by the Stanleys of Ponsonby, it is now the property of Edward Stanley, Esq.

Sella Field Hamlet is near the sea. Sella Field Tarn is a small sheet of water between the Ehen and Calder. Prior Scales are two farms and a few houses, about a mile above the abbey, opposite the mountain called Cald Fell, near to which rise the "Haycocks" and Great Gowder Crag.

Situated near Beckermeth village, in this parish, is a forge for the manufacture of spades; there is also a saw-mill close to the forge; both are driven by water power.

ST. JOHN BECKERMET.

St. John's parish is bounded by the parishes of St. Bridget, St. Bees, Hale, and Egremont. The inhabitants are principally engaged in agriculture, and bacon curing is extensively carried on in the village of Beckermert. This parish contains the south-eastern suburbs of the town of Egremont and a part of the village of Beckermert, as divided by the Kirk Beck.

The area of the parish is 2,752 acres, and its rateable value £2,350. The population in 1801 was 328; in 1811, 391; in 1821, 549; in 1831, 397; in 1841, 468; and in 1851, 541.

The manor of Little Beckermert has for many ages been in the possession of the Flemings of Rydal, in Westmoreland, who, as mesne lords between the barons of Egremont and the possessors and land tenants of Rotington, Frisington, Arlecdon, and Weddicar, did hold them as fees of Beckermert, and itself as demesne of the baron of Egremont barony. An inquisition taken in 1578 informs us that William Fleming at that time held the hamlet of Little Beckermert by homage, fealty, and suit of court from three weeks to three weeks, and by the ninth part of a knight's fee, and paid yearly for cornage 11d., and for seawake and serjeant's food 2s. 5d., in all 3s. 4d. The manorial rights and privileges are now held by Lady Le Fleming. The landowners are W. Hartley, Esq., Henry Gaitskell, Esq., and some smaller owners.

The village of Beckermert is situated at the junction of the Black Beck and Kirk Beck, two and a half miles south of Egremont. The name of this village, formerly Beckermot, is a pure Scandinavian name, signifying "the meeting of the becks," and is derived from its situation. An old Cumbrian saying in connection with this place, "Let us gang together like lads of Drigg and lasses of Beckermert," is explained by a tradition referring to the manner in which the Danish city of Barnscar, near the foot of Devoke Water, was peopled. This was accomplished by taking the men of Drigg and marrying them to the women of Beckermert, whose original husbands had been slain in battle.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ivy-covered edifice, occupying a delightful situation on the side of a hill, near the Kirk Beck, and near the junction of the parishes of Hale, St. John, and St. Bridget. It consists of nave, chancel, and west porch, over which is a bell turret containing two bells. The entrance to the porch is by a pointed arch, preserved from the old church, enriched by a triangular canopy, ornamented with crockets. The cross which ornaments the east end of the chancel is also a relic of the old church. The present structure was erected in 1610. It contains mural monuments to members of the Richardson, Todd, and Birley families. A gravestone, with a cross and sword in good preservation, but with no inscription, is built into the north wall of the porch. The church of St. John was given by the Flemings to the abbey of St. Mary, at Calder, and in the year 1262 it was totally appropriated to that house, and the community performed all the duties appertaining to the cure of souls in the parish till the period of the Dissolution, when St. John's parish suffered the fate of so many others in England, and was left in a state of poverty and without anyone to minister to the spiritual wants of the inhabitants.¹ In the year 1702 a curate was nominated to the two parishes of St. John and St. Bridget, by Richard Patrickson, Esq. In 1767 Henry Todd, Esq., was the impropiator; and in 1828 the curacy was in the impropiation and patronage of the Rev. Henry John Todd, rector of Settrington, Yorkshire. It was shortly afterwards sold to Henry Gaitskell, Esq., the present impropiator and patron. The living was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £7 per annum; it is now worth £57. The Rev. John Hutchinson is the present incumbent.

The parochial school is situated near the village of Beckermert, but in the parish of St. Bridget. It was rebuilt in 1858 at a cost of about £120, raised by subscription, the material required for the erection of the building being carted free of charge by the farmers of the parish. It is a neat stone building, capable of accommodating 100 children, and has an average attendance of thirty.

CHARITIES.

John Richardson's Charity.—John Richardson, by a codicil to his will dated 4th October, 1808, directed his wife, whom he appointed his executrix, out of his personal estate to lay out £100 at interest, either in the public funds or in good real or personal security, the interest thereof to be applied annually on Easter Sunday amongst such poor persons, inhabitants of the parish of St. John's, as should not receive any relief from the poor rates of the said parish, in such proportions as his wife should think fit during her life, and after her death to be divided by her executors or administrators together with the minister of the parish of St. John's, as they should think fit, amongst such poor persons.

¹ See St. Bridget Beckermert, as the same remarks are applicable to both parishes.

Mrs. Barley's Charity.—Mrs. Jane Barley, who had been left a widow by the above Mr. Richardson, left by will, in 1833, the interest of £50 to be distributed annually on Easter day, to the poor of the parish who did not receive parochial relief.

Wotobank, or Wodowbank, near the village of Beckermet, and about a mile south of Egremont, is the seat and property of William Hartley, Esq. It bears the name of Wotobank from the hill upon which it stands. The derivation of the name is assigned by tradition to the following incident. A lord of Beckermet, with his lady and servants, were one day hunting wolves. During the chase the lady was discovered to be missing.

After a long and painful search her body was found on this hill or bank, slain by a wolf, which was discovered in the very act of tearing it to pieces. In the first transports of his grief, the husband exclaimed, "Wo to this bank!"

"Wo to this bank! the attendants echoed round,
And pitying shepherds caught the grief-fringed sound:
Thus, to this hour, through ev'ry changing age,
Through ev'ry year's still ever-varying stage,
The name remains; and Wotobank is seen
From ev'ry mountain bleak, and valley green—
Dim Skiddaw views it from its monstrous height,
And eagles mark it in their dizzy flight."¹

Yeorton Hall, three miles south of Egremont, is the seat and property of Henry Gaitskell, Esq.

Situated near Egremont, in this parish, is Brisco Corn Mill.

¹ Mrs. Cowley's "Edwina," in Hutchinson's Cumberland, vol. ii., p. 15.

SALTER AND ESKATT EXTRA-PAROCIAL PLACE.

SALTER and ESKATT is an extra-parochial place, situated about eight miles east-by-south of Whitehaven.

The demesne of Salter was given by Gospatric, son of Orme, son of Ketel, to the abbey of St. Mary, at York, and was subsequently consigned to the priory of St. Bees. After the suppression of the monastic institutions it was purchased by Dr. Leigh, and sold by his grandson to the Salkelds of White Hall, from whom it passed to the families of Patrickson, Robertson, and Fryer, and is now the property of Mrs. Margaret Dickinson. The area is 490 statute acres. The population in 1821 was 37; in 1831, 42; in 1841, 40; and in 1851, 35.

Salter Hall is one of the oldest houses in this part of the county, having been built by Thomas Salkeld in 1583, as appears from an inscription over the kitchen door. There is here a very ancient staircase of carved oak. Unlike most old houses, Salter Hall is both commodious and comfortable.

WORKINGTON PARISH.

The parish of Workington is bounded on the north by the river Derwent, which separates it from Camerton, on the west by the Irish Sea, on the south by Harrington, and on the east by the river Marron, which divides it from the parishes of Dean and Brigham. A tract of light sandy soil extends along the coast, but towards the eastern part of the parish the soil in some places consists of a fertile loam, and in others is inclined to moss. The Whitehaven, Maryport, and Carlisle railway, and the Cockermouth and Workington railway, run through the parish. The inhabitants attend the markets at Workington, Cockermouth, Whitehaven, and Maryport. Workington parish comprises the townships of Workington, Great Clifton, Little Clifton, Stainburn, and Winscales, whose united area is 8,310 statute acres.

WORKINGTON.

Workington township comprises an area of 2,819 acres, and its rateable value is £15,412 15s. Its population in 1801 was 5,716; in 1811, 5,807; in passed in 1809, when allotments were made to the rector and the lord of the manor.

1821, 6,124; in 1831, 6,415; in 1841, 6,015; and in 1851, 6,280;—who are principally congregated in the town of Workington. The township has been enclosed, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Parliament

A Roman road, connecting the station at Moresby, near Whitehaven, with that at Ellenborough, near Maryport, is supposed to have gone through this township. Its course here would be along the Old Ford, over the Cloffocks, by Borough Walls Hill, where traces of a Roman camp or station still exist; thence along by Siddick, or Sea Dyke, past Flimby, to Maryport. On the north side of Workington is a Roman camp or station, called Borough or Burrow Walls, which appears to have been overlooked by all historians. That it has been a station of some importance, is proved by the foundations met with recently, and which have been traced over an area of at least twenty acres of ground. It would seem that no remains were found previous to 1852. In that year the workpeople employed by Mr. Jackson, of Seaton Mill, near Workington, whilst engaged in digging about the foundations of the present walls, for the purpose of draining the land around, met with several Roman altars, in a very dilapidated state. One of the most perfect of them Mr. Jackson has kept, and it may be seen in his garden at Seaton Mill. It has upon one side what appears to be a priest in his vestments, with a rod or staff of office in his right hand, whilst in his left hand he holds what appears to be a small vessel for burning incense. On the reverse side is a female figure, also holding a staff in her right hand; she has something in her left hand, but what it is cannot be made out. Probably she is meant to represent Victory. This altar was discovered close to the foundation of what appears to have been the main entrance to the station. Besides the Roman altars found, there were several pieces of earthenware, or Roman pottery, discovered; as also quantities of hand millstones, for grinding corn, and some tablets, one of which (in the possession of Mr. Jackson, of Seaton Mill), has the following letters inscribed on it, S L A N. Some human skeletons were also dug up, which, on being exposed to the air, crumbled to dust. The skeletons were found on the breast of the hill, close to the foundation of the west wall, where there was also found a quantity of very large rams' horns, broken, and teeth and bones of various animals, as if they had been thrown in a heap and buried.

In a niche in an old building erected in 1703, at Cross Hill, Workington, is a small equilateral cross, said to have been taken out of a chapel erected there in the reign of King Richard I., by some one who went out with the king. Parties formerly, when bringing their dead to bury from the country, used to rest the bier, &c., at this spot, and a homily was read over the corse before proceeding into the town. The market was also held here about 130 years ago.

In the fields between Workington and Harrington, about a mile from the former town, is an ancient roofless building, generally known as the Old Chapel, and called by mariners How Michael. Pennant mentions having noticed on an eminence near the sea a small tower called the Holme Chapel, said to have been built as a watch tower, to mark the motions of the Scots in their naval inroads; "but it is much more probable that it has been, as its name imports, the chantry chapel which was granted (with some land) by Queen Elizabeth, in the 17th year of her reign, to Percival Gunson and John Sowkey, and described as "three acres of land called Chapel Flatt, in Workington; and also one chapel, together with one acre of land there." There is a tradition that the sea formerly flowed round this building. The masonry is rude; the ground floor is arched; and a narrow winding staircase, sufficient only for the passage of one person, leads to the upper floor. The windows are narrow loopholes, excepting two on the land side, which are of larger dimensions, but destitute of all ornament. The building is useful to mariners as a land mark; and is kept regularly whitewashed. The hill top upon which it stands is ninety feet above the level of the sea.

Within a mile of the town, and in the township of Workington, is the Schoose, a very ancient farm-house where the proprietor, Henry Curwen, Esq., about forty or fifty years ago held an annual agricultural show. The farm now comprises about 1,000 acres; but was at that time considerably larger.

The only hill in this parish worth noticing is Chapel Bank Hill. Roman, or Roman Bog Well, on Clifton Moor, is a mineral spring strongly impregnated with iron. The Friars', or Friar's Well, is a spring of remarkably pure water issuing out of the Workington Hall grounds, underneath the Hall Brow.

The bridge over the Derwent, which was nearly opposite Workington Hall, was, according to Mr. T. Denton, rebuilt by the county in 1650. This bridge was replaced in 1763 by one of three arches, but so exceedingly narrow and dangerous, that, after having been the source of numerous accidents, was at length superseded by the new one adjoining the soapery. Workington, built by Mr. Thomas Nelson of Carlisle, in 1841, and considered one of the finest pieces of masonry in this part of the county. In the centre of the bridge is a stone with the following inscription: "Workington Bridge, built A.D. 1841; Thomas Milton, civil engineer; Thomas Nelson, builder."

There are two corn-mills, Workington Hall Mill and Seaton Mill, and a marble works mill.

The manors of Workington and Lamplugh were given by William de Lancaster, in exchange for Middleton, in Westmoreland, to Gospatric, son of Orme, brother-in-law of Waltheof, lord of Allerdale. Thomas, son of Waltheof, having a grant of the great lordship of Culwen, in Galloway, his posterity assumed the name of De Culwen, subsequently changed to Curwen, and continued to hold the manor of Workington until almost our own times. By an inquisition taken in the 34th Henry VIII. (1542-3), it was found that, at that date, Sir Thomas Curwen, Knt., held the manor of Workington of the king by knight's service, as of his castle of Egremont by the service of one knight's fee, 45s. 2d. cornage, seawake, and puture of two sergeants. In 1578 another inquisition was taken, and we are told that Sir Henry Curwen, Knt., held the manor by homage, fealty, and suit of court, and by knight's service, and by the rent of 45s. 3d. cornage, 4s. seawake, and 1s. 8d. for serjeant's food and fee farm. Up to the year 1666 the manor had been entailed by various owners. In that year, Thomas Curwen and Eldred, his half-brother, joined in a fine and a recovery, and by deed enrolled declared the uses to Thomas for life, his issue in tail male; to Eldred for life; to Patricius, Eldred's son, for life, and his issue in tail male; to Henry, Eldred's second son, for life, and his issue in tail male; to the other sons of Eldred in tail male; to the use of Darcy Curwen, of Sella Park, for life, and his issue in tail male; remainder to two brothers of Darcy; and an ultimate remainder to the right heirs of Thomas for ever. This settlement remained in force until 1725. Thomas died without children in 1672. Eldred, his half-brother, succeeded to the estate, and died in 1673. Patricius, Eldred's first son, died in 1669; and Henry, the second son, succeeded to the manor and estates, which he enjoyed for upwards of fifty years, till his death, on the 25th of May, 1725, unmarried, and without issue. This Henry Curwen is remembered as "Henry the Horse Courser," or "Galloping Harry," having been in his time a renowned patron of the turf. By virtue of the settlement in 1666, the manor on the death of Henry the Horse Courser, reverted to another branch of the family, viz., the children of Darcy Curwen of Sella Park, who was himself then dead, and Henry Curwen was his eldest surviving son. He entered upon the manor, and in Hilary Term, 1725, suffered a recovery declaring the uses to himself in fee. He died in London on the 12th July, 1727, and was buried at the parish church of St. Swithin there on the 19th of the same month, and dying without issue was succeeded by his only brother and heir-at-law Eldred Curwen. Eldred Curwen, Esq., died in 1745, and was succeeded by his only son Henry, who died in 1778, leaving an only daughter, Isabella, to whom he devised the manor in strict settlement. Miss Isabella Curwen, in 1782, married her cousin, John Christian, Esq., of Unerigg Hall, in Cumberland, and Henry Curwen, Esq., of Workington Hall is the eldest son of the marriage, and lord of the manor, which is extensive, with the townships of Workington and Winscales, and also comprises certain lands at Clifton, known by the designation of Clifton in Priestgate. These lands have all been enfranchised by the Curwen family, reserving the royalties, except one estate, called Crossbarrow, the property of the Earl of Lonsdale, which is still a customary estate of inheritance parcel of the manor. All the lords of the manor in succession have been interred at Workington, except Henry Curwen, Esq., who died in 1727.

The customs of the manor of Workington, regulating the tenure of lands therein, are for the most part similar to other customary tenures in the county of Cumberland as distinguished from copyhold, which is a tenure of a very different character. The manor contains two divisions, Uppergate and Priestgate. In Uppergate the tenants pay a fine of 20 years' rent on death of lord and tenant, and 30 years' rent on alienation. In Priestgate the lord is said never to die, fines being payable only on death of tenant and alienation. A tenant in Priestgate dying intestate, his widow is entitled during her widowhood to a moiety of the estate. If a tenant of the manor mortgages his estate the lord is entitled to a licence fee of one shilling in the pound on the amount of the mortgage money and the alienation fine in such cases is usually respited. The course of descent of customary lands in the manor of Workington is regulated by the common law except in the case of females, for it is said they take in a succession similar to the crown of England, the eldest being preferred first, so if a tenant die leaving daughters, sisters, or nieces only, the eldest daughter, sister, or niece is his customary heir. The lord is entitled to work all mines and minerals under the customary lands, and the trees, woods, and underwoods belong to him, except what may be lawfully required for repairing the tenements. The lord by his steward holds a general court baron once in five years, but a special court can be held before the steward at any time to suit the convenience of tenants requiring to transfer their property. The court rolls extend no further back than 1725, the period of the death of Henry the Horse Courser, and the accession of the Sella Park branch of the family. Henry the Horse Courser was on bad terms with his successor, and having alienated the manors of Seaton and Stainburn from the family possessions, it is believed the earliest court rolls of the manor of Workington went into the hands of Charles Pelham, Esq., of Bracklesby in the county of Lincoln to whom the manors of Seaton and Stainburn were devised.

We subjoin the boundaries of the lordship of Workington, kindly contributed by C. Litt, Esq., of Stainburn House:—"Whoso will ryde or goe the boundary that divides Coupland and Allerdale and the towns and Coupland, shall have knowledge in the bukes as the meres were sett and bounded in old tyme in the king's bukes. First, for dividing of Coupland and Allerdale ye shall begin at Kyblan Stone, the foot of Derwent, nere the grand eb, and so from the said stone to a dub called the Patturde in the same water, and so by the mid stream under the kirk of Workington by the south side of Fyt Clough to Hearn Dub under Stainburn, and then over the water to the end of the mere dyke at the Alyne Fytt, and so by the said dyke to the ege of Fimdar Banks, and so lineally to the mere stone on Sunny Banks, and then descending to the great mere stone to the foot of Scalesgill Beck at the henyng brige, and at that place begins the boundary of the six towns and Coupland, and so you sall goe up the said Scalebeck to the head of Scale Gill at the foot of Crakbeck, and then ascending upwards up the mere dike by the north side of Water of Skewes called the Ox Close, and so lineally up the mere dyke by the north side of Laynebarrow Mere or to Gilderscow Beck, and then ascending up the mere dyke of Gilderscow to Custes Stone, and so descending lineally by Bigrigge Dyke on to Pystbeck Stone, and then turning northwards by the mere stane lying on the west side of Cranberry Moss, and so then eastward by the said moss to the mere stane on Calyl Bank; the whilk mere stane has en^d bene called a pall mere betwixt Coupland and the six townes, and so fro the said stone going south-east to the great mere stone, digging in the corner of Stargill Close, and so fro the said mere stone turning south and be este lineally to the blak mere stone at the east side of the ajanke wa by the stanges, and then up the east side of Cozenhow Bek to the old mere stane sett to the south side of Lucy Close, and so up the beck to the foot of the marras of Withmire at the north side, and then going on the south-east side of the said Withmire, allway by the marras of the hard land deptyts and merys sett them on in to Gilgarron Bek, and then up the bek for the six townes, and down Gilgarron Beck for dividing of lordships of Workington and Distington and Harrington, and then descending by the mid-stream from the south end of the said morass to the south side of the old dike above the mill of Distington, and so then ascending and descending by the said dike up to the head of Harrington Baughsyke at the foot of Hornhow Gyll, and then descending westward the said syke to the gate side of Harrington ege, and so ascending lineally up Harrington ege to haynyng rayse, and then descending by the said rayse by the dike of Dykesthow Gill by the mere dyke called Chwane Dyke on to Ellerbeck, and so descending by the said mid-streame of Ellerbeck to the north side of the psen close of Harrington, and so from the corner of the said close descending to the great mere stone at the east end of dowff Scarth at the whilk stane, the Kirkland denydys fro Weddry^ofs and lavay flats to the old mere stanes en sett, and so under the said dowff Scarth to the aabel land of ynp garthes, and so then turning south-eastward unto the old water rase towards the mill-dam's head and then going north-west to Horrow."

The boundary betwixt Workington and Stainburn "begins at Hearn, and so on by the high side of Millfitt to Huming Beck, thence up the beck to the Scows, and thence up the hedge betwixt the Scows and Stainburn Fields, and so by the hedge betwixt the lord's ground and Stainburn to the foot of Gilderskugh, thence up by the hedge to cut stone in the Flatts Dyke, thence to the head of Bunnbank Gill, and from thence to the heap or ruckol of stones on Brackenbarrow—1705."

The boundary of Stainburn "begins at the north end of the town to the stakes of Cammerton Mill, from thence ascending in a direct line towards the south through the middle of the Stortie Rayne by the ancient ditch called the Byorlathe, and from thence by the north part of the ditch of Stainburn hills, and so from thence in a straight line by the old ditch to the west end of Hest Gill, and so ascending to a stone upon Brown Bank, from thence towards the south to a great stone upon Brackenbarrow, and from Brackenbarrow to Armat Gill, otherwise Swinstry Gill, and so rising by the bottom of Lostrigg to Trindells of Rothmer, and so by Trindells of Rothmer to a great stone called Moredimple, on the south side of Stargill, and so rising up to Monkwith, and so from Monkwith descending to Haithkeld, and from Haithkeld to a stone on the south side of Cavel Gill, and so straight thro the middle of Winscales Tarn to a certain lapidum (stane) at the ditch of Hungill, and so from Hungill coming down the ditch between Winscales and Hungill to a certain siletii, and so by (siletum) westwards to the west end of Gilderscow, and from the head of Gilderscow in a line towards the north to a stone in Esthus, and so in a line northwards beyond Ellerbeck to the north part of Wangappe, and so rising by Ellerbeck to the north end of West Lecys, and so going down by the old ditch or hedge to the corner of Neyldringe, and so descending by Scalegill to two stones at Henning Gate and from thence ascending Sunny Bank by the old ditch to the river Derwent towards the north.

This is a true copy of the boundary of Stainburn, the original of which is somewhat defaced, being dated in the year 1550. In witness whereof I have hereto subscribed my hand, the 13th June, 1687.

(Signed) WM. HELME, Steward of the Curwens."

Curwens of Workington.

The ancient and time-honoured family of Curwen derive their descent from Gospatric, earl of Northumberland; and took their surname, by agreement, from Culwen, a family of Galloway, whose heir they married. The first on record is

IVO DE TARBORIE, or TARBOWS, first baron of Kendal, brother of Fulk, earl of Anjou and king of Jerusalem, who espoused Elgiva, daughter of our Saxon monarch Ethelred, and was father of

EDMUND, or ETHELRED, second baron of Kendal, who married Adgitha, and was succeeded by his son, KETEL, third baron of Kendal. Ketel married Christiana, as appears by his grant of Morland to the abbey of St. Mary at York, to which she was witness. By her he had issue ORME, his successor; William; and Gilbert, who succeeded to the barony of Kendal, whose son William, according to Dugdale, from being governor of the castle of Lancaster, assumed the surname of Lancaster, and from him descended John de Lancaster, summoned to Parliament as a baron in 1299. He received from William de Meschines a grant of Workington, Salter, Kelton, and Stockhouse; and gave the parish church of Workington, with two carucates of land and a mill there, to the abbey of St. Mary at York.

ORME, the second son, married Gunilda, sister of Walthoe, first lord of Allerdale, son of Gospatric, earl of Dunbar; and acquiring, by grant from the said Walthoe, the manor of Seaton, took up his abode there. By the same conveyance he had also the towns of Camerton, Greysouthen, and Flimby. Mr. John Denton says the walls and ruins of the mansion house at Seaton were visible in his time.

GOSPATRIC, son and heir of Orme, received from Alan, second lord of Allerdale (his cousin-german), High Ireby, which remained in a younger branch of the Curwens until it terminated in heiresses. Gospatric received the manors of Workington and Lamplugh from his cousin-german, William de Lancaestre, in exchange for Middleton, co. Westmoreland, in which exchange the said William reserved to himself and his heirs a yearly rent of 6d. at Carlisle fair, or a pair of gilt spurs, and bound Gospatric and his heirs to do homage, and to discharge his foreign service for the same, to the barony and castle of Egremont. He gave two parts of the fishery in Derwent to the abbey of Holme Cultram, with the appurtenances, except Waytercroft, which he gave to the prior of Carlisle. John, then prior of Carlisle, re-granted Waytercroft to Thomas, son of Gospatric, and his heirs; to be holden of the priory freely, paying yearly 7s. rent at Pentecost and Martinmas. He had issue THOMAS, his heir; Alan; Adam, parson of the church of Camerton; Gilbert; Orme; and Alexander.

THOMAS, son and heir, succeeded his father in the inheritance. He received a grant of the great lordship of Culwen, in Galloway, and granted Lamplugh to Robert de Lamplugh and his heirs, to be holden by the yearly presentation of a pair of gilt spurs. He gave to the convent of Holme Cultram, and the monks serving God there, the fishery of the Derwent at Seaton. He died December 7th, 1152, and was interred in the abbey of Shap, co. Westmoreland, to which during his life he had been a great benefactor. By his wife, Grecia, he had issue Thomas, who married Joan, daughter of Robert de Veteripont, but died without issue in the lifetime of his father; PATRICIUS, his successor; Hugo; and John. To his second son, PATRICIUS, he had given, during the lifetime of his eldest son, the lordship of Culwen; and PATRICIUS, assuming his name therefrom, became

PATRICIUS DE CULWEN; and his elder brother dying subsequently without issue male, PATRICIUS succeeded to the whole estates, and was thenceforth known as PATRICIUS DE CULWEN of Workington. The name of his wife is unknown; but he appears to have had three sons, THOMAS, his heir; GILBERT, who succeeded his brother; and Robert; and a daughter, Alicia, who became the wife of Thomas de Coupman. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS DE CULWEN, who died without issue, and was succeeded by his brother,

GILBERT DE CULWEN, known also as Gilbert de Culwen de Workington, who had three sons, GILBERT, his heir; Thomas, who died without issue; and John. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

GILBERT DE CULWEN, lord of Workington, who married Eda, or Editha, and by her had issue GILBERT, his heir; Robert; Roger; John; Thomas; and William, subsequently rector of Newbiggin, Westmoreland, and afterwards of Bromfield, Cumberland. An inquisition post mortem held in the 3rd Edward III. (1229-30) informs us that he was at that time deceased, that his wife Eda was living, and that Gilbert, his son and heir, was then thirty-three years of age. His successor,

Sir GILBERT DE CULWEN, Knt., who married, firstly, Avicia, by whom he had a son and heir, WILLIAM, or GILBERT; secondly, Margaret. In the 14th Edward III. (1340-41), he gave a message and ten acres of land in Thavelbert to the abbey of Shap, that masses might be offered and prayers said for the repose of the souls of his wives, Avicia and Margaret. He was knight of the shire in the 47th, 48th, and 50th of Edward III. On his decease he was succeeded by his son,

Sir GILBERT, or Sir WILLIAM DE CULWEN, Knt., who was knight of the shire in the 5th Richard II. He died about two years afterwards, and was succeeded by his son,

Sir CHRISTOPHER DE CULWEN, Knt., who represented the county in Parliament in the 2nd Henry V., and in the 2nd, 3rd, 6th, and 9th Henry VI. He was sheriff of Cumberland in the 2nd, and 6th, and again in the 12th, Henry VI., by the name of Culwen, and in the 6th of the said king by the name of Curwen, to which last name the family has ever since adhered. Sir Christopher (with Sir Thomas Dacre of Gilsland and Sir William Fitzbough, Knt.) was commissioned by Henry VI., A.D. 1442, to take the oaths of the wardens of the west marches for

! The Dodsworth MSS., Bibl. Bodl., Vol. XLV., f. 27, say Gilbert; but the MSS. Cotton. Jul. F. VI., p. 323, and one of the records in the Tower, say William.

the observance of the truce concluded with the king of Scots. By his wife, Elizabeth, he had

Sir THOMAS CURWEN, son and heir, who represented the county in the 13th, 20th, 27th, and 38th Henry VI., and died in the 3rd Edward IV. He married Anna, daughter of Sir John Hudleston, Knt., and by her had a son and heir, CHRISTOPHER, and William. He was succeeded by Sir CHRISTOPHER CURWEN, his eldest son, who married Margaret, daughter of Sir Roger Bellingham, Knt., and by her had issue THOMAS, son and heir; Edmund, John, and Robert; and two daughters—Alice, married to Thomas Lamplugh, Esq., of Dovenby; and Ellen, married to John Preston, Esq. He died in the 7th Henry VII.

Sir THOMAS CURWEN, son and heir, died in the 34th Henry VIII.; in which year, on an inquisition of knight's fees in Cumberland, it is found that Sir Thomas Curwen, Knt., held the manor of Workington of the king by knight's service, as of his castle of Egremont, viz., by the service of knight's fee, 45s. 3d. cornage, 4s. sawake, and pature of two serjeants. He held at the same time the manor of Thornthwaite, and one-third of the manor of Bothills, and the manors of Senton and Camerton, and divers teneaments in Gilecrux, Great Broughton, and Dearham. He appears in the list of the gentry of the county who were called out by Sir Thomas Wharton, in 1543, "on the service of the Border," when he was to furnish "horse at his pleasure." By his wife, Agnes, daughter of Walter Strickland, he had issue HENRY, his heir; Lucy, married to Sir John Lowther; and Joan. He was succeeded by his son,

Sir HENRY CURWEN, knight of the shire 6th Edward VI. and 1st Elizabeth. He was twice married: firstly, to Mary, daughter of Sir Nicholas Fairfax, by whom he had issue NICHOLAS, his successor; and secondly, to Jane Crosby, by whom he had George, who died without issue; Thomas, who left (with two younger sons) Darcy, who had (with four other sons, who died without issue) HENRY, and ELDRED, who also succeeded to the estate. Sir Henry had the honour of receiving at his mansion-house Mary Queen of Scots, May 16, 1568, when she landed at Workington, on her way to Carlisle. He died in the 30th Elizabeth, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir NICHOLAS CURWEN, M.P. for Cumberland, who married, firstly, Anne, daughter of Sir Simon Musgrave of Edenhall, Bart. (by whom he had no issue); and secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of Judge Carns. He died in the 2nd James I., and was succeeded by his son and heir,

Sir HENRY CURWEN, knight of the shire in the 18th James I., who died in the 21st of that reign. He married Catherine, daughter and co-heiress of Sir John Dalton, by whom he had issue PATRICIA, his heir; THOMAS, who succeeded his elder brother. Sir Henry married, secondly, Margaret, daughter of — Wharton, by whom he had issue ELDRED, who succeeded Thomas Curwen, Esq.

Sir PATRICIA CURWEN, Baronet, eldest son and heir of Sir Henry, represented the county in several Parliaments in the reigns of Charles I. and Charles II. He was created a baronet in 1626. He married . . . ; but dying without issue, in 1664, the title became extinct, while the estates devolved upon his brother, THOMAS CURWEN, Esq., who also died without issue, in the 25th Charles II., when the estates passed to his half-brother, ELDRED CURWEN, Esq., who died in the 26th Charles II.

HENRY CURWEN, Esq., son and heir, dying without issue, 12th George I., the estate and representation reverted to his cousin,

HENRY CURWEN, Esq., eldest surviving son of Darcy, son of Thomas, son of Sir Henry Curwen, by his second wife, Jane

Crosby. He died without issue in the 13th George I., and was succeeded by his brother,

ELDRED CURWEN, Esq., M.P. for Cockermouth, in the 7th George II., who dying in the 18th of the same reign, was succeeded by his son,

HENRY CURWEN, Esq., M.P. for the city of Carlisle in 1762; and for the county of Cumberland in 1768. He married Isabella, daughter of William Gale, Esq., of Whitehaven, by whom he had an only daughter, Isabella (born 1765), who married John Christian, Esq., of Unerigg Hall, and conveyed to him the family estates; he assumed, in 1790, their surname and arms, and thus became

JOHN CHRISTIAN CURWEN, Esq. He had previously been married to Miss Taubman, of the Isle of Man, by whom he had issue,

- i. John Christian, Esq., of Unerigg Hall, one of the deemsters of that island.
- By the heiress of the Curwens (his second wife) he had issue,
- ii. HENRY, of whom hereafter.
- iii. William, in holy orders, rector of Harrington, now deceased.
- iv. Edward, of Belle Grange, co. Lancaster.
- v. John, in holy orders, rector of Harrington 1823 to 1840, in which year he died.
- i. Bridget, married to Charles Walker, Esq., of Ashford Court, Salop.
- ii. Christiana Frances, of Uppington, Salop.

Mr. Curwen served the office of high sheriff for Cumberland in 1784. In 1786 he was returned to Parliament for Carlisle; and continued to represent that city in several Parliaments. He was subsequently M.P. for the county, and so remained until his decease. "Mr. Curwen acquired distinction by his rural pursuits; and as a practical farmer, introduced numerous valuable improvements under his own immediate superintendence, which gave a novel direction to the business of the agriculturist." Mr. Curwen was the author of Observations on the State of Ireland, &c., 2 vols. 8vo, 1818. He died on the 9th December, 1828, and was succeeded in his own estates by his eldest son, John Christian, Esq., in those of the Curwens by his second son,

HENRY CURWEN, Esq., who was born 5th December, 1789, and on the 11th October, 1804, married Jane, daughter of Edward Stanley, Esq., of Whitehaven, by whom he had issue,

- i. JOHN.
- ii. Edward Stanley, formerly of the 14th Dragoons, married 22nd January, 1831, Frances, daughter of Edward Jesse, Esq., of Humpston Court, Middlesex, and has issue.
- iii. Henry, in holy orders, rector of Workington, married to Dora, daughter of Major-General Goldie, and has issue.
- iv. Charles.
- v. William-Blamire.
- i. Isabella, married to the Rev. John Wordsworth, M.A., rector of Plumland and vicar of Brigham.
- ii. Julia.
- iii. Jane.

Mr. Curwen succeeded to the estates on the decease of his father, 9th December, 1828. He is in the commission of the peace for Cumberland, and filled the office of high-sheriff of the county in 1834.

Arms.—Arg., fretty, gu., a chief, az.

Crest.—A unicorn's head, erased, arg., armed, or.

Motto.—Si je uenstry.

THE TOWN OF WORKINGTON.

This market town and seaport, in the parish of the same name, is situated on the left bank of the Derwent, about a mile from its junction with the sea, in $54^{\circ} 39'$ north latitude, and $3^{\circ} 33'$ west longitude. It is distant 32 miles south-west from Carlisle, 306 miles north-north-west from London by road, and 330 miles by the London and North-Western and connected railways, via Carlisle. Its population in 1851 was 5,837, of whom 2,588 were males and 3,249 females, inhabiting 1360 houses, 119 being uninhabited, and five building. The town extends above a mile along the south bank of the Derwent, and though straggling and irregularly built, contains several good shops, spacious streets, and handsome dwellings.

The first of the old writers who mentions the town of Workington is Leland, who tells us that its name is derived from the Wyre, a rivulet which flows into the sea at Harrington, but there seems little probability in this statement, although the orthography of the name of the town as formerly written, Wyrekinton, Wyrkenton, and Wyrkington, may lend some sanction to it, as the stream is upwards of two miles from the modern town. The writer just mentioned, who lived in the time of Henry VIII. informs us that Workington, is a place "where as shyppes cum to, wher ys a prety fysher toun, cawld Wyrkenton, and ther is the chif house of Sir Thomas Curwyn." From the time of Leland's visit we hear no more of Workington till the time of Queen Elizabeth. In 1568 the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots determined to seek refuge in England from the treasons and rebellions which surrounded her in her native land. Miss Strickland informs us that she embarked at "the Abbey Burnfoot, the picturesque and secluded little bay where the beautiful rivulet that flows past Dundernann Abbey, after winding its way over a rocky bed for nearly two miles, through a long grove of ash and elder trees, rushed into the Solway Frith, at the point of Dunfin. When the boat had laboured through the surf, which is always very heavy at the Abbey Creek, and pushed out into the broad expanse of waters, and Queen Mary looked back upon the land she was leaving, it presented a frowning prospect of broken rocks and rugged cliffs, rising like a hostile barrier against her, as if to forbid her return." The same gifted writer continues—"Mary's mind misgave her when she was fairly out to sea, and under sail for England, and she said she would go to France. The boatmen made an ineffectual attempt to change their course, but the wind and tide were contrary, and carried the little vessel rapidly across the Frith of Solway, and drove her into the harbour of Workington,¹ a small seafaring town on the coast of Cumberland.

The voyage is said to have been performed in four hours. The boat was navigated by four mariners; and there were sixteen persons who accompanied the Queen. As it was Sunday evening, the general holiday of high and low, an unusual number of people assembled to see the Scotch boat come in: no gaily-appointed galley or gilded barge, with the crown and royal lion of Scotland emblazoned on her poop and silken pennons, but one of the rough crafts used by the half civilized Galwegians in their fishing expeditions, and transporting coals and lime.² Rude as this vessel was, she excited lively curiosity, for it was instantly perceived that her passengers were neither fisher folk, colliers, nor Kirkcudbright traders. There are some persons on whom nature has impressed traits of individual dignity that nothing can disguise, especially when accompanied with a lofty stature and an elegant line of features. This was the case with Mary Stuart. We have seen the ill success of her attempt to shroud her graceful form in a laundress's hood and muffler at Lochleven. It needed not regal ornaments, or robes of purple, to proclaim her rank, exhausted with grief and fatigue though she had been for the last three days and nights, and wearing the travel-soiled garments of white silk in which she had fled from the lost battle of Langside. The moment she stepped on shore she was recognized as the fugitive Queen of Scotland, from her majestic stature, far above the common height of women, and her resemblance to her pictures and her coins. The coarse libels of the traitors who had robbed her of her throne had not then been published to counteract the sympathy and lively interest which her calamities, her high and heroic courage, united with feminine softness and beauty, excited in generous hearts; and she was welcomed with enthusiastic demonstrations of affection and respect.

"St. George's Pier is said to be the place where Mary Stuart first set foot on English ground. Sir Henry Curwen, the manorial noble of the district, received her with great respect, and conducted her and her faithful little train to his own home, Workington Hall, a spacious castellated mansion pleasantly seated in a well-wooded park, on a gentle eminence, scarcely two furlongs from the haven. This fine old house, which derives no slight historic interest for having been Mary's first resting-place in England, and, alas! almost the only one where it was her lot to repose a night in freedom, and to taste that hospitality and kindness which she had fondly anticipated, is still in existence. The embattled gateway, with its flanking turrets, is the same which overshadowed the royal guest whom Sir Henry Curwen brought home to share his Sabbath evening supper on the 16th of May, 1568. Mary was received and welcomed by Lady Curwen, the wife of her kind host, and the Dowager Lady Curwen, his mother,³ who is said to have supplied her and her ladies with a change of linen, and such articles of dress as could be rendered available for their use. One relic of Mary's visit to Workington Hall, a small Scotch agate cup, or quagha, called "The luck of Workington" is carefully preserved there as a precious heirloom, being her parting gift to Sir Henry Curwen, when, as tradition affirms, she enhanced the value of the trifling token of the hearty old English fashion, with

¹ Such indeed, even in our own days of luxurious travelling, are the only kind of boats, generally speaking, that ply between the now populous and wealthy towns of Kirkcudbright and Workington. At least, as lately as the year 1847, when, with another lady, the companion of my historical pilgrimage on Queen Mary's track from Loughside to Dundernann Abbey, I desired, at the termination of our agreeable visit to the noble Ladies of St. Mary's Isle, to complete the adventure by crossing the Frith of Solway to Workington, but were dissuaded from making the attempt by the assurance that no lady would enterprize the voyage in one of these incommodious vessels, unless, as in the case of Mary Stuart, the necessity of the case amounted to a question of extreme urgency.

² Camden. Historical Traditions of Workington and Kirkcudbright.

³ Though his mother, Agnes Strickland, the daughter of Sir Thomas Strickland of Sizergth, and Edith Nevelle of Thornton Briggs, Sir Henry Curwen was the cousin of Queen Catherine Parr, the last wife of Henry VIII. Queen Mary's aunt by marriage. By the said maternal descent, Sir Henry could also claim affinity in blood to Mary herself, and to Queen Elizabeth. Ralph Nevill Earl of Westmoreland, the grandfather of Cecily Duchess of York, having been their common ancestor: a family connection which, though unnoticed by any of the historians who record Mary's brief sojourn at Workington Hall, was not likely to have been forgotten by her host, who recognised in his illustrious guest, and kinswoman in the fifth degree of cousinship, the heiress presumptive of the realm, and, in spite of her present reverse of fortune, anticipated the probability of her wearing the threefold garland of the Britannic empire. It is worthy of notice that Camden, the great topographical historian of Britain, and the author of the "Annals of Queen Elizabeth," was the nephew of Sir Henry Curwen. He was about seventeen years of age at the time Queen Mary was his uncle's guest at Workington Hall. It is therefore possible that he enjoyed the opportunity, not only of hearing her tell her own story, but also of obtaining his verification from the lips of the noble Scotch exiles who had forsaken all to follow her fallen fortunes in a land of strangers. Of all contemporary historians, Camden bears the most important testimony in Mary's favour in his plain unvarnished statement of facts. "Writing" as he says, "with Cecil's secret correspondence before him," he possessed the key to many a political mystery which few besides could fathom. Burnet has endeavoured to impugn his veracity, by pretending that he wrote thus of Mary to flatter her son James I. but Camden was the most truthful and single-minded historian of his age—the only one who grounded his statements on documentary evidence. His illustrious contemporary Spencer, who as private secretary to the Earl of Essex and personally acquainted with all the prominent characters and events of the period, was a competent witness, passes the following well-deserved eulogium on him:—

"Camden, the nurser of antiquity,
And lantern unto late succeeding age
To see the light of simple verity.
Camden! though Time all monuments obscure,
Yet thy just labours ever shall endure."

Spencer, History of Time.

the friendly sentiment, "Luck to Workington!" This quagha was evidently brought by Lord Herries, or one of the gentlemen, from Dundrennan Abbey, in the hastily-packed basket of refreshments provided for the voyage. It would be a violation of the propriety of historical biography to suggest the probability of the stout Galwegian lord having endeavoured to cheer the drooping spirits of his royal mistress and her ladies by proffering an occasional sip of the national cordial of Old Scotia from this fairy goblet, in the course of her passage from the Abbey Burnfoot to the port of Workington. In the picture gallery of Workington Hall is the curious contemporary portrait of Mary Stuart, presented by herself to Sir Henry and Lady Curwen. It is in profile, and represents her at five and twenty, when the domestic sorrows and successive tragedies of two years and a half of unprecedented suffering had given her bitter experience of the pains and penalties of royalty, and tempered the brilliancy of her beauty with a pervading shade of sadness, genuine characteristic of a true Stuart. The costume in which she is delineated in the Workington portrait is a loose gown of crimson brocade, slashed with satin in longitudinal stripes, edged with gold escallops. She has no ruff, but a straight collar, embroidered and edged with gold, open in front to show a pearl necklace, white point tucker, and muslin kerchief. Her chesnut hair is rolled from the face precisely in the style which has been adopted by the Empress Eugenie, so as to display the contour of her noble forehead, delicately-formed ear, and long slender throat. A small round cap is placed at the back of her head, over which is thrown a large transparent veil, edged and diagonally striped with gold, which forms a graceful drapery, falling like a mantle on her shoulders. During her brief sojourn at Workington Hall, Mary wrote to Queen Elizabeth, explaining the injurious treatment she had received from the successful conspirators, who had reduced her to the dire necessity of throwing herself on her royal kinswoman's protection, confiding in her oft-reiterated professions of friendship and promises of assistance in her troubles. This letter, which is too long for insertion, concludes with the following touching appeal to the compassion of her royal kinswoman:—

I intreat you to send for me as soon as possible, for I am in a pitiable condition, not only for a queen but even for a gentlewoman, having nothing in the world but the clothes in which I escaped, riding sixty miles the first day, and not daring to travel afterwards except by night, as I hope to be able to show you, if it please you to have compassion on my great misfortunes, and permit me to come and bewail thou to you. Not to weary you, I will now pray God to give you health and a long and happy life, and to myself patience, and that consolation that I await from you, to whom I present my humble commendations. From Workington, this 17th of May.

Your very faithful and affectionate good sister and cousin and escaped prisoner,

MARIE R.¹

The date manifests the falsehood of the charge subsequently brought by Elizabeth against Mary through Walsingham, to the King and Queen mother of France, 'That the Queen of Scots landed privily in her dominions, and remained there concealed for several days, till her disguise was penetrated.'² Now, it is certain that Mary landed on the evening of the 16th of May at Workington, three days after the defeat of her army at Langside, and wrote to Elizabeth early the next morning, and that she was carried on to Cocker-mouth the same day.³

From the time of Mary's visit we have nothing of importance recorded relating to the town. Pennant describes the town as extending "from the castle to the sea; it consists of two clusters—one, the more ancient, near the castle, the other near the church and pier, and both contain about four or five thousand inhabitants; they subsist by the coal trade, which is here considerable. The Derwent washes the skirts of the town, and discharges itself into the sea about a mile west. On each bank near the mouth are piers, where the ships lie; and the coals are conveyed into them from frames occasionally dropping into them from the railroads. Ninety-seven vessels of different burdens, some even of two hundred and fifty tons, belong to this port." Hutchinson, in his "History of Cumberland," published in 1794, tells us that "the increase of this place has been very rapid of late years, and many of the new buildings are handsome; in the old parts of the town the streets are narrow and the houses ill built. The town contains between eleven and twelve hundred houses. The ground rents for building are lower here than in any part of the county, being no more than one shilling per yard front and twenty backwards. The river is navigable for ships of four hundred tons burden. There are now an hundred and sixty vessels belonging to this port, on an average about an hundred and thirty tons each; and every ship of an hundred tons costs £1,500, and so in proportion. The chief trade in export is in coals for Ireland, but some are taken up here for the east country service. The imports are timber and shipbuilding materials. During the summer season the situation of the town is delightful; but it cannot boast of many elegant buildings, or the streets of being well paved. The number of inhabitants is computed to exceed six thousand." The ancient part of the town is narrow and irregular, but the modern is well laid out, and contains several good public buildings. The lower part of the town is situated on a marsh, hence the name of the Marsh Side, and the Marsh End Quay, now corrupted into the Merchant's Quay.

The coal trade of Workington is of great importance. The coal is met with at a depth of eighty-three fathoms from the surface, the seam, the Metal Band, being three feet thick; the next seam, the Moorbank Seam, three feet six inches thick, is found at 110 fathoms; at 134 fathoms the Little Main Band, three feet two inches thick; and at 150 fathoms the Main Band, ten feet thick. About the year 1792 the coal pits were described as from forty to fifty fathoms in depth, having generally two or three workable bands,—the first three feet, the second four feet, and the third from ten to eleven feet. About the same time eight or nine of Bolton and Watt's steam engines were erected in the neighbourhood of the town, for the purpose of raising the coal and pumping the water from the mines. The number of persons employed was about 600. There are now three pits in the Workington Colliery, viz., Buddle Pit, Jane Pit, and Jackson Pit. The Buddle Pit is forty-three fathoms deep, the Jane seventy, and the Jackson twenty-three. The Jane Pit is the only one now working. The chimneys of the engine-house are built in the castellated style, and have as pleasing an appearance as it is possible for chimneys to have. Chapel Bank Colliery was lost in 1837, owing to an eruption of the sea. We subjoin the following account of the catastrophe from a treatise on the "Winning and Working of Collieries," by M. Dunne, Esq.:—"Another of these frightful events," he tells us, "took place at this colliery on the 30th day of July, 1837. The two pits, Lady and Isabella, were worked to the distance of 1,500 yards under the Irish sea, with a ten-feet seam, which was ninety fathoms deep, both pits being situated close upon the sea shore. In the course of a longolleyway, and in the intersections of several dykes, a good deal of level had been lost before arriving at the inmost working, which were also driven considerably to the rise, at the rate of one in the three, which at length brought them within fifteen fathoms of the bottom of the sea. The ordinary manner in which the colliery was worked was—width of working five yards, and the pillar seven to eight yards—which was barely sufficient to maintain the roof unbroken. Ralph Coxon, the manager of the colliery, having no fear of consequences, and being anxious to produce an excessive quantity of coals to supply the market, proceeded in a most reckless and unguarded manner to attenuate the pillars, already scarcely sufficient to afford support to the superincumbent strata. His proceedings were deprecated by every one conversant with the colliery; and it had not been allowed to proceed for any length of time, till warning was given of approaching danger by some heavy falls of the roof, accompanied by currents of salt water. The danger of letting in the sea now became the subject of common conversation; but week after week passed on, without creating any change of system. In the meantime several of the men left the colliery through dread of consequences; and Mr. Bowness, one of the under agents, expressed his convictions and fears to me (as I formerly had the management of the colliery) in a succession of letters. In consequence of these letters the proprietor was apprised as to the risk which he was incurring, and which induced him to question Coxon; but he silenced all fears with asseverations of safety. Matters were therefore allowed to go on under implicit reliance on the present management, notwithstanding the repeated heavy falls and discharges of water, which were rendered still more hazardous by the contiguity of some material faults. The last communication I received from Mr. Bowness ran as follows:—'Unless some interference can be made, a very few days or weeks will most assuredly bring down the waters of the sea; and that opinion is now so generally expressed that men are leaving the colliery every day.' Thus matters stood till the 30th of July, 1837, when the whole neighbourhood was appalled by the breaking in of the sea; and so extensive was the commotion, that many persons at the distance of hundreds of yards, observed the swirl of the waters directly over where the fracture took place. A few of the pitmen escaped by groping their way to the day-hole in the rise workings underneath some cottages at Chapel Bank; and thirty-six men and boys, and as many horses, with all the extensive stock underground, were irrecoverably destroyed, the waters having filled up the whole of the extensive workings in this thick seam to the level of the sea in a few short hours. The event was the more deplorable since the deluge, before it occurred, was not only the subject of common conversation, but also, as before related, after repeated warnings had been given."

¹ The original document, written in French, may be seen, in Mary's own hand, among the Cottonian MSS., British Museum.

² MS. Minutes of Privy Council—Instructions to Walsingham.

³ "Lives of the Queens of Scotland," vol. vi., p. 101, et seq.

For five years previous to 1813 the average annual exports from the Workington collieries was about 28,000 waggon loads. In 1826 about 200,000 tons were shipped from the coal mines of Henry Curwen, Esq., Messrs. John Fletcher, and Thomas Westray. In 1837, 37,761 tons were shipped from the collieries of Henry Curwen, Esq., alone. The following figures show the coal trade of Workington from 1850 to 1858 inclusive:—1850, 113,650 tons; 1851, 95,703; 1852, 85,014; 1853, 126,289; 1854, 128,681; 1855, 111,196; 1856, 129,275; 1857, 133,875; 1858, 133,211. Culin:—1855, 20 tons; 1856, 2; 1858, 20.

Next in importance to the coal trade is that of ship-building, for the operations connected with which there are two yards, one belonging to the Harrington and Workington Shipbuilding Co., who employ 150 hands in the various departments of their business, and have built since their commencement in 1773 about 250 vessels, with an average tonnage of 350 tons. The establishment of Charles Lampert, Esq., is well and favourably known, and affords employment to about 120 hands on an average. It was commenced in 1849, and has produced twenty vessels, varying from 150 to 1,000 tons burden. The establishment includes saw-mills and steam ropery.

Besides the coal trade and ship building, Workington possesses iron works. The Quarry Iron Works, which employs 120 hands, is engaged in the getting up of finished tin, for the manufacture of tin plates at their works at Seaton. Situated near the town, but in the township of Seaton, are the Workington Hemtite Iron Works, erected in 1857. Working operations were commenced in February, 1858, by a company bearing the designation of the Hemtite Iron Company (Limited). There are four blast furnaces, and the number of men employed amounts to 100.

The remainder of the Workington trade does not call for special notice, if it can be said to have any other, beyond the ordinary occupations of a seaport town. There are brick and tile works, roperies, and manufactories in which sail cloth and sails are made, but chiefly for local use.

It is almost unnecessary for us to remark that the shipping and shipping stock of the port have undergone the same vicissitudes as the trade of the town, decreasing with its decrease, and increasing with its increase. About the year 1770 Workington possessed ninety-seven vessels some of which were 250 tons burden. Twenty years later the number had increased to 160, with an averaged burden of 130 tons. In 1810 there were 134 ships, with an aggregate burden of 18,941 tons; in 1822, 117 ships, burden 18,094 tons; 1828, 129 ships, burden 19,930 tons; 1840, 217 ships, burden 36,800 tons; 1846, 80 ships, burden 12,000 tons. The following table made up from the Custom-house returns since 1850, exhibits the annual number of vessels, foreign and coastwise, which have entered and cleared from Workington, the number and registered tonnage of vessels belonging to the port, and the amount of customs duties received, thus giving a résumé of the trade of Workington:—

Year.	CARGOES INWARD.		CARGOES OUTWARD.		VESSELS REGISTERED.		Duties RECEIVED.
	Foreign.	Coast-ing.	Foreign.	Coast-ing.	No.	Tons.	£
1850	9	129	10	1077	102	18,510	3408
1851	13	136	7	854	103	19,516	3503
1852	10	121	6	727	99	18,187	3356
1853	11	105	7	1106	95	18,612	3045
1854	12	114	8	1303	96	18,573	2963
1855	7	100	5	1060	95	18,340	2349
1856	10	93	8	1247	99	19,924	1927
1857	12	111	12	1158	96	20,131	2308
1858	5	97	8	1194	99	20,777	2484

Workington possesses a safe and capacious harbour, with a breakwater and extensive quays, which are, however, capable of much further improvement. The Merchants' Quay and the South Quay are built on the opposite banks of a wide branch of the Derwent, called the South Gut, which, with the mill-race, separates the town from the large meadow or common called Cloflocks, about 1,800 yards long and 200 broad. The depth of water, at spring tides, is from fifteen to eighteen feet, and at neap tides from eight to ten feet. Vessels can sail into the harbour with a southerly, westerly, or north-north-east wind. When there are eight feet of water in the harbour a red ball is hoisted upon a pole on St. John's Pier, and at night a light is exhibited upon the pierhead, which answers a like purpose, and can be seen in clear weather at about three leagues from any point seaward. On each of the inner piers are two smaller lights to guide ships into the harbour. Workington was created a separate and independent port in 1850. The limits of the port of Workington are from a stream called Lowca Beck on the south-west to Canker Beck on the north-east of the town, and extending three miles seaward from low water mark.

CHURCHES AND CHAPELS.

The parish church of Workington, dedicated to St. Michael, is a plain structure without any architectural pretensions, rebuilt in 1780, and consists of a nave, with a low square tower, which formed part of the old church. It is lighted by two rows of semicircular-headed windows. The communion table occupies a recess at the east end of the nave, and is surmounted by a window of three lights, the upper part of which is filled with stained glass. On the north side of the window is a painting of the Descent from the Cross, and in the south another representing the Ascension.

There are two side galleries, and one at the west end containing the organ. Under the tower is an altar tomb, on which recline the effigies of a knight and his lady. He is in plate armour; his head rests on a cushion, placed against an animal, and there is another at his feet. An inscription runs round the top edge of the tomb, but it has been defaced and rendered illegible by successive coats of paint. Previous to its last painting the date 1440 could be traced. On the front side are five recesses, with cinquefoil heads, each of which contains a shield, which are thus described by Jefferson,—“1. Fretty and a chief, Curwen; impaling Lozengy 2. Curwen, impaling Fretty of six 3. Curwen, without impalement. 4. Curwen, impaling six Annulets, three, two, and one 5. Curwen, impaling five fusils in fess with a label of five points.” The head of the lady reclines on a cushion supported by angels. Near the tomb is part of an ancient octagonal stone font. The pew of the Curwen family has some fine old carved work, and the arms of the family occur twice, in one place impaling on a fess two lions' heads, between them St. Andrew's crosses. The tower contains six bells. On the east wall, south of the communion table, is a fine monument of white marble, by Dunbar, to the memory of the Rev. Edward Stanley, with two figures representing Faith and Justice, and an inscription. Near the south door is another monument, to the memory of the Rev. Peter How and his wife. There are also mural tablets to the memory of various members of the Curwen, Sherwen, Ponsonby, Beck, Plasket, Addison, Hodgson, Thompson, and Selkirk families. The church of Workington was given by Ketel (son of Eldred, son of Ivo,) third baron of Kendal, with two carucates of land and a mill there, to the abbey of St. Mary, at York, to which it continued attached till the suppression of the monasteries by Henry VIII., who, by letters patent, bearing date August 20th, 1544, granted to Robert Brocklesby and John Dyer the advowson and right of patronage of the churches of Workington and Harrington, to hold the same of the king in free socage by fealty only, and not in capite. On the 27th of January in the following year they conveyed, by fine, these two rectories to Thomas Dalston, Esq., of Carlisle; and in 1556 we find John Dalston exercising the rights of presentation. Henry VIII. made a second grant of the advowson of the church of Workington to John Bird, the first bishop of Chester, in exchange for certain temporalities; and it was exchanged again by Queen Mary, for Childwall and other places; but it having been granted before to Brocklesby and Dyer, it was found that the bishop had no title.

On the 12th of October, 1564, a license was granted empowering John Dalston, Esq., to convey the advowson and right of patronage of the churches of Workington and Harrington to Henry Curwen, Esq., in whose posterity they have since remained. The living is a rectory, and is said to be the richest in the county. It was valued in the King's Book at £23 5s., and continues to pay a pension of £2 15s. 4d. to St. Bees, and 13s. 4d. to the sovereign for a chantry. It is now worth about £1,000 a year. The parish registers commence in 1663.

From the true and perfect terrier of the glebe, glebe houses, and out buildings, belonging to the rectory of Workington, signed August 20th, 1825, we learn that, at that period, the possessions of the church of Workington comprised "An ancient parsonage house, stable, and cow house, situated in a large court and garden ground, adjoining the church yard, Church Lane, and Parson's Lane, and opposite the latter a garden and poultry yard, an old house stand at the west end of Porter's Brow (which fell to the parson by escheat), and a tide barn (now converted into a smithy) at Little Clifton. Besides, the above-named building, premises, and church yard, the ancient glebe lands belonging to the rectory of Workington consisted of about one hundred and seven acres in nine fields or closes; nineteen acres of which ancient glebe were exchanged in the year 1809 for thirty-eight acres of other lands in eight fields or closes, as they are fully set forth and described in certain deeds of exchange, enrolled in the Episcopal Archives of the Diocese of Chester, on ledger pages 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, and 548. Besides the one hundred and twenty-six acres contained in ancient fields and inclosures with gardens and premises immediately adjoining the parsonage house, seven hundred and two acres of new glebe have been added to the rectory of Workington in lieu of tithes, as particularly set forth and described in three Inclosure Acts and in the Commissioners' Awards, and also in two leases of certain allotments of the said new glebe in the townships of Workington, Winscales, and Stainburn, and of the privilege of working the glebe coal for twenty-one years, which said leases bear date the 15th day of March, 1816, and have both been confirmed by the diocesan; and in the latter lease there is a clause whereby it is stipulated that the present rector shall give up the whole of the principal of the reserved rent of one hundred pounds per annum, for erecting sufficient farm buildings and other purposes of permanent benefit to the rectory as by reference to the said lease may more fully appear, and a new dwelling house has been built this present year on the said new glebe. The other tithes and possessions of the church which have not been exchanged or affected by the late Inclosure Acts are set forth in a terrier lodged in the Episcopal Registry of Chester, and bearing date in the year 1698, and in the court books, and other records, memoranda, and papers, belonging to the rectory of Workington."

RECTORS.—Edmund Whalley occurs 1535; — Lowther, occurs about 1642; Christopher Mattenson, 1662; John Bolton, 1679; Robert Loxam, 1724; John Stanley, 1726; William T. Addison, 1753; Edward Christian, 1792; Peter How, 1809; Edward Stanley, 1831; John Wordsworth, 1834; Henry Curwen, 1837.

St. John's Church, in Washington-street, was erected in 1823 by the Commissioners for Building Churches, at a cost of £10,000, and will accommodate about 1,600 persons. It possesses a Doric portico, the entablature of which is supported by four massive pillars; in other respects it is architecturally a failure. The seats in the body of the church are free; the rents of those in the galleries being devoted to the support of the incumbent. In 1846 a tower was added at a cost of upwards of £1,700, Henry Curwen, Esq., giving the stone. The churchyard was enlarged in 1849, during the prevalence of the cholera. In 1855 the parish of Workington, for ecclesiastical purposes, was divided, and a district assigned to St. John's Church, which thus became a district church; and by the operation of Lord Blandford's Act, passed in 1856, is now for all church purposes a separate and distinct parish. The new parish comprises the township of Winscales and part of that of Stainburn, and in the year 1851 comprised a population of about 3,000. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the rector of the parish.

INCUMBENTS.—John Curwen, 1833; Joseph Simpson, 1836; Peter Von Essen, 1831; William Jackson, 1840; John Irving, 1856.

The Catholic church, dedicated to St. Michael, is situated near the Guards. It is beautifully fitted up, and will seat about 500 persons. The Catholic body in Workington long formed a portion of the Whitehaven mission. About the commencement of the present century many Irish Catholics sought employment in the extensive coal mines of the neighbourhood, and eventually settled in the town. These became so numerous that it was found necessary to separate this place from Whitehaven, and, in 1810, a resident Catholic priest, the Rev. Thomas Rishton, a Monk of the Order of St. Benedict, was appointed to the charge of the Mission, which ever since has been served by members of the same religious order. At first the Catholics had no place of worship of their own, but rented a room here and there as circumstances permitted. Most, if not all, the Catholics being in the employ of John Christian Curwen, Esq., lord of the manor, he generously presented them with half an acre of ground, in the rising land on the south-west of the town. On this was eventually built, by subscription, the church, and subsequently the presbytery, or priest's house. The ground is charged with a rent of £5 a year, which is regularly presented to the lord of the manor, but always graciously returned as a donation. We subjoin the succession of priests.

PRIESTS.—Thomas Rishton, 1810; Samuel Barber, 1814, removed the same year; John Rigley, 1814, who left in 1816, after which there was no resident priest till the return of Thos. Rishton, in 1819; Richard Twers, 1820; Abraham Abram, 1822; Edward Glassbrook, 1831; Charles Kershaw, 1838; Henry Sutton, 1841; Michael Sinnevan, 1843; Francis Williams, 1844; Cuthbert W. Clifton, 1846.

The Independent chapel, situated in South William-street, is a good stone building, with a front in the Gothic style, remodelled and enlarged in 1855. there is a Sunday school attached. The Independents of Workington were first formed into a congregation about the year 1786, when Lady Glenorchy, on her way to Scotland, stopped at Workington, where she purchased ground for the erection of this chapel, and saw the work commenced before she left. During the works consequent upon the alterations in 1855, the workmen pulled down an old cottage in order to enlarge the burial ground, amongst the ruins of which a small glass tumbler was discovered, apparently of foreign manufacture, bearing the date 1680. The glass was of a pale blue colour.

The Presbyterian Church (English) is a neat structure, erected in 1858-9, upon the site of the manse and old church, and is in fact an addition to the latter building, though the architect, Mr. Charles Eaglesfield, has so tastefully designed the additions that they form one harmonious whole. The style of architecture adopted is the Early English, with a pointed door case, diamond-paned windows to harmonise, and buttresses between the windows. The body of the church contains some forty free pews and suitable accommodation for the choir; there is also a gallery for Sunday-school children, and another above the entrance for general use. Altogether there is accommodation for about 400 persons. The roof is supported with exposed timbers beautifully stained, and the temperature of the building is regulated by means of hot water pipes and apparatus. The total cost of the alterations, &c., amounted to £700. The Presbyterian congregation of Workington was first formed about the year 1746. The following have been the succession of pastors:—

Rev. Messrs. Thompson, Selkirk, Turner, Nicholson, Turbit, William Gordon, Alexander Douglas, David McLeod.

The Wesleyan Chapel, situated in South William-street, is a good substantial stone building, erected in 1840, at a cost of £2,000. The number of sittings is 860, of which 150 are free. The old chapel in Tiffin Lane was erected in 1791; it is now used as a Sunday-school. The first Wesleyan congregation in Workington was formed by the Rev. Jonathan Brown in the year 1767, when they assembled for worship at the hall stables, and afterwards at private houses till they were able to build their first chapel. The present minister is the Rev. J. R. Clementson.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel, John-street, was erected in 1837, at a cost of £930. It is a neat stone building, containing 550 sittings, 260 of which are free.

Besides these chapels there is a room on the quay attached to the Bethel Union for the benefit of seamen.

SCHOOLS, &c.

The Free Schools, intended for the instruction of about 500 scholars, with residences for both master and mistress, are now in course of erection, from the design of Thomas Nicholson, Esq., Diocesan architect, Hereford, at an estimated cost, including the site, of £2,500. The land, part of the glebe, was presented by the Rev. H. Curwen, and the funds, including a government grant of £1,215, were obtained from public subscriptions. The style of the buildings is Early English, and the extended frontage is broken and relieved by recessing the two wings, and by a handsome central spire. The funds for carrying on this institution will be provided, beyond the children's pence and the capitation allowance of the Privy Council on Education, by private subscription. The trust deed enacts that "no religious Catechism shall be taught in the schools, but that the Bible shall be read daily, and fully explained, and shall form the basis of the moral training of the children therein." The master and mistress will be of the Church of England, and the rector of Workington ex-officio chairman of the school committee. The schools are expected to be open early in 1860, and will supply an educational want long and pressingly felt in the town.

The School of Industry, in Guard-street, is a good and substantial stone building, two stories high, erected in 1831. On the first floor is the infant school, perpetually endowed by the founder, Mr. Thomas Wilson, of Workington, with the interest of £500, which is payable half-yearly to the teacher; and with the interest of another £100 to be applied to the necessary repairs of the building. The average number in attendance is about seventy. The school of industry is limited to twenty pupils, and is supported by the ladies of the town, having for its object "the inculcation of habits of industry in young females, so as to make them notable housekeepers and good Christians."

The Church of England Schools, open to all denominations, the foundation-stone of which was laid June 12th, 1859, are now in course of erection upon a site consisting of an area, situated in John-street, nearly opposite the Primitive Methodist Chapel, being the east end of a field purchased by a few gentlemen interested in promoting the cause of education from Miss Tickell. The heads of the trust-deed adopted by the committee are as follow:—1. The schools to be open to children of all denominations. 2. The master and mistress to be members of the Church of England. 3. The schools to be opened daily with prayer. 4. The Bible to be read daily, accompanied by such general remarks from the master, by way of explanation, as he may consider suitable. 5. All the children to attend the Bible class. 6. The Church of England Catechism, and the Catechisms of the Wesleyan and Presbyterian bodies respectively, to be taught in the school. 7. The parents or guardians of each child shall be required to state which Catechism (if either), they wish their child to be taught. 8. No child to be required to learn their Catechism, where the parents or guardians object. 9. The ministers of the Wesleyan and Presbyterian congregations in Workington, to be, ex officio, members of the committee of management. 10. The instruction to be given in the Catechism and the formularies of the Church of England, and in the other Catechisms, shall form part of the fixed routine of the school instruction, and shall be given on the afternoons of, at least, two days in each week (say the afternoons of Wednesday and Friday), and within the regular hours; the former under the superintendence of the clergy of the parish church and St. John's, the latter under that of the ministers of the above-named congregations. 11. No one shall be eligible to be elected on the committee of management who is not a resident in the parish, and a member of the Church of England, or of one of the three dissenting bodies now existing in Workington, namely, the Wesleyan, Presbyterian, and Independent.

Workington Mechanics' Institution, situated in Pow-street, was established in 1849. Its objects are the diffusion of useful knowledge in general literature, the sciences, and the arts, by means of a library, reading-room, news-room, and museum; by the delivery of lectures, discussions, and the reading of essays, &c.; and by the formation of classes for the study of the arts and sciences, and such other means as the committee for the time being may deem expedient. The members are divided into honorary (who pay a subscription of not less than 10s. each per annum), and ordinary, including females, paying 5s. per annum; by paying 4s a person is constituted a member for life. The institution is supported by the subscriptions of its members, the number of whom is now about 300. The library contains about 1,700 volumes.

The News-room, situated in Portland-square, was established in 1810. It is supported by the subscriptions of its members, who pay 25s. a year.

GAS-WORKS, WATER-WORKS, &c.

The original gas-works, situated to the north-west of the town, were established by a private company in 1840-1, at a cost of £5,000; but in 1849, were purchased by the trustees of the town for the above sum. They contain one gas-holder, capable of holding 11,500 cubic feet; and 13 retorts. One purifier supplies 130 public lamps, and the annual consumption is now about 4,120,000 feet, which sells for 5s. per 1,000 feet. These will be superseded by entirely new and more extensive works (which are now nearly completed) erected at the lowest level of the town, adjoining the harbour. The gas-holder has a capacity of 36,000 feet, and the works generally will produce a supply of gas for a population double that of the town at present. The cost of the new works is £2,050, including the removals for the laying of the principal mains necessary for the change of site. Being in the immediate locality of the railway station, a considerable saving is expected in avoiding cartage of coal; and being also at a much lower level, the pressure on the mains, and consequently the leakage, will be less. The profits of these works are carried to the credit of the improvement-rates of the town.

The Workington Water-works were commenced in 1858, under the superintendence of Thomas Hawksley, Esq., engineer, by a joint stock company (limited), at an estimated cost of £8,000, raised in £5 shares, and are now completed. The water is raised from the river Derwent into a reservoir on the crest of the hill behind the Stainburn Old Hall, which is capable of containing a sufficient quantity for two days' consumption, and is constructed upon the most modern and approved principle, divided into a number of compartments, arched and covered with brick-work. From the reservoir an inclined cart road, cut out of the hill side, leads to the engine-house and other works connected with the establishment, manager's residence, &c. These are situated at the foot of the hill, nearly opposite Seaton mill. An abundant supply of the finest water flows into the well, through a natural filter of sand and gravel, where two engines pump the water to the higher level, after which gravitation does its work, and in due course pours an ample supply through every street and lane in the town where it has been so long needed. It is impossible to even estimate the importance of this work in a sanitary point of view, and there can be little doubt of Workington proving, with an unlimited supply of Derwent water, followed by efficient drainage and cleanliness, one of the healthiest towns in the kingdom.

In 1859 Charles Lamport, Esq., presented the town with a drinking-fountain. It consists of a neat mural slab and basin of polished granite, and is situated in Sanderson-street.

A new covered market is now in course of erection by a company under the Limited Liability Act, the number of shares being 250, at £5 each. The market is expected to be completed in October, 1859. The principal entrance is in Portland-street; there is another in Curwen-street.

The Savings Bank, which occupies a good building in Pow-street, was established in 1828. The deposits now (1859) amount to £22,054 5s. 6d., belonging to 672 depositors, including charitable and friendly societies.

The Workington Benefit Building Society, which was established in May, 1857, has now 125 members, who at present hold 785 £24 shares. It is progressing very favourably.

CHARITIES.

Sir Patricius Curwen, Bart., by will dated 13th of December, 1664, bequeathed £10 towards erecting a school-house in the parish of Workington, in such convenient place as his wife and executrix should think fit; and he thereby further gave and bequeathed the annual sum of £6 6s. 8d., towards the maintenance of such schoolmaster or schoolmasters as should be appointed and elected by the ministers of Workington and Harrington, for the time being, and their several successors, when the said school should become vacant, together with the consent of any two of the church-wardens of the said parish of Workington, and which annual sum of £6 6s. 8d., for the maintenance of a schoolmaster so elected, he thereby directed should arise and accrue out of his demesne of Workington; and he thereby charged the said sum as a rent-charge upon his said demesne of Workington during the term of 999 years, to be paid yearly by the respective heirs and occupiers thereof to the said schoolmaster selected and appointed as abovesaid, with a power to the said schoolmaster to distrain in case of nonpayment. And

Thomas Curwen, by will dated 18th December, 1672, granted and bequeathed towards the maintenance and for the better encouragement of a schoolmaster in the said school, then lately built at Workington, all those three closes or inclosures, commonly known by the name and names of Colker Close, Dobby Miller's Close, and Moor Close, adjoining thereto, situate, lying, and being within the fields of Workington, together with all the appurtenances thereto belonging, to the proper use and behoof of the schoolmaster of the said school for the time being, and to all and every the successive schoolmaster or schoolmasters of the said school, for and during the term of 21 years after his the said testator's decease; and after the expiration of the said 21 years, the said closes with the appurtenances, to be to the use of the said school for ever; the respective schoolmasters paying yearly, upon the 2nd of February, 6s free rent to the respective heirs of Workington; and he thereby directed the several and respective heirs of his estate would in no wise oppose or withstand or endeavour to defeat the said charitable bequest and intention; and that his said bequest might attain the end of which he desired it, he thereby appointed his several and successive heirs of Workington, the parson of Workington for the time being, and his successors, together with the parson of Harrington for the time being, and his successors, whenever the said school should become vacant, to elect under their hands and seals, or under the hands and seals of any two of them, a schoolmaster or schoolmasters, as they should think fit, for the said school to enter into the said closes, with the appurtenances to their or his the said schoolmaster's proper use and behoof, during his or their continuing master of the said school. It appears that a school-house was erected soon after the death of Sir Patricius Curwen, by his executrix, upon part of the wastes adjoining the town of Workington; and there was also a Grammar school kept there by a master, who received his appointment from the heirs of the Workington estate. Up to the year 1724, the closes of land devised by Thomas Curwen, seem to have been enjoyed by the schoolmaster for the time being, but it does not appear that the rent-charge of £6 6s. 8d., left by Sir Patricius, was ever paid; if it was, the payment has been discontinued for many years. In 1724, Henry Curwen, Esq. had obtained the possession of the closes, and information was filed against him by His Majesty's attorney-general, at the relation of the minister and church-wardens of Workington, for the purpose of having the two wills carried into execution and the charity established; the defendant, however, died before he had put in an answer to the information, and the suit was never revived. It appears, however, that the schoolmaster enjoyed the closes again up to the year 1798, when Joseph Winder was appointed master; and he, by lease, date 23rd June, 1798, demised the same for the term of fourteen years, in case he should so long live and continue master of the school, to John Christian Curwen, Esq., who was then owner of the Workington estate, at the yearly rent of £42. The rent was regularly paid until the death of Joseph Winder, in 1803, Mr. Curwen having at that time discovered, by reference to his title deeds, that Thomas Curwen, the deviser, had no power to devise the closes above-mentioned, having been only tenant for life of that property, determined to apply the rents and profits thereof to some other charitable purpose, which he thought more advisable. He appointed, however, the Rev. Anthony Dalzell to the office of schoolmaster, then vacant, and agreed to give him a salary of £10 10s. per annum. The closes above-mentioned contain 70 acres of land, and are worth £140 per annum. An information was filed in 1810 against Mr. Curwen and other persons, by his majesty's attorney-general, at the relation of the Earl of Lonsdale, to compel the payment of the said rent-charge of £6 6s. 8d., and to recover the possession of the land above-mentioned, devised by Thomas Curwen. An answer was put in by Mr. Curwen, stating that the said Sir Patricius Curwen was merely tenant-in-tail of the said manor lands and hereditaments, and that the said Thomas Curwen was merely tenant for life of the same, and that they, or either of them, had no right to grant any rent-charge out of the said land, or to devise any part thereof; but that such devises were, and each of them was, void and of no effect. Exceptions were taken to his answer; and a further answer was put in by him, with a schedule of the deeds in his custody; and upon the inspection of those deeds, a letter, of which the following is a copy, was sent by the solicitor for the Earl of Lonsdale, to the solicitor for the defendant.

DEAR SIR,—After a minute investigation of the title to the Workington school lands, I beg leave to inform you, as Mr. Curwen's solicitor, that under the circumstances of the case the devise of Mr. Thomas Curwen cannot be established, and that the lands cannot be recovered for the use of the school.

I AM, &c.

To Ben. Thompson, Esq.

PETER H. YOUNGER.

Whitehaven, May 27th, 1813.

The information was soon after dismissed with costs, which were paid accordingly. It appears, upon enquiry, that by deed of settlement, dated 29th September, 1612, and a fine levied thereon, Sir Henry Curwen settled the manor and estate of Workington upon himself for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail under this settlement. Sir Patricius Curwen, the eldest son of Sir Henry, became tenant-in-tail, and died without issue, leaving a brother, Thomas Curwen, who succeeded him. Sir Patricius, therefore, had no power to change the inheritance. By deed of settlement, dated 26th February, 1666, and a fine levied thereon, Thomas Curwen and Eldred Curwen settled the said manor and estates on the said Thomas Curwen for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail; and, in default of issue, on the said Eldred Curwen for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail. Thomas Curwen died without issue, and was succeeded by Eldred Curwen, who died, leaving a son, so that Thomas Curwen was only tenant for life, and had no power of devising the closes above-mentioned. The site of the school-house, which was built upon the waste, appears never to have been conveyed to any person in trust for the charity; the soil, therefore, remained in the lord of the manor. In 1813 the building was pulled down by Mr. Curwen, and a room in the town was appropriated by him for the purposes of a school. The waste has since been enclosed under an act of Parliament; and the site of the school, with the adjoining land, has been set out and allotted by the commissioners.

Scott's Charity.—Jane Scott, by will dated 24th of January, 1816, bequeathed £800 stock, five-per-cents, unto the Rev. Peter How, rector of Workington, and three others upon trust, out of the dividends thereof to pay sixteen persons therein named 40s. each for their lives, to be paid on the 1st of January; and as they should respectively die, or cease to inhabit the township of Workington, upon trust to pay 40s. in like manner to each such persons, being wives, unmarried women, or widows, and resident in the said township of Workington (to be appointed as thereafter mentioned), as should be considered by her trustees to be in want, and proper objects of the charity. And upon further trust, to retain and keep the remainder of the dividends, after payment of all expenses, to their own use and benefit as a compensation for their trouble. And the testatrix directed, that when any of the said annuitants should die, or no longer reside in the said township, or should not be considered as a proper object, her trustees should appoint another person to fill up the vacancy, so that the number of women should always be kept up to sixteen. And the testatrix directed, that in case the said Peter How should be no longer resident rector, that the other trustees might nominate another person, of Workington, to be a trustee in his stead, it being her express will that the number of trustees should always be kept to four: and that one of the four should at all times, for ever, be the resident rector or minister of the parish church at Workington, provided that the surviving trustees should think him a proper person.

Jackson's Charity.—Mr. Robert Jackson, late of Workington, who died 4th April, 1826, by his will dated 6th December, 1820, bequeathed £800 for the benefit of sixteen poor women resident in Workington, to the vicar of Workington for the time being, and three other trustees. In consequence of a Chancery suit against the trustees and executors, the principal is now reduced to the sum of £430 3s., which is placed in the Three-per-cent Annuities. The dividends are paid to the poor women on each New Year's Day.

Leathes' Charity.—Miss Elizabeth Leathes, late of Workington, who died 7th July, 1858, by will dated 18th April, 1856, bequeathed £800 in the ordinary capital stock of the Great Western Railway Company, the dividends to be applied to the payment of £1 each to the four trustees, one of whom to be the rector of Workington for the time being; out of the remainder £2 each is to be paid to six poor women who are members of the Church of England, natives of Workington township, and not under sixty years of age. To be paid on the 25th of December each year. If any surplus after payment of annuities in any year, it is to be deposited in the Cumberland Union Bank, or Savings Bank, as a provision against any deficiency in the annual income, or pay such surplus to such other poor women, and in such proportions, as the trustees and rector shall think fit.

AMUSEMENTS.

Easter Tuesday is a great day amongst the colliers and sailors, who meet on the Cloffocks¹ at four o'clock in the afternoon of that day, for the purpose of playing the game of football—an old custom peculiar to the place, and which has existed for time out of mind, and which induces hundreds to come from a distance to witness. The mode of procedure is as follows. The centre of the Cloffocks being determined as near as can be done, the sailors take the lower part, to the end of the Merchants' Quay; whilst the colliers take the higher part of the said Cloffocks, to Workington Hall Park. The ball is then thrown off, when the sailors endeavour to force it down, by kicking and bearing and throwing it towards the Merchants' Quay; whilst the colliers strive to prevent them, and endeavour to force it up bank towards Workington Hall. Every exertion is made on both sides; they haul and pull one another about like demented men, in many instances tearing each others clothes to pieces; each party cheering as the ball goes up or down. The colliers' main aim whilst engaged in the play is to force the ball into the river Derwent, which having accomplished they endeavour to carry it up the centre of the river; whilst the sailors, and others who are trying to get the ball down, strive to prevent, and duck one another overhead in the river, sometimes holding each other under the water for a considerable time. After playing for two or three hours the ball is haled by either one side or the other. The successful party is then treated with a sum of money, which is spent in drink, and eventually finish up with a fight or two, as all disagreements during the past year are put off until this night to settle; and the town is almost considered in a state of siege, as the lower class think whatever wrong they do on that day the law cannot lay hold of them.

GREAT CLIFTON.

This township contains 893 acres, and its rateable value is £1,646. The population in 1801 was 268; in 1811, 228; in 1821, 251; in 1831, 286; in 1841, 378; and in 1851, 374. Since the last census the population has greatly increased, in consequence of the extension of the collieries.

Great and Little Clifton form a manor, which was given by William de Meschines to Waltheof, son of Gospatric Earl of Dunbar, and by the heiress of that family came to the Lucys, and from them to the Eglesfields, and subsequently to the Berdseys, one of whom, William de Berdsey, in the 35th Henry VIII. was found by inquisition to hold his messuage and vill of Clifton of the king as of the manor of Dean, by knight's service, rendering for the same 2s. 10d. cornage and 17s. 1d. for rent, and suit of court, homage, and witnessman in the five towns. He held Kirk Clifton, or Great Clifton, by the service of 3s. 4d. cornage, with suit of court, witnessman as aforesaid, and serjeant's food. By a daughter and co-heir of the said William, Clifton manor came to the Salkelds of Whitehall. An inquisition taken in 1578 tells us that at that period "Lancelot Salkeld, Esq., in right of his wife, daughter and heiress of Michal Bardsey, Esq., held certain lands and tenements in Clifton, late the lands of Margaret Bardsey, by homage, fealty, and suit of court, and paid yearly for cornage 6s. 2d., and for free rent 17s. 5d., in toto per annum 28s. 7d." The Salkeld family sold Clifton manor to Sir James ¹ The extra-parochial place called Cloffocks, comprising about 100 acres, seems to have been included in the returns for Workington township in 1801, 1811, and 1831. In 1821 the number of its inhabitants was 15; in 1841, 4. The houses having been taken down, Cloffocks was uninhabited in 1851.

Lowther, Bart., from whom it has descended to the Earl of Lonsdale, the present lord. The principal landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale and R. Watts, Esq. The townships of Great and Little Clifton were enclosed by act of Parliament, passed in 1814.

The village of Great Clifton, or Kirk Clifton, is situated on the south side of the Derwent, two and a half miles east of Workington, and five and a half miles west of Cockermouth. Tradition tells us that a market was formerly held here, and in corroboration of the statement the remains of an ancient cross are still pointed out.

THE CHAPEL.

Clifton Chapel is a very ancient edifice, said to have been founded in the time of Henry I., but it has been much modernised by frequent repairs. It occupies a very picturesque situation in the township of Little Clifton, on the summit of a cliff overlooking the village. In the sixteenth and early part of the seventeenth century marriages were solemnised in this chapel. The burial ground was disused, and the walls were in a state of decay, from 1736 to 1821, when Dr. Law, bishop of Chester, consecrated an additional piece of ground. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the rector of Workington, and is worth about £100 a year, arising from £800 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, in 1738, 1752, 1775, and 1793, with which twenty-two acres of land were purchased in Kinniside, near Whitehaven, in the year 1760, and subsequently fifteen acres two roods and sixteen perches in the township of Great Clifton. In addition, there was a Parliamentary grant of £1,000 obtained in 1819, and £25 a year from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in 1843. On the enclosure of the commons, in 1817, there were upwards of 329 acres allotted in lieu of tithes, prescriptions, &c., to the living of the old church of Workington; Little Clifton township giving 195 acres and 32 perches, and Great Clifton 134 acres and 20 perches. The chapel will accommodate about 220 people.

INCUMBENTS.—Joseph Winder, 1733; Anthony Dalzell, 1801; Joseph Hetherington, 1850.

The Wesleyans have a small chapel in the village.

Clifton House, the seat of Richard Watts, Esq., is a large mansion, occupying a delightful and elevated situation, two miles east of Whitehaven, overlooking the picturesque vale of the Derwent, and commanding beautiful and extensive prospects both by sea and land.

THE CLIFTON COAL FIELD.

This coal field, lying within the townships of Great and Little Clifton, comprises two workable seams, known by the local designations of the Ten Quarters and the Main Band, which are separated by about twenty-five fathoms of sandstone and shales. The following sections of the two seams are taken in the workings in the Lowther Pit, belonging to Messrs. Fletcher:—

TEN QUARTERS.		f.	in.
Top Coal	2	3
Laying in	1	10
Parting	0	3
Stone	0	4
Sparr	0	7
Total	5	3
MAIN BAND.		f.	in.
Crow Coal	1	4
Black Shale	3	0
Top Coal	0	10
Slate	0	4½
Felling	1	8
Duff	0	1
Laying in	1	2
" Duff	0	1
Bottom Coal	1	10
Cannel	0	6
Tom	0	9
Little Coal	0	10
Dirt	0	2
Total	12	7½

Workable part of seam.

The Main Band coal is considered superior to almost any other raised in Cumberland, and owing to its freedom from pyrites (sulphuret of iron) is well adapted for puddling and blast furnaces, and for locomotive purposes. It also enjoys a high reputation in the Irish markets both as a steam and house coal. Collieries are known to have existed at the rise, or southern extremity, of this coal field upwards of a century ago. Traces still remain, about half a mile higher up the river Marron than Little Clifton, of several iron furnaces which belonged to an ancestor of John Cookson, Esq., of Newcastle, and which were supplied with fuel from pits immediately adjacent. Some of these pits were worked by Mr. Cookson himself, and others by the Lowther family. They were drained either by adits driven from the side of the Marron or by means of water-wheels, for which that stream supplied the motive power. Towards the close of last century Mr. Cookson relinquished his collieries, owing to the exhaustion of some of his royalties and the suspension of his iron works. About the same time also, Sir James Lowther (afterwards Lord Lonsdale) threw in his pits here, in consequence, as tradition tells us, of a curious misunderstanding with his agent. It is said that the agent secretly entered into partnership with the originators of the Seaton iron works, for which a lease was to be granted by Sir James, and that in this double capacity he managed to introduce into the lease some clauses much more favourable to the former than to the latter. One stipulation was, that as long as the Lowthers worked any coal-mines within a certain distance of the iron-works they were bound to supply the iron-works with coal at a specified price. In course of time Sir James happened to discover the state of the case, and having no power to break through this condition he at once determined to evade his liability by closing the whole of his pits within the prescribed circuit. Accordingly the Clifton, Seaton, and St. Helen's collieries were all abandoned, almost without a day's notice. So suddenly, indeed, was the step taken that the pumps and two brass working barrels, in Reelfit Pit, near Bridgefoot, were left in, where they remain to the present time. No further attempt was made to open out the Clifton coal field until 1827, when Mr. Thomas Westray accomplished the winning of the Ten Quarters Seam, and afterwards of the Main Band (at a depth of fifty-five fathoms), in a royalty belonging to the late Mr. Cookson, not far from Great Clifton. In 1842, Mr. Westray having worked out this royalty, the Earl of Lonsdale purchased the colliery, in order to afford him access to his own coal adjoining, and it has since been prosecuted to a considerable extent, first by his lordship and then by his lessees. In the year 1852, Messrs. Isaac and William Fletcher, of Tarn Bank (whose father and grandfather had been largely engaged in the coal trade of West Cumberland), took a lease of the royalties in Little Clifton belonging to Henry Curwen, Esq., of Workington Hall, and immediately sank a pit (forty fathoms to the Main Band) near Crossbarrow. Two years subsequently these gentlemen obtained from John Cookson, Esq., a lease of his remaining coal in that township, and proceeded to open out another winning in the same seam at Harry Gill, about 100 yards from the river Derwent and contiguous to the Cockermouth and Workington railway. The success of the speculation induced Lord Lonsdale to sink a new pit half a mile to the westward, which reached the Main Band in the winter of 1855-6, at a depth of only thirty fathoms. A little prior to this time Messrs. Fletcher had taken of the owners of the surface some other royalties of coal in Little Clifton, to which the Earl of Lonsdale preferred a claim as lord of the manor. A dispute arose, and seemed likely to proceed to extremities, when it was set at rest by his lordship purchasing the estates in question, and in conformity with a previous arrangement, renewing the leases of the coal to Messrs. Fletcher. Several landowners in Great Clifton now raised a doubt whether the lord of the manor was entitled as such to the coal under their freehold property adjoining his lordship's new pit. This dispute was finally settled in the same way as that in Little Clifton, and the noble earl very soon became the owner of nearly all the soil in both townships. In March, 1856, Lord Lonsdale granted a lease of the whole of his royalties, ancient and acquired, in Great and Little Clifton, to Messrs. Fletcher, who completed the working arrangements of the new (or Lowther) pit in a style of durability and efficiency that will bear comparison with that of any colliery in the kingdom. In working to the westward of this pit the lessees encountered a downthrow "fault" of twenty-five fathoms, beyond which they are now working the Ten Quarters Seam. They have recently sunk the pit thirty fathoms deeper to enable them to win by a drift the Main Band coal on the west side of the "fault." Messrs. Fletcher have at present three pits in operation, employing upwards of 600 hands, and it is understood they are in a position to raise from 600 to 800 tons daily. A portion of the coal is sent by railway to Cockermouth, for local consumption there, and a portion to the iron-works at Workington and Seaton, but the great bulk is exported to Dublin and Belfast, and other Irish ports. The Workington harbour and the Cockermouth and Workington railway are both chiefly dependent for their revenues upon the Clifton colliery. The Earl of Lonsdale and Messrs. Fletcher have lately erected upwards of sixty cottages in connection with the colliery, in which a degree of provision is made for the comfort and decency of the inmates highly creditable to the owners. A national school¹—a very handsome Gothic building, capable of accommodating 400 scholars—has just been established, midway between Great and Little Clifton, for the benefit of the increasing mining population. A colliers' reading-room has also been set on foot at Great Clifton, where lectures are occasionally delivered. Messrs. Fletcher's workmen all belong to a medical club, and many of them to a general benefit club.

LITTLE CLIFTON.

The population of this township in 1801 was 166; in 1811, 193; in 1821, 203; in 1831, 221; in 1841, 281; and in 1851, 239. Its area is 1,038 acres, and its rateable value £1,065. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale, Richard Watts, Esq., Isaac Thompson, Esq., and L. Bouch, Esq. Within this township are a corn-mill and an edge-tool and sickle manufactory.

¹ The school cost upwards of £500; of which £250 was contributed by the Committee of Privy Council on Education, £250 (including the value of the site) by Messrs. I. and W. Fletcher, £100 by Lord Lonsdale, and £50 by Richard Watts, Esq.

The village of Little Clifton is situated on an eminence near the junction of the Marron with the small rivulet called the Lostrigg, three miles east of Workington, and four and a half west of Cockermouth.

STAINBURN.

The area of Stainburn is 1,143 acres, and its rateable value £1,604. In 1801 it contained 137 inhabitants; in 1811, 140; in 1821, 138; in 1831, 174; in 1841, 179; and in 1851, 152. This township is said to derive its name from stain, or stein, stone, and burn, a stream or rivulet, and means the stony stream. Waltheof, lord of Allerdale, son of Gospatric, earl of Dunbar, gave Stainburn, which consisted of three carucates of land, to the abbey of St. Mary, at York, for the use of the cell of St. Bees. The prior of the last-named house seems to have built here a chapel or oratory, to which Henry IV. presented Robert Hunt; but the right of presentation as exercised by the king was questioned by the abbot of the mother house of York, and the king, upon inquiry and trial, revoked the grant. The manor-house of Stainburn was burnt by the Scots in 1315. Lord Lonsdale, J. Harrison, Esq., and Michael Falcon, Esq., are the principal landowners. This township was enclosed in pursuance of an act passed in 1812. At the enclosure of the common there was a portion set aside as a public quarry, for the use of the inhabitants of the township.

We subjoin the following customs of the manor of Stainburn:—This manor seems anciently to have been held under the church by some particular customs yet remaining; accordingly we find that it still pays a free rent of 3s. 4d. yearly to the dissolved monastery of St. Bees. The Earl of Lonsdale is impropriator. There was formerly a chapel at Stainburn, situated probably in a field about a quarter of a mile south-west of the village, which still retains the name of Chapel Close; there is now no vestige remaining to point out the place. It is held nearly by the same tenure as Priestgate, in the manor of Workington, which also pays a small free rent to St. Bees, and whilst both manors were held under the Curwens of Workington Hall, the tenants were said to attend at both courts as jurymen or suitors on special occasions. Stainburn is also obliged to send a man twice in the year to attend the head courts of Cockermouth, held in the spring and autumn, to make presentments if anything is wrong about hedges, roads, water-courses, pinfolds, &c., within the manor, who is liable to serve on the jury and answer the call for Stainburn. In Stainburn manor the lord never dies: that is, there is no general fine due or paid on his death in that respect, resembling lands held of the king or of spiritual lords of church lands. A tenant of Stainburn dying possessed of a messuage or tenement, his or her heir-at-law pays a twenty-penny fine certain, or twenty times the ancient yearly customary lord's rent upon his or her admission to the descended premises. A tenant of Stainburn selling his customary estate, the purchaser pays a thirty-penny fine certain, or thirty times the ancient yearly customary fineable lord's rent on his or her being admitted tenant to the alienated premises. A man and his wife being joint purchasers were formerly admitted as joint tenants on payment of a forty-five-penny fine certain (being equal to an alienation twice-and-a-half.) But this has been out of usage of late, the stewards not choosing to have more than one tenant for one parcel. How far this is right yet remains to be tried. It is certainly not in accordance with the custom of the manor. A tenant of an estate at Stainburn dying unmarried or a bachelor (without leaving a widow) the estate pays no heriot. A tenant in Stainburn having occasion to mortgage his customary estate, pays a license money of five per cent. to the lord. The mortgagee is admitted tenant, and the alienation fine is respited for seven years on the mortgagee giving his note for the money, payable at the end of that time; which the lord has seldom or never been known to receive, though forfeited. There is a fog mail rent paid yearly to the lord on Good Friday of 8s. 4d., being 5d. each land for eight original lands, for the right of putting each a cow into the lord's ground in fog time; this privilege seems at present lost or fallen into disuse. The greave for Stainburn, collecting the lord's rents, hens and eggs, and fog mail, &c., pays no hens nor eggs for his estate the year he does the office of greave. There is a prescription in lieu of tithe hay paid out of Stainburn yearly to the rector of Workington, being 6s. 8d., equal to 10d. each tenement for eight original lands. The customary lands in Stainburn pay corn-tithes in kind to the rector of Workington, being the tenth-part and other small dues. The hall demesne is exempted on paying a prescription. Stainburn township maintains its own poor.

The village of Stainburn is on the Cockermouth road, one mile east of Workington.

Stainburn House is the property of John Harrison, Esq.; Briery Dale the residence of Michael Falcon, Esq.; and Ellerdale the seat of Charles Litt, Esq.

Harrison of Allerdale and Stainburn.

JOHN HARRISON, Esq., of Winscales and Stainburn, married, in the year 1834, Anne, eldest daughter of Allison Crossthwaite, Esq., of Workington, and has issue two sons and one daughter. This gentleman is the eldest son of William Falcon, Esq., by Jane, his wife, second daughter of Thomas Harrison, Esq., of Winscales, and great grandson of Michael Falcon, Esq., a shipbuilder of great eminence at Workington, who was the descendant of a very ancient family in Cumberland. The surname he now bears Mr. Harrison assumed by royal license, dated 19th August, 1844, on succeeding to the estate of his maternal ancestors, at the decease of his uncle, John Harrison, Esq.

Arms.—Quarterly: 1st and 4th, arg., two bars gemelles, sa., between three hares, courant, ppr. for Harrison; 2nd and 3rd, ermine, two chevronels, paly, az. and sa., between three falcons, ppr., belled, or, and holding in the beak a lure, of the last, for Falcon.

Crest.—Upon a mount, vert, a stag, courant, regardant, sa., semée of quatrefoils, attired and unguled, or, holding in the mouth an arrow, in bend, sinister, ppr. of Harrison; on a fret, sa., a falcon, rising, ppr., belled, or, and holding in the beak a lure, of the last, for Falcon.

Motto.—Vite, coram Deo, B. R.

WINSCALES.

Winscales comprises an area of 903 acres, and its rateable value is £908. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 153; in 1811, 165; in 1821, 157; in 1831, 100; in 1841, 111; and in 1851, 114. Winscales is included in the manor of Workington. It includes the small hamlet of Midtown, two miles south-east of Workington, and several scattered farm-houses. The principal landowners are Henry Curwen, Esq., and John Harrison, Esq. This township was enclosed in pursuance of an act passed in 1809.

Winscales House, a neat mansion, commanding extensive prospects, is the property of J. Harrison, Esq.

Joseph Thompson, a farmer at Winscales, an eccentric character, used to attend Harrington church during the time of Mr. Noble's ministry, and sat beside the clerk reading aloud with him the responses, which used to annoy the clerk so much, that on one particular Sunday, Mr. Thompson responding louder than usual, so incensed the clerk that he gave Mr. Thompson a slap across the mouth with his hand, exclaiming, "thee clerk or me clerk," which, when service was ended, Mr. Thompson complained of to Mr. Noble. Mr. Noble rather sided with the clerk, and gently reproved Mr. Thompson, telling him "he ought not to read so loud as to drown the clerk's voice." "Very well," Mr. Thomson says, "if I am not allowed to please myself I will come no more to your church." Which promise he faithfully kept, never entering the doors again. Mr. Thompson, when on his death bed, desired that his body might be quietly buried at midnight in the middle of the moor (now enclosed land) at Scaw, near Harrington, without any service being read over it, which was accordingly done at his request; and there is still to be seen at the top of a field called Headstone Field, at Scaw, a massive headstone with the following inscription engraved on the top:—

"Joseph Thompson may here be found,
Who would not lie in consecrated ground.

He d. May 3rd 1811, 1745,
Aged 63 when he was alive."

Some farmer at Scaw having thoughtlessly pulled up the headstone out of the middle of the field and placed it underneath the hedge at the top of the rigg that Mr. Thompson was buried upon.

Bootle Ward.

THIS new division of the county has been formed in pursuance of an arrangement made by the magistrates of the county at the quarter sessions held at Carlisle, October 20th, 1857. The new arrangement came into effect on the 1st January, 1858, but does not extend to police purposes. Bootle Ward embraces the parishes of Bootle, Corney, Muncester, Waberthwaite, Whicham, and Whitbeck; and the township of Birker and Austhwaite, Millom, and Ulpha, in the parish of Millom, and the township of Eskdale and Wasdale, in the parish of St. Bees. The Esk and the Duddon are the principal rivers in this part of the county. Bootle and Ravensglass are the principal towns.

BOOTLE PARISH.

BOOTLE parish is bounded on the north by Waberthwaite, on the west by the Irish Sea, on the south by Whitbeck, and on the east by Corney and Thwaites. It comprises no dependent townships. Esk Meals, which extends along the coast, is remarkable for its large rabbit warren. In this parish is a small bay, called Selker's Bay, where, it is said, in calm weather the sunken remains of small vessels or galleys can be seen, which, tradition says, are Roman, having been left here by the imperial legionaries in one of their invasions.

Bootle parish comprises an area of 7,146 acres, and its rateable value is £3,705. The population in 1801 was 547; in 1811, 602; in 1821, 656; in 1831, 737; in 1841, 696; and in 1851, 811, who are resident in the town of Bootle and in dispersed dwellings all over the parish. Agriculture is the principal employment, but bacon-curing, and the manufacture of candles afford employment to many of the inhabitants. The soil is much varied, but on the whole fertile. The Whitehaven and Furness railway passes through the lower part of the parish, and has stations at Bootle and Esk Meals. The inhabitants attend the markets at Ulverstone and Whitehaven.

The manor of Bootle includes the parish of Bootle and part of the parish of Whitbeck. The boundaries of the manor are as follow:—Beginning at the north end of a place called Prior Park Wall, at which place the boundary of this manor unites with the boundary of the manor of Ulpha, and from thence to a place called Paddy Cragg, which said Paddy Cragg is the north boundary of the manor of Thwaites, and from the said Paddy Cragg south-westerly to Little Paddy Cragg, from thence to Charity Chair, and from thence southeast to Black Dyke (being the confines of Fell Side Pasture and Swinside), and from thence south-westerly to a place called Seavy Syke, and from thence to Rawtreeford, from thence alongside the boundary of the manor of Whicham and Silecroft through a place called Hentoe, in a direct line south-westerly between Great Godderside and Little Godderside, being the south-west boundary of the manor of Whicham and Silecroft, and from thence in a direct line westerly to a great stone upon the common or fell above a place called Broughton Tenement, near Monkfoss, and from the said great stone south-westerly, or near west, to a place called Gutterby Lane-end, at the sea-beach, and from thence in a direct line down to low water-mark, and from thence northwards along the coast to the foot of the river Esk, where the same runs into the sea. The Earl of Lonsdale is lord of the manor.

At Bootle there formerly stood an old mansion of the Copelands, an ancient family who had an estate here, which, in the reign of the unfortunate Richard II. or Henry IV., was divided between three daughters, co-heiresses, married to members of the Huddleston, Pennington, and Senhouse families.

THE TOWN OF BOOTLE.

This ancient market town, said to be the smallest market town in England, is situated in 54° 7' north latitude and 3° 20' west longitude. It is sixty miles south-south-west from Carlisle, and 278 north-west from London by road, and about two miles west from the Irish Sea. It consists of a long street of tolerably well-built houses. The market was granted to John de Hudleston, in 1347, to be held on Wednesday; and a fair for four days at the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, September 14th. The market has been discontinued for many years; but fairs for cattle, horses, and sheep, are held on the 20th of April and 24th of September; and for the hiring of servants, on the Friday before Whitsuntide and the Friday before the 11th of November. The market cross is surrounded with steps, and has four shields at the base of the shaft, one of which is charged with the arms of the Hudlestons, formerly lords of Millom.

THE CHURCH.

Bootle church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient structure, which in the course of ages has undergone extensive alterations, retaining in our days but little of its original appearance. It was repaired at the end of the last century, and again in 1837, when north and south transepts were added. The church was originally Norman, but when the additions were made the whole was altered to Early English, with the exception of the chancel, which is still Norman. The erection of a tower was begun in 1853, but from the want of funds is not yet completed. When digging the foundations for this part of the church six skeletons were found, of tall stature, lying north and south. The interior of the church is neatly pewed, and all the improvements have been effected in good taste. The font is a capacious red sandstone basin, of an octagonal form, having in each square two shields, with the following inscription in black letter: "In Nomine Patris & Filii & Spirit Sancti." There are also the initials "R. N.," and on another shield a bugle horn, and the initials "J. H." in black letter. A monumental brass on the south wall of the chancel bears the effigies of a knight in armour, with the following inscription: "Here lieth Sir Hugh Askew, Knyght, late of the seller to Kynge Edward the VI., which Sir Hugh was made Knyght, at Musselborough felde, in the year of oure Lord 1547, and died the second day of Marche, in the yere of our Lord God 1562." There are tablets and inscriptions to the memory of members of the Benson, Hulton, Steele, and Wennington families. The church was enlarged in the year 1837, by which means 148 additional sittings were obtained; and in consequence of a grant from the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels, eighty-four of that number are hereby declared to be free and unappropriated for ever, in addition to 315 sittings formerly provided, thirty of which are free. The benefice, a rectory, was given to the abbey of St. Mary at York, by Godard Dapifer, the second lord of Millom. In the year 1527 the abbot and convent presented a rector; in 1660 William Pennington presented; and in 1664 a rector was instituted on the presentation of the king. In 1717 R. Pennington, Esq., was certified as the patron. Lord Muncaster, his descendant, sold it to E. W. Wakefield, Esq., of Kendal, from whom the advowson was purchased by the Earl of Lonsdale, the present proprietor. The living was valued in the King's Book at £19 17s. 3d., and was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £70 2s. 2d.; but it is now worth £525 a year. The tithes were commuted in 1849 for £439. The parish registers commence in 1655.

RECTORS.—Richard Brown occurs 1535; Richard Hulton, 1600; Richard Hulton, 1661; Henry Holmes, 1704; Daniel Steele, 1729; Miles Wennington, 1764; Henry Crookbaine, 1771; Thomas Smith, 1776; Thomas Smith, 1789; James Satterthwaite, 1807; John Fleming, 1813; Alexander Scott, 1835; Arthur Wilkin, 1848.

The rectory, pleasantly situated near the church, is a handsome Elizabethan building, erected by the late rector, at a cost of about £1,200.

There is one dissenting place of worship in the town, which was erected in 1780, by the late Mr. Joseph Whitridge, for the use of Lady Huntingdon's Connexion, and he endowed it with £1,000, vested in trustees, who have placed the chapel in the hands of the Presbyterians—or, rather, the minister, the Rev. Thomas L. Lessel, is connected with that religious body. The chapel will accommodate about 250 persons.

Bootle parish contains two schools. The old school, situated at Hysemoor, was rebuilt by the railway company in 1847, the old school-house being required by them. It consists of two separate schools for boys and girls, and possesses an endowment, for which the master educates gratuitously six children of this parish, and also children from the three estates of Middleton Place, Whitestone, and Kinnmont in Corney parish, and from the estate of Annaside, in the parish of Whitbeck. The other school, erected in 1830, is a good substantial building, in the Gothic style. The cost of erection was defrayed by the late Captain Shaw, who also bequeathed the sum of £300 to the rector of Bootle and Corney, and the perpetual curate of Whitbeck for the time being, in trust, to be invested by them in government securities at three per cent; and he directed that the interest so arising should be annually applied by them, in the first instance, towards the necessary repairs of the school, and the residue in payment of the master's salary.

CHARITIES.

Henry Singleton's Gift.—Henry Singleton, by deed dated 29th January, 1713, gave to trustees the sum of £200 for the use and towards the perpetual maintenance of a master to teach a free school for the benefit and education of children of the parish of Bootle and the towns of Middleton Place, in the parish of Corney, and Annaside in the parish of Whitbeck (in which places he had lands); the school to be kept in the school-house then erected on Hysemoor Side, in Bootle; and he directed that the said £200 should be put out at interest, laid out in lands, or otherwise disposed of; and that the product thereof should belong to the master of the free school for the time being for ever. The rector and seven other persons are trustees.

Ann Hodgson's Bequest.—Mrs. Ann Hodgson, by will dated 9th May, 1779, left £50 to the minister and churchwardens of Bootle, to lay out the same to the best advantage for the use of the free school, and to pay the interest thereof to the schoolmaster for the time being; and she directed that the estates of Low Kinmont and Whitstones, in the parish of Corney, should be free to the said school by virtue of her legacy.

Rev. Henry Holmes's Gift.—The Rev. Henry Holmes, a former rector of Bootle, also gave £50 to this school.

Mrs. Ann Hodgson's and Rev. Miles Wennington's Charities for the Poor.—Mrs. Ann Hodgson left £10, and the Rev. Miles Wennington, rector of the parish, £20, to the minister and churchwardens, in trust, that they should lay out the same for the use of poor housekeepers in Bootle, not being pensioners, the interest thereof to be distributed by them amongst such persons yearly on St. Thomas's Day. This sum of £30 was carried to the parish account, and 30s. out of the poor rates is annually distributed; on St. Thomas's Day, amongst four or five poor housekeepers, who do not receive regular parish relief.

POOR-LAW UNION.

The Bootle poor-law union is divided into two sub-districts, viz.: Muncaster, comprising Eskdale and Wasdale, Birker and Austhwaite, Irtton, Drigg, and Carleton, embracing Muncaster, Stainton Farm, and Waberthwaite; and Bootle, including Corney, Bootle, Whitbeck, Whicham, Chapel Sucken, Millom Below, Millom Above, Thwaites, and Ulpha. The area is 100,066 statute acres. The population in 1851 was 6,008, of whom 3,154 were males, and 2,854 females. The number of inhabited houses at the same period was 1,056; of uninhabited, 58; and 12 were building. The total receipts of the union in the year 1858 amounted to £1,889 17s. 1½d., and the expenditure to £1,846 16s. 3½d. Situated between Bootle and the railway station is the new workhouse, which was erected in 1856-7, at a cost of £2,250. It is a substantial stone building, capable of accommodating 100 persons. The number of inmates at present (1859) is fifty.

At Seaton, in this parish, are the remains of Seaton Priory, called also the Nunnery of Leakley, consisting of a portion of the priory chapel, including a fine Early English window. The date of the foundation of this religious house does not appear to be known. It must have been previous to the commencement of the thirteenth century, for we find that at that period Henry Fitz Arthur gave lands at Seaton to the nuns of Leakley, or Seaton, which lands were excepted in the deed of feoffment made by him to his daughter Gunhilda. The priory was founded for nuns of the order of St. Benedict, and was dedicated to St. Leonard. The church of Irtton appears to have been appropriated to this nunnery in 1227. Shortly after its foundation, Henry Duke of Lancaster, subsequently King Henry IV., by charter, dated 1357, granted to the nuns of Seaton the hospital of St. Leonard in Lancaster, with power to nominate the chaplain. This grant was made in consequence of the poverty of the community of Seaton. In 1459 Thomas York, abbot of Holme Cultram, leased to Elizabeth Cref, prioress of Seaton, all the lands between the rivers Esk and Duddon, for twelve years, at the yearly rent of twenty shillings. These lands appear to have been granted to Holme Cultram Abbey by Gunhilda, daughter of Henry de Royville, fourth lord of Millom, and were confirmed to the same abbey by John de Hudleston and Joan his widow. In the King's Book the priory of Seaton is valued at £12 12s. per annum. At the Dissolution the possessions of this convent were valued at £12 12s. 6d. according to Dugdale, or £13 17s. 4d. according to Speed. In the year 1542 Henry VIII. granted this priory to Sir Hugh Askew, Knt., to hold to the king, in capite, by the service of the twentieth-part of one knight's fee, and of the rent of 9s. 2d., to be paid yearly into the court of augmentations. Sir Hugh settled the property upon his wife (a daughter of Sir John Hudleston); and she, after his decease, marrying into the family of the Penningtons of Muncaster, gave the same to her younger son, William Pennington. It was subsequently sold by John Lord Muncaster, and is now the property of Edward Wakefield, Esq., of Kendal.

Seaton Hall, which adjoins the ruins of the ancient priory, is the residence of J. E. Weston, Esq.

Esk Meals, the seat and property of Mrs. Falcon, is situated at the northern extremity of the parish, three and a half miles north of Bootle.

Blackcombe, rightly so called from the gloomy heather on its surface, is in this parish. The base being at the extremity of the mountain chain, on the sea shore, between Ravenglass and the estuary of the Duddon, the prospect is one of the greatest variety. The sublime ocean forms one-half of the circumference, with Peel Castle and the Isle of Walney on the south; in the west, the Isle of Man is a conspicuous object; the fine indented coast, the bulwark of Cumberland, tends away to the north; the towns of Egremont and Ravenglass, Bootle and Broughton, give animation to the scene; the beauties of Duddon repose at the feet; and, far in the east, a mighty assemblage of mountains rear their gigantic heads.

CORNEY PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by Waberthwaite, on the west and south by Bootle, and on the east by a range of lofty fells extending to Blackcombe. The soil on the west or low side of the parish consists of a deep clay or loam, exceedingly productive in the growth of wheat and other grain; and on the high grounds it is for the most part light and dry, yielding large quantities of green and other crops, and supplying pasture for numerous flocks of sheep. Iron-ore exists in several parts of the parish. Corney possesses no dependent townships.

The area of Corney parish is 3,890 acres, and its rateable value £1,772 10s. The population in 1801 was 222; in 1811, 331; in 1821, 289; in 1831, 292; in 1841, 273; and in 1851, 278; who are dispersed over the parish. Agriculture is the only employment; Whitehaven and Ulverstone are the markets attended. Many of the farms here are occupied by their respective owners, and the parish is remarkable for the longevity of its inhabitants. The lovers of picturesque scenery will be amply repaid by visiting a deep ravine on the Corney Hall estate, called Black Dub Gill, where the spectator cannot fail to be agreeably surprised at the majestic rocks which rise one above another, clothed with wood of every hue, while the deep sound of the Annas,¹ which flows through this romantic glen, adds not a little to the general interest, making it one of the most delightful places in the neighbourhood. Corney has long been noted for its superior breed of cattle.

The manor of Corney belonged at an early period to "Michael Falconer," whose posterity assumed the local name, styling themselves De Corney, and in the reign of King John, or Henry III. were enfeoffed of the manor. This family is supposed to have failed in issue male, and so became extinct, in the reign of Henry III., when the heiress of the De Cornys brought it in marriage to the Penningtons, ancestors of Lord Muncaster, the present lord of the manor. The manor house, long since decayed, was at Middleton Place, the ancient residence of the Middleton family. Several of the estates here have been enfranchised, yet there are still many customary tenants. The Earl of Lonsdale is lord of certain lands, messuages, &c., and a few of the landowners are lords of their own lands. About sixty acres of land, called Whitway, pay poor and highway rates to Waberthwaite, and a prescription, or modus, of two shillings a year to the rector of Corney. The landowners are Lord Muncaster, Richard Hobson, Esq., John Benn, Esq.; Miss Tyson, Mrs. Ann Jackson, Elizabeth Pritt, Miss Jane Grindale, Mrs. Jane Falcon, Mrs. Anne Falcon, Elizabeth Pickethall; Messrs. Edward Hardy, Edward Suddurd, Joseph Jackson, Thomas Smith, William Pritt, Daniel Pritt, John Jackson, Henry Pullein, J. B. Postlethwaite, William Dickinson, Thomas Carr, Captain John Willock, John Borrowdale, Edward Wakefield, John Poole, John and Robert Pickethall, William Pickethall, Thomas Jackson, and others. The parish was enclosed in 1818.

THE CHURCH.

Corney church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a plain edifice, occupying an elevated site near the centre of the parish, four miles south-south-east of ¹ The Annas takes its rise at Corney Fell, and after flowing through the parish, enters that of Bootle, which it divides from Whitebeck, finally emptying itself into the sea at the hamlet of Annaside. On the 29th of July, 1836, the inhabitants of this parish were suddenly alarmed by the bursting of a waterspout on Corney Fell. The mountain presented one entire sheet of water, which came rolling down with awful impetuosity, in its course demolishing fences, tearing up and rendering impassable the roads, washing down several bridges, and inundating the low grounds to an extent never before known.

Ravenglass, and two miles north-by-east of Bootle. A vestry was added in 1847. The benefice formerly belonged to the abbey of St. Mary, at York, the abbot of which presented in 1536, but it is now a rectory in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale, the advowson being purchased of John, first baron of Muncaster, in 1803. The living is valued in the King's Book at £9 17s. 1d., and was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £22 11s. 10d.; it is now worth £175 a year. The tithes were commuted in 1845 for a yearly rent charge of £147. The parish registers commence in 1754.

RECTORS.—Robert Hutton occurs 1535; Francis Berkeley, 1661; Robert Crompton, 1668; William Benson, 1677; John Fisher, 1738; Peter How, 1787; Allison Steble, —; Thomas Harrison, —; William Benn, 1840; Clement Fox, 1846; Christopher Abbott, 1848.

There is an old parsonage-house near the church, but it is uninhabitable. A gravestone, with a cross and sword, but without any inscription, is placed as a lintel over the door of an outhouse.

CHARITY.

The sum of £30 has been left to the poor of the parish of Corney who do not receive parochial relief, the interest of which is distributed annually on Christmas Day.

Mr. Edward Troughton, an eminent mathematical instrument maker, of London, was born at Welcome Nook, a farmhouse in this parish.

Middleton Place is a small hamlet, about a mile north of the parish church. High Corney is another small hamlet, three and a quarter miles north-north-east of Bootle. Parknook, where the manor courts are held, is another hamlet, containing a good inn, one and a quarter mile north-north-west of the parish church.

MUNCASTER PARISH.

THE parish of Muncaster is bounded on the north by Irton and Drigg, on the west by the Irish Sea, on the south by Waberthwaite, and on the east by the chapelries of Ulpha and Eskdale. It comprises two townships, Muncaster and Birkby, whose united area is 5,166 acres, and its rateable value £2,652 2s. 6d.; the former including the lands between the Mite and the Esk, and Birkby lying on the south side of the latter river. The soil towards the sea is loamy, and tolerably fertile; but farther eastward it is mossy, and near the mountains gravelly. A vein of iron ore is supposed to exist at a place called Brankenwalls Gill; but neither coal, limestone, or freestone, is found in this parish. The Esk, Mite, and Irt abound with trout; and there was formerly so great an abundance of woodcocks here that, "by a special custom, the tenants were obliged to sell them to the lord for one penny each."

MUNCASTER.

The population of the parish in 1801 was 448; in 1811, 591; in 1821, 555; in 1831, 657; in 1841, 602; and in 1851, 623. The landowners are Lord Muncaster; Anthony B. Steward, Esq.; Rev. Samuel Dupre; Messrs. Caddy; Messrs. Benjamin Bibby, W. Thompson, John Brown, William Middleton, John T. Taylor, — Hodgson, Joseph Benn, Edward Bibby, John Troughton, William Vickers, Abraham Vickers; Mrs. Runner; Mrs. Nicholson; and a few others.

In old records Muncaster appears as Meolcastre, Mealcastre, and Mulcaster. Near Ravenglass is an old building bearing the name of Walls Castle, which is said to have been the ancient residence of the Pennington family, from whom the present Lord Muncaster is descended, but some writers consider it to be the work of one of the ancient Celtic tribes who formerly peopled Cumberland. The walls are cemented with run lime. Remains, usually designated Celtic by archaeologists, have been found in its neighbourhood, as well as Roman and Anglo-Saxon coins. The Messrs. Lysons tell us that "a small brass kettle, with two handles, standing on three legs, in form exactly resembling the iron ones still in use, was found at the Roman station on Esk Meals, in this parish, and is now in the possession of E. L. Irton, Esq." "This vessel," continue the same writers, "does not exhibit anything the least like Roman workmanship, but it has the appearance of great antiquity—having undergone frequent repairs, apparently long after it was manufactured. Several small holes have been stopped by bits of copper cut out and rivetted on; and one of the legs, which has been broken, is spliced in a very clumsy manner by a piece of metal soldered on. Another of the same form has been found at the same place, and is also in the possession of Mr. Irton." According to Jefferson a very singular custom is observed here on New Year's Eve, "when the children go from house to house singing a ditty, and begging the bounty 'they were wont to have in old King Edward's days.'" He adds, "Nothing is known respecting the origin of this custom. Has not the name been altered from Henry to Edward? And may it not have an allusion to the time when the sixth Henry was entertained here in his flight from his enemies?"

The manor of Muncaster is thus noticed by Mr. John Denton: "The next fee unto Millum, holden immediately of the barony of Egremont, is Mulcaster, seated on the north side of the seignory of Millum. The manor is bounded between the river Esk and a little rill or beck called Mite. It is in form a long ridge or rising ground of hills from the foot of the Esk, extended along between those rivers unto the great and vast mountains belonging to Egremont in Eskdale, Wastdale, and Mitredale. There are not many under fees belonging to the manor. The place is now corruptly called Muncaster, howbeit the right name is Mulcastre, or Meolcastre, of an old castle there towards the water side, near under to Eskmeal, which was the ancient dwelling-house of the Penningtons, and is yet visible in the ruins, they call it the Old Walls; for their present mansion-house is of later erection, made by some of them much better, and more conveniently set for state, and for avoidance of the air and sharp distempers of the sea. It was called Meolcastre, or Mulcastre, from the meal on which it anciently stood; and it is accordingly written Mulcastre, and Meolcastre, in all the old evidences and records. Eskmeal (whereon the ancient castle stood) is a plain, low, dry ground, at the foot of the Esk, between the mountains and the sea, which sort of ground, lying under mountains and promontories into, or at the sea, are commonly called mules, or meils, as it were the entrance or mouth from the sea into a river, or such like place, as this Meil of Esk, Kirksanton Meil, Cartmeil, Mealholme, the Mull of Galloway, and Millum itself, and many other such like. The estate is now in the possession of Joseph Pennington, Esq., whose ancestors have enjoyed the same ever since the Conquest, sometimes collaterally, but for the most part lineally descending by their issue male to this time. They were, for the most part, knights successively, and men of great valour in the king's services, on the borders and marches, and in other expeditions where it pleased the king to command them. They took their name from Pennington in Lancashire; and though this manor (of Mulcastre) was always theirs as aforesaid, yet some have greatly mistaken the same to have been first the Mulcaster's patrimony, and to have come from them to the Penningtons by marriage or purchase.

All the Mulcasters are descended from one David de Mulcaster, the son of Benedict Pennington, who lived in King John's time. He had two sons, John and Adam, called both De Mulcaster, and so their posterity take their name of the place where their first ancestor, David, died." In 1578 Joseph Pennington, then under age, the heir of William Pennington, Esq., held the manor of Mulcaster by homage, fealty, and suit of court from three weeks to three weeks, and the sixth part of a knight's fee, and the rent of 8s. by the year, and for seawake 1s., with sergeant's food, &c.

Muncaster Castle occupies a delightful situation on the side of an eminence north of the Esk, rather more than a mile east of Ravenglass. It is surrounded by beautiful grounds, and commands extensive views of the vale of the Esk, bounded by wild mountain scenery. The castle is a modern structure, having been nearly rebuilt by John, first baron Muncaster. The principal tower of the ancient fortified mansion has been preserved, but has no longer its original external appearance. The windows of the entrance hall contain some very fine stained glass; the chimney-piece is of carved oak; and that in the drawing room is a very costly one of marble, exquisitely carved. King Henry's bedroom contains a full length portrait of Henry VI. kneeling before an altar, with the "Luck of Muncaster" in his hand. The bedstead is of carved oak; it has the initials H. H., and bears a crown. The chairs, the doors, and the chimney-piece in this room, are of old carved oak. In the library are the arms of the families with whom the Penningtons have been allied by marriage. On the staircase is a curious portrait of Thomas Skelton, "the fool of Muncaster," who is said to have lived here at the time of the civil wars, and of whose sayings there are many traditional stories. He is dressed in a check gown, blue, yellow, and white; under his arm is an earthen dish with ears; in his right hand a white wand; in his left a white hat, bound with pink ribbands and with blue bows; in front a paper, on which is written "Mrs. Dorothy Copeland." The following lines are inscribed on the picture:—

"Thos. Skelton late Fool of Muncaster's last Will and Testament."

"Be it known to ye, oh grave and wise men all,
That I Thom Fool am Sheriff of ye Hall,
I mean the Hall of Haigh, where I command
What neither I nor you do understand.
My Under Sheriff is Ralph Wayte you know,
As wise as I am and as witty too.
Of Egremont I have Barrow-Sergeant beene,
Of Wiggan Bailiff too, as may be seen
By my white staff of office in my hand,
Being carried straight as the badge of my command:
A low high constable to was once my calling,
Which I enjoyed under King Henry Rawling;

And when the Fates a new Sheriff send,
 I'm Under-Sheriff prick'd World without end.
 He who doth question my authority
 May see the seal and patten here ly by.
 The dish with luggs which I do carry here
 Shews all my living is in good strong beer.
 If scurvy lads to me abuses do,
 I'll call 'em scurvy rouses and rascals too.
 Fair Dolly Copeland in my cap is placed;
 Monstrous fair is she, and as good as all the rest.
 Honest Nich. Pennington, honest Th. Turner, both
 Will bury me when I this world go forth.
 But let me not be carry'd o'er the brigg,
 Lest falling I in Duggas River ligg;
 Nor let my body by old Charnock lye,
 But by Will. Caddy, for he'll lye quietly.
 And when I'm bury'd then my friends may drink,
 But each man pay for himself, that's best I think.
 This is my Will, and this I know will be Perform'd by them as they have promised me.

THIS SKELETON,

"Sing'd, Sealed, Publish'd, and Declared in the presence of Henry Rawling,

 Henry Troughton,
 Th^e. Turner."

"The Luck of Muncaster," which has been preserved here for several centuries, is "an ancient glass vessel of the basin kind, about seven inches in diameter, ornamented with some white enamelled mouldings." According to family tradition, Sir John Pennington, who lived in the reign of Henry VI., entertained that unhappy and thrice-deposed monarch at his mansion, whither he had fled from his enemies; and on his leaving Muncaster (A.D. 1461) he presented his host with this vessel, which has since been preserved with the most religious care.¹

The castle contains a large number of pictures and family portraits; among which we may mention the following:—In the drawing-room: John, first lord of Muncaster, a full length, with other portraits in the same picture. In the dining-room: Sir William Pennington, first baronet, died 1730; Sir Joseph Pennington, fourth baronet, father of the first Lord Muncaster, died 1773; Sir Joseph Pennington, second baronet, died 1744; John, first Lord Muncaster; The Hon. Margaret Lady Pennington, sister of Henry Lord Viscount Lonsdale. On the grand staircase: A large painting representing King Henry VI. giving to Sir John Pennington, on leaving his castle, 1461, "The Luck of Muncaster;" another, Caxton presenting the first book printed in England to Edward IV. In the library: Sir John Pennington, Lord High Admiral; Sir William Pennington, first baronet, died 1730; Sir James Lowther, Bart., son of Sir John Lowther, Bart., of Whitehaven, died 1755; John, first Lord Viscount Lonsdale, born 1655; Sir John Lowther, Bart., of Whitehaven; William Pennington, Esq., died 1652; Sir Joseph Pennington, fourth baronet; Richard Viscount Lonsdale, died 1718; James Earl of Balcarres; Thomas Lord Coventry. In another room: Henry VI. with "the Luck of Muncaster" in his hand, date 1461; Dame Askew, wife of Sir William Pennington, Knt., A.D. 1571; Henry Lord Viscount Lonsdale, died 1751.

Pennington, Ford Muncaster.

The ancient family took their name from Pennington, in Furness, Lancashire, where they resided until about the year 1243, and where "there is still visible the foundation of a square building, called the castle, near the centre of the vill. . . . Here the family of Pennington resided before the Conquest."¹ The first ancestor of this family that occurs after the Conquest, is GAMEL DE PENNINGTON, a person of great note and property.² From him descended another Gamel, who had two sons, Meldred and Gamel. In the reign of King John, Jocelin de Pennington, of this family, was abbot of Furness: he was eminent for learning, and obtained from the pope some special privileges for his abbey. The next that occurs is Benedict de Pennington,³ he was father of another Gamel, and gave the church of Muncaster (Muncaster) and the chapel of Aldeburg to the hospital of Conishead. The same Benedict,⁴ and Meldred, his brother, with consent of their heirs, gave to the abbey of Furness, Skeldon Moor. Alan, son of Alan de Pennington, gave to the hospital of Conishead, after it was erected into a priory, an acre of land in Overton (Orton) in Westmoreland; and after that Gamel de Pennington gave to the priory of Conishead the church of Pennington, with appurtenances; and confirmed the grant of the church of Muncaster from Benedict de Pennington; and also gave the church of Whitebeck and Skeroverton (Orton) and Pulton to the said priory. These benefactors flourished between the beginning of the reign of King Henry III. and the first of King Edward III. The hospital of Conishead was founded by the third William de Lancaster, eighth baron of Kendal, in the reign of King Henry III., and the foundation was confirmed by King Edward II., which sufficiently proves the time of their occurrence.

ALAN DE PENNINGTON,⁵ Knt., is witness to the grant of five hides of land from Elizabeth, late wife of Sir Richard le Fleming, to the abbey of Furness, A.D. 1254. Alan de Pennington,⁶ Knt., had a dispute with the monks of Furness, about land which laid to the high road that leads from Pennington to Kirky Ireleth, in the reign of King Henry III., A.D. 1278. Sir Alan de Pennington⁷ is witness to a grant from Gilbert de Bardsey to the monks. 33rd Henry III. Agnes, daughter of John de . . . late wife of T. de Pennington, came to an agreement with the abbot of Furness concerning some land in dispute. The same Agnes, A.D. 1254, released to the abbot of Furness the marriage of her children, by T. Pennington, son and heir of

¹ A similar relic is preserved at the seat of Sir George Musgrave, Bart., well known as "The Luck of Edenhall."

¹ West's Furness.

² Dodsworth's MS.

³ West's Furness.

⁴ Dodsworth's MS.

⁵ Dodsworth's MS.

⁶ Monast. Ang.

⁷ Dodsworth's MS.

Alan de Pennington. Hence it appears that T. de Pennington died before his father; and the Alan, who occurs in the reign of Edward I. was the son of Thomas, and succeeded his grandfather, Sir Alan.

WILLIAM DE PENNINGTON, d. 1318, made an agreement with the abbot of Furness for the suit and service of his manor of Pennington.

This pedigree as given by West, differs from that in Nicolson and Burn. They give it as follows:—

GAMIEL DE PENNINGTON, temp. Henry II. gave the churches of Mulestre, Pennington, Whitbeck, and of Orton in Westmoreland, to the priory of Conishead; which grant was confirmed by Edward II. in the 12th year of his reign. His son Benedict had several children. Alan, son of Alan, son of Benedict, granted lands at Orton aforesaid, to his uncle Simon, son of the said Benedict; but according to their family pedigree (after the death of an older son Robert), he was succeeded by his son David, father of John, father of Alan, to whom Richard Lucy, as is hereafter mentioned in the reign of King John, granted the fee of Ravenglass. Thomas, son of Alan; Alan, son of Thomas; John, son of Alan, of whom mention is made in the 21st Edward I. William son of John. Thus far Nicolson and Burn.

Of this family was Sir JOHN PENNINGTON, Knt., son of Sir Alan, who was steadily attached to the unfortunate monarch, Henry VI., whom he had the honour of entertaining at Muncaster Castle in his flight from the Yorkists.² In acknowledgment of the protection he had received, the king presented his host with a curious glass cup (which is still preserved at the castle. See page 400) with a prayer that the family should ever prosper, and never want a male heir, so long that they preserved it unbroken; hence the cup was called "The Luck of Muncaster." Sir John is said to have been a distinguished military character, and to have commanded the left wing of the English army in an expedition against Scotland.³

JOHN PENNINGTON, Esq., his son, married Mary, daughter of Sir John Hudleston; on which marriage, in the 23rd Edward IV. the estate was settled upon the issue male. And he having only a daughter Isabel, married to Thomas Dykes, Esq., of Warthole, the estate came to the second brother, WILLIAM PENNINGTON, Esq., who was succeeded by JOSEPH PENNINGTON, Esq., son and heir.

¹ Dodsworth's MS.

² This event is supposed to have taken place in 1461; and that date is assigned to it in a picture at Muncaster Castle, as also on the monument erected to the memory of Sir John Pennington, in the chancel of the church at Muncaster. That monument, however, has been recently erected. It is a well known fact that after the battle of Tewkesbury, which was fought on Palm Sunday, 29th March, 1461, terminating in favour of the Yorkists, Henry VI. took flight into Scotland. We have no evidence that he was then received here, neither on his journey northward, nor on his return. It appears to be equally probable that Henry was here after the battle of Hexham, 14th May, 1463, when his troops sustained another defeat, and "Henry owed his safety to the swiftness of his steed." Hume says, "some of his friends took him under their protection, and conveyed him into Lancashire; where he remained concealed during a twelve months." This unfortunate monarch was also concealed for some time at Bolton Hall, in Yorkshire. (See "Gentleman's Magazine," May and June, 1811.)

³ His grandson, Sir John Pennington, was in the battle of Flodden Field; another descendant of the same name was admiral to King Charles I., and much trusted by that monarch in naval affairs.

Sir WILLIAM PENNINGTON, Knt., son and heir, married Isabel, daughter of John Farrington, Esq., of Warden, in Lancashire, with whom he had the manor of Farrington. On an inquisition of knights' fees in Cumberland, in the 35th Henry VIII., it is found that Sir William held the manor of Muncaster of the king as his castle of Egremont, by the service of the sixth part of one knight's fee, rendering to the king yearly for sewage 12d., and the puture of two sergeants; and that he held the hamlet of Ravenglass in like manner, by homage and fealty, and the service of the 17th part of one knight's fee, and puture of sergeants as above.

JOSEPH PENNINGTON, Esq., married Margaret, daughter of John Fleetwood, Esq., of Penwortham, co. Lancaster. He was succeeded by his son and heir,

Sir WILLIAM PENNINGTON, first baronet, so created 21st June, 38th Charles II., 1676. He married Isabel, eldest daughter of John Stapleton, Esq., of Warter, co. York (son of Sir Philip Stapleton, Knt.) with whom the manor of Warter came to the Penningtons. He had issue,

- I. JOSEPH, his heir.
- II. Philip, died 1731, without issue.
- III. Elizabeth, married 1stly to John Archer, Esq., of Oxenholme, and 2ndly to Thomas Strickland, Esq., of Sizergh.
- IV. Margaret.

Sir William dying in 1730, was succeeded by his son,

Sir JOSEPH, M.P. for the co. of Cumberland, who married the Hon. Margaret Lowther, daughter of John Viscount Lonsdale; and had issue,

- I. JOHN, his heir.
- II. JOSEPH, successor to his brother.
- III. Catherine, married in 1731, to Robert Lowther, Esq., governor of Barbadoes.

Sir Joseph died in 1744, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir JOHN, M.P. for Cumberland, lord-lieutenant and custos-rotulorum of the co. Westmoreland, who died without issue, and was succeeded by his brother,

Sir JOSEPH. This gentleman married Sarah, daughter and sole heir of John Moore, Esq., of Somersetshire, by whom he left,

- I. JOHN HENRY, his successor.
- II. Joseph.
- III. LOWTHER, second lord.
- I. Jane.
- II. Margaret.
- III. Catherine, married to H. B. Osbaldeston, Esq., of Hunmanby.

He died in 1773, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir JOHN, who was created a peer of Ireland 21st October, 1789, as Baron Muncaster, with remainder to his brother, Lowther Pennington, Esq. His lordship married Penelope, daughter and heir of James Compton, Esq., by whom he had,

Maria Frances Muncaster, who married in 1811 James, present Earl of Crawford and Balcanquhall; she died 16th Nov. 1805.

He died in 1813, leaving no male issue, when the peerage devolved, according to the limitation, upon his brother,

LOWTHER, 6th baronet, as 2nd baron, a general officer in the army, and colonel of one of the royal veteran battalions. His lordship married in 1802 Esther, second daughter of Thomas Barry, Esq., of Clapham, co. Surrey, and widow of James Morrison, Esq., by whom (who died in October, 1827) he left at his decease, in 1818, an only son,

LOWTHER AUGUSTUS JOHN, 3rd baron; born 14th December, 1802; married 15th December, 1823, Frances Catherine, youngest daughter of Sir John Ramsden, Bart., and by her (who died in 1853) had issue,

- I. GAMEL AUGUSTUS, present peer.
- II. Jocelyn, an officer in the army; born 29th December, 1841.

III. Alan Joseph, R.N., born 1837.

I. Fanny Caroline.

II. Rachel Matilda.

III. Louisa Theodosia.

His lordship died in 1838, and was succeeded by his eldest son, GAMEL AUGUSTUS PENNINGTON, Baron Muncaster, in the peerage of Ireland, and a baronet of Great Britain, born 3rd December, 1834; succeeded his father, as 4th baron and 8th baronet, 30th April, 1898; married 2nd August, 1855, Lady Jane Grosvenor, daughter of the Marquis of Westminster.

Creations.—Baronet, 21st June, 1676. Baron, 21st October, 1763.

Arms.—Or, five fusils, in fesse, az.

Crest.—A mountain cat, passant, ppr.

Supporters.—Dexter, a lion, regardant, ppr.; charged on the breast with an oak branch, vert; sinister, a horse, ppr., brined, or.

Motto.—Vincit amor patriæ.

Seats.—Muncaster Castle, Cumberland; and Warter Hall, Yorkshire.

THE CHURCH.

Muncaster church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient edifice, standing in the park, near the centre of the parish, and closely adjoining the castle. It is completely surrounded by trees; and with its ivy-clad walls and venerable appearance, produces that tranquillising effect upon the mind so conducive to devotional feeling. It consists of nave and chancel, with a western bell-turret containing two bells. The masonry is good. A south porch has been converted into the vestry: its gable seems to have been surmounted with a cross. The principal entrance is from the west, beneath a window of three lights with cinquefoil heads under a semicircular arch. On the apex of the gable of the eastern end of the nave where it joins the chancel, is a small turret, supposed to have contained in Catholic times the "Sanctus Bell,"—a bell rung at the conclusion of what is called the Preface, a prayer preceding the Canon of the Mass, and again at the Elevation. The parapets of the nave and chancel are battlemented. The nave is lighted by square-headed windows of two lights. Its walls are hung with boards, upon which texts of Scripture are inscribed. There is a gallery at the west end. The pulpit and reading-desk are placed under the chancel arch, on the south side, thus leaving the whole interior exposed to view. The chancel is lighted by an east window of three lights. It is in the Perpendicular style. In the south side of the chancel are three windows of two semicircular-headed lights each. The walls of this part of the church are covered with monuments to various members of the Pennington family, whose pew occupies the north side of the chancel. The earliest of these monuments bears the date 1390. Another has this inscription:—"Of youre charitie praye for the soul of Syr John de Penyngton, sonne of Syr Alan de Penyngton who hadde to wyfe Elizabeth dowter of Syr Nichols de Radcliffe de Derwentwater, a woman of noble blode yis Syr John reserved holic Kyngde Harrye whyche was Henry ye Sixth at Molcastre 1461 Kyngde Harrye gave Sir John a brauve workyd glasse cuppe, with his rod before yat whyllys the familie shold keep hit unbrecchen thei shold geteelye thirf whyche cuppe is kalled the lucke of Molcastre. He was a grete captain, and heded the left winge of the armie agayne the Scotties; whyllys Erle of Northumberland heded the mayno bodie." On the south side of the churchyard is an ancient cross, four feet nine inches high, and ornamented with guilloches. Near it are two venerable yew trees. The church of Muncaster was appropriated to the priory of Conishead by Gamel de Pennington, in the reign of Henry II. The appropriation was confirmed by Edward II. On the suppression of the religious houses the church was restored to the Pennington family, and they have since continued possessors of the advowson. The benefice was formerly returned as worth £10 a year. In 1733 it received from Queen Anne's Bounty an augmentation of £200, and was returned to the Commissioners for Inquiring into the Ecclesiastical Revenues at £97 per annum. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Lord Muncaster. The registers commence in the year 1720.

INCUMBENTS.— Thomas Nicholson, 1774; Joseph Stanley, 1825; Thomas Robinson, 1844.

CHARITIES.

Joseph Pennington's Charity.—Joseph Pennington by will, dated 6th March, 1640, left £32 10s., the interest thereof to be bestowed in penny loaves of bread, twelve loaves to be dealt weekly every Sunday throughout the year to the poor of Muncaster, at the parish church, by the churchwardens for the time being. The lord of the manor of Muncaster for the time being to see to the application. This charity is now distributed in money at the same time with the other charities of the parish, to the most necessitous poor, those being preferred who do not receive parochial relief. Since the death of John Lord Muncaster, the money so laid out has been charged to the account of the estate.

Bread and Cheese Money.—There is an entry in the parish book, dated 1667, which states that "20s. is yearly given at Easter by the lords and owners of Muncaster, for lieue and in consideration of bread and cheese formerly given at Easter." This is the only account we have of the origin of this charity. The sum of £1 is regularly paid at Easter, and charged to the account of the Muncaster estate. It is distributed with the interest of the poor money hereafter mentioned.

Poor Money.—Previously to the year 1817, there was a sum of £35, the interest of which was distributed amongst poor persons. Of that sum, twenty marks appear to have been left by Thomas Troughton, in 1610, to help and maintain the poorest sort at Muncaster to pay the tithes, and other good and charitable purposes. Of this poor money, £10 was placed in the hands of one Joseph Jackson, a man of some property in the parish. In 1817 he failed, and afterwards died insolvent, and nothing has been recovered from his effects. Of the remainder of the money, £25 is now out at interest, which amounts to 10s. 8d. per annum, and is distributed together with the twenty shillings, called bread and cheese money, on the Sunday after Easter, to poor persons not receiving parochial relief.

School.—Richard Brocklebank, by will dated 2nd June, 1696, left £160 for the use and benefit only of so many of the parishioners within the parish of Muncaster as should contribute proportionably to the building of a school in Muncaster Town Lane, the interest thereof to be disposed of for the maintaining a master to teach the said free school in Muncaster, for the sole benefit of so many of the parishioners of Muncaster as should contribute proportionately to the building of the school aforesaid; no other person whatever to be free to the said school. By articles of agreement entered into by several of the parishioners, dated 5th April, 1706, reciting that a school-house had been erected by the parties thereto at their own expense, it was agreed, and the said parties obliged themselves in the penal sum of £20 to repair the free school, and pay all cesses to be laid thereon; and that the advantage of the said free school should extend to the several estates which belonged to the parties to that agreement; and it was also agreed that future purchasers of land within the parish, if they descended from certain persons therein named, who had contributed to the building of the school should have the full benefit thereof; and that it should also be extended to such poor persons at Muncaster as should receive alms. The sum of £160, left by Richard Brocklebank, together with £100, left to the school by Sir William Pennington, £10 left by Thomas Kirby, and £3 paid by two parishioners for the freedom of the school, amounting in the whole to £273, form the endowment. The master takes no children free, the trustees having found it necessary to permit him to take 1s. 6d. a quarter from those who are called free. A higher quarterage is demanded from those who are not entitled to their freedom. There are upon an average forty or fifty children in the school. They are taught reading, writing, and accounts.

Lord Muncaster's Charity.—John Lord Muncaster, by will dated 11th April, 1812, directed his executors to pay to the respective clergyman and overseers of the poor of the several parishes of Muncaster, Waberthwaite, and Drigg, the sum of £50 each, to be distributed at their discretion to the poor of these respective parishes not receiving alms.

THE TOWN OF RAVENGLASS.

The ancient market town and port of Ravenglass is in the township of Muncaster. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Esk, Irt, and Mite, about sixteen miles south-south-east of Whitehaven, and six miles north-by-west of Bootle. The estuary of the three rivers just named forms a large sandy harbour, which has twenty-two feet of water on the bar in spring tides, and twelve feet at neap tides. Sandford tells us, that formerly Ravenglass was a place of some importance as a fishing town. Mr. John Denton gives us the following account of the place:—"Ravenglass, now a village, anciently a green of fens (corruptly called of two Irish words, rainigh fernsald, glass green) was anciently another fee of Egremont. It stands at the foot of Esk, where, by King John's grant, made to Richard Lucy, then lord of Egremont (dated the tenth year of that king's reign) was kept a market and fair yearly, in right of the haven there, by the lords of Egremont, as lords paramount: and the same Richard Lucy, in the same year, confirmed by fine, levied to the mesne lords, and terr-tenants, all the land and fee of Ravenglass, namely, to Alan Pennington, William Fitz-Hugh, and Roger Fitz-Edward, to hold the same of the said William and his heirs, and gave them, moreover, estovers, to make their fish-garths in the river Esk, which is continued to this day; the Penningtons have long enjoyed the manor, and other lands there near adjoining." The yearly fair above alluded to was held on the eve, the day, and the morrow after the Feast of St. James the Apostle, and the weekly market every Saturday. With respect to the manor, we have only to add that from an inquisition taken in 1578, we learn that, at that date, Joseph Pennington (at that time under age), the heir of William Pennington, held Ravenglass by homage, fealty, suit of court from three weeks to three weeks, and the twelfth part of a knight's fee, and a rent of four shillings per annum. The same inquisition further informs us that the lord's tenants in Ravenglass had common of pasture on Muncaster Fell, for which they yielded several boon days, and a small payment annually. Until comparatively recent times the fair at Ravenglass was attended by some customs which, in all probability, had been observed from the period that the fair was first established. These customs are thus given by Nicolson and Burn, whose work was published in 1777. "At present," they say, "the Earl of Egremont holds the fair of Ravenglass on the eve, day, and morrow of St. James. On the first of these days, in the morning, the lord's officer at proclaiming the fair, is attended by the serjeants of the bow of Egremont, with the insignia belonging thereto; and all the tenants of the forest of Copeland owe a customary service to meet the lord's officer at Ravenglass to proclaim the fair, and abide with him during the continuance thereof; and for sustentation of their horses they have two swaiths of grass in the common field of Ravenglass in a place set out for that purpose. On the third day, at noon, the earl's officer discharges the fair by proclamation; immediately whereupon the Penningtons and their tenants take possession of the town, and have races and other diversissements during the remainder of the day." In 1796 John Lord Muncaster procured a charter for two weekly markets at Ravenglass, on Wednesday and Friday, and three fairs for one day each: 11th March, 14th April, and 12th October. These fairs have already become obsolete. Two ancient fairs for horses and horned cattle are still held; one on the 8th June and the 5th August. The market has long since fallen into disuse. Some of the steps of the market cross still remain. Railway communication has entirely done away with the shipping trade of the port, which now only possesses one vessel. Guano is occasionally imported for use in the neighbourhood. The salmon fisheries belong to General Wyndham.

The Whitehaven and Furness railway has a station near to the town.

BIRKBY.

The acreage, population, and rateable value of Birkby are included in the parish returns. The township is small, containing a few scattered houses, three miles south of Ravenglass, on the south side of the river Esk, which is here crossed by a good bridge. At a place called Chapelgarth, in this township, some ruins were dug up in 1822, supposed to have been those of a chapel or church which formerly stood here. There is a bobbin mill in this township.

The manor of Birkby has long been the property of the Stanley family, and is now held by Edward Stanley, Esq., of Ponsonby Hall. Jefferson gives us the following extracts from the rolls of this manor:—"Item, we do order and put in pain, that every the inhabitants, within the manor of Birkby, who shall hereafter take, or catch, kill, or come by any wild fowl whatsoever, shall not sell them to any foreigner or stranger, but shall bring them to the lord, or his bailiff for the time being, at the prices and rates hereafter specified, viz., for every mallard, 4d.; duck, 3d. Every long mallard or widgeon, 2d.; woodcock or partridge, 1d.; feelfaws, throistles, ourels, each four for 1d. Every curlew, 3d.; for two seals, 1d.; plover, 1d.; lapwings, one halfpenny; under pain and forfeiture of 3d.; 4d. for every fowl otherwise sold, as formerly accustomed."

On Birkby Fell, near the foot of Devoke Water, are the remains of a fort or encampment, called the ruins of the city of Barnscar, or Bardscar, which is traditionally stated to have belonged to the Danes. The name is purely a Scandinavian one, "derived," says Mr. Ferguson, "from its probable founder, some Northman called Barna or Bardi." The description of the place in Hutchinson's "History of Cumberland" is as follows: "This place is about 300 yards long from east to west, and 100 yards from north to south; now walled round, save at the east end, near three feet in height; there appears to have been a long street, with several cross ones; the remains of housesteads, within the walls, are not very numerous, but on the outside of the walls they are innumerable, especially on the south side and west end; the circumference of the city and suburbs is near three computed miles; the figure an oblong square; there is an ancient road through the city, leading from Ulpha to Ravenglass." At present (1859) there is little more to be seen than a number of small piles of unwrought stones scattered along the foot of the lake, and upon the hills bordering the north side; the stones comprising the foundations appearing to have been gathered into heaps in order to clear the ground. About the beginning of the last century a considerable treasure of silver coin was found concealed in the foundation of one of the houses, none of which, unfortunately, has been preserved. This Danish city is said to have been peopled by taking the men of Drigg and marrying them to the women of Beckermert, whose original helpmates had been slain in battle. This event is preserved in the Cumberland saying, "Let us gang together like lads of Drigg and lasses of Beckermert."

WABERTHWAITE PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by the river Esk, which separates it from Muncaster, on the west by Bootle, and on the south and east by Comey. The soil here is rich and loamy, except on the eastern side of the parish, where it is high and rocky. It possesses no dependent townships, but includes a small village of its own name, and the small hamlet of Newbiggin.

The area of the parish is 1,901 acres, and its rateable value £808 13s. The population in 1801 was 122; in 1811, 114; in 1821, 138; in 1831, 139; in 1841, 146; and in 1851, 212; who are principally engaged in agricultural pursuits, and attend the Whitehaven markets.

The manor of Wabberthwaite was held in ancient times by a family bearing the local name, one of whom married a daughter or sister of Arthur Boyville, third lord of Millom, son of Godard Dapifer, with whom the said Arthur gave this manor in free marriage. The Wabberthwaites subsequently removed to St. Bees, and then to Clifton, in Westmoreland, settling ultimately at Isell. This manor came afterwards to the Penningtons of Muncaster, but whether by sale or marriage historians are not agreed, some stating that it passed in the former manner, some in the latter. Lord Muncaster is the present possessor of the manorial rights and privileges. Formerly the customary tenants paid arbitrary fines, rents, heriots, and boon service, but they have been enfranchised, and many of the farms are now occupied by their respective owners. Messrs. James Pickthall, Daniel Pritt, Edward Chorley, John Knight, Philip Myers, Joseph Pearson, Benjamin Bibby, Joseph Burrough, A. Borrow, John Caddy, Thomas Jackson, James Pritt, John Dodgson, and Mrs. Falcon, are the principal landowners.

The village of Wabberthwaite is about two miles south-by-east of Ravenglass.

THE CHURCH.

Wabberthwaite church, dedicated to St. John, is an ancient plain building, consisting of nave and chancel. The living is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £3 11s. 8d., and returned to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £18 16s. 6d. clear yearly value. It has since been augmented by that bounty, and is now worth about £130 a year. The great and small tithes produced £30 in 1794, and in 1842 they were commuted for a yearly rent charge of £105. In 1421 and 1425 Sir Richard de Kirkby presented to this rectory. In 1580 Henry Kirkby presented. In 1608 the presentation appears to have been in the Penningtons, in whom it still continues. The parish registers commence in 1695.

RECTORS.—William Waller occurs in 1555; William Granger, 1677; Henry Holmes, 1698; Robert Manston, 1704; John Steele, 1708; John Steele, 1737; Thomas Nicholson, 1776; Joseph Stanley, 1829; T. McInnes, 1847.

CHARITY.

Poor Stock.—There is an ancient poor stock of £100 belonging to this parish, £80 of which were given by the Rev. Mr. Park, rector of Barton, Norfolk, the interest thereof to be distributed annually. This parish also shares in a bequest of Lord Muncaster, the particulars of which will be found stated in our account of Muncaster parish.

Newbiggin is a small hamlet in this parish.

WHICHAM PARISH.

WHICHAM parish is bounded on the north by Whitbeck, on the west by the sea, and on the south and east by Millom. It contains the village of Silcroft and several scattered dwellings, but has no assemblage of houses bearing its own name. The soil towards the sea is fertile, but eastward the parish stretches over hilly grounds, which afford pasturage to large flocks of sheep. There are no dependent townships. The Whitehaven and Furness railway runs through the parish, and has a station at Silcroft.

Whicham comprises an area of 7,503 acres, and its rateable value is £2,057 15s. The population in 1801 was 235; in 1811, 261; in 1821, 301; in 1831, 285; in 1841, 299; and in 1851, 329. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants; they attend the markets at Whitehaven and Ulverstone.

The manor of Whicham was formerly held as a fee of Millom, and is said to have received its name from Wyche, its possessor, in the reign of Henry I., but analogy would lead us to infer that the name of the place dates its origin from Anglo-Saxon times, and that it was the home of some Anglian chieftain. The two sons of the Wyche just mentioned appear as witnesses to a deed of mortgage in the reign of Henry II., but the issue general brought their lands into other families about the time of Henry III., for at that period we find that Radulph de Bethern held land here, and in the 6th Edward I. (1277-8) he granted estovers¹ to John, parson of Whicham, in his woods there. In the 9th Edward I. (1280-81) Robert, son of Radulph de Bethern, did warrant lands in Silecroft and Satterton, in the lordship of Millom. In the 9th Edward II. (1315-16) the manors of Silecroft and Whicham appear to have been held by another family, as appears by a fine thereof levied between William Corbett and Alicia his wife, complainants, and John de Corney. The manor was subsequently divided into severalties, and passed through many hands, but all account of these transfers appears to have been lost. Whicham and Silecroft are now held by the Earl of Lonsdale, the former estate having been purchased by Sir James Lowther, Bart., from Mr. Henry Fearon and others. Part of the parish is still attached to the lordship of Millom. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale, Mrs. Kirkbank, Messrs. John Kirkbank, William Brocklebank, Richard Cleminson, William Case, John Porter, Philip Hartley, John Hodgson, William Myers, Henry Myers, William Newby, John Walton, George Newton, Bernard Gilpin, and John Case.

Whicham Hall, now occupied as a farm house, is the property of the Earl of Lonsdale. Near this hall is a field, known as Scots' Croft, where, according to tradition, a battle was fought between the English and Scots during the turbulent days of border warfare.

THE CHURCH.

Whicham church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a plain ancient structure. In 1858, it underwent several repairs, new windows being put in and a north transept added. It was given by "Reynard the Fwer" to the abbey of St. Mary, at York, to which it continued attached till the period of the Dissolution, when the patronage was granted to Hugh Askew, Esq., who presented in 1544. In the year 1717, one of the Penningtons occurs as patron, and it continued to be held by that family till Lord Muncaster sold it to the Earl of Lonsdale, the present patron. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £8 15s. 10d., and was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the annual value of £49 13s. 3d. It is now worth £160 a year, and there are seventy-five acres of glebe. The parish registers commence in 1509.

RECTORS.—John Wodall, occurs, 1535; Robert Crompton, 1630; — Tubman occurs about 1612; John Lawrey, 1720; William Scott, 1745; Robert Scott, 1794; James Satterthwaite, 1804; Allison Stebble, 1814; Alexander Scott, 1832; George Wilkinson, 1847.

The rectory is a very ancient building.

CHARITIES.

Whicham and Millom Grammar School.—By an inquisition taken under a commission of charitable uses, and bearing date 28th September, 1686, it is found by the jurors, that some person unknown, had by deed or by will, given to the parishes of Whicham and Millom, an annual payment of £16, for the maintenance of a free grammar school in the parish of Whicham, for the benefit of the parishes of Whicham and Millom. The sum of £16, which forms the whole of the endowment, is payable out of the crown revenues of the county of Cumberland, in pursuance of a warrant from the Exchequer to that effect.

Parish Money, and the Rev. Robert Crompton's Bequest.—It appears, by the parish books, that there was formerly in the hands of different persons the sum of £21 6s. 4d., the interest of which was distributed amongst poor persons. The only bequest of which we could find any trace, was the sum of £5, which, according to an entry in the parish register, was left to the poor by the Rev. Robert Crompton, who died rector of this parish in 1720. Whether that £5 formed any part of the £21 6s. 4d., or whether it was distributed at the time, we could not learn.

Silecroft is a neat village near the sea, four miles south-by-east of Bootle, and eight miles south-west of Broughton, Lancashire, where there is a station on the Whitehaven and Furness railway.

¹ "Estovers" from the Norman French estoffer. In law, necessities, or supplies; a reasonable allowance out of lands or goods for the use of a tenant.

WHITBECK PARISH.

THE parish of Whitbeck is bounded on the north by Bootle, on the west by the Irish sea, on the south by Whicham, and on the east by the mountain of Black Comb. The soil towards the sea is rather sandy, inclining to a clay, and towards Black Comb gravelly. The surface of the parish is irregular and uneven. A vein of peat moss, containing in some places nearly one-fifth of the breadth of the parish, runs longitudinally through the middle of the greatest part of the land, dividing the soil into two kinds. The sea has made considerable encroachments in many parts of the parish, old roads and hedges being visible some distance below low water mark. There are no dependent townships.

The parish contains 5,372 acres, and its rateable value is £1,660. The population in 1801 was 180; in 1811, 191; in 1821, 221; in 1831, 234; in 1841, 208; and in 1851, 217. The parish is remarkable for its great salubrity, and the longevity of its inhabitants. One mile south of Bootle, on the Barfield estate, there is a tarn about 600 yards in circumference, which abounds with perch and trout; another tarn near Gutterby, produces large quantities of leeches. Around here, and in the neighbouring morasses, ignes fatui are frequently seen in the evenings. It is stated in a communication by the Rev. William Pearson, in Hutchinson's "Cumberland," that "when the wind blows from the east over Black Comb the inhabitants of the houses which stand close under its base find it most violent; when the wind blows from the sea the most temperate. In Whicham, behind the mountain, it is quite the reverse; so that whenever it is calm in one parish, it is stormy in the other, when it blows from the east or west." The same writer also tells us that at that time (1794) the following customs and superstitions were observed in the parish:—"Newly married persons beg corn to sow their first crop with, and are called conlalters. People always keep wake with the dead. . . . The labouring ox is said to kneel at twelve o'clock at night, preceding the day of the Nativity; the bees are heard to sing at the same hour. On the morn of Christmas Day the people breakfast early on hack pudding, a mess made of sheep's heart chopped with suit and sweet fruits. To whichever quarter a bull faces in lying on All Hallow Eve, from thence the wind will blow the greatest part of the winter. The Shrovetide sports, April day jestings and frolics peculiar to other seasons, known in other parts of the country, are also practised here."

At Hall Foss are the remains of a Druidical monument called Standing Stones, which formed a circle twenty-five yards in diameter. In Hutchinson's "Cumberland" they are described as consisting of "eight massy rude columns," and it is added, "some have lately been broken and taken away." A similar monument of bygone days is found at Annaside, near the sea, and forms a circle sixty feet in diameter, consisting of twenty stones. On the north-west are the ruins of a building through which an old road leads, but nothing is known respecting it. On the Moorgreen farm is another monument composed of thirty stones, and called Kirkstones. They form parts of two circles, an outer and inner one, somewhat similar in position to those of Stonehenge. About two hundred yards to the south of Kirkstones is a large cairn about fifteen yards in diameter. Several places in this parish are called Foss, as Monk Foss, Hall Foss, &c., but of its origin we have no authentic account.

The first recorded possessor of the manor of Whitbeck is Sir William Morthing, who gave it by fine to the prior and convent of Conishead, to which monastery the church also was given by Gamel de Pennington. The Morthings appear to have been settled in Millom at a very early period. Their names appear in old evidences in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward II., and they seem to have been held in considerable estimation. The manor continued to be held by the community of Conishead till the Dissolution, when it came to the crown. In 1687 the manor, the rectory, and advowson were granted to Mr. Lawrence Parke, whose descendants continued possessors till 1807, in which year Charles Parke, Esq., sold them to the Earl of Lonsdale, the present lord of the manor. The Parkes resided at an old mansion at Whitbeck, now occupied as a farm-house.

Monk Force, a small manor in this parish, was given by William de Meschines to the abbey of St. Mary, in Furness, and on the dissolution of that house was granted to the Hudlestons of Millom, who sold it. In 1777 it was the property of Edward Gibson, Esq., of Whitehaven, from whose family it passed to the Lewthwaites, and it is now the property of Miss Lewthwaite.

Scoggerbar, another manor, was given by Sir William Hudleston to his second son Joseph, who, by the death of his elder brother Ferdinand, became possessed of the lordship of Millom, when the manor was reunited to the lordship.

The landowners in the parish are the Earl of Lonsdale, Miss Lewthwaite, Mr. James Grice, G. S. Petty, Mrs. Petty, Mrs. Grindale, J. B. Wilson, John Hunter, John Walker, Thomas Williamson, the trustees of the late G. Parke, Mrs. King, David Noble, J. F. Whitridge, John Brownrigg, Miss Grice, William Herbert, and James Robinson.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church of Whitbeck, dedicated to St. Mary, is situated in the hamlet of Newtown. It is an ancient edifice, consisting of nave and chancel, with bell turret at the western end, containing two bells. In the course of ages it has been much curtailed of its fair proportions, and many alterations have been effected in the structure, none of which have improved its appearance as an edifice, but, on the contrary, have sadly interfered with the simplicity and elegance of its original appearance. The roof of the nave is of open timber work; the font is of stone, and stands near the door. There is a mural tablet to the memory of several members of the Pearson family; and a monumental effigy, said to represent some one of the ancient lords of Whitbeck. This last memento of departed greatness was formerly inside the church, but, in consequence of the east wall having been rebuilt some feet nearer the nave than it formerly was, it is now outside, "exposed to the winds and dews of heaven." The church of Whitbeck was given by Gamel de Pennington to the priory of Conishead. In 1687, the advowson and tithes were sold to Mr. Lawrence Parke, with whose descendants they continued till 1807, when they were purchased by the Earl of Lonsdale, the present patron and lay-rector. His lordship is proprietor of half the tithes. The benefice, which is a perpetual curacy, is not entered in the King's Book. It was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the annual value of £9 14s. 8d., and, in 1747, was augmented from the same bounty with £200, and £250 given by the patron and impropiator, being the produce of the sale of a portion of the tithes. A further sum was given by the governors about the year 1760. With these benefactions an estate was bought near Dalton, in Furness. In 1785, the benefice received a further augmentation of £200, in addition to £300 from Queen Anne's Bounty, with which were purchased a house and land in Whitbeck, now the minister's residence. The parish register commences in 1597.

INCUMBENTS.—John Davies, 1624; Richard Huatson, 16—; William Robinson, 1673; Lancelot Walker, 1679; John Sawrey, 1709; David Noble, 1725; John Jackson, 1734; John Bradley, 1736; Thomas Green, 1737; Thomas Smith, 1773; John Atkinson, 1775; John Brocklebank, 1791; Thomas Caddy, 1826; Charles Nicholson, 1845; Thomas Ormandy, 1850.

CHARITIES.

The Hospital.—Henry Parke, of Kendal, mercer, a native of this parish, by will dated 28th April, 1631, bequeathed the sum of £400, to be bestowed on lands, or otherwise put out on good and sufficient security, the yearly benefit thereof to be and remain to six poor people within the parish of Whitbeck for ever, being such as have been of honest living, and are grown old, poor, and impotent. And he directed that the vacancies should be filled up at the discretion of the churchwardens for the time being, with the assistance of four of the most substantial men of the said parish; and he further directed that the parishioners of the said parish should, upon their own charges, erect and build a fair house, slated, and with fit and convenient rooms and lodgings therein for the said six poor men to dwell and inhabit in, at a place called Moor Green, in Whitbeck aforesaid. There is now in Whitbeck a house consisting of three apartments, called the Hospital, which is supposed to have been built in pursuance of the directions of the testator, Henry Parke. By indenture, dated 19th April, 1639, William and Bridget Hudleston, in consideration of £400 granted to trustees for the use of six poor men in the hospital at Whitbeck, gave, for the same purpose, a rent-charge of £24, issuing out of an estate called Scoggebar, in the parishes of Bootle and Whitbeck, and out of a messuage and tenement called Crosbythwaite and Ulpha. The sum of £24 has been from time to time, and is now, regularly paid out of the Scoggebar estate. Four of the principal inhabitants of Whitbeck are the trustees of this hospital, and have the entire management of it. Of late years they have generally nominated two or three persons to reside in the hospital, and others of the same description residing elsewhere to receive certain weekly allowances, which are paid out of the rent-charge of £24.

Henry Parke's Charity for Apprentices.—Mr. Henry Parke, by his will, left to the aldermen and brethren of the burgh of Kirkby Kendal, and their successors, £50, upon trust, that they should put out apprentices ten poor boys, whereof one should be sent from Whitbeck; £5 to be lent to the master with each apprentice, upon good security, which was to be repaid at the end of seven years, and the like number of apprentices to be put out again in the same manner, and so continue for ever. The loan of £5 is so trifling an object that no boys of the parish of Whitbeck have ever applied for the advantage of it.

Hudleston Parke's Charity.—By an account entered in the register of this parish, 1737-8, it appears that Hudleston Parke gave the yearly interest of £6, to be distributed to ten poor widows or people of the parish of Whitbeck, on St. Thomas's Day. Five shillings per annum were formerly paid as the interest of £6, out of the manor of Whitbeck, which had been the property of the donor. In 1810 the manor was sold, and £6 was then paid to the churchwardens. The interest is distributed by the churchwardens amongst poor widows, or poor people who do not receive parochial relief.

Henry Singleton's Charity.—The inhabitants of the district of Annaside, in this parish, are entitled, under the gift of Henry Singleton, to send their children to the free school at Bootle. The particulars are stated in our account of that school.

Besides these charities, we have the following:—In 1580 John Kitchin gave twenty marks, half the interest thereof to be applied to the poor, and the other half to the church. In 1617 Lawrence Parke gave £10 for a like purpose. In 1634 Arthur Myers gave £10 for the use of the schoolmaster; in 1674 Henry Robinson gave £5 for the same purpose. In 1735

Agnes Walker gave £10 for the use of the poor. Henry Parke and John Huddleston gave a donation for the poor on their entering into the hospital.

Newtown, or Town End, is a small hamlet on the Broughton road, two and a half miles south of Bootle.

Annaside is a hamlet near the sea, a mile and a half south-west of the same place.

At Gutterby there is a spa well, the water of which has been analysed, with the following result:—"The water contains a large quantity of chloride of sodium, also sulphate of soda, sulphate of lime, and carbonate of magnesia, and is somewhat similar in composition to the saline spring at Cheltenham. When taken in quantity the medicinal effect would be slightly purgative, and may have a tendency to obviate the formation of urinary calculi." Many persons have been benefitted by the use of this water.

Leath Ward.

LEATH WARD is bounded on the north by the county of Northumberland, Eskdale Ward, and Cumberland Ward; on the west by Allerdale-below-Derwent Ward, and Derwent Ward; on the south by Westmoreland; and on the east by the county of Durham. It comprehends the south-eastern part of the county of Cumberland; and is of an irregular oblong form, about thirty-five miles in length by from twelve to fourteen in breadth. It is a highly interesting and picturesque district, watered by the rivers Eden, Petteril, Eamont, Croglin, Nent, Tees, and Tyne, with several smaller streams, and possesses, in many parts, a rich and fertile soil; but the mountains, fells, and moorlands, at its eastern extremity, where heath and moss prevail, seem to bid defiance to the hand of the husbandman, yet they teem with mineral treasures, yielding large quantities of lead and silver, with some copper and zinc. Freestone is found in various places, as also coal and limestone. The ward comprises the deanery of Penrith, in the diocese of Carlisle, and the parish of Alston, in the diocese of Durham. It includes the parishes of Addingham, Ainstable, Alston, Castle Sowerby, Croglin, Dacre, Edenhall, Greystoke, Hesket-in-the-Forest, Hutton-in-the-Forest, Kirkland, Kirkoswald, Langwathby, Lazouby, Melmerby, Newton Reigny, Ousby, Penrith, Renwick, Great Salkeld, and Skelton.

ADDINGHAM PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by Kirkoswald and Renwick, on the west by the river Eden, on the south by Melmerby and Langwathby parishes, and on the east by Hartside Fell. The soil is generally fertile, and in a high state of cultivation; and being well enclosed, with quicksets, presents a cheerful appearance. On Finch Fell, is a bed of free stone, of a superior quality. The parish comprises the townships of Gablesby, Glassonby, Hunsonby with Winskill, and Little Salkeld. It has no township or village of its own name. The parish church is situated in the township and manor of Glassonby. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants, and Penrith the market usually attended.

GLASSONBY.

The area of Glassonby township is 1,643 acres, and its rateable value £1,180 10s. 6d. The population in 1801, was 144; in 1811, 114; in 1821, 153; in 1831, 167; in 1841, 165; and in 1851, 165, who are chiefly resident in the village of Glassonby.

The manors of Glassonby and Gablesby were formerly united in one lordship, "bounded on the north by the rill or beck that falleth from the east mountains westward, through Kirkoswald Parks, into Eden, which doth bound it on the west, from which the lordship is extended of great breadth into the mountains, till bounded by the waste belonging to Alston Moor on the east." Thus united they were given by Henry I. unto one Hildred and his heirs, to be held of the crown, in capite, by the annual payment of two shillings cornage. Hildred's line terminated in a female, who brought the manors of Glassonby and Gablesby, in marriage, to William de Ireby, who had by her two daughters, Christian and Eva. The latter had a rent charge out of the land, and was married to Robert de Estoteville, and, afterwards, to Alan de Charters. She re-leased to her sister Christian, wife of Thomas Lacelles, of Bolton, whose daughter Arminia became the wife of Thomas Seaton. The son of Thomas Seaton and Christian de Ireby espoused the cause of Robert Bruce, and, in consequence, his lands in England became forfeited to the crown, and the lordship of Gablesby and Unthank and other estates in this county were given by Edward I. to William Latimer, from whose family they passed by an heiress to John Neville, father of Ralph Neville, earl of Westmoreland. Glassonby was subsequently held by the Dacres of Kirkoswald, and passed from them to the Fienes and Lennards, barons Dacre. Thomas Lennard, baron Dacre, who was created earl of Sussex, dying in 1715, without male issue, his co-heiress sold this manor, amongst others, to Sir Christopher Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall, and it is now held by his descendant, Sir George Musgrave, Bart. The landowners are Joseph Rowley, Esq.; Messrs. John Holmes, William Pidsdale, Joseph Dodd, Joseph Richardson, William Robinson, John Metcalfe, William Hall, William Graham, and John Bird. The commons were enclosed about the year 1833.

The village of Glassonby, which is irregularly built, is seated upon an eminence, about half a mile north of the parish church, two miles south-east of Kirkoswald, and eight miles north-east-by-north of Penrith.

THE CHURCH.

Addingham church, dedicated to St. Michael, consists of a nave, chancel, porch, vestry on the north of the chancel, and a western bell turret, containing two bells. The nave has four windows in the south side, with square heads of two lights each. On the south side of the chancel is a door with a semicircular head. There is also a square-headed window of two lights. The east window, which is of three-lights, ogeed and trefoiled, is also square-headed. The arch between the nave and chancel is semicircular. On the chancel floor is a brass plate, with an inscription to the memory of Charles Smalwood. On the south side of the church is a fine old cross, said to have been brought from the chapel which was formerly at Little Salkeld. The presentation to Addingham was formerly vested in the lords of the manor, but was granted by Christian, widow of Thomas de Lascelles, to the prior and convent of Carlisle. This grant was confirmed by Bishop Irton, who ordained that sufficient provision should be made for the due solemnisation of worship, and the administration of the sacraments. A similar confirmation was made by Bishop Halton, and another by Edward I., on a complaint made by the prior and convent of their sufferings from the depredations of the Scots. In 1342 this vicarage, with that of Castle Sowerby, was allowed to be kept vacant, the prior and convent taking care to have the duties of the parish performed by secular priests. In the "Valor" of Pope Nicholas, Addingham is returned as worth £40; in the valuation made in the reign of Edward II. it is set down at £10;

and in the King's Book at £9. About the year 1678 a lease of the tithes of Little Salkeld was granted by the dean and chapter of Carlisle, in augmentation of the living. The benefice, a vicarage, is now worth about £253 a year, and is in the patronage of the dean and chapter, the legal representatives of the prior and convent of Carlisle.

VICARS.—Robert de Scardeburg, 1232; William de Laton, 1296; William de Beverley, 1306; Geoffrey de Generton, 1316; Adam de Wigton, died in 1362; Walter de Kelton, 1362; T. Lowther, occurs 1477; J. Darneton, occurs 1555; John Austen, died 1574; George Stubb, 1574; Edward Mayplett, 1591; Lewis West, 1636; William Sill, 1668; Henry Aglionby, died 1697; Thomas Nevinson, 1697; William Nicolson, 1698; John Christopherson, 1702; Edward Birkett, 1758; John Temple, 1768; William Paley, 1792; Ralph Tatham, 1795; David Frederick Markham, 1825; William Rice Markham, 1827; Henry Spencer Markham, 1829; William Tomlyns Briggs, 1830; Henry St. Andrew St. John, 1834; William Sharpe, 1839; Edward Brown, 1855.

CHARITIES.

Maughanby School.—According to Nicolson and Burn, this school was founded in the year 1634, by the Rev. Edward Mayplett, prebendary of Carlisle, and vicar of this parish, who endowed it with a house, and about seventy-six acres of land, then of the annual value of £10, but now let for about £84. Half of the estate is customary land, held under the manor of Melmerby, and subject to the customs of that manor. The deed of trust having been lost, no trustees have been appointed for a considerable period, and the bishop of the diocese presents the master. By a bond, dated in 1676, the master is required to attend the church regularly with his scholars, and to instruct them in the principles of religion, especially in the catechism of the Church of England. The school is open to all the boys and girls of the parish, free of expense, who are admitted as soon as they have learned the alphabet.

Poor Land.—There was formerly a poor stock in this parish, part of which is supposed to have originated in a bequest to the poor not receiving parish relief. In 1749 some of this money had been lost, and the parish laid out the remainder, then amounting to £51, in the purchase of several parcels of uninclosed land, lying in Winskill Town Fields. By subsequent changes the original parcels have been given up, much for the benefit of the charity, for six acres of enclosed land at Winskill. The rent, amounting to about £12, is distributed to the poor of the parish, not receiving parochial relief.

Lowson's Charity.—Thomas Lowson, by will dated 6th February, 1735, bequeathed to the poor of Addingham 20s. a year, payable out of his freehold lands in Little Salkeld fields. This money is divided into four portions, and given away in the same manner, and at the same time as the rent of the poor land.

Maughauby is a hamlet in Glassonby township, seven miles north-east from Penrith. (For school, see above.)

About half a mile to the south of the parish church of Addingham are Long Meg and her Daughters, the finest relics of bygone days in this vicinity. They consist of a circle 350 yards in circumference, formed of sixty-seven unhewn stones, some of them ten feet high. Seventeen paces from the southern side of the circle stands Long Meg, a square unhewn column of red freestone, eighteen feet high, and fifteen feet in circumference. The poet Wordsworth has described in a sonnet the feelings excited by coming unexpectedly upon these remains, which, in his opinion, exceeded in singularity and dignity of appearance any other relic of primeval times he had seen, with the exception of Stonehenge:—

"A weight of awe, not easy to be borne,
Fell suddenly upon my spirit—cast
From the dread bosom of the unknown past—
When first I saw that family forlorn
Speak Thou, whose massy strength and stature scorn
The power of years—pre-eminent, and placed Apart to overlook the circle vast—
Speak, Giant-mother! tell it to the morn
While she dispels the cumbrous shades of night,—
Let the moon hear, emerging from a cloud,—
At whose behest uprose on British ground
That Sisterhood, in hieroglyphic round
Forthshadowing, some have deem'd, the infinite,
The inviolable God that tames the proud."

In former days similar remains were in much greater abundance. In 1735, when Dr. Stukeley made his "Iter Boreale," there were many cairns, remnants of circles, and lines of stones scattered about the country, which have since disappeared. These the peasantry imagined had been brought together by the famous wizard, Michael Scott. They had a tradition that a giant, named Tarquin, lived at Brougham Castle until slain by Sir Lancelot du Lake, one of King Arthur's knights.

"But now the whole Round Table is dissolved
That was an image of the mighty world."¹

It is extremely probable that this district was part of, or closely adjoined, that enormous wood which in bygone ages bore the name of the Caledonian Forest.

"Long Meg and her Daughters, the well-known Druidical monument so called, connects itself by name with a curious, though not uncommon superstition. Tradition is silent respecting the history of this lady; who she was, and why petrified, are equally unknown. She is, however, in her present state, a very tall personage, made of much harder stone than her daughters, about seventy of whom lie around her in a circle. Another version of the story declares these small stones to be her lovers. All that is farther known of her fate is contained in these particulars:—If by any means a piece were broken off Meg, the unfortunate lady would bleed; and if any person could number the stones correctly, or twice reckon them the same, he would disenchant the Dulcinea of the moor and her daughters, or her lovers, as it might prove to be. But, strange to say, though many persons have come expressly to amuse themselves with the hope of bringing relief to Meg and her family, no one has as yet succeeded. . . . One of the many etymological conjectures, generally so worthless, supposing Meg to be the Latin Magus, minus the flexion, is deserving of notice. Granting this theory, the word Magus must have been obtained from the Christian missionaries, the long stone being the archdruid, petrified for his opposition to Christianity. This origin of the name, moreover, might be very easily forgotten, when the present traditional explanation would naturally follow. . . . The late Colonel Lacy, it is said, conceived the idea of removing Long Meg and her Daughters by blasting. Whilst the work was being proceeded with, under his orders, the slumbering powers of Druidism rose in arms against this violation of their sanctuary; and such a storm of thunder and lightning, and such heavy rain and hail, ensued, as the Fell Sides never before witnessed. The labourers fled for their lives, vowing never more to meddle with Long Meg. If there be truth in this story, which already wears a traditional air, all lovers of antiquity must be thankful for the providential throwing of cold water on so wicked a design; and should it ever again be attempted, and that the heavens rain hot water on the perpetrators, we could only hope that they would be like the cat of the proverb, more cautious for the future."¹

GAMBLESBY.

The area of the township of Gamblesby is 4,783 acres, and its rateable value is £1,835 13s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 222; in 1811, 215; in 1831, 279; in 1831, 301; in 1841, 259; and in 1851, 244, principally located in the hamlets of

¹ "Cumberland and Westmoreland, Ancient and Modern," p. 127, et seq.

¹ Tennyson.

Gamblesby and Unthank. The soil is very fertile, and in a high state of cultivation.

We have seen at page 501 how the manor of Gamblesby came to the Latimers. We have only to add that Mr. Denton says, "the manor of Gamblesby, with the hamlet of Unthank, continued in the crown in 1688." It was subsequently included in the grant to the Earl of Portland, and is now the property of the Duke of Devonshire. The landowners are Messrs. Thomas Watson, John Morton, Sen., John Morton, Jun., W. Harrison, John Huddart, John Armstrong, Benjamin and Joseph Salkeld, John Sawyer, Sarah Dufton, Mary Benson, Thomas Westgarth, James Atkinson, Thomas Parker, William Smith and J. R. Horncastle, Jonathan Thompson, Isaac Jackson, John Falder, Thomas Benson, John Sanders, Anthony Falder, Lancelot Smith, and others, many of whom are small owners. Part of the commons were enclosed in 1858.

The village of Gamblesby, which is neat and well built, is pleasantly situated near to Hartside Fell, ten miles north-east of Penrith. The Wesleyans and Independents have each a place of worship here. There is also a school, erected in 1837, which is attended by about thirty-five children.

Unthank is a hamlet in this township, ten and a half miles north-east-by-east of Penrith. Some short time ago, Mr. Thomas Benson, of Unthank, while in search of large stones on Gamblesby Low Fell, discovered the bones or remains of a human body, entombed within four mossy stones; the two side ones measuring each four feet and a half in length, by two feet in depth, and four and a half feet in thickness; the two end stones were each two and a half feet deep, two feet broad, and four and a half feet thick. This kist-væn, or stone chest, is supposed to have enclosed the remains of some person of distinction, who was interred here in days of yore. It is very probable that the stones were brought from Fins or Finch Fell, about a mile from the place where they were discovered, there being no stone of the same kind nearer. The quality of the stone is such, that when made very hot by fire, it will not easily crack or break into pieces.

CHARITY.

Poor Stock.—There was formerly a poor stock of £10 belonging to this township, the origin of which is unknown. The interest of it, amounting to ten shillings, is divided between the schoolmaster and the poor of the township.

HUNSONBY AND WINSKILL.

The area of this township, inclusive of that of Little Salkeld, is 3,094 acres; its rateable value is £1,309 17s. 0½d. The population in 1801 was 117; in 1811, 113; in 1821, 151; in 1831, 141; in 1841, 191; and in 1851, 200, who reside chiefly in the hamlets of Hunsonby and Winskill. In 1850 Mr. Joseph Falder found a small round urn, while ploughing a part of his land, which contained human bones. He has the urn in his possession, and in good preservation. The landowners are Mrs. Ann Atkinson, Messrs. Joseph Falder, Robert Davidson, John Westmoreland, John Graham, John Spedding, James Shephard, Isaac Topping, Thomas and John Tinkler, Thomas Henry Parker, Robert Benson, Isaac Nicholson, and John Lancaster.

The village of Hunsonby is about six miles north-east of Penrith. The Wesleyans have a place of worship here.

Winskill is a small village and joint township with Hunsonby, six miles north-east-by-east of Penrith. Robberby is another hamlet in this township, six miles north-east of Penrith.

CHARITIES.

School.—Joseph Hutchinson, by will dated in 1726, devised the reversion of an estate at Gawtree (on the death of his mother) for the support of a school for the benefit of the township of Hunsonby and Winskill. On the demise of Mrs. Hutchinson the endowment became appropriated to the school, and produced about £20 a year; but it is now worth upwards of £50 per annum. The property is vested in the churchwarden and overseer of the township of Hunsonby and Winskill, for the time being, who appoint the master, let the lands, and otherwise superintend the concerns of the school, which is open to all the children of the township, free of expense.

Winskill Estate.—The same Joseph Hutchinson devised all his estate, lying at Winskill, the yearly profits thereof to be divided amongst the poor of Hunsonby Quarter, according to their wants; and he entrusted the management thereof to the churchwardens and overseers, in the same manner as his lands at Gawtree above-mentioned. The estate consists of about thirty-one acres of land, and produces an annual rental of about £55.

Hutchinson's Legacy.—The same benefactor also bequeathed to the poor of Hunsonby Quarter, £10; the interest thereof to be divided amongst them according to their wants by the churchwardens and overseers.

LITTLE SALKELD.

The area of this township is returned with that of Hunsonby and Winskill; its rateable value is £1,067 4s. 8d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 119; in 1811, 108; in 1821, 111; in 1831, 105; in 1841, 120; and in 1851, 119; chiefly resident in the village of Little Salkeld. The soil is generally fertile, and in a high state of cultivation.

The first possessor of the manor of Little Salkeld subsequent to the Conquest, was one Walter, a Norman, who gave it to the priory of St. Mary, Carlisle, as we learn from a deed of confirmation of Edward I., in which Walter's gift is recited. The manor continued to be held by the prior and convent till the period of the Reformation, when it passed to their successors, the dean and chapter of Carlisle, and from them to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the present possessors of the manorial rights and privileges. The landowners are Mr. T. Sowerby, Mrs. Hodgson, Mrs. Longrigg, St. John's College, Cambridge.

The village of Little Salkeld is situated near the Eden, one mile south of the parish church, and six miles north-east of Penrith. There was anciently a chapel at Little Salkeld, which, in the year 1360, being desecrated and polluted by the shedding of blood, and the parish church being at a great distance, the vicar was allowed to officiate in his own house until the chapel could be reconsecrated. According to tradition the chapel was situated in a village called Addingham, on the east bank of the river, where human bones, crosses, and other remains, have been found. The old cross now in the churchyard of the parish church is said to have been brought from this place.

The residences having particular names are Mariann Lodge, Salkeld Hall, the Vicarage, and Long Meg House. The river Eden runs through the township.

Salkeld Hall, the residence of Mrs. Hodgson, is situated in the village of Little Salkeld, and was originally the residence of a family bearing the local name. Denton tells us that Mr. George Salkeld, during the civil wars, was obliged to part with the seat of his ancestors, for a very trifling consideration, to Colonel Cholmley, who made large additions to it. This house, before 1688, became the property of Mr. C. Smalwood, from whose descendant, Timothy Smalwood, Esq., it was purchased about the year 1790, by Lieutenant-colonel Lacy, who erected a new front, and otherwise improved and modernised the old mansion. He sold it in 1826 to Robert Hodgson, Esq., who has also added considerably to the house. The old mansion, despite its many alterations, still bears many marks of antiquity.

On the brink of the Eden, not far from Salkeld Hall, are the Lacy Caves, so named from a resident in the neighbourhood who undertook their excavation. There are arched passages receding into darkness, and with an outlook from sundry openings upon the stream, admirable from their environment if not for themselves. The river is broad and clear, makes a bend round the hill, and tumbles with rush and roar over a stony mill-dam; the bank is steep and wooded, and a rill runs across with lively babble.

AINSTABLE PARISH.

THE parish of Ainstable is bounded on the west by the river Eden, on the south-east by the river Croglin, and on the north-east by a small stream. A plan of the parish is deposited in the parish chest in the church. The surface of this parish is very uneven; the soil is a light and fertile loam, with a substratum of clay-sand or gravel. There is plenty of freestone in the parish. The inhabitants, who are engaged in agricultural pursuits, reside in the villages, of which Ainstable is the principal. Penrith, Brampton, and Carlisle are the markets usually attended. The parish has no dependent townships, but is divided into the High and Low Quarters.

The area of Ainstable is 4,178 acres. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 444; in 1811, 431; in 1821, 518; in 1831, 509; in 1841, 501; and in 1851, 524.

Ainstable manor adjoins the barony of Gilsland, from which it is separated by the Northskeugh Beck, and extends from the river Eden on the west, up eastward to the mountains; bordering upon the lordship of Staffol towards the south. It was given by Hubert de Vaux, or de Vallibus, lord of Gilsland, to his kinsman Eustace de Vaux, in whose family it continued till an heiress brought it to the Burdons, from whom it passed in a similar manner to William Lord Daer. It subsequently came to the Howard family by the marriage of Lord William Howard with Elizabeth, a co-heiress of the last male heir of the Daeres, and descending with the barony of Gilsland, is now possessed by the Earl of Carlisle. There are many estates held under this manor subject to the payment of yearly customary rents and fines certain; and others, by the payment of yearly free or quit rents.

The manor of Armathwaite, another manor in this parish, is held by Charles Aglionby, Esq., and has "rents, services, ward, and fines, both certain and arbitrary, with this further privilege, that not only the demesne itself, but all the customary estates held of it, are toll free all over England. Free or quit rents are also paid for other estates in the parish, to different proprietors."¹

Nunnery, the capital seat of Armathwaite manor, occupies the site of the ancient Benedictine convent, which was founded by William Rufus, the second Norman monarch of England, in the first year of his reign; and Dr. Todd tell us, that its origin is as ancient as that of any religious house in England. He adds that, "St. Cuthbert laid the first foundation of it at Carlisle, and gave the veil to Ermenburga, queen dowager of Northumberland, as the first abbess. William Rufus removed it from the city to a village called Armathwaite or Heremithwaite, where it continued for some ages. At last it was translated a mile or two more eastward, to a place to which it gave the name of 'Nunnery.' Rufus appears to have dedicated the convent to Our Saviour and the Blessed Virgin Mary. He bestowed on the community two acres of land, as a site for the convent, and three carucates of land, and two acres of meadow, in the neighbourhood of the nunnery, with 216 acres of land lying on the north side of Tarn Wadling, and in the forest of Inglewood; common of pasture for themselves and their tenants throughout the forest, and sufficient timber for their houses; a yearly rent of 40s. out of his tenements in Carlisle to be paid by the hands of the governor of the said city; freedom from toll throughout England for them and their tenants; common of pasture for their cattle within the town and common of Ainstable; and free warren in all their lands; to have and to hold all the said possessions as freely as the 'heart may think or eye may see.'" This convent appears to have been, for some time at least, under the visitation of the bishops of Carlisle; and Dr. Todd informs us that when a vacancy occurred in the office of prioress, it was customary for the nuns to elect their superiress, and then present her to the bishop for institution and induction; and that this was the custom he shows by the election, in 1362, of Catherine de Lanercost to the vacant office, who received her seat in the choir and a voice in the chapter in obedience to a mandate sent from the bishop to the archdeacon. Although possessed of the lands and privileges abovenamed, this convent does not appear to have been in very affluent circumstances, if we may form an opinion from a grant of Edward III., who, in consideration of their poverty, remitted to the prioress and nuns ten pounds, "which they owed for victuals in Karlol in Edward II.'s time, they not being able to pay off so great a score." For this statement we have the authority of Dr. Todd. The same king is also stated to have remitted their yearly rent of £10, in consideration of the losses they had sustained during the war between England and Scotland. From its situation, this convent often suffered from the Scots; and in the reign of Edward IV. we find that it was almost destroyed by them: jewels, relics, books, evidences, and other property being carried off. This disaster was followed by a charter of confirmation from the king of England. As will be seen hereafter, the church of Ainstable was appropriated to the convent, whose chaplain officiated in the parish church. Armathwaite convent continued to flourish, and its community to pursue the even "tenour of their way," till the 26th Henry VIII. (1534), when its revenues were, according to the King's Book, £19 2s. 2d. It appears to have been surrendered to the commissioners of Henry VIII. about the year 1536, at which time the community consisted of a prioress and three nuns, their revenue being at that time, according to Dugdale, £18 18s. 8d. a year. This convent seems to have continued in the possession of the crown till the reign of Edward VI., who, on March 9th, 1552, granted to "William Greyme, alias Carlisle, gentleman, the house and site of the late priory of Armethwaite, with one garden, three orchards, one parcel of enclosed ground, called the Lyng Close, containing two acres; one close of arable land, called the Pete Bank, containing four acres; one close, called the Studholes, containing four acres of arable land, ten acres of meadow, and four acres of waste; three closes of arable land, called Wheat Closes, containing twenty acres; one close, called Holme Cammock, containing one acre; one close, called Kirk Holme, containing one acre; one close called High Field, containing five acres; one close of land, wood, and waste, containing eighteen acres; and one other close, called Broad Meadow, containing nine acres; and also those messuages, tenements, and lands, containing 216 acres, in the tenure of seventeen different tenants, in the Nounne Close; also five messuages and tenements, in the tenure of so many different persons, in Dale, in the county of Cumberland; six messuages and tenements in Rowcroft, in the said county; twelve in Anastaplethe, in the said county, with several quit rents there; two messuages and tenements in the parish of Kirkoswald; two in Cumwhitton; one in Blenkarn; one in the parish of Kirkland; one in Glassonby; and one in Crofton." The Grahams continued to possess this property till the year 1685, when George Graham, Esq., sold it for £1,436, to Sir John Lowther, Bart., who exchanged it with John Aglionby, Esq., for Drumburgh Castle, in 1694, and the latter determined to reside here. His grandson, Henry Aglionby, Esq., pulled down the old house, which formed part of the priory, and erected the pleasant mansion now known as Nuntery. Part of the wall of the monastic building is yet standing on the west side of the house. The principal remains of the priory is an upright pillar, in a field called Cross Close, to the north-east of the mansion. On one side is a large oval stone with a cross in its centre, round which is inscribed, "Sanctuarium 1088." It is supposed that this inscription has some reference to the ancient privilege of sanctuary, possessed by so many of the religious houses in Catholic times. At a short distance, to the east of the house, is the ancient burial ground of the priory, a small square piece of land surrounded by lofty trees. Several remains of antiquity have been discovered here, one of which is still preserved and represents the cowed head of a monk. A little beyond this place is a well, bearing the name of Chapel Well. When the conventual buildings were being removed, a small palpiton on copper, of a Benedictine nun, with a rosary, cross, and book in her hand, was found in a niche of the wall—it is now at Nuntery; as is also a stone, inserted in the north-west end of the present mansion, with the following inscription:—

¹ Jefferson's "Leath W." p. 211.

"Though veiled Benedictines are removed hence, Think of their poverty, chastity, faith, obedience."

Some ancient embroidery, said to be the work of the nuns, is also preserved. There are also two recumbent monuments in memory of John Aglionby and Catherine Denton, his wife, formerly in the old church of St. Cuthbert, Carlisle, but on the building of the present church they were removed to Nuntery. The scenery on the banks of the river, which has rendered Nuntery so famous, is well described by the Rev. W. Ford, who, in his "Guide to the Lakes," says, "The road then descends more gradually, till it arrives at Nuntery, where the Croglia, a mountain stream, joins the Eden. . . . It may, we think, be safely asserted that the Croglia, in this last part of its course, for the space of a mile, during which it pours along a deep ravine, has no equal. It first enters this savage dell by a fall of forty feet, forcing its way into a deep caldron scooped out of the rock, in which the water is agitated and whirled around in boiling eddies till it finds an escape by a narrow opening in one corner, whence it rushes down several leaps, foaming over the large masses that hinder its impetuous progress. The rocks are piled on each other up to the height of one or two hundred feet, projecting their bold fronts forward over the river, 'here scorched with lightning, there with ivy green, or grey with aged lichens and mosses.' On the south side the path is carried round the protruding masses of rock on rudely-framed galleries, supported by rough timbers, thus affording the best and most striking views, because the rocks and woods on the northern side, which are the grandest, are seen to the best advantage. At one time you are on the margin of the water, beneath overhanging crags, the brook before you rushing furiously over moss-covered fragments and stones, forming cascades of exceeding beauty; whilst the trees waving in the breeze, reveal the shaggy rock that supplies their roots with scanty nourishment. At another, you are on the brink of the precipice, looking down into a dense mass of wood, out of which the twisted branches of the rift oak, 'stripped of their bark, toss their giant arms amid the skies,' contrasting with the deep green behind, while the water is betrayed by its sparkling sheen and softened roar." The site of the ancient priory is now marked by a pillar of masonry on the hill above the present house.

Aglionby of Nuntery.

The family of Aglionby, anciently Aguilon, claims great antiquity, deriving its origin from

WALTER AGUILON, one of the followers of William the Conqueror in his invasion of England, who came into Cumberland with Ranulph de Meschines, and fixing his residence in the parish of Warwick, gave to it his own name, which it retains to this day, although there are now no remains of the mansion. The family appears to have resided at Aglionby till the reign of Henry VII., when John Aglionby, described as of Carlisle, married a daughter of Richard Salkeld, of Corby Castle, a family which became extinct in that reign. After this period we find them at Drawdykes Castle, in Stauwix parish, now a decayed mansion used as a farmhouse. From the above Walter Aguilon lineally descended

WILLIAM AGLIONBY, of Aglionby, who married, in 1391, Maria, daughter of Alan Blennerhasset, of Carlisle, and was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS AGLIONBY, of Aglionby, who lived in the time of Henry V. His wife was Katherine, daughter of — Skelton, Esq., of Armathwaite Castle, and was grandfather, or great-grandfather, of

EDWARD AGLIONBY, of Aglionby, who occurs as sheriff of Carlisle in 1544-5. His son and successor,

JOHN AGLIONBY, of Carlisle, espoused a daughter of Richard Salkeld, Esq., of Corby, and left a son and heir,

EDWARD AGLIONBY, Esq., of Carlisle, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Cuthbert Musgrave, Esq., of Crookdake, and had issue,

I. EDWARD, his heir.

II. JOHN, D.D., in holy orders.

1. DOROTHY, married to Alan Blennerhasset, Esq.

The elder son,

EDWARD AGLIONBY, Esq., married Jane, daughter of Henry Brougham, Esq., and dying in 1648, left, with a daughter, Mary, married to John Stanford, Esq., of Aukham, a son and heir,

JOHN AGLIONBY, Esq., of Carlisle, born in 1610. This gentleman took an active part in the defence of the city of Carlisle, when besieged by the Parliamentarians, from October, 1644, until its surrender in June, 1645. In breach, however, of the capitulation that the garrison should enjoy the honours of war, and the citizens perfect safety, Mr. Aglionby and Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart., were thrown into prison, tried, and condemned to death. They, however, contrived to escape the night previous to the day appointed for their execution, and thus were enabled to save their lives. Mr. Aglionby married Margery, daughter of Christopher Richmond, Esq., of Highhead Castle, by Elizabeth, daughter of Anthony Chaytor, Esq., of Croft, and had with three daughters, Jane, Isabel, and Mary,

i. JOHN, his successor.

ii. Henry, M.A., in holy orders, rector of Bowness, who died in 1701.

iii. Christopher.

iv. Richard, for many years registrar of Carlisle, who had, with two sons, who both died in youth, a daughter,

Ursula, born in 1688, married in 1729, to Wm. Nugent, Esq., of Clonest, in the county of Westmeath, and had two daughters, Elizabeth Nugent, married to — Nash, Esq.

Mary Nugent, married to the Right honourable Baron Yelverton, lord Avonmore, and chief baron of the Exchequer in Ireland.

The eldest son and heir,

JOHN AGLIONBY, Esq., born March 28th, 1642, was brought up for the bar, and for many years served the office of recorder of Carlisle. In 1696 he exchanged Drumburgh Castle and manor with Sir John Lowther, Bart., for the estate of Nunnerly and manor of Armathwaite. He married Barbara, daughter of John Patrickson, Esq., of Calder Abbey, and had issue, JOHN, his successor.

Bridget, married to George Watson, Esq., of Goswick Castle, in the county of Durham.

He died in 1717, and was interred in the family vault, St. Cuthbert's church, Carlisle. His son and heir,

JOHN AGLIONBY, Esq., of Nunnerly, born in 1663, married Dinah, co-heiress of the Rev. Richard Stoddart, and was succeeded by his son,

HENRY AGLIONBY, Esq., of Nunnerly, born in 1684. This gentleman represented the city of Carlisle in two parliaments, temp. George I., and was high-sheriff for the county in 1733. He was likewise an alderman of Carlisle, and repeatedly mayor of that city, where he enjoyed considerable influence. In 1715 he pulled down the old priory and erected the present mansion, whence he removed upon the marriage of his son to Crossfield, and there built another residence, where he continued to dwell till his decease. By his wife, Elizabeth, youngest sister of Sir Gifford Lawson, Bart., of Brayton, he had issue,

i. HENRY, his successor.

ii. John, M.A., of Queen's College, Oxford, where he deceased.

iii. Sarah Grace, died young.

iv. Sarah, married to Richard Lowthian, Esq., of Dumfries.

v. Elizabeth, who died young, in 1738.

Mr. Aglionby died in 1750, and was succeeded by his eldest son, HENRY AGLIONBY, Esq., of Nunnerly, born in 1715, married Anne, fourth daughter of Sir Christopher Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall, by Julia, daughter of Sir John Chardin, by whom (who died in 1780) he had issue,

i. Henry, who died young, in 1766, his father still living.

ii. John, died young.

iii. CHRISTOPHER, his heir.

i. Elizabeth, married to Richard Bamber, Esq.

ii. Julia, died unmarried.

iii. Anne, married to the Rev. Samuel Bateman, of Newbeggins Hall, rector of Farthingstone, and had a son, HENRY AGLIONBY BATEMAN, who relinquishing his patronymic, assumed, in compliance with the testamentary injunction of one of his aunts, the surname of Aglionby instead, and is the present Henry Aglionby, Esq.

iv. Mary, married to John Orfeur Yates, Esq., of Skirwith Abbey, in Cumberland, who had issue,

i. FRANCIS, of whom hereafter.

2. John, who had issue sons and daughters.

Mr. Aglionby, who served the office of sheriff of Cumberland in 1763, and was for many years an alderman of Carlisle, died at Nunnerly in 1770, and was succeeded by his only surviving son,

CHRISTOPHER AGLIONBY, Esq., of Nunnerly, who was a minor at the time of his father's demise. This gentleman served the office of sheriff of Cumberland in 1780, and died unmarried in 1785, when the male line of the family expired. The estates were subsequently divided by a decree of the Court of Chancery between his four sisters. Mrs. Bamber, widow of the above Richard Bamber, Esq., who succeeded to the Nunnerly estates in 1785, on the death of Christopher Aglionby, Esq., bequeathed that property, by will, to her nephew, Francis Yates, eldest son of John Orfeur Yates, Esq., and afterwards to go to Henry Aglionby, Esq., or his heirs male. On succeeding to the estates Mr. Yates assumed the name of Aglionby, and thus became

FRANCIS AGLIONBY, of Nunnerly. On the breaking out of the war which followed the peace of Amiens, Mr. Aglionby entered the Cumberland militia, in which he finally attained the rank of major. He married Mary, daughter of John Matthews, Esq., of Wighton Hall, by whom he had issue,

i. Henry, who died under age.

ii. Elizabeth Anne, unmarried.

iii. Mary, unmarried.

iv. Jane, unmarried.

In 1818 Major Aglionby succeeded Mr. Satterthwaite as chairman of the quarter sessions of the county, which office he held till the time of his death. He contested the western division of the county twice, once with Edward Stanley, Esq., and at another time with Samuel Irton, Esq., in both cases unsuccessfully. In the year 1837 he was returned to Parliament with William James, Esq., of Barrock Lodge, for the eastern division of the county. Major Aglionby died in 1840, and was succeeded in the Nunnerly estates by his cousin,

HENRY AGLIONBY AGLIONBY, Esq., of Nunnerly, who was born on the 28th December, 1790. Mr. Aglionby was a member of St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1813, and M.A. in 1816, in which year he was also called to the bar. He subsequently practised as a special pleader, and went the northern circuit. He became member of Parliament for Cockerthorpe on the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832, and continued to represent the same town till his decease on July 31st, 1854. He married, at Caterham, Surrey, March 2nd, 1852, Mrs. Ladd, who survives him. His successor at Nunnerly is

CHARLES AGLIONBY, Esq.

Arms.—Argent, two bars, and in chief three martlets sable.
Crest.—A demi eagle, displayed, or.

The village of Ainstable occupies a pleasant situation, about half a mile east of the Eden, and twelve miles south-east-by-south of Carlisle.

THE CHURCH.

Ainstable church, dedicated to St. Michael and all the Holy Angels, was re-built in the early part of the present century, and consists of nave and chancel, with a small square tower at the west end, in which is the entrance. It contains many marble monuments in memory of various members of the Aglionby family. In the church yard is a gravestone with a cross florée and a sword, and four coats of arms of the Dentons of Cardew, who held the manor in the reign of Edward II. The arms in two of the shields are impaled. The lower shield is placed diagonally under the helmet and crest, a custom which prevailed in the latter part of the fourteenth and the beginning of the fifteenth century. Round the edge of the stone is this inscription:—"Hic jacet Johannes de D ntown Dominus de . . . nstapli." As seen above, the church of Ainstable was appropriated to the priory of Armathwaite, the chaplain of which performed all offices of religion here. On the dissolution of the priory the rectory and the advowson became the property of the crown, and continued so until the third year of the reign of Edward VI., when letters patent were issued, granting to Sir Thomas Peryent, Knt., and Thomas Rowe, gentleman, the rectory and church of Ainstable, and the advowson and right of patronage of the said church, late belonging to the priory of Armathwaite, together with all houses, glebe lands, tithes of corn, hay, wool, lamb, and all other tithes to the same belonging, to hold to them and their heirs as of the manor of East Greenwich, by fealty only, in free socage, and not in capite. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas (1292) the church of Ainstable is entered at £10 9s. 5d., and the vicarage, at £5 4s. 8d.; in the King's Book, the vicarage is valued at £8 8s. 2d.; and it was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £35. On the enclosure of the commons in 1821 an allotment of 300 acres was awarded in lieu of vicarial tithes; and this land has since been much improved, so that the net value of the living is now about £200 per annum. In the year 1688 the advowson was in the co-hiers of Mr. Leonard Barrow; Mr. George Lowthian, of Staffield, who had married one of the co-heiresses, became, by purchase, the possessor of the whole of the tithes. His representative, Richard Lowthian Ross, Esq., sold both the advowson and tithes to Francis Aglionby, Esq., of Nunnery. Charles Fetherstonehaugh, Esq., of Staffield Hall is the present improprator.

VICARS.—Richard Chyrden occurs 1534; Thomas Rumney, died 1565; Sir John Preestman, 1565; Robert Watson, 1597; George Dacres, 1661; George Hodgson, 1680; John Verty, 1737; Charles Smalwood, 1749; Thomas Ralton, 1771; William Armstrong, 1782; William Smith, 1787; John Bird, 1822; A. M. Wilson, 1853.

The vicarage, a neat building in the Tudor style of architecture, was erected in 1855.

CHARITIES.

The School.—By an indenture bearing date March 26, 1743, a parcel of land in this parish containing four acres, was conveyed to trustees, in consideration of £50, for the use of a free school at Ainstable. Part of the money, £40, was left for that purpose by William Elan, and the rest was collected in the parish. The rent, amounting to about £10, is paid over to the master. All the children of parishioners are admitted into the school and taught reading, writing, and arithmetic; but none are taught free in respect of this endowment. The average attendance is about forty scholars.

Dixon's Legacy.—Margaret Dixon, by will, dated November 30th, 1773, left £15 on trust, the interest to be paid to the master of the school, towards educating some of the poor children of the parish gratis.

G. and B. Lowthian's Charity.—Bridget Lowthian, in 1745, left a legacy of £33 for the relief of the poor of this parish; and George Lowthian, in the same year, left £20 for a similar purpose.

Richard Lowthian's Charity.—A rent charge of £5 was left by Richard Lowthian, to the poor of this parish.

Parochial Library.—There is a parochial library, but its origin is unknown.

Dale, Bascadyke, Longdales, and Ruckcroft are hamlets in this parish.

There is a chalybeate spring well on one of the glebe land farms.

Dr. Leake, an eminent physician of the last century, author of several practical treatises on midwifery, &c., and founder of the Westminster Lying-in Hospital, was the son of the Rev. William Leake, curate of Ainstable, where he was born on the 8th of June, 1729; he died in 1792.

ALSTON PARISH.

The parish of Alston, anciently written Aldeneston, and Aldstone, is a region of dreary wastes and narrow dales, bounded on the west by Cross Fell, Hartside Fell, and Thackmoor Fell, and on the other sides by high lands in the counties of Northumberland, Durham, and Westmoreland. It is about nine miles in length from north to south, and about eight miles in breadth from west to east. It is intersected by the rivers South Tyne, Blackburn, Nent, Gildersdale Burn, and several smaller streams, which rise and unite in the parish, and flow through some deep dells, where, in some places, there is good pasturage for sheep and cattle, but only a few acres of land in tillage, the high lands and wastes being generally covered with heath and bent. The soil is a mixture of clay, moss, and sand. The parish is rich in mineral treasures. Small trout abound in the rivers, and grouse on the moors, where grow clustered bramble-like cranberries, commonly called cloud-berries. This rich mining district was formerly very difficult of access, owing to the rough and broken state of its roads, but in 1833 an act of Parliament was obtained for making new roads from the town of Alston, to Penrith, Brampton, and Hexham, all of which have been long completed. Another road has since been made from Alston over Yadmoss to Greta Bridge in Yorkshire. And, last of all, the great civiliser of modern times, the railway, has reached Alston, connecting it with the Newcastle and Carlisle line at Haltwhistle in Northumberland, and so with the main lines of railway in the kingdom.

Alston parish comprises an area of 35,060 acres, inclusive of Garrigill and Nenthead. The population in 1801 was 3,626; in 1811, inclusive of Garrigill and Nenthead, 5,079; in 1821, of Alstone alone, 4,411; in 1831, 5,244; in 1841, 4,588; and in 1851, 3,409, who are chiefly resident in the town of Alston. Mining is the principal employment of the inhabitants. The miners are, for the most part, sober and industrious; and show a simplicity of manners rarely found among other labouring people. The Alston and Haltwhistle railway runs through the parish. The rateable value of the whole parish is £10,108 3s. 4d. There is a weekly market at Alston on Saturdays.

The Roman road called the Maiden Way crosses this parish, and its course may still be traced in several places. There is a large cavern on Gildersdale Fell, and upon Hall Hill, a little below Tyne Bridge, is the foundation of a fortress, which appears to have been surrounded with a moat.

The manor of Alston, comprehending about forty-five square miles, was given to William de Veteripont by William the Lion King of Scotland, who confirmed it by a grant, recited in a record which appears to belong to the year 1280. It was further confirmed by a charter of King John, bearing date May 10, 1209. In 1280 Edward I. by his charter stating that having recovered the manor from Robert de Veteriponte, he now, at the instance of Alexander, son of Alexander King of Scotland, restored it to his son Nicholas, to be held in perpetuity of the said Alexander as of his liberty of Tynedale, with the exception of the mines, miners, and liberties of the miners, within the manor. From an inquisition taken in 1315, after the demise of Nicholas de Veteriponte, we learn that "he died possessed of the capital messuage in Alderstone, with fourteen acres of arable land, and 100 acres of meadow, had thirty-three tenants at Gerardsgill who held thirty-three shieldings and paid yearly £5 18s. 0d. yearly rent, thirteen tenants at Amotes-halth who paid yearly £3 8s. 4d., twenty-two tenants at Nent and Corbrigate who held twenty-two shieldings, and paid £5 2s. rent; also one water corn-mill and one fulling mill, and 3,000 acres of pasture in Alderstone Moor; all which premises were held of the manor of Wark: and that Robert de Veteriponte was his son and heir." His Alston estates descended to his son Robert; and from him, it appears, to his sisters—Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Blencowe, and Joan, wife of William Whytlawe, where a link or two of the family history is wanting to connect it with Thomas Whytlawe, who, in 1443, granted the manors of Alston, Ellerington, and Gerrardgill, to William Stapleton of Edenhall, and Margaret his wife, whose daughter Mary brought Alston in marriage to the Hiltons of Hilton Castle, in the county of Durham. This last-named family, about the year 1618,¹ sold Alston to Sir Francis Ratcliffe, Bart., of Dilton, and it continued to be held by his family till the year 1716, when, on the attainder of the last Earl of Derwentwater, it was settled by act of Parliament on Greenwich Hospital. Between the years 1611 and 1616 the lands were leased off to the tenants by Henry Hilton, Esq., for rents amounting to £63 a year, and a twenty-penny fine at the end of every twenty years. The lords continued to claim the timber on the tenant's lands until a compromise between the two parties introduced a clause into the act of Parliament, passed in 1803, for enclosing the commons of the parish, by which all right of timber was settled on the tenant. The dignity of the manor is still preserved by holding courts leet and baron at Lowbyer. Some of the court books are signed by the first Lord Derwentwater. The governors of Greenwich Hospital let out the mines on working leases to the London and other lead companies. The principal landowners are the governors of Greenwich Hospital, the London Lead Company, the trustees of the late Robert Hodgson, Esq., the trustees of the late George Elstob Joseph Dickinson, Esq.; Jacob and Jonathan Walton, Esqs.; Hugh Watson Friend, Esq.; Rev. Octavius James; the trustees of the late Jacob Wilson, Esq.; Tinniswood and John Millicar; the Rodderup Fell Mining Company; Messrs. Fydell and Tufnell, William Bird, Thomas Shaw, and Thomas Wilson, Esq.

¹ Mr. Sopwith says that it was in 1620 that the manor was sold to Sir Edward Ratcliffe for £2,500.

The mines of Alston have been worked from a very remote period. There is every probability that they were known to the Romans, whose "Maiden Way" runs through the parish. We have, however, nothing concerning them that can be relied upon as authentic previous to the reign of Henry I. The Cumberland Pipe Rolls contain a series of entries of the "Rents and profits of the mines of Northumberland and Cumberland, during the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., extending from the year 1157 to 1189 inclusive, and which make a total of £4,585. In the twelfth century, and at later periods, there was a mint at Carlisle, which, there is every probability, was supplied with silver from Alston. Under the year 1226, the Northumberland Pipe Roll contains an entry of a charge of £2,154 for the "rent of the mine of Carlisle," which, by subsequent records, is identified with that of Alston. The Alston mines were protected by royal charters, which guaranteed to the workers in them peculiar privileges and immunities, and prohibited any one from unjustly distributing them, under a penalty of £10. We subjoin the following extract from an old document, in the possession of Mr. George Millicar, of Tyne Head, agent of Messrs. Fydell and Tufnell, the lords of Tyne Head manor, and obligingly copied for us by the Rev. George Monkhouse, which goes far to prove the antiquity of mining operations at Alston. "That part of Tyne Head which belongs to Mr. Gill is freehold, and he hath also the royalties, the rest of Tyne Head is held by lease, as aforesaid. Lord Coke, in his second institute, page 578, reports a noble case that happened in his mines of Aldunestone, in the 18th Edward I. (1289-90). Henry de Whitby and Joan, his wife, impleaded several of the miners for cutting down and carrying away their trees. The miners answer that they farm the mine of the king, and plead that for working a vein of silver (as now they do) the miners have a right to take away any wood whatsoever, that shall be near to and convenient for the said work, and that they have also a right at their will and pleasure to use and dispose of that wood for burning and smelting, and for paying the workmen their wages, and also to give what they think fit thereof to their poor workmen of the miners; and they state that they have exercised their right from time immemorial. The said Henry and Joan acknowledge the miners' right to take the wood for burning and smelting for the use of the miners, but charge that the miners had cut down, carried away, and sold large quantities of wood, from which the king received no kind of benefit, and which never came to the use of the mines at all. And upon this they pray to have judgment. It doth not appear what was the event of this cause, nor is it now very material to inquire. For two reasons: first, for that by act of Parliament no mine shall be deemed a royal mine, notwithstanding any gold or silver that may be found in it—only the king (if he pleases) may have the ore, paying for the same a stated price. Secondly, there is now, as may well be supposed, scarce a tree to be seen in the whole country." By inquests held at Penrith, in the year 1356 and 1415, it appears that the judicial affairs of the mines of Alston were administered by a coroner as judge, and a king's serjeant as sheriff or head bailiff. In the first-named year, the mines were held by lease, under a certain rent of the freemen of that place, by one Tilman, a native of Cologne, who, on petition to the crown, obtained for himself and workmen letters patent, directing the king's bailiffs to maintain and protect them while at labour in the mines, and not to suffer them to be injured or molested. It appears by letters patent, granted to William Stapleton, Esq., dated November 13th, 1414, that he and his tenants at will in this manor, and their predecessors, had annually paid into the Royal Exchequer at Carlisle, ten marks for the mines here, known by the name of the "mine of Carlisle." The Originalia contain a grant, in 1417, of the mine of Alston to William Stapleton, Esq., at the annual rent of £10. By letters patent, dated December 20th, 1468, Edward IV. granted to Richard Neville, earl of Warwick, and John Neville, his brother, earl of Northumberland, and others, all his mines of gold and silver; and again on March 23rd, 1475, to his brother Richard, duke of Gloucester, Henry Percy, earl of Northumberland, and others, the mine of Fletchers, near Garrigill, in the parish of Alston. In the year 1718 there were 119 lead mines in the parish of Alston, 103 of which were held on lease under Greenwich Hospital. The average annual produce of that and the two preceding years is stated at rather more than 8,377 tons, the value being about £70,000. At the latter end of the last century the clear yearly produce was stated at £16,000; the number of persons employed in the mines being upwards of 1,000. In 1814 the number of mines held under the hospital was 102; the number of tons produced, 4,598. About the year 1829, the annual quantity of ore was stated as not exceeding 8,800 tons, yielding about 5,500 fother of lead, and containing from eight to ten ounces of silver to each fother.

We subjoin the statistics of the lead mines of the Alston district for 1857:—

	Names of Mines.	Lead-ore.			Silver.
		Tns.cwts.	Tns.cwts.	Ozs.
ALSTON MOOR.	Long Cleugh	47 5	366 6
	Rampgill	453 8	324 1
	Capel Cleugh	187 8	140 13
	Browngill	190 9	99 6
	Carrs and Hanging Shaw	337 2	232 15
	Sealeburn	87 3	65 5
	Middle Cleugh	375 15	236 14
	Bentyfield, S. Vein, W. E.	97 4	72 18
	Small Cleugh	648 4	486 3
	Tyne Bottom	22 14	17 0
Mines leased to the Governor and Company.	Guddamgill	27 6	29 8
	Cowper Dyke Heads	18 19	14 15
	Fletcheras	0 14	0 10
	Prorsdale	2 8	1 16
	Butyfid, E. End, Sun Vn.	85 0	63 15	892
	Black Syke	10 14	8 0	160
	Blagill	37 12	28 4	198
	Brizel Burn	165 15	79 6	1,166
	Brownley Hill	420 0	315 0	1,260
	Low B'rey Bank	7 8	5 10
Total Ore, 2,771 tons 1 cwt. Total of Lead, 2,080 tons 6 cwt.	Carrs West of Nent	16 0	12 6	96
	Clargill Burn
	Clargill Head
	Cow Hill	4 19	3 14
	Crag Green, North Vein	2 19	2 0
	Crossgill Head	5 5	3 15
	Dowpot Syke	5 5	3 15
	Donke Burner (Cash Well)	178 15	132 0	924
	Farnberry
	Foresfield
Leased to various parties, but belonging to Green-wich Hospital.	Flow Edge	1 10	1 2
	Gallygill Syke	48 13	36 10	648
	Gallygill Bents	13 17	10 7
	Grassfield	53 6	24 10	720
	Guttergill, East End	18 15	14 0
	Holyfield	6 6	4 14	75
	Hudgill Burn	126 0	91 10	1,598
	Lee House Well	9 4	8	249
	Middle Syke
	Nattrass, Middle Vein	1 4	0 15
The following Mines belong to Green-wich Hospital; but they are leased to various parties.	Nattrass, North Vein	6 13	5 15	70
	Nentsbury, North Vein
	Nentsbury Pasture
	Peat Stack Hill	3 12	2 14
	Park Grove Sun Vein	4 13	3 9	25
	Pasture Grove	1 10	1 2
	Rodderup Fell	1,291 4	840 0	5,880
	Slate
	Thornhill Slit
	Thornhill, East End	18 18	11 2	98
TYNE HEAD MINES.	Thornhill, West End	11 3	8 7	60
	Wellgill, Cross Vein	13 5	9 18
	Windy Brow
	Sundry Small Mines
	Allen's Cleugh	0 12	0 8	3
	Calvert, East and West	9 14	6 14	53
	Clargill Head	3 3	2 5	100
	Dacey and Tyne Bays	6 2	4 6	34
	South and West Crossfell	1 1	0 10	5
	East Crossfell	18 12	14 10	115
	Green Banks	1 1	0 15	6
	Lady Vein	17 3	13 2	93
	Middle Tyne Green	0 10	0 7	3
	Patter Syke	3 18	2 4	15
	South Crossfell
	Stow Craig	26 19	18 13	850
	Tees Side	36 6	25 13	179
	Smittergill Head	76 10	57 6
	Sundries	7 4	5 0
		5,382 0	3,960 8	28,056

The following statement shows the total quantity of lead ore weighed over in the manor of Alston Moor in the year 1858:—

	Names of Mines.	Total Quantities.
		Bings. cwt.
Governor and Company's Mines.	Rampgill	692	1
	Sealeburn	222	3
	Carrs and Hangingshaw	928	1
	Capel Cleugh	371	6
	Long Cleugh	1422	6
	Middle Cleugh	375	1
	Small Cleugh	1755	7
	Guddamgill	142	7
	Browngill Vein	401	2
	Benty Field Sun Vein, West End	271	6
	Cowper's Dyke Heads	24	1
	Fletcheras Vein	68	4
	Tyne Bottom and Windshaw Bridge	105	7
	Blagill	144	1
	Browley Hill	1080	0
	Brizel Burn	268	0
	Benty Field, E. End	311	5
	Black Hill	2	4
	Black Syke	7	6
	Carrs West of Nent	51	1
	Crag Green, N. Vein	22	4
	Crossgill Head	28	0
	Corn Ranges	6	7
	Donke Burn, W. End	821	6
	Foresfield	99	6
	Farnberry	1	4
	Flow Edge	7	4
	Guttergill, E. End	445	4
	Gallygill Bents	3	4
	Gallygill Syke	114	5
	Grass Field	45	1
	Guttergill, West End	17	0
	Green Castle	0	7
	Holy-Field	27	6
	Hudgill Burn	262	4
	Hodgson's Cross Vein	5	6
	Lee House Well	18	7
	Low B'rey Bank	28	3
	Nattrass N. Vein	19	5
	Nentsbury Greens, N. Vein	23	6
	Peat Stack Hill	1	6
	Park Grove, S. Vein	3	6
	Rodderup Cleugh	284	0
	Thornhill, E. End	41	6
	Thornhill, W. End	62	2
	Thornhill Slit	1	3
	White-Loe	1	1
	Wellgill Cross Vein	49	7
Total Bings 8 cwt. each)		13617	5

The total product of lead ore for 1858 will exceed that of 1857 by about 300 tons.

We subjoin the following account of the mines and miners of this district from Mr. White's "Northumberland and the Border," London, 1859:—"Wishing to see something of the mines and miners, I turned away from the Tyne, and was presently on the hill-top above the town, walking up the valley of the Nent, but at a considerable elevation above the stream; high enough to scan a great expanse of rolling summits, among which not a few mark the border of Northumberland. Now and then a heavy shower swept across, making the intervening sunshine appear the brighter, and freshening up the verdure of the fields and meads that lie in the hollows, and producing a variety of light and shade upon the landscape wherein the little sykes or gullies that furrow the hill sides appear the darker. We are here on the apex of the island, among the topmost upheavals of the limestone, sandstone, and slate strata, which are the joy of the miner, for therein he finds rich veins and pockets of metal. Not without tremendous throes were they uplifted to their present elevation; and here and there in a scar, or on the rugged flank of a water-course, we may read somewhat of their history. In some places the metallic veins lie open to the daylight; and on one side of a valley the ends of rock-beds are seen corresponding to similar beds on the other side; and with other remarkable phenomena the limestone slopes away on the east and west till it meets the coal strata, which in this latitude complete the slope and rush down beneath the sea on both sides of the island. We pass Nent Hall, which, embosomed in trees, reminds us of an oasis, and, four miles from Alston, come to the village of Nent Head, which makes no secret of its vocation, for huge mounds of refuse, tramways, wagons, heaps of ore, implements scattered about, and a sturdy population proclaim that it lives by the mines. It belongs to the London Lead Company, who rebuilt it some years ago; hence it boasts a market-house crowned by a clock tower, a Methodists chapel, and a good school-house, yet somewhat primitive withal. And it is not right that a village should harmonise with its environments. There are however no signs of poverty, but abundant signs of work; men and boys washing, sorting, and crushing ore, amid the splashing of water, the thumping of machinery, and clattering as of falling stones when the wagons from the mines drop their burden. From the heaps of ore at one end of the premises, to the slime-pits on the other, resolute industry prevails. Higher up the hill stands the smelt-mill, where the ore is roasted and melted and cast into pigs of lead. The roasting is what a metallurgist calls a beautiful process: the ore is spread on the sole, or floor of a furnace, and is heated to a temperature at which it parts with its sulphur and takes up oxygen, but does not melt. In another furnace it is melted, and you see the molten stream flowing from the mouth into a pot. In another, the stubborn slag, or the dross and refuse, is treated by a roaring blast, becomes docile, yields every particle of lead, while splendid blue and green flames leap and play in the impetuous current. You see how even the sweepings of the chimney are converted into metal by the action of fire; how silver is separated from the baser metal; and not least astonishing among strange sights is the huge water-wheel, exceeding in circumference perhaps all that you have ever seen before, which drives the condensing apparatus. The village is built on a hill slope, and here and there you see the galleries, or entrances to the mines, which penetrate the hills for miles, ramifying and honeycombing to such a depth that they reach the diggings from the other side, and, as I was told, it is possible to go all through seven miles underground, and come out in Weardale. One of the entrances was pointed out to me as Rampgill vein, from which seventy-two tons of ore have been dug every week for more than a hundred years. With such abundance as that to work up, 1,200 men and boys may well be busy. What a clattering of clogs there was when the school broke up, and the children swarmed out upon the street. They are not remarkable for beauty, but they are remarkable for cleanliness, and appear to be robust alike in health and limb. Let us take a walk through the works, and see by what process lead is procured. The ore, as it comes from the mines, is in rough stony lumps, of all sizes, from the bigness of your head down to sand; some lumps are slaty in appearance, some like quartz; many are good specimens of the pale grey limestone from which they were torn, and the more they all sparkle with crystals of lead the better is their quality. Some look as if they were all lead, only brighter, so cunningly is the earth masked, and these which are singularly heavy, the miners lovingly call 'lazy lumps.' The local term for ore is bouse; the wagons laden therewith run from the mines to the works, where each drops its burden into the bouse-teams; that is into a range of open stalls, according to quality. Here the ore is ready to hand; the washing floors are close by on the same level, and the next operation is to break it up, wash it, and separate metal from stone. A barrowful of ore is thrown on an iron grating, upon which a stream of water is let to flow; the light earthy and gritty particles are thereby washed off, and carried into the 'trunk box,' placed in connection with the grating. Meanwhile men and boys stand by with hammers, and pick the washed lumps. That which is only stone is at once thrown away; the metallic lumps are broken and sorted, and as much of the stone got rid of as possible, in readiness for the succeeding operation known on the spot as 'buddling' and 'hotching,' which may be described as a kind of sifting with sieves suspended in water; an arrangement which facilitates the separation of the heavy from the light portions. You have only to agitate sieves and boxes with sufficient perseverance, and the ore will find its way to the bottom, and lie there as a distinct stratum, by its own gravity, and then separation from the refuse is easy. It is a pretty sight to see a heap of pure ore lying bright and glistening, ready for the smelt-mill; such a mass of what metallurgists call galena, you never saw before, and you may well admire it. The sight is one to admire, for its own intrinsic quality, and for the successful results of mechanical operations. Who would think that those great rough heaps of bouse could ever be brought into so clean a condition. Nothing is lost. The washings are not allowed to run away to waste, but are intercepted and made to surrender whatever they hold of metalliferous. The trunk boxes are emptied from time to time, and the small lumps of ore are picked out; in fact, whatever cunning and skill can do to save lead is done. All the water of the washings, before its final exit from the premises, is made to flow into 'slime pits,' where it remains almost stagnant, until it has thrown down the light particles held in suspension. These particles form thick beds of 'slime,' in which is contained a considerable quantity of lead. But how to separate it?—that is the question. Clever folk, these lead-seekers! you will say, on seeing the answer. With two rollers, and an endless web of canvas, they form an inclined plane; the web is set in motion, travelling, so to speak, up-hill, and while it moves the slime drops upon it from a trough; water falls at the same time in a brisk shower, and the result is, that as the web moves, the particles of lead, by reason of their weight, fall into a trough, while the fine sand and mud is washed away; and then in a muddy stream the water is dismissed. Even the lead-seekers have done with it.

"Now comes another question. Are they wise as well as clever? There is a good school here. The appearance and arrangements of the place show that the London Lead Company like order and economy, and not huggermugger. Look in the faces of the people, you see no signs of want or privation. Look into the cottages, and you will see the appliances of substantial comfort; and to Nenthead belongs part of the £20,000 in the savings bank at Alston. You will not hear of action for divorce, or of the criminal causes whence such actions proceed; but you will hear of one offence against good morals, and that is, bastardy. If there were such an instrument as a moralometer, you would find bastardy to be a pretty steady high reading in the mining districts. We must not, however, suffer ourselves to be misled, though we may be surprised by such a state of things. It does not necessarily follow that there is more wickedness in these villages than in towns, which, by comparison, show a smaller return of illegitimate births; and the same argument applies to the rural districts in Scotland, against which the charge of immorality has been brought. For here, in this lead-mining country, a girl does not lose caste by having borne a child out of wedlock; though trouble may be occasioned at first, she continues to live on in her father's house, sharing still in the privileges of home, and is not despised by her mother and sisters. Neither is her chance of marriage diminished, though not as a matter of course with her first lover; and once married, she becomes a faithful wife, and as the mother of a hard-working family is there to participate in all the ameliorating influences which time and circumstances may bring. But should she play the wanton, and repeat the offence, then she forfeits her position and prospect of matrimony. Here, in Nenthead, as I am told, the company require that the father of the child shall marry the woman whom he has, so to speak, betrayed; or quit their service. Looked at fairly, we thus see that this hill country has, after all, a good notion of morality. We may not, perhaps, hear of bastardy in the Haymarket; but who will contend that the Haymarket is more moral than Nenthead? Is there not among these miners' wives and daughters a manifestation—"inarticulate," if you will—of the charity that hopeth all things? It seems to me that women in other parts of the kingdom, even in places that regard themselves as refined and highly civilised, might learn a lesson from the unrefined. How many a virtuous woman has been made vicious by the cold scorn and neglect of her chaste, and it may be, unttempted sisters!

"Steep and stoney is the ascent by which I left Nenthead, up the flank of Kilhope Law, a hill more than 2,000 feet high. When viewed from above there is something picturesque after all in the aspect of the village: a cluster of solid white-washed houses, with pale blue slate roofs. But very lonely does it appear amid the great brown fells. From the smelt-mill a long range of masonry stretches away far up the hill-side, with low towers at intervals, as if in imitation of the Great Wall of China. You might guess it to be an aqueduct; but it is the chimney of the mill, and you see that it terminates above in an upright smoking shaft. A chimney a mile long: what can that be for? The answer is, that smelters being wise in their generation, conduct the fumes from all their furnaces into one chimney, where, in their long course to the vent, the light particles have time to form a solid deposit on the walls, leaving only a small quantity of light vapour to escape. And this deposit, sometimes two feet thick, is dug out and scraped off once a year, and converted in the furnace into solid marketable lead."

THE TOWN OF ALSTON.

The ancient market town of Alston stands on a declivity on the right bank of the South Tyne river, in 54° 58' north latitude, and 2° 25' west longitude, twenty-five miles east-south-east from Carlisle, nineteen miles north-east of Penrith, 272 miles north-north-west from London by road, and 291 by the Great Northern, and York, Newcastle, and Carlisle railways.

The population of the town in 1851 was 2,005, of whom 1,012 were males, and 993 females; the number of inhabited houses at the same period was 413, and of uninhabited four. The town is irregularly built; the houses are chiefly of stone and roofed with slate; a handsome new bridge crosses the South Tyne river. In the centre of the town is a market cross, erected by Sir William Stephenson, Bart., lord mayor of London in 1764. Alston is well supplied with water from an excellent spring on the Broad Pothill, distant about half a mile south of the town, and is well lighted with gas. The market is held on Saturday, and is abundantly furnished with all the necessaries of life. Fairs for sheep and cattle are held on the third Saturday in March, the last Thursday in May, the Saturday on or before the 27th September, the Saturday before the feast of St. Luke (October 18th), and the first Thursday in November. There were formerly races and wrestling matches, &c., held on Easter Monday, but these sports have been some time discontinued. Petty sessions are held here once a month, and a county court.

THE CHURCH.

Alston church, dedicated to St. Augustine, is a plain building, destitute of architectural ornament. It was erected at the expense of the parishioners, about the year 1769, and consists of nave, with a recess serving as a chancel, and tower. There are a few mural tablets to the memory of members of the Lancaster, Hodgson, Bridgwood, and Morrison families. The church of Alston is a vicarage, in the diocese of Durham and deanery of Corbridge. In the reign of Henry II. it was in the presentation of the king, but was subsequently appropriated to the monastery of Hexham, on which community it was bestowed by Ivo de Veteriponte, but their claim was disallowed and the patronage stated to be vested in the crown. While Edward I. was at Lanercost Priory, in the winter of 1306-7, he restored to the monastery of Hexham the advowson of this church. In 1335 the priory and convent of Hexham petitioned the king to have the revenues appropriated to their own use, but it was not until 1376 that any greater portion than 6s. 8d. was legally settled upon them. In 1549 the rectory and advowson of Alston were granted to Sir John Peryent, Knt., and Thomas Reeve, gentleman. It appears, however, that there was either a subsequent grant to Arthur Lee and Thomas Archer, who admitted Sir Thomas Hilton, Knt., to a third portion; or, that Sir John Peryent and Mr. Reeve, as grantees of the crown, conveyed it to Messrs. Lee and Archer. The trustees of Greenwich Hospital are now in possession of the whole of this impropriation. In 1291 the rectory of Alston was valued at £8 a year; in 1535 the vicarage is returned as worth £7 13s. In 1663 the parish church and the chapel of Garrigill were both served by one clergyman, the stipend being only £12 6s. 8d., with "some small glebe." In 1777 the benefice was worth about £80; in 1835 its net value was £130, and it is worth at present about £140. By an act passed in the 33rd of George III. (1792-3) the governors of Greenwich Hospital received 3,551 acres in lieu of great tithes; and, by a voluntary rate of fourpence in the pound, the parishioners purchased a close of land, which the vicar now possesses in lieu of tithes, together with a small yearly modus. In 1846 a gold coin of the reign of Edward III. was found, in a good state of preservation, in a grave in the church yard. The parish registers commence in 1749.

RECTORS.—Galfrid, in the reign of Henry II.

VICARS.—John Cokeden, —; William Lambert, 1422; Sir Robert Hilton, 1433; Robert Jackson, about 1451; Robert Stychson, —; John Ellison, about 1495; Thomas Gray, about 1497; Sir — Stephenson, 1517; John Hymers, 1536; Henry Yaltes, or Gates, 1553; Anthony Watson, 1577; William Teasdale, 1578; John Nelson, 1618; Ralph Young, 1624; Francis Hill, 1635; John Lee, 1665; John Fell, —; William Stebert, 1683; Nicholas Walton, 1696; John Topping, 1728; Thomas Lancaster, 1760; Benjamin Jackson, 1790; Thomas Foster, 1835; M. Beebe, 1839; H. Salvin, 1841; W. N. Snowe, 1852.

The vicarage is a plain modern building, erected at the expense of the improprators, in consideration of the Rev. B. Jackson, the then vicar, having ceded to them his right of every third presentation to the benefice.

CHARITIES.

Grammar School.—Alston Grammar School, re-erected by subscription in 1828, receives £37 a year out of the Fairhill estate, which lets for about £100 per annum; the surplus, after paying about £10 to the master of the school at Garrigill Gate, is given to the poor of Alston and Garrigill, nearly in the ratio of three-fourths to Alston, and one-fourth to Garrigill, together with £10 per annum from the governors of Greenwich Hospital. The master does not receive any free scholars, but is limited to a certain scale of charges for education.

Shields' Gift.—In 1617 John Shields, a citizen and cook of London, left a rent-charge of forty shillings per annum to the poor of the parish of Alston,—one-third of which goes to Garrigill.

Stephenson's Charity.—John Stephenson, by will dated May 29, 1759, directed £4 a year, to be divided yearly and for ever amongst sixteen poor widows, who should have legal settlements in Alston parish and Garrigill chapelry. This £4 a year is derived from a charge upon a house in Westgate-street, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and £2 are given to eight poor widows having settlements in Alston, and the same sum to eight in Garrigill chapelry, under the direction of the vicar of Alston.

Langhorne's Charity.—Charles Langhorne, Esq., by his will, dated June 26, 1802, devised property, mortgages, &c., which were sold, and the money was invested in the purchase of £777 2s. 1d. stock, in the Three-percents reduced, in the names of trustees. The interest is divided annually on the 24th December to the poor of the parish resident at or above Nent Hall.

CHURCHES.

The Friends Meeting House, erected in 1732 and repaired in 1859, will accommodate 200 persons. There is a burial ground attached.

The Independent Chapel was erected in 1804, and rebuilt and considerably enlarged in 1845.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel was erected in 1825 and rebuilt in 1843.

The Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1797, and enlarged in 1825.

SCHOOLS.

The National School (girls) was erected by subscription in 1844, and the children are taught at a very low quarterage; the governors of Greenwich Hospital giving a donation of £10 a year towards the support of the school. The average number in attendance is sixty.

The Alston Free School, supported by public subscription, was built in 1811, and is at present attended by 130 children.

The Infant School, in connection with the National School, was erected by the Rev. Hugh Salvin, late vicar of the parish, in 1851, and the average number in attendance is 110. It is supported by annual contributions.

ALSTON SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, &c.

Alston Subscription Library was founded in July, 1821, and contains 318 volumes. The books are kept at the Free School, and are lent out gratuitously to the children.

The Mechanics' Institution was established in 1847, and now numbers 111 members, who pay 4s. each per annum. It comprises a library of 837 volumes, a reading room, and a museum.

The Alston Savings Bank was instituted in June, 1825. The present number of depositors is 711; the amount deposited £23,596 19s. 10½d.; the whole of which is invested in government securities.

The Town Hall, erected in 1857-8, at a cost of about £2,000, is a very neat building in the Gothic style. It comprises the Court-house, the Mechanics' Institution, and Gentlemen's Reading-room. There is also a fine room for public business, meetings, &c., capable of accommodating 400 persons.

There is a woollen manufactory situated in the town.

THE TOWN-LAW UNION.

Alston poor-law union comprises Alston, Garrigill, and Nenthead. Its area is 35,060 acres. Its population in 1851 was 6,816, of whom 3,435 were males and 3,381 females, inhabiting 1,267 houses; twenty-eight houses being uninhabited, and two in course of erection. The workhouse, situated near the town, is an old building which was enlarged in 1837, and is capable of accommodating eighty persons. Its present number of inmates is twenty-five. The income for 1858 was £1,502 18s., and the expenditure £1,048.

GARRIGILL CHAPELRY.

GARRIGILL Chapelry, sometimes written Garrogill and Garraigil, ancient name Gerrard's Gill, is bounded on the south by the river Tees, on the south-west by Cross Fell, on the west by Cash Burn and Shield Waters, on the north-west by Black Burn, on the north by Nattrass Gill and Flowedge, on the north-east by Middle Fell, east by Flinty Fell, and south-east by Crook Burn. The scenery in this chapelry is very picturesque—there is here everything which constitutes fine scenery, viz., hill and dale, wood and water, rocks and waterfalls.

The area of Garrigill is returned with that of Alston parish; its rateable value is £2,660 11s. 8d. The population in 1801 was 1,120; in 1811, it was returned with Alston; in 1821, it was 1,288; in 1831, 1,614; in 1841, 1,474; and in 1851, 1,443, who, with the exception of about 400, resident in the village of Garrigill Gate, are scattered over the chapelry—the houses being spread over an extent of country nine miles in length by two and a half in breadth. The inhabitants are exclusively engaged in mining operations. The district is very mountainous, and the climate too cold for agricultural purposes.

The inhabitants of this district are remarkable for their kind disposition, their hospitality, and their courtesy and attention to strangers. They are a remarkably clean people, as both the interior and exterior of their dwellings amply testifies. The reasons are obvious, as the people are favoured with a good and cheap education.

The soil here is chiefly what is termed in this neighbourhood limestone land, and is good for pasturage. Alston is the market usually attended.

There are, at Tyne Head, in a field called "The Chesters," belonging to the Greenwich Hospital, distinct traces of a Roman camp, with the river Tyne on the west and a deep ditch on the east, uniting with the river on the north and south. This camp is situated about five miles south-east of the Roman road called the Maiden Way. The field in which the camp is situated has borne the name "Chesters" from remote antiquity. There are, in the middle of the Village Green, two mounds, about 100 yards apart, named High Butt Hill and Low Butt Hill, where the inhabitants in ancient times, no doubt, practised archery.

Garrigill formed part of the manor of Alston, granted to William de Veteripont by William the Lion, and, in 1815, is described as being held by thirty-three tenants, who paid a yearly rent of £5 18s. It has undergone the same change of owners as Alston Manor.

The village of Garrigill is about four miles from the town of Alston. It has fairs on the first Friday in May, and the first Friday in September.

THE CHAPEL.

Garrigill chapel, said to be dedicated to St. John, is a plain edifice, built about seventy years ago, in which all the rites of the church are performed. The font is placed at the east end of the church, within the communion rails, anything but a significant place. The bell is said to have been formerly the dinner bell at Dilsdon Hall, in the time of the Earl of Derwentwater. There was no resident clergyman here till 1851, when the present incumbent, the Rev. G. Monkhouse, was appointed. For a long time there was divine service on every third Sunday morning only, but since the curate has resided here, there have been two services each Sunday. The Vicar of Alston is patron. The registers of the chapelry extend from 1739 to the present time. There is every reason to believe that some of the early documents have been lost, for there are two tombstones in the churchyard bearing the dates of 1692 and 1693, proving that the registers from that time to 1730, at least, are lost.

There is a good and commodious parsonage house, erected by subscription in 1851, at a cost of between four and five hundred pounds, the chief contributors being the Rev. H. Salvin, vicar; Captain Salvin; the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital; and the London Lead Company.

The Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists, have chapels here.

The old parish school has an endowment of £8 per annum from the Fairhill estate, which was purchased in 1739 by the churchwardens and overseers of Alston, with £217 left by several benefactors to the poor schools of Alston parish. About eighty children are educated in this school, which is very inadequate for the purposes to which it is devoted, being very low and dark.

The girls' school, erected in 1850, is a well-built and well-ventilated school, sufficiently commodious for 100 children;—the average attendance is about fifty.

There is a mixed, (dames' school) with an average attendance of thirty children; and another at Tyne Head, with forty scholars.

CHARITIES.

Stephenson's Charity.—In the year 1759 John Stephenson, alderman of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, left £4 a year to be equally divided among sixteen poor widows of Alston and Garrigill.

Wilkinson's Charity.—In 1685 Robert Wilkinson left £100 for the purchase of lands of the clear yearly value of £5. Of this sum £3 is paid to the Garrigill Gate schoolmaster, for teaching six poor children till they can read the Bible; ten shillings to the minister for preaching a sermon at Garrigill on the 1st of February; ten shillings to the poor of the same village; and the remaining twenty shillings to be divided among the four trustees.

Tyne Head is a hamlet in this chapelry, about seven and a half miles south-east of Alston, and about two miles from the source of the South Tyne.

The South Tyne runs through the middle of the chapelry, dividing it into two unequal parts. It has several tributary streams, of which the chief are Cleargill Burn, on the south-east, uniting with the Tyne about two miles and a half from its source; Ashgill Burn, on the east, joins the Tyne about three miles from its source; White Syke, on the east, unites with the Tyne about four miles from its source; Crossgill Burn, on the west, joins the Tyne about four miles from its source; Dryburn, on the west, joins the Tyne about five and a half miles from its source. There is a stone bridge over the Tyne about the middle of the village; a wooden bridge, for foot passengers, over the Tyne at the Gate Foot; a second wooden bridge, for foot passengers, between Dryburn and Blackburn. An excellent spa is about to be brought into notice at Beldy Mill, close to the village, a subscription having been set on foot for that purpose in 1858, when a sum of between twenty and thirty pounds was raised in the parish. The London Lead Company, with their usual liberality, came nobly forward to make up any deficiency. The water is chiefly of a sulphureous nature, a good deal like the famous Gillsland Spa, and very little inferior in point of strength.

John Martin died here in April, 1834, aged 103 years, and Mary Martin, in November, 1836, aged 105 years. When the Reform Bill passed, the above aged couple were present at a public tea party held on the Village Green,—men, women, and children, to the number of 1,100 were entertained on the occasion. Old Martin and his wife, then in their 102nd year, occupied the chief place at the table; the old man said grace, and the old dame had on her wedding dress.

Westgarth Forster lived and died here. He was the author of a very clever treatise, entitled "A Treatise on a Section of the Strata commencing near Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and concluding on the west side of the Mountain of Cross Fell, with Remarks on Mineral Veins in General, and engraved figures of some of the different species of those productions."

The population are very fond of music, and possess a good brass band. They have quite a taste for mathematics here,—many having made considerable progress in the higher branches of that science.

NENTHEAD CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry is bounded on the west and south by the chapelry of Garrigill, on the east by the county of Durham, and on the north by Alston and a small portion of Northumberland. The Rev. Mr. Helms is the present incumbent. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have two chapels in this chapelry. (For further account of this chapelry see Alston parish, page 509.)

CASTLE SOWERBY PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the northwest by Dalton, on the south and south-west by Selkirkham, and part of Caldbeck, on the south by Greystoke, and on the east by Skelton, Braithwaite, and Middleborough. It is about six miles in length, from north to south, and nearly two from east to west; and is said to have been formerly included in the parish of St. Mary, Carlisle. It is divided into five townships or bounds, viz.: Bustabeck Bound, How Bound, Row Bound, Souteruby Bound, and Stockdaleworth Bound, each of which maintains its own roads, but they maintain the poor conjointly. The parish comprises an area of 7,940 acres, of which rather more than 3,772 acres are old enclosed copyhold land, and 4,172 acres are common freehold. The rateable value is about £4,040. The inhabitants are principally engaged in agriculture, and attend Carlisle and Penrith markets. The population live for the most part in farmhouses, dispersed over the parish, the only villages being Raughton Road, Stockdaleworth, and Millhouse.

The manor of Sowerby lies wholly within the forest of Inglewood; its history is the same as that of Penrith and Great Salkeld, except that in the year 1214, we find a grant of Sowerby to Robert de Ros. In 1256 Margaret, queen of Scotland, who had the manors of Penrith, &c., for her marriage portion, had a license from Henry III. to inclose certain waste land in the manor of Sowerby within the forest of Inglewood. These facts are stated in the patent rolls of the reign of King John and Henry III. In the list of bulls, charters, &c., in the treasury of the Scottish king at Edinburgh, in 1282, given in Rymer's Federa, there are several entries relating to letters concerning Sowerby. "The tenants here hold immediately of the Duke of Devonshire, and pay a copyhold yearly rent. They have the wood growing on their land. In this manor the copyhold lands do not descend to the heir male (as that term is commonly understood). The custom here respecting descents being in accordance with the common law of England, and in consequence females inherit as coparceners, which is unusual in a copyhold or customary manor—the general custom in this county being in the case of females, for the eldest to take the whole property. There is a God's penny on every admittance, as well upon descent as upon alienation; and in the latter case a fine of some account as the annual lord's rent, which is usually called a single penny fine, and so on a mortgage. But upon descents nothing more than a God's penny, and the like upon a surrender to the use of one's will. This is supposed to be the custom throughout the whole forest of Inglewood. The wife of a copyholder cannot be divested of her contingent rights of dower without her consent,—for it is the general law of copyhold that the widow is only dowerable of such estates as her husband died seised of, and was a perfect copyholder at the time of his death; and therefore, if the husband should either sell or mortgage the copyholds in his lifetime, or even surrender them to the use of his will, any of these acts will debar the wife of dower. This, we presume, is not inconsistent with the custom of the manor of Sowerby, notwithstanding the generally received opinion in the neighbourhood to the contrary. It is presumed a few instances of the wife's joining her husband in the surrender of his estate, would not tend to overturn the general rule or law of copyholds just spoken of; and whether that continuance alone, although having been the general practice for half a century past, would of itself establish a custom contrary to such general law, seems somewhat doubtful. A widow marrying does not forfeit her right in this manor.*

Castle Sowerby lies high, and has an uneven surface, pretty well studded with hedge-rows and plantations, and abounds in picturesque views. The modern system of draining has been spiritedly introduced and practised with much benefit, even on the clay subsoil, which generally abounds in this parish. As a consequence turnip culture has been much extended, and instead of bare fallows a crop of rape is now got off the common land, the soil of which, a clayey loam, is more deficient in quantity than quality. The land on the south-west of the road leading from Bushgill to Sebergham, including How Hill, Hewer Hill, and the Banks, in many places rests upon rock at no great depth from the surface. In many places limestone protrudes, in others freestone, and on this plot exist several holes, or fissures, which in wet weather take in much water. In a dry season the Caldew is almost entirely drained by these hidden gullies between Haltcliff and Heskett Bridges, and after traversing its rocky course beneath the banks at a great depth, is disgorged into the bed of the river about three miles above Sebergham Bridge. Freestone forms the superstructure of rock in the north-eastern section of the parish; and is in many places washed by the Caldew, and the Row or Raw. The landowners in the parish are very numerous, the principal are the Duke of Devonshire; the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle; W. Blamire, Esq.; G. H. Head, Esq.; W. Parker, Esq.; and Mr. D. Jennings. The extent of the farms are from thirty to two hundred acres and upwards. Of late years the large farms have been increased in number by the aggregation of smaller ones, and this has tended to introduce a better state of husbandry, but unfortunately not to an extension of the unflinching spirit of political independence that characterised the small freeholders of bygone days. The common and several waste lands within this manor and parish, were enclosed, divided, and enfranchised, pursuant to an act of parliament passed in 1766, by the provisions of which act, 557 acres were allotted to the dean and chapter of Carlisle as appropriators, and 203 acres to the vicar, in lieu and perpetual discharge of all tithes rectorial and vicarial, a modus of twenty shillings out of Thistlewood only excepted. And so much of the said common was ordered to be sold as would raise £700 for enclosing and erecting proper houses upon the said two allotments; and an eighth part of the remainder, 470 acres, was assigned to the lord, with a reservation of the royalties and seignory.

HOW BOUND.

The population of this township in 1801, was 254; in 1811, 255; in 1821, 279; in 1831, 197; in 1841, 242; and in 1851, 246. The rateable value of this township is £784. The principal landowners are Messrs. John E. Troutbeck, Henry Tiffin, Mrs. Richardson, Robert Monkhouse, George Robinson.

THE CHURCH.

Castle Sowerby church, dedicated to St. Kentigern, is situated in this township. It is an ancient structure, consisting of nave, chancel, and southern porch. The bell turret, at the western gable, contains two bells. The living was originally a rectory, but is now a vicarage; the advowson was granted, in 1307, by Edward I. to the prior and convent of St. Mary in Carlisle, to whom the revenues were appropriated. This grant was confirmed by Bishop Halton in the same year, and a certain portion of the revenues assigned to the vicar, but this endowment is now superseded by the act of Parliament before mentioned. Several disputes appear to have occurred respecting the right of presentation to this church, but the bishop of the diocese took part with the prior and convent of Carlisle, who were thus enabled to maintain their privileges intact. Bishop Nicolson informs us that, in 1342, the vicarages of Sowerby and Addingham were allowed to be kept vacant for some time, that the proceeds of the livings might be devoted to the necessary repairs of the cathedral and the respective parish churches, care to be taken, however, for the celebration of divine service and the due administration of the sacraments by means of secular priests. A short time after this, in 1359, the Vicar of Sowerby complained to the bishop that many of his parishioners deserted their own parish church, and attended mass in the chapel of Sebergham, whereupon the bishop issued an injunction, by which the offenders were required to attend their own church. On the suppression of the religious houses the dean and chapter of Carlisle were invested with the patronage of Sowerby, as the successors of the prior and convent. The living is valued in the Kings Book at £17 10s. 3d., and is now worth about £100 a year. The tithes were commuted in 1708, at the time of the enclosure of the common, when 203 acres were allotted in lieu of the vicarial tithes. The parish register commences in 1629. The inhabitants of Hutton Roof township, Greystoke parish, attend this church.

* Jefferson's "Leath Ward," p. 128, et seq.

Rectors.—Richard de Warton, —; William de Loundon, 1244; John de Loundon, 1245; Sir Henry de Beaumont, 1290; Henry de Rether, 1300.

VICARS.—Alan de Frisington, 1309; John de Schilton, 1312; Sir John de Carlisle, —; Sir Richard de Wyldon, 1394; Pastors.—Chabon, 1398; John de Loundon, 1400; Sir John de Carlisle, 1385; Christopher Slee, —; Sir John Brisco, —; Thomas Scott, 1571; Leonard Scott, 1584; William Fairfax, 1623; Edward Waterhouse, 1664; Christopher Whittingdale, 1705; James Clarke, 1718; Joseph Sevithwaite, 1730; John Twentyman, 1762; Joseph Dacre Carlisle, 1792; Samuel Hudson, 1811; Joseph Barnes, 1821; Hugh Elliot, 1827; Joseph Taylor, 1844; Thomas Younger, 1851.

The vicarage, situated near the church, was erected in 1831, at a cost of about £200.

CHARITIES.

The Rev. James Clarke's Charities.—The Rev. James Clarke, M.A., vicar, who died in or about the year 1737, gave to the parish £25, the interest thereof to be distributed annually amongst the most industrious of the poor parishioners. He also gave the further sum of £30, the interest of which was to be laid out yearly in the purchase of Bibles and Testaments, to be given to the poor.

Barker's Gift.—John Barker, by will, in 1657, left £20, the interest of which was to be laid out in the purchase of small religious books, to be given to the poorest sort of people about Candlemas-day, being the birth-day of the testator. One-third of Clarke's Charity and half of Barker's were paid into the Savings Bank by Mr. George Martindale, in July, 1855. Another third of Clarke's came into the hands of G. G. Mounsey, Esq., as executor to the will of the late Rev. S. Hudson, to whom it was paid by Miss Abigail Clarke, and the remaining portion of both have been lost through the insolvency of the parties who held them.

The Rev. Joseph Sevithwaite's Bequest.—The Rev. Joseph Sevithwaite, vicar of this parish, who died about the year 1762, left £20 to the school and £20 for buying books for poor housekeepers, to be paid after the death of his wife. This charity has been lost.

School.—John Sowerby, of Sowerby Row, in this parish, in the year 1750 endowed the school in the township or division of Row Bound with £5 a year payable out of a copyhold estate in Sowerby Row, for the education of four poor children. The intentions of the donor were honourably carried out till the year 1856, when the holder of the land conceived the idea of freeing himself from the duty which the terms of ownership attached to the property. As yet his resistance to pay the annuity has been too successful, and this incident strongly inculcates the necessity of guarding by every legal means the sanctity of any charitable bequest that may be made, so that it may be devoted to its legitimate purposes.

School.—Mr. John Head, of Foxley Henning, in 1744, erected a school adjoining Raughton Head Chapel. The Rev. Joseph Sevithwaite intended this school to have the benefit of his charity, but it has never enjoyed it. The school-house was rebuilt in 1806, with £50, the money left for its endowment.

R. Richardson's Charity.—The late Mr. R. Richardson, of Wham Head, left an annuity out of which three shillings were to be expended in bread every Christmas and Easter, and distributed to the poor people attending church. He also directed that out of his real estate one shilling's worth was to be so distributed every Sunday.

The interest of £330, or rather one-fifth of the same, is applied by the trustees of Richardson's Charity, for the purchase of religious books for the poor of this parish.

In this township, not far from the parish church, is the lofty eminence called Castle Hill, from which the prefix to the name of the parish is supposed to be derived. Spacious roads, leading to the summit of the hill, have been cut in the rock, and there is a large circular cavity, eighteen yards in diameter, and having a narrow entrance, where iron crooks show that it was shut up in times of danger, very probably to secure the cattle during the border forays. Castle Hill is part of one of the ten principal estates in the parish, anciently called Red Spears, from the fact of the tenants holding them by the singular service of riding through Penrith on Whit-Sunday, brandishing their spears as a challenge to the enemies of their country, or those who dare dispute the title and privileges of the lord of Inglewood Forest. Those who held by this peculiar tenure are mentioned in our law books as of the order of Red Knights, who were bound to attend their lord on horseback. The spears used on the occasions just mentioned were about nine feet in length, and some of them remained till the last century in the houses of the tenants, who appear to have been sureties to the sheriff for the peaceable behaviour of the rest of the inhabitants. The ancient owners of the estate now noticed, annually served as jurors at the forest court at Heskett, on the feast of St. Barnabas, by which service they were freed from all parish offices. Sowerby Common anciently abounded in oak wood. On breaking up of the land, a large number of pitsteads were found, where the wood had been reduced to charcoal. Two stone crosses, called Corpse Crosses, formerly stood on the common, and it is stated that when a body was being carried to the parish church for interment, it was usually set down here while a prayer was said for the repose of the soul of the deceased.

¹ Presented by John Baliol, king of Scotland.

² John Langton was Lord High Chancellor of England, and died Bishop of Chichester in 1367. He was presented by Anthony Beck, Bishop of Durham and Patriarch of Jerusalem, in virtue of a grant from John Baliol.

How Hill, which we may reasonably infer to have given name to the township in which it is situated, possesses a few remains of "days long since departed." On its summit is a circular enclosure, mounded with stone and earth, about twenty-one yards in diameter, with an opening or entrance on the south side. Large oaks have grown through the mound. The hamlet of Millhouse, which contains two inns, a corn mill, a farm house, and a few cottages, is situated in this bound, within one mile and a half south of the parish church, and the same distance from Heskett New Market. At Hewerhill is a coal-pit, recommenced, in 1858, by Mr. W. Rawes under the name of Hewerhill Pit; it consists of one shaft of eleven fathoms and a half working a seam of eighteen inches thick: here are also lime-kilns carried on by the same proprietor.

DUSTABECK BOUND.

In 1801 this township contained 423 inhabitants;¹ in 1811, 226; in 1821, 218; in 1831, 237; in 1841, 249; and in 1851, 254. It consists principally of scattered houses, about four and a half miles north-east of Heskett Newmarket, and eight miles south of Carlisle. The principal landowners are Mr. Joseph Hayton, Rev. — Muncester, John Crozier, Geo. Head Head, and William Blamire, Esqrs. The rateable value of this township is £1,059 7s. 6d. There is a brick and tile works, and a corn-mill known as Sowerby Mill.

ROW BOUND.

The population of Row Bound in 1801 was 104; in 1811, 103; in 1821, 112; in 1831, 105; in 1841, 89; and in 1851, 101. This township comprises several detached dwellings about two miles north of the parish church, and is commonly called Sowerby Row. Here is a school, the master of which is in receipt of a yearly rent-charge of £5, conveyed to trustees out of her real estate of Holme House by the late Mrs. Cookson; the vicar is one of the trustees. It also possesses £3 a year arising from Richardson's charity, for which three poor children are to be taught. The principal landowners are Mr. Edmund Wallas, William Parker, Esq., Rev. John Cartwell. The rateable value of this township is £500.

SOUTHERNBY BOUND.

The number of inhabitants comprised in this township in 1801, was 157; in 1811, 200; in 1821, 160; in 1831, 162; in 1841, 136; and in 1851, 121. Southernby Bound is about two miles east of Heskett New Market. The mistress of a private school here is paid for the teaching of three poor children, agreeably to the bequest of the late Mr. R. Richardson. Southernby House, now a farm-house, stands upon what is called the Town Green, and commands beautiful prospects. The principal landowners are William Jennings, Esq., Messrs. Joseph Sanderson and Robert Matthews. The rateable value of this township is £690.

STOCKDALEWATH BOUND.

This township, which comprises the village of Stockdalewath and part of Raughton Head, had, in 1811, a population of 191; in 1821, 213; in 1831, 260; in 1841, 291; in 1851, 293. It comprises the small manor of Thackwood, the property of William Blamire, Esq., which is held under the Duke of Devonshire, and was formerly held by the military service of finding a number of spearmen; very recently it had scutage service rendered by some of the neighbouring landowners. Thackwood Nook is the seat and occasional residence of William Blamire, Esq. Within a short distance of the village of Stockdalewath, upon an eminence commanding an extensive view to the westward, is a large Roman entrenchment, known as Castlesteads. It is 188 yards in length by 160 in breadth, and has an inner and outer vallum, within which stones and ashes have been found, but no inscriptions, bones, or urns. Within about half a mile of this place are two other camps, supposed also to be Roman; one of them is called ¹ In 1801 Stockdalewath Bound was jointly returned with Dustabeck Bound.

Whitestones, the other Stoneraise. These three camps form as it were the angles of an equilateral triangle, being at equal distances from each other. Large quantities of stones are stated to have been taken from Stoneraise, which is supposed to have been a place of sepulture, but whether British or Roman we have no evidence upon which we can decide. At the south-west end of Broadfield, within a mile of the camps just mentioned, are evident traces of a Druidical temple, where the earth has been raised up in a circular form, with a sloping bank and an area of sixty-three feet in diameter, within which there formerly stood a stone circle. Stone coffins and human bones have been found here. A short distance south of these remains there was formerly a large rocking-stone, but no traces of it can now be discovered. The principal landowners are Thomas George Blamire, Esq., Mr. George Martindale, William Blamire, Esq., Mr. Edward Martindale, and George Head Head, Esq. The rateable value of this township is £968.

The village of Stockdalewath is about eight miles south of Carlisle.

Raughton Head is a small village of good houses, on an eminence, within the bounds of Stockdalewath and Bustaback townships, seven miles south of Carlisle. Here is a chapel of ease, which, after lying in a ruinous state for a long time, was rebuilt in 1678, and consecrated by Bishop Rainbow. It was again rebuilt in 1760, at an expense of above £300. The nomination of the curate is in the vicar of the parish. The ancient salary was about £3 a year; but it was augmented by £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty in 1737, and subsequently with a like sum from the same source, and £200 from the Countess Dowager Gower—so that the income is now about £100 a year. The present incumbent, the Rev. John Kitching, was appointed in 1840.

The chapelry of Raughton Head and neighbourhood possesses a commodious school, in the Elizabethan style, well furnished, and provided with an able master by G. H. Head, Esq. The old school, which stood in the chapeyard, was taken down in 1857, and part of the materials used in the erection of the present school, which cost £300.

Blamire of Thackwood and The Oaks.

The descent of this family is deduced from

WILLIAM BLAMIRE, Esq., of The Oaks, son and heir of John Blamire, Esq., of The Oaks, by Jane, his wife, only child of John Ritson, Esq.; married, first, in 1736, Isabella, only child and heir of George Simpson, Esq., of Thackwood, by Sarah, his wife, daughter of Christopher Richmond, Esq., of Caterlen and Higheand Castle, and had issue,

1. WILLIAM, his heir.
- II. Richmond, born in 1742, married Frances, daughter of Richard Baynes, Esq., of Cockermouth.
1. Sarah, married to Thomas Grene, Esq., of Gartmore, co. Stirling, colonel of the 42nd Highlanders.
- II. Susannah, died unmarried.

He married, secondly, Bridget, widow of John Simpson, Esq., of Sebergham Hall, Cumberland, and by her had one daughter, Bridget, married to George Brown, Esq., of Newcastle-on-Tyne. The eldest son and heir, WILLIAM BLAMIRE, Esq., of The Oaks, married, in August, 1785, Jane, third daughter of John Christian, Esq., of Milntown, Isle of Man, and of Unerigg Hall, by Jane, his wife, daughter of Eldred Curwen, Esq., M.P., of Workington Hall, and had issue,

1. WILLIAM, present representative of the family.
1. Mary Simpson, married, in September, 1814, to the Rev. Thos. Young, rector of Gilling, co. York.
- II. Jane Christian.
- III. Sarah Susannah, married, in April, 1830, to the Rev. William Young, rector of Allert, co. Somerset.

Mr. Blamire was succeeded by his son,

WILLIAM BLAMIRE, Esq., of Thackwood and The Oaks, J.P., and high sheriff in 1828, formerly M.P. for Cumberland, and now Chief Tithe Commissioner; born April 13, 1790; married April 3rd, 1834, his cousin Dora, youngest daughter of John Taubman, Esq., of the Nunnery, Isle of Man, and relict of Colonel Mark Wilks, of Kirby, in that island, governor of St. Helena.

Arms.—Arg. a lion, rampant, within an orle, gu.

Crest.—A wolf, sejant, ppr., chained, or.

Motto.—Faire sans dire.

CROGLIN PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the east by Northumberland and the parish of Alston, on the north by the parish of Cumwre and Goltisdale Forest, on the west by the parish of Cumwhitton in Eskdale Ward, and on the south by the river Croglin, which divides it from the parishes of Renwick and Kirkoswald. It is about six miles in length from east to west, and two miles in breadth from north to south. Coal is found here in considerable quantities; but the quality is not so good; limestone, freestone, and a bastard marble, or a species of porphyry, some of which is very black and some veined with white, are also found here. Grouse abound on Croglin Fell, a lofty eminence in the parish. The arable land here has a heavy, cold, red, sandy soil: the principal crops are barley, oats, and turnips. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants, who reside chiefly in the villages of Croglin and Newbiggin, and attend the Brampton and Penrith markets, and that of Carlisle occasionally. The parish comprises the manors or township of Croglin and Newbiggin, whose united area is 9,180 acres. The population of the parish, in 1801, was 169; in 1811, 234; in 1821, 318; in 1831, 362; in 1841, 336; and in 1851, 304.

CROGLIN.

The first recorded possessors of the manor of Croglin are the family of Hastings, one of whom served with Richard I. in the Holy Land, and was present at the siege of Jerusalem. As a reward for his bravery he received a grant of lands here, which continued to be held by his descendants till the reign of Edward I., when, male issue failing, they were brought in marriage to the Whartons of Wharton Hall, in Westmoreland, who, in consequence, assumed the arms of Hastings, viz., sable, a maunch argent. The Whartons continued to hold Croglin till the trustees of the Duke of Wharton sold it to Charles Duke of Somerset, from whom it descended to General Wyndham, the present lord, besides whom George Dixon, Esq.; John Jameson, Esq.; William Carrick, Esq.; Messrs. William Leech, Thomas Mulcaster, Joseph Pearson, Mrs. Hamilton, and the Rev. E. Bowman, are the landowners. The tenure here is chiefly customary, the tenants paying a customary rent to the lord of the manor, and a tenpenny fine on the death of the lord or tenant. The township is enclosed in pursuance of an act passed in 1808. Its rateable value is £376 9s. 7½d.

The village of Croglin is situated in a deep vale on the north side of the Croglin, five miles north-north-east from Kirkoswald and twelve miles west by north of Alston. A fair for cattle and sheep is held here annually on the 18th of August. Near the village are the remains of an old border stronghold called Searromanwick.

THE CHURCH.

Croglin church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a small structure consisting of a nave and chancel, with a bell turret containing two bells. In the churchyard is a stone cross raised on steps, on one side of which is a braid, on the other a cross florée. There is also a monument of a female, said to represent some member of the Wharton family. The living is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £8, and was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £47, but is now worth about £200 a year, arising from 600 acres of land, allotted in lieu of tithes at the enclosure of the commons. The advowson of the living was formerly attached to the manor, until it was sold by the Duke of Wharton to Matthew Smalls, Esq., from whom it came to his grandson, the Rev. Henry Claytor, vicar of Kirkby Stephen, and afterwards to William Clarke, Esq., of Wallsend, Northumberland, who sold it to the Rev. Joseph Ireland, after whose death it was sold to the Rev. John Jackson, from whom it was purchased by the present rector. The parish registers commence in July, 1644.

RECTORS.—Adam occurs 1293; Symon de Layton, 1309; William de Edenhall, 1311; John de Wetewanz, 1335; Patrick de Edenham, 1362; William de Willerby, —; John Mayson, 1377; William de Hoton, 1389; Henry Staynesford, 1432; Anthony Wharton, 1527; Sir Percival Warthopp, —; Sir Philip Maschell, 1664; Sir John Hudson, 1668; Thomas Lurves, 1674; Marnaduke Chohnaley, 1578; Roger Haslehead, 1582; John Allan, 1611; Richard Sharples, 1639; John Rogers, 1660; George Yates, 1663; George Sanderson, 1671; Thomas Hunter, 1691; Henry Noble, 1724; Thomas Myers, 1780; Joseph Ireland, 1804; John Jackson, 1837; Edward Bowman, 1848.

The rectory is a neat building; the date of its erection is not known.

There is a Sunday-school, erected by Thomas H. Graham, Esq., which is also used as a day-school.

CHARITIES.

The School.—The school at Croglin was endowed with the interest of £50, given in 1723, by the Rev. Thomas Hunter, rector of the parish, and twenty acres of land allotted by consent of the Earl of Egremont, lord of the manor, and the tenants, at the time of the enclosure of the commons in 1808. The school-house, situate at Threlhead, is a stone building, erected by subscription about the year 1724. A sum of money was also raised by subscription. The allotment of land now belonging to the school consists of twenty acres; the rent, about £11 a year, is received by the master, for which all the children of the parish are entitled to instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic, on the payment of a small quarterage. The average attendance of children is about twenty-five.

Lord Wharton's Bible Charity.—Four Bibles are annually sent to the rector of Croglin from the Bible charity of Philip Lord Wharton, which are distributed to the poor of the parish.

Threlhead's Gift.—Thomas Threlhead, who died in 1793, left £20 to his executors, the interest of which is to be paid to the poor of the parish, who are not in the receipt of parochial relief.

NEWBIGGIN.

The rateable value of this township is £645 17s. 1½d. General Wyndham is lord paramount of the township, but the Earl of Carlisle claims the manorial rights of the small manor of Newbiggin. The landowners here are General Wyndham; W. Hodgson, Esq.; John Jameson, Esq.; Messrs. Thomas Hodgson, Joseph Dixon, Jonah Dixon, and William Gibson. The commons were enclosed at the same time as those of Croglin.

The village of Newbiggin is on the north side of the parish, one mile and a half north-by-west of Croglin, and eight miles south-by-east of Brampton. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel, erected in or about the year 1846.

DACRE PARISH.

The parish of Dacre is bounded on the north-west by Greystoke parish; on the south by the river Eamont, which divides it from the county of Westmorland; and on the east by Penrith and Newton Reigny parishes. It is about four miles from north to south, and two and a half from east to west, comprising the townships of Dacre, Great Blencow, Newbiggin, Soubly, and Stauntan. The lands here are partly freehold and partly of customary tenure. The soil is chiefly a red loam, producing good grain crops, especially near the banks of the Eamont. Limestone is found in the parish; and at Southwaite is a mineral spring much resorted to by the inhabitants. Agriculture is the only employment of the population. Penrith is the market usually attended. The parish comprises an area of 8,205 acres. The population in 1801 was 712; in 1811, 763; in 1821, 904; in 1831, 995; in 1841, 975; and in 1851, 954.

DACRE.

The area of this township is returned with the parish; its rateable value is £1,009 17s. 6d. The population was not returned separately till 1841, when it was 204; and in 1851 it had decreased to 163 persons, who chiefly reside in the village of Dacre.

Dacre gave name to the ancient baronial family of Dacre, who had their seat at Dacre Castle, in this township. Their posterity became by marriage lords also of Gilsland and Greystoke. On the demise of Thomas Lord Dacre without male issue, in 1452, his next brother, Ralph, succeeded to the baronies of Gilsland and Greystoke, and he and his successors were called Lords Dacre of the North. Sir Richard Fienes having married Joan, the only daughter of Thomas Lord Dacre, was by royal patent, the same year, declared to be a baron of the realm, by the title of Lord Dacre of the South. Margaret, the sister and heir of Gregory Lord Dacre, married Samson Lennard, Esq., of Chevening, in Kent, whose posterity inherited the title and the Dacre estates. Thomas Lennard Lord Dacre, who was created Earl of Sussex in 1675, left two daughters, co-heiresses, who, with their mother, sold the manors of Dacre and Soubly, in 1715, to Sir Christopher Musgrave; the latter conveyed them the same year to Edward Hasell, Esq., of Dalemmain, from whom they have descended to Edward Hasell, Esq., the present proprietor; besides whom, R. Wauchope, Esq., A. F. Hudlestone, Esq., and T. Fetherstonehaugh, Esq., are the landowners. The township has been enclosed in pursuance of an act passed about the year 1810.

Dacre Castle is a plain quadrangular building, surmounted with crenellated parapets and four square turrets, two of which are built at right angles to the main building, while the others are not. There are two entrances, one at the west tower, and another between the towers on the east front. Near the latter are the armorial bearings of the Earl of Sussex, who restored the castle in the latter end of the seventeenth century, quartering Lennard, Fienes, Dacre, and Multon. The shield is surmounted by a coronet, the supporters are, dexter, a wolf, chained; sinister, a bull, chained; and the motto, "Pour bien desirer." This ancient mansion of the Dacres has for some time been used as a farm-house. In the wall of the room now occupied as the kitchen is a piscina with an ornamented trefoiled arch, and it is very probable that this was the chapel of the castle. The walls are about seven feet in thickness. There are two arched vaults, said to have served as dungeons, which communicate by steps with the ground floor. Access to the roof of the castle was obtained by means of staircases in the towers; and to the tops of the towers by stone steps from the roof. Mr. Howard, in his "Memorials of the Howard Family," alluding to a congress held at Dacre (see page 526) says, "This fact is singularly corroborated by there being in the castle a room, called to this day, the 'Room of the Three Kings,' while the historical fact itself is entirely forgotten in the country. This proves both the antiquity of the castle and its having been a place of some consequence, otherwise it would not have been appointed by Athelstan for a ceremony of such importance. After the Conquest, however, if not before, Dacre was a mesne manor held of the barony of Greystoke by military suit and service. As to the story of the owners having derived their name from having particularly distinguished themselves at the siege of Acre in the holy wars, this appears to be a fiction arising out of the name, and I think it is enough for human pride to show that the parish, the manor, the rivulet, and the castle, were all blended with the name of the owners. Their arms, the pilgrim's scallop, may possibly have been taken from their having been engaged in Palestine, and that one of them was in the Crusade, the cross-legged knight in Dacre church clearly proves. That they were men of high spirit and enterprise, and favourites of the ladies, there exists convincing evidence: Matilda, the great heiress of Gilsland, was by Randolph Dacre carried off from Warwick Castle, in the night time, while she was Edward III.'s ward, and under the custody and care of Thomas de Beauchamp, a stout earl of Warwick; and Thomas Lord Dacre dashingly followed the example of his ancestor, 170 years afterwards, by carrying off, also in the night time, from Brougham Castle, Elizabeth of Greystoke, the heiress of his superior lord, who was also the king's ward, and in custody of Henry Clifford, earl of Northumberland, who probably intended to marry her. Their vigour and ability displayed as wardens of the marches must also add favourably to our estimate of them as men." In 1354 Margaret de Dacre had a license from the bishop of the diocese, Gilbert Welton, to have a chapel within the castle, and for Robert de Kirkby to be her chaplain. This chapel now serves as the kitchen. The subjoined account of the family of Dacre will give more fully the particulars of the descent of this castle and manor. The castle is the property of Edward Hasell, Esq., the lord of the manor.

Family of Dacre.

WILLIAM DACRE of Dacre, in the county of Cumberland, in the 20th year of King Henry III., served the office of sheriff for that shire, with John de Moore, and in the 32nd of the same reign he was constituted sheriff of Yorkshire, and governor of the castles of Scarborough and Pickering. He died in ten years afterwards, when again sheriff of Cumberland and governor of the castle of Carlisle, and was succeeded by his son, RANULPH DE DACRE, who had been in the lifetime of his father a staunch adherent of King Henry III., in the conflicts between that monarch and the barons; and upon succeeding to his inheritance was appointed sheriff of Cumberland. In the 7th Edward I. he was constituted sheriff of Yorkshire, and continued in that trust until the end of the third quarter of the eighth succeeding year. This Ranulph married Joan de Luci; and dying in the 14th Edward I. was succeeded by his son,

WILLIAM DE DACRE, who, in the 32nd Edward I., was in the expedition made that year into Scotland, and about the same period obtained a charter for free warren in all his demesne lands at Dacre, in the county of Cumberland, and at Halton in Lancashire. In the first year of the next reign he had license to castellate his mansion at Dunwallowgh, in Cumberland, on the marches of Scotland; and in three years afterwards was again engaged in the Scottish wars. His lordship married Joane, daughter and heiress of Benedict Gernet, of Bluet; and having been summoned to Parliament as a baron, from the 28th Edward I. to the 12th Edward II., departed this life in the latter year, and was succeeded by his son,

RANULPH DE DACRE, who had a summons to Parliament as Baron Dacre, from 13th May, 1331, to 15th November, 1338. His lordship married Margaret, only daughter and heiress of Thomas de Multon, Baron Multon, of Gilsland (by writ of Edward II., dated 26th August, 1307), by whom he acquired considerable estates, and left at his decease, in 1339, three sons, viz.; William, who succeeded to the barony of Dacre through his father, and to the barony of Multon through his mother; but died without children in 1361. Ralph, successor to his brother in the baronies, died also without children in 1375. And

HUGH DE DACRE, who succeeded his brother Ralph as Lord Dacre and Lord Multon, and had summons to Parliament from 1st December, 1376, to 20th August, 1383. His lordship married Eila, daughter of Alexander Lord Maxwell; and dying in 1383, was succeeded by his son,

WILLIAM DE DACRE, summoned to Parliament from 3rd March, 1384, to 23rd November, 1403. His lordship married Joane, daughter of James Earl of Douglas; and dying about the year 1403, was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS DE DACRE, summoned to Parliament from 1st December, 1412, to the 26th May, 1455. This nobleman was constituted chief forester of Ingelwood Forest, in the county of Cumberland, in the 8th Henry V., and was appointed in the 2nd Henry VI. one of the commissioners to treat for peace with James I. of Scotland. His lordship married Philippa, daughter of Ralph Nevill, earl of Westmoreland, and had issue,

L. Thomas, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Bowes, Esq.; and dying in the lifetime of his father, left an only daughter and heiress, Joane, married to Sir Richard Fienes, Knt., who was declared Baron Dacre by King Edward IV., and from whom the barony has descended in regular succession to the present Lord Dacre.

II. Ranulph, a stout adherent of the House of Lancaster, had summons to Parliament as a baron in the 38th Henry VI., but fell at Towton, and was subsequently attainted, when his title and estates became forfeited.

III. Humphrey, of whom presently.

1. Joan, married to Thomas, eighth Lord de Clifford.

Sir HUMPHREY DACRE (the third son) having deported himself obsequiously to the then triumphant house of York, attended King Edward IV. at the sieges and surrender of the different Lancastrian castles in the north; for which good service, as well as his fidelity to the king's sister Margaret, whom he escorted as chamberlain upon her journey into Flanders on the occasion of her marriage with Charles Duke of Burgundy, he was constituted master forester of Ingelwood Forest for life; and continuing to enjoy the confidence of the king, he was summoned to Parliament as a baron on the 15th November, 1482, under the designation of "Humfrido Dacres of Gilsland, chevalier." Sir Humphrey Dacre, who enjoyed Gilsland and other capital manors, by virtue of a fine levied by his father, had previously disputed the original barony of Dacre with his niece, Joane Lady Fienes, when the affair was referred to the arbitration of King Edward IV., who confirmed Sir Richard Fienes and his lady in the barony, with the precedence enjoyed by Lady Fienes's grandfather, and decreed to them divers castles and manors; but Gilsland, the ancient seat of the Vaux's, with several considerable estates, was adjudged to Sir Humphrey, who, at the same time, was created a baron, with place next below Sir Richard Fienes, and for distinction was styled Lord Dacre of Gilsland, or of the North (of whom hereafter). Sir Richard being entitled Lord Dacre of the South.

DACRE OF THE SOUTH.

RICHARD FIENES, in the year 1450, was summoned in right of his wife as seventh Baron Dacre. He became possessed of the manors of Dacre, Irthington, Kirkoswald, Blackhall, Farlam, Brackenthwaite, Lazony, Brompton, Burgh-upon-Sands, Aikton, Rockliff, and Glassonby, with lands in this county, and divers manors in Westmoreland, Lancashire, and Lincolnshire. In the 13th Edward IV. he was constable of the Tower, and in the 15th Edward IV. one of the king's council. He was summoned to Parliament from 38th Henry VI. until the 22nd Edward IV., and died in 1484, Joan, his wife, surviving him. He was succeeded by his grandson, THOMAS FIENES, lord Dacre (son of Sir Thomas Fienes and his wife, Alice, oldest daughter and coheir of Henry Lord Fitz-Hugh). This nobleman was made a Knight of the Bath at the creation of Henry (second son of Henry VII.) Duke of York.

His lordship married Anne, daughter of Sir Humphrey Bourchier, son of John Bourchier, lord Berners, and, dying in 1534, was succeeded by his grandson,

THOMAS FIENES, lord Dacre (son of Thomas Fienes by Jane, daughter of Edward Sutton, lord Dudley). This nobleman was high in favour at the court of Henry VIII., but going with other young men one night, from Hurstmonceux, to steal a deer out of his neighbour Sir Nicholas Pellham's park, a fray ensued between some of his party and the parkkeepers, in which one of the latter was killed; and though Lord Dacre was not himself upon the spot, but in another part of the park, he was nevertheless tried, convicted, and executed for the murder in 1541, when his honours became forfeited. In 1562, however, those honours were restored to his son and heir (by Mary, daughter of George Neville, lord Abergavenny), GREGORY FIENES, lord Dacre, who was summoned to Parliament from 11th January, 5th Elizabeth, 1563, to 10th February, 35th Elizabeth, 1593. This nobleman died in 1594 without issue, leaving

MARGARET FIENES, lady Dacre, wife of Sampson Lennard, Esq., his sister and heir. She claimed the barony, temp. Elizabeth, and was allowed it in 1604. Her ladyship died in 1611, and was succeeded by her eldest son,

HENRY LENNARD, lord Dacre, who married Chrisogona, daughter of Sir Richard Baker, of Sissenhurst, in Kent, and, dying in 1616, was succeeded by his only son,

RICHARD LENNARD, lord Dacre. This nobleman rebuilt his seat at Cheneveng, after a plan by Inigo Jones. His lordship married, firstly, Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of Sir Arthur Throckmorton, of Pauler's Perry, co. Northampton, by whom he had (with other issue),

I. FRANCIS, his successor.

He married, secondly, Dorothy, daughter of Dudley Lord North, and by her had a son,

II. RICHARD, who had the manor of Horsford, in Norfolk, settled upon him by his father, and he subsequently assumed the name of Barrett, in consequence of the bequest of Sir Edward Barrett, lord Newburgh, to him, of the manor of Bellhouse, and other lands, in Essex. He married Anne, daughter and heiress of Sir Robert Loftus, Knt., and granddaughter of Adrian Viscount Loftus, of Liff, lord chancellor of Ireland, and was succeeded at his decease, in 1606, by his son,

I. Dacre-Barrett-Lennard, who married Lady Jane Chichester, daughter of Arthur, second Earl of Donegal, and had a son, Richard, of whom hereafter, as husband of his cousin, Lady Anne Lennard, baroness Dacre.

Richard Lord Dacre died 18th August, 1630, and was succeeded by his eldest son, FRANCIS LENNARD, lord Dacre. This nobleman, during the civil wars, took the side of the Parliament, but opposed the proceedings against the king personally. His lordship married Elizabeth, daughter and eventually co-heir of Paul, first Viscount Bayning, by whom he had three sons and three daughters. Lord Dacre, on the decease of Ranulph Dacre, last heir male of the Lords Dacre of the North, without issue, in the reign of Charles I., laid claim to Gilsland and the rest of the ancient estates in Cumberland, and though he at last consented to compromise with the Howard family, then in possession, yet he recovered Dacre and divers other manors in Cumberland and Westmoreland. He died in 1662 (his widow, Elizabeth, was subsequently created Countess of Sherry for life, and married David Walter, lieutenant-general of the ordnance and groom of the bed-chamber, temp. Charles II.), and was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS LENNARD, lord Dacre, who was created, 5th October, 1674, Earl of Sussex. This nobleman was obliged, through extravagance, to dispose of his seat at Hurstmonceux, and his lands in Sussex. His lordship married Lady Anne Palmer, daughter of Barbara Duchess of Cleveland, but died in 1715 without male issue, when the earldom ceased, while the barony of Dacre fell into abeyance between the earl's two daughters and co-heirs, Barbara and Anne; the elder married Lieut.-general Charles Skelton, but dying without issue in 1741, the younger,

ANNE, became Baroness Dacre. Her ladyship married thrice: firstly, Richard Barrett Lennard, Esq. (revert to Richard Lord Dacre), by whom she had an only son, secondly, Henry, eighth Lord Teynham, by whom she had, with other children,

I. THOMAS;

II. Charles, who married Gertrude, sister and co-heir of John Trevor, Esq., of Glynd, in Sussex, and left at his decease, in 1754, CHARLES TREVOR, of whom presently.

GERTRUDE TREVOR, who succeeded her brother, as Baroness Dacre.

her ladyship married, thirdly, the Hon. Robert Moore, son of Henry, third Earl of Drogheda, by whom she had one son, III. Henry.

Lady Dacre, soon after the death of her first husband, in conjunction with her sister, sold Cheneveng, the ancient seat of the Lennards, to Earl Stanhope, and Dacre Castle, with the lands in Cumberland, to Sir Christopher Musgrave. She died in 1755, and was succeeded by her eldest son,

THOMAS BARRETT LENNARD, lord Dacre. This nobleman married Anne Maria, daughter of Sir John Pratt, lord chief-justice of the King's Bench, but died without issue on the 12th January, 1786, when the title devolved upon his nephew (revert to Anne Baroness Dacre),

CHARLES TREVOR ROPER, lord Dacre, born 14th June, 1745; married, 2nd March, 1773, Mary, only daughter and heir of Sir Thomas Flindyer, Knt., but died without issue on 4th July, 1794, and was succeeded by his sister,

The Hon. GERTRUDE ROPER, who married, 20th April, 1771, Thomas Brand, Esq., of the Hoo, co. Herts, and by him (who died 21st February, 1794) had issue,

I. THOMAS.

II. HENRY OTWAY.

1. Gertrude.

Her ladyship died on 3rd October, 1819, and was succeeded by her eldest son,

THOMAS BRAND, lord Dacre, born 25th March, 1774; married, 4th December, 1819, Barberina, relict of Valentine Wilmot, Esq., of Farnborough, Hants, and daughter of the late Admiral Sir Chaloner Ogle, Bart.; but died without issue on 21st March, 1851, when he was succeeded by his brother,

HENRY OTWAY, lord Dacre, lieutenant-general in the army, colonel of the 31st Regiment, C.B.; distinguished in the Peninsular War; born 27th July, 1777; married, 24th July, 1806, Pyne, eldest daughter of the late Hon. and Very Rev. Dean Crosbie, and sister of Lord Brandon. By this lady (who died in January, 1844) he had issue,

I. THOMAS CROSBIE WILLIAM, present peer.

II. Henry Bouvier William, M.P. for Glyde, Sussex; born 24th December, 1814; married, 16th April, 1838, Eliza, daughter of General Elliot, and has issue.

1. Pyne Jesse, married firstly to John H. Cotterell, Esq., and secondly to Granville Harcourt Vernon, Esq., M.P.

- ii. Julia, married to Samuel C. Whitbread, Esq.
- iii. Gertrude, married to Sir George H. Seymour, G.C.H.
- iv. Frederica Mary Jane.

His lordship, who assumed by sign manual, in 1824, the surname of Trevor, died 2nd of June, 1859, and was succeeded by his eldest son, THOMAS CROSBIE WILLIAM BRAND TREVOR, the present Baron Dacre, born in 1806; married, 12th January, 1837, Susan Sophia, eldest daughter of the Hon. Charles Compton Cavendish, M.P. for Bucks. His lordship is co-heir to the barony of Fitz Hugh.

DACRE OF THE NORTH.

Sir HUMPHREY DACRE (see page 524), married Maud, daughter of Sir Thomas Parr, Knight, and dying in 1509, was succeeded by his son,

Sir THOMAS DACRE, 2nd Lord Dacre of Gilsland, summoned to Parliament from 17th October, 1509, to 12th November, 1515. This nobleman in the 9th Henry VIII., served under Thomas Earl of Surrey, at the siege of Norham castle; and his lordship obtained great celebrity in the command of a body of horse reserve at the famous battle of Flodden, in the 4th Henry VIII., under the same gallant leader. He was subsequently at different times engaged in Scotland; and he filled the important office of warden of the West Marches, from the 1st year of King Henry VIII. He married Elizabeth, grand-daughter and sole heiress of Ralph de Greystoke, Baron Greystoke, K.G., and had issue,

- i. WILLIAM, his successor.
- ii. Humphrey.
- iii. Mary, married to Francis, Earl of Shrewsbury.
- iv. Margaret, married to Henry, Lord Scrope of Bolton.
- v. Jane.

His lordship died in 1525, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir WILLIAM DACRE, as 3rd Lord Dacre of Gilsland, summoned to Parliament from 3rd November, 1529, to 21st October, 1555, in the first writ as "Willelmo Dacre de Dacre and Greystoke, Ch'lr," afterwards as "de Gilsland," or "de Greystoke," or "de North." In the 20th Henry VIII., this nobleman, being accused of high treason by Sir Ralph Fenwyke, was brought to trial before his peers at Westminster, in the July of that year, and acquitted, owing to the description of evidence by which the charge was sustained; namely, persons of mean degree from the Scottish border, who were either suborned, or brought forward by a vindictive feeling towards Lord Dacre, arising from the severity with which he had executed the duty of warden of the marches. In the reigns of Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, his lordship was captain of the castle, and governor of Carlisle; and in the second year of the last queen he was joined in commission with the Earl of Northumberland to negotiate a peace with Scotland. His lordship married Elizabeth, 5th daughter of George Earl of Shrewsbury, and had issue,

- i. THOMAS, his successor.
- ii. Leonard, who being dissatisfied at the distribution of the family estates among his nephews, at the decease of his nephew, George Lord Dacre, joined in the conspiracy of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, temp. Elizabeth, for the rescue of Mary Queen of Scots, and took possession of the Dacre castles of Greystoke and Naworth, in the north, but was eventually obliged to fly into Scotland, when he was attainted with the lords above-mentioned; he died without issue.
- iii. Edward, attainted with his brother Leonard for the same treason, died without issue.
- iv. Francis, attainted with his brothers, and for the same treason. He lived, however, several years after, dying about the 8th Charles I. He married Dorothy, daughter of John Earl of Derwentwater, and left,

Randal, (the last male heir of Humphrey Lord Dacre, of Gilsland, who died two years after his father, without issue.) The parish register of Greystoke, for 1614, contains the following entry (barred):—"Randal Dacre, Esq., sonne and heire to Francis Dacre, Esq., deceased, being the youngest son of the last Lord William Dacre; deceased before the last heire male of that line; which said Randal dyed at London, and was brought downe at the charges of the Right Hon. Thomas Earle of Arundell and Surrey, and earle marshall of England."

- i. Margaret, married to Anthony Browne, viscount Montacute.
- ii. Anne, married to Henry Clifford, earl of Cumberland.
- iii. Eleanor, married to Henry Jerningham, Esq., of Costessey Hall, Norfolk, by whom she had, with other issue, Henry Jerningham, who was created a baronet 16th October, 1621, a dignity inherited by Sir Henry's descendant, Henry Valentine (Stafford-Jerningham), present Lord Stafford.

- iv. Mary, married to Alexander Culpepper, Esq.
- v. Dorothy, married to Sir Thomas Windsores, Knt., son and heir of William Lord Windsores.

Lord Dacre died in 1563, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS DACRE, 4th Baron Dacre of Gilsland, but never summoned to Parliament. This nobleman married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Leburne, Knt., of Cuswick, in Westmoreland, and had issue,

- i. GEORGE, his successor.
- ii. Anne, married to Philip Howard, earl of Arundel.
- iii. Mary, married to Thomas Lord Howard, of Walden, and died without children.
- iv. Elizabeth, married to Lord William Howard; and her great grandson, Charles Howard, Esq., was elevated to the peerage on the 26th of April, 1801, by the title of Baron Dacre of Gilsland, Viscount Howard of Morpeth, and Earl of Carlisle, of which nobleman the present Earl of Carlisle is the lineal descendant.

His lordship died in 1606, and was succeeded by his only son,

GEORGE DACRE, 5th Lord Dacre of Gilsland, who died in minority, anno 1659, of a fall from a wooden horse, upon which he practised to leap. At the decease of his lordship, the barony of Dacre of Gilsland fell into abeyance between his sisters as co-heirs, and it so continues with their descendants. Of his estates, Greystoke fell to the Earl of Arundel, and is now in the possession of Henry Howard, Esq., while Naworth Castle devolved upon Lord William Howard, where he settled, and it now belongs to the Earl of Carlisle.

The village of Dacre is situated on the north bank of the river Eamont, five miles west-south-west of Penrith, by the turnpike road, or four and a half by the Dalemain private road. Dacre is mentioned in history at a very early period. The Saxon Chronicle tells us that in the year 926, "fiery lights appeared in the north part of the heavens. And Sihtric perished: and King Athelstan obtained the kingdom of the Northumbrians. And he ruled all the kings which were in this island: first, Huwal, king of the West-Welsh; and Constantine, king of the Scots; and Uwen, king of the Guentian people; and Ealdred, son of Ealdulf of Bamborough; And they confirmed the peace by pledge, and by oaths, at the place which is called Eamot, on the fourth of the Ides of July (July 12); and they renounced all idolatry, and after that submitted to him in peace." From a passage in William of Malmesbury

"this place which is called Eamot" appears to have been Dacre, for Malmesbury says "Anlof, the son of Siltric, then fled into Ireland, and his brother Guthferth into Scotland. Messengers from the king immediately followed to Constantine, king of the Scots, and Eugenius, king of the Cumbrians, claiming the fugitive under a threat of war. The barbarians had no idea of resistance, but without delay coming to a place called Dacor, they surrendered themselves and their kingdoms to the sovereign of England." The subsequent history of the place is to be sought for in the history of the noble families with which it was so long connected. Venerable Bede, in his History, speaks of a monastery at Dacre, but as we are of opinion that it stood at Stainton in this parish, we will reserve our remarks till we come to speak of that township.

THE CHURCH.

Dacre parish church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is situated within a short distance of the castle. It consists of a nave, with north and south aisles, chancel, tower, and vestry. There was formerly a porch on the south side; the coping stone of the roof yet remains, but the door is walled up, and the principal entrance to the church is under the tower at the west end. The tower was rebuilt in 1810 and contains three bells. The aisles are divided from the nave by four pointed arches, and a low circular arch separates the nave and chancel. On the floor, on the north side of the chancel, are the effigies of a Knight Templar, or of one who had made a crusade to the Holy Land, and it is supposed to commemorate some member of the Dacre family. The figure is represented in mail armour, with gorget and helmet; the sword is sheathed by the side; the legs, which are broken off a little below the knees, are crossed, and the hands are raised in the attitude of prayer. It seems to belong to the time of Henry III. The church contains mural monuments to the memory of members of the Hasell, Salmond, Maw, and Parkin families. In the churchyard are four rude figures of animals, about five feet high, sitting on their haunches, and clasping a pillar or ragged staff. It has been supposed that they refer to some armorial device of the Dacre family, as the ragged staff appears connected with the scallop shell, in several of the ornaments of Naworth Castle; though we do not find it anywhere recorded among the arms or cognisances of that family. The church of Dacre appears to have been appropriated to the monastery which formerly existed in this parish. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas the rectory and vicarage of Dacre are returned separately, the former as worth £50, and the latter £9 2s. 8d. In the Valor of Edward

II. they are estimated as being united at £13 6s. 8d. Soon after the former survey, the church appears to have been rectorial, and so continued until late in the reign of Henry VIII., when it is supposed to have been given to the college of Kirkoswald, and appropriated thereto; but on the suppression of the religious houses, the tithes, &c., were vested in the crown. According to Dr. Todd, "Queen Mary gave (as was said) the disposal of Dacre to Bishop Oglethorp, but her grant was vacated in the next reign." In 1380 Andrew de Laton, of Dalemain, by will, gave to this church all his personal estate for the good of his soul. In 1583 a lease of the rectory and tithes was granted by the crown to Thomas Hammond for twenty-one years; he paying to the vicar an annual stipend of £8. About the year 1609 the living was augmented by Mr. William Mawson, of Tymparon, who, by will, gave a lease of the tithes of Sleagill and Thrimby in Westmoreland, to be divided equally between the vicars of Dacre and Penrith. The tithes were divided by the trustees, who awarded those of Thrimby to Dacre. They were afterwards sold for £200, which was given in augmentation of the vicarage. The governors of Queen Anne's Bounty gave an additional £200, with which land was purchased at Black Burton. About the year 1682 the great tithes were purchased by Charles Dashwood, Esq. The right of patronage was originally in the barons of Dacre, lords of the manor. Subsequently the collegiate body of Kirkoswald presented; but since the dissolution of that collegiate church the right of patronage has been exercised by the Lord Chancellor. It appears that at present the Earl of Lonsdale is the improprator, for he receives a fee-farm rent for the great tithes of the parish. The small tithes belong to E. W. Hasell, Esq., of Dalemain; they were commuted at the time of the enclosure of the common. The present value of the living is about £118. The parish registers commence in 1560.

RECTORS.—Nicholas de Appleby, —: Henry de Herela, 1206; William de Burgh, 1328; William Bowett, about 1359; Walter de Louthburgh. —: Peter de Stapleton, 1440; William de Orhead, 1370; John Ingleby, —.

VICARS.—Thomas Langrizz, about 1560; Roland Dawson, —; John Brockbank, 1571; Sir Richard Sutton, 1574; Sir William Martin, 1582; Sir Thomas Wrae, 1591; William Richardson, 1742; William Cowper, 1767; Jonathan Moorhouse, 1786; John Stephenson, 1802; John Gilpin, 1850; Richard Williams, 1852.

The vicarage is a neat stone building in the Elizabethan style, very pleasantly situated, a little south of the village. It was erected in 1851-2, at an expense of upwards of £800, defrayed by subscription, and a grant of £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty.

Dacre school, situated in the village, was erected in 1834, (instead of an old one built in 1749, which is now let as a cottage at an annual rent of £3 5s.) at a cost of nearly £130, defrayed by subscription and a grant of £40 from the Committee of Council on Education, and £5 from the National Society. The rent of the old school is given towards the teacher's salary. The school is under government inspection, is conducted by a mistress, and has an average attendance of twenty-five children. The trustees of this school, and of some other charities in the parish, are the vicar of Dacre for the time being, Edward William Hasell, Esq., Andrew Fleming Hudleston, Esq., and Messrs. Joseph Grisdale, Joseph Brown Lander, and Francis Winder. At the time of the enclosure of the commons of this township, a small portion, about three roods, was allotted to the school. This was subsequently exchanged with E. W. Hasell, Esq., for part of one-half the interest due on £20 borrowed from his predecessor at the time of the exchange of Motherby estate for Newbiggin,—this portion, with a small plantation adjoining, Mr. Hasell gave as a site for the vicarage. The estate just alluded to is called Newbiggin Town End, and includes the closes called the Crofts, containing upwards of nine acres; and also a field called Ings or Newbiggin Ings Croft, which contains four acres, making a total of upwards of thirteen acres, now let for £18 a year,—£7 14s. 4d. of this sum is given to the school, for which four poor children of Dacre are taught free.

CHARITIES.

Rev. Robert Troutbeck's Dole.—The Rev. Robert Troutbeck, by will proved June 6th, 1706, gave to the poor of Dacre parish, the place of his nativity, £50, the interest thereof to be distributed every year by the Troutbecks of Blencow, if there should be any living, otherwise by the minister and churchwardens for the time being. This money was laid out in 1749, with other money, in the purchase of an estate at Motherby, the rent of which is distributed annually on Easter Sunday.

John Scott's Gift.—John Scott, by his will dated May 10th, 1759, gave to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Dacre £50 to be placed upon security, one moiety of the interest to be paid and distributed amongst the poor and most needy of the inhabitants of Stainton, and the other moiety amongst the poor and most needy of the inhabitants of the rest of the parish of Dacre, but no part of it to any one in receipt of parochial relief. The money is invested at four and a half per cent interest, which is distributed as directed.

Hodgson's Bequest.—James Hodgson, by will dated June 17th, 1778, gave £40 to the poor people in Dacre and Soulbly, the interest of which was to be distributed in Dacre churchyard every Christmas Day for ever.

John Troutbeck's Gift.—John Troutbeck, by will dated October 27th, 1787, gave to the poor of Dacre parish, the place of his nativity, £200, the interest of which was to be distributed every Easter Sunday, on the family tombstone in Dacre churchyard, provided the day should be fine, by the hands and at the discretion of a Troutbeck of Blencow, if there should be any living, those next in descent having prior right of distribution; and if none should be living that would distribute the same, then by a Troutbeck as long as one could be found that would take the trouble of it, otherwise by the minister and churchwardens of the parish for the time being.

Mrs. Wilson's Charity.—Jane Wilson, who died January 29th, 1826, left £100 to the poor of this parish, also £100, the interest thereof to be applied towards the educating of four poor children belonging to Stainton.

Motherby Estate, School, &c.—The Motherby estate was purchased with several donations given by Matthew Brown, the Rev. R. Troutbeck, Edward Hasell, Esq., and an ancient Poor Stock. In 1799 the property was exchanged for a messuage and tenement called Newbiggin Town End, and Newbiggin Ings Croft, by which the charity was materially benefited. The rent of these premises is applied to Dacre school and the poor of the village and parish.

Dacre Lodge, the seat of Admiral Wauchope, is a neat structure, erected in 1831-2, occupying a pleasant situation on the banks of the river Dacre, within a short distance of the village.

GREAT BLENOW.

The rateable value of this township is returned with that of Newbiggin; its area is returned with the parish. The number of inhabitants in 1841, was 64; in 1851, 88; who chiefly reside in the village of Blencow.

Great Blencow appears to have been held in ancient times by a family bearing the local name, who were settled here in the reign of Edward III. They subsequently removed to Blencow Hall, in Little Blencow, parish of Greystoke. Henry Howard, Esq. is lord of the manor, and Mrs. Elizabeth Troutbeck the only landowner. The commons were enclosed in 1775, by an act passed in the 12th George III.

The village of Great Blencow is five miles north-west by west of Penrith. Near the village is Ennim Bank, the seat and property of Mrs. E. Troutbeck.

CHARITY.

The School.—Thomas Burbank, a native of Great Blencow, on December 7th, 1577, endowed the school here with lands and messuages in the county of Northampton, of the yearly value of £10; in addition to which he gave £300 in money for the use of the school, £50 of which was expended in building the school-house, £100 laid out in a rent-charge of £6 a year, payable out of Yanwath Hall; the remainder, being lent out on securities which became worthless, was lost. The nomination of the head master is vested in feoffees, of whom eight was the appointed number. As the feoffees die, two of the survivors, or the heirs of the survivors, have authority to make new feoffments to others being inhabitants of Great or Little Blencow. The school is said to be free to all the kingdom, on payment of entrance money; nothing is taught but the classics on the foundation, other branches of education have to be paid for. Among the eminent men educated here we may mention, Edward first Baron Ellenborough, lord chief justice of the King's Bench, and George Whitehead, the well-known member of the Society of Friends. The income of the school is about £190 per annum.

NEWBIGGIN.

The population of Newbiggin township in 1841 was 341; in 1851, 346. The rateable value, inclusive of that of Great Blencow, is £2,983 17s.; the area is returned with that of the parish. The inhabitants are principally resident in the village of Newbiggin, near to which are limestone quarries called Whinberry quarries. Situated on an elevated part of the common in this township is "Fluska Pike," more commonly called "Thompson's Folly," from the name of the man who built it about forty years ago. It is a square building about fourteen feet long, and twelve high, forming one room, and was used by its owner, Mr. Thompson, author of the "Sentimental Tour to London," &c. &c., as a place to take tea or spend the night in. It is now the property of Mr. Richard Harrison, of Newbiggin. Contiguous to this building is a field, known as "Silver Field," from the circumstance that silver rings and other ornaments have at different times been found here. In the year 1785 a curious instrument of silver was discovered, to which no one has been able to assign either the name or the use. This singular relic of antiquity consists of an oval ring, or frame of silver, about fourteen inches in circumference; the length of the spear or tongue attached to it being twenty-two inches. The weight is twenty-five ounces.

The manor of Newbiggin is the property of Henry Howard, Esq. The landowners are E. W. Hasell, Esq., Mrs. E. Troutbeck, Henry Howard, Esq., Messrs. Richard Harrison, William Wilkinson, Lancelot Allinson, William Bainbridge, Edmund Mounsey, Thomas Todd, Miss Roxburgh, and Edmund Thompson. The commons were enclosed in 1775, in pursuance of an act passed in the 12th George III., when a field called Barty Gills, containing sixty-four acres, was given to the Hasell family, in lieu of the small tithes of the townships of Great and Little Stainton, Newbiggin, and Great Blencow.

The village of Newbiggin is three miles west by north of Penrith. At the north end of the village is Tymparon Hall, now a farm-house.

Newbiggin school, which is situated in the village, is a small stone building, erected in 1825, at a cost of £71 16s. defrayed by subscription. It is endowed with the interest of £100, left in 1820, by the late Mr. Stephen Wray, which is given to the teacher. The trustees are Messrs. John Harrison, John Hogarth, Richard Harrison, and William Harrison. The average attendance is about twenty children, who are taught by a mistress.

Dalemain, the seat of E. W. Hasell, Esq., is situated in the beautiful vale of Eamont, near the foot of Ullswater, two and a half miles from Penrith. It stands in the centre of an extensive park, studded with stately oaks and overhanging woods and groves. From this charming residence may be seen, in the distance to the south-west, the towering peaks of Martindale Fells, on which roam a herd of red deer in their pristine state, said to have been a gift from Queen Elizabeth, and at present the property of E. W. Hasell, Esq. On the west may be seen Dacre castle, and church. Following the vale we come to Hutton John, the seat of A. F. Huddleston, Esq., one of whose ancestors is said to have preserved the life of Charles II. in two ways, that is spiritually and temporally: and further west we have the rugged steeps of old Blencathra, or Saddleback, supposed to have been at one period a volcano.

Hasell of Dalemain.

The Hasells were first settled in Cambridgeshire, where several burials of members of the family occur, in the register of Bottisham church, in that county.

Sir EDWARD HASSELL, knighted by William III., was the first of the family that settled in Cumberland, Dalemain being purchased by him from the co-heiresses of the ancient family of De Layton, in 1665. Sir Edward, who was born 27th November, 1642, (the son of the Rev. Edward Hasell, rector of Middleton Cheney, co. Northampton, by Martha, his wife, daughter of Dr. Henry Smith, master of St. Mary Magdalene, Cambridge, was elected in 1701 M.P. for the county of Cumberland. He married, firstly, Jane, eldest daughter of Sir Timothy Fetherstonebaugh, Knt., (who died on the scaffold for his loyalty to King Charles I.) and widow of Bernard Kirkcaldie. This lady dying in 1695, he married, secondly, 24th November, 1696, Dorothy, daughter of William Williams, Esq., of Johnby Hall, and by her left at his decease, 12th September, 1702, a son and successor.

EDWARD HASSELL, Esq., of Dalemain, born in 1703, who married, Julia, second daughter of Sir Christopher Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall, and had issue. The third son,

CHRISTOPHER HASSELL, Esq., married, Miss Goade, and had (with two daughters, Julia, who died unmarried; and Eliza, married to her cousin, Richard Houghton, Esq.,) a son,

EDWARD HASSELL, Esq., of Dalemain, born in 1765, who married, firstly, in 1792, Elizabeth, daughter of William Carus, Esq., of Kirby Lonsdale, and by her (who died in 1810) had issue,

- i. EDWARD WILLIAMS, now of Dalemain.
- ii. CHRISTOPHER, born in 1814, captain in the Bengal army.
- iii. William Lowther, captain in the Bengal army, died at Cairo, June, 1840.
- iv. MARIANNE, married to the Rev. Sir J. C. Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall, who died in 1850.
- v. Julia.
- vi. Jane.
- vii. Maria, married to George Graham, Esq., son of the late Sir James Graham, Bart., and died March, 1850.

Mr. Hassell married, secondly, in 1812, Jane daughter of the Rev. B. Whitehead, of Ormside Lodge, which lady died in Nov. 1816. Mr. Hassell himself died at Dalemain, 24th December, 1829, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

EDWARD WILLIAMS HASSELL, Esq., of Dalemain, J. P., and D.L., chairman of Quarter Sessions for Cumberland and Westmoreland, lieutenant-colonel commandant of the Westmoreland and Cumberland Yeomanry Cavalry, and high-sheriff for the latter county in 1830; born 10th July, 1796; married 12th July, 1826, Dorothea, youngest daughter of Edward King, Esq., of Hungrif, co. York, and has issue surviving,

- i. WILLIAMS, born 4th March, 1856.
- ii. John Edward, born 19th September, 1839.
- iii. George Edmund, born 30th September, 1847.
- iv. Dorothea.
- v. Elizabeth Julia.
- vi. Alice Jane.
- vii. Mary, married to William Parker, Esq.
- viii. Henrietta Maria.
- ix. Frances Anne.

Aras.—Gr., on a fess, az., between three hazel nuts, ppr., as many crescents, arg.

Crest.—A squirrel, arg., feeding on a hazel nut, ppr., encircled with hazel branches.

SOUTHY.

For area of Southly township see parish returns. The rateable value is £657 18s. 10d. The population in 1841 was 61, and in 1851 the same number, who are principally resident in the small but scattered village of Soulbly. The manorial rights are vested in E. W. Hassell, Esq., who with James Salmond, Esq., Thomas Mark, Miss Mary Wilson, and Mrs. Wilson, are the landowners. The commons were enclosed about the year 1810.

The village of Soulbly contains a few scattered houses at the foot of Ullswater, four and half miles south-west of Penrith.

Waterfoot House, the seat of James Salmond, Esq., occupies a pleasant situation, commanding a beautiful view of the picturesque vale and lake of Ullswater.

Salmond of Waterfoot.

This family is of French origin, and left the parent country during the Huguenot persecutions. The grandfather of the present Mr. Salmond, WILLIAM SALMOND, Esq., of Seaforth, Antigua, son of William Salmond of the same place, married Jane Hassell, of Dalemain, co. Cumberland, and had issue,

- i. JAMES.
- ii. William.
- iii. Francis.
- iv. Julia.
- v. Maria.

The eldest son,

JAMES SALMOND, Esq., of Waterfoot, married, firstly, 2nd July, 1798, Louisa, daughter of David Scott, Esq., of Dunninald, N. B., and sister of Sir David Scott, Bart.; and secondly Marianne, daughter of the Ven. Thomas Constable, archdeacon of the East Riding of Yorkshire; and by the former was father of JAMES SALMOND, Esq., of Waterfoot, J. P., born 15th June, 1805, married 16th August, 1834, Emma Isabella, daughter of D'Ewes Coke, Esq., of Brookhill Hall, Derbyshire, and has issue,

- i. CHARLES JAMES, born in 1833.
- ii. Henry, born in 1838.
- iii. William, born in 1840.
- iv. Daniel, born in 1843.
- v. Marianne Emma.
- vi. Julia.

Arms.—Sa., three salmones, or.

Crest.—An armed arm, sa., holding a falchion, or.

Motto.—Optima sepienia probitas.

Wreay hamlet and estate, the property of Thomas Todd and the Rev. Isaac Todd, with the exception of a few fields, pay tithes and church-rates to Dacre, and other rates to Watermillock chapelry, in Greystoke parish.

STANTON.

The rateable value of this township is £2,242 9s. 3d.: its area is returned with the parish. In 1841 it contained 805 inhabitants, and in 1851, 296, who chiefly reside in the village of Stainton. The township is skirted on the east by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway. In the neighbourhood of Stainton are extensive deposits of limestone, containing large quantities of fossil remains. In some instances the formation of the limestone is very remarkable, being deposited just beneath the surface of the earth as it were in moulds, that is, in beds of soil, and the stones when dug out are of the most curious shapes, resembling, in some cases, the trunks of animals, trees, &c. Mr. Thompson, who has a large collection of these stones, fancies they grow in the soil and morass in a wet season, the soil being impregnated with lime.

On the property of Mr. John Thompson, of Keld Head, in this township, is a piece of rising ground called Kirkgarth, commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country. This spot is supposed to have been the site of the church or monastery mentioned by Venerable Bede as existing in the year 698, "near the river Dacre, over which, at that time, the religious Suidbert presided as abbot." He also mentions another superior named Thruidd, who governed the monastery in his time. The conjecture that Kirkgarth is the site of the monastery seems fully borne out by the fact that the adjoining fields are still known by the names of Kirkplaw, Kirkrigg, Under Kirk, &c., and also from the fact of human bones having been dug up. About eighteen years ago the present proprietor discovered an entire skeleton on the spot, supposed by a surgeon to have belonged to a female. The extent of ground upon which this monastery is supposed to have stood would justify the inference that it was a place of some importance. It is contiguous to the Penrith and Keswick turnpike road, and is two and a half miles from Penrith. In connection with this place there is a traditional story, which runs as follows:—"Shortly after the Reformation the lands fell into the hands of a certain baron, a man of reckless violence, who lived somewhere in the neighbourhood. He had a number of men employed in the removal of the church, or what ruins remained thereof, probably with the intention of making an addition to Dacre church, which would appear from the stone corresponding; and one day, in consequence of some scruples of his workmen, or some hesitation in the execution of his commands, he came himself to the ground. His orders were very positive; and having delivered himself of these, he rode off in the direction of Penruddock, and had gained the summit of this rising ground, looking backwards as he went, when his horse fell under him and he broke his neck. The place is still called the Baron's Hill, and the Baron's Cross."

The manor of Stainton is the property of Henry Howard, Esq. The landowners are W. H. Whelpdale, Esq.; Thomas Scott, Esq.; Messrs. John G. Dawson, John Thompson, Thomas Thompson, Thomas Allinson, William Walton, J. Watson, Thomas Harrison, T. B. Allison; and Mrs. Bell. The commons were enclosed in 1775. The tithes of Great and Little Stainton, Newbiggin, and Great Blencow township were commuted in 1850 for £32 9s. 4d. payable to the Earl of Lonsdale.

The village of Stainton is about two and three quarter miles west-south-west of Penrith. It is remarkable for its salubrity and the longevity of its inhabitants. The pleasing uniformity of its houses, which are all of stone, and most of them whitewashed, give it an airy and cheerful appearance.

—SCHOOL—

School.—Mark Scott, of Hallrigg, by will dated December 28th, 1758, gave, for the use of the school at Stainton, £100; three parts of the interest to be paid to the master of the school, and the fourth part for teaching as many poor children born in the town as it conveniently could; the poor children to be chosen at the discretion of his trustees, and their descendants. In 1826 the late Miss Jane Wilson left £100 to this school. This was followed, in 1832, by another £100, bequeathed by the Rev. Isaac Wilson; and, in 1850, by £50 left by Lancelot Dent, Esq., of Skirsgill House, on the demise of his sister, Miss Dent; so that the total endowment of the school at present amounts to £350. The school-house was rebuilt in 1838, at a cost of £150, and is now a neat and commodious building, capable of accommodating about seventy pupils; the average number in attendance is fifty. Fourteen poor children of Stainton township are taught free.

Jane Wilson's Charity.—Jane Wilson, at the same time, left the interest of £100 to the poor of this parish.

There is also a girls' school in the village, which is mainly supported by Mrs. Hasell.

Skirsgill House is the property of W. Dent, Esq.

In the township of Stainton, about two miles on the road leading from Penrith to Patterdale, via Dalemain, is an elevation called Studford or Studfort Brow, a short distance to the south-west of which some historians say that a very fierce encounter took place between the Britons and Romans, in which the commanders on both sides were slain. The Britons were however obliged to give way, and fled to the mountains a little to the west: the above seems fully borne out by the fact that human bones have been discovered here at various periods.

In the year 1787 there was living at Stainton one John Bristo, a healthy man of the great age of 94. Eight years before, his family stood as follows:—master of the family, 86 years; mistress, 85 years; a female servant, 79 years; a horse, 33 years; and a dog, 17 years;—total 300. His wife lived to the age of 88, and his servant died in 1785, aged 86, having served him 64 years. It is further remarkable, that after the first four years of her service, she gave him notice that she intended to leave him, and continued to do so regularly every half-year afterwards; at length she actually did quit his service, and died within the following two months. This remarkable villager was very strongly built, and enjoyed such robust health that he never paid anything to either surgeon or physician. He was further remarkable for his pacific disposition, never having paid or caused any one to pay anything for law. Though naturally silent and diffident, he was an eminent promoter of mirth, and would take a glass regularly among cheerful company till a reasonable hour, when he always retired. He never wore a coat or any other article of dress which was not spun in his own family, and the cloth manufactured by a neighbour; his clothes were made of the wool of his own sheep, and were either dyed by a neighbour or left undyed, forming a cloth called here "Skiddaw grass," namely black and white wool mixed. His wife was every way his counterpart.

On the eastern boundary of this township is a place traditionally called "Appleby Gate Head," said at some period to have been the principal road to Appleby. This road crosses the river Eamont at Yanwath Hall.

EDENHALL PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by the parish of Great Salkeld, on the west by Penrith, on the south by the river Eamont, and on the east by the river Eden. The soil on the hills is generally of a light sandy nature, but on the banks of the rivers a very rich loam prevails, and the principal crops are oats, barley, and turnips. The inhabitants, who are principally engaged in agricultural pursuits, reside chiefly in the village of Edenhall, and attend the markets at Penrith. Edenhall possesses no dependant townships; its area is 3,354 acres, and its rateable value £2,693 6s. 3½d. The population of Edenhall in 1801 was 148; in 1811, 132; in 1821, 251; in 1831, 294; in 1841, 266; and in 1851, 365.

The manor of Edenhall was given by the Conqueror to Henry Fitz-Swein, brother of Adam Fitz-Swein, but how long it continued in his family we have no account. In the reign of Henry III. Robert Turp occurs as possessor of the manor, and on his demise it descended successively to his son and grandson, the latter of whom, dying without male issue, Edenhall came to his two daughters, co-heirs, one of whom, Julian, became the wife of William Stapleton, in 1327. It continued to be held by the Stapleton family for five descents, when Joan, second daughter and co-heir of Sir William Stapleton, Knt., brought it in marriage to Thomas de Musgrave about the 38th Henry VI. (1450-60), and it is still in the possession of his family and name.

Edenhall is an elegant mansion in the Italian style of architecture, pleasantly situated in a park whose attractions are enhanced by the meanderings of the Eden. The beautifully laid out flower garden, at the west front of the hall, was designed and arranged by the present baronet. At a short distance from the terrace, and commanding a fine view of the garden, park, and church, with the bend of the Eden, and the opposite hills, are two splendid specimens of the cedar of Lebanon, of great age and beauty. The present mansion was built about the year 1821, and contains several handsome rooms, the walls of which are decorated with family portraits and other paintings. Connected with this house and the Musgrave family is the famous "Luck of Edenhall," a tall tumbler, of old fashioned glass, green and specky, expanding in easy curve from the bottom upwards, and terminating in a graceful lip, and enamelled with a geometrical design in crimson, blue, and yellow. The "Luck" has been in the possession of the Musgraves for many generations. It has a threefold value: in the mysterious tradition which associates it with the fairies, in the sacred use to which in all probability it was once applied, and as a specimen of ancient art. The "luck" is kept in a leathern case, which is, with good reason, believed to be the workmanship of the fifteenth century, and bears the monogram "I. H. S." which identifies it with the church, and we may believe the "luck" to have been a chalice used for sacramental purposes, made at Venice perhaps in the tenth century. The projection of the lip makes it somewhat inconvenient as a drinking glass, yet Philip Duke of Wharton used to make merry with it, as we learn from his ballad:—

"God prosper long from being broke
The Luck of Edenhall;
A doleful drinking bout I sing,
That lately did befall.

To chase the spleen with cup and can
Duke Philip took his way;
Babes yet unborn shall never see
The like of such a day.

The stout and ever-thirsty Duke
A vow to God did make
His pleasure within 'Cumberland
Three live-long nights to take.

Sir Musgrave, too, of Martindale,
A true and worthy knight,
Ere long with him a bargain made
In drinking to delight.

Now when these merry tidings reach'd
The Earl of Harold's ears,
'And am I, quoth he, with an oath,
'Thus slighted by my peers?'

And so the ditty goes on for nearly two score stanzas, with the doings of the rivals, and the final triumph.
The concluding stanza runs:—

"God bless the king, the duchess fat,
And keep the land in peace;
And grant that drunkenness henceforth
'Mong noblemen may cease."

It is said that the duke delighted to toss up the "luck" after his bumpers and catch it as it fell.
Luckily it never came to harm, and shows no sign whatever of the shivering as pictured in Uhland's ballad; or of the cracks and injuries mentioned in Longfellow's translation.

"But that fairy legend," say Mr. White, "it comes flitting through the mind as butterflies across a bosky alley, and imagination renews the scene. Rhymers and story tellers have alike made the 'luck' their theme, and while one adheres to the ancient boteler, another brings a knight returning from the wars to sieze the cup at the very moment that the elves are disporting in the moonlight." But there is another version, less known, perhaps, with which we may entertain ourselves here for a few minutes:—

'Twas summer-tide, when days are long,
And holm and haugh were green;
And the mavis sings in the good greenwood,
And chatters the jay between.

"O, whither dost thou little foot-page,
As swift as hawk on wing?"
"For life, for life, to Penrith town
I run, the leech to bring!"

"And wherefore seekest thou the leech?
Now up and tell to me;"
"O, hold me not, thou weird woman,
There 's glamour in thine ee!"

Oh, there was glamour in here ee;
He could not choose but tell;
"My mistress lieth in deadly swoon,—
The ladye Isabel."

"Now run, now run, thou little foot page,
Run swift as hawk on wing,
But if the leech to succour fail,
Then seek the fairies' spring."

The little foot-page hath gone and come,
So nimble of foot was he;
And his bonnie bright een were wet with tears,
For he loved his dear ladye.

The leech he rode to Edenhall,
The while uprose the moon:
But his craft was vain, and his simples naught.
To loose the deadly swoon.

The little foot-page, he wept full sore,
And he fell on his knee and he prayed:
He prayed a prayer to Mary Mother,
And Saint Cuthbert to aid.

His dear ladye hath nurthred him
Since rose his infant wail,
That night his father's hut was burnt
By thieves from Liddelsdale.

Then thought he of the weird woman,
But, oh! 'tis a fearsome thing,
To go at night, in the wan moonlight,
And walk by the fairies' spring.

Yet will he forth, whate'er betide,
Yet will he forth and see;
For who loveth he on earth beside,
If not his dear ladye.

So softly crept he down the stair,
And out by the secret door;
And he was aware of a strange music
He never had heard before.

And slowly paced he o'er the mead,
And heard the self-same sound,
And there he saw a companie
A dancing round and round.

He fell on his knee behind a bush,
And his heart beat quick for fear,
Whenever he saw the dainty folk Come dancing him a-near.

So beautiful their faces shone,
So bright their silken shewn;
He could but dread to look thereon,
And yet, he looked, I ween.

Oh, merrily did they laugh and dance,
Still tripping round and round;
But not a blade of grass did bend,
No flower sunk on the ground.

And ever the music rang full sweet,
Yet sat no players there;
It was as if the trees did sing,
While tinkled harps in air.

Anon they pause, and a crystal cup
Is dipped in the bubbling spring,
And gliding goes, from lip to lip,
All round the fairy ring.

And ever it dips and fills again,
 And while the revelers drink
 The brimming water falls like pearls
 Down from the sparkling brim.

But the fix that bears that cup around
 No mortal eye may see.
 'Oh, could my lady drain that cup!'
 Thought the lady fast upon her knee.

Scarcely had he thought than to him glides
 The cup from the bubbling spring;
 Him paused before, yet who it bore
 Did naught of shadow fling.

He trembled sore, but he took the cup,
 For the sake of his dear lady;
 And fast the drops fell down like pearls
 As he rose up from knee.

And at his feet, upon the grass,
 A written scroll was thrown;
 Then all at once the music ceased,
 And the fairy folk were gone.

He took the scroll and he took the cup,
 Them to the hall he bore;
 The Lady Isabel did drink,
 And her deadly swoon was o'er.

And the little foot-page he brought the scroll,
 And showed it to his lord;
 Sir Ralph he took thereon and read,
 In olden style the word—

"If that cuppe
 Shall breake or falle,
 Farewell the lucke
 Of Edenhall."

Sir Ralph de Musgrave made a feast,
 For joy over his lady;
 And the little foot-page he stood by her chair,
 And blitheest of all was he.

Sir Ralph de Musgrave built a church,
 In sweet Saint Guthbert's prayse,
 That men might know whence came the lucke,
 And think thereon alwayes.

Musgrave, de Musgrave, Hartley, and Edenhall.

This ancient family deduces its pedigree from one of the companions in arms of the Conqueror, who obtained a grant of Scaleby Castle in this county. Camden in his "Britannia," speaking of the two villages called Musgrave, in Westmoreland, describes them as the places "which gave name to the warlike family of the Musgraves." The first of the family on record is

ROBERT DE MUSGRAVE, of Musgrave, who lived in the reign of Stephen. His son and heir

ROBERT DE MUSGRAVE, of Musgrave, occurs temp. Henry II. The next we meet with is

Sir ADAM DE MUSGRAVE, Knt., who lived about the year 1204. He was a favourite of Robert de Vipont, baron of Appleby, of whom he held Musgrave in corgage as part of the barony. Previous to the 23d Henry III. (1240-1) there lived

THOMAS DE MUSGRAVE, of Musgrave, who had issue,

I. THOMAS, his successor.

II. Nicholas, who married and had a son, Sir Richard de Musgrave, knt., living temp. Edward I.

THOMAS DE MUSGRAVE, of Musgrave, was sheriff of Westmoreland 4th Henry III. (1258-9), and one of the executors of Robert de Vipont. He gave some land in Overton, or Orton, to the hospital of Conishead, Lancashire, and died in the 49th Henry III. (1264-5). The next on record is

Sir THOMAS DE MUSGRAVE, Knt., of Musgrave, who, in the 6th Edward I. (1275-8) with Ranulph Dacre, obtained a royal charter for a market every week upon the Wednesday at Orton, co. Westmoreland; as also for a fair yearly on the eve, day, and morrow, of the feast of St. Simon and St. Jude. He served in the Scottish wars in the 4th Edward II. (1310-11). The next head of this family we find mentioned is

Sir THOMAS DE MUSGRAVE, Baron Musgrave, who was summoned to Parliament from November 1350, to October 1373. In 1374-5, being then under age, it was found that he was seised of the manors of Great Musgrave, Moreton, Soulbly, half of Rookby, and part of Sandford. In 1290-1 he married Isabella de Berkeley, widow of John Lord Clifford. In 1340, 1341, 1343, and 1344, he was returned to Parliament as knight of the shire for Westmoreland. In 1345 he was associated with the Bishop of Carlisle in guarding the Western Marches, and during the same year was one of the commanders in the van of the army which gave David Bruce battle near Durham, and made him prisoner. In 1353 Baron Musgrave was joined with Ralph Lord Nevill, and Thomas Lord Lucy, in the wardenship of the Western Marches, and again in 1372 with the Bishop of Carlisle and others. He was sheriff of Yorkshire in 1350. The date of his death is not known, but he is supposed to have been interred in the church of Kirkby Stephen, where there is an altar tomb under the chancel arch, on which reposes the effigy of a knight in armour—the arms on the monument are charged with annulets. He was succeeded by his son,

Sir THOMAS DE MUSGRAVE, who married, firstly, Margaret, daughter of Sir William Ross, of Yelton, co. York; and secondly, Mary, daughter of John Vaux, and widow of Thomas Holland, earl of Kent. He died in the 8th Richard II. (1384-5) and was succeeded by his son,

Sir THOMAS DE MUSGRAVE, Knt., who married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of Sir William Fitz-William, Knt., of Spotsborough, co. York. He died in 1409, when Hartley Castle and Musgrave devolved upon his son and heir,

Sir RICHARD DE MUSGRAVE, Knt., who is supposed to have married Elizabeth Wollaston, whose arms are quartered by the Musgraves. He died February 12th, 1419. His successor was THOMAS MUSGRAVE, Esq., who married Joan, daughter of Lord Dacre. He deceased January 8th, 1447, leaving issue

RICHARD, his successor, and Elizabeth, married to Henry Wharton.

Sir RICHARD MUSGRAVE, Knt., married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Betham, Knt., of Betham, co. Westmoreland, by whom he had issue four sons and six daughters.

I. THOMAS, his successor.

II. John, who died unmarried issue.

III. Richard, who married Mary, daughter and co-heiress of William Stapleton, Esq., of Edenhall, and son of Sir William Hilton, Knt., of Hilton, co. Durham, and sister to his eldest brother's wife.

IV. William, a son of William Lord Town, warden of the West Marches, in 1447, and 1494 for repairs of Bewcastle. He had a son Richard.

I. Elizabeth, married to Thomas Agart.

II. Isabel, married to Thomas Middleton, Esq., of Middleton Hall, co. Westmoreland.

III. Margaret, married to Thomas Elderton, Esq.

IV. Eleanor, married to William Thornburgh, Esq.

V. Mary, married to Thomas Wapoor, Esq.

VI. Agnes, married to Robert Wapoor, Esq.

Sir Richard died November 24, 1431, and was interred at Kirkby Stephen, Westmoreland. He was succeeded by his son, Sir THOMAS MUSGRAVE, Knt., who married Joan, daughter and co-heiress of Sir William de Stapleton, Knt., of Edenhall and Arden, by whom he had issue, his son, daughter and heiress, Sir Nicholas, Viscount of Arden, in whose right he had among other lands the manor of Edenhall. Sir Thomas died in 1466, leaving issue by Joan his wife, four sons and four daughters.

I. RICHARD, his successor.

II. Sir John, the ancestor of the Musgraves of Musgrave Hall, co. Durham.

III. Nicholas, ancestor of the Musgraves, of Hayton Castle.

IV. William, progenitor of the Musgraves of Crooklake, co. Cumberland.

I. Margaret, married to John Sandford.

II. Philippa, married to Christopher Lancaster.

III. Mary, married to Nicholas Ridley.

IV. Isabella, married to John Crackenthorne, of Newbiggin, co. Westmoreland.

Sir Thomas was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir RICHARD MUSGRAVE, Knt., who married Joane, daughter of Thomas Lord Clifford, by his wife, Johanna, daughter of Thomas Lord Darnley of Galloway, and had issue,

I. EDWARD, his heir.

II. Thomas.

III. John, in holy orders. I. Jane.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir EDWARD MUSGRAVE, who was twice married. His first wife was Anne, daughter of Thomas Radcliffe, Esq., by whom he had issue two daughters:—

I. MARY, married to John Martindale, Esq.

II. Margaret, married to John Heron, Esq., of Chipchase, co. Northumberland.

By his second wife, Joane, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Christopher Ward, Knt., of Gryndale, co. York, standard bearer to King Henry VIII. at the siege of Boulogne, he had issue,

I. WILLIAM, his successor.

II. Edward, who died without issue.

III. Simon, of whom hereafter.

I. Elizabeth, married to John Neville, Lord Latimer.

II. Magdalen, married to Thomas Blenkinsop, Esq., of Helbeck, co. Westmoreland. III. Joane.

On the death of Sir Edward, the family honours and estates devolved upon his eldest son,

Sir WILLIAM MUSGRAVE, Knt., whose name occurs amongst those present at the battle of Solway Moss. He married Jane, daughter of Sir Thomas Curwen, Knt., of Workington, by his wife Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Strickland, Knt., of Sizergh, and had an only child,

Sir RICHARD MUSGRAVE, Knt., who attained his majority and received possession of his lands in 1545. Sir Richard died at Edenhall, September 10th, 1555, and was interred there. He married Anne, daughter of Thomas, first Lord Wharton, and had issue,

I. THOMAS, his heir, who died unmarried in 1567.

II. Eleanor, married to Sir Robert Bowes, Knt., of Aske, co. York, and died without issue.

Sir Richard was succeeded by his father's uncle,

Sir SIMON MUSGRAVE, Knt., who served the office of high sheriff of Cumberland in 1568-9, and in the following year received the honour of knighthood, at Carlisle, from the Earl of Suffolk. He married Julian, daughter of William Elleker, Esq., of Elleker, co. York, and had issue,

I. CHRISTOPHER, who married Jane, daughter of Sir Henry Curwen, Knt., of Bewcastle, and had no issue, leaving to his father, leaving issue,

1. RICHARD, successor to his grandfather.

2. Julian, married to John Skelton, of Arncliffe Castle.

3. Margaret, married to Francis Whitfield, Esq.

II. Thomas, captain of Bewcastle, who married twice, and was ancestor to the Musgraves of Bewcastle.

III. Richard, of Norton Conyers, co. York, who married Jane, daughter of Sir John Dalston, Knt., of Dalston, who had issue two sons,

1. Sir Thomas, who had a son.

Simon, who died without issue.

2. Sir Richard, who died without issue.

IV. John, who married Isabel, daughter of Thomas Musgrave, Esq., of Hayton, and had issue two sons, William and John.

I. Anne, married to Sir Nicholas Curwen, Knt., of Workington.

Sir Simon was succeeded by his grandson,

Sir RICHARD MUSGRAVE, who was made a Knight of the Bath at the coronation of James I., and was advanced to the baronetcy June 29th, 1611. He married Frances, daughter of Philip Lord Wharton, by whom he had issue, PHILIP, his successor.

Mary, who died unmarried.

Sir Richard died at Naples in 1615, and was succeeded by his son,

Sir PHILIP, second baronet. This gentleman, who acquired great renown under the royal banner during the civil wars (at Marston Moor, as governor of Carlisle, at Worcester, and under the heroic Countess of Derby, in the Isle of Man), had a warrant after the Restoration, raising him to the peerage, as Baron Musgrave of Hartley Castle, but the patent was never taken out. He married Julian, daughter of Sir Richard Hutton, Knt., of Goulsborough, in Yorkshire, one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas; by whom he had issue,

I. RICHARD, his successor.

II. Philip, who died unmarried.

III. CHRISTOPHER, of whom hereafter.

IV. William, who died in infancy.

V. Simon, who died without issue.

VI. Thomas, in holy orders, D.D., fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, prebendary of Durham, archdeacon, and afterwards dean of Carlisle. He married, firstly, Mary, daughter of Sir Thomas Harrison, Knt., of Allertorpe, co. York, by whom he had issue,

1. Philip, who died an infant.

2. Margaret.

He married secondly, Anne, daughter of Sir John Cradock, Knt., of Richmond, co. York.

- i. Frances, married to Edward Hutchinson, Esq., of Wickham Abbey, co. York.

Sir Philip died in 1678, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Richard, third baronet, who married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Harrison, Knt., of Allerthorpe, co. York, and had issue,

- i. A son, who died in infancy.
- i. Margaret, who also died in infancy.
- ii. Mary, married to John Davison, Esq., of Blakieston, co. Durham, who died in 1738.

Sir Richard died December 27th, 1687, and was succeeded by his brother,

Sir Christopher, fourth baronet. This gentleman was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, from which he removed to Gray's Inn. After the Restoration he represented Carlisle in Parliament. Charles II. appointed him lieutenant-general of the ordnance, and in the first year of the reign of Queen Anne, he became one of the tellers of the Exchequer. He married, first, Mary, daughter and heir of Sir Andrew Cogan, Bart., by whom he had,

- i. Philip, clerk of the council to James II., married, in 1685, Mary, daughter of George Lord Dartmouth, and left at his decease, in 1689,

- i. CHRISTOPHER, who inherited the title.
 - i. Barbara, married to Thomas Howard, Esq., of Corby Castle.
- ii. Christopher, who succeeded his brother as clerk of the council, died unmarried.
- i. Mary, who died young.

Sir Christopher married, secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Franklin, Knt., of Willesdon, and by her had issue,

- i. John.
- ii. Richard.
- iii. Joseph, M.P. for Cockermouth in 1713.
- iv. Simon, died in the East Indies.
- v. Thomas.
- vi. George, of Chatham, who married Sarah, youngest daughter of Benjamin Rosell, by whom he had three sons.

1. Joseph, who married Jane, eldest daughter of Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall.
2. Thomas.
3. George, died unmarried, 1823.

- i. Elizabeth, married to John Wyneve, Esq., of Brettenham, co. Suffolk.
- ii. Dorothy, married to James Hawley, Esq., of Brentford, co. Middlesex, and had issue.
- iii. Mary. iv. Frances. v. Anne. vi. Barbara.

Sir Christopher died in 1704, and was succeeded by his grandson, Sir Christopher, the fifth baronet, who was educated at Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was M.P. for Carlisle and Westmoreland, and succeeded his uncle as clerk of the council. He married Julia, daughter and heir of Sir John Chardin, Knt., of Kempton Park, co. Middlesex, by whom he had eleven children,

- i. PHILIP, his heir.
- ii. Christopher, a fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford; vicar of Edenhall, D.D.; and afterwards rector of Barking, co. Essex. He married, in 1757, Mrs. Perfect, of Hatton Garden.
- iii. Hans, lieutenant-colonel in the army.
- iv. Chardin, provost of Oriel College, Oxford.

- i. Mary, married to Hugh Lumley, Esq.; and 2ndly to John Pigot, Esq.
- ii. Julia, married to Edward Hasell, Esq., of Dalemmain.
- iii. Barbara, married, 1stly, to John Hogg, Esq., and 2ndly to Chief Baron Idle.
- iv. Anne, married to Henry Aglionby, Esq.
- v. Elizabeth, married, 1stly, to Edward Spragg, Esq.; and secondly to John Johnstone, Esq.
- vi. Charlotte, died unmarried.
- vii. Dorothy, married to the Rev. William Broughton.

Sir Christopher died in 1735, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Philip, the sixth baronet, born 23rd April, 1712. He was chosen knight of the shire for Westmoreland in 1741 and the following year. He married, in 1742, Jane, daughter of John Turton, Esq., of Orgrave, co. Stafford, by whom he had,

- i. JOHN CHARDIN, his successor.
- ii. Christopher, married Elizabeth Anne, daughter and co-heir of the late Lord Archer, and had issue two sons and two daughters,
 1. Christopher. 2. William.
 1. Maria. 2. Harriet.
- i. Jane, married to Joseph Musgrave, Esq., of Kieper.
- ii. Elizabeth, married to Heneage Legge, Esq.
- iii. Charlotte, married to the Rev. Charles Mordaunt, of Massingham.
- iv. Henrietta, married to Sir John Morris, Bart.
- v. Dorothy, who died unmarried.

The baronet's uncle, Sir John Chardin, presented him with Kempton Park, Middlesex, in 1746. He died July 5th, 1795, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir JOHN CHARDIN, the seventh baronet, born January 5th, 1757. This gentleman married, in 1791, Mary, daughter of the late Rev. Sir Edmund Filmer, Bart., of East Sutton-place, Kent, by whom (who died 1838) he had,

- i. PHILIP CHRISTOPHER, his successor.
- ii. CHRISTOPHER JOHN. iii. GEORGE.
- iv. Thomas, born in 1802; died in 1822.
- i. Julia, died in 1815.

Sir John died in 1806, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir Philip, eighth baronet, born July 12th, 1794. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and represented Carlisle in two Parliaments. He entirely rebuilt the family mansion of Edenhall. This gentleman married, in October, 1824, Elizabeth, third daughter of George Fludyer, Esq., of Ayston, by the Lady Mary Fludyer, his wife, daughter of John, ninth Earl of Westmoreland, and left an only daughter, Elizabeth Mary, who died December 3rd, 1844.

Sir Philip died in 1827, and was succeeded by his brother,

The Rev. Sir CHRISTOPHER JOHN, ninth baronet, born August 6th, 1797. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford. He built the lodge and repaired and beautified the parish church of Edenhall, which was then in a decayed state. He married in September, 1835, Mary Anne, daughter of Edward Hasell, Esq., of Dalemmain, and had five daughters,

- i. Georgiana, married July 20th, 1847, to the Hon. Frederick Petre.
- ii. Augusta, married August 27th, 1850, to Lieut.-colonel H. F. Bonham, 10th Hussars.
- iii. Edith, died March 23rd, 1849.
- iv. Harriet, married April 28th, 1851, to Captain Bartolot, of the Royal Dragoons, eldest son of George Bartolot, Esq., of Stopham, Sussex.
- v. Fanny, who died unmarried September 30th, 1853.

Sir Christopher dying without male issue, May 11th, 1834, was succeeded by his brother.

Sir GEORGE, the tenth baronet, born June 14th, 1799, and educated at University College, Oxford. Sir George married, June 20, 1828, Charlotte, daughter of the late Sir James Graham, Bart., of Netterby, and has issue,

- I. PHILIP, born in 1833.
- II. Richard Courtenay, born in 1838.
- I. Caroline.
- II. Agnes.
- III. Sophia.

Creation.—June 29th, 1611.

Arms.—A. six annulets, or, three, two, and one.

Crest.—Two arms in armour, ppr, gauntlets, and grasping an annulet, or.

Motto.—Sans changer.

The village of Edenhall is three and a half miles east north-east of Penrith.

THE CHURCH.

Edenhall church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a neat edifice, consisting of tower, nave, chancel, south porch, and vestry on the north side of the nave. The tower is a beautiful and interesting structure of two stories, crowned with a low stone spire; it has a machiolated battlement, with the parapet projecting over the face of the tower, and the cornice pierced, as in places of defence in troubled times, whence melted lead and stones could be hurled through the openings on the heads of the besieging party below. Before the enclosure of Inglewood Forest and the surrounding country, the church tower was doubtless used as a beacon to the neighbouring hamlets; the remains of a fire-place being visible in the vestry. On the western front, over a square-headed window, is a row of four shields, bearing the arms of Musgrave, Veteripont or Vipont, Stapleton and Hilton; and immediately above them is a niche, which would formerly contain an image of the patron saint of the church. The porch is seated, and has two lancet windows. The nave is open to the roof, and is framed in the Tudor style. The pews are of oak, and the pulpit is beautifully carved. The windows, some of which are square-headed, and others pointed, are filled with stained glass. The west gallery is of oak, and bears upon its front the arms of Musgrave, quartering those of Stapleton and Ward. A Norman arch, with its characteristic ornamentation, separates the nave and chancel. Beneath the arch stands a marble font. The walls of the chancel are wainscotted with oak, and the ceiling is panelled. There is a fine Perpendicular east window, filled with stained glass, some of which has been brought from Germany, and was inserted when the church was repaired and beautified in 1833. Among the communion plate is a massive silver gilt chalice, presented to the church by Sir Christopher Musgrave, the fifth baronet. Within the rails of the communion table is a monumental brass to the memory of Sir William Stapleton and Margaret his wife, daughter and heiress of Nicholas Veteripont of Alston, with the effigies of the knight and his lady. The former is in plate armour, with mail gorget. On his right shoulder is a shield bearing the arms of Veteripont, and on his left are charged the arms of Stapleton. Over the heads of the figures is this inscription:—"Hic jacet Willms Stapleton armig' quodam dns de Edenhall qui obiit xxvi die Augusti A^o dni MCCCC^o lviii. Et Margareta uxor ejus que erat filia et heres quodam Nicholai de Vet'ipont' et dna de Aldeston mor Quor' aiabs ppiet' Deus." In the church are several marble monuments to different members of the Musgrave family. The church, a vicarage, was given by Edward I., about the year 1298 to the priory of St. Mary Carlisle; and in 1368 the prior and canons obtained its appropriation. In 1291 John de Ludam, deacon, was presented to this church by the prior and convent of Carlisle, who assigned to him for his support the whole altarage of the church and a moiety of the land and meadow of Edenhall and four pounds of silver yearly. In 1368, the prior and convent having procured the profits of the church of Edenhall and chapel of Langwathby to be appropriated to themselves, referred the allowance for the supply of both the said cures to be settled by the bishop, and empowered their superior to be their proctor to consent to the same. On the suppression of the religious houses the patronage was transferred to the dean and chapter of Carlisle, the legal successors of the community of St. Mary's. The vicarage is united with that of Langwathby. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas, the benefice is valued at £24 1s. 4d.; in that of Edward II. at £6 13s. 4d.; in the King's Book, with Langwathby, at £17 12s.; and it was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £43 7s. 8d. The united livings are now worth £178 per annum. The parish registers commence in 1558.

Rectors.—Adam de Kirkbride, 1293; John de Ludam, 1299; Sir Adam . . . occurs, 1341; Sir John de Londham, died 1362; Sir John de Mareshall, 1302; Eudo de Ravenstanedale, —.

VICARS.—John de Kirkby, 1368; Robert Goadlyow occurs in 1465; Christopher Blencow occurs 1535; Hugh Sewell, 1560; Alan Scott, 1565; Sir William Smith, 1578; Thomas Mayplett, 1609; Thomas Tailor, —; Simon Green, died 1609; Gilbert Burton, 1609; John Leigh, 1683; George Moon, 1690; Christopher Musgrave, 1743; Joseph Rowland, 1763; Roger Baldwin, 1774; Thomas Watson, 1802; Charles E. Dukinfield, 1833; Belby Porteus, 1840.

Edenhall School, a neat stone building, with master's residence, was erected in 1815, by the late Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart.

CHARITIES.

Gifts of the Musgrave Family.—Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart., in 1677, gave £100, the annual interest of which was to be divided amongst six poor people; and succeeding members of the Musgrave family gave other sums, amounting to £63 4s. 10d. for the same use. This money appears to have been expended about the year 1737 in the purchase of seventeen acres of land at Lazonby. There is also the further sum of £75 secured by a mortgage on the tolls of the road leading from Brough to Eamont Bridge, at four per cent interest. This money arose from different sums given by the Musgrave family; and from £30 which was given by the tenants of Edenhall, being the consideration money for a piece of waste ground purchased of them by Sir Christopher Musgrave. At the time of the enclosure of Inglewood Forest, in 1811, a plot of ground consisting of twenty-five acres four rods and twenty-four perches, was allotted to Sir Philip Musgrave, in trust, for the poor of Edenhall, in respect of the land at Lazonby. The valuation of this allotment by the commissioners, at the time of the enclosure, was, £3 4s. a year.

Williamson's Gift.—An entry in the Edenhall Register states that Mr. John Williamson, who died at Chelsea in 1771, gave £50, the interest to be divided between the schoolmaster and the poor of Edenhall. This money is out at £4 per cent interest, which is distributed by the minister and churchwardens, at Christmas and Midsummer, in small sums, to poor persons of Edenhall, £1 being reserved for the schoolmaster.

Sir John C. Musgrave's Gift.—Sir John C. Musgrave, who died in 1806, left £50 to be added to the fund of the poor of Edenhall.

Lady Musgrave's Bequest.—Mary Dowager Lady Musgrave, in 1838, left £100 for the benefit of the school of Edenhall.

Some celts, or stone hatchets, have been dug up at a place near the village of Edenhall, called Oxhouse Oaks. About half a mile from Edenhall, near the farm-house called Brammeray, are two caves in the rocks overhanging the river Eamont, supposed to have been made first for a hermitage, or as a secure retreat in times of danger.

GREYSTOKE PARISH.

GREYSTOKE parish is bounded on the north by the parish of Castle Sowerby, on the west by the parishes of Caldbeck and Crosthwaite, on the south by the county of Cumberland, and on the east by the parishes of Dacre and Skelton. It is a fertile and picturesque district, about twelve miles in length from north to south, and ten in breadth from east to west. Its soil is generally a light red loam, with strong red clay in some parts, and in other places a mixture of gravel and limestone. On the eastern side of the parish there are large deposits of limestone and freestone; the southern and western sides are mountains of primitive rock. Grouse abound on the mountains and moors, and black cock, pheasants, partridges, and hares in the lower grounds. The extensive parks of Greystoke and Gowbarrow abound with fallow and red deer, and here is also a herd of wild cattle. Owing to the extensive planting carried out by the fourteenth Duke of Norfolk, the parish has become well wooded, and now presents a succession of beautiful scenes, where wood and water, hill and dale, unite their charms in the most pleasing combination. Greystoke parish comprises the townships of Greystoke, Berrier and Murrah, Little Blencow, Bowscale, Hutton John, Hutton Roof, Hutton Soil, Johnby, Motherby and Gill, and the chaperies of Matteredale, Mungrisdale, Threlkeld, and Watermillock. The inhabitants attend the Penrith and Keswick markets.

THE BARONY OF GREYSTOKE.

The barony comprehends all that part of Cumberland on the south side of the forest of Inglewood between the seigniory of Penrith and the manor of Castlerigg, near Keswick, and contains an area comprehending the parishes of Greystoke, Dacre, and part of Crosthwaite, and the manors of Greystoke, Greenthwaite, Johnby, Thwaite, Blencow, Newbiggin and Stainton; Motherby, Watermillock, Matteredale, Mungrisdale, Berrier and Murrah, Hutton Soil, Dacre, Threlkeld, and part of Castlerigg. It is held of the king in capite by the service of one entire barony, rendering £4 yearly at the fairs of Carlisle, by suit at the County Court monthly, and serving the king in person against Scotland. The customary tenants pay a 20d. fine on the death of lord or tenant, and a 30d. fine on alienation. In a record of the 44th Elizabeth, the manors of Motherby, Matteredale, Grisdale, Watermillock, Berrier and Murrah, are mentioned as appendages of the manor of Greystoke. The barony of Greystoke has passed through the families of Greystoke, Grimesthorpe, and Dacre, from whom it came to the Howards. The succession and family history of those lines will be found in the following account of the barons of Greystoke:—

Words of the Barony of Greystoke.

FIRST HOUSE.

BARONS DE THURNE.

LYNDEL, first baron of Greystoke, who acquired the lordship by gift of Ranulph de Meschines, earl of Cumberland; his posterity were surnamed de Greystoke. Lynelph had issue,

1. PHORSE, his successor.
- ii. Odard, to whom Waltheof, first baron of Alledale below Derwent granted Tallantire and Castlebigg, &c., ancestor of the family of Tallantire of Cumberland.
- iii. Adam, to whom the said Waltheof granted the manors of Udale and Gilerax, co. Cumberland, which afterwards descended by a daughter and heiress to the family of Bonekill.

PHORSE DE GREYSTOKE, second baron of Greystoke, unto whom King Henry II. confirmed the grant of the barony.

Ivo DE GREYSTOKE, third baron of Greystoke, son and heir of Phorse.

WALTER DE GREYSTOKE, fourth baron of Greystoke, son and heir of Ivo; he had issue,

1. RANULPH, his successor.
1. Alice de Greystoke, married to Henry Fitz-Hugh, lord of Ravensworth, co. Durham.

RANULPH DE GREYSTOKE, fifth baron of Greystoke. He died in the 12th King John, and was succeeded by his son, WILLIAM DE GREYSTOKE, sixth baron of Greystoke, died — leaving issue Thomas, his son and heir, then under age, the wardship of whom was granted to Robert de Veteripont, by Henry II.

THOMAS DE GREYSTOKE, seventh baron of Greystoke, son and heir, who was of full age, and had livery of his lands 1st Henry III. He obtained a charter from the same king for a weekly market on Sunday, according to Dugdale (Nicolson and Burn say Saturday), at his manor of Greystoke; and also for a fair three days yearly, to commence on the eve of the translation of St. Edward. He married Christian, daughter of Robert de Veteripont, baron of Westmoreland, and had issue,

1. ROBERT, his successor.
- ii. WILLIAM, who succeeded his brother Robert.
- iii. Thomas, who had issue,
 1. Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Pickering, living 1st Edward III.
 2. Alice, who had a son, Peter Buckard, living 1st Edward III.
- i. Joan de Greystoke, married to William Fitz-Ralph, lord of Grimsthorpe, co. Lincoln, by whom she had issue,

1. William Fitz-Ralph, who had a son,

Ralph Fitz-William, who succeeded John, tenth baron, in the barony of Greystoke, by settlement 1300.

ROBERT DE GREYSTOKE, eldest son and heir, succeeded his father as eighth baron of Greystoke. He had livery of his lands in the 31st Henry III., and dying about 1252, without issue, was succeeded by his brother,

WILLIAM DE GREYSTOKE, ninth baron of Greystoke, who married Mary, eldest daughter and co-heiress of Roger de Merly, lord of the barony of Morpeth and other large possessions in Northumberland, a moiety of which, by this marriage, came into the Greystoke family. He died in the 17th Edward I. anno 1280, leaving issue,

1. Joan, his successor.
- ii. William.
1. Margaret, married to Sir Robert Delaval.

BARONS DE WHIT.

JOHN DE GREYSTOKE, baron of Greystoke and Morpeth, was 25 years of age at the death of his father. Lord Greystoke was summoned to Parliament by writ from 1295 to 1305. He died in 1306, without issue, bequeathing his estates to his cousin, Ralph Fitz-William, son and heir of William Fitz-Ralph, lord of Grimsthorpe, co. Lincoln, by his lady Joan de Greystoke. He was buried in the chapel of the church of Greystoke.

SECOND HOUSE.

RALPH FITZ-WILLIAM, succeeded by settlement to the lordship of Greystoke, on the death of his cousin John, tenth baron. He was present at the siege of Carlverock in the 28th Edward I.; made governor of Berwick-upon-Tweed; was joined with Lord Mowbray and others in the wardenship of the marches; and in the 8th Edward II. was appointed governor of Carlisle. He married Margery, daughter and co-heir of Hugh de Bolsbeck, and widow of Nicholas de Corbet; by whom he had issue two sons,

- i. William, who died without issue in his father's lifetime.
- ii. ROBERT, his successor.

This baron was regularly summoned to Parliament from the 28th Edward I. to the 9th Edward II. He died "an aged man," says Dugdale, about the feast of All Saints, 1316, and was buried in the abbey of Nesham, in co. Durham.

ROBERT FITZ-RALPH, son and heir. He married Elizabeth, daughter of — Neville, of Stainton, in Lincolnshire, by whom he had issue, RALPH, his successor, who assumed the surname of Greystoke.

This baron was never summoned to Parliament, his death occurring the year following that of his father, viz., 10th Edward II. (1317), at his castle of Hilderskelle, now Castle Howard, in Yorkshire. By an inquisition taken at the city of Carlisle on Monday next before the feast of St. Barnabas, 1317, the jurors find that Robert, son of Ralph de Greystoke died seised of the manor of Greystoke, with the appurtenances, holden of the king in capite by homage and the service of £4 per annum for cornage: that the said manor is worth by the year, in all issues, at this time, £62 13s. 0d. and no more, because it is destroyed by the Scots; but before these times, in time of peace, it was usually worth in all issues 200 marks.

RALPH FITZ-ROBERT, son and heir of Robert; he assumed the surname of Greystoke. He married Alice, daughter of Hugh Lord Audley, and had issue,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Baron Greystoke was summoned to Parliament, from 15th May, 14th Edward II. (1321) to 17th September, 10th Edward II. (1322), by writ addressed "Ralph de Graytok." He died at Gateshead, co. Durham, 3rd July, 1323, and was interred in the abbey of Newminster.

WILLIAM DE GREYSTOKE, son and heir of Ralph, was about two years of age at the time of his father's death, and, in 1342, was of full age, and had livery of all his lands. In 1353 he had a licence to castellate his manor house at Greystoke. He bequeathed to the collegiate church of Greystoke a messuage and seven acres of land in the adjoining village of Newbiggin, besides the advowson of the church of Greystoke. Lord Greystoke was twice married, first to Lucy, daughter of Thomas Baron Lucy of Cockermonth, from whom he was divorced. He married secondly, Joane, daughter of Henry Fitz-Hugh, Lord of Ravensworth, by whom he had issue,

- i. Ralph, his successor.
- ii. William, who went as an hostage for his brother, Ralph Lord Greystoke, to the castle of Dunbar, died of a fever and was buried there; two years afterwards his body was disinterred, and buried in the abbey of Newminster in Northumberland.
- iii. Robert.
- iv. Alice, married to Sir Robert de Harrington.

Lord Greystoke was summoned to Parliament from 1348 to 1357, latterly by writ addressed to "Willelmus Baroni de Greystok." He departed this life July 10, 1359, at the Castle of Brancepeth, the seat of Ralph Lord Neville, and was buried with great pomp and solemnity in the choir of the collegiate church of Greystoke, mass being said on the occasion by Gilbert de Welton, bishop of Carlisle, and the funeral attended by Ralph Lord Neville, Thomas de Lucy, baron of Cockermonth, Roger Lord Clifford of Appleby Castle, Henry le Scrope, and Thomas Musgrave, senior, knights; John de Horneastle, prior of Carlisle, and the abbots of Holme Cultram and Shap.

RALPH BARON GREYSTOKE, eldest son and heir of William, was 21 years old in 48th Edward III. and had lively of all his lands. He was governor of the castle of Lochmaben, and in the commission for guarding the West Marches. He married Catharine, daughter of Roger Lord Clifford, and by her had issue,

- i. John, his successor.
- ii. Maud, married to Eudo Baron Welles.

Lord Greystoke was summoned to Parliament from 28th December, 49th Edward III. (1375) to 5th October, 5th Henry V. (1417), by writ addressed "Radulfo Baroni de Greystok," and died on the 6th day of April, 1417, in the 64th year of his age. By an inquisition after his death, it was found that, on the day he died, he held, among other things, the manor of Grimsthorpe and Hilderskelle, in capite of the crown, as of the honour of Chester, by the service of carrying a sword before the Earl of Chester, and by certain military services.

JOHN BARON GREYSTOKE was 28 years of age at the time of his father's death. By his will, dated 10th July, 1436, he ordered his body to be buried in the collegiate church of Greystoke, and bequeathed to that church his best horse as a mortuary, and all his habiliments of war, consisting of coat armour, pennon, cyron, &c. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter and co-heiress of Sir Robert Ferrers, Knt, only son and heir of Robert Baron Ferrers of Wemme, in the county of Shropshire, by his lady Elizabeth, daughter and sole heir of William Boteler, baron of Oversley and Wemme, and by her had issue,

- i. Ralph, his successor.
- ii. Thomas.
- iii. Richard.
- iv. William.
- v. Elizabeth, married to Roger Thornton, Esq., of Nether-Witton Castle, co. Northumberland, son and heir of Roger Thornton, the magnificent mayor of Newcastle. She died on the eve of St. Catherine the Virgin, 24th November, 1440.
- vi. Joane, married to John Baron Darcy.

Lord Greystoke was summoned to Parliament from 24th August, 7th Henry V. (1419) to 5th July, 13th Henry VI. (1435), by writ addressed "Johanni Baroni de Greystok, Chlr." He died at his manor-house at Thingdone, in Northamptonshire, August 8th, 1436.

RALPH BARON GREYSTOKE succeeded, on the death of his father in 1436, being then 22 years of age. He was employed in frequent commissions on the affairs between England and Scotland respecting the Borders. He married Elizabeth fourth daughter of William Lord Fitz-Hugh of Ravensworth, by whom he had issue,

Sir Robert Greystoke, Knt., only son, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Edmund Grey, fourth Baron Grey de Ruthyn, lord high treasurer of England and afterwards Earl of Kent. Sir Robert died June 17th, 1483, in the lifetime of his father, leaving issue an only daughter, ELIZABETH GREYSTOKE, who succeeded her grandfather in the Barony of Greystoke.

Lord Greystoke was summoned to Parliament from 15th Henry VI. (1436) to 18th Henry VI. (1459), and from 20th Henry VI. (1441) to 1st Henry VII. (1485). He died June 1st, 1487. By an inquisition held after his death, it was found that he died on Friday next after the feast of Pentecost, in the 2nd year of King Henry VII. He was succeeded by Elizabeth his grand-daughter and heiress.

ELIZABETH GREYSTOKE, Baroness Greystoke and Wemme, was a minor at the time of her father's death. In 1506, as a cousin and heir to Ralph Baron Greystoke, her grandfather, she had special livery of all her lands. Baroness Greystoke married Thomas Baron Dacre of Gilsland, K.G. By this marriage the Baron of Greystoke became united with that of Gilsland.

THIRD HOUSE: DACRE, BARONS OF GREYSTOKE.

THOMAS BARON DACRE of Gilsland, K.G., and in right of Lady Elizabeth Greystoke, his wife, Baron of Greystoke. By Lady Elizabeth he had issue,

- i. William, his successor.
- ii. Humphrey.
- iii. Mary, married to Francis Earl of Shrewsbury.
- iv. Margaret, married to Henry Lord Scrope of Bolton.
- v. Jane.

Lord Dacre was summoned to Parliament from the 1st to the 7th year of Henry VIII. He died 24th October, 1525. Lady Elizabeth, his wife, died 13th August, 1516.

WILLIAM BARON OF GILSLAND, Greystoke, and Wemme. King Edward VI. in 1549, appointed him governor of the castle of Carlisle, and warden of the West Marches, in one or both of which he was occasionally continued by Queens Mary and Elizabeth. He married Elizabeth, fifth daughter of George Talbot, fourth Earl of Shrewsbury, K.G., by whom he had issue,

- i. Thomas, his successor.
- ii. Leonard.
- iii. Edward.
- iv. Francis Dacre of Crofton. He married a daughter of — Radcliffe of — co. Cumberland, and left issue, Randal, who was buried in the church of Greystoke in 1634.

- v. Magdalen, married to Anthony Browne, viscount Montague.
- vi. Eleanor, married to Henry Jernegan, Esq.
- vii. Mary, married to Alexander Culpeper, Esq.
- viii. Dorothy, married to Sir Thomas Windsor, Knt.
- v. Anne, married at Kirkoswald Castle, Henry, second earl of Cumberland.

Lord Dacre was summoned to Parliament from 21st Henry VIII.

to 3rd Philip and Mary. He died 12th November, and was buried on the 14th December, 1564.

THOMAS Baron of Greystoke and Gilsland, eldest son and heir of William, succeeded to the title and inheritance on the death of his father. He had issue, GEORGE, his successor, and three daughters, Anne, Mary, and Elizabeth.

GEORGE Baron of Greystoke and Gilsland, son and heir of Thomas. By his untimely death, May 17th, 1560, his three sisters became his co-heiresses:—

1. ANNE, eldest sister and co-heir of Greystoke and Gilsland, married Philip Howard, earl of Arundel, of whom hereafter as Lord Greystoke.
2. MARY, second sister and co-heir of Greystoke and Gilsland, married Thomas Howard of Walden, first earl of Suffolk, eldest son of Thomas, fourth Duke of Norfolk, by his second wife, Margaret, daughter and sole heir of Thomas Lord Audley of Walden, in Essex, and chancellor of England. This Mary died without issue.
3. ELIZABETH DACRE, third sister and co-heir of Greystoke and Gilsland, married Lord William Howard, second son of Thomas, fourth Duke of Norfolk, by Margaret, his second wife. He had the Gilsland moiety of the estate of his wife's ancestors, settled at Naworth Castle, and was ancestor of the Howards, earls of Carlisle, and of the Howards of Corby Castle, co. Cumberland.

FOURTH HOUSE: HOWARDS, BARONS OF GREYSTOKE.

PHILIP HOWARD, Earl of Arundel, eldest son of Thomas, fourth Duke of Norfolk, by his first duchess Mary, daughter and heiress of Henry Fitzalan, Earl of Arundel. He married Anne, sister and co-heiress of George Lord Dacre, by which marriage he acquired the barony of Greystoke. Being attainted in 1590, he died a prisoner in the Tower in 1595, leaving a son and heir,

THOMAS, Earl of Arundel, born July 7th, 1592, who, being deprived by his father's attainder of the honours and the greatest part of the estates of his family, had only the title of Lord Maltravers, by courtesy, during Queen Elizabeth's reign; but was restored, by act of Parliament, in the 1st year of James I. (1603) to all such titles of honour and precedence as Philip Earl of Arundel lost by his attainder, as also to the honour, estate, and dignity of Earl of Surrey. His lordship married, in 1606, Lady Alethea Talbot, daughter and eventually sole heir of Gilbert, seventh Earl of Shrewsbury, and had issue,

- i. James Lord Mowbray and Maltravers, K.B., died unmarried in 1624.
- ii. HENRY FREDERICK, his successor.
- iii. William, K.B., married to Mary, sister to Henry, 12th Lord Stafford.

The earl died October 4th, 1646, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

HENRY FREDERICK, Earl of Arundel, &c., born in 1608, who had been summoned to Parliament previously as Baron Mowbray. His lordship married, in 1626, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Esme Stuart, Earl of March, afterward Duke of Lennox, and had issue,

- i. THOMAS, his successor.
- ii. Henry, who succeeded his brother.
- iii. Philip, a cardinal, lord almoner to Catherine, queen consort of Charles II., born in 1629; died 1694.

iv. Charles of Greystoke.

v. Talbot, died unmarried.

vi. Edward, died unmarried.

vii. Francis, died unmarried.

viii. Bernard, who married Katherine, second daughter and co-heir of George Tattershall, Esq., of Finchampstead, co. Berks, and widow of Sir Richard Laddford, and was succeeded in 1717 by his only son, Bernard Howard, who married Anne, daughter of Christopher Layer, lord Trevelian, and was father of Henry Howard, Esq., of Glessop, who married, October 30th, 1764, Juliana, second daughter of Sir William Molyneux, Bart., of Walden, Notts, and dying November 11th, 1787, left three sons, with two daughters, viz:—

1. BERNARD EDWARD, succeeded as twelfth Duke of Norfolk.
2. Henry Thomas, born October 7th, 1766, who assumed, in 1812, the additional surname of Molyneux, and in 1817, that of Howard, in addition to Howard Molyneux, in which year he was granted the rank and precedence of a duke's younger son. He married September 12th, 1801, Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Long, Esq., chief-judge of the Vice Admiralty Court, Jamaica, and dying June 17th, 1834, left issue by her (who died May 24th, 1834), Henry, now of Greystoke.

Henrietta Anne, married, in 1830, to Henry John George, third Earl of Carnarvon, who died in 1849.

Isabella Catherine, married, in 1829, to the Earl of Suffolk.

Charlotte Juliana Jane, married in 1831, to James Wentworth Butler, Esq., M.P., of Downes, co. Devon, and died in 1850.

Juliana Barbara, married, in 1831, to Sir John Ogilvy, Bart., and died 1833.

3. Edward Charles, born May 28th, 1774, married Miss Elizabeth Maycock, by whom (who died in January, 1811) he left issue.

1. Mary, married to the tenth Lord Petre, and died in 1843.

2. Juliana Barbara, married to Robert Edward, ninth Lord Petre; died in 1833.

His lordship died April 7th, 1652, and was succeeded in his Greystoke estates by his fourth son,

CHARLES HOWARD, Esq., who married Mary, daughter and co-heir of George Tattershall, Esq., of Finchampstead, co. Berks; and by her (who died in 1695) had (with a younger son, Henry, who died in youth) his heir,

CHARLES HOWARD, Esq., of Greystoke, who married Mary, daughter and co-heir of John Aylward, Esq., co. Waterford, and had, with three daughters, who all died unmarried, three sons, viz:

i. Henry, who died unmarried.

ii. CHARLES, who subsequently became tenth Duke of Norfolk.

iii. Thomas, who died unmarried.

Mr. Howard died June 10th, 1720, and was succeeded by his second son,

CHARLES HOWARD, Esq., of Greystoke, who, on the demise of Edward, the ninth Duke of Norfolk, in 1777, without issue, became tenth Duke of Norfolk. He married in 1739 Katherine, daughter and co-heir of John Brockholes, Esq., of Cloughton, co. Lancaster, and dying August 31st, 1780, was succeeded by his only son,

CHARLES HOWARD, Esq., of Greystoke, who thus became eleventh Duke of Norfolk. He was born March 15th, 1746, and married first in August, 1767, Marian, only daughter and heir of John Coppinger, Esq., of Ballyvolane, co. Cork, which lady died without issue in 1768; and secondly in 1771, Frances, daughter and sole heir of Charles Fitz-Roy Seadmore, Esq., of Holme Lacy, co. Hereford, but had no issue. His grace died

December 16th, 1815, having bequeathed by will his estates at Greystoke to

HENRY HOWARD, Esq., the only son of Lord Henry Molyneux Howard, youngest brother of Bernard Edward, twelfth Duke of Norfolk. Mr. Howard is a justice of the peace and deputy-lieutenant. He served the office of high sheriff of Cumberland in 1834, was M.P. for Steyning in 1824, and for Shoreham from 1826 to 1832. He was born July 25th, 1802, married December 6th 1840, Charlotte Caroline Georgiana, eldest daughter of Henry Lawes Long, Esq., of Hampton Lodge, Surrey, by Lady Catherine his wife, sister of Horatio, third Earl of Orford, and has issue,

1. Henry Charles, born September 17th, 1850.
2. Edward Stafford, born November 29th, 1851.
3. Robert Mowbray, born May 23d, 1854.
4. Elizabeth Catherine. 5. Maud Isabel.

Arms.—Guz., on a bend, between six cross-crosslets, Orbs, arg., an escutcheon, or, charged with a demi lion rampant, pierced through the mouth with an arrow, within a double tressure, flory, counter flory, of the first, quartering, BROTHERTON, WARREN, MOWBRAY, DACRE, and GREYSTOKE.

Crest.—On a chapeau, gu., turned up, erm., a lion, statant guardant, the tail extended, or, gorged with a dual coronet, arg.

Motto.—Sola virtus invicta.

Greystoke Castle, the seat of Henry Howard, Esq., formerly the property of the Dukes of Norfolk, who still enjoy the dignity of baron of Greystoke, stands in a park of 5,000 acres. The present mansion was erected within the last 100 years, near the site of the ancient castle, which, being garrisoned for the king in 1648, was taken and destroyed by a detachment of the Parliamentary army. It is built in an exaggerated style of massiveness, but late improvements have caused it to assume an appearance of considerable elegance. Views of the distant lake mountains are commanded from the windows, and the grounds adjacent to the mansion are well laid out. In the hall there hangs some "armour of the invincible knights of old," emblazoned shields, and several pairs of horns. One pair is of enormous magnitude, and weighs forty-two pounds. There is also in the hall a large painting, by Lonsdale, of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, in which several family portraits are introduced. A balustrading on one side separates the hall from the long gallery, in which are placed many ancient family portraits. The library contains a chimney-piece of richly carved oak. Two of the principal designs are Sampson and Delilah, and Jephthah and his Daughter, each having appropriate legends. Amongst the paintings the following may be enumerated as of peculiar interest:—Erasmus and Archbishop Warham, both by Holbein; John Duke of Norfolk, who was killed on Bosworth Field, the subject of the lines,—

"Jocky of Norfolk, be not so bold,
For Dickon thy master is bought and sold."

Thomas, third Duke of Norfolk, lord high treasurer to Henry VIII.; Ann Dacre, countess of Arundel, who brought Greystoke from the Dacres to the Howards; Elizabeth, daughter to the last Duke of Lennox, and wife of Henry Frederick Earl of Arundel; Henry Earl of Arundel and his Countess, the Lady Alatheia Talbot; Henry, sixth Duke of Norfolk, when a boy, by Vandyke; Lady Catherine Howard, daughter of Henry Frederick Earl of Arundel, by Vandyke; James I.; Charles I., by Mytens; Charles II. and James II.; Prince Charles Edward, in a Highland costume; Mary Queen of Scots, two pictures, one in a crimson dress, the other in mourning; View of Venice, by Canaletti; two views of Rome, by Wilson; a piece of Needlework, by Mary Queen of Scots, representing the Crucifixion, will be inspected with interest.

GREYSTOKE.

The area of Greystoke township is 4,538 acres, and its rateable value £1,885 13s. 1½d. The population in 1801 was 318; in 1811, 243; in 1821, 255; in 1831, 337; in 1841, 364, and in 1851, 345.

The village of Greystoke is pleasantly situated near the source of the river Peterilf, five miles west-by-north of Penrith, and in the neighbourhood of Greystoke Castle and Park.

THE CHURCH.

Greystoke church is a spacious structure, in the Perpendicular style, dedicated to St. Andrew, and consists of chancel and nave, with north and south aisles. The chancel was rebuilt in 1848 by Henry Howard, Esq., and the Rev. Henry Askew; the tower was rebuilt a few years previously at the expense of the parishioners, and in 1817 and 1818 the body of the church underwent considerable repair. There are four very ancient bells with inscriptions round them. The eastern window is filled with ancient painted glass, supposed to represent passages from the life of St. Andrew. The tracery of the upper part of the window contains modern arms, viz.:—The royal arms and those of the diocese at the top, and then the arms of the families of Dacre, Howard, Greystoke, Grimesthorpe, Percy, and Askew. A window on the south side of the chancel is also filled with ancient glass. There are moreover two modern windows, containing respectively the arms of different members of the Howard family, and of ancient families of the parish. The chancel stalls are all furnished with "misereres," some of which are very curiously carved. The inscription round the roof of the chancel, mentioned in "Hutchinson's Cumberland," was removed when the chancel was restored. One of the old altar stones, marked, as usual, with five crosses, is inserted in the floor at the west end of the church. At the eastern end of the south aisle is a brass, bearing the inscription, "Of your chaite pray for the soule of Rycharde Newport that was buried under this stone and deptyd the viijth day of August in the year of our lorde God mccccli, whose soule Jhu pdon." There are also the following inscriptions, "Of your charity pray for ye soule of Wenefride Newport whose bones lyeth under this stone which deptyd the ix day of Decembr Anno Dni m.c.cccxlvii whose soul Jhu perdon." "Under this stone lyeth Willm Bewley and Esabell Whitlay his daughter, which Esabell deptyd ye v daye of february an^e dni m^e v^e xliij, on whose soule Jhu have mey. Amen." Under a seat near the reading desk, "Of your charite pray for y soules of James Morisby and Margaret his wyf, on whose soules Jhu have mey. amen." In the chancel, on a brass inserted in a blue slate slab, "Hic jacent corpora m^{re} Thome Eglisfelde x Walteri Redman, veritatis p^{re}ssoris quada huius collegii p^{re}positor qⁱ Walter obit iiii die Novebris Aⁿ dni mccc^eix^e Quor aiabis p^{re}cietur Deus." On the pavement there are two incised slabs within the communion rails; one at the north end of the communion table, consists of a cross, the head of which is broken; on the stem of the cross is hung a shield charged with the arms of Old Greystoke, and on one side is a sword. The inscription runs thus:—"Iohes : Codam : Baro : De : Graystok." At the south end of the communion table is a slab, on which is carved a cross and a pair of shears. Inserted in the east wall of the churchyard is a slab, carved with a florid cross and pair of shears. On the floor of the south aisle is a brass plate bearing this inscription:—"Milo Haltonvs lviii annatis adressor comitatus Cymbr eivsdemq vicecomes X liberis beatus evris reip. famili avq pressvs perpetvum vtriq desiderandvs transitvs exemplvm praeavit. XVII. Kal. Ap. Cl^oId^oCLII." On the floor is a large marble tombstone, with a brass plate, inscribed as follows:—"Icy gist William le bone Baron de Graystok plys veillieant, noble et courtoys chivalier de sa pais en son temps Quy murult le x jour de July l'an de grace Mill.CCCLIX. Alme de guy Dieu eyt pete and mercy. Amen." On the floor at the east end of the south aisle is a brass plate in a tombstone, inscribed—"Orate pro aia Johannis Whelpdale Legum Doctoris, Collegij de Graystock Magistri et Rectoris de Caldbeck, qui obiit vii^o July, A.D. 1526." The church of Greystoke is rectorial. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas, the rectory was taxed at £120; in the reign of Edward II. at £20; and in the King's Book it is valued at £40 7s. 8½d. This church seems to have been made collegiate at a very early period. In the year 1358 William de Greystoke, "for the health of his soul," gave to the church of Greystoke one message and seven acres of land, at Newbiggin, and also the advowson of the parish church of Greystoke. In the following year Bishop Welton confirmed this grant to the collegiate body, which appears to have consisted of one master and six chaplains. In the year 1377, on the petition of Ralph Greystoke, setting forth that the income of the rectory is very considerable, and the cure improperly supplied, the bishop issued a commission of inquiry. The commissioners returned that the yearly revenue of the rectory was about £100, that after deductions had been made, there would be a clear annual income of £80; and they also report that there are chapels in the parish, one at Watermillock and one at Threlkeld, each having a chaplain. Two years later, in 1379, another commission of inquiry, to the same purpose, was made, and it was recommended that more clergymen should be attached to the parish church, to attend to the spiritual necessities of so large a parish. In 1382 the church seems to have been greatly in need of repair, and it was proposed to effect them at the charge of the parishioners, but the inhabitants of Threlkeld and Watermillock refused to contribute their share of the expense until threatened with the penalty of excommunication by the bishop. In the same year, at the instance of Ralph Lord Greystoke, another commission of inquiry was instituted, and it was found that the revenues of the church were sufficient to maintain "two chaplains, the parish priest, and five other priests beside." The report of the commission was followed by an application to the pope by Ralph Lord Greystoke, for a licence to make the church of Greystoke collegiate. His holiness complied with the baron's request, and instructed his legate, Alexander Neville, archbishop of York, to erect, at Greystoke, a college of secular priests, to be presided over by a provost or master. At the same time, six chantries were founded in the church, and a priest appointed to each. The chantries were respectively dedicated to St. Andrew, St. Mary, St. John the Baptist, St. Katherine, St. Thomas à Becket, and St. Peter. The chaplains of these chantries were all presented by Ralph Lord Greystoke, and, at their installation, were obliged to take the oath of canonical obedience to the Bishop of Carlisle. Dugdale tells us that, in 1436, John de Greystoke gave (by will) his best horse for a mortuary, and his body to be buried in the collegiate church of Greystoke. Thomas Lord Dacre, in a letter to Cardinal Wolsey, dated Kirkoswald, August 23rd, 1516, says, "The viij of this moneth, I sent into Scotlande the M^r of the college of Graistok with such oder persons as I nominated to your grace in the quenes commission for reysing and leveing of her conjuncts feoffment, and for receyving of her plate and jewells according to the said last recesse made by the ambassadors of Scotlande." At the Reformation, Greystoke College underwent the fate of the other collegiate churches, chantries, &c. of England, "at which time," says Nicolson and Burn, "the revenues of the several chantries aforesaid in this church were twenty nobles a year to each. Afterwards it was disputed whether the church did continue rectorial, or the rectory and profits thereof became vested in the crown by the said dissolution. For the incumbent it was alleged that he was possessed by presentation, admission, institution, and induction. That the church was indeed made collegiate, but that it was by the pope's authority only: that they had no common seal, and therefore were not a legal corporation; and judgment was given against the king, and the church continued rectorial and parochial. Judge Dyer, who reports this case, seems to lay stress upon the want of a common seal. Lord Coke lays the stress upon its being made collegiate by the pope's authority only, without the king's assent; either of them sufficient arguments of the invalidity of the establishment." Bishop Nicolson tells us that, "Parson Dacre [the first rector subsequent to the dissolution of the collegiate body] converted the college into a dwelling-house." The parish registers commence in the first year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, 1558-9. The advowson of the rectory was long attached to the barony of Greystoke. It was sold by Charles Howard, Esq., of Greystoke, to Adam Askew, Esq., of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, from whom it has descended to Henry Askew, Esq., of Conishead Priory, the present patron. The benefice is worth nearly £700 a year.

RECTORS.—Richard de Morpeth, 1502; Ralph de Erghorne, 1514; Sir Richard de Hutton Roof.

PROVOSTS AND RECTORS.—Sir Richard de Hutton Roof, —; John de Herinthorp, 1365; Sir John de Claston occurs in 1379; Gilbert Bawett, 1382; Adam de Aglionby occurs 1420; Thomas Eaglesfield occurs 1440; Richard Wryght, —; Walter Redman occurs 1507; William Husband occurs 1518; Thomas Bowerbank occurs 1520; John Whelpdale occurs 1525; John Dacre, 15—.

RECTORS.—John Dacre, 15—, previously provost, died 1567; Sir Simon Mosse, 1567; Edwd. Hansby, 1568; Hugh Thornly, 1595; Leonard Lowther, 1597; Henry Robinson occurs 1616; Jerome Waterhouse, —; William Pettie, 1633; William Morland, 1639; — West, about 1650; Richard Gilpin, 165—; Wm. Morland, restored, 1660; Alan Smallwood, 1663; Richard Fowke, 1696; Thomas Gibbon, 1692; Thomas Bolton, 1717; Edmund Law, 1716; Hugh Moises, 1788; Henry Askew, 1798; Henry Percy, 1852.

¹ Ejected by Sir Arthur Haszlerigg and others.

The old rectory, or college, was partially pulled down at the time the new one was built, and was finally razed in the year 1858. The present rectory was built about forty years ago. It is a large, plain, substantial house, without any architectural pretensions.

The male and female schools in the village of Greystoke are chiefly supported by annual subscriptions, the subscribers having the privilege of placing a number of children in the schools at half the usual charge.

CHARITIES.

Thompson's Charity.—Thomas Thompson, in the year 1740, left to the churchwardens and overseers of Motherby, Gill, and Greystoke, the sum of £20, the interest to be paid yearly to the poor of those places on the 30th of January, at their discretion.

Townships of Greystoke and Johnby.—Unthank Estate.—Barbara Relf, in 1727, left £50, the interest thereof to be equally divided amongst the poor of Greystoke and Johnby. This £50, together with £20 left by Mable Halton to the poor of Greystoke only, was laid out in the purchase of an estate at Unthank, in the parish of Skelton, stated at that time to contain seven and a half acres. Since the purchase of this estate, a considerable addition appears to have been made to it by an allotment upon an enclosure, as it now contains upwards of twelve acres. The rent is distributed amongst poor persons of Greystoke and of Johnby, who are not in the receipt of parochial relief.

Dorothy Halton's Charity.—Dorothy Halton, by will, dated April 13th, bequeathed to the overseers of the township of Johnby £20, for the benefit of the poor children of the said township, the yearly interest to be paid to the schoolmaster of Greystoke, for teaching poor children of Johnby only, whose parents should not be able to pay for their learning. She also bequeathed £20 to the overseers of Greystoke and Johnby, for the poor of the said townships, the interest to be equally divided and distributed on St. Thomas's Day annually.

Townships of Greystoke and Little Blencowe.—Troutbeck's Charity.—Miss Ann Troutbeck, in 1815, bequeathed the sum of £40, the interest thereof to be divided among the poor of Little Blencowe and Greystoke.

Township of Greystoke.—Morland's Charity.—The Rev. William Morland, rector of Greystoke, in 1663, left £20, the interest thereof to be divided amongst the poor of Greystoke only yearly, on the 21st December, at the discretion of the rector and churchwardens.

BENRIER AND MURRAH.

This township comprises an area of 2,604 acres, and its rateable value was £907 5s. In 1801 it contained 136 inhabitants; in 1811, 120; in 1821, 128; in 1831, 113; in 1841, 127; and in 1851, 134, who are principally resident in the villages of Berrier and Murrah. The manorial rights are vested in Henry Howard, Esq., who is also the principal landowner, but Miss Sutton, W. A. Bushby, Esq., and others, have estates here. The commons were enclosed about the year 1800, and allotted to the landowners and the lord of the manor. The tithes have been commuted for £29.

The village of Berrier is about eight miles west of Penrith.

Murrah is a small hamlet of detached houses, nine miles west-by-north of Penrith.

CHARITY.

Mary Jack's Bequest.—Mary Jack, by will, dated November 30th, 1799, left £200, the interest of which she directed to be applied to the use of a mistress for teaching the girls of Berrier, Whitbarrow, and Murrah reading, writing, knitting, and sewing. Subsequently an information was filed in the Court of Chancery against Jane Hayton, the executrix, and, in 1810, the court decided that a schoolmistress should keep school within the village of Berrier, and instruct the girls sent to her in reading, writing, knitting, and sewing, the girls to be born within the villages of Berrier, Whitbarrow, and Murrah, or of parents residing there. The stock remaining after paying the costs of the suit, amounting to £163 18s. 3d. three-per-cents, was transferred to trustees, who pay the interest to the schoolmistress, with the exception of a small amount allowed to the trustees for their expenses. The trustees at present are John Barker, Esq., and John Robinson, Esq.

LITTLE BLENCOW.

The area of Little Blencow township is 324 statute acres, and its rateable value £370 8s. 7½d. The number of inhabitants, in 1801 was 68; in 1811, 49; in 1821, 53; in 1831, 60; in 1841, 69, and in 1851, 56, who are chiefly resident in the village of Little Blencow.

Little Blencow was long the property of a family bearing the local name, who appear to have first settled at Great Blencow, in the parish of Dacre. We learn from the patent rolls of the 32nd Edward III. that that monarch, in 1358, granted to Adam de Blencow all the lands in Greystoke, Blencow, and Newbiggin, which had belonged to John Riddall. The manor of Blencow and Blencow Hall, the old seat of the family, were purchased of the immediate descendant of the family, Henry Prescot Blencow, Esq., in 1802, by the Duke of Norfolk, and are now the property of Henry Howard, Esq., besides whom Mrs. Elizabeth Troutbeck and James Parkin, Esq., are the principal landowners. The tithes of the township have been commuted for £14 6s. 6d., payable to the rector.

Blencow Hall, situated a little to the west of the village, was long the residence of the Blencow family. It consists of two square embattled towers connected by a range of domestic buildings. The south-west tower, which is rent from top to bottom, has a smaller tower attached to its western side. This tower has a picturesque effect, from a plane tree, which has its root under the wall, and grows through the centre of the structure. Some plain gurgyles are still remaining on the south-eastern tower. Over the principal door are the initials H. B. and three shields. One of these shields is plain, the second bears a chevron, between three mullets, for Crackenthorp; and the third, fretty and a chief. There is also "Quorsum vivere mori, mori vita. Henricus Blencowe." Behind the hall are the remains of an old chapel, consisting of a south window, through which a tree is growing. Near the hall is an ancient burial-ground, with a stone cross, upon which are the arms of the Blencow family. Blencow Hall is now a farmhouse.

Blencow of Blencow and Thoby Priory.

ADAM DE BLENCOWE distinguished himself in the French wars in the reign of Edward III., under the banner of William Baron of Greystoke, who granted arms to him and his heirs by the following warrant:—"To all to whom these presents shall come to be seen or heard; William Baron of Greystoke, lord of Morpeth, wisheth health in the Lord; know ye that I have given and granted to Adam de Blencowe an escutcheon sable, with a bend cossletted (or barred) argent and azure, with three chaplets gules; and with a crest cossletted, argent and azure, of my arms; to have and to hold to the said Adam and his heirs for ever. And I, the said William, and my heirs, will warrant to the said Adam, and his heirs, the arms aforesaid. In witness whereof I have to these letters patent set my seal. Written at the Castle of Morpeth, the 26th day of February, in the 30th year of the reign of King Edward III., after the Conquest." [A.D. 1357.]

ADAM DE BLENCOWE, 1357, married twice. By his first wife, Emma, he had three sons,

- i. William, who died in the lifetime of his father, unmarried.
- ii. THOMAS, his successor.
- iii. John, whose wife's name was Johanna.

THOMAS DE BLENCOWE succeeded his father, and married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Nicholas Veteripont, or Vipont (1333), baron of Westmoreland, and to whom his Alston estates descended, in conjunction with her sister Joan, wife of William Whytlaw. They now belong to Greenwich Hospital. Their son and heir, WILLIAM DE BLENCOWE, married temp. Henry VI., Johanna, daughter of Robert Briscoe, of Crofton, Cumberland.

RICHARD DE BLENCOWE, son and heir of William, living in the reign of Edward IV., was father of

CHRISTOPHER DE BLENCOWE, who married and had issue,

RICHARD, his heir.

Isabella, married James Halton, of an ancient family resident at Greystoke, whose manor house still remains.

RICHARD BLENOWE, Esq., son and heir of Christopher, married Eleanor Crockenthorpe, of Newbiggin, daughter of John Crockenthorpe, Esq., and had issue,

I. ANTHONY, his heir.

1. Christopher, died unmarried.

II. Cuthbert, died unmarried.

1. Elizabeth, married Richard Hoton, Esq., of Hutton Roof, a hamlet of Greystoke.

II. Marzen, married Matthew Bec, Esq.

ANTHONY BLENOWE, Esq., the eldest son and heir of Richard, married Winifred Dudley, granddaughter of the old Lord Dudley of Yanwath, co. Westmoreland, by whom he had issue,

I. RICHARD, his heir, mentioned amongst the gentry of the county subject to the Border service, 1543; married Apollonia, afterwards the wife of W. Alonby, Esq., of Alonby, by whom he had issue,

1. HENRY, heir to his grandfather.

2. Richard, died unmarried.

II. Anthony, D.C.I., provost of Oriel College, Oxford, forty-five years. He was chancellor or vicar-general of the Cathedral Church of Chichester. He died in 1618, and was buried in St. Mary's Church, Oxford. He was unmarried, and left £1,300 to the rebuilding of his college, with which the west side of Oriel College, as it now stands, was accordingly built.

III. George, M.P. for Chichester in 1603.

HENRY (afterwards Sir Henry) BLENOWE succeeded his grandfather. He was high sheriff of Cumberland in 1608, and was knighted by James I. on his return from Scotland in 1617. He was again high sheriff for Cumberland 1st Charles I., and died 21st November, 1635. His first wife was Jane, daughter of Sir William Musgrave, Bart., of Hayton (sister to Eleanor, wife of Sir Christopher Lowther, Knt., of Lowther, and great-grandmother to the first Lord Lonsdale), by whom he had no issue that lived to succeed him. His second wife was Grace, daughter of Sir Richard Sandford, of Howgill, by whom he had issue,

I. CHRISTOPHER, his successor.

II. Henry, died unmarried in his father's lifetime.

III. Anthony, to whom the estate at Harbybrow was first limited by Mr. Hingham. Anthony died soon after his father, unmarried.

IV. John, married and died in his father's lifetime, leaving issue, by Anne, his wife,

1. Elizabeth, married H. Thompson, Esq., of Hollin Hall, Ripon, York, grandfather of Sir W. Thompson, a baron of the Exchequer.

2. Ann, married George Barseick, Esq., of Carlisle.

Sir CHRISTOPHER BLENOWE, Knt., son and heir of Sir Henry, married Mary, daughter of Thomas Robinson, Esq., of Rokeby, Yorkshire, great-grandfather of Sir Thomas Robinson, Bart., of Rokeby, and his brother, Lord Bishop of Armagh, created Baron Rokeby; and had issue,

I. Henry, died unmarried, before his father.

II. CHRISTOPHER, his successor.

III. Thomas, died unmarried.

I. Mary. II. Frances.

III. Margaret. IV. Katherine.

CHRISTOPHER BLENOWE, Esq., son and heir of Sir Christopher, Knt., married Ann, eldest daughter and co-heiress of William Laton, Esq., of Dalemian, which this family had possessed before the time of Henry III., and had issue a son and heir,

HENRY BLENOWE, Esq., high sheriff of Cumberland, temp. George I. He married first, Dorothy, daughter and heiress of George Sisson, Esq., of Penrith; she died 29th October, 1707, aged 92, and was buried in the church of Penrith. By this lady he had issue,

I. CHRISTOPHER, who succeeded him.

II. Henry, died in the lifetime of his father.

III. George, died in the lifetime of his father.

1. Dorothy, married the Rev. T. Croft, vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale.

II. Bridget, married Utrick Reay, Esq., of Newcastle.

III. Mary, died unmarried.

He married secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of William Todd, Esq., of Wath, Yorkshire, and had issue,

I. HENRY, who succeeded his half-brother, Christopher.

II. William, married 1736 Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of Ferdinando Laus, Esq., of the Beck, in Millon, co. Cumberland, by Henrietta, his wife, daughter of Sir John Tempest, Bart., of Tong, co. York, by whom he had issue,

1. George, died in the West Indies, without issue.

2. Henry, died without issue.

3. John, died without issue.

4. WILLIAM FERDINANDO, son and heir.

1. Elizabeth, married J. Blain, Esq., M.D., of Carlisle, interred at St. Mary's, Carlisle.

III. Peter, married Frances Benn, of Whitehaven, and had issue,

I. Henry.

I. Elizabeth.

Henry BLENOWE, Esq., died in 1721, and was succeeded by his eldest son, CHRISTOPHER BLENOWE, Esq., of Blencowe, who died unmarried 1723, aged 25, and was succeeded by his half-brother. Such was the reputation of this gentleman as a lawyer that he was called to the bar at the age of 21, and three years after he was made one of the deputy-lieutenants of the Tower Hamlets, and chief steward or judge of the Court of Records within the liberties of the same; he died while upon the circuit.

HENRY BLENOWE, Esq., succeeded his half-brother, Christopher, and married Mary, only surviving daughter and heiress of Alexander Prescott, Esq., of Thoby Priory, Essex [at this point the Blencowes of Blencowe become again closely connected with the Blencowes of Marston]; he had issue, HENRY PRESCOTT, born 1753, his heir.

Mary, died unmarried at Billericay, Essex.

HENRY PRESCOTT BLENOWE, Esq., succeeded his father, and married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Richard Barbor, Esq., of

¹ There was in the possession of this lady a curious jewel, of which the account is as follows, copied from the will of Gabriel Barbor:—"Mr. Barbor (the father of my great-grandfather), for his firm adherence to the Protestant religion was in Queen Mary's reign, brought into Smithfield to suffer at the stake, but whilst he was taking leave of certain friends, news came the queen was dead, so that the Popish party did not dare to put him to death. In remembrance of so eminent a preservation, the said Mr. Barbor had the effigies of Queen Elizabeth cut out upon a stone, bequeathing the jewel to his eldest son, if he had a daughter and named her Elizabeth, otherwise the jewel should descend to the second if the conditions was fulfilled by him, but if not, then to the third son, and so on. This is ye account as it has been handed down from father to son, and hitherto there has been an Elizabeth in the family. August 24, 1724."

Brentwood, co. Essex. By this lady, who died in 1843 (the last of the Barber family) he had issue,

i. HENRY PRESCOTT, his successor.

ii. John Prescott, born 1728; married Pleasantee, youngest daughter of Richard Everard, Esq., of Lynn, Norfolk; he died on November 18, 1806, leaving issue,

1. John Prescott, born 1806.
2. Edward Prescott, born 17th April, 1806, rector of West Walton, Norfolk.
3. Edmund, deceased.
4. Walter, born 26th Aug. 1812.
1. Pleasantee, deceased.
2. Elizabeth.
3. Mary.
4. Agnes, deceased.
5. Henrietta.
6. Jane, married Rev. S. Allen, D.D.
7. Agnes. 8. Margaret. 9. Ellen.

i. Elizabeth, married James Everard, Esq., of Lowestoft, and died leaving issue,

1. James, R.N. drowned.
1. Mary, married Rev. Isaac Gaskarth.
2. Frances, married Promotus Montagu, Esq.
3. Fanny. 4. Caroline.
5. Louisa. 6. Anna.

ii. Margaret.

Mr. Blencowe died 2nd February, 1787, and was succeeded by his son,

HENRY PRESCOTT BLENOW, Esq., of Blencow, married Rebecca, eldest daughter of Edward Everard, Esq., of Lynn, co. Norfolk, and by her (who died 7th October, 1804, aged 89) had issue,

i. HENRY PRESCOTT, his successor.

- ii. John, deceased.
- iii. Edward, deceased.
- iv. Everard.
- i. Rebecca.

ii. Mary, married George Bannatyne, Esq., of Bathford House, Somersetshire.

Mr. Blencowe, in the year 1702, sold Blencow to the Duke of Norfolk. He died in 1847, and was succeeded by his eldest son, HENRY PRESCOTT BLENOW, Esq., late of Blencow Hall, co. Cumberland, and now of Thoby Priory, co. Essex, born 1739, succeeded his father in 1847.

Arms.—1st. Blencow, gu., a quarter, arg.; 2nd. Greystoke, argentation with a difference; 3rd. Luton of Dalcmain; 4th. Prescott.

Crest.—A sword in pale, arg., hilt in chief, or, enfiladed with a human heart, gu., all between two wings expanded, arg. (A legend in the family refers this curious crest to the circumstance that in the Border wars, a Blencow, whose crest was a sword, having slain a Douglas—a smallish hero in those days—was permitted to unite it in the present form with the bleeding heart of the Douglas.)

Motto.—Quorum vivimus, mortui vivimus.

Seat.—Thoby Priory, Essex.

The village of Little Blencow is four and three quarter miles north-west of Penrith; the river Petteril separates it from Great Blencow in Dacre parish. Situated in the village is a girls' school, erected by subscription in 1856, at a cost of about £200. It is supported by contributions and donations, aided by the quarter pence of the children.

BOWSCALE.

The area of Bowscale township is 2,560 acres, and its rateable value £85. The population was not returned separately till the year 1841, when it was 31; in 1851, it was 32, who reside in the village of Bowscale. The manorial rights are vested in E. W. Hasell, Esq. The landowners are Messrs. Joseph Pearson, Daniel Grigg, and Joseph Robinson. The commons of this township are still unenclosed.

The village of Bowscale occupies a romantic situation at the foot of a lofty fell, eleven miles west-by-north of Penrith, and six west of Greystoke. It contains four farm-houses and a few cottages. Upon the fell is Bowscale Tarn, nearly a mile in length, and surrounded with such a lofty ridge of rocks, that during four months in winter it is excluded from the benefit of the sun, and is said sometimes to reflect the stars at noon-day.

HUTTON JOHN.

This township contains 665 acres, and the rateable value is £405 13s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 19; in 1811, 16; in 1821, 30; in 1831, 27; in 1841, 25; and in 1851, 44.

The manor of Hutton John was long held by a family bearing the local name, supposed to be a younger branch of the Huttons of Hutton. This family is traced back to the 39th Edward III., when William de Hutton John held this manor of the barony of Greystoke. Thomas Hutton dying without issue in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, was succeeded by his sisters, co-heiresses, one of whom, Mary, was married to Andrew Hudleston, Esq., of Farrington, co. Lancaster, second son of Sir John Hudleston of Milom Castle, by which marriage the manor passed to the Hudlestons. The manor of Hutton John was purchased in 1787 by the Duke of Norfolk of Mr. Hudleston, who retained the demesne. It is now held by Henry Howard, Esq., who also owns a small portion of the township. "Hutton John," says Jefferson, "is the last of a chain of border towers (Dacre Castle and Yanwath Hall being the two next links) extending down the vales of Eamont and Eden. The present mansion-house consists of the original square castellated tower, to which at different periods two wings have been added—the more recent addition bears date just after the Restoration (1666), when, owing to the confiscation by Oliver Cromwell of the other property belonging to this branch of the Hudlestons, for the attachment of that family to the royal cause, Hutton John had become their only place of residence. About a century afterwards, the house underwent alteration in conformity with the then prevailing style of architecture, which has much impaired the original character of the building, though it still retains a venerable appearance. The site of the house is well chosen at the head of the rich and beautiful vale of Dacre, down which it commands an extensive prospect; and the wooded banks in its vicinity are highly picturesque. On approaching Hutton John from the Keswick and Penrith turnpike road, a striking view presents itself of the mountains round Ullswater, and other wild scenery in the distance, with great variety of rich woodland and cultivation in the intermediate vale; and from hence also is seen to great advantage Westmell Fell, a hill planted to the extent of 600 acres, by one of the Dukes of Norfolk. The 'piece of gilt plate' mentioned by Mr. Sandford, and Nicolson and Burn, as having been given by the Princess (afterwards Queen) Mary to her god-daughter Miss Hutton, the lady by whom the Hudlestons obtained Hutton John, is a square clock with a gilt face, the case being ebony; it is still in the house. There is also an original portrait of Father Hudleston, 'Ætatis sue, anno 78,' painted by Housman, 1685." Hutton John is now the residence of Andrew Fleming Hudleston, Esq.

Hudleston of Hutton John.

This is a younger branch of the Hudlestons of Millom Castle, in the county of Cumberland, being descended from Sir JOHN HUDLESTON, K.B., lord of Millom, who, by his second lady, Joan, daughter of John Seymour, Esq., of Wolf Hall, (and sister to Sir John Seymour, Knt., father of Lady Jane Seymour, queen to Henry VIII.) had issue two sons, Anthony, who continued the line at Millom; Andrew, ancestors of the Hudlestons of Hutton John.

ANDREW HUDLESTON, Esq., who married Mary, sister and co-heir of Thomas Hutton, Esq., of Hutton John. His estates consisted of the manors of Abington, in Oxfordshire, Preston Richard in Westmoreland, and Farrington Hall in Lancashire, with several other possessions in Westmoreland and Cumberland. He was an officer in the body guard to King Henry VIII., Edward VI., Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth. By his wife, Mary, he had issue,

I. JOSEPH.

- | | | |
|--|---------------|--------------|
| II. John, in holy orders in the Catholic church. He was instrumental in preserving Charles II. after the battle of Worcester, and was appointed private confessor. | VI. Andrew. | III. Joyce. |
| III. Edmund. | VII. Richard. | III. Bridge. |
| IV. Byham. | V. William. | I. Dorothy. |

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

JOSEPH HUDLESTON, Esq., of Hutton John, married Eleanor, daughter of Cuthbert Sisson, Esq., of Dacre, and had issue,

- | | | |
|------------|---------------|-----------------|
| I. ANDREW. | III. Richard. | V. William. |
| II. John. | IV. Cuthbert. | VI. Ferdinando. |

1. Mary, married John Senhouse, Esq., of Netherhall, and had issue seven children,

- | | | |
|-------------|---------------|-------------|
| 1. Dorothy. | 3. Margaret. | 5. Bridget. |
| 2. Jane. | 4. Joyce. | 6. Helen. |
| | 7. Elizabeth. | |

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

ANDREW HUDLESTON, Esq., of Hutton John, married Dorothy, daughter of Daniel Fleming, Esq., of Skirwith, co. Cumberland, and by her had issue,

I. ANDREW.

II. Joseph, a citizen of London, married Mary, daughter of John Emerson, mayor of Newcastle; he died 14th June, 1679, and was buried in the church of St. Nicholas, Newcastle. He had issue,

- | | |
|-------------------------------------|-------------|
| 1. Joseph, who died in his infancy. | |
| 2. John. | 3. Richard. |
| 1. Dorothy, living in 1679. | |
| 2. Mary. | 3. Jane. |
| 5. Magdalen. | 4. Dorothy. |
| | 6. Bridge. |

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

ANDREW HUDLESTON, Esq., of Hutton John, son and heir of Andrew. He was the first Protestant of this family. He was a zealous promoter of the revolution of 1688, and is represented as a man of great learning and talents. In October, 1688, having been informed of a ship entering Workington harbour with arms and ammunition for the garrison of James II., at Carlisle, he consulted with Sir John Lowther, how they might best secure the ship for the Prince of Orange, who was then daily expected in the kingdom. Mr. Hudleston and Sir John armed their servants and tenants, and during the darkness of the night marched them to the coast, when the crew surrendered the vessel at their demand. This is said to have been one of the first open acts of hostility against that monarch, who soon after abdicated the throne. He married Catherine, daughter of Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart., of Isell, co. Cumberland, and had issue,

- I. Andrew, who died in his father's lifetime, without issue.

- | | | |
|--------------|---------------|--------------|
| II. WILFRID. | III. William. | IV. Richard. |
|--------------|---------------|--------------|

V. Lawson, in holy orders, archdeacon of Bath, canon of the cathedral church of Wells, and rector of Kelston, in Somerset. He married Helena, daughter of John Harrington, Esq., of Kelston, and died in 1743, aged 66, and was interred in the parish church of Kelston. He had two sons, John and William, who both died leaving issue, and their descendants are still living,

- | | | |
|-------------|---------------|-------------|
| 1. John. | 3. Catherine. | 6. Anne. |
| 1. Dorothy. | 4. Elizabeth. | 7. Judith. |
| 2. Jane. | 5. Mary. | 8. Bridget. |

He was succeeded by his second son,

WILFRID HUDLESTON, Esq., of Hutton John, married about 1703, Joyce, daughter and heiress of Thomas Curwen, Esq., of Workington, co. Cumberland, by whom he had issue,

I. ANDREW.

II. Curwen, in holy orders, incumbent of the church of St. Nicholas, Whitehaven, and rector of Clifton, in Westmoreland; married firstly, Elizabeth, sister of Richard Cooke, Esq., of Workington, and had a daughter,

1. Joyce, married to William Shammoun, Esq., lieutenant in the royal navy.

He married secondly, Eleanor, daughter and co-heiress of John Dove, of Cultercots, co. Northumberland, and had issue,

1. Wilfrid, who succeeded his father in both his livings.
2. John.
1. Isabella, married to Edmund Gibson, Esq., of Barfield, co. Cumberland, and had issue one son and three daughters.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

ANDREW HUDLESTON, Esq., of Hutton John, son and heir, in 1728. He was brought up to the study of the law, and was called to the bar. He was deputy-lieutenant, justice of the peace, and chairman of the quarter sessions for the county of Cumberland for nearly forty years. He married Mary, daughter and sole heir of the Rev. Richmond Fenton, of Plumpton Hall, co. Cumberland, and had issue,

I. Andrew.	I. Joyce.	III. Julia.
II. William.	II. Mary.	IV. Isabella.
	V. Catherine.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

ANDREW HUDLESTON, Esq., of Hutton John, son and heir; was brought up to the bar at Gray's Inn, and succeeded his father in 1780. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Sir William Fleming, Bart., of Rydal, co. Westmoreland.

ANDREW FLEMING HUDLESTON, Esq., of Hutton John, son and heir, present possessor, born 1796. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1823, and was for some years in the civil service of the East India Company, on the Madras establishment.

Arms.—Gu. fretty, arg.

Crest.—Two arms holding up a bloody scalp.

Motto.—Soli Deo honor et gloria.

The hamlet of Hutton John is five and a half miles west-by-south of Penrith. Near Penruddock, but in this township, is a corn-mill.

HUTTON ROOF.

Hutton Roof comprises an area of 2,505 acres, and its rateable value is £1,007 4s. 3d. The population in 1801 was 163; in 1811, 193; in 1821, 214; in 1831, 189; in 1841, 197; in 1851, 209, who are chiefly resident in the village of Hutton Roof. The inhabitants of this township generally attend Castle Sowerby church, which is in the neighbourhood, Greystoke parish church being from five to six miles distant. The manorial rights of Hutton Roof belong to Henry Howard, Esq., besides whom William Augustus Bushby, Esq., the Misses Blamire, Timothy Plasket, Esq., Mr. Thomas Richardson, and John Barker, Esq., are the landowners. Thwaite Hall, an old building now occupied as a farm-house, is situated in this township. The tithes have been commuted for £17 10s., payable to the rector of Greystoke.

The village of Hutton Roof is pleasantly situated on an eminence, ten miles west-north-west of Penrith, and four miles south-south-east of Hesket New Market. Here is a school erected by the late Richard Richardson, who, in 1838, endowed it with £50 a year (which he directed to be paid to the master, or any other sum, at the option of the trustees) arising out of Whamhead estate, which contains 123 acres, including woodland, &c., and now lets for £85 a year. This benefaction is in the hands of nine trustees. The schoolmaster also receives £5 for instructing children on the Sunday, which is part of the interest of £700 invested in government security at three per cent; the entire interest amounts to £20 17s. a year, making a total, inclusive of the Whamhead estate, of £105 17s. per annum. The average attendance at this school is fifty children. Near to the school is the master's house, erected in 1853, by Mrs. Mitchell, at a cost of £200, and subsequently made over to the school trustees, who receive a yearly rent from the master.

Scales is a hamlet in this township, nine and a half miles north-west of Penrith.

HUTTON SOIL.

Hutton Soil comprises an area of 5,111 acres, and its rateable value is £1,796 12s. 6d. In 1801 the number of inhabitants was 233; in 1811, 228; in 1821, 280; in 1831, 338; in 1841, 359; and in 1851, 355.

The landowners are Henry Howard, Esq. (who is also lord of the manor), Messrs. John Robinson, John Simpson, John Edmondson, Thomas Thompson, William Wilson, William Bowerbank, Jonathan Fallofield, John Warwick, John Porter, John Harrison, Robert Bird, Frederick Brown, Thomas Bowman, Rev. John Miller, James Parkin, Alfred Edmondson, John Martin, Joseph Grisdale, Mrs. Moger, T. D. Blamire, John Dixon, and George Lamb. The commons, containing 3,500 acres, as also some open fields within the township, comprising 240 acres, were enclosed in 1812, and were allotted to the landowners.

Penruddock is a village in this township, six miles west-by-south of Penrith. Here is a Presbyterian chapel, rebuilt on the site of a former chapel in or about 1789. The Rev. John Miller is minister. Within half a mile west of the same village is a neat Wesleyan chapel, with bell turret, containing one bell. The site upon which the chapel is erected was given by Mr. John Edmondson, of Beckes. Near Penruddock there is a good school, conducted by the Rev. John Miller. In this township there is a brewery called Beckes, probably from a small stream or beck which runs close by.

At the foot of Mell Fell is the Cloven Stone, fifty-one feet in circumference, and eleven feet three inches in height; the slit, supposed to have been caused by electricity, is eighteen inches wide, and divides the mass nearly into two equal parts. The weight of this huge block is considered to be about 500 tons. On the south side of the turnpike-road from Penrith to Keswick are some vestiges of an ancient road leading from Stone Carr, between the two hills, called Mell Fells, in this township, to the head of Gowbarrow Park, where it is lost, though it is supposed to have extended to Ambleside. In this tract lies a large cairn called Moundel, and there are two others near Mell Fells. On this last-named hill is a stone floor, supposed to have been a smelting hearth. The river Petteril rises in this township, and at its source is a large stone, six feet high, called Lady Stone. The boundary stone between this township and that of Watermillock, is somewhat similar in size to the Cloven-Stone.

JOHNBV.

The area of this township is 2,119 acres, and its rateable value £795 11s. 6d. In 1801 the population was 81; in 1811, 91; in 1821, 99; in 1831, 86; in 1841, 88; and 1851, 133, who chiefly reside in the village of Johnby.

The manor of Johnby belonged formerly to the Musgraves of Hayton. An heiress of a younger branch of this family brought it to the Wyvills, of Yorkshire, by whom it was sold to William Williams, gentleman. Mr. Williams left four daughters co-heiresses, the eldest of whom brought Johnby in marriage to Sir Edward Hasell, Knt., of whose descendant, William Hasell, the manor was purchased by the Duke of Norfolk in 1783; it is now the property of Henry Howard, Esq., who is the owner of nearly the whole of the township, but Mr. John Scott, Mrs. Mary Carr, Thomas How, and Mrs. Robinson, have estates here. The tithes of the township have been commuted for £21 19s. 6d.

Johnby Hall is a substantial square building, and appears to have been erected about the year 1583. The following inscription is carved above the door:—
 "William Musgrave, Isabel Martindale 1583. Nicholas Musgrave maret Margaret Tellel, Heyre. Thomas his sone maret Elizabeth Dacre. Willm. his sone Here now dwell, marret Isabell. Heyre to Martindale. To God I pray be with hus allvaie." In the centre of the inscription is a shield encircled by a garter, inscribed—"O God, give me wisdom to know thee," surmounted by the crest of Musgrave. The shield bears, 1. Musgrave, charged with a martlet; 2. a bend sinister (Martindale); 3. a lion rampant; 4. three swords joined at the hilt (Stapleton). Over an opposite door, "W. M., G. M., 1637." Over an old garden door, "D. H., D. W., 1687." This old hall is now occupied as cottages.

The village of Johnby, which contains six farm-houses and a few cottages, is six and a half miles west of Penrith, and one and a half of the parish church. Here are tile works, known as Johnby Wyse Tile Works.

MOTHERBY AND GILL.

This township contains 446 acres, and its rateable value is £440 13s. 1d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 78; in 1811, 78; in 1821, 112; in 1831, 115; in 1841, 85; and in 1851, 95. Henry Howard, Esq., is the possessor of the manorial rights and privileges. The landowners are Henry Howard, Esq., Messrs. George Stagg, Joseph Todd, John Edmondson, Isaac Edmondson, John Robinson, John Kennedy, Thomas Hunter, the Executors of the late William Dawson, John Todhunter, Joseph Mounsey, and Anne Edmondson. Motherby townfield, or ancient land, was enclosed in 1812-13. The tithes of this township have been commuted for £28 18s. payable to the rector.

The village of Motherby is six and a quarter miles west of Penrith, and that of Gill five and three quarter miles west-by-south of the same place.

CHARITY.

Peacock's Charity.—Isaac Peacock, about the year 1767, bequeathed to the overseers of Motherby the sum of £20, the interest to be divided amongst the poor of that division not receiving parochial relief. This legacy was laid out in the purchase of a cottage at Motherby, which was afterwards sold for £22, the interest of which, amounting to 18s. 9d. yearly, is distributed as directed.

MATTERDALE CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north by Hutton Soil and Mungisdale, on the west by Threlkeld and St. John's, and on the south and east by Watermillock.

Matterdale comprises an area of 7,313 acres, and its rateable value is £1,207. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 297; in 1811, 284; in 1821, 299; in 1831, 325; in 1841, 363; and in 1851, 442; who are principally engaged in agricultural pursuits, but many are employed in the Greenside mines. Penrith is the market usually attended; but those residing on the west side of the common attend Keswick. The lands here are held under Greystoke barony, of which Henry Howard, Esq., is lord. Mrs. Stanger, Messrs. R. Sutton, Isaac Brownrigg, John Murray, and John Wilkinson are the principal landowners, but there are several smaller proprietors occupying their own estates. The commons here are very extensive; a small portion was enclosed in 1829, the remainder is as yet unenclosed. The landowners pay annually to the lord of Greystoke 8s. and to the curate 2s. 6d. for each tenement or estate. The manor is encompassed by lofty mountains, the largest of which bears the name of High Dodd, the summit of which is nearly on a level with Skiddaw. The sides of these hills afford excellent pasturage for sheep, and on some of their summits is a profusion of peat moss, which makes excellent fuel. After a law-suit with A. Hudleston, Esq., of Hutton-John, the inhabitants of Matterdale, in 1690, obtained a decree in Chancery, confirming their right of pasture on Wester Mell Fell, a beautiful conical hill, which commands an extensive prospect, including the Scottish mountains and part of Yorkshire.

THE CHAPEL.

Matterdale chapel is a very plain building, erected in 1685; a very small tower, containing one bell, was added by subscription about thirteen years ago. A new roof was erected at the same time. In 1580 Bishop Meys made this chapel parochial. The living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the rector of Greystoke. It has been long endowed with land of the annual value of £3 10s., and was augmented by £600 from Queen Anne's Bounty, and £200 from the Countess Dowager Gower. In 1844 the Ecclesiastical Commissioners granted £833; in 1854, Henry Howard, Esq., of Greystoke, £500, and, two years later, in 1856, he further augmented it with £370, making a total of £870, which is invested in the new three per cent consols. The present value of the living is gross £104, nett £94. The registers commence in 1663.

INCUMBENTS.—William Wright, 1744; Jonathan Harris, 1791; John Kirby, 1827; Joseph Thompson, 1833; John W. Dunn, 1843; W. R. Duncan, 1846; John Bell, 1851.

The parsonage, situated near the chapel, was erected in 1835, and enlarged in 1856, chiefly at the expense of Henry Howard, Esq.

Matterdale End is a small village, ten miles south-west of Penrith. The Matterdale sports, including races, &c., are held on Midsummer Day, in a field in Watermillock township.

Dockwray is a hamlet in this chapelry, eleven miles south-west-by-west of Penrith; Douthwaite hamlet is eight miles east-south-east of Keswick; and Wall-thwaite Head, another hamlet, six and a half miles east-by-north of Keswick. Troutbeck is also a small hamlet in this township, about ten miles from Penrith.

At Dockwray is a commodious inn, which is much resorted to in the season by tourists, and is about one and a quarter miles from Ullswater.

CHARITIES.

The School.—Robert Grisdale, in 1722, gave £200 for the foundation of a school upon ground given by the Hon. H. C. Howard, lord of the manor of Matterdale in 1716. The founder's gift was subsequently increased by a legacy left in 1819, by Thomas Clarke of Askham. This money is now vested by the trustees, with the other charities of the township, in landed property, out of the proceeds of which is annually paid to the boys' school £20, and to the girls' £8. In the school is a library of about 200 volumes, left in 1723, by Mrs. E. Grisdale, for the use of the inhabitants.

Poor Stock.—There is a poor stock amounting to £73, belonging to this chapelry, the interest of which is distributed to poor persons of the township, not receiving parochial relief.

Robert Grisdale's Charity.—Robert Grisdale, by will, dated July 1st, 1747, gave to trustees the sum of £60, the yearly interest to be employed in the purchase of oatmeal, to be distributed yearly on St. Thomas' Day, for ever.

Murray's Bequest.—Jonathan Murray, Esq., a native of the chapelry of Matterdale, by his last will, dated July 19th, 1832, gave and bequeathed to trustees £1,000 Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, free from legacy duty, in trust, to pay the yearly proceeds thereof for the following purposes:—Two pounds to the minister of the said chapelry for preaching an annual sermon to aged people, and £2 for another sermon to young persons; £10 to be distributed annually to the poor, in meat and other necessities; and the residue to be applied to the use of the school of the said chapelry.

MUNGRISDALE CHAPELRY.

The chapelry of Mungrisdale is bounded on the north by Bowseales township, on the west by Threlkeld and Saddleback, on the south by Matterdale, and on the east by Berrier and Marrah.

The area of Mungrisdale is 6,729 acres, and its rateable value £1,222. The population in 1801 was 160; in 1811, 202; in 1821, 236; in 1831, 226; in 1841, 222; and in 1851, 226, who reside in a number of single houses dispersed over the chapelry, and in the small village or hamlet of Mungrisdale. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants, but a few are employed in a grey slate and flag quarry. The manorial rights are vested in Henry Howard, Esq. The lands here are held by customary tenure, subject to a sixteen-penny fine on the death of either lord or tenant. The landowners are the Countess Ossalinski, Henry Howard, Esq., Messrs. Mark Cockbain, Joseph Martindale, John Mandale, C. Watson, and Nicholas Davis.

The village of Mungrisdale is eleven miles west-by-north of Penrith. Near the village the water runs in opposite directions, so that a person may at his pleasure send it either to Carlisle by the Caldew, or to Cockermouth by the Glenderamakin.

THE CHAPEL.

Mungrisdale chapel (dedication unknown) is a small plain building, re-erected in 1756. It is endowed with a house and garden, and has received augmentations of £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty in 1773, £200 by lot in 1745, £200 given by the inhabitants in 1761, and £200 given by the Countess Dowager Gower. With these sums land has been purchased at Blackburn and Dillicar, which produce about £54 a year. The rector of Grey-stoke presents to this chapel. The registers were lost some years ago. The Rev. Moses Hetherington, the present incumbent, succeeded the Rev. Daniel Wilson, in 1852.

There is a parsonage house, a good plain building, situated near the chapel.

Situate in the village is an excellent school, erected by subscription in 1835, Jonathan Scott, Esq., being the principal contributor; he also endowed it with £35 a year, arising from an estate at Mosedale. It is under government inspection, and has an average attendance of forty pupils. The school affairs are managed by eleven trustees.

CHARITY.

Richardson's Charity.—This chapelry possesses £2 10s. a year, arising from the late Richard Richardson's charity, to be distributed in bread, every Sunday after service, to six poor persons, who attend this chapel regularly. There is also eighteen shillings worth to be divided amongst the same number of poor persons on Christmas Day.

THRELKELD CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the east by the townships of Mungrisdale and Matteredale; on the west by Under Skiddaw, Castlerigg, and parish of St. John; on the south by St. John's parish and Castlerigg; and on the north by Mungrisdale. It is said to be the oldest chapelry in the diocese of Carlisle, but the date of its formation is not known with any degree of certainty. It enjoys parochial privileges.

THRELKELD.

The area of Threlkeld is 4,710 acres, and its rateable value is £1,931. The population in 1801 was 200; in 1811, 283; in 1821, 303; in 1831, 320; in 1841, 332; and in 1851, 387. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants, but a few are engaged in mining at "Woodend" lead mine, which is wrought on a small scale. The township is clean, and the soil good. Penrith and Keswick are the markets usually attended. The ancient Roman road commences at Walthwaite, at the east end of the parish, and runs on to the vale of St. John.

The manor of Threlkeld originally belonged to a family who assumed the local name, and who had also possessions at Yanwath and Crosby Ravensworth in Westmoreland. As early as the reign of Edward I. Henry de Threlkeld occurs as obtaining a grant of free warren in his estates in Westmoreland, and it is not unlikely that previous to his time a similar grant had been obtained for the lands at Threlkeld. This grant of free warren was renewed in 1320 or 1321, in the reign of Edward II.; nevertheless, three years before this renewal took place we find that John de Derwentwater held this vill of the Lord of Greystoke, by homage and suit of court at Greystoke, but this seems to have been only by way of trust or settlement. In the 30th Edward III. (1356-7) William de Threlkeld held the manor, and in the same year was sheriff of the county of Cumberland. In the fortieth year of the same reign (1366-7), he paid a relief for a moiety of Yanwath, which he held of the barony of Greystoke. In the 13th Richard II. (1388-9) William de Threlkeld was member of parliament for the county. This William appears to have been succeeded by a collateral member of the family, and bearing the same name, for in the 5th Henry IV. (1403-4) William Threlkeld, then lord of Crosby Ravensworth, cousin and heir of William Threlkeld, Knt., father of William Threlkeld of Ulvesby, son of John, son of William, paid his relief for two parts of the moiety of the manor of Ulvesby. In the 10th Henry VI. (1427-8) Sir Henry Threlkeld occurs as lord of the manor of Threlkeld; and in the reign of Edward IV., mention is made of a Lancelot Threlkeld, whose son, Sir Lancelot Threlkeld, Knt., had three daughters, co-heirs, one married to Thomas Dudley, with whom he had Yanwath; another married to James Pickering, with whom he had Crosby Ravensworth; and the third, Winifred, married to William Pickering, brother of the James just mentioned, with whom he had Threlkeld. Both these Pickerings were sons of Sir James Pickering of Killington, in Westmoreland. Threlkeld seems to have been held by the Pickerings for some time, and a Christopher Pickering occurs in the 33rd Elizabeth (1590-1), and the 4th and 6th James I. (1606-7, 1608-9). The hall and demesne appear to have passed in marriage to the Irton family, from whom it came subsequently to the Speddings, who sold it to the Duke of Norfolk. The manor was sold, before 1632, to the Lowther family, who, in 1635, for the sum of £1,360 released the tenants from their servile tenures. Nearly a century ago the tenants received a release of the services not then compounded for, excepting the mill service. The Earl of Lonsdale is lord of the manor of Threlkeld. Henry Howard, Esq., possesses the manorial rights of Threlkeld Hall estate, to which boons are still paid, and of which he is owner. About 4,000 acres, being the Threlkeld Hall estate, are in demesne. The principal landowners are Henry Howard, Esq.; John Crozier, Esq., of the Riddings, Threlkeld; and John Iredale, Esq., Workington. The land is customary; fourpence fine certain being paid on the death of the Earl of Lonsdale, or death of tenant. The lord claims the oak wood, but the tenants have a right to wood for building and repairs on the old sites. About 5,000 acres of land here are unenclosed, and about 1,700 enclosed as arable and meadow.

The village of Threlkeld, which is situated about four and a half miles east-by-north of Keswick, on the Penrith road, is small and clean, with a population of about 120 persons. A fair for sheep, cattle, and wool is held here on the first Thursday in September.

THE CHURCH.

Threlkeld church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a plain, neat, oblong building, in the centre of the village, capable of accommodating about 300 persons. The tower contains two bells, one of which has the inscription "Ave Maria gratia plena"—"Hail Mary full of grace." The old church was taken down in consequence of its dangerous condition, being a very ancient structure. The present church, built by subscription, was finished in 1777. It contains a brass chandelier, presented by the late Rev. Christopher Howe, Threlkeld being his native place. There is a marble monument to the memory of the Rev. Thomas Edmondson, a former incumbent; a brass monument, between the communion table and Threlkeld Hall pew, bears the following inscription:—"Infra hoc loco jacet corpus Domini Wilfridi Irton sepultum 13 die Novembris Anno Domine 1650^{mo}. Seiniliter que Corpus Uxoris ejus Domine Matildæ Leigh qvæ Sepulta erat 16^{mo}. Die Maii Anno Domine 1667^{mo}. quæ credimur esserverus Ei Legitima Hæres de Issell.—Ita a nobis testatur, Dorathea Pearson, Maria Parsons." The parishioners have just erected a monument to the memory of the late Rev. Thomas Collinson. Under the eastern window is a plain monument to the memory of the Rev. Alexander Naughley, a former incumbent. There was a chapel at Threlkeld as early as the year 1341, for at that time a dispute arose between Sir Henry Threlkeld, Knt., lord of the manor, and his lay tenants, of the one part, and the provost and canons of the collegiate church of Greystoke, of the other part, respecting the nomination of a curate. The registers commence in 1573, and from them we learn that a singular custom once prevailed here, viz., that formal contracts of marriage were formerly made, and sureties entered into for the payment of five shillings to the poor, by the party who failed in the contract! The living, which is in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale, was, in 1720, certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £8 16s. 6d., and in 1747 received an augmentation of £200, wherewith lands were purchased near Kendal. Tithes are paid to the rector of Greystoke; the prescriptive belongs to the incumbent of Threlkeld. The value of the living is £60. Tithes rated in the poor rate book at £50 are commuted for. Walthwaite, High Gate, Close, and Lobbs, in the township of Matterdale, have seats in this church.

INCUMBENTS.—Andrew Naughley, 1698; Alexander Naughley, 1703; Thomas Edmondson, 1756; Thomas Collinson, 1798; William Whitelegg, 1808.

The parsonage was erected in 1857, at a cost of about £400, exclusive of the site, which was given by John Crozier, Esq. It is a plain square building; the stones used in its construction are from the quarry, which is free to the parish. The farmers, with their accustomed kindness, gave each three days' carting of materials.

The Wesleyans have a chapel at Scales, about two miles from the parish church, with one Sunday service.

It was erected in 1842, at a cost of about £100 pounds, and will accommodate eighty persons.

The school is a substantial structure, erected in 1849, by the Rev. A. E. Hulton, a former curate, and the parishioners generally. It has an endowment of about £6 a year, and is supported by the payments of the children, about thirty of whom are in attendance. It is under inspection. The school is governed by trustees, of whom the incumbent is one, who has the casting vote at meetings and the nomination of other trustees.

CHARITIES.

In 1744 land was purchased for £105, the rents of which are divided among the poor not on the parish, the school, and for church repairs, and for the minister. The trustees are the incumbent and churchwardens, with the tenant in trust. Besides this, there is some land belonging to the school.

The Rev. Christopher Cockbain's Charity.—The Rev. Christopher Cockbain, in 1844, left £10, the interest of which was to be expended in the purchase of bibles and prayer books.

Besides these charities there is a yearly sum for the repair and ornamenting of the church.

There is a library, which is free to the inhabitants of the parish.

Wescoe and Scales are two hamlets in this township.

The single houses having particular names here are the Riddings, and Guard House; the latter is supposed to have been a watch tower belonging to Threlkeld Hall.

The mountain Blencathra, commonly called Saddleback, is in this parish. There is also a tarn on the north-east side of Saddleback, supposed to have been an ancient volcanic formation. The Glenderamakin, or Threlkeld river, which is well supplied with trout, and the Glenderatera, are the principal streams. There are various bridges, the chief being the new bridge on the road to Keswick. There is one corn-mill.

Among the remarkable persons born here we have Lord Threlkeld, Lord Clifford, and the Rev. Alexander Naughley, so noted for his classical learning and eccentricity.

Threlkeld is said to be the cradle of the wrestling game; but lately the amusements have been fishing and hunting.

The parish is very healthy; the three last incumbents resided upwards of 151 years; and during the year 1858 there was only one death in the parish.

WATERMILLOCK CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north by Hutton Soil, Hutton John, and Daere parish; on the east by Daere parish; on the south by Ullswater; and on the west by Matterdale.

The area of Watermillock is 9,336 acres, and its rateable value £2,914 16s. 2½d. The population in 1801 was 338; in 1811, 345; in 1821, 410; in 1831, 429; in 1841, 524; and in 1851, 598. The manorial rights are possessed by Henry Howard, Esq., besides whom William Marshall, Esq., Messrs. Thomas Castlehow, Thomas Todd, William Rumney, and James Hutchinson, are landowners. The commons of the chapelry, containing 4,250 acres, were enclosed by act of Parliament in 1829, when a sixteenth share was given to the lord of the manor for his seignory.

The village of Watermillock is beautifully situated on the north side of Ullswater, seven miles south-west of Penrith.

THE CHAPEL.

Watermillock chapel, the dedication of which does not appear to be known, is a plain structure. The living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the rector of Greystoke, now worth £150 a year. It was augmented by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in 1848, with £40 a year, and has been still further increased by Henry Howard, Esq., with £800 consols—£500 in 1853, and the remaining £300 in 1856. Beside these the chapel possesses an endowment consisting of a house and about twenty-three acres of land, with a prescriptive payment of £6 11s. 4d., out of which £2 is paid to the rector of Greystoke. The registers commence in 1580. There appears to have been a chapel on the margin of the lake here as early as the reign of Edward III., but it did not become possessed of parochial privileges until it was rebuilt by Bishop Oglethorp in 1558, when it received the name of New Kirk.

INCUMBENTS.—William Rumney, 1754; Thomas Dawson 1768; Joseph Thwaites, 1770; Thomas B. Lewry, 1829.

CHURCHES.

School.—There has been in this chapelry, time out of mind, the sum of £101 as an old school stock, the interest of which has always been applied for the purpose of educating children of the chapelry. This sum not being sufficient for the purpose, a subscription was entered into in 1806, which has been increased from time to time. Out of this subscription added to the old school stock, which was called in for that purpose, and a legacy of £10 left for the use of the school by Thomas Clarke, there has been purchased £500 stock in the Navy Five-per-Cents. In 1855 Mr. Benjamin Glossop, of Greystoke, and formerly of Lyulph's Tower, gave £200, which was invested in the purchase of £227 18s. 5d. Three per Cent. Consols. The total endowment of the school at present is £525. The average number of pupils in attendance is forty-five, six of whom are taught free, in consideration of the interest arising from Mr. Glossop's bequest. The school is situated near the church, and is known as the Grammar School.

There is also a girls' school situated near the church, which, in 1847, was endowed by the late Mrs. Jane Marshall, of Hallsteads, with £500, and, in 1858, with £300, left by Mrs. Pollard, of Old Church, both of which sums are invested in consols. The average number of pupils in attendance is thirty-five. The endowments of these schools are invested in the names of the following trustees:—William Marshall, Esq.; F. B. Atkinson, Esq.; Mr. William Mounsey; and Mr. Jackson Brownrigg. There are ten other acting trustees.

The lake of Ullswater, which bounds this chapelry on the south-east, has been compared with the Swiss lake of Lucerne. It is nine miles in length, and is partitioned by the mountains into three separate chambers, or reaches, as they are locally named; its extreme width is about three quarters of a mile. The first reach, commencing at the foot, is terminated on the left by Hallin Fell, which stretches forward to a promontory, from the opposite side, called Skelly Neb, upon which stands Hallsteads; the middle and longest reach is closed in by Birk Fell on the left, and on the right by Stybarrow Crag, far away above which "the dark brow of the mighty Helvellyn" rises into thin air; the little island, called House Holme, spots the water exactly at the termination of this section of the lake. The highest reach is the smallest and narrowest, but the mingled grandeur and beauty which surround it are beyond the power of the liveliest imagination to depict. Four or five islands dimple the surface, and by their diminutive size impress more deeply upon the beholder the vastness of the hills which tower above them; whilst Stybarrow Crag, and other offshoots from Helvellyn on one side, Birk Fell, and Place Fell on the other, springing from the lake's margin almost at one bound, shut in this paradise. From Pooley Bridge to Watermillock the lake lies amongst somewhat tame scenery, but from the latter place promise is given of its coming grandeur. Hallsteads is seen on the Skelley Neb promontory to the left—the grounds circling which are beautifully laid out. The wood at the foot of Hallin Fell, on the other shore, has a pleasing effect. A mile from Hallsteads, Gowbarrow Park is entered; this park, which contains upwards of a thousand acres, must attract the attention of the most careless observer, by its "grace of forest charms decayed," and innumerable groups of great beauty still remain. It belongs to Henry Howard, Esq., of Greystoke Castle, to whom it was devised by the Duke of Norfolk, his uncle. The duke's predecessor erected upon an eminence in the park a hunting box, in the castellated style, called Lyulph's Tower, commanding a splendid view of the lake, but it stands upon the site of a real old tower, named, it is said, after Lyulph, the first baron of Greystoke. Close to the tower, a stream is crossed by a small bridge, above which, in a rocky dell, is Aira Force, a waterfall of considerable volume. Two wooden bridges are thrown from bank to bank, one above, the other below, the fall. Huge rocks, in every variety of form, hem in a stream, here in a state of foaming agitation, there a dark pool, whilst over-arching trees and shrubs exclude the glare of day, and cast a solemnity of beauty over the scene, which, without exception, is the finest of the kind in the lake district. This glen is the scene of Wordsworth's "Somnambulist"—verses in which he narrates a melancholy incident to the following effect:—In a castle, which occupied the site of Lyulph's Tower, there dwelt in days long passed away, a fair damoselle, the wooed of many suitors. Sir Eglamore, the knight of her choice, was in duty bound to prove his knightly worth by seeking and accomplishing deeds of high emprise in distant lands. He sailed to other shores, and month after month disappeared without bringing tidings of either his welfare or return. The neglected Emma fell into a bewildered state of mind, her sleep became infected with his image, and sometimes in dreams she threaded her way to the holly bower on Aira stream, where she had last parted with her errant lover. One evening, when she had betaken herself thither, her faculties wrapped in sleep, Sir Eglamore unexpectedly approached the castle, and perceived her to his great astonishment; upon advancing, she awoke, and fell, with the suddenness of the shock, into the stream, from which she was rescued by the knight, only in time to hear her dying expression of belief in his constancy. Straightway he built himself a cell in the glen, and spent the remainder of his days in solitude as an anchoret. We subjoin the first and last stanzas of Wordsworth's beautiful poem:—

"List, ye who pass by Lylph's Tower
At eve; how softly then Doth Aira Force, that torrent hoarse,
Speak from the woody glen!
Fit music for a solemn vale!
And holier seems the ground,
To him who catches on the gale
The spirit of a mournful tale
Embody'd in the sound.

Wild stream of Aira, hold thy course,
Nor fear memorial lays,
Where clouds that spread in solemn shade
Are edged with golden rays!
Dear art thou to the light of heaven,
Through minister of sorrow;
Sweet is thy voice at pensive even;
And thou in lovers' heart forgiven
Shalt take thy place with Yarrow!"

Besides Hallsteads, mentioned above, this chapelry includes Old Church, Beauthorn, and Ramsbeck Lodge. Wreay is a hamlet and estate in this township, which pays tithes and church rates to Dacre.

HESKET-IN-THE-FOREST PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north and north-west by Cumberland ward, on the west by Middleseugh and Braithwaite, on the south by Hutton-in-the-Forest, on the south-east by Lazouby, and on the east by the river Eden. The soil varies from a light loam and gravel to a strong clay, and is generally fertile. There is a quarry of free-stone at Great Barrock, and one of grindstone at Ivegill. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants, who attend the markets at Carlisle and Penrith.

The entire parish is within the Duke of Devonshire's manor of Inglewood Forest, which was purchased in 1737, of the Duke of Portland, whose ancestor acquired it by grant from the crown. The Forest or Swainmote courts for the lordship are held annually on the feast of St. Barnabas (June 11), in the open air, on the great north road to Carlisle. The place where the courts are held is marked by a stone table placed before a thorn, called Court Thorn, beneath whose branches unnumbered annual courts have been held. The tenants of upwards of twenty mesne manors attend here, from whom a jury is empanelled and sworn. Dr. Todd tells us that, in old times, the chamberlain of Carlisle was foreman of this jury. This statement is confirmed by Mr. T. Denton, who, writing in 1688, says, that the townships of the north and west parts of the forest met in the morning, the chamberlain of Carlisle being foreman of their jury; the townships of the south and east parts in the afternoon, the bailiff of Penrith being the foreman; he describes the courts as being in the nature of Swainmote courts used in other forests. The great north road traverses this parish, passing over Wragmire Moss, with reference to which we have the following remark in Bishop Nicolson's MSS.:—"In 1354 a grant was made of forty days' indulgence to any that should contribute to the repairs of the highway through Wragmire, and to the support of John de Corbrig, a poor hermit, living in that part." On Wragmire Moss, until the year 1823, there was a well-known oak, long known as the last tree of Inglewood Forest, which served as a boundary mark between the manors of the Duke of Devonshire and the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle, as also between the parishes of Hesketh and St. Cuthbert, Carlisle, and was recorded as such for more than 600 years. It fell, from sheer old age, on the 13th June, 1823. Tarn Wadling, which was formerly a lake covering about 100 acres, is now good grazing land, and well stocked with cattle and sheep.

HESKET UPPER AND NETHER.

The area of this township is 2,552 acres, and its rateable value £3,288 19s. 8d. Its population in 1801 was 617; in 1811, 444; in 1821, 780; in 1831, 954; in 1841, 883; and in 1851, 806. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale; John R. Chorley, Esq.; John Unsworth, Esq.; Messrs. Robert Lambert, John Longrigg, Robert Stockbridge, Isaac Watson, Frederick Cooper, Caleb Dixon, John Milburn, George Bell, Joseph Dawson, William Siddall, — Slagg, and Mrs. Stamper.

The village of High Hesketh is situated on the great road between Carlisle and Penrith, nine miles south-south-east of the former, and the same distance north-west of the latter,

THE CHURCH.

Hesket church, dedicated to St. Mary, consists of nave and chancel, with a bell turret at the western extremity, carrying two bells. It contains a few mural monuments, one of which bears the following inscription:—"Mr. John Brown, of Mellguards, in the parish of Hesket, by an almost constant residence in that parish from the time of his birth, became not only a true patron to it in his lifetime, but willing to extend his regard to its welfare even after death, gave by his will to the church of Hesket, £200; to the school of Hesket, £200; to the school of Wreay, £200; and to the chapel of Armathwaite, £100. He died on the 15th day of July, 1763, aged sixty-nine years, and had this justice done to his memory by John Losh, Esq., his nephew and heir." Another inscription commemorates Bernard Kirkbride, Esq., of Ellerton, in this parish, the last of his name and family, who served in the army of Charles I. as lieutenant-colonel to Sir Henry Fetherstonhaugh, Knt., of the College, Kirkoswald. Hesket is said to have been in ancient times a chapelry belonging to the parish of St. Mary, Carlisle, but appears to have been recognised as a separate and distinct parish about the time of Edward III., and, having become appropriated to the see of Carlisle, one of the canons of the cathedral officiated here. According to a tradition given by Dr. Todd, a chapel was first erected here about the year 1530, when a plague, or other epidemic, raging in the country, the people brought their dead to be interred within the city of Carlisle, but the mayor and citizens shut their gates upon them, and advised the burial at a place called Walling Stone, of those who died of the visitation, promising, at the same time, that if their advice was followed, they would use every effort to induce the bishop of the diocese to have a chapel built and consecrated there. This proposition being complied with, as soon as the plague ceased a chapel was built, and Bishop Kite, attended by Sir Christopher Dacre, Sir John Lowther, and a vast concourse of the nobility and gentry of the county, did solemnly consecrate the chapel and chapelry, and by proclamation set out and fixed the bounds of the same. Without impugning the truthfulness of this tradition, it seems more probable to us that it commemorates the rebuilding of the church, rather than its first foundation—very likely the privilege of burial was then accorded to it for the first time. The patronage of the living was held by the prior and convent of Carlisle till the Dissolution, when it was transferred to the dean and chapter, in which body the patronage is still vested. As above stated, in 1763, Mr. John Brown, of Mellguards, gave £200 to this church, with which an augmentation of £200 was procured from Queen Anne's Bounty, and invested in the purchase of copyhold lands at Hesket and Millgate, which were afterwards exchanged, with the consent of the governors, for freehold lands in the parishes of Lazonby and Ainstable. In the year 1809 the living is said to have been worth only £43 a year; but in 1811 it was augmented with £200 given by the Rev. John Harrison, the incumbent; when £300 additional was obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty; £200 given by Henry Oliphant, Esq., of Broadfield House; and £200 by Robert Parker, Esq., of Heaton Norris, near Manchester; on which a Parliamentary grant of £600 was obtained; making altogether £1,500, with which land was purchased in that part of Inglewood Forest then under an enclosure. In addition to the £200 above-mentioned, the incumbent expended upwards of £950 in sub-dividing the land, and erecting upon it a good parsonage house. The parish registers commence in 1674. The living, a perpetual curacy, is now worth about £100 a year.

INCUMBENTS.—Andrew Bell, occurs in 1764; Wm. Kirkbride, 1764; John Harrison, 1768; William Harrison, 1829.

High Hesket school is a neat stone building, erected by subscription in 1853, at a cost of about £300. It will accommodate about 100 scholars; the average attendance is 45. It is supported by an endowment (See Charities), and the quarter pence of the children.

Armathwaite school, a stone building erected by subscription in 1851, at a cost of £120, will accommodate about seventy children. It is supported by the quarter pence of the scholars and the interest of £70 left by the late Mr. John Baxter.

CHARITIES.

School.—John Brown, by will, dated March 27th, 1763, left to his executors £600 in trust, to pay the interest of £200 part thereof, for and towards increasing the salary or stipend of the schoolmaster of Hesket school yearly for ever. This legacy is now vested in the New Three per Cent. Consols, under the management of six trustees, inclusive of the incumbent for the time being, and the interest, amounting to £9 per annum, is paid to the schoolmaster. There is also a further sum of £50, the interest of which, at four and a half per cent, is also paid to the schoolmaster. This appears to have been an ancient school stock, but we could not discover when or in what manner it originated. In addition to these funds Robert Parker, Esq., of Heaton Norris, near Manchester, left £100 to this school, which was paid by his executor, Mr. Robert Parker.

Brown's Bequest for the Minister.—The above-named

John Brown also left £200 for the purpose of obtaining Queen Anne's bounty for the church of Hesket.

Brown's Bequest for the Curate of Armthwaite Chapelry.—The same John Brown also left £100 for the purpose of obtaining Queen Anne's bounty for the chapel of Armthwaite in this parish. This legacy was laid out, with the further sum of £200 from Queen Anne's bounty, in the purchase of land in the parish of Ainstable, of which the incumbent of the chapelry has the management and benefit.

Scott's Charity for the Poor.—John Scott, by will, dated May 10, 1759, bequeathed to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Hesket £50 to be placed out in good security, and one moiety of the interest to be distributed amongst the poorest of the inhabitants of Plumpton-street, and the other moiety amongst the most needy of the rest of the parish of Hesket, but no part of it to any that should have pay out of the parish.

Scott's Charity for Education.—Three children of Plumpton-street, and one of Hallrigg, in this parish, are entitled to be sent free to the school at Salkeld Gates, on account of the bequest of the same John Scott.

Armthwaite is one of the principal mense manors in this parish, and has several appendages, the tenants of which places do suit and service to the court at Armthwaite. It is a mixed manor consisting of freeholders and customary tenants at Armthwaite, Nether Southwaite, Coathill, Cumwhinton, and Castle Carrock. Armthwaite anciently belonged to the Skeltons, who appear to have been originally of Skelton, and frequently represented the county and city of Carlisle in Parliament. John Skelton, who had been several times sheriff, and had represented the county in Parliament in the reign of Henry VI. had a grant from the crown in the first year of the reign of Edward IV. of 100 acres of the forest at the place called Armthwaite Bank. It is not certain whether the Skeltons became possessed of the castle estate before or after the grant. The two estates are mentioned separately in an inquisition taken in the reign of Henry VIII. John Skelton, poet laureate to the monarch, is said to have been a younger brother of this family, and to have been born at Armthwaite. The Skeltons enjoyed this estate till the year 1712, when it was sold by Richard Skelton, Esq., to William Sanderson, Esq., collateral ancestor of Robert Sanderson Milbourne, Esq., on whose demise, in 1822, the manor was held by trustees until 1846, when it was purchased by the Earl of Lonsdale, the present proprietor.

The Castle of Armthwaite stands upon the site of an ancient fortress, upon a rock, washed by the river

Eden. It has a modern front of hewn stone, with a new wing consisting of offices. Its situation has been much admired, commanding, as it does, for half a mile, a view of the river, flanked on each side with rocks and well wooded banks.

THE CHAPEL.

Armthwaite chapel, which is situate on an eminence near the castle, is a very rude edifice, erected previous to 1658 upon the site of a previous chapel, by Richard Skelton, Esq., who endowed it with £100, besides which it has received £100 from Mr. John Brown, of Mellguards; £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty; and £100 from the Countess Dowager Gower; with these sums lands have been purchased in the parishes of Ainstable and Lazonby. The living, a donative, is in the incumbency of the Rev. William Hudson.

Skelton of Armthwaite.

The family of Skelton, of Armthwaite Castle, was one of great antiquity. The first of them on record is,

JOHN DE SKELTON, who was knight of the shire for Cumberland, in the Parliament held at Lincoln, in the 10th Edward II. ADAM DE SKELTON represented the same county in Parliament, in the 19th Edward II.

JOHN DE SKELTON was member for the county, in the Parliament held at London, in the 15th Edward II., and in that held at York, 2nd Edward III.

RICHARD DE SKELTON was Burgess for the city of Carlisle, in the Parliament held at Winchester, in the 4th Edward III.

TIGGAS DE SKELTON was knight of the shire in the 11th Edward III.

CLEMENT DE SKELTON was knight of the shire in 2nd, 6th, 17th, and 20th Richard II. In the 16th year of the same king Sir Robert de Mulester, lord of Hayton, granted to Sir Clement de Skelton, Knight, and Thomas de Skelton, several lands in Threapland, Alderscogh, and Blennerhasset. He married Johanna, daughter of Sir Giles de Orton.

JOHN DE SKELTON was member of Parliament for the county, in the 3rd and 8th of Henry IV., and in the 1st Henry VI. In the 7th Henry VI. Sir William Clifford granted to Sir John Skelton, Knight, several lands in Whitting and Topenhow; to which grant Richard Skelton, then sheriff of Cumberland, was witness; this Richard then lived at Branthwaite. He was present with King Henry V. in France at the famous battle of Agincourt, and probably was a younger brother of the family. In the list of the gentry of Cumberland returned by the commissioners in (1433) the 12th Henry VI., the following names occur, John Skelton, and John de Skelton.

JOHN SKELTON, Esq., was sheriff of the county in the 10th, 19th, 24th, and 29th Henry VI. and represented the said county in Parliament, in the 25th Henry VI. He was retained by Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, to serve him in the wars. For by a deed in the 2nd year of Henry VI. the duke granted to him an annuity of £20, on condition to serve him in the wars during life. He had a grant from the crown in the 1st of Edward IV. of 100 acres of the forest of Inglewood, at a place called Armthwaite Bank.

ROBERT SKELTON, Esq., was representative of the city of Carlisle in Parliament, in the 12th Edward IV.

JOHN SKELTON, Esq., was sheriff of Cumberland, in the 2d Henry VIII. In the 35th Henry VIII. it was found by inquisition, that John Skelton, of Armathwaite, held the capital messuage of Arminthwaite, in the Forest of Inglewood, as a purpresture, with the appurtenances, of the king in capite, by the service of rendering to the king yearly by the hands of the sheriff of Cumberland, a free rent of 80s.; and that he held one close, called Southwaite, in the said forest, of the said lord the king, by the service of paying 22s. 2½d. yearly, to the said lord the king, by the hands of the receiver of the forest; and 100 acres in Arminthwaite Bank, of the said lord the king, in socage, paying yearly to the said lord the king 5s. 4d., by the hand of the said receiver of the forest; also, that he held of the said lord the king the manor of Threapland, as of the manor of Peapcastle, by knight's service, rendering yearly to the said lord the king 4s. 6d. cornage, 8d. seawake, and pature of the sergeants.

JOHN SKELTON, of Branthwaite, was called out, and to furnish "four horse," for the border service, in 1543.

WILLIAM SKELTON, Esq., married Anne, daughter of William Leigh, Esq., of Isell Hall, in the county of Cumberland. He died 29th August, 27th Elizabeth, and was succeeded by his son, LANCELOT SKELTON, Esq., who was upwards of twenty years of age at the time of his father's decease. He married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Dalton, Esq., of Dalton Hall, in the county of Cumberland, by Eleanor, his wife, daughter and co-heiress of Thomas Carlisle, Esq., of Carlisle. He died on the 28th of December, 20th James I., in the sixty-third year of his age, and was succeeded by his son and heir,

JOHN SKELTON, Esq., who was in the commission of the peace for Cumberland, in the 1st year of King Charles I. He married, firstly, Julian, daughter of Christopher Musgrave, Esq., son and heir of Sir Simon Musgrave, Knt., of Edenhall, and by her had issue,

i. Richard, his successor.

He married, secondly, Barbara, daughter of — Fletcher, of Cockerthwaite, and had issue, four sons, and two daughters.

ii. Lancelot.

iii. John.

iv. William.

v. Marmaduke.

i. Thomas, married to Thomas Waindick, Esq., of Warwick, 1661, in the county of Cumberland, and had issue,

i. John, baptised 18th October, 1670, buried 17th February, 1690.

ii. Mary, married to John Sibson, Esq., of Crimdale, in the county of Cumberland, and had issue, Maudslow, baptised 29th July, 1671.

Frances, baptised 17th September, 1672.

Mary Sibson, was buried 23rd January, 1647.

Mr. Skelton died about the year 1647, and was buried the 14th of March.

RICHARD SKELTON, Esq., son and heir, married Lettice, daughter of — Burdett, Esq., of Bramcote, in the county of Warwick, and sister of Sir Thomas Burdett, Bart., of the same place, and by her had issue,

i. John, his successor.

ii. Philip, who died young, and was buried 30th November, 1640.

i. Catherine, married to William Harrington, of Wooloaks, in the county of Cumberland.

ii. Julian, married 3rd May, 1668, to George Fothergill, Esq., of Tarnhouse, in Ravenscraide, co. Westmoreland, and had issue,

i. Richard, baptised 5th June, 1659.

ii. Elizabeth, baptised 6th March, 1659.

This Richard was sixty-five years of age at the visitation of Sir William Dugdale, in 1665. He built a mansion-house on his father's estate at Southwaite, in the year 1640. He re-built the chapel at Armathwaite, and by his will, dated in 1663, endowed it with £100.

JOHN SKELTON, Esq., son and heir of Richard, married Elizabeth, daughter of Gerard Salvin, Esq., of Croxdale, in the county of Palatine of Durham, and had issue,

i. RICHARD, his successor.

ii. Gerard, baptised 12th February, 1659.

iii. John, baptised 2nd September, 1658.

iv. Philip.

i. Mary, baptised 14th July, 1657.

ii. Lettice, baptised 1st September, 1656.

iii. Elizabeth, baptised 1st March, 1656.

RICHARD SKELTON, Esq., son and heir of John, was baptised 18th September, 1651, he married Mary, daughter of George Meynell, Esq., of Dalton Royal, in the county of York, and had issue ten sons and six daughters,

i. JOHN.

vi. Richard.

vii. Roger.

ii. George.

viii. James.

ix. Ralph.

iii. Francis.

x. Nicholas.

xi. Joseph.

iv. Grace.

v. Olive.

iii. Mary.

vi. Ann.

ii. Frances.

iv. Elizabeth.

v. John.

This Richard Skelton was the last of his ancient family who possessed the Armthwaite estates. In the year 1712 he sold them to William Sanderson, Esq.

Arms.—Az, on a fess, arg. between three fleurs de lis, or, a Cornish chough ppr.

The village of Heskett Nether, forming part of the township called Upper and Nether Heskett, is about seven and a half miles south-south-east of Carlisle. A few of the houses are in the adjoining township of Petteril Crooks.

Nunclose is a manor in this township which William Rufus, in the second year of his reign; granted to the Benedictine community of Armthwaite, in the adjoining parish of Ainstable. After the suppression of the monastic institutions, Nunclose was granted by Edward VI., in 1552, to William Grene, in whose family it continued for several generations. Sir John Lowther having become possessed of it by purchase, exchanged it for other lands in 1695 with Christopher Dalton, Esq., of Acorn Bank, of whose descendant, Sir William Dalton, it was purchased in 1767 by William Milbourne, Esq., of Armthwaite Castle. It is now the property of the Earl of Lonsdale.

Aiket Gate is another manor in this township, which having been held by the Milbournes, is now the property of the Earl of Lonsdale. The hamlet of Aiket Gate is about half a mile west of Low Heskett. In its neighbourhood is Tarn Wadling, formerly a lake covering about 100 acres, but which now forms good grazing land, well stocked with sheep and cattle. It occurs in connection with the romance of King Arthur. On a lofty eminence near this tarn there formerly stood the remains of a fortress called Castle Hewen, which is thus described by Leland:—"In the forest of Inglewood, about six miles from Carluel, appere ruins of a castle call'd Castle Hewen." The neighbouring tenants pay an annual rent to the lord of the manor as Castle Hewen Rent.

Old Town is a hamlet in this township, a quarter of a mile south of Heskett.

CALTHWAITE.

Calthwaite township comprises an area of 1,876 acres, and its rateable value is £2,815 18s. 2d. The number of its inhabitants was not returned separately previous to 1821, in which year it was 168; in 1831 it was 210; in 1841, 206; and in 1851, 244. It is intersected by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway. The landowners are Sir Henry R. F. Vane, Bart.; the trustees of the late John Wormworld, Esq.; the trustees of the late R. Jameson, Esq.; Messrs. John Clayton, Thomas Furness, John P. Wells, Fletcher Wells, Joseph Lazonby, and James Parkins.

The village of Calthwaite is about seven miles north-by-west of Penrith, on the west side of the Petteril, near a good bridge of one arch, which was built by subscription in 1793. Here is a school, a small stone building, erected by subscription in 1852; it is supported by the quarter pence of the children, and has an average attendance of about thirty pupils.

Calthwaite Hall occupies a beautiful situation contiguous to the village, commanding an extensive view of the Fells and the surrounding country. It is of cut stone in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and cost £7,000. It is now the property of the Wormworld family.

Calthwaite Field House and Sceugh Dyke are in this township.

ITONFIELD.

The area of Itonfield is 2,940 acres, and its rateable value £2,398 1s. 8d. Its population was returned with that of Calthwaite and Plumpton Street till 1821, in which year it was 210; in 1831, it was 234; in 1841, 222; and in 1851, 236. The landowners are William Marshall, Esq.; Captain Martin; G. H. Oliphant, Esq.; Messrs. James Munday, John Pollock, John Williamson, John Dufton, Robert Simpson, Robert Lumley, George Rayson, and Miss Parker. This township comprises the hamlets of Broadfield and Sceugh Head, with a few dispersed dwellings, lying about three miles west of High Heskett, and from five to seven miles north-east of Heskett Newmarket. Broadfield House is the seat of G. H. Oliphant, Esq.

PETTERIL CROOKS.

This township contains 4,916 acres, and its rateable value is £7,158 12s. 5d. The population in 1801 was 349; in 1811, 423; in 1821, 513; in 1831, 544; in 1841, 517; and in 1851, 582. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township. Agriculture is the chief employment of the inhabitants, but there is a saw mill at Southwaite, near the railway station, the property of William James, Esq. The landowners here are William James, Esq.; J. P. Fletcher, Esq.; G. H. Oliphant, Esq.; the trustees of the late James Losh, Esq.; the trustees of the late George Cowan, Esq.; Messrs. Thomas Armstrong, Joseph Topping, John Millburn, John F. Bowman, John Carriek, Joseph Scott, Thomas Kirkbride, Thomas Topping, Robert Sealby, John Robinson, and William Robinson.

Petteril Crooks lies on both sides of the river Petteril, and on the west side of High and Low Heskett, a portion of the latter being comprised in this township. It contains the hamlets of Birthwaite, Mellguards, Petteril Bank, Sewell Houses, and Southwaite, besides the handsome villa called Barrock Lodge, the seat of William James, Esq.

The inhabitants here are fully impressed with the idea that a blacksmith, at Southwaite, cures the tooth ache, or, as they are wont to say, charms it away. The charm is conveyed through the medium of a cork, in which is placed the stump of a horse nail. The person afflicted with the tooth ache must carry this cork about his person, if not the teeth are sure to ache.

The single houses having particular names here are Barrock Park, Lothian Gill, Wreay Hall, Wraguire, Petteril Grange, High House, Intact, East View, and Barrock Side.

Barrock, the seat of William James, Esq., late M.P. for Cumberland, has successively passed through the families of the Skeltons, the dukes of Portland, and the Grabams, from which last it has come to its present owner. The mansion was built at three several times. The centre was a yeoman's, or what is called in Cumberland, a statesman's house, erected by one Skelton, the north front was built by the late owner, James Graham, Esq., and the south front by the gentleman now possessing it. The whole forms a building in the plain style of villa architecture; rather pleasing to the eye than striking. It stands in a park of 200 acres, and in a valley, either side of which is covered with fine old oaks. From the Carlisle and London roads the house is approached by an avenue of limes and beeches, three quarters of a mile in length; while through the valley flows the little river Petteril, for about three miles, or even more. The north side of the park is intersected by the Carlisle and Lancaster railway, presenting a delightful prospect to the traveller, though we can hardly help grieving upon these inroads upon grounds so truly beautiful.

James of Barrock and West Auckland.

This family derives its descent from

JOHN JAMES, of West Auckland, born 1694, died, age 83 1747, leaving (by Jane, his wife) three daughters, Anne, wife of Joseph Appleby; Jane, wife of William Wilson; and Margaret, who died unmarried; and two sons, William James, who married and had issue, and

JOHN JAMES, of West Auckland and Killerly, who, by his wife, Jane, daughter of Thomas Todd, Esq., of Whorlton, co. York, by Jane Hunter his wife, had issue

- i. JOHN, of West Auckland and Kill riv., born 1759; married Sarah, daughter of Thomas Ward, Esq., of Locksley.
- ii. William, of Finch House, near Liverpool, an eminent West India merchant, born 1784, married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of the Rev. Mr. Evans, who died 1789, and had issue,

1. WILLIAM EVANS, of whom presently.
2. John James, of Houghton, Lancs., co. Hants, married Margaret, daughter of William Wilson, Esq., of Liverpool, and had issue,

Elizabeth Althea, married to Rev. John Penleaze, rector of Black Torrington, co. Devon.

 Mary Frances, married to Hon. G. Rolle Walpole Trevellick, capt. R.N., son of George, 15th Baron Clinton.

1. Althea, married to Richard Walker, Esq., of Liverpool.

- i. Jane, married James Allen, Esq., and had issue.

WILLIAM EVANS JAMES, born 1768 (son of William James, of Finch House), died 1795, in his father's lifetime. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas Ashton, Esq., of Woolton Hall, Lancashire, by Mary, his wife, daughter and heiress of John Philipot, Esq., of Chester, grandson and heir of the Rev. Matthew Henry, author of a "Commentary on the Bible," and Mary Warburton, his wife, sole heiress of the WARBURTONS of Hefferton Grange, a younger branch of the great Cheshire House of WARBURTON of Warburton and Arley. This lady re-married Lieut.-colonel George M. Williams. By her first husband she had issue,

- i. WILLIAM, now of Barrock.
 - ii. John, of Burnville, co. Devon, J.P. and D.L., born 1794; died 1894; married lady Anne, daughter of Thomas Herring, Esq.; and Emily, dau. of the Bishop of St. Asaph, and had issue,
1. EVANS LUXMORE JAMES, born 1826.
 2. Althea, married Fergus, eldest son of the Rev. Fergus Graham, rector of Arthuret, brother of the first Sir James Graham, Bart., of Netherby.

WILLIAM JAMES, Esq., of Barrock, J.P., and D.L., high sheriff in 1827, M.P. for Carlisle and East Cumberland successively from 1820 to 1847, married February, 1816, Fanny, daughter of William Calton Rutson, Esq., of Allerton, co. Lancaster, and sister of William Rutson, Esq., of Newby Wiske and Nunnington Hall, high sheriff of Yorkshire in 1851, and has issue,

- i. WILLIAM EDWARD, born 7th December, 1816, late captain in the 34th Regiment, married, September, 1841, Elizabeth, daughter of William Hys, Esq., of Rysoppe, co. Durham, and has issue,

1. William Edward Ashton, born 1842.
2. Cecil Arthur Rutson.
3. Evans Henry Murchison.
4. Fanny Herbert.
1. Lucy Caroline.
2. Frances Althea.
3. Edith Priscilla.

- ii. Francis Herbert, born April, 1822; living in Jamaica.

- iii. John Henry, born 18th September, 1826; fellow of Brazenose College, Oxford; married July, 1853, Jane Ramsden, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Ramsden, Ashworth, of the family of ASHWORTH of Ashworth, co. Lancaster, and has issue, Janet Marion, born July, 1854.

- iv. Alfred, born 20th August, 1832.

1. Caroline.
- ii. Frances Adela.

Arms.—Quarterly: 1st and 4th, az. a dolphin, embowed, ppr. for James; 2nd and 3rd, arg. three boars' heads, couped, sa., langued and armed, gu., for Evans.

Crest.—A bull, passant, ppr.

Motto.—Vincit amor patria.

PLUMPTON STREET.

Plumpton Street township comprises an area of 2,677 acres, and its rateable value is £5,015 10s. It contained in 1821, 128 inhabitants; in 1831, 165; in 1841, 190; and in 1851, 183. The township is intersected by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway. The landowners here are the Earl of Lonsdale; R. W. Saunders, Esq.; Sir Henry R. Vane, Bart.; F. L. B. Dykes, Esq.; William N. Hodgson, Esq.; W. Blamire, Esq.; Thos. Scott, Esq.; George Robinson, Esq.; J. Fawcett, Esq.; Messrs. Isaac Carr, W. Kirkbride, John Gray, Thomas Howson, and William Heskett. There is no hamlet or village in this township, the inhabitants reside in detached houses, about three and a half miles south of High Heskett.

Parker of Petteril Green.

The family of Parker has long been seated at Old Town, in Cumberland.

The Rev. JOHN PARKER, curate of Selside, in Westmoreland, third son of Christopher Parker, Esq., of Old Town, by Agnes Holme, his wife, born 27th October, 1737; married 27th December, 1764, Mary, daughter of Thomas Nelson, Esq., of Orton, in Westmoreland, and had issue,

- i. CHRISTOPHER, his heir, of Petteril Green.
1. Elizabeth, married to Michael Branthwaite, Esq., of Carlisle.
- ii. Isabella, married to the Rev. George Bowness, rector of Rokeby.
- iii. Eleanor, married to the Rev. Robert Birkett, vicar of Kellor.

Mr. Parker died 30th September, 1770, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

CHRISTOPHER PARKER, Esq., of Petteril Green, J.P., high-sheriff, 1830, born 24th August, 1775; married, firstly, 2nd October, 1806, Mary, daughter of Mr. John Chadwick, of Manchester, and by her had issue,

- i. ROBERT HOLME, born 17th November, 1812.
- ii. Mary Jane, married 29th January, 1839, to Thomas Dixon, Esq.
- iii. Sarah.

He married, secondly, 27th September, 1815, Margaret, daughter of Robert Jefferson, Esq., of Stone Raise, and had issue,

- i. Christopher, born 13th December, 1816.
- ii. Thomas Jefferson, born 10th April, 1818.
- iii. William, born 27th August, 1819.

iv. Francis, born 9th December, 1814.

v. Nelson, born 21st March, 1827.

i. Margaret.

ii. Alice Elizabeth.

He married, thirdly, 23rd April, 1833, Mary, relict of the late Robert Sanderson Milbourne, Esq., of Armathwaite Castle, and daughter of Isaac Parker, Esq., of Moorhouse Hill.

Arms.—Az., two bars, gemelle, arg., between three bucks' heads, erased, or, all between two branches, of the last, a crescent for difference.

Crest.—A cubit arm, vested, vert, cuff, arg., holding in the hand the attitude of a stag, and a bow and arrow, saltirewise, all ppr.

Motto.—Virtutis alimentum honos.

HUTTON-IN-THE-FOREST PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the east and north by Hesketh-in-the-Forest, on the west by Skelton, and on the south by Newton Reigny. It possesses a good soil incumbent on clay, and is naturally fertile in grass: the south end of the parish is elevated and undulated, but the northern part is low and level. The commons were enclosed under the act of 1803, for enclosing the forest of Ingleswood. The parish comprises the townships of Hutton and Thomas Close. The inhabitants are entirely engaged in agricultural pursuits, and attend the markets at Peurith. The rateable value of the parish is £2,342, and its area 2,800 acres.

HUTTON-IN-THE-FOREST.

The number of inhabitants in this township in 1801 was returned with that of Thomas Close, the united population being 200; in 1811, that of Hutton-in-the-Forest alone was 159; in 1821, 157; in 1831, 167; in 1841, 165; and in 1851, 170, who chiefly reside at Hutton End and New Rent.

The manor of Hutton appears to have been held at an early period by the family of Hoton, or Hutton, as it was subsequently written, and who took their name from the place. According to Denton they were bow-bearers and rangers of the forest of Ingleswood, and it is probable that in consequence of that office they assumed for their arms a bugle horn. Dr. Todd tells us that, "in the escheate roll in the 5th Henry VII. (1489-90) it is found, that the manor of Hutton is holden of the king in capite, by the service of keeping the forest in the Hay of our lord the king in Plumpton; and further, by the service of holding the stirrup of the king's saddle, whilst he mounts his horse in the castle of Carlisle, and paying yearly into the king's exchequer of Carlisle 33s. 4d., by the hands of the sheriff." This place continued long in a family bearing the local name. In the reign of Edward I. Thomas, son and heir of John de Hutton-in-the-Forest, gave and confirmed to Henry de Hutton, chaplain, one moiety of the capital messuage of the manor of Hutton, with twenty acres of land, called the "Flat," with a mill at Hutton, and suit to the same belonging. Edward III., in 1342, in consideration of the good service that Thomas de Hutton had rendered him in the Scottish wars, restored to him and his heirs the bailiwick and office of keeping the king's land at Plumpton. And, in the reign of Richard II., William de Hutton enjoyed this place, under the style of "forester of the king's lands and keeper of the Hay of Plumpton, which that king and his successor, Henry IV., confirmed to him and his heirs." In the 35th Henry VIII. (1543-4), amongst the knight's fees in Cumberland, it appears that William Hutton held the manor of Hutton-in-the-Forest, of the king in capite, by knight's service, and rendering to the king yearly 40s., by the hands of the sheriff of Cumberland. In the reign of James I. Thomas Hutton, Esq., sold this estate to Sir Richard Fletcher, Knt., of Cockermouth, from whom it has descended to the present lord, Sir Henry Ralph Fletcher Vane, Bart., in addition to whom, Messrs. John Unthank and Joseph Howson are landowners.

Hutton Hall, the seat of Sir H. R. Fletcher Vane, is a handsome mansion, standing on a fine eminence, surrounded by richly cultivated lands and woods.

Fletcher of Cockermouth and Hutton.

The first of this family ew meet with is

WILLIAM FLETCHER, merchant, of Cockermouth. He had issue,

HENRY FLETCHER, merchant, of Cockermouth, who, in 1658, had the honour of entertaining Mary Queen of Scots, during her stay in that town. His issue were, besides three daughters,

- i. William, who purchased Moresby and Distington, and was ancestor to the Fletchers of Moresby, a branch of the family which became extinct, by the decease of Thomas Fletcher, Esq., before the middle of the last century.
- ii. Lancelot, from whom descended the Fletchers of Tallantire.
- iii. James, died without issue.
- iv. John, died without issue.
- v. Henry, died without issue.
- vi. THOMAS, his successor.
- vii. Robert.

Mr. Fletcher died in the 16th Elizabeth (1573-4), and was succeeded by his sixth son,

THOMAS FLETCHER, Esq., who married Jane, daughter and heiress of — Bullen, Esq., and by her had issue, besides four daughters,—

- i. RICHARD, his successor.
- ii. Thomas, a merchant in London.
- iii. Philip, grandchild of Richard, who married a daughter and heiress of — Maresfield, Esq., of Clee Hall, and was succeeded by the Fletchers of Clee.
- iv. Lancelot.
- v. Henry.

Mr. Fletcher was succeeded by his eldest son,

SIR RICHARD FLETCHER, Knt., who purchased Hutton, and made it his residence. Sir Richard married first, a daughter of — Richmond, Esq., by whom he had issue, Thomas, Frances, and Mary, all of whom died unmarried. By his second wife, Barbara, daughter of Henry Crackenthorpe, Esq., of Newbiggin, he had issue,

- i. HENRY, his successor.
- ii. Bridget, married John Patrickson, Esq., of Calder Abbey.
- iii. Isabel, married Richard Lowther, Esq., of Ingleton, co. York.
- iv. Mary, married Sir John Lowther, Bart., of Lowther.
- v. Catherine, married Thomas Lister, Esq., of Gisborne, co. York.
- vi. Winifred, married, 1stly, George Brathwaite, Esq., of Warcop, Westmoreland; 2ndly, Sir Richard Dacre, Knt.; and 3rdly, Christopher Lister, Esq.

On the demise of Sir Richard, he was succeeded by his eldest son,

SIR HENRY FLETCHER, Bart., of Hutton, who was sheriff of the county in 1635 and 1642. He was created a baronet by Charles I. in 1640. Sir Henry married Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir George Dalston, Bart., of Dalston, who survived him. He raised a regiment for Charles I. chiefly at his own expense, and was killed in 1645, at the battle of Rowton Heath, near Chester. Sir Henry had issue,

- i. Richard, who died unmarried.
- ii. GEORGE, his successor.
- iii. Henry, who died young.
- iv. Barbara, married to Sir Daniel Fleming Knt., of Rydal.
- v. Frances, married William Fletcher, Esq., of Moresby.
- vi. Bridget, married Christopher Dalston, Esq., of Acorn Bank.

Sir Henry was succeeded by his second son,

SIR GEORGE FLETCHER, Bart., of Hutton, who was a minor at the time of his father's decease. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford. Sir George was twice married; first to Alice, daughter of Hugh Earl of Coleraine, by whom he had issue,

- i. HENRY, his heir.
 - ii. Lucy, married to Francis, son of Sir Thomas Bowes.
 - iii. Catherine, married to Lionel Vane, Esq., son of Sir Lionel Vane, of Long Newton, co. Durham.
 - iv. Alice, who died unmarried, in 1711.
- Sir George, married secondly, the Lady Mary Johnston, daughter of the Earl of Annandale, and widow of Sir George Graham, Bart., of Netherby. By her he had issue,
- i. George, a colonel who served in the army abroad.
 - ii. Thomas, a merchant in London.
 - i. Susanna.
 - ii. Mary.

These four all died without issue. Sir George was knight of the shire for Cumberland nearly forty years. He was succeeded by his eldest son by his first wife, SIR HENRY FLETCHER, Bart., of Hutton. This gentleman embraced the Catholic religion, and becoming weary of public life, he entered a monastery of English monks at Douay in Flanders, where he died, and thus the title and male line of the elder branch of the family became extinct. Previous to his going abroad, Sir Henry settled all his property on a distant relative, Thomas Fletcher, Esq., of Moresby, reserving only for himself a small competency for life. After his decease, his sisters, as heirs-at-law, commenced a suit in chancery for the whole estate, which was at length terminated by an agreement that Thomas Fletcher, Esq., should enjoy Hutton and some other estates for life, and if he died without issue, then Henry Fletcher Vane, Esq., nephew of the late Sir Henry Fletcher, should succeed to the whole.

Arms.—Arg., a cross engrailed sa., between four rounds of the cord, each charged with a plume of the field.

Crest.—A horse's head arg., charged with a trefoil gu.

Vane of Hutton Hall.

The Vane family derives its origin from HOWELL AP VANE, Esq., of Monmouthshire, from whom lineally descended,

SIR HENRY VANE, who received the honour of knighthood for his distinguished bravery at the battle of Poitiers. Sir Henry married Grace, daughter and heiress of Sir Stephen de la Leke, and was succeeded by his son,

JOHN VANE, Esq. This gentleman married Isabel, daughter of Walter Belfot, Esq., and co-heiress of Martin St. Owen, Esq.; from which marriage descended,

HENRY VANE, Esq., who changed his surname to Fane, and marrying Isabel, daughter and co-heiress of Henry Persall, Esq., left three sons at his decease, towards the close of the fifteenth century. The youngest of whom,

JOHN FANE, Esq., of Hilden, co. Kent, married Dorothy, daughter of John Dartnall, Esq., by whom he had four sons and three daughters. From the eldest son,

RICHARD FANE, Esq., of Badshill, Kent, the earls of Westmoreland descend; and the youngest,

JOHN FANE, Esq., of Tunbridge, having married Joan, daughter and heiress of Sir Edward Hawte, Knt., was succeeded by his eldest son,

HENRY FANE, Esq., of Hadlee, co. Kent, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry White, Esq., of Christchurch, co. Southampton, and relict of Sir John Goodsall, Knt., and was succeeded by his only son,

¹ See Cockermouth, page 302.

HENRY FANE, Esq., of Hadloe, who married, firstly, Mary, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Fane, by whom he had no issue; and, secondly, Margaret, daughter of Roger Twisden, Esq., of East Peckham; and dying in 1596, was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir HENRY FANE, of Raby Castle, co. Durham, cofferer to King Charles I., who resumed the ancient surname of VANE. This gentleman married Frances, daughter and co-heiress of Thomas Darey, Esq., of Tolleshunt Darey, co. Essex, by whom he had fourteen children; from the eldest of whom, Sir Henry Vane, so celebrated during the Protectorate, descends the Duke of Cleveland; while the second son,

Sir GEORGE VANE, Knt., of Long Newton, co. Durham, marrying Elizabeth, only daughter and heiress of Sir Lionel Maddison, Knt., and dying in 1679, left four sons, the third of whom,

LIONEL VANE, Esq., of Long Newton, co. Durham, married Catherine, daughter of Sir George Fletcher, Bart., (a grand-daughter, maternally, of Hugh Hare, 1st Viscount Coleraine, a dignity which expired with the third lord, in 1749,) by whom he had issue,

i. GEORGE, whose only son, the Rev. HENRY VANE, was created a baronet, in 1782, and married Frances, daughter and heir of John Tempess, Esq., of Sherburn, co. Durham, and had an only son, Sir HENRY VANE, the second baronet, who assumed the surname of TEMPESS, and died August 1st, 1815, when the baronetcy expired, he having left an only child, FRANCES ANNE, married to Charles William, late Marquis of Londonderry, father, by her, of the present Earl VANE.

ii. HENRY, who inherited the estates of his mother's family, and in consequence assumed the surname of Fletcher. He died, unmarried, in 1701.

iii. WALTER, of whom presently.

iv. Lionel, who married and had issue.

i. Mary, married to John Spearman, Esq., of Sedgfield, co. Durham.

The third son,

WALTER VANE, Esq., upon the demise of his elder brother, succeeded to the Hutton estates, and assumed, in consequence, the additional surname of FLETCHER. This gentleman married, firstly, Mercy, daughter of Samuel Wright, Esq., of Wanstead, co. Essex, by whom he had an only son, his successor; and, secondly, Mary Anne, only daughter and co-heiress of Godfrey Woodward, Esq., of Putney, by whom he had issue,

i. GODFREY WOODWARD, of Twyford, co. Hants; who married, in April, 1769, Sarah, daughter of James Burch, Esq., of Coventry, and had issue, with a daughter, Sarah, three sons,

1. William Walter. 2. George. 3. Godfrey.

ii. Walter, of London, died unmarried.

i. Catherine, married in September, 1764, to Arthur Molesworth, Esq., of Bath.

ii. Frances, married in April, 1765, to Charles Palmer, Esq., and died August 21st, 1777.

iii. Mary Anne, died unmarried.

He died in 1775, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

LIONEL WRIGHT FLETCHER VANE, Esq., of Hutton Hall, born June 28th, 1723, who was created a baronet June 10th, 1786. He married Rachel, daughter of David Griffith, Esq., of Llandkennon, co. Carmarthen, by whom he had issue,

i. FREDERICK, second baronet.

ii. Walter, who died unmarried.

i. Catherine, died December 8th, 1818.

ii. Rachel, married to William Walter Vane, Esq., of Canfield Hall, co. Essex; and died January 8th, 1844.

Sir Lionel was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir FREDERICK, second baronet, born February 27th, 1760; who married March 9th, 1797, Hannah, daughter of John Bowerbank, Esq., of Johnby, co. Cumberland, by whom he had issue, i. Walter, unmarried, who died of wounds received in the sortie from Bayonne, in 1814.

ii. FRANCIS, third baronet.

iii. Frederick Henry, an officer in the army; born May 18th, 1807.

i. Hannah.

ii. Sophia Mary.

Sir Frederick died in March, 1832, and was succeeded by his eldest surviving son,

Sir FREDERICK, third baronet; born March 20th, 1797; married April 10th, 1833, Diana Olivia, third daughter of Charles George Beauclerk, Esq., of St. Leonard's Lodge, Horsham, and had issue,

i. HENRY RALPH, present baronet.

ii. Frederick Fletcher, born December 12th, 1832.

i. Gertrude Elizabeth.

Sir Francis died February 15th, 1843, and was succeeded by his son, Sir HENRY RALPH FLETCHER, fourth baronet, born January 13th, 1830.

Creation.—June 10th, 1786.

Arms.—Az., three sinister gauntlets, two and one, or.

Crest.—A dexter gauntlet, erect, holding a sword, all ppr, pommel and hilt, or.

Seats.—Hutton Hall and Armsallwaite.

The small manor of Morton in the northern part of this parish is the property of the Duke of Devonshire.

THE CHURCH.

Hutton church, dedicated to St. James, is situated near the hall. It was erected in 1714 upon the site of a previous church, and consists of a nave and chancel, with bell turret at the west end. There is a cross at the east end of the nave, which probably belongs to the previous church. In the chancel are several mural monuments to members of the Vane and Fletcher families. Under a flat arched recess, on the north side, is a tomb with a cross-florée; and in the church-yard there is a gravestone, bearing a cross-florée, on one side of which is a large horn, on the other a shield charged with a crescent on a canton; it is supposed to mark the last resting place of one of the Hutton family. According to Bishop Nicolson, this church was anciently called the chapel of Hutton-in-the-Forest, but it has been for several ages reputed a rectory. Robert de Vaux gave the church and one carucate of land at Hutton to the priory of St. Mary, Carlisle, which grant was confirmed by Henry II. and afterwards by Edward II. In the taxation of Pope Nicholas, the church is valued at £4 2s. 4d.; and in the reign of Edward II. at £2; in the King's Book it is returned at £18 10s. 1d. It was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £39 10s. 2l., but is now worth £120 per annum. On the suppression of the religious houses, the patronage of the living passed from the prior and convent of Carlisle to the dean and chapter, in whom it is still vested. The parish registers commence in 1613.

Rectors.—John de Bolton occurs 1263; Sir Richard, —; Sir Robert Parving, 1309; Sir Robert de Lowther, 1369; Sir John de Wilton, 1381; Sir Robert Thorp occurs 1465; John Deyne occurs 1535; Sir Richard Tolson, died 1569; Anthony Walkwood, 1569; Sir William Lawson, 1614; Thomas Todd occurs 1631; — Jackson, —; Nicholas Thompson, 1689; Joshua Barrow, 1695; William Kilner, 1728; Sandford Tatham, 1752; Browne Grisdale, 1777; Solomon Lewthwaite, 1789; Samuel Hudson, 1811; William Sharpe, 1844; William White-lock, 1855.

There was formerly a chantry chapel at Bramra, in this county, dedicated to St. Mary. It was erected by Thomas de Capella, and appears to have fallen into neglect at a very early period, for we learn from a petition of Thomas de Hutton, in 1361, that the lands with which it had been endowed had been wasted and untitled. In consequence of this, the Thomas de Hutton just mentioned obtained permission from the Bishop of Carlisle to erect a new chantry, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, within the parish church of St. James, at Hutton, and which he endowed with forty-four acres of land, and six messuages, in addition to the lands formerly possessed by the chantry of St. Mary, at Bramra. The right of presentation was reserved to Thomas de Hutton and his heirs for ever. Dr. Todd informs us that, in 1416, William de Bolton, perpetual chaplain of the chapel, as he styled himself, complained to the Council of Constance, the Holy See being then vacant, that certain unknown persons had sacrilegiously robbed his chantry of vestments, chalices, and books, and that it had been defrauded of lands and tithes; whereupon the council sent a mandate to the Bishop of Carlisle, enjoining him to excommunicate all who were concerned in the sacrilege. In the King's Book, the chantry is set down as worth £6 14s. 10d. After the dissolution of chantries, Edward VI., by letters patent, bearing date December 13th, 1548, granted to Thomas Brende, in free socage, this chantry, with the lands, messuages, and tenements appertaining thereto.

CHARITIES.

The School.—This school is endowed with a messuage and lands in Marwhinns, left in 1715, by Thomas Fletcher, Esq., and others, which having been increased on the enclosure of Inglewood Forest, the estate now consists of about fifteen acres, let for £20 a year. Sir H. R. Vane is sole trustee. The school is attended by about forty children, who pay a small quarterage.

Dockray's Gift.—John Dockray, who was buried in 1737, left ten shillings a year, to be distributed to the poor at Christmas.

There were, until lately, at Upper Row, on the Common, the vestiges of Collinson Castle, an ancient fortification about 300 feet square, with a ditch thirty feet wide, and a trench four feet deep. Several hand-mill stones have been found; but even tradition is silent respecting the structure which formerly stood here. On the 6th August, 1651, Charles I. passed through this parish on his journey to Scotland, by way of Dalston and Penrith. Dr. Todd tells us he had the honour to wait upon his majesty; and Lady Fletcher, whose husband had been slain at the battle of Rowton Heath, sent refreshments to the king and his suite. Dr. Todd adds, "the king, who looked very pale and pensive, was seated in a coach with some of the Scotch nobility, intent on a map of the country which was spread before him. His majesty was guarded by a body of highlanders." Tradition says that Charles drank of a well that is near the site of Collinson Castle.

Elfa Hills are two singular ranges of gravel mounds, twenty-five yards high and two furlongs in length. They are surrounded by a low and swampy ground, where many marks of trenches appear, and where quantities of human bones have been found, and are supposed to have served as a place of interment for soldiers. Two urns, filled with ashes, were found in 1785, at Blencow Bank.

THOMAS CLOSE.

The area is returned with the parish, as is also the rateable value. The population was returned with Hutton-in-the-Forest in 1801; in 1811, it was 77; in 1821, 95; in 1831, 106; in 1841, 99; and in 1851, 112; who reside in houses dispersed over the township. The manor is held under the Duke of Devonshire. Messrs. Robert Barton, Francis Bell, William Bell, and Mrs. Stockbridge are the principal landowners. The township was enclosed in 1803.

Market Gate is a hamlet in this township.

KIRKLAND PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Oasby and Addingham, on the west by the river Eden and Langwathby parish, on the south by Crowdundale Beck, which divides the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and on the east by Cross Fell and the moor of Tyne Head. The soil in Kirkland and Culgaith is deep and fertile, at Skirwith light and sandy, and at Blencarn a strong clay. Coal and lead are found in the parish. Cross Fell is 2,900 feet above the level of the sea, and is said to have been originally designated Fiend's Fell, from the common belief that evil spirits had their haunt upon it, until St. Paulinus erected a cross and built an altar on the summit, where he celebrated mass, and thus drove away the demons. Since that time it has borne the name of Cross Fell, and the people in the neighbourhood style a heap of stones lying there, The Altar upon Cross Fell. The population, who are entirely agricultural, reside chiefly in the villages of Blencarn and Kirkland, and are, generally speaking, educated and cleanly. The parish comprises the townships of Kirkland and Blencarn, Skirwith, and the chapelry of Culgaith. Penrith is the market usually attended. The area of the parish is 6,361 acres.

KIRKLAND AND BLENCEARN.

The area of this township is included in the parish returns; its rateable value is £1,633 10s. 11½d.; viz.: £1,219 18s. 8d. for Blencarn, and £413 12s. 3½d. for Kirkland. In 1801 it comprised 188 inhabitants; in 1811, 172; in 1821, 217; in 1831, 212; in 1841, 233; and in 1851, 196.

The manor of Kirkland is small, containing only about fourteen enfranchised tenements, held under Lady le Fleming, of Rydal, Westmoreland.

The manor of Blencarn formed, in ancient times, a parcel of the barony of Adam Fitz-Sweyn, and as such was held by the Neville family. A portion was subsequently held by the priory of Carlisle, in free alms. About the reign of King John we find the Whitbys and Thursbys as possessors, each family holding a moiety. In the year 1226 Evan de Vipont and Sibell Thursby, his wife, gave six bovates of land, in Blencarn, to Bernard Thursby; and in 1278 he granted a portion of the same to the priory of Carlisle. The remainder descended to Edmund Boyville, his second son, who sold it to John Hercla, but it became forfeited to the crown on the attainder of Andrew de Hercla, and was afterwards granted to William Langley, or English, whose heiress brought it to the Restwolds, from whom it passed by sale to the Lough family. The tenants were enfranchised by Lough Carlton, Esq., in 1792. The manor was divided between his two nieces, and co-heiresses, and is now held by Messrs. Fydeall and Tufnell. The landowners of the township are Lady le Fleming, Messrs. Fydeall and Tufnell, Joseph Salkeld, Esq.; John Atkinson, Thomas Atkinson, William Clark, John Cannon, and Sir Richard Tufnell, Bart.

The village of Kirkland is about ten miles east-by-north of Penrith.

THE CHURCH.

Kirkland church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, was rebuilt in 1768, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a bell turret, containing two bells. The old church, which was an edifice of considerable size, contained the mutilated effigy of a man in armour, which is built in the wall on the north side of the door, at the west end of the present church. The ancient piscina still remains in the chancel; and there is a stone cross with steps in the church yard. The church contains several mural monuments to the memory of different members of the Fleming, Salkeld, and Yates families. The benefice was anciently in the patronage of the bishops of Carlisle, and was rectorial till the reign of Henry VI., when it was granted, and soon afterwards appropriated, to the prior and convent of Carlisle. It is now a vicarage, in the patronage of the dean and chapter, and is worth about £220 a year—its value in the King's Book is £8 10s. The parish registers commence in 1643.

RECTORS.—Adam de Newcastle, 1294; Sir Gilbert de Halingh-ton, 1304; William de Denton occurs 1336; John de Langholme occurs 1372; John de Penrith, 1379.

VICARS.—Thomas Byrkhede occurs 1595; Sir Thomas Agbushy, died 1581; Anthony Gosling, 1581; John Robinson, resigned 1631; Edward Slegg, 1631; John Ardrey, 1681; Hugh Todd, 1684; Daniel Mayer, 1685; Nathaniel Spooner, 1694; George Fleming, 1703; John Christopherson, 1717; Edward Birket, 1720; Henry Richardson, 1765; Joseph Gibbings, 1785; Richard Rice, 1820; James Webster Huntley, 1836.

CHARITIES.

Gate's Gift.—Thomas Gate, about 1768, bequeathed £40 for the use of the poor of the township of Kirkland and Blencarn.

Salkeld's Gift.—Thomas Salkeld, by will dated July 11th, 1753, left £100 for the use of the poor of the same township.

Poor Stock.—There is also a poor stock of £12, being money left in small legacies for the same purpose.

Carleton's Gift.—Lough Carleton, Esq., who died in 1732, left £20 to the poor of the above-named township.

SKIRWITH.

The rateable value of this township is £2,303 17s. 6d.; its area is returned with the parish. The population in 1801 was 189; in 1811, 200; in 1821, 238; in 1831, 293; in 1841, 293; and in 1851, 288; who chiefly reside in Skirwith village.

The first recorded possessor of Skirwith manor is Jordan Spiggurnel, who held lands here in the reign of King John. The manor subsequently came to the Fitz-Walter family, one of whom, Robert Fitz-Walter, held it in the reign of Edward I. and Henry III. In 1334 we find it held by John de Lancaster, from whom it passed by inheritance to his cousin Richard, whose heir gave it by fine to William de Lancaster, whose heir brought it in marriage to the Crackenthorpe family. It continued in the latter family for some generations till the three daughters of John Crackenthorpe brought it in marriage to the Huttons, Sandfords, and Middletons, in the latter of whom the possession of the entire manor eventually settled; for we find that in the 35th Henry VIII. (1534) Ambrose Middleton and Anne his wife, in right of the said Anne, held the capital messuage and town of Skirwith of the king in capite, paying yearly for the same 4s. 4d. cornage. From the Middletons it passed by a co-heir to the Huttons, from whom it was purchased, in 1606, by Agnes, widow of W. Fleming, Esq., of Rydal, whose descendant, Sir Michael le Fleming, enfranchised the tenants. It is now held by Lady le Fleming, of Rydal Hall, Westmoreland. Skirwith Hall, the manor house, was taken down in 1795, and a farm-house built on its site.

Bank is another manor in this township, which has long been held by the Crackenthorpe family, who formerly resided at Bank Hall, the manor house.

The principal landowners are Lady le Fleming, Rev. C. Parker, William Crackenthorpe, Esq.; Mrs. Blamire, Rev. B. Porteus, Miss Hodgson, John Sanderson, John Jackson, Rev. Thomas Jackson, Thomas Spedding, Thomas Dixon, and John Wilkinson.

Skirwith Abbey, the residence of the Rev. C. Parker, is a modern mansion, traditionally stated to be erected on the site of a religious house, probably belonging to the Knights Templars. It formerly belonged to the Agliothbys of Nunnery, from whom it was purchased in 1822, by the late William Parker, Esq.

The village of Skirwith is large and irregularly built, on both sides of a small rivulet, three and a half miles north of Temple Sowerby, and seven miles east-by-north of Penrith.

THE CHURCH.

Skirwith church, which has been the theme of universal admiration, was consecrated by the Lord

Bishop of Carlisle, on Thursday, the 25th of August, 1859. It is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist; and was founded by the late William Parker, Esq., of Skirwith Abbey, to supply the wants of the population in the immediate vicinity of his residence, but at a considerable distance from the parish church of Kirkland. It consists of a nave, south aisle, chancel, tower and spire at west end of south aisle, and vestry. The style of the church is Decorated Gothic of the fourteenth century; it is built of Skirwith stone, obtained near the site, laid in even courses, and axe-dressed on the face, with Lazonby stone for all the dressings, windows, doors, internal columns and arches, and other details. The spire also is carried up in this stone, and has been purposely kept low, to avoid the too great action of the winds, known in this neighbourhood as the Helm winds. The belfrey is furnished with a peal of three well-toned bells, manufactured by Messrs. Mears, of London. The interior has been considerably altered in its character from what was originally intended by the late Mr. Parker, a more ornate and decorated character having been given to it by desire of his successor, the Rev. C. Parker, present patron, and first incumbent. The church will accommodate upwards of 200 persons. The seats in the nave are of deal, stained and varnished, with plain bench ends. The remaining fittings, including lectern, desk, and pulpit, are of wainscot; the base of pulpit being of Caen stone, with marble shafts and carved capitals. These fittings are enriched with tracery and carving of an appropriate character. The font is of Caen stone, with wainscot crocketed cover. The roofs of the nave and aisle are of deal, with framed principals. The chancel roof is also of deal, consisting of a series of framed rafters and collars, with sudden purlins at the insertions: both roofs are covered with batten, boarding, and felt, and the whole are stained and varnished. The chancel is fitted up with stalls on either side, with bench ends and carved finial tops, and elaborately traceried and carved fronts. The communion table is also of wainscot similar in character, and the reredos over the same, and on each side of the east window is of wainscot with small bands, shafts, and capitals, with arched and triangular heads, crocketed with vine leaves, and enriched with maple, passion flowers, and shields, with the instrument of the Passion carved in relief. The panels below the arches are diapered in wainscot, with medallions in the centre containing highly relieved representations of the Evangelists, and the sacred Monogram. The sides of the chancel are panelled in wainscot, and within the communion rails, which are of polished brass, by Potter, of London, are two wainscot sedilia and a carved and enriched chair. The floor of the chancel is laid with Minton's Encaustic Tile Pavement, with Kilkenny polished marble steps, and the walls above the panelling are diapered in colour by Castell, of London. The whole of the windows are of stained glass by Wailes, of Newcastle. That above the communion table, a beautiful composition on the words, "Suffer little children to come unto me," is a memorial window, and on a brass near it is placed the following inscription:—

"I. H. S."

"This church, dedicated in honour of the Holy Evangelist St. John, was founded and endowed by William Parker, late of Skirwith Abbey, in the county of Cumberland, Esquire, and completed by the Reverend Christopher Parker, M.A., the present patron, in the year of our Lord, 1859, who also caused the east window to be filled with stained glass, in grateful memory of his relative, who died January 22nd, 1856."

"LAUS DEO."

The side chancel windows are filled with small subjects, illustrating passages in the life of the Saviour, in medallions. The east window in the south aisle contains full length figures of St. Peter and Paul under canopies, and the remaining windows are filled with rich borders and medallions containing angels bearing scrolls, with diapered quarries between. The Commandments are placed on either side of the west window, and the Creed and Lord's Prayer by lectern and pulpit, the whole richly illuminated. Suitable texts are written over the chancel arch, east window, and other parts. The total cost of the church, glebe house and offices for future incumbent, repair fund and endowment, will amount to about £9,900. Messrs. Francis, of London, are the architects, and the whole of the works, except those specified above, have been executed under their superintendence by Messrs. James and Son, of Penrith. A handsome set of communion plate, consisting of flagon, chalice, and paten, the gift of Mrs. Parker, bears the following inscription:—"An offering to St. John's Church, Skirwith. S. P." 1859." An harmonium has also been supplied to assist the village choir in the musical part of the services.

The Wesleyans have a chapel here.

The village school is a small but neat building, erected by subscription in 1828. It is endowed with £20 a year, given by Lady le Fleming. The average number of pupils in attendance is thirty-five.

CHARITIES.

Mrs. Bramwell's Gift.—The poor of this township are entitled to a rent charge of 20s. given by Mrs. Sarah Bramwell, who was also a benefactor to the poor of Penrith.

Poor Stock.—The poor of Skirwith are also benefitted by a poor stock amounting to £21.

CULGAITH.

Culgaith, formerly Culgaithre, or Culgarthe (probably derived from cul, the back; gaith, of the garden, or the end of the open country) is a township and chapelry, containing an area of 2,896 acres; and its rateable value is £2,414. The population in 1801 was 254; in 1811, 236; in 1821, 257; in 1831, 257; in 1841, 361; and in 1851, 355. A survey of the township was made in the year 1851 for the commutation of the tithe. The common and waste grounds, containing 1,586 acres, were enclosed in the year 1773. The population principally reside in the village of Culgaith—there are four or five detached farm-houses. The population is for the most part employed in agriculture, but a few are employed in a small tilery.

The manor of Culgaith was part of the barony given, or confirmed, by Henry I. to Adam Fitz-Sweyn, son of Alaric, which barony was held of the king, by payment of £5 12s. cornage. The two daughters of Adam Fitz-Sweyn, Amabil and Matilda, were respectively married to Alexander Crevauger and Adam de Montbegon. Alexander de Crevauger gave to the monks of Wetherall his moiety of the mill of Culgaith, "with," say Nicolson and Burn, "the miller and his family." After the demise of Alexander de Crevauger, Amabil married William Neville, from whom her share passed to the Burgo family, but it appears to have reverted to the Nevilles, as we find that in the 16th Henry III. (1231-32) Gilbert de Neville and Mabel, his wife, held a moiety of Culgaith. In the reign of Edward I. a place in Culgaith, called Kirklanders, or Kirkandrews, with wood and land adjoining, was conveyed by Simon, abbot of St. Mary's at York, to Sir Michael de Hercla, Knt., as we learn from a record of the reign of Edward II., in which it is stated, that Sir Michael agreed to give a yearly rent of forty shillings for it to the monks of Wetherall, though the estate was only worth ten shillings per annum, because it was a desirable situation for his own residence. This Sir Michael was father of Sir Andrew de Hercla, earl of Carlisle, who was attainted in 1323. The Kirkandrews estate is now held by W. Crackenthorpe, Esq. The share held by the Hercla family was granted by Edward II. to Sir Christopher Moresby, Knt.; on whose death, in 1348, an inquisition finds, that the said Christopher died seised of the manor of Culgaith, holden of Robert Neville, of Hornby, who held it in capite, by the service of 16s. 8d. cornage. From Sir Christopher it descended to the Lady Knevet, heir general of the Pickeringes and Moresbys, who sold the same to Henry Crackenthorpe, Esq., of Newbiggin, and the lands to four feeffees, (one estate only excepted, which is held of the late Earl of Thanet's manor of Milburne Grange,) reserving a free rent of £28 4s. 1d., which she afterwards sold to the Dalstons of Acorn Bank. This rent was purchased by Matthew Atkinson, Esq., of Temple Sowerby, who sold it to William Parker, Esq., of Skirwith Abbey; it is now the property of the Rev. C. Parker. The principal landowners are the Rev. C. Parker, W. Crackenthorpe, Esq.; Colonel Maclean, the trustee of the late J. D. Boazman; J. H. Sewell, John Richardson, Mrs. Westmoreland, G. Gibson, Esq.; R. W. Saunders, Esq.; Mrs. Williamson.

Culgaith is a long straggling village, beautifully situated on the top of an eminence above the river Eden, commanding an extensive prospect on every side.

THE CHAPEL.

Culgaith chapel, dedicated to All Saints, is said to have been founded in ancient times by the lord of the manor. The present building was erected in 1758, on the site of the ancient chapel, which had fallen into decay. It is a plain but neat cruciform structure; over the door is a window, with two lights, trefoiled, with square head, which seems to have been part of the ancient edifice, the only remnant which has been preserved. The western gable is surmounted by a turret, with one bell. The west end of the chapel is covered with ivy. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Kirkland. On the death of the Rev. John Brown, in 1791, the right of presentation was claimed by the inhabitants, but after some demur, the vicar was allowed to present. The value of the living was returned to Queen Anne's Bounty, in the year 1739, at £6; in 1749, at £11. In 1777, by grants from Queen Anne's Bounty, and legacies and gifts from several individuals, it had increased in value to £50. In 1843, the sum of £10 a year was granted by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in augmentation of the living. It is now worth about £91 a year. Prior to the incumbency of the Rev. John Brown, the chapel seems to have been served by schoolmasters in orders; the poverty of the endowment, which then arose chiefly from a small payment called chapel wages, rendering this arrangement necessary. Chapel wages, amounting to £1 18s. a year, are still paid by certain tenements in the chapelry. The rectorial tithes of the township are held by the landowners, under a lease from the dean and chapter of Carlisle—of which twelve years are yet (1859) unexpired. At the termination of the lease the tithes will amount to £215 3s. 3d. a year, having been commuted in the year 1851. The vicarial tithes, recovered by the Vicar of Kirkland, after much litigation, amount to about £31 a year. The registers commence in 1758—prior to that date they were included in the registers of Kirkland. Marriages are not at present solemnised in this chapel, though it appears from the registers that they were from 1758 to 1803.

INCUMBENTS.—John Brown, 1749; John Clarke Gilbanks, 1791; Robert Keen, 1847; George Wilkinson Atkinson, 1852.

¹ The following were curates under Rev. J. C. Gilbanks:—Robert Pearson, 1829-33; W. P. King, 1836; Henry Robinson, 1847; John Brownrigg Harrison, 1850.

The Wesleyans have a place of worship in the village.

There is a free school, endowed with 100 acres of land, at the enclosure of the commons in 1773, for the benefit of the townships of Culgaith and Blencarn. Owing to the debt of money borrowed for the enclosure of the allotment and erection of buildings not being paid off, the master's salary arising from the estate is only £28 a year. It is however augmented by a voluntary subscription of £8 a year.

Millrigg, formerly the residence of the Dalstons of Acorn Bank, Westmoreland, is now occupied as a farmhouse.

CHARITY.

Dover's Charity.—Daniel Dover gave to the township of Culgaith £60, with an order that the interest annually arising from it should be laid out in the purchase of bread, to be distributed weekly, for ever, among such of the poor of the said township as should frequent divine service, by the chapel warden.

Two other small bequests, left by James Unthanh and William Bowerbank, have been lost.

KIRKOSWALD PARISH.

THE parish of Kirkoswald, which is about six and a half miles in length by four in breadth, is bounded on the east by the parish of Renwick and the Cross Fell range of mountains; on the west by the river Eden, which separates it from the parish of Lazonby; on the north by the stream of the Craglin, which divides it from the parishes of Ainstable and Craglin; and on the south by the rivalet called Dale Raughen, which separates it from the parish of Addingham. It is remarkable for its rich and picturesque scenery, its ancient historical associations, its waterfalls, and its old castle, church, and college. About three-fourths of the population are dispersed over the parish, in small villages, detached farm-houses, and cottages. Agriculture is the principal employment, but some of the inhabitants are engaged in the paper mill, the carding mill, and the saw-mill, and there are a few tradespeople. The soil in the western part of the parish is exceedingly rich and productive; in other parts heavy, with a clayey subsoil; and in others light, with a sandy subsoil; altogether it is mostly arable, and very productive in all kinds of farm produce. The people attend the markets of Penrith and Alston. The parish comprises the two townships of Kirkoswald and Staffield, whose united area is 10,472 acres, and rateable value £5,634.

KIRKOSWALD.

The number of acres in this township is 5,000. The population in 1801 was 634; in 1811, 636; in 1821, 760; in 1831, 768; in 1841, 691; and in 1851, 681, who principally reside in the town of Kirkoswald.

The manor of Kirkoswald, according to Denton, was part of the great barony granted to Adam Fitz-Sweyn, from whom it came with a daughter to Trivers, lord of Burgh, and in a similar manner to the Engayn family, from whom it passed in marriage to the Morvilles. Dugdale, however, informs us that it came with Lazonby, to Hugh Morville, with his wife, Helwise de Stuteville. It is however certain that it was held by the Morville family, from whom it descended to the Multons, and from them to the Dacres, and by Joan, daughter of Thomas Lord Dacre to Sir Richard Fynes, Knt., and by the heiress of that family to the Lennards, from the co-heiresses of which family it was purchased by Sir Christopher Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall, from whom it has descended to the present proprietor, Sir George Musgrave, Bart. The principal landowners are Sir George Musgrave, Bart.; William Marshall, Esq., M.P.; the trustees of the late Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, Esq.; Captain Sunderland, R.N.; Mr. Christopher Hardy, William Bird, and the poor of Witherslack parish, Westmoreland.

The Nunnery of Armathwaite had a close called the Holme, and some other small possessions in this parish, which, after the dissolution, were granted to William Greyme, of Carlisle.

The castle of Kirkoswald was originally erected about the year 1200, by Randolph Engayn. It was subsequently enlarged, and was greatly improved by the addition of a park, which was enclosed by Sir Hugh de Morville. The great hall was ornamented with portraits of the kings of England, from "Brute," downwards, and for a considerable period had the reputation of being one of the finest halls in the north of England. It received considerable additions from Thomas de Multon and John de Castro; and, about the commencement of the sixteenth century, its defences were further strengthened by the construction of a ditch. It was subsequently dismantled by the orders of Lord Dacre of the South; and in 1688, we are informed that the castle was "little more than a bare shell or heap of stones;" and some fifty years later, great part of the walls appear to have been pulled down. Dr. Todd mentions a tradition that a subterranean passage connected the castle with the parish church, and it is not improbable that such was the case; this opinion is partly corroborated by the fact that the stream of water which runs under the church appeared thick and muddy when the moat of the castle was cleared out. Of this noble specimen of the military architecture of the middle ages, but few remains are now left. What is still visible is situated on an eminence, about 290 yards south-east of the town, at the head of the demesne, and consists of three dilapidated towers, one of which, at the north end, is a fair example of ancient architecture, which still raises its lofty head as high as the tall tree, whose tops, as one mighty phalanx, stand grand around it. Under each of the other two towers are large vaults, whose hemispherical domes support the massive superstructure. There still remains evident traces of a moat, as well as a wall, at the north-west corner of which, near the entrance, is the site (rectangular in form) of an outer tower, where a drawbridge is said to have been, during the days in which the castle maintained its pride of place, and which commanded a beautiful view of the rich demesne down the river Eden, as well as of the town and the detached steeple of the parish church.

TOWN OF KIRKOSWALD.

The town of Kirkoswald is pleasantly situated in a beautiful vale, on the small river Raven, about half a mile above its junction with the Eden, fifteen miles south-east from Carlisle. The town is amply supplied with water. There are a paper mill, a saw and bobbin mill, a mill for carding and spinning wool, corn-mills, a brewery, and coal and lime works. The weekly market is on Tuesday, and there are fairs on the Thursday before Whitsuntide and August 5th. The charter by which the market is held was granted to Hugh de Morville by King John, who was at Kirkoswald on the 25th of February, 1201.¹ The "Chronicle of Lanercost" informs us that this town was burned by the Scots in 1314. In 1597 and the following year Kirkoswald suffered severely from a visitation of the plague, in the former year forty-two persons fell victims in this parish, but in the latter no less than 583. At a short distance from the town the Eden is crossed by a bridge of two large and two small arches, erected in 1762.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church of Kirkoswald stands at the south end of the town. It is a neat structure, in the Norman and Pointed styles, consisting of nave, chancel, and aisles. The nave is separated from the aisles by three massive pillars supporting Norman and pointed arches. At the west end is a beautifully-stained glass window, with representations of St. Peter and St. Paul. A few steps lead from the nave to the chancel, at the east end of which is a neat window of five lights filled with stained glass. In the centre light the Crucifixion is depicted, and to the right and left are the four Evangelists; the light on the extreme right contains a representation of St. Oswald, and that on the extreme left one of St. Cuthbert. The windows on the north and south of the chancel are also filled with stained glass, emblazoning the arms of the Musgraves, the Daacres, the Howards, the Fetherstonhaughs, and others. There are several monuments to members of the Fetherstonhaugh and Smallwood families. The church appears to have been formerly of much larger dimensions, as is evidenced by the broad and massive foundation stones of old walls which still remain outside. It has been recently repaired, and otherwise considerably improved, the floor being laid upon dwarf walls, and the whole re-pewed. Since 1855 the church has been furnished with an apparatus for warming it during the winter months, and is now one of the neatest and most comfortable in the north of England. Beneath the centre of the church flows a beautiful stream of pure water, which issues from a rock at the east end, said to have been at one time held sacred, and to have served as a baptistry. It may now be seen by descending a flight of steps at the west end of the church. A line of fine old lime trees on each side of a winding avenue which leads to the church, and which completely overarch the walk, is much admired by visitors. The bells of the church are in a detached steeple which stands upon a conical hill, separating the town from the church. The church is said to have been founded previous to the Norman Conquest, and, as its name implies, it is dedicated to St. Oswald, king of Northumbria, who fell fighting in the defence of his religion and country. Coming down to the times subsequent to the Conquest, we find that in the year 1246 the rector of the church sued the lord of the manor, Ranulph de Levington, and Ada, his wife, a co-heiress of Sir Hugh de Morville, and recovered his claim to certain privileges in the parks of Lazonby and Kirkoswald. It is recounted that in 1305 Bishop Halton held a great ordination in this church, when no less than twenty-one priests, twenty-six deacons, and twenty-five subdeacons, received holy orders; and seventeen others received the minor order of Acolyte. Of these, a great number appear to have been members of the religious communities of Furness, Holme Cultram, and other monasteries. In order to carry out more effectually the cure of souls, and the due administration of the sacraments, the church was collegiate about the year 1523, the collegiate body being composed of twelve secular priests, under the government of a master or provost; and it is to this period that the erection of the present choir, at the expense of the first provost, Rowland Threlkeld, is usually ascribed. But the pious intentions of the founder of the college were soon frustrated, for about the year 1545, the king, Henry VIII., seized upon the property of the collegiate body, and also upon the rectory, allowing only £8 a year to a vicar for the performance of the duties of the parish. The revenues continued to be held by the crown till 1587, when Queen Elizabeth granted a lease of the rectory for twenty-one years to Thomas Hammond, subject to the condition that he paid the vicar's stipend of £8 per annum. In the following year, Elizabeth granted a lease of the rectory to Edward Downinge and Miles Doddinge, which included all the glebe lands of the rectory of Kirkoswald, and all other lands and teneaments in the parish of Kirkoswald, which had belonged to the college of Kirkoswald, and all the tithes of corn and grain belonging to the rectory, to hold to them and their heirs, as of the manor of East Greenwich, in free and common socage. The greater part of the glebe lands and tithes are now held by the trustees of the late Timothy Fetherstonhaugh. The above-mentioned sum of £8 is still paid by the crown to the vicar. It appears to have been the sole endowment of the vicarage from the time of the dissolution, till £200 was raised by the parishioners, which, with £200 from the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, was invested in lands in 1725. The vicarage was subsequently augmented with another £200 from that source, in conjunction with £200 from the Countess-dowager Gower. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas, the church is valued at £48 1s. 5d.; and in the King's Book, at £8. It is now worth £160 a year. The patronage is vested in the crown. The parish registers commence in 1578.

¹ See Itinerary of King J. bn.

RECTORS.—Martin occurs in 1246; Walter de Langton, resigned, 1293; Nicholas Lovetof, 1293; Richard de Mont, 1323; John de Appleyby, 1374; Sir William Beauchamp, 1374; William Marshall occurs 1436 to 1460.

PROVOSTS.—Rowland Threlkeld, 1523, died 1565; John Heryng occurs 1523 to 1535.

VICARS.—Thomas Moyeses occurs 1535; Sir John Scales, died 1561; Sir James Shepherd, 1561.

CURATES.—George Yates, 1668; George Sanderson, —; John Rumney, —; James Wannop, —.

VICAR.—James Wannop, 1714.

CURATES.—William Milner, 1719; John Rumney, 1723.

VICARS.—John Mandeville, 1739; Charles Smallwood, 1761; John James, 1771; John Fisher, 1774; George G. Lawson, 1820; John Best, 1855.

There is no parsonage house, properly so called. There is a small glebe house, on the glebe land, at Blunderfield, two miles from the church, which is occupied by a farmer. The vicar resides at present at the Nunnery, near to Staffield.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship at Kirkoswald; and at Park Head is an Independent chapel, which is fast falling into decay. The latter, which has a burying ground attached, was founded by George Nicholson, a Nonconformist, in the reign of James II., and was rebuilt in 1711.

CHARITIES.

School.—By indenture, dated May 16th, 1745, between the churchwardens of Kirkoswald, on the one part; Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart.; Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, Richard Lowthian, and others, of the other part; reciting, that John Lowthian, gentleman, deceased, brother of the said Richard Lowthian, had by a general assignment, in the nature of a will, given the sum of £100 to the ministers and churchwardens of the said parish, to be by them expended in the building of a school, and towards the maintenance of a master at Highbank Hill, in the said parish; but before the receipt of the said gift or legacy, the parishioners had, at their own expense, erected a school house, and directed that the interest of the above £100, and of £20 poor stock, should be applied towards the maintenance of a schoolmaster; who was required to receive all the poor children of the parish, boys and girls, and teach them reading, at 1s. 6d. per quarter. The present school house is a neat stone building, situated at Kirkoswald, erected by subscription, in 1858, at a cost of £600, inclusive of the site, which cost £80. It possesses accommodation for eighty scholars. It is under inspection, conducted by certificated teachers, supported by the quarter pence of the children and the endowment of the old school, and has an average attendance of sixty pupils. The trustees to the school and its endowment are Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, Esq.; Sir George Musgrave, Bart.; John Aglionby, Esq.; Charles Fetherstonhaugh, Esq.; and the vicar for the time being.

John Lowthian's Gift.—John Lowthian, by will, dated March 11th, 1742, gave to the minister and churchwardens of Kirkoswald, as trustees for the poor, the sum of £3 12s. yearly, to be employed in purchasing a shilling's worth of bread, weekly, to be distributed each Sunday to the poor people of the parish attending divine service at the church. This charity is distributed as directed.

Richard Lowthian's Gift.—Richard Lowthian, by will, dated October 24th, 1782, gave to the ministers and churchwardens of the parish of Kirkoswald, the yearly rent or sum of £5, in trust, for the special use of the poor within the said parish, to be paid out of certain premises in Staffield.

Poor Stock.—There is a poor stock amounting to £62 10s., secured upon mortgage for £100 upon the tolls of the road leading from Eamont Bridge to Brough, at four per cent. interest. The mortgage is dated October 25th, 1760, and is granted to Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, and thereon is an endorsement, signed by him, stating that the security is the sole property of the parish of Kirkoswald, £62 10s. of the £100 being legacies left to the poor, the interest of which is £2 10s., and the remainder £37 10s. belonging to the school at High Bank Hill.

Township of Staffield.—Threlkeld's Gift.—Thomas Threlkeld, who died in 1793, left £40 to the poor of Staffield township.

A reading room and library, in connection with the National School, were opened in 1858.

The College, the seat of Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, Esq., occupies the site of the ancient residence of the collegiate body attached to Kirkoswald church. Part of the original buildings are still remaining, but much modernised. On the wall of one of the buildings is a well-executed shield in stone, probably brought from the castle. It bears the arms of Dacre, with those of three other families, and is surrounded by the garter. It has supporters, and the motto "Fort en loialte."

The badge of the Dacre family, the escallop shell, is placed over two doors in the college. Here is a portrait of Charles I., which was presented to the Fetherstonhaugh family by Charles II., in token of his grateful remembrance of the many services of Sir Timothy Fetherstonhaugh. Adjoining the mansion is a beautiful park of about eighty acres, intersected by the road leading to Penrith.

Fetherstonhaugh of Kirkoswald.

The first of the Fetherstonhaughs who came to Kirkoswald was,

HENRY FETHERSTONHAUGH, second son of Albany Fetherstonhaugh of Fetherstonhaugh, Northumberland, by Lucy, his wife, daughter of E. Dudley, Esq., of Yanwath, co. Westmoreland. This Henry married Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Wybergh, Esq., of Clifton; and died in 1626, having had a daughter, Dorothy, married to Thomas Stanley, Esq., of Dalegarth, and a son,

Sir TIMOTHY FETHERSTONHAUGH, Knt., of Kirkoswald, a devoted adherent to the Royalist cause, who was beheaded by Cromwell's party in 1651. His second son and heir,

THOMAS FETHERSTONHAUGH, Esq., of Kirkoswald, was thirty-seven years of age at Dugdale's visitation in 1665. His great-grandson,

TIMOTHY FETHERSTONHAUGH, Esq., of Kirkoswald, died without children, and was succeeded by (the son of his sister, Joyce, the wife of the Rev. Charles Smallwood, B.A.) his nephew,

CHARLES SMALLWOOD, who, in compliance with the will of his maternal uncle, assumed, by royal licence, 1st September, 1797, the additional surname and arms of Fetherstonhaugh. He married 6th March, 1810, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Hartley, Esq., of Gillfoot, co. Cumberland, and left at his decease, 7th March, 1837,

- I. TIMOTHY, his heir, of Kirkoswald.
- II. CHARLES (see FETHERSTONHAUGH of Stafford Hall).
3. ELIZA, married 25th April, 1837, to Thomas Tod, Esq., of Drygange, co. Roxburgh.

The son and heir,

TIMOTHY FETHERSTONHAUGH, Esq., of the College, Kirkoswald, J.P., high-sheriff, 1816, born 4th March, 1811; married 15th October, 1838, Eliza-Were, daughter of John-Were Clarke, Esq., of Bridwell, co. Devon, by Frances, his wife, daughter of Sir Thomas Carew, Bart., of Haccombe, and had issue,

- I. TIMOTHY, present representative.
- II. CHARLES, born 4th February, 1844.
- III. ALBANY, born 10th December, 1846.
- II. ELIZA.
- II. FRANCES.
- III. MAUDE.

Mr. Fetherstonhaugh died 5th April, 1856, and was succeeded by his son, TIMOTHY FETHERSTONHAUGH, Esq., of the College, Kirkoswald, co. Cumberland, born 5th December, 1840.

Arms.—Gu., a chev., between three ostrich feathers, arg.

Crest.—An antelope's head, erased, gu.; armed, or.

Motto.—Valens et Voleus.

STAFFIELD.

The area of Staffield township is 5,472 acres. The population in 1801 was 276; in 1811, 309; in 1821, 309; in 1831, 265; in 1841, 257; and in 1851, 244, who reside in Staffield (which is a scattered village), Scarramanwick, and Scales hamlets, and in a number of single houses dispersed over the township. The principal employment of the inhabitants is agriculture, and they attend Penrith market.

Staffield is a fee of Kirkoswald, and was held in ancient times by a family who bore the local name, but which became extinct in the reign of Henry V., when the co-heiresses married into the Chambers, Mulcaster, and Blennerhasset of Carlisle families. It subsequently became the property of the Fletchers of Hutton, and the Lowthians, the last of whom, Richard Lowthian Ross, Esq., sold it to the Aglionbys of Nunery; it now belongs to Sir Henry R. Vane, Bart. On the enclosure of the common, the Mr. Ross just mentioned, purchased the land adjoining the Croglia, and planted many thousand trees on its eastern bank, by which the scenery of Nunery has been very much improved. The principal landowners are Sir H. R. F. Vane, Bart.; Charles Fetherstonhaugh, J.P.; and a number of small resident yeoman; also the trustees of the late Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, Esq.

Fetherstonhaugh of Stafford Hall.

This family is derived from the Rev. CHARLES SMALLWOOD, who married Joyce, daughter of Henage Fetherstonhaugh, 1760; he died March 4th, 1770, leaving a son,

CHARLES SMALLWOOD, who assumed the name of FETHERSTONHAUGH. He married 1810, Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of Thomas Hartley, Esq., of Gillfoot, who died June, 1823. Mr. Fetherstonhaugh died March 17th, 1839, having had issue,

- I. TIMOTHY, of the College, Kirkoswald.
- II. CHARLES, of Stafford Hall.
3. ELIZA, married April 25th, 1837, Thomas Tod, Esq., of Drygange, Roxburghshire.

CHARLES FETHERSTONHAUGH, Esq., of Stafford Hall, J.P., was born May 31st, 1812. He married April 6th, 1847, Jane, daughter and co-heir of Francis Aglionby, Esq., of Nunery, M.P. for the Eastern Division of the county of Cumberland, by Mary, his wife, daughter of John Matthews, Esq., of Wigton Hall, and has issue one daughter, Elizabeth Aglionby.

Harescough, or Harescow, in this township, was given by Ada de Engayn to the priory of Lanercost, and this gift was confirmed by Hugh de Morville. After the suppression of the monastic institutions, it was sold by the crown to Henry, grandson of Thomas Dacre, Knt., of Lanercost. His son, or grandson, conveyed it to Dr. Peter Barwick, physician in ordinary to Charles II., who gave it to the chapel and poor of Witherslack, in Westmoreland. Here are the remains of an old castle.

Little Croglin is another fee of Kirkoswald, and was held by the family of Croglin, one of whom gave a fifth part of the vill, called Cringledyke, to the priory of Wetheral, which is now held by lease, under the dean and chapter of Carlisle. Little Croglin came afterwards to the Beauchamp family, who held it till the reign of Henry VII., when it was purchased by the Dacres, who added it to their lordship. It was subsequently sold by the Howard family to George Towry, Esq., who occurs as possessor in 1688. It then became the residence of a younger branch of the Yorkshire family of Towrys, and is now held by Lady Hurst.

Scarramanwick and Scales are hamlets in this township.

LANGWATHBY PARISH.

LANGWATHBY parish is bounded on the east by Kirkland, on the north-east and the north by Addingham, on the west by the river Eden, and on the south and the south-east by Kirkland. It is about two and a half miles in length from north to south, and about one in breadth from east to west. Agriculture is the chief employment of the inhabitants, who reside principally in the village of Langwathby. The soil is in some parts loamy, and in others gravelly, but is in general fertile. Penrith is the market usually attended. This parish comprises no dependant townships. In the census returns previous to 1851, this parish was returned as a chapelry in the parish of Edenhall; but, in the year named, it was returned as a distinct parish annexed to the living of Edenhall.

The area of Langwathby is 1,987 acres, and its rateable value £1,499 1s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 226; in 1811, 206; in 1821, 250; in 1831, 250; in 1841, 273; and in 1851, 292.

The manor of Langwathby is said to have been bestowed by Henry I., along with that of Edenhall, on Henry Fitz-Sweyn, in whose family it did not, however, continue long, for we are told that the king held it as a royal demesne. The account given of the manor of Penrith, at a subsequent page, will throw considerable light on the history of this manor. It appears to have been in possession of King John; and Henry III. gave it to Alexander King of Scotland, in part of 200 librates of land granted to the Scots in the year 1237, by composition for the release of Cumberland and Westmoreland. Langwathby continued to be held by the Scottish monarchs until the defection of John Baliol, when it reverted to the English crown, and was granted by Richard II. to Ralph Neville, first earl of Westmoreland, to be held by him and his heirs male. On the demise and attainder of Richard Neville, "the stout Earl of Warwick," in 1471, the manor again came to the crown, when Edward IV. gave it to his brother, Richard Duke of Gloucester, and afterwards Richard III. From this time it continued to be held by the crown till 1696, when William III. granted it to William Bentinck, first earl of Portland, whose family continued its possessors until it was purchased by the Duke of Devonshire in 1787, and it is now held by his successor, the present duke. It appears that there was a manor of Lambauby in the reign of Edward II., which was purchased by John de Penrith of William Latimer.¹ The landowners are Sir George Musgrave, Bart.; Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, Esq.; Messrs. John Watson, John Hodgson, John Powby, Samuel Fydell, Jonathan Harrison, Richard Williamson, William Bowstead, and John Bird. The commons were enclosed under an act passed in 1850.

The village of Langwathby is five miles north-east-by-east of Penrith, in the neighbourhood is a good bridge of three arches over the Eden, erected in 1686.

THE CHURCH.

Langwathby church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a remarkably neat edifice, erected in 1718, by the parishioners, on the site of the old one. It comprises nave, chancel, bell-gable, and a western porch erected in 1836. Dr. Todd tells us that the parishes of Edenhall and Langwathby were united in 1380 by Bishop Appleby. In the visitation rolls it is called a vicarage. The dean and chapter of Carlisle are appropriators, and possess the right of patronage. No mention is made of Langwathby in the Valor of Pope Nicholas, nor in that of Edward II., but it is supposed to be alluded to in the King's Book, as the "Chantry of Blessed Mary of Edenhall." The tithes have been commuted for £167 6s.; viz., £143 16s. rectorial, and £23 10s. vicarial, besides which the vicar has twenty-two acres of glebe. Divine service is performed here, and at Edenhall, on Sunday mornings and afternoons alternately. The parish registers commence in 1576, and

¹ Inq. ad quod damnum, 5th Edward II. 93.

Edenhall registers in 1558. For succession of vicars see Edenhall parish.

CHARITIES.

Winskell's Gift, Joseph Carleton's Gift, and Powley's Gift.—Christopher Winskell, by will, dated April 29th, 1702, left £20, the interest thereof to be yearly disposed to the use of the poor of the village of Langwathby. Joseph Carleton, by will, dated in June, 1760, left £20; and Mary Powley, who died in 1770, gave £5; both for the same purpose.

Lough Carleton's Gift.—Mr. Lough Carleton, who died in 1792, gave in his life-time £20 for the use of the poor.

A lending library was established in 1844.

Eden View, a handsome stone structure, in the Tudor style, is the residence of — Williamson, M.D.

Langwathby Hall is now a farm-house.

LAZONBY PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north and west by Hesketh, on the south-west by Penrith and Hutton, on the south by Great Salkeld, and on the east and north-east by the river Eden. It is about five miles in length from north to south, and three in breadth from east to west. The soil in some parts is composed of a rich loam, and in other parts is of a gravelly nature—the arable land lies in the vale of the Eden and Petteril, and near the great road from Carlisle to Penrith. The west side of the parish is washed by the Petteril, and in the centre is a range of moorlands and fells, the northern part of which is covered by a large wood, called Baron Wood. Freestone is abundant in the parish. The inhabitants, who are chiefly divided between the villages and hamlets of Lazonby and Plumpton, and a few detached houses, are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and in stone quarrying, large quantities of red sandstone, &c., being sent from this parish. The population are industrious and are comfortably housed; they attend the markets at Penrith. Besides the great Roman road, running from north to south, another intersects the parish at Salkeld Gate; and at Plumpton Wall is the Roman station of Old Penrith. Lazonby parish comprises the two townships of Lazonby and Plumpton Wall, or Old Penrith.

LAZONBY.

The area of this township is 8,154 acres, and its rateable value £3,976 15s. 9d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 320; in 1811, 384; in 1821, 533; in 1831, 544; in 1841, 570; and in 1851, 595. The commons of this and Plumpton Wall township were enclosed in pursuance of the provisions of an act of Parliament passed in 1803.

The first possessors of the manor of Lazonby on record are the Estotevilles or Stutevilles, from whom it passed by successive heiresses to the Morvilles, Multons, and Dacres. On the attainder of Leonard Dacre, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, this manor and other estates were seized by the crown, and it was not till 1657, some time subsequent to the demise of Ralph, son of William, brother of Leonard Dacre, that these estates were recovered by Francis Lord Dacre of the South. In 1716 the co-heiresses of Thomas Lennard, earl of Sussex, sold the manor with other possessions to Sir Christopher Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall, and it has since continued in this family, Sir George Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall, being the present lord. A small mesne manor within that of Lazonby is held by the Fetherstonhaughs of the College, Kirkoswald. The principal landowners are Sir George Musgrave, Bart., Colonel Maclean, the Earl of Lonsdale, the trustees of the late John Dixon, Esq.; Messrs. George Dixon, Joseph Bell, John Bell, and John Hall.

The village of Lazonby is on the west side of the vale of Eden, one mile south-west of Kirkoswald, and seven miles north-by-east of Penrith. It is said to derive its name from a family or person of the name of Leysing. About 1116 or 1118 the first register of the bishopric of Glasgow contains a case of inquiry regarding the possession of some lands in Cumberland, between the bishopric and the Countess Matilda, wife of David Prince of Cumberland. Four Cumberland judges are named, and one of them bore the name of Leysing.

THE CHURCH.

Lazonby church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, stands on an elevation near the village. It is an ancient-looking structure, consisting of nave and chancel, with a bell turret at the west end, and on the east gable a beautiful cross. On the south side of the chancel is the ancient piscina, and near to it a square ambury or almyry. The whole building has been much modernised in its appearance, and the walls plastered and white-washed. In the churchyard are some venerable trees, and a square chamfer-edged shaft with a cross. At the east end of the yard is an old slab ornamented with two crosses. The church of Lazonby was given by Sir Hugh Morville to the priory of St. Mary, at Lanercost, and in 1272 was appropriated to that house, an endowment being made for the vicar, and the right of presentation reserved to the bishop of the diocese. In 1484 an award was made by Bishop Bell, between the priory and convent of Lanercost and John Boun, the vicar, touching the tithes of wool and lamb, and other small dues, which award was in the vicar's favour. When Lanercost Priory was dissolved, the living of Lazonby was granted by Edward VI. to Sir Thomas Dacre, from whose descendants it was purchased by Dr. John Barwick, dean of St. Paul's, who gave it to the chapel and poor of Witherslack, in Westmoreland, paying thereout yearly 40s. to the vicar of Lazonby. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas, the church of Lazonby is entered at £6 18s. 4d., and the vicarage at £7 6s.; in the valuation taken in the reign of Edward II., the church and vicarage are each valued at £1; and in the King's Book, the vicarage is entered at £13 5s. 2d. Bishop Nicolson informs us that when he visited this church, at the commencement of the last century, he saw here many Roman monuments (from the station at Old Penrith) which had been converted into gravestones. He also adds that there was then here "a black box containing instruments relating to the court of Rome;" and says "the register book begins at 1538, which is the very year these sort of books were first established in parishes, to supply (in some measure) the loss of those which this kingdom had upon the dissolution of monasteries."

VICARS.—Hugh de Malton, 1272; Sir William de Haloghton, 1300; Sir Adam de Outley, 1316; William de Threlkeld, died about 1367; Richard de Whilton, 1367; John de Castro Bernardi, 1369; Edward Rathion occurs 1477; John Boun occurs 1484 and 1535; Roland Threlkeld occurs 1535; Edward Denton, 1588; Anthony Haydock, 1614; Jonathan Goodwin, 1637; Simon Atkinson, —; Robert Simpson, 1661; Robert Hume, —; George Parker, 1703; Erasmus Head, 1737; William Wilkinson, 1739; John Brown, jun., 1752; John Brown, sen., 1757; James Evans, 1763; Joseph Blain, 1771; Thomas Myers, 1789; Walter Fletcher, 1826; John Heysham, 1846.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have each a place of worship here, the former of which was erected in 1850 and the latter in 1847.

A library and reading room was established in 1859.

CHARITY.

Robinson's Charity.—John Robinson, in 1737, bequeathed the sum of £8, the interest to be divided between the schoolmaster and the poor of the township of Plumpton. Of this sum, which was placed out at interest, £2 have been lost.

The single houses bearing particular names are Low Plains, Cote Hill, Scale Hill, Bleesfell, Braken Bank, West Brownrigg, East Brownrigg, &c., &c.

Lazonby Hall, the residence of Colonel Henry Dundas Maclean, is situated opposite to Kirkoswald, and overlooks the valley of the Eden to the south over Westmoreland as far as the hills on the borders of Yorkshire, and to the east the hills of the Cross Fell range. Colonel Maclean is the younger son of Maclean of Argdour, in Argyllshire, in Scotland, and married Miss Carlyle, daughter of the Rev. J. D. Carlyle, chancellor of Carlisle and claimant of the title of Lord Carlyle of Torthorwald, in Scotland, representative of the ancient and powerful family of Carlyle, one of whom, Sir Hildred de Carloli, at the time of the Conquest, possessed extensive lands in Abbey Holme, Cumwhinton, Glassonby, and other places in the county; and afterwards in Dumfriesshire, where their chief seat was the castle of Torthorwald. Colonel Maclean was high-sheriff for Cumberland in 1848.

PLUMPTON WALL.

Plumpton Wall township comprises an area of 3,021 acres, and its rateable value is £2,885 19s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 206; in 1811, 194; in 1821, 268; in 1831, 297; in 1841, 321; and in 1851, 334. The soil here is principally light and sandy, in some parts loamy.

The Roman station at Plumpton or Old Penrith, called in the locality by the common name of Castlestead, is a large station about thirteen miles south of Carlisle. Horsley conjectures it to be the ancient Bremetennacum. The turnpike road goes close past it, as did the ancient Roman road which led from Luguballia to the south of Britain. The station presents the usual characteristics of a Roman camp. Though not much elevated, it is sufficiently raised to enjoy a most extensive view of the surrounding country. The western side is the strongest, being protected by the deep but narrow valley in which the river Petteril flows. Its ramparts are boldly marked, and the interior of the station is filled up to their level with a mass of prostrate habitations. The largest heap of ruins is on the north-east quarter; it may be the remains of the Pretorium. The fosse is well defined on the north, south, and west sides. Enough of the eastern gate remains to show that it has been a double portal. One stone of the threshold still retains its position; it is worn by the feet of the ancient tenants of the city, and is circularly chafed by the action of the door in opening and shutting. Several very large stones, which have been used in the construction of the south gateway lie near their original site—some of them yet exhibit the holes in which the pivots of the door turned. The line of the street, which went from the eastern to the western gateway, is discernible. On the outside of the south-east corner of the station, an arched chamber or passage was discovered a few years ago, but it is now filled up with rubbish. Extensive remains of ancient foundations have been removed from the field on the east of the station; here, according to tradition, Old Penrith stood. There are also indications of suburban buildings to the west of the station. In the neighbourhood of the camp, and even at some distance from it, we meet, in the houses and stone fences, with such a number of the small neat stones which were usually employed in the construction of Roman dwellings, as to impress us with the idea that the suburban buildings were very extensive in that direction. In lowering a part of the turnpike road, some time ago, about a quarter of a mile south of the station, a well, cased with Roman masonry, was exposed. It is square, and is set diagonally to the road; it now copiously supplies the neighbouring farm-houses, who formerly were, in dry seasons, much inconvenienced by the scarcity of water. Several sculptured and inscribed stones, as well as coins, have been found here.

Plumpton Park was anciently demesne of the crown, and is thus described by Bishop Gibson in his edition of Camden:—"Upon the bank of Petril lies Plumpton Park (once called the Haja de Plumpton) very large, and formerly set apart by the kings of England for the keeping of deer, but by King Henry VIII. prudently planted with men, being almost a frontier between England and Scotland; not that Henry VIII. first of all peopled it, he only gave greater freedom and liberty to the inhabitants by disforesting it, and there were as many parishes and townships in it before as are since." Sandford informs us that in 1668 Plumpton Park belonged to Sir John Lowther, of Lowther, and many freeholders. He also adds that after it was disparked by Henry VIII. it was given on lease for 100 years to "one Jack a Musgrave, a metled man, who planted five of his sons at five several houses in it; some £200, some £50 per annum, and many tenants besides." After the expiration of the lease to the Musgraves, James I., by letters patent, dated July 19th, 1622, granted the same to James Murray, afterwards Earl of Annandale, for forty years, on a payment of £121 6s. 3d. On becoming possessed of this property he sought to eject the tenants, on the ground that they had held their lands by border service, which having ceased, their tenure ceased also. But it was agreed, by mutual consent, that on the tenants paying £800 to the said James Murray they should hold their tenements as before. In 1625 Charles I. granted Plumpton Park in fee to the above-named John Murray, at that time Earl of Annandale, and at that period it contained, by estimation, 2,436 acres, with common of pasture in the forest of Inglewood. It was to be held by fealty, in free and common socage, and not in capite. The Earl of Annandale sold the manor or lordship of Plumpton, Plumpton Park, Plumpton Park Head, and Plumpton Head in 1653, for the sum of £3,000, to Dame Eleanor Lowther, widow, from whom it has descended to the present lord, the Earl of Lonsdale. The manor is partly in Lazonby and partly in Hesketh parish. The Earl of Lonsdale purchased Plumpton Hall and demesne of the Duke of Norfolk, in 1808. The landowners are John Simpson, Esq.; William Blamire, Esq.; the trustees of the late R. H. Parker, Esq.; the Earl of Lonsdale; George Dixon, Esq.; George Bell, Esq.; Sir George Musgrave, Bart.; Messrs. George Robinson, Joseph Row, Wm. Lazonby, Richard Watson; the representatives of the late John de Whelpdale, the representatives of the late James Little, and Elizabeth Hunter.

Salkeld Gate is a hamlet in this township, four and a half miles north-by-west of Penrith.

THE CHAPEL.

The chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, was erected in 1767, at an expense of £200, defrayed by contributions in the neighbourhood. Mr. John Brown, of Plumpton, gave £200 towards the endowment, with which, and a sum of money obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, an estate was purchased at Castle Soverby, for the support of the minister. The gross value of the living is about £45 a year. William Blamire, Esq., is patron.

Salkeld Gate School is endowed with £5 a year; arising from £100 left in 1759, by John Scott, of Hallrigg.

The single houses having particular names are Roman Way, Plumpton Hall, and Petteril Green. The river Petteril runs nearly north and south, and divides the township from Plumpton Street, in the parish of Hesketh. There are two mills, viz., Plumpton Mill and Plumpton Foot Mill.

MELMERBY PARISH.

This parish, which is about two miles in length by one in breadth, is bounded on the north and west by Addingham, on the south by Ousby, and on the east by Alston. Hartside Fell, which is situate in this parish, rises to a height of 1,300 feet above the village of Melmerby, and is ascended by a gentle incline of about one foot in twenty. Its surface is generally smooth, and affords good pastureage for sheep. A lead mine has been wrought here for many years, but it is not very productive. In one part, above a spacious valley, rises abruptly the bold front of a limestone rock, called Melmerby Sear, which was at one time so intermixed with lead ore, that the rays of the setting sun falling upon it, rendered it visible at a great distance. The Helm winds are felt here in all their violence.¹ There are two mineral springs in the parish, but they are not much resorted to. The soil in the lower and cultivated parts of the parish is of a dry sandy nature, resting on a red freestone rock, and produces good crops of oats, barley, and potatoes. Melmerby possesses no dependant townships.

The area of Melmerby is 4,496 acres, and its rateable value £1,216. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 233; in 1811, 240; in 1821, 250; in 1831, 286; in 1841, 329; and in 1851, 296; who are chiefly engaged in agriculture, and reside principally in the village of Melmerby. Penrith is the market usually attended.

The manor of Melmerby was comprised in the barony of Adam Fitz-Sweyn. In the reign of Henry III. it was held by Odard de Wigton, and it continued in his family for three generations, when it was given by Margaret de Wigton to Sir Robert Parving, Knt., the king's serjeant-at-law, whose sister's son, Adam Peacock, succeeded and assumed the name of Parving. This Adam died in the 4th Richard II. (1380-1), when Melmerby came to Henry de Threlkeld, in whose family it continued for several generations, till Anne, daughter and coheir of Lancelot Threlkeld married William Threlkeld, of a collateral branch of the same family. This gentleman purchased the whole of Melmerby, and had issue a daughter and heir Elizabeth, married to Thomas Pattenson, Esq., of Breek, in Westmoreland, who thus became possessed of Melmerby. The manorial rights and privileges are at present held by the Rev. John Hall, of Clifton, near Bristol, who is also the owner of more than half the parish, the remainder is apportioned and divided into small estates, and occupied by a few resident yeomen. The land here is principally freehold; but a small portion is customary land. At the death of the lord or change of tenant, the occupier pays two and a half year's value. Melmerby Hall, the ancient seat of the lords of the manor, the property of the Rev. John Hall, is at present occupied by James Ryder, Esq., of Liverpool.

There is another manor in this parish, called Gale Manor, which belonged to the Huttons of Hutton Hall, Penrith. It has since been the property of the family of Holme, and is now possessed by the Rev. John Hall. Gale Hall, the manor house is now occupied as a farmstead. A portion of the common of the parish was enclosed by an act passed in 1855.

The village of Melmerby is situated on the road from ¹ We subjoin the following remarks on the Helm wind by the Rev. John Watson, of Cumwrev.—“The Helm wind is a local name applied to a very violent wind blowing from some eastern point of the compass, but mostly due east, at the foot of the mountains known by the name of the Cross Fell range, and confined both in length and breadth to the space contained between the Helm and Helm Bar, hereafter described. For the better understanding of this phenomenon it may be necessary first to point out the peculiar situation of the country where it occurs. The counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland are bounded on the eastern side by a chain of mountains, separately known by different names along the range, but collectively called the ‘Pennine Chain,’ from their Roman name Alpes Péninæ. The general direction is from north-west by north to south-east by south, and the northern extremity is at Talkin and Tyndale Fells, not far from which the railroad from Carlisle to Newcastle crosses to the east, the highest point of which is rather more than 400 feet above the level of the sea. Tyndale Fell rises rapidly to a considerable height, Talkin Fell more gradually; and the hills rise by degrees in the above-named direction towards the summit of Cross Fell, which is 2,901 feet above the level of the sea: southward of this the range continues till it joins Stainmoor; in this direction there is no great depression as at the north. The ascent on the east is more gradual than on the west, where it is sudden, with few or no spurs or outliers, except a few conical hills near Dufton in Westmoreland, called pikes. The mountains consist chiefly of the carboniferous limestone; at the northern extremity the coal measures come in; near Melmerby, slate and some of the older formations are thrown up; the new red sandstone extends all along the western base. Along the summit of this chain of mountains, and extending from three or four to sixteen or eighteen miles each way north and south from the highest point, there is often seen a large, long roll of clouds, the western front clearly defined and quite separated from any other cloud on that side; it is at times above the mountain, sometimes resting on its top, but most frequently descends a considerable way down its side; this is called the Helm. In opposition to this, and at a variable distance towards the west, is another cloud with its eastern edge as clearly defined as the Helm, and at the same elevation, this is called the Bar, or Bor; the space between the Helm and the Bar is the limit of the wind. The distance between the Helm and the Bar varies—the Bar advances or recedes from the Helm, this is sometimes not more than half a mile, sometimes three or four miles; occasionally the Bar seems to coincide with the western horizon, or it disperses and there is no Bar, and then there is a general east wind extending over all the country westward. However violent the wind be between the Helm and the Bar, the violence ends there; as on the west side of the Bar there is either no wind, or it blows in the contrary direction, or from various points in strong and sudden gusts, but the general direction of the Alston to Penrith, nine miles north-east-by-east of the latter place, and ten miles south-west-by-west of the former town. It is said to derive its name from its having been the residence of Melmor, a Dane, during the time the Northmen were dominant in England.

The old midsummer custom of the bon fire is still observed at Melmerby, perhaps the only place in Cumberland and Westmorland in which this remnant of fire-worship still lingers. At the alteration of the Calendar in this country, Midsummer Eve, old style, fell on the 4th of July, and this is still the time of observance at Melmerby. There is thus a singular retrogression of a day, but the cause of the change does not appear. The following day, until within two or three years since, was kept as the annual village festival. It was a holiday for a considerable extent of the fell sides, and used to be attended by a great concourse of people. Preparations on a most extensive scale were made, partly for the accommodation of the general public, but still more for the private entertainment of friends. For several days previous to the feast, the village ovens were in continual daily and nightly requisition. Sports were held out of doors, and in every house there was merry-making, which never ended with the first day. To such a ruinous extent was the hospitality of the season carried, that many persons, it is said, felt its effects for the ensuing twelve months. But this reunion of friends, which was, however, already declining, has been quite discontinued since the establishment of certain cattle fairs in the spring and autumn, and for these times the annual visits are now reserved.*

20000—1000000.

Melmerby church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a small old structure, consisting of nave and chancel, with a small bell turret, carrying two bells, and a porch beneath. The east gable is surmounted by a cross. Some few portions of the ancient stained glass, which once adorned the windows of this church, may yet be seen; and in the chancel is a gravestone, which is supposed to cover the remains of some member of the Threlkeld family, as it bears their arms, and a cross florée, with a sword. The ancient piscina still remains in the south side of the chancel. In the churchyard, on the south side of the church, are the remains of an old cross, which was broken up some years ago. Dr. Todd tells us, that "in the year 1312 Sir Robert Parving, Knt., having obtained a license from Edward III., and also the consent of the bishop of the diocese (confirmed by the prior and convent of St. Mary Carlisle), and of the rector, founded and endowed a college of eight chantry priests and chaplains, the chief of whom was to be styled custos collegii, within the church of Melmerby, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary and all wind is not changed; when the Bar advances so far as to reach the Helm the wind ceases. Neither the Helm nor the Bar are separate or detached, as might be imagined, but the Bar is the bell clearly defined front of a large body of clouds extending eastward behind the Helm, and westward from the Bar. The open space between the Helm and the Bar varies from eight or ten to thirty or forty miles in length, and from half a mile to four or six miles in breadth; this is the simplest form of the Helm and the Bar, though at the Helm, Bar, and space between, may be made by counting the fore-finger and middle of each hand and placing their tips to each other, the thumbs will then represent the Helm on the top of the fell, the fore-fingers the Bar, and the open space between the variable limit of the wind. The wind is very irregular, but most frequent from the end of September to May; it rarely occurs in the summer months. The villages of Milburn, Kildale, Ouse, Melmerby, and Garsdale, are most subject to its effects; its direction is not fixed, but the Bar is seldom seen at Castle Carrock, and is known only by name at Talkin. Sometimes when the atmosphere is quite settled, hardly a cloud to be seen, and not a breath of wind stirring, a small cloud appears on the summit, extends itself to the north and south; the Helm is then said to be on, and in a few minutes the wind is blowing so violently as to break down trees, overthrow stacks, occasionally blow a person from his horse, or overturn a horse and cart. When the wind blows the Helm seems violently agitated, and on ascending the fell and entering it, there is not much wind. Sometimes a Helm forms and goes off without a wind, and there are easterly winds without a Helm. The open space is clear of clouds, with the exception of small pieces breaking off now and then from the Helm, and either disappearing or being driven rapidly over to the Bar; but through this open space is often seen a higher stratum of clouds quite at rest; within the space described, the wind blows continually—it has been known to do so for nine days together, the Bar advancing or receding to different distances. When heard or felt for the first time it does not seem so very extraordinary, but when heard and felt for days together, it gives a strong impression of sublimity. Its sound is peculiar, and when once known is easily distinguished from that of ordinary winds. It cannot be heard more than three or four miles; but when in the wind or near it, it has been compared to the noise made by the sea in a violent storm. Its first effect on the spirits is exhilarating, and it gives a kind of buoyancy to the body. The country subject to it is very healthy, but it does great injury to the vegetation, by beating the grain, grass, and leaves of trees, till quite black. On the eastern side of the mountain they have no knowledge when the Helm wind is blowing violently on the west; and people on the fell, when a mist comes on, do not know that there is a wind till they descend the western side. It was long supposed that this wind was peculiar to this country; but it now appears there are similar phenomena in different places. Sir J. Herschel found one at the Cape of Good Hope; Professor Staley noticed one of the same kind near Belfast; and Professor Buche, of Philadelphia, when passing the Alps, observed a like appearance on Mount Conic.*

* See South-west and Westmorland Antiquary and Melmerby, p. 118.

The following observations on our Helm wind are from the pen of Dr. Haimes, of Carlisle, and are the first ever here as yet appeared relating to the subject before us:—"The air or wind from the east ascends the gradual slope of the eastern side of the Denton crags or Cross Fell range of mountains, to the summit of Cross Fell, where it enters the Helm or Gap, and is cooled to a low temperature; a dense mist descends down the abrupt declivity of the western side of the mountain into the valley beneath, in consequence of the wind losing its elastic temperature, and this constitutes the Helm wind. The sudden and violent rushing of the wind down the crevices and caverns of the mountain occasions the loud noise that is heard. At a varying distance from the base of the mountain the Helm wind is carried by the warmth of the low ground, and the saints. To this new society the founder gave all the tithes and advowson of this church, with the patronage of the church of Skelton, and one messuage and a bovate of land in Melmerby. But this foundation," Dr. Todd adds, "if it ever took place, did not continue long; for within two or three years after, the bishop collated to the rectory Roger de Cromwell."¹ The church is rectorial, and is entered in the Valor of Pope Nicholas at £13 13s. 4d., and in the King's Book at £12 11s. 4d. It is now worth about £170 per annum, besides thirty-eight acres of glebe. The tithes have been commuted for £118 per year. The lord of the manor is patron of the living. The parish register commences in 1701.

¹ Jefferson's "Leath Ward," p. 303.

RECTORS.—Sir Thomas de Berneston, 1392; Thomas Blythe, exchanged in 1342; John de Manserge, 1342; Roger de Cromwell, 1343; Robert de Brounfield, 1346; Sir Henry de Wakefield, 1354; Sir William de Pulhow, 1359; Rowland Threlkeld occurs 1526; Sir Edward Stampe, 1565; Sir George Threlkeld, 1572; George Warsick, 1609; Richard Singleton, died 1684; William Threlkeld, 1684; William Lindsey, 1701; Lancelot Pattenson, 1739; John Jameson, 1760; John Slee, 1785; Joseph Bardgett, 1821; Robert Cave Pattenson, 1844.

The rectory is a neat stone building, erected in 1856, by the present rector.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here.

NEWTON REIGNY PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Hutton-in-the-Forest, on the west by Dacre and Skelton, on the south by Dacre, and on the east by Penrith. It is about four and a half miles in length, by two in breadth. The soil is a good heavy loam, except near Catterlen Hall, where it is rather light and gravelly. Previous to the enclosure of Catterlen Fell, which took place in 1812, the parishioners had the privilege of grazing sheep on it during the summer months. The parish comprises the townships of Newton Reigny and Catterlen, whose united area is 2,441 acres. The inhabitants are principally engaged in agricultural pursuits, and attend the markets at Penrith.

NEWTON REIGNY.

The population of the township of Newton Reigny in 1801 was 128; in 1811, 116; in 1821, 126; in 1831, 151; in 1841, 163; and in 1851, 174; who chiefly reside in the village of Newton. The rateable value is £1,102 19s. 6d.; the extent, 971 acres.

Newton Reigny possesses very distinct traces of that race commonly supposed to have been the aborigines of meets with the wind from the west, which resists its further course. The higher temperature it has acquired in the valley, and the meeting of the contrary current, occasion it to rebound and ascend into the upper region of the atmosphere. When the air or wind has reached the height of the Helm, it is again cooled to the low temperature of this cold region, and is consequently unable to support the same quantity of vapour it had in the valley; the water or moisture contained in the air is therefore condensed by the cold, and forms the cloud called the Helm Bar. The meeting of the opposing currents beneath—while there are frequently strong gusts of wind from all quarters, and the sudden condensation of the air and moisture in the Bar cloud, give rise to its agitation or convection, as if struggling with contrary blasts. The Bar is therefore not the cause of the limit of the Helm wind, as is generally believed, but is the consequence of it. It is absurd to suppose that the Bar, which is a light cloud, can impede or resist the Helm wind; but if it even possessed a sufficient resisting power it could have no influence on the wind which is blowing near the surface of the earth, and which might pass under the Bar. The variable distance of the Bar from the Helm is owing to the changing situation of the opposing and conflicting currents, and the difference of temperature of different parts of the low ground near the base of the mountain. When there is a break or opening in the Bar the wind is said to rush through with great violence, and to extend over the country. Here again the effect is mistaken for the cause. In this case, the Helm wind, which blows always from the east, has, in some place underneath the observed opening, overcome the resistance of the air, or of the wind from the west, and of course does not rebound and ascend into the higher regions to form the Bar. The supply being cut off, a break or opening in that part of the Bar necessarily takes place. When the temperature of the lower region has fallen, and become nearly uniform with that of the mountain range, the Helm wind ceases: the Bar and the Helm approach and join each other, and rain not infrequently follows. When the Helm wind has overcome all the resistance of the lower atmosphere, or of the opposing current from the west, and the temperature of the valley and the mountain is more nearly equalised, there is a rebound or ascent of the wind, consequently the Bar ceases to be formed, the one already existing is dissipated, and a general east wind prevails. There is little wind in the Helm cloud, because the air is colder in it than in the valley, and the moisture which the air contains is more condensed, and is deposited in the cloud upon the summit of the mountain. There is rarely either a Helm, Helm wind, or Bar, during the summer, on account of the higher temperature of the summit of the Cross Fell range and the upper regions of the atmosphere at that season of the year. The different situations of the Helm, on the side, on the summit, and above the mountain, will depend on the temperature of these places. When the summit of the mountain is not cold enough to condense the vapour, the Helm is situated higher in a colder region, and will descend the side of the mountains if the temperature be sufficiently low to produce that effect. The sky is clear between the Helm and Bar, because the air below is warmer, and can support a greater quantity of vapour rising from the surface of the earth, and this vapour is driven forward by the Helm wind, and ascends in the rebound to the Bar. In short, the Helm is merely a cloud or cap upon the mountain, the cold air descends from the Helm to the valley, and constitutes the Helm wind; and when warmed and rarified in the valley, ascends and forms the Bar. An objection has been taken to this theory, on the ground that there is no Helm wind in the valley of the Tyne; but the circumstances are very different, this valley is situated much higher than that of the Eden, and the summit of the mountain on the east is considerably lower than the top of Cross Fell. The former valley has also a high ridge of mountains on the west, the latter a low and extensive plain. The fact that the Helm wind never extends further than the Bar tends to prove the truth of the theory."

the country, the earliest of which we find mention in the history of the island; and who, whether known by the name of Celts or Cimbri, were, if not of identical, certainly of kindred blood. These traces consist of several barrows, occurring on a line of road south of the village, from one of which urns have been obtained, characteristic of the pre-Roman period. Their conquerors and successors, at least in dominion, have also during their military occupancy of the island, at any rate for a brief period, dwelt within this parish, as is evidenced by the outline of a camp, situated to the east of the church, and which appears to have been of considerable extent. Following the chronological sequence we have commenced, a long hiatus exists between the later marks left on the soil and the earliest mention in written documents. William de Reigny was impleaded in a writ of right, 33rd Henry II. (1186) by William de Lascelles, for a knight's fee of land in Newton, but he must have been unsuccessful, for John de Reigny was lord of the manor in the 4th John (1203), as is evidenced from the mention of him in the "Testa de Neville," from which it appears that Turston de Reigny, father of the aforesaid William, was the original grantee. The male line of the Reignys became extinct on the death of John, and his inheritance passed to co-heiresses, and another blank at present remains between that period and the reign of Edward I., early in which we find Robert Burnell, bishop of Bath and Wells, held Newton by the service of finding an esquire to serve in the king's army against Scotland, with an haubergeon and an iron helmet, at his own cost, for the period of forty days. In the 18th Edward I. (1290), Bishop Burnell conveyed the manor to Hugh de Lowther, from whom it has passed, without alienation, to his descendant, the present Earl of Lonsdale. The old manor house now serves as a farmstead. The principal landowners in the township are the Earl of Lonsdale, Rev. John Nicholson, Thomas Moorhouse, Esq., William Jackson, Esq., Messrs. John Brunsell, John Hodgson, William Sowerby, John Shephard, John Bell, John Scott, and John and Joseph Thompson.

The village of Newton Reigny occupies an elevated position, and is situated three miles north-west-by-west of Penrith.

THE CHURCH.

Newton Reigny church, which is externally rude and bald in its appearance, greatly owing to the repairs it underwent about thirty years ago, is internally divided into nave with aisles and chancel, the former is separated from its aisles by three obtuse pointed arches, springing on the northern side from octagonal, and on the southern from circular pillars. A fine pointed arch divides the nave from the chancel, at the eastern end of which is a modern pointed window of three lights, constructed in woodwork, having opposite to it, at the western end of the nave, another also of three lights, differing in the details of the heading. A piscina and credence table are still in existence in the chancel; and two other piscinas, one in each aisle of the nave, evidence that these have been used as chantries. The character of the architecture indicates the date of the construction of the church as being about the commencement of the fourteenth century. There is a vault belonging to the Vaux family, of Catterlen; and three sepulchral notices of members of the Richmond family; as also the following rude attempt at verse, which tells us that,—

Under lyeth James Pearson here,
Curate of this place forty year;
Who buried was March the first.
I hope his soul in heaven doth rest.
ANNO DOMINI 1650.

This church has been appropriated for centuries to the see of Carlisle, and is, in records of an early date, denominated a chapel. The altarage was granted in the year 1338, by Bishop Kirby, to Nicholas de Claus, for his life, reserving to the bishop and his successors two marks of silver annually, and being mindful that divine service should be regularly performed. Nineteen years after, Sir Gilbert Baker, called keeper of the chantry, resigned, and was succeeded by Sir John de Bramra. In 1360 Bishop Welton granted license to the prior of the Augustinians of Penrith to officiate at Newton for the term of four years. In 1523 Bishop Kite let the chapelry to farm to Sir Christopher Dacre and others, at the annual rent of ten marks. In 1635 legal proceedings were taken against Bishop Potter and Sir Thomas Carleton, Knt., his lessee of the rectory (so called), for not allowing a sufficient maintenance to the curate; and thereupon it was agreed that the curate for the time being should henceforth have all the rectory, the tithes corn excepted, and from that should receive £6 13s. 4d., which being subsequently advanced to £10 13s. 4d., still continues to be paid. In 1765 the church received a grant from Queen Anne's Bounty of £200, which, in conjunction with a donation of a similar sum from Dr. Holme, was invested in the purchase of an estate at Kirkstone Fell foot. The living is now worth about £80 a year, exclusive of a house and garden. The tithes of the parish were commuted, in 1839, for £168 7s. 9d., viz., rectorial £144 7s. 3d., and vicarial £23 8s. 6d. The parish registers commence in 1572. The list of incumbents is very imperfect: the following is as near an approximation as we are able to arrive at:—

INCUMBENTS.—Edward Nicholson, died 1593; Robert Troutbeck, died 1636; James Pearson, died 1676; Hugh Newton, —; Philip Robinson, died 1789; John Pearson, died 1831; Robert Pearson, vacated 1845; Joseph Castlehow, vacated 1846, when John B. Wightwick, present incumbent, succeeded.

The parsonage house is a plain building, erected about thirty years ago, from funds obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty and other sources.

CATTERLEN.

The area of this township is 1,470 acres, and its rateable value £914 4s. 2d. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 92; in 1811, 104; in 1821, 124; in 1831, 125; in 1841, 147; and in 1851, 130; who chiefly reside in Catterlen village.

The township of Catterlen presents no objects of antiquarian interest, and calls for no notice previous to the Norman Conquest, at which epoch we find it in the possession of a Saxon proprietor, named Uhtredus, who, as we gather from the charter of Henry II., quoted at length under the pedigree of the Vauxes of Gilsland, was the last Saxon owner; and under the following pedigree will be found as full an account of the possessors of the manor to the present time as we have been able to compile from original sources, and from the labours of our predecessors, especially from the account of the family given by Jefferson in his "Leath Ward:—"

Vaux of Catterlen.

JOHN DE VAUX, Knt., of Catterlen, is the first of whom we find mention, and probably the original grantee for Catterlen or Kaderleng, as it is there called, was confirmed to Hubert de Vaux, in the charter of Henry II., which must have been made between 1154 and 1167, and Sir John was of this manor, 16th Henry II. (1170). He was succeeded by his son,

JOHN DE VAUX, Knt., of Catterlen, 32nd Henry II. (1185). His successor was his son, WILLIAM DE VAUX, of whom no special mention is made.

WILLIAM DE VAUX, living here in the reign of Henry III., and who had issue two sons,

- i. WILLIAM, his successor.
- ii. John, from whom descended the Vauxes of Odilham, Hampshire.

WILLIAM DE VAUX married the daughter and heiress of a collateral branch, the Vauxes of Tryermaine, by whom he left,

- i. WILLIAM, his successor.
- ii. Rowland, who had issue,
Ralph, who had,
Robert.

- iii. James.
- iv. John.

WILLIAM DE VAUX, who was seated here 24th Edward III. (1351). He married a daughter of Richard de Salkeld, of Korkaby, and left a son,

JOHN DE VAUX, of whom mention is made 48th Edward III. (1375). He had issue three sons,

- i. JOHN, who succeeded his father.
- ii. William.
- iii. Robert.

JOHN DE VAUX, who was living at Catterlen, 20th Richard II. (1367).

JOHN DE VAUX, who is mentioned 4th Henry IV. (1403), he left issue four sons,

- i. WILLIAM, his successor,
- ii. John.
- iii. Thomas.
- iv. Henry.

WILLIAM DE VAUX, who married a daughter of — Brougham, and was residing at Catterlen 8th Henry V. (1421.)

WILLIAM DE VAUX, living 20th Ed. IV. (1481), married a daughter of — Delamere, by whom he had

JOHN DE VAUX, who married a daughter of — Crackenthorpe. He was living during the reign of Richard III., and by her left issue a son

WILLIAM, his successor.

By a second marriage with Mary, daughter of — Skelton, he had

John, from whom descended a numerous progeny.

WILLIAM DE VAUX, seated at Catterlen during the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII. He is mentioned in the list of those liable to Border service, given in Sir Thomas Wharton's letter, dated 24th Henry VIII. (1545), from whence it appears that he was liable to send four horse and six footmen towards the defence of the Border. He married a daughter of — Leybourne, and had issue four sons and two daughters,

- i. ROBERT, died without issue.
- ii. John.
- iii. Roland.
- iv. Gilbert.

- i. Mary, married Thomas Salkeld, of Whitehall, Cumberland.
- ii. Dorothy, married — Senhouse of Seascale Hall, Cumberland.

JOHN VAUX, who, it seems, held Catterlen 35th Henry VIII. (1544), by the service of paying to the king 22d. yearly.

ROLAND VAUX, particular notice of whom will be found under the description of the hall, married Ann, daughter of — Salkeld, and by her had a large family,

- i. WILLIAM, his successor.
- ii. Thomas, by his wife or wives, had a very numerous family.

¹ This may be that John de Vaux, who in the Brougham pedigree is set down as having married a daughter of a John de Brougham, who is there stated to have been sheriff of Cumberland in 1383, but the name of that family does not occur in the list of shire-sheriffs or knights of the shire until 6th Will. and Mary, when Henry Brougham of Scales, filled the former office.

² A certain Robert Vaux was sheriff of Cumberland, 30th Henry VI. (1452); again 3rd and 3rd Edward IV. (1463-4); and once more in the 7th of the same reign (1468), if he were of Catterlen he preceded this William.—(5)

- III. Humphrey.
- IV. Richard.
- V. John.
- I. Jane, married to Sir William Hutton, by whom she had a family.
- II. Isabel, married to John Simpson, by whom she had children.
- III. Philip died young.

WILLIAM VAUX, married Jane —, and by her had a son, his successor, and five daughters.

- I. JOHN.
- I. Ann.
- II. Jane.
- III. Mary.
- IV. Dorothy.
- V. Barbara.

JOHN VAUX married Mabel Musgrave, by whom he had,

- I. Madelaine died young.
- II. Mabel, who married Christopher Richmond, of Highhead.
- III. Mary, who married William Graham, of Nunnery.

Trus — Orga fesse chequy, gold, and gules, between three garbs of the third, banded of the first in chief, a label of three points.

Richmond of Catterlen Hall.

I CHRISTOPHER RICHMOND, married Mabel, daughter and co-heiress of John Vaux, of Catterlen Hall, by whom he received that inheritance, in addition to his patrimony of High Head Castle. They had the following children:—

- I. CHRISTOPHER, his successor.
- II. John.
- III. George.
- IV. Thomas.
- I. Isabel.
- II. Magdalen.

I This Christopher was descended from John Richmond, who purchased High Head from John Restwold, to whom it had descended from the family of English. The said John Richmond had a son and heir,

JOHN RICHMOND, who, in the 2nd Elizabeth, was impeached for a purpurage of sixty acres. He married firstly, — Dacre, but had no children; secondly, Margaret Dalston, of Uldale, by whom he had,

- I. CHRISTOPHER, his successor.
- II. John, died young.
- III. Francis, married a daughter of Lancelot Fletcher.
- IV. Margaret, married Sir Richard Fletcher, of Hutton.
- V. Mabel, married John Simpson, of Sowerby.

CHRISTOPHER RICHMOND married firstly, Ann, daughter of Thomas Mayplate, of Little Salkeld, by whom he had,

- I. John, who died unmarried.

Secondly, he married Elizabeth Chayter, by whom he had,

- I. Francis, who died young.
- II. CHRISTOPHER, his father's successor.
- III. Margery, married John Agbony, of Carlisle.
- IV. Elizabeth, married Richard Baxter, of Seabingham.
- III. Mary, married John Vaux, of Little Musgrave.

Thirdly, he married Eleanor Beaulay, by whom he had,

- I. William.
- I. Jane.
- II. Mabel

He died in 1612, leaving Christopher, his son, who married Mabel Vaux, his successor.

By his second wife, Magdalen Huddleston, he had,

- I. Dorothy.
- II. Margery.
- III. Mabel.

CHRISTOPHER RICHMOND married firstly Mary, daughter of — Lawson, of Isell, who died in 1672, by her he had

- I. Christopher, died young.
- II. CHRISTOPHER, his successor.
- I. Jane.
- II. Mary.

Secondly he married Isabella Reynolds, by whom he had

- I. Erasmus, died young.
- II. Henry, died unmarried 1716.
- III. William, died young.
- I. Isabel, married to Colonel Gledhill, by whom she had a family.
- II. Elizabeth, married to Peter Brougham, by whom she had
 - I. Henry Richmond, died unmarried.
 - 2. John, died unmarried.

III. Sarah, married George Simpson, and subsequently John Baker.

- IV. Ann.
- V. Mabel, married Henry Brisco.
- VI. Susan.

VII. Margaret, married William Gale, of Whitehaven, by whom she had

- I. John, who married Sarah Wilson, and hence by a son derive the Braddyls.
- I. Isabella, married to Henry Curwen, of Workington Hall. They had a daughter from whom the present proprietor of that estate descends.

VIII. Martha.

CHRISTOPHER RICHMOND, married 1690, Elizabeth Watson, by whom he had

- I. Christopher, died an infant.
- I. Elizabeth, died unmarried.
- II. Isabella, married John Hutchinson, by whom she had

- I. John, who by a daughter, was the ancestor of the Martins of Ironfield.

Upon the death of Christopher without male issue, the estates devolved upon his brother of the half blood.

HENRY RICHMOND, who dying unmarried 1716, bequeathed the estates absolutely to his mother.

ISABELLA MILLER, who after the decease of her first husband married Matthias Miller, she by her will, dated May 1st, 1736, bequeathed Highhead for life, and Catterlen in fee to her daughter by the said Christopher.

SUSAN RICHMOND, who dying unmarried in 1775, by her will left to her niece, the daughter of Margaret Richmond and William Gale, of Whitehaven, as aforesaid, ISABELLA CORWEN, the estate of Catterlen, which she sold to the Duke of Norfolk, from whom the present proprietor, Henry Howard, Esq., of Greystoke Castle, inherits the same.

Arms.—Gules, two bars gemells, a chief, or.

The principal landowners are Henry Howard, Esq., Sir Henry R. F. Vane, Bart., William Thompson, John Johnston, Joseph Mounsey, John Lamb. Catterlen Hall is now a farmhouse.

The village of Catterlen is three miles north-west-by-north of Penrith. Here is a small school, erected in 1835, which is supported by the quarter pence of the children, and has an average attendance of thirty pupils.

The single houses bearing particular names are Catterlen Hall, Helling Syke, Honey House, High and Low Dyke.

The mansion house of Catterlen Hall, situated on a hill, at the base of which flows the Petteril, is a good specimen of the Border Peel Tower, with later erections, indicating the additional security which advancing civilisation afforded. The old tower probably dates as far back as the wars of the Roses, but we possess no information as to the builder. The first enlargement was made by that Rowland Vaux who died in 1586, as appears from a carving in stone over the door,—having, 1st and 4th, the arms of Vaux; 2nd and 3rd, a cross moline within a roundel, with the inscription, "Let mercy and faithfulness never go from thee;" and underneath, "At this time is Roland Vaux lord of this place, and builded this house in the year of God 1577." The letters "R. V., A. V.," his own and wife's initials being at the four corners. The second addition to the hall was made during the Richmond period, and consists of a court-house and retiring room, reached by a lofty flight of steps from the court-yard, with inferior rooms below. Above the grand door, on ascending the steps, is perceived the arms of Vaux, quartering those of Richmond, (two bars gemells) with the motto, "Deo vivente juvante." Over the chimney-piece of the hall, and in the centre, with the date 1657, is a wreath enclosing a heart and two roses. In a similar position in the retiring room is the same date, with the letters "R.," enclosed in a wreath. Another chimney piece, in the middle age part of the hall, is said to display the coat of Richmond impaling, quarterly, 1st and 4th, per bend indented, three roses or, 2nd and 3rd a saltire.

CHARITY.

Mrs. Isabella Miller, widow of Christopher Richmond, and subsequently widow of Mr. Matthias Miller, having become possessed of the Catterlen estate, under the will of her son Henry, by her will, dated May 1st, 1736, bequeathed a message and field, measuring about an acre, in the said manor, in trust for the benefit of a schoolmaster, who should teach the children of the tenants the principles of the Christian religion, reading and writing; but though tradition professes to point out the land, the house has long been destroyed, and the benefit which was intended to accrue to the inhabitants has been lost.

OUSBY PARISH.

THE parish of Ousby extends about six miles from east to west, and about a mile and a half from north to south, being bounded on the north by Melmerby, on the west by Addingham, and on the south and east by Kirkland. About one fourth of this parish is enclosed and cultivated, the remainder forming a large common. Green Fell, which rises to the height of 2,500 feet above sea level, is situated here, lying between Hartside Fell and Cross Fell. That portion of the parish which is under cultivation is tolerably fertile, having generally a red marly soil, and in some places a light sand,—the principal crops are oats, barley, turnips, &c. The inhabitants, who are chiefly engaged in agriculture and sheep farming, attend the Penrith markets, and occasionally those of Alston and Appleby.

Ousby comprises 6,000 acres of land, and its rateable value is £1,053 8s. 9d. In 1801 it contained 253 inhabitants; in 1811, 249; in 1821, 276; in 1831, 291; in 1841, 271; and in 1851, 295. In the western extremity of the parish are vestiges of what appears to have been an ancient British fort, consisting of two ramparts, an outer and inner, with an intervening ditch, enclosing a pentagonal area in which an urn and several fragments of ruined walls have been found.

The first recorded possessors of the manor of Ousby are two sisters, who held it in moieties; and shortly afterwards we find one of these moieties held by four sisters. In the time of Henry III. Julian Falcand and William Armstrong occur as holding a moiety each, and shortly afterwards we find Henry le Serjeant and Patrick de Ulneby holding each an eighth part. By alienation the residue was broken into small parcels, some of which were given to the priory of Lanercost, others to the prior of St. John of Jerusalem, some in frank marriage, many small parcels were sold, and many distributed among the families of Crackenthorpe, Salkeld, Crofton, Beauchamp, and Raughton. The estate has long been in severalties, but the manorial rights appear to have centered by purchase, or otherwise, in the family of Crackenthorpe of Newbiggin, Westmoreland; W. Crackenthorpe, Esq., being the present lord. The landowners are W. Crackenthorpe, Esq., Messrs. Hare, Joseph Barker, Rev. J. Hall, B.D., John P.

Spedding, Rev. J. Ion, James Shephard, Joseph Braithwaite, Henry Hodgson, Anthony Hodgson, John Workman, John Atkinson, John and Joseph Cheesbrough, Isaac Westmoreland, Thomas Goulding, the trustees of the late Walter Buchanan, Rev. J. F. Courtney, Joseph Varty, William Varty, John Varty, John and Thomas Cartmell, Joseph Howe, Rev. Thomas Jackson; Mrs. Bleaymire, Mrs. Margaret Robinson, and Mrs. Byers.

The village of Ousby, Ulmesby, Ullesby, or Ulfby, is about nine miles east-north-east of Penrith, and twelve and a half miles south-west of Alston, and is said to derive its name from Ulf, or Olave, a Dane, who settled here long anterior to the Norman conquest. Nicolson and Burn state that this Ulf was one of the three sons of Haldan—the other two, Torquell and Melmor, settled themselves respectively at Torquelby near Keswick, and at Melmerby.

THE CHURCH.

Ousby church, dedicated to St. Luke, consists of a nave and chancel, with a bell turret at the western end, carrying two bells, under which is the principal entrance. There is a narrow door on the south side of the chancel. The church has lately been restored, mainly at the cost of the present rector. A painted window, bearing the figure of St. Luke, has been erected in the eastern end of the chancel. In the chancel is the figure of a crusader, carved in oak, but greatly damaged and dilapidated. The armour appears to be that usually termed mail, the feet rest on a dog, the legs are crossed, and the hands raised in the attitude of prayer. Respecting the person whom this statue is supposed to represent, Bishop Nicolson gives the following tradition:—"He was an outlaw who lived at Crewgarth in this parish, and was killed while he was hunting, at a certain place on the neighbouring mountain, which from that accident keeps the name of Baronside to this day. For all great men were anciently called barons in this country." This tradition seems to be like many others, without any foundation in fact, for it is very improbable that had this "baron," or whoever he may have been, deserved the character here given of him, that he would have been buried in the chancel of a church, and his monument be in the style common to those persons who had been in the Holy Land. The ancient sedilia and piscina are still preserved in this church. In front of the former is the monument mentioned above. The living of Ousby is a rectory, entered in the Valor of Pope Nicholas at £11 19s., and in the King's Book at £13 13s., now worth about £340. The tithes are commuted for £290. The patronage is vested in the Bishop of Carlisle. The parish register commences in 1663.

Rectors.—Roger Peytenin, 1245; Gilbert de Haleboughton, 1304; Adam de Appleby, —; Sir Robert de Halcighton, 1312; Thomas de Calibeeck, 1316; John Grayvill, —; Sir William de Denton, —; John de Welton, 1359; Robert de Welton, 1369; Sir Richard de Ulvesby, 1391; Sir Thomas de Kirkland, 1361; Sir Nicholas de Stapleton, 1363; William de Strickland, 1366; Sir John Watreward, 1366; Symon de Wharston occurs 1376; Cuthbert Denton occurs 1535; Hugh Sewell, died 1583; Sir Hugh Rayson, 1583; Nicholas Dean, 1611; Leonard Milburne occurs 1644; Thomas Robinson, 1672; George Fleming, 1719; Lancelot Pattenson, 1735; John Delap, 1759; William Raincock, 1766; Edward Christian, 1784; Humphrey John Hare, 1802; Thomas Lowry, 1807; John Fenton, 1833; James Bush, 1854.

The rectory is a plain substantial building, built by the present rector in 1856.

There is a Wesleyan chapel, built in the year 1838, and possessing accommodation for about eighty persons.

The National School is a neat building, in the Early English style, erected in 1856 by the rector, at a cost of £300. It is under government inspection, supported by voluntary contributions and quarter pence, and is attended by about twenty children.

An annual feast is held in the village about the latter end of the month of October, soon after the festival of St. Luke, and is celebrated by the inhabitants meeting together, and by the performance of the usual rural sports of the country, such as wrestling, &c.

Bradley, Fell Side, and the Row, are hamlets in this parish.

CHARITIES.

Poor Money.—Robert Hutchinson, the elder, in 1683, and Robert Hutchinson, the younger, in 1694, each left £5 for the poor stock of the parish, which, being lent out at interest, half of it was lost, and the remainder was applied to the poor rates. A legacy of £100, left by an old lady about eighty years ago, whose name is now unknown in the parish, is supposed to have been intended for the use of the poor; but this also was applied to the same purpose.

PENRITH PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Lazonby, on the west by Grey Stoke and Newton, on the south by the river Eamont, which divides it from Westmoreland, and on the east by Edenhall. It extends about four miles in length from north to south, and three and a half in breadth from east to west. The soil is in general a light red mould, and is in some parts very fertile, especially near the Eamont, where loam prevails. The extensive common, consisting of about 8,000 acres, has been enclosed and allotted, together with the other waste lands in Ingleswood Forest, pursuant to an Act of Parliament passed in 1803. The parish comprises seven divisions, viz., Burrovgate, Dockray, Middlegate and Sandgate, Netherend, and Townhead, which constitute the town; and the hamlets of Plumpton Head, Carlisle, and Eamont Bridge. Its area is 7,664 acres, and its rateable value £242,303 14s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 3,801; in 1811, 4,328; in 1821, 5,985; in 1831, 6,089; in 1841, 6,120; and in 1851, 7,887.

Our earliest information respecting the district in which Penrith and its neighbourhood are situate is connected with Ingleswood Forest, the wood of the Angles, as it was called, from the settlements made within its boundaries at Plumpton, Hutton, Newton, and other places, by these German invaders. This forest comprised the south-eastern half of Cumberland Ward, a large portion of Leath Ward, with a portion of the ward of Allendale-below-Derwent, and formed part of the demesne of the English crown. It appears to have been a forest before the Conquest, and was divided into the High Ward, from Penrith to Hesketh, and the Low Ward, from Hesketh to Carlisle. At the period of the Norman invasion this part of England was held by the Scots, from whom it was taken by the Conqueror, and given, with the rest of the county, to Ranulph de Meschines. Ranulph made a survey of the whole county, and gave to his followers all the frontiers bordering on Scotland and Northumberland, retaining to himself the central part between the east and the west mountains, "a goodly great forest, full of woods, red deer and fallow, wild swine, and all manner of wild beasts." During the reign of Rufus, that portion of the forest which was in the neighbourhood of Carlisle, was brought into cultivation by some labourers who had been sent from the south of England for that purpose. The other portions of the forest at this; and probably to a much later period, was full of red deer; Edward I. is said to have killed 200 bucks here in a few days. That monarch gave the extra-parochial tithes of the forest to the convent of St. Mary Carlisle. In a perambulation of the boundaries of the forest, made in 1301, by the commissioners of Edward I., they were declared to be as follow:—"Beginning at the bridge of Caldew, without the city of Carlisle, and so by the highway unto Thursby towards the south; and from Thursby by the same way through the middle of the town of Thursby to Waspatrikewath, ascending by the water of Wampole to the place where Shawk falls into Wampole. And from thence going up straight to the head of Rowland Beck; and from that place descending to the water of Caldbeck; and so down by that water to the place where Caldbeck falls into Caldew; and so up to Gyrgwath; and so by the highway of Sourby unto Stanewath under the castle of Sourby; and so by the highway up to Mabel cross; and so by the hill of Kenewathen, going down by the said highway through the middle of the town of Alleyby; and so to the same way unto Peliat; and so down by the same way unto the bridge of Amote; and so from that bridge going down by the bank of Amote unto Eden; and so descending by the water of Eden unto the place where Caldew falls into Eden; and from that place to the bridge of Caldew aforesaid, without the gate of the city of Carlisle." Thus it appears that it comprehended all that large and now fertile tract of country "extending westward from Carlisle, by Thursby to Westward, and thence to Caldbeck, Castle Sowerby, Mabel Cross, Blencow, and Penrith, from whence its boundary extends along the Eamont to the Eden, which constitutes its eastern limits all the way northward to Carlisle, where it terminates in a point, as at Westward, and the confluence of the Eamont and the Eden forming a sort of triangle, each side of which is more than twenty miles in length."

Cumberland continued to be held as a fief of the English crown till the reign of Stephen. The troubles which quickly gathered round the throne of this monarch encouraged the King of Scotland, David I., to make an attempt to gain possession of the northern counties, which he invaded in 1153, and, under pretence of acting in the interests of Stephen's rival, Prince Henry, who had been educated at his court, made himself master of all the fortresses in Cumberland and Northumberland, with the exception of Bamborough. From this time the possession of the northern counties continued to be a subject for dispute between England and Scotland, and many years passed before it was finally adjusted. In the reign of King John a treaty was entered into for their final surrender to the Scots, upon certain conditions, but like many other treaties, its provisions were doomed to be inoperative. In the reign of John's successor, Henry III., a conference was held at York, in the presence of the papal legate, by whose influence chiefly the King of Scotland was induced to give up his claim, in consideration of the grant of lands in Cumberland or Northumberland of the value of £200, which he was to hold of the King of England, by the annual payment to the Constable of the Castle of Carlisle of a falcon. In 1242 the manors of Penrith, Langwathby, Great Salkeld, Sowerby, and Carleton, were granted to the Scottish king in pursuance of this agreement. For a few years the northern counties of England enjoyed a comparative degree of tranquillity. But the contests for the Scottish crown did not allow their state of peace to continue for any lengthened period. After the crown of Scotland had been adjudged to John Balliol, and he had been accepted as king by the Scots, the King of England delivered to him Penrith and the other manors just mentioned; but a little later, when Balliol had offended the King of England, Edward began hostilities by the seizure of these manors, which were never restored. In revenge for this the Scots subsequently ravaged the country. In 1395 Richard II. granted the manors of Penrith, &c., to John Duke of Brittany and Earl of Richmond, to be held by him so long as the castle of Brest should remain in the hands of the king. This tenure appears to have been of short duration, for two years afterwards he granted the same manors to Ralph Neville, earl of Westmoreland, and his heirs male, by Juliana, his wife; to be held in as ample a manner as they had been by Alexander King of Scotland. It is very probable that Penrith Castle dates its erection from this period. Richard Neville, son of Ralph Neville, earl of Westmoreland, succeeded to the manor of Penrith. In 1449 he received from the king (Henry VI.) a grant of all fines and forfeitures within Penrith and Sowerby, the exclusive power of nominating justices, and of appointing coroners. The Earl of Salisbury was subsequently taken prisoner at the battle of Wakefield, and beheaded by the Yorkists at Pontefract; after which Henry VI. gave Penrith to John Lord Clifford, of Brougham Castle. Lord Clifford fell at St. Alban's, on Palm Sunday, March 29, 1461, and the manor was granted by Edward IV. to Warwick the "king maker," who being killed at the battle of Barnet, in 1471, the manor reverted to the crown, but Edward granted it to his brother Richard Duke of Gloucester, subsequently King Richard III. It has been said that the Duke of Gloucester resided at Penrith for the purpose of taking effectual measures for the defence of Cumberland against the Scots, and there is every probability that this statement is correct, for we find that the duke was sheriff of the county for five successive years, and he is described as of Penrith Castle. From this period the manor of Penrith continued to be held by the crown till the year 1616, when it was devised to Francis Bacon and others in trust for Charles Prince of Wales. In 1672 the manor was vested in trustees as part of the jointure of Catherine Queen Consort, who became possessed of the same on the death of her husband, Charles II.

On May 21st, 1696, William III. granted the honour of Penrith to William Bentinck, earl of Portland, his heirs and assigns, under the following description:—"All that the honour of Penrith, als Perith, in our county of Cumberland, with all rights, members, and appurtenances whatsoever; and all those demesne lands in Penrith, als Perith aforesaid, with appurtenances; and all those rents called socage rents, bondage rents, purpresture rents, and other rents there, all which are of the yearly rent or value of £67 6s. 4½d. And also those rents of lands in Great Salkeld, Langwathbie, Gamblesby, Scothy, and Castle Sowerby, being members of the sail honour of Penrith, called the Queen's Hames, amounting to £127 13s. 5d. And also those lands, tenements, rents, and hereditaments, with the appurtenances, in the ward of Penrith aforesaid, within the forest of Inglewood, in the said county of Cumberland, of the yearly rent or value of £40 14s. 6d.; and also all those lands, tenements, and rents, in the ward of Gatescall, within the said forest of Inglewood, with the appurtenances, of the yearly rent or value, besides £161 19s. 7d. per annum for the rent of the park at Plumpton Head, £113 9s. 6½d.; and also all those rents of the free tenants within the said forest, late in the charge of our sheriff of Cumberland, amounting to £41 13s. 6½d. per annum, which said honour of Penrith, and other the premises, are of the yearly rent or value of £319 17s. 4½d., and of the clear yearly rent or value, the reprises deducted, of £310 3s. 7½d., and were parcel of the possessions of Richard late Duke of Gloucester. And all singular messuages, tenements, houses, edifices, buildings, outhouses, mills, ways, passages, waters, water-courses, fishings, woods, underwoods, timber and trees, hedges, hedgerows, courts leet, courts baron, views of frankpledge, or other courts, doth or shall appertain; fairs, markets, tolls, waifs, straits, deodands, goods and chattels of felons, fugitives and felons of themselves, and of persons condemned and put in exigent; liberties, franchises, jurisdictions, privileges, wastes, heaths, moors, farms, lands, meadows, pastures, feedings, profits, commodities, hereditaments, and appurtenances whatsoever to the said honour of Penrith; and other the premises, or any part thereof belonging or appertaining, arising, happening, or growing within the same or therewith, commonly held, used, or enjoyed as part, parcel, or member of them, or any of them . . . to be holden of us, our heirs and successors, as of our manor of East Greenwich, in our county of Kent, in free and common socage, by fealty only, and not in capite, nor by knights' service; yielding and paying, therefore, to us, our heirs and successors, the yearly rent or sum of 13s. 4d. of lawful money of England, by the year, at the receipt of our Exchequer, or to the hands of our receiver-general of the premises for the time being, to the use of us, our heirs and successors, at the feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary which shall next happen, next after the decease of our royal aunt, Katherine the Queen Dowager." This last named event took place in the reign of King George I. In 1787 the Duke of Portland sold the manor to William fifth Duke of Devonshire, whose son, the sixth duke, died about a year ago. The Earl of Burlington succeeded as heir-at-law to the title and estate.

Mr. Walker, in his "History of Penrith," tells us that "The court incident to a manor is the court baron, and to a market and fair the court of pie-powdre. There has also been immemorially held at Penrith a court leet and view of frankpledge, which is said to be the most ancient of our courts, and is a court of record for punishing offences against the crown. It is clear that the court baron and court of pie-powdre must have been in existence in the reign of Henry III., since we find the manor, and the fair, and the market then subsisting. The court leet is said to be incident only to a hundred; but may be granted by charter. It is probable that the court leet was granted by the crown, along with Penrith, to Neville of Raby; and the Moot Hall,¹ which stood on the north of the market place, and in which these courts were anciently held, erected shortly afterwards. It is described in an ancient survey as 'the Moote Hall, situate in Burrowgate, Penrith, consisting of seven bayers of building, with five shoppes, under-rooms in the sayd hall, worth per annum, besides a place of judicature, £9.' The court leet sat twice a year, the steward presiding, shortly after Easter and Michaelmas. It inquired of all offences short of treason, and over all inhabitants and residents. Every one dwelling within the leet, from the age of twelve to sixty years (peers, clergymen, &c., excepted), was bound to suit and service in court. The juries were sworn in at one half yearly court, and continued to serve during the next ensuing half year. In the interval they took cognizance of such offences as occurred; assembling at the summons of the bailiff when necessity arose, and making inquisition; their verdict of presentments was returned to the steward in writing at the next court, whose province it then became to enforce the penalties incurred by the offenders. Thus it appears that the ancient court leet, in its day, must have exercised much of the jurisdiction now exercised by the magistrates in petty and quarter sessions, and the local boards of health. All small offenders, whether by infraction of public or private rights, by neglect or violation of sanitary regulations, by encroachments, or by drunken or riotous breach of the peace and good order of society, came within its grasp. It dealt with unlawful games, affrays and assaults where bloodshed ensued; neglect of constables to keep watch and yard, or to execute their office upon vagabonds and sturdy beggars, or any other offence against the public good. One class of offenders came more particularly under its lash, namely, keepers of houses of ill-fame, common scolds, eaves droppers, hedge breakers, bakers who did not observe the assize of bread, butchers who exposed unwholesome meat, unqualified persons who kept dogs or engines to destroy game, persons who kept false weights and measures, and destroyers of ancient boundaries or land marks. The authority of the court also included the offences of millers and victuallers, as well as nuisances and defects in the bridges, causeways, and highways. Persons when convicted were punished by fines, and in default of payment were placed in the pillory or stocks;¹ the former being provided by the lord of the manor, and the latter at the expense of the town. In the court baron, which is the court of the freeholders of the manor, and in which they are judges, and two at the least must always be present, pleas of debt under 40s. were held. In this court the steward sat as assessor to the free suitors, and anciently a very great number of debts were recovered in it. It was analogous to the county court. The court of pie-powdre was a court of emergency, held in the fair, on the spot, for prompt justice. It is commonly reported to have had its name from the circumstance that the suitors were clowns with dusty feet. It could only be held in a fair or market for trial of causes arising in that particular fair or market, and not in any former one. Hence, some say, it had its name from its being a tribunal which decided between disputants before they could shake the dust off their feet. The ancient form of proclamation for holding the fair concludes as follows:—‘And if any difference should happen about any bargain, or any other matter relating to merchandise, thereupon proper notice shall be given to the steward, and the court of pie-powdre shall immediately be summoned to settle the difference.’ But we have met with no one that can recollect a sitting of this venerable tribunal.”

¹ In a survey made in pursuance of a commission granted by Queen Elizabeth in 1573, the "Old Mote Hall" is mentioned as held by one John Atkinson. In a deed, bearing date the 7th day of February, 1678, made between Thomas Middleton and Jonathan Middleton, his son, amongst other premises conveyed from father to son, are "all that—freehold messuage, tenement, or purpresture, with the appurtenances, wherein the said Thomas Middleton did live, and which he lately purchased of William Moorhouse, situate, lying, and being in a street there, called Burrowgate, between the messuage of Culbret Mounsey, called the Old Moot Hall, on the west side, and the king's high street on the east side thereof; and also all that—his stable, backside, &c., &c." The Wool Pack Inn, and its appurtenances, are the premises here referred to. The site of the Old Moot Hall, formerly the property of Culbret Mounsey, is now owned by Mr. N. Arnison, recently rebuilt by him, and occupied as a draper's shop. The old house, when pulled down, bore strong evidence of having been a place of some consequence,—the walls being constructed of strong ashlar wood, inside and out.

¹ In 1573 one Robert Darwicke held, under the queen, as of her royal manor of Penrith, a place called the "pillorye" shop: its name being probably derived in consequence of its proximity to the site of the pillory. The lord of the manor provided a common pound; and it was also usual for lords who had leets to have a cucking stool, "which was an engine invented for the punishment of scolds and importunate women, by ducking them in water."—Jacob's Law Dictionary.

Mr. Walker continues,—“There were several classes of tenants within the precincts of Penrith, a brief recapitulation of which may not be uninteresting: 1. The ancient freeholders, tenants in free socage. From these were taken the free suitors who sat in the court baron. Their free or quit rents amounted to £6 12s. 10½d. 2. The copyholders, originally tenants at will. In process of time they acquired an inheritable interest, on payment of fines for admission; and they appear to have been subject to Border service against the Scots. Their rents were termed the oxgang, or bondage rents,¹ and amounted to £23 13s. 1½d. 3. The purpresture tenants,—those who held ground taken up of the lord’s demesnes, or wastes, without warrant or grant. They were very numerous in the outskirts of the town, being holden in small parcels for accommodation, paying mere acknowledgment for the lord’s sufferance. The rents amounted to £6 15s. 4½d. at the date of the survey from which this account is taken; but they were continually increasing as the town increased and additional parcels were taken up. These are now all considered as freeholders.

“The bakers and brewers of Penrith paid a rent to the lord. Every householder that did sell ale or beer, 5d.; every baker, 5d.; and every householder that did both bake and brew, 10d. The average yearly amount of this rent, about two centuries since, was £5 13s. 4d.,

¹ An oxgang is commonly taken to be fifteen acres of land, or as much as an ox could plough in a year.

which gives a very large number of the fraternity. Every householder that kept a fire-hearth, 1½d. for the privilege of turbarry on the lord’s wastes.¹ There were, at the above-mentioned period, 360 of such householders; and they also paid a rent of 20s. for the privilege of depasturing their cows in the forest. The curriers and shoemakers in Penrith paid a rent of 20s. per annum; the dyers and weavers, 6s. 8d.; the maltsters, 20s. All the manors comprised in the honour of Penrith did suit and service at the lord’s courts.

“The markets and fairs were a source of considerable profit to the lord. The shambles on the east and west sides of the market-place, in Burrowgate, are described as having anciently been thirty yards in length on each side, and containing twelve stables (stalls) worth £7. The office of sheldraker, viz., ‘a certain toll taken off the market people for the making cleane of the streetes, out of every sacke of corne and salte a handfull, called in Latin manipulum, worth per annum £22 10s.’ The office of ‘metlaw and weighlaw, viz., a dishfull of corne and salte due to the officer out of every sacke of corne and salte that cometh to be sold in the market of Penrith, and of every wool sacke 4d., with several other small tolls received for commodities weighed and sold in the sayed markett, worth per annum £73 6s. 8d.’ The stallage and piccage rents, viz., for all merchants or pedlars that pitch their tents or bootches in the markett of Penrith, worth per annum £3 13d. 4½d.²

“The Moot Hall, which till within the present century stood in the square, was built and substituted in lieu of one of more ancient date.³ It was adorned with the arms of the Earl of Warwick—the bear and ragged staff. The appearance of the building—part of which previous to its removal was constructed of wood—resembled that of a ‘tucfall.’⁴ It extended in a north-west direction from within a few yards of the front of the cluster of buildings now the property of Mr. N. Robinson, to about an equal distance from the opposite side of the square. That part of the building opposite the church was a blank wall of considerable height, from the top of which the roof descended to the opposite side, which

¹ Turbarry, derived from the old Saxon word forboef, is a right to dig turf on common or on another man’s ground. Turf was anciently the staple fuel of the town.

² It appears from the above that the market tolls alone were anciently worth £99 10s. per annum. In May, 1856, they were let by the Local Board of Health for £76 10s., which is nearly £30 per annum more than had been paid for them previously. The Board of Health are lessees of the tolls, under the Duke of Devonshire, and his successors, lord of the manor of Penrith.

³ See note on preceding page.

⁴ Tucfall, properly pronounced ‘tugheia,’ is a building with a sloping roof on one side only.

was the front, and faced towards the gateway of the Pleece Inn. On this side there were four or five small shops, and on the north were the stairs leading to the great room, or hall, which was a place of convenience for the market people."

Besides the manor of Penrith the parish comprises three inferior manors, Bishop's Row, Hutton Hall, and Carleton.

The manor of Bishop's Row consists of about twelve leasehold tenements within the town of Penrith, and several leasehold and customary tenements both in Cumberland and Westmoreland. It formerly belonged to the bishops of Carlisle, hence its name, but is now in the hands of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

The manor of Hutton Hall formerly belonged to the Hutton family, who appear to have resided here from the time of Edward I. till the year 1734, when the hall and manor were sold by Addison Hutton, Esq., the last of his family, to John Gaskarth, Esq., whose son, in 1790, sold the same to James Earl of Lonsdale, from whom they have descended to the present earl.

Hutton of Hutton Hall.

ADAM DE HUTTON, who was living at Penrith in the reign of Edward I., and had issue, ALEXANDER DE HUTTON, son and heir, living in the reign of Edward III.

THOMAS DE HUTTON, son and heir, living 4th Richard II. and 1st Henry V., married Helen, daughter of . . . This Thomas and his lady "lye entombed under the higher south window of St. Andrew's Quire, in Penrith."

JOHN DE HUTTON, son and heir, living in the reigns of Henry V. and VI. He married Isabel, daughter of Hugh Salkeld, Esq., of Rosgill, in the county of Westmoreland, a younger branch of the Salkelds of Carby Castle, in Cumberland, by whom he had issue,

WILLIAM DE HUTTON, son and heir, who was living in the 4th year of Henry VII., and by Joan, his wife, had issue,

JOHN DE HUTTON, son and heir, married Elizabeth, one of the four daughters and co-heirs of Thomas Beauchamp, Esq., of Croglin, an ancient Cumberland family.

ANTHONY HUTTON, son and heir, married, in the reign of Henry VIII., Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Musgrave, Esq., of Cumcath, in the county of Cumberland, by his wife Elizabeth, illegitimate daughter of Thomas Lord Dacre of Gilsland; by this lady he had issue,

I. WILLIAM, his successor.

II. Sir Richard Hutton, Knt., of Goldsborough, in the county of York, one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas, afterwards of the Court of Queen's Bench, died in 1638. Sir Richard married Agnes, daughter and co-heiress of Thomas Bragg, Esq., of Cambo, in the county of Westmoreland, and had issue,

1. Christopher, died in September, 1616, and was buried in the chancel of the church of St. Mary, at Dover.
2. Sir Richard, Knt., of Goldsborough, heir to his father, high-sheriff of Yorkshire, was slain at the battle of Sherburne, in the service of Charles I., died without issue; interred in the church of Goldsborough.

3. Thomas.

4. Henry, A.M., afterwards B.D., rector of Marton, co. Westmoreland, 1640; prebendary of the fourth stall in the cathedral church of Carlisle, 1643; ejected from the prebendal stall by Cromwell's commissioners, and died without issue before the Restoration. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Cosins, S.T.P., had bishop of Durham.

1. Elizabeth, married to John Dawby, son and heir of Sir Thomas Dawby, Knt.

2. Jane, married to Thomas Cooper, Esq.

3. Mary, married to Sir Thomas Maleverer, Bart.

4. Katherine, married Sir Gervase Newell, Knt.

5. Julian, the youngest daughter, married in 1725 to Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart., of Edenhall, in co. Cumberland.

Sir WILLIAM HUTTON, Knt., son and heir of Anthony, high-sheriff of Cumberland in the 2nd and 8th years of James I., married, firstly, Jane, daughter of Rowland Vaux, Esq., of Catster Hall, in co. Cumberland, by whom he had issue,

I. Thomas, married Winifred, third daughter of Henry Cracken-thorpe, Esq., of Newbiggin, co. Westmoreland, and died in the lifetime of his father, without issue male.

II. William, who died unmarried.

Sir William married, secondly, daughter of — Benson, of . . . and had issue,

I. ANTHONY, his successor.

II. BERNARD, successor to his brother.

III. Susan, married to Simon Musgrave, Esq., of Musgrave Hall, in Penrith.

II. Anne, married to Sir Christopher Dalston, Knt., of Acom Bank, in co. Westmoreland.

ANTHONY HUTTON, Esq., third son of Sir William, upon whom his father settled, on failure of the issue male of the eldest son, Thomas; he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Burdett, Esq., of Brancote, in the county of Warwick, by Mary, his wife, daughter of the Right Hon. Thomas Wilson, L.L.D., dean of Durham, principal secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth, and one of her Majesty's most hon. Privy Council. Mr. Hutton died July 10th, 1637, and was interred in the chancel of the church of Penrith, under an altar tomb of marble, on which were the effigies of himself and his lady.

BERNARD HUTTON, Esq., succeeded to the inheritance on the death of his elder brother, Anthony; he married Ann, daughter of Hugh Stamper, of Suitlegarth, in the county of Cumberland, and had issue,

I. WILLIAM, son and heir.

II. Richard, died young.

III. John.

IV. Bernard.

V. Thomas.

I. Dorothy.

II. Anne.

III. Grace.

IV. Catherine, who died unmarried.

WILLIAM HUTTON, Esq., son and heir of Bernard, was born about the year 1620, being thirty-nine years of age, at the visitation of Sir William Dugdale, in 1665. He married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of Christopher Lancaster, Esq., of Sockbridge Hall, in co. Westmoreland, and by her had issue,

I. ANTHONY, his successor.

II. Bernard.

III. John.

IV. Henry.

I. Dorothy.

II. Anne.

ANDREW HUTTON, Esq., son and heir, was seventeen years of age in 1665, married . . . was succeeded by his son, ROBERT HUTTON, Esq., high-sheriff of Cumberland in the 8th of Queen Anne; married . . . died in 1717, and was interred in the chancel of the church of Penrith.

ADRIAN HUTTON, Esq., M.D., son and heir of Richard, died about the year 1746, and was the last of the name and family at Hutton Hall.

Arms.—Argent, on a fesse sable, three bucks' heads embowed, 1, &c.
Crest.—Three demy lions, two in saltire and one in pale, all side, entiled with a ducal coronet, or.

According to Mr. T. Denton, the manor of Carleton was acquired in marriage with a daughter of Ralph Neville, earl of Westmoreland, by Robert Lord Clifford, and that it was then (1688) the property of the Earl of Burlington, in right of his wife, who was sole heiress of the last Lord Clifford; besides that, Carleton Hall (the fee probably) was purchased by Sir Thomas Carleton of George Clifford, earl of Cumberland. Carleton appears to have been the residence of the family De Carleton shortly after the Conquest. On the demise of Robert Carleton, Esq., the last of this ancient family, in 1707, the manor, which had been purchased probably of Lord Burlington, or his heirs, was sold to John Pattinson, Esq. On the death of his son without issue, it became the property of his eldest daughter, who married Thomas Simpson, Esq. Mr. Simpson's son dying unmarried, Carleton devolved to his only daughter, the wife of James Wallace, Esq., whose son, the Right Hon. Thomas Wallace, baron Knaresdale, sold it, in 1828, to John Cowper, Esq., whose brother, Frederick Cowper, Esq., is the present owner, as tenant for life, the estate being entailed by the late Mr. Cowper to the present holder, and to F. Cowper, Esq., jun.

Carleton of Carleton Hall.

RAEWYN DE CARLETON, of Carleton.

JEFFREY DE CARLETON, son and heir.

ODARD DE CARLETON, son and heir.

HENRY DE CARLETON, son and heir.

GILBERT DE CARLETON, son and heir.

WILLIAM DE CARLETON, son and heir of Gilbert, married Helena, daughter of Geoffrey de Stainton.

ADAM DE CARLETON of Carleton, son and heir of William, married Sarah, daughter of Adam de Newton; occurs in the 15th Edward I., anno 1286.

JOHN DE CARLETON, son and heir of Adam, married Dorothy, daughter of Henry Brougham; occurs in the 32nd Edward I., anno 1303.

THOMAS DE CARLETON, son and heir of John, married Johanna, daughter of Roger de Lancaster; occurs in the 19th Edward II., anno 1325.

JOHN DE CARLETON, son and heir of Thomas, married Margaret, daughter and heiress of John de Norton; occurs in the 30th Edward III., anno 1356.

THOMAS DE CARLETON, son and heir of John, married Alice, daughter and heiress of George Dawbury, Esq., co. York; occurs in the 32nd Richard II.—27th Henry VI.

THOMAS DE CARLETON, son and heir of Thomas, married Isabel, daughter of Gilbert Brougham of Brougham, co. Westmoreland; died in the 11th Henry VIII.

THOMAS DE CARLETON, son and heir, married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Wybergh, Esq., of Clifton Hall, co. Westmoreland; he died in the 32nd Henry VIII. aged 90.

THOMAS CARLETON, son and heir, married Anne, daughter of Thomas Layton, Esq., of Dalemain, co. of Cumberland; he died in the 4th Queen Mary, anno 1556, leaving issue,

1. THOMAS, his successor.

11. Guy, son and heir of Northam Castle, co. Northumberland, viz. 14th issue.

George, lord bishop of Chichester, died 1638. The bishop, by his first wife, Anne, daughter of Sir Henry Killebrew, Kut., had issue a son, Henry, of Farle, co. Essex, M.P. for Arundel, 1640.

THOMAS CARLETON, son and heir, married Mabel, daughter of — Carlisle, Esq., of Carlisle; and died in the 20th Queen Elizabeth, anno 1586, leaving issue,

1. THOMAS, his successor.

11. Lancelot, of Brampton Foot, in the barony of Gilsland, co. Cumberland, Esq., son and heir of Thomas, brother of Richard Killebrew, Esq., of Farle, co. Essex; from this gentleman was descended, GUY CARLETON, 1st Baron of Carlisle, 1681; predecessor of Durham, 1660; bishop of Bristol, 1671; translated to Exeter, 1678; and July 1681, 1682, aged 39; and Guy Carleton, created Baron Dorchester, 1786.

THOMAS CARLETON, son and heir of Thomas, born 1574, married Barbara, daughter of Sir Hugh Lowther, Kut., of Lowther, in co. Westmoreland. He (or his father) was one of the original governors of the Free Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth, at Penrith. He died in 1597, leaving issue,

1. THOMAS, his successor.

11. Gerard, who married Nichola, daughter of — Elliot, of Redleugh, in Scotland, and by her had issue, WILLIAM, who succeeded to the inheritance on the death of his uncle, Sir Thomas.

1. FRANCES, married to Richard Thirlwall, of Thirlwall Castle, in co. Northumberland.

Sir THOMAS CARLETON, Kut., born 19th June, 1569, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Shelly, Esq., of Woolborough, in the county of Nottingham, widow of Marmaduke Constable. Sir Thomas died in 1638, without issue, and was succeeded by his nephew, William, son of Gerard.

Sir WILLIAM CARLETON, Kut., of Carleton, born in 1607; married, firstly, Dorothy, daughter of Sir Christopher Dalston, Kut., of Acorn Bank, in co. Westmoreland, by his wife, Anne, daughter of Sir William Hutton, Kut., of Hutton Hall, in Penrith, by whom he had issue,

1. Mary, aged 45 years, in 1683.

Sir William married, secondly, Barbara, daughter of Robert Delaval, Esq., of Cowpen, in the county of Northumberland, and had issue,

1. ROBERT, his successor.

1. Alice.

their persecutors and made themselves formidable. In the view of the people they were bold and generous men, prepared to brave all things so they might be free, leaving it to others to brave nothing and be slaves. Cloudesley had a wife and children in Carlisle. Bell and Clym had no such ties. After long absence, the married man spoke of longing for one more sight of those dear to him. His companions warned him of danger, but without effect. Cloudesley finds his way into the city by night. An old woman, whom he had befriended in former days, detects him, and gives information against him. The outlaw, to the no small joy of the authorities, is torn from the arms of his wife and children, and a new gallows is forthwith reared in the market-place for his execution. But a swineherd boy, who had often seen the doomed man in Ingleswood Forest, and received kindness from him, learns what is passing, and hastens to apprise Bell and Clym of what is about to happen. The two resolve that Cloudesley shall be saved, or the three will die together. They despatch the porter at the town-gate, and by stratagem and courage they so fall upon the authorities at the place of execution, as to rescue their brother, killing the judge, sheriff, and many more. The poet recounts these death-blows in a spirit which shows that the people were expected to shout applause as they listened to the tale.¹

To the Normans, churchmen as well as laymen, the outlanded Saxons, who had taken shelter in the woods, were a source of terror. Travelling was imminently dangerous. Like Robin Hood, the northern outlaws were no respecters of persons. John de Kirkby, bishop of Carlisle, when passing through Penrith, in the spring of 1337, was attacked by some of those outlaws, who wounded several of his attendants. The bishop afterwards pronounced sentence of excommunication against his assailants. A few years later, in 1355, Bishop Welton, successor of Bishop Kirkby, sent out a mandate to Sir Thomas, rector of Burgham, and John de Dockwra, chaplain, commanding them "to denounce the sentence of the greater excommunication against certain unknown persons who had broken up a paved way, and done some other outrages, in the churchyard at Penrith, reserving to himself the sole power of absolution." This threat of the bishop was not without its effect. Several of the parishioners of Penrith went to the bishop at Rose Castle, and having acknowledged their fault, and submitted to suitable penance, were restored to the communion of the church.

During the whole of this period the inhabitants often suffered from the raids of the outlaws, who had taken refuge in the neighbouring forest. We have ample proof of this in the following document, copied from a record in the Tower, and addressed, "For the men and tenants of the manors of Penrith, Salkeld, and Sowerby. The king to all to whom these present shall come, greeting. The men and tenants of the manors of Penrith, Salkeld, and Sowerby, which are of the ancient demesne of our crown, dwelling within our forest of Ingleswood, have besought, by their petition, before us and our council in our present Parliament exhibited, that, whereas they, forasmuch as their lands and tenements, for which they are bound to pay us a great farm, by our enemies of Scotland are frequently destroyed and laid waste, as well as the corn there in these lands growing, by our beasts of the forest aforesaid in like manner, so that they will be unable to pay us their aforesaid farm unless assistance be afforded to them, we being willing to grant to them in aid of their said farm, that they should be able to have to them and their heirs for ever, common of pasture for all animals in the aforesaid forest. We, considering the premises, and forasmuch as it hath been testified before us in the same Parliament that the same premises do contain the truth, being willing to do special favour to the same men and tenants, having granted to them, for us and our heirs, that they and their heirs shall have and hold common of pasture for all their animals within the forest aforesaid, for ever, as the prior of Carlisle, and William English and other tenants within the forest aforesaid, do have common of pasture there, of the grant of us and our progenitors without hindrance or impediment of us or our heirs, our justices, foresters, or other our bailiffs and ministers of the forest whatsoever. Witness, the King, at Westminster, the 20th day of October, 1363."

As we have seen at a preceding page, Edward I. seized upon the town and manor of Penrith. This was the signal for the commencement of a series of attacks which did not end as long as the Scots were able to continue them. A constant succession of inroads and ravages followed, differing from each other only in the degree of barbarity with which they were conducted. On one occasion several of the inhabitants of Penrith were seized, and carried into Scotland, where they were sold for slaves. It was not till the close of the fourteenth century that really effective measures were taken for the security of the town, by the erection of a castle. It seems somewhat strange, and at variance with the usual policy of the Normans, that one had not been built previously, exposed as the town was to the attacks of the Scottish marauders. The completion of this important undertaking formed an epoch in the history of Penrith. The castle stood upon a high little west of the town, and seems to have answered well the purpose for which it was built, as we do not hear of much injury being done to Penrith afterwards, though a few years before its erection the Scots had burnt a portion of the town. The remains of the outer walls are still standing. In 1390 we find the first notice of Penrith being visited by the plague, but we have no account of the extent of its ravages. The same year the Scots made an inroad at the time of the fair and pillaged the place; but as a just retribution for the ravages they committed, along with the merchandise plundered from Penrith, they carried the pestilence back with them into their own country, and as it soon spread on every side, great numbers of the invaders were carried off. There is little doubt this visitation would not be without its effect upon the Scots, who would pause previous to paying Penrith another visit.

¹ Percy's Reliques, vol. ii.—"James's and the Ancient Popular Songs."

At the period to which we have now arrived, wise and good men were not inattentive to the duty of educating the rising generation, and right manfully did they go about their work. In 1395 William Strickland, whose care for the parish and town of Penrith merits everlasting remembrance, founded a chantry, which he endowed with £6 a year, arising from lands in the parish, on condition that the chantry priest, in addition to his other duties, should teach children music and grammar. A school appears to have existed in the town from the year 1340, when John de Eskeved, or Eskhead, was master; and in 1361 we find that Robert de Burgham was licensed by the bishop to teach the psalter, Priscian's grammar, and singing; to the exclusion of any other teacher. For upwards of 150 years after the foundation of the chantry, the priest attached to it for the time being filled the office of schoolmaster. While attending to the wants of the mind, Bishop Strickland (for he became bishop of Carlisle in 1400) did not neglect those of the body, and as one of the greatest wants of Penrith was a copious supply of good water, he caused it to be brought from the river Petteril through the centre of Penrith, a distance of about two miles, by means of a cut at his own expense. This cut extended from the Petteril through the centre of Penrith to the Eamont. It was formerly open through Sandgate—indeed, the whole length of its course; but it is now arched over, except at a few places, which are of great utility for watering cattle. In 1223 a charter was granted by Henry III., empowering the holding of a market and fair at Penrith until the king should attain his majority. There is little doubt the grant was confirmed when the king came of age, as the market and fair have been continued ever since.

We have seen at page 587, how the manor of Penrith came to Richard Duke of Gloucester, subsequently King Richard III. It has been said that the duke resided at Penrith, for the purpose of taking measures for the defence of Cumberland against the Scots, and there is every probability that this statement is correct, for we find that he was sheriff of the county for five successive years, and is described as of Penrith Castle. In the south windows of the parish church are some remains of ancient stained glass, which were formerly in the windows of the old church, and upon which are depicted portraits of Richard's parents, Richard Plantagenet, duke of York, and Cicely Neville: round the head of the latter is the inscription "Mater Dei miserere mei" (Mother of God have mercy on me). While residing at Penrith, the Duke of Gloucester repaired, enlarged, and strengthened the fortifications of the castle. The character by which Richard III. is popularly known was drawn in the first instance by two or three obscure writers who lived in the time of his victorious opponent, Henry VII. Their glaringly prejudiced statements have been adopted, and so embellished and recommended by the talents of Sir Thomas More, Lord Bacon, and Shakspeare, that they have taken a place in history, and have caused him to be generally regarded rather as a monster than a man. The public statutes and records of his reign exhibit him in a very different light, and their unimpeachable testimony ought to decide the question. It may too be remarked, that the crimes laid to his charge are not supported by anything like conclusive evidence, while it is certain his succession to the throne was agreeable to the main body of the nation. His enemies are obliged to confess that he swayed the sceptre with vigour and ability, and that wise and equitable laws were enacted by his Parliament; they also allowed him military skill and courage; and it is now well understood that his fault was the consequence, not of hatred caused by his crimes among the ancient friends of his house, but of his and their hereditary foes rendered triumphant by treachery. We are led to make these remarks on the character of Richard from the fact that while in the north he gained great popularity; and to show his attachment to the inhabitants of this part of England, he selected 5,000 of them as his guard when he repaired to London. When Richard Duke of Gloucester ascended the English throne the manor of Penrith became vested in the crown, and it remained a royal manor for upwards of 200 years.

From this time history is silent respecting Penrith till the reign of Henry VIII., when the vicarage of Penrith was returned as worth £41 8s. 5d. per annum. This was in 1534. Shortly after the dissolution of houses, chantries, &c., of England were suppressed, and the chantry of St. Andrew, in the church of Penrith, worth £54 a year, perished in the same fate. In consequence of this the children of the parish were left without education of any kind whatever, and so continued till 1654, on the 18th of July, in which year Queen Elizabeth, by letters patent, founded a free grammar school in the town, and empowered the alienation of lands and tenements to the amount of £30 a year for the use of the school.

On the 25th of June, 1572, the same queen issued a command to her favourite Henry Lord Scrop, steward of the West Marches; Edward Braddall, receiver of the queen's possessions in the county of Cumberland; and others, to survey the manor of Penrith, or Penreth as it is written, with the members of the same, the forest of Inglewood, &c., &c. "The report of the survey, so far as applies to Penrith, is interesting. In connection with the castle were two towers, one called the red tower and the other the white, or bishop's tower.¹ There was a bakehouse, a brewhouse, and one great chamber joining the last-mentioned tower, in good repair, except some fault in the leads, which might be amended with very little cost. In this tower there was a 'view or shewe' of a castle, or place of refuge for all the tenants of the lordship to go into for defence of their goods and chattels, if need required, and as they had been accustomed on the invasion of the enemy of Scotland. Certain stones in the wall were down, but with a small cost a good wall might be made from the bakehouse to the corner of the wall next the white tower, which would put the whole in a guardable state, sufficient for the protection of the tenants. The outermost gate-house of the castle was in utter ruin. The timber on three stables within the castle was rotten and ready to fall down. The chapel, the great chamber, the great hall, the two kitchens, and all other offices, were in utter ruin and decay, and not repairable. The gates of the castle were in ruin. The windows of the prison, and other iron stanchions of windows, bands of doors, &c., were worth £1 10s. for old iron. Richard Dudley, late steward of Penrith, had taken from the castle, by warrant of Anthony Barwise, thirty cart loads of stones, to build a prison at Penrith. Thomas Carleton, of Penrith, had six loads, Cuthbert, bailiff of Penrith, three score of hewn stones, and several other persons had removed different quantities in the first year of King Edward IV. (1547). One Thomas

Stephenson was the farmer of the office of Meley and Metley. The steward of Penrith was paid yearly out of the revenue of the lordship; the clerk of the court had 40s. per annum, and the bailiff of the liberty, 6s. 8d. The Moot Hall, the beacon or watch house, the prison, and the shambles, were out of repair, and ought to be amended at the queen's cost. There was a piece of ground lying on the west side of the castle, called the Myre, which was in the precincts of the town, and never answered any rent from time immemorial; but it could not be spared, because the tenants had no other place for their horses in the summer season, for the service of the queen's majesty. Henry Simpson held, under the queen, a shop at the Moot Hall end. The Corry Hole was always charged with the rent upon the collector's account, but discharged again, because it was used for a prison.¹

This survey furnishes us with some particulars respecting the castle and the town, which are of importance. From the time that the Duke of Gloucester ascended the throne, Penrith Castle seems to have been neglected, and allowed to fall into ruin. As early as the year 1547 stones were removed in large quantities. The Moot Hall needed repairs, from which fact it has been deduced that the building was of very ancient foundation; but this surmise may not be very correct, as the houses, &c., of that period, from their construction, must have often been in want of repair: a fact which is exemplified in the statement regarding the castle, as not much more than half a century had elapsed from the time of the Duke of Gloucester's repairs, &c., and yet we are told that in 1547 stone was carted away from it.

We come now to one of the saddest pages in the history of Penrith. We have seen above how, in 1380, it was visited by the plague, which was carried into their own country by the plundering Scots. We learn from the parish register that a second visitation occurred in the year 1554, but we have no account of the number of deaths. Not so with the next visitation, which took place in 1597. On this occasion the pestilence seems to have made its way from Newcastle-upon-Tyne to Kirkoswald and Penrith, proceeding thence to Appleby and Kendal. The first person who fell a victim to its ravages in Penrith was Andrew Hodgson, who was buried on September 22nd, 1597, and is described as a foreigner, that is, one not a native of the town. He is supposed to have brought the disease with him from some place already infected. The pestilence next attacked a few families, the greater part of the members of which died. From this time its progress was gradual, the deaths during the winter not being sufficient to cause any great alarm. The business of the town went on as usual. "There were marryings and givings in marriage," little thought being given to the fearful visitor which had taken up its abode in the town. Upwards of forty years had elapsed from the time of the last visitation. A new generation had arisen, and only a few of the older inhabitants remembered its ravages. But the approach of summer roused the dormant energies of the awful visitant. On the 27th of May as many as thirteen deaths are recorded in the parish register. Surely and rapidly the entries increased, and in a short time the plague reigned supreme. Business was at an end. The people of the surrounding country would not enter the town, some would not approach nearer to it than Pooley. According to tradition, markets were held at the north-west and south-east of the town. In the former place, now called Grub-street, a stone erection, something like a market cross, but undoubtedly a "plague stone," remained for some time after to point out the spot; the cross erected at the latter place remains to our own times, and like the plague memorials in other parts of England, is surmounted by a large block of stone, hollowed in the centre, about ten inches deep, which cavity being filled with water, was used for the immersion of the money of the townspeople, previous to its being touched by the farmers. A good idea of the state of the town at this period may be formed from the fact that not a single marriage took place during the entire summer. The greater number of those who perished during the pestilence were interred in a common grave or trench on the fell, directly above Cross House, and between that and the beacon side; a few were buried in the churchyard and school-house yard, and some in the gardens attached to their own houses. For upwards of two hundred years, as long as the land remained unenclosed, the grave on the fell side was undisturbed, and its outline could be distinctly traced. The inscription in the parish church tells us that 2,260 persons died during this visitation. Of this number only 583 find a record in the parish register; hence it has been supposed that the number mentioned in the inscription is the total of those who died in Penrith and the surrounding parishes; but is it not more probable that the parish register records only those who were interred in the churchyard and school-house yard, omitting those interred on the fell side; while the inscription in the church gives the aggregate deaths in the parish? During the summer and autumn the disease continued its ravages; on the 11th of August seventeen deaths are recorded, and on the 2nd of September twenty-two. With the approach of winter, an improved state of things began to be apparent. Deaths became less frequent, and mid-winter brought a total cessation of the pestilence. Margaret, the daughter of Thomas Winder, whose decease is entered on the 6th of January, 1598, is named as the last victim. With the returning spring the health of the town was completely restored, though with a sadly diminished population. It is worthy of remark that no sooner had the plague ceased than marriages began again to be solemnised, no fewer than eighteen taking place in a few weeks, the vicar of the parish setting the example.

¹ This latter tower is supposed to have been built by Bishop Strickland.

² Walker's Penrith, p. 18, et seq.

Scarcely had "God's punishment," as the plague is called in the parish register, disappeared from Penrith, than the inhabitants were once more alarmed by the incursions and depredations of those from whom they had suffered so much and so often. The borderers had resumed their inroads. Early in the year 1600 there was "great spoiling, robbing, and burning, especially in Cumberland," as the parish register informs us. In March of the following year great fears were entertained of an attack, and no less than fifty men were employed in the nightly watch of the town. On the 23rd of the same month, as we learn from the authority just quoted, the house of Richard Wood, at Plumpton, was spoiled by thieves, and he himself carried prisoner to Scotland. In the following month Penrith was threatened, when the earthen works at the "over end" of the town were recast, and every preparation made to give the freebooters a warm reception. Castle Carrock was attacked and plundered, and the whole open country ravaged as far as Penrith, but the precautions which had been taken saved the town, and the marauders retired with the booty they had already obtained. News of this incursion coming to the ears of the king, James I., who was then at Berwick-on-Tweed, he at once despatched a detachment of soldiers, under the command of Sir William Selby, governor of Berwick, who captured several of the robbers, and sent them to Carlisle.

The seventeenth century saw Cumberland in a very distracted state. This is ascribed to two causes, the civil wars and the exactions of the moss troopers. But though sharing in the disorders common to the county, the people of Penrith did not neglect a matter of importance to themselves, and of the utmost interest to their children, viz., that of education. By the joint consent of the inhabitants and the king's commissioners a piece of land, lying on the west of the town, called Ling Stubbs, was given to the Grammar School. Little benefit, however, accrued to the school from this donation, as Ling Stubbs was sold by Mr. Andrew Whelpdale to John Benson, reserving only a quit rent of twenty shillings a year to the school, although at the time of its first settlement the land was valued at forty shillings a year. The ancient estate of Ling Stables was sold some few years ago to Miss Dent, of Skirsgill, for £2,000.

Loyalty towards the reigning monarch seems to have been the characteristic of the inhabitants of Penrith during the Parliamentary wars. Several of them, among whom we find Mr. Whelpdale and Mrs. Hutton, sent contributions to the city of Carlisle when it was besieged by the Parliamentary general, Sir David Leslie. Penrith was captured by General Lambert on the 13th of June, 1648, who made it his head-quarters for a month, but retired on the approach of the Duke of Hamilton and Sir Marmaduke Langdale, and retreated into Westmoreland. The castle of Penrith seems to have been demolished at this period, and the lead and timber sold for the use of the commonwealth. It is very probable that Lambert destroyed it previous to his retreat. Charles II. passed through Penrith on his way to the south on August 6th, 1651, meeting with a hospitable reception at Carleton Hall, from which place he proceeded through Westmoreland. On his restoration, Charles rewarded his host of Carleton with the honour of knighthood.

Towards the close of the seventeenth century Penrith appears to have been a thriving market town. Sandford tells us that it possessed a "great market and merchants for all kinds of commodities; and a grand fair on Whitson Tuesday, and every fortnight till Lammas, for all things, horses and cattle, and wool and sheep, and ewes and lambs in especially; and in quondam times a very faire castle, as wall yet standing about y^e court express. . . . This towne being a free towne for all persons, which makes it much frequented, no man's person can be arrested, but his goods may; and is governed by a marshall and learned steward of the court, both having twenty nobles' fee, and patents under great seal; and a bailie under them, and an ancient demisne belonging to the castle. . . . But no gentry reside here; but an ancient family of the Hottons . . . have a fair tower house, and mansion of a noble knight and justice of peace." Denton, who wrote about eighteen years later than Sandford, gives the following account:—"The market abounds with all sorts of corn, grain, meal, malt, fruit, and butchers' meat, especially about Martinmas; they kill 300 or 400 beeves every market day. The chief fair is upon Whitson Tuesday, for horses in Dockray, cattle and sheep upon the fell, and servants at the cross to be hired. They have four guilds here, viz.—merchants, tanners, shcemakers, and skinners." It is at this period that the manor of Penrith passed from the crown, the particulars of which will be found in the account of the manor at page 587.

We come now to the Rebellions of 1715 and 1745, which are not without some interest to the inhabitants of Penrith, for, on both occasions, the adherents to the cause of the exiled house of Stuart passed through the town on their march to the south. As is well known the "rising" in 1715 was in favour of the Pretender, son of James II. It was headed by the Earl of Derwentwater and Mr. Forster, M.P. for Northumberland. They proclaimed the exiled prince at Brampton, when Mr. Forster opened his commission of general, and having been joined by a body of Highlanders, marched to Penrith. On Penrith Fell their advanced guard met the militia of Westmoreland and North Lancashire, as well as the yeomen and farmers of the district, under the command of Viscount Lonsdale and the Bishop of Carlisle, who had been hastily summoned to repel the invaders; but the militia and the others fled on the approach of the Scots and Northumbrians, who entered Penrith without opposition. Here they repeated the proclamation already made at Brampton. They also collected the money belonging to the revenue, but in other respects conducted themselves in an orderly manner, respecting both the persons and property of the inhabitants. The conduct of the yeomanry and militia on this occasion has been supposed to result from their indifference to the interests of the house of Hanover, and their predilection for the house of Stuart.

Between the first and second rising in favour of the exiled princes thirty years elapsed, years of internal tranquillity. In 1745 Prince Charles Edward landed in the Highlands, and in a short time was surrounded by a considerable number of adherents. At the head of these he set out on his march to London. In November he obtained possession of Carlisle after a siege of three days, entering the city on the 18th of the same month, having previously received the keys at Brampton from the mayor and corporation. A part of the prince's army proceeded southward on the 17th; and on the following day a quarter-master arrived at Penrith, and demanded billets for two squadrons of horse, expected shortly to arrive, and for 8,000 foot, who were to follow on the next day. One party of horse arrived during the evening. On the 20th a strong body of infantry entered the town, and on the 21st the Duke of Perth, Lord George Murray, the Prince's Commander-in-Chief, Lord Elcho, and others, arrived with an irregular force. On the following day Prince Charles entered the town, marching in the Highland garb, at the head of a regiment of foot, and preceded by pipers. The prince established his headquarters at the house now occupied by Mr. Ramsay, chemist and druggist, and formerly known as the George and Dragon Inn.¹ A few days after the departure of the main body of Prince Charles' army from Carlisle, orders were received by the garrison in that city to send as many men as could with safety be spared to join the army on its march to the south. In obedience to this order, on the 27th of November and the following day about forty of the garrison set out. They were met at Lowther by "thirty brave, stout young men from Penrith, well armed," who killed one of the rebels, wounded two, and took nine prisoners, whom they sent to Marshal Wade.

After leaving Penrith, Prince Charles and his army proceeded as far as Derby without meeting with any opposition. Here they appear to have become infatuated, and determined to retrace their steps. The retreat to Scotland was commenced on the 6th of December. When this intelligence reached Penrith it caused considerable alarm. Many of the people in the neighbourhood concealed their money and other personal property, and some of the more wealthy deserted their houses till the danger was passed. In a few days the approach of the prince's army was announced; the beacon at Penrith was fired, and armed men from the surrounding districts poured into the town. The Duke of Perth, who arrived at Shap on the same day, saw the glare of the beacon at Penrith, and at once sent a few men as far as Eamont Bridge to reconnoitre, who, on their return, brought intelligence that the country was under arms. The duke marched on the following morning, and in order to avoid Penrith proceeded by way of Culgaith to Carlisle. On Langwathby Moor he was met by a strong party from Penrith, and driven back through Temple Sowerby to Orton, which he reached about six in the evening. He soon afterwards set out for Kendal, where he joined the main body.

"On the 16th," says the Chevalier de Johnston, "our army passed the night at Shap; but our artillery remained at the distance of a league and a half from Kendal, some ammunition waggons having broken down, so that we were obliged to pass the whole night on the highroad, exposed to a dreadful storm of wind and rain. On the 17th the prince, with the army, arrived at Penrith, but the artillery, with Lord George Murray, and the regiment of the Macdonalds and Glengarry, consisting of 500 men who remained with us to strengthen our ordinary escort, could only reach Shap, and that with great difficulty, by nightfall. We set out from Shap by break of day on the 18th, to join the army, which waited for us at Penrith; but we had scarcely begun our march, when we saw a great number of the enemy's light horse continually hovering about us, without venturing, however, to come within musket shot. The appearance of these light horse was the more extraordinary, as hitherto we had seen none in the whole course of our expedition into England. Having arrived at mid-day at the foot of an eminence which it was necessary to cross in order to reach Penrith, about halfway between that town and Shap, the moment we began to ascend we discovered cavalry, marching two and two abreast, on the top of the hill, who disappeared soon after, as if to form themselves in order of battle behind the eminence which concealed their numbers from us with the intention of disputing the passage. We heard, at the same time, a prodigious number of trumpets and kettle drums. Mr. Brown, colonel in the train of Lally's regiment, was at the head of the column, with two of the companies which the Duke of Perth had attached to the artillery, and of which mine was one; after them followed the guns and ammunition waggons, and then the two other companies attached to the artillery. Lord George was in the rear of the column with the regiment of Macdonalds. We waited a moment at the bottom of the hill, everybody believing it was the English army. In this seemingly desperate conjuncture, we resolved to rush on the enemy, and open a passage to our army at Penrith, or perish in the attempt. Thus, without informing Lord George of our intention, we dashed forward with great swiftness. Lord George, who was in the rear, seeing our manœuvre at the head of the column, and being unable to pass the wagons in the deep roads confined by hedges in which we were, immediately ordered the Highlanders to proceed across the inclosure, and ascend the hill from another quarter. They ran so fast that they reached the summit of the hill almost as soon as those at the head of the column. We were equally surprised when we reached the top, to find, instead of the English army, only 300 light horse and chasseurs, who immediately fled in disorder, and of whom we were only able to come up with one man, who had been thrown from his horse, and whom we wished to make prisoner, to obtain some intelligence from him; but it was impossible to save him from the fury of the Highlanders, who cut him to pieces in an instant."²

¹ "Walker's Penrith," p. 82. The same writer also gives the following notice:—"Richard Stables, of Penrith, ribbon chandler, of whom Mr. Ramsay purchased the property aforementioned, had a perfect recollection of the rebellion of 1745. A division of the rebel army was marching down the street from the town head at the time Stalker was carrying a potato-pot from the bakehouse, of which the foremost of the rebels took forcible possession."

² "Memoirs of the Rebellion," by the Chevalier de Johnston, aide-de-camp to Lord George Murray.

The events just narrated were followed by a skirmish at Clifton, the accounts of which are very contradictory. One party has described it as a successful attack by the king's troops upon the rebels in a strong and defensible position, from which they were driven with loss; while others state that it was a decided check given by the rear guard of the retiring Highlanders to their pursuers. And there is as great a disparity in the accounts given of the loss sustained on each side. The Duke of Cumberland, who was present, has been reported to have lost only twelve men, while others assert that at least 150 were placed hors de combat. Lord George Murray, who was personally engaged, furnishes us with the fullest details of the action. The Highlanders had experienced great difficulty in effecting their retreat from Shap, from want of sufficient carriages for conveyance of the ammunition, &c. When they drew near to Clifton on the afternoon of the 18th, the Duke of Cumberland, with his dragoons, was close upon them. Lord George says, "I now observed small platoons of horse appearing on eminences at some distance behind me, of this I sent word to the prince, but, at Penrith, they had taken a notion that it was only militia. There was indeed a body of 200 or 300 light horse, being, I believe, mostly Cumberland people, that drew up in my way, thinking to obstruct our march; but as soon as the Glengarry men threw their plaids and ran forward to attack them, they made off at the top gallop, and gave me no more trouble. When I came to Clifton, I sent off the cannon and other carriages to Penrith, being two miles further; and as I believed these light horse that had met me would probably be near Lord Lonsdale's house at Lowther, as he was lord-lieutenant of the county, I went a short way with the Glengarry men to that place through several enclosures, it being not above a mile. Lord Pitsligoe's horse had joined me, so I was in hopes, by scouring these enclosures, to meet with the light horse. We got sight of several hard by Lord Lonsdale's house, but could come up with few; at a turn of one of the parks one like a militia officer, clothed in green, and a footman of the Duke of Cumberland, were taken. We understood by them that the duke, with a body of 4,000 horse, as they said, were about a mile behind. I sent Colonel Roy Stewart with the prisoners to Penrith, and to know his royal highness's orders, and that I would stop at Clifton, which was a good post, till I heard from him. When I came back to Clifton, the Duke of Perth was there; and besides Colonel Roy Stewart's men, being about 200 that I left there, Cluny with his men, and Ardsheel with the Appin men, were with them. The Duke of Perth, who was also there, had been persuaded that it was only militia that had appeared; but he then saw, upon an open muir not above cannon shot from us, the enemy appear and draw up in two lines, in different divisions and squadrons. His grace said he would immediately ride back, and see to get out the rest of our army; for as the ground was strong where I drew up, he did not doubt I could maintain that post till others joined me. I sent an English gentleman with him who had attended me all the retreat, and knew the country perfectly well, who said he would lead them a near way by the left, undiscovered, that they could fall on the enemy in flank; and as there was a lane that lay betwixt Lord Lonsdale's enclosures, which was near a mile in length, and through which the enemy had come, if they were obliged to retire they would suffer much by both sides of the lane if we lined it. I only desired 1,000 more men than what I had, by which means I could not only maintain the post I had, but send half of my men through the enclosures on my right, so as to flank the enemy on that side, if they were attacked on the other side; and if once but twenty of their horse could be killed, it would make such an embarrassment in the lane, that it would put them all in confusion, and choke up the only road they had to retreat, except the Appleby Road, and that also might be secured, which would give us an advantage that, perhaps, we should not meet the like again.

"After the Duke of Perth went to Penrith I made my disposition in the best manner I could, caused them to roll up what colours we had, and made them pass half open to different places, bringing them back under cover; so that the enemy, seeing them as they were carried forward to different places, could not form any judgment of our numbers. I did this in a manner to make them believe that our numbers were much greater than they were, and they could not know but our whole army was come into the village and about it. After an hour they dismounted, as near as we could guess, about 500 of their dragoons, which came forward to the foot of the muir they were upon, and to a ditch, which was the last of three small enclosures from the places where we were posted at the village. My men were so disposed that the Glengarry men were upon the enclosures on the right of the highway, and Appin's men, with Cluny's in the enclosures on the left; Colonel Roy Stewart's men I placed on the side of the lane or highway close to the village. I had about 1,000 men in all. Pitsligoe's horse and hussars returned to Penrith. The ditches at the foot advanced more towards the muir on the right than on the left. The lane, which was the highroad between these small enclosures, was not above twenty feet broad. It was now an hour after sunset, pretty cloudy; but the moon, which was in its second quarter, from time to time broke out and gave good light; but this did not continue above two minutes at a time. We had the advantage of seeing their disposition, but they could not see ours. Our hussars, upon seeing the enemy, went off to Penrith. One of their officers, Mr. Hamilton, with two or three of his men, had dismounted (being ashamed of the going off of the others), and gone in through a hedge, and were taken prisoners; how it happened I cannot tell, for it was before I came back from Lowther Hall. Had they staid near Clifton they ran no risk. Colonel Roy Stewart returned to me from Penrith. He told me his royal highness resolved to march for Carlisle immediately, and had sent off the cannon before, and desired me to retreat to Penrith. I showed Colonel S. my situation, with that of the enemy. They were, by this time, shooting popping shots among us. I told him if I retreated, being within musket shot of the enemy, they would follow up the lane, and I must lose a number of men, besides discouraging the rest; that from Clifton it was a narrow road, and very high walls, so that I could not line them to secure my retreat; and that, probably, my men would fall into confusion in the dark; and that the enemy, by regular platoons in our rear, being encouraged by our retreat, must destroy a great many; and by taking any wounded man prisoner, they would know our numbers; whereas I told him I was confident I could dislodge them from where they were by a brisk attack, as they had not, by all that I could judge, dismounted above 500. Their great body was on horseback, and at some distance; and Cluny and he owned that what I proposed was the only prudent and sure way; so we agreed not to mention the message from the prince. I had crossed the lane or highroad several times, which could only be done at the foot of the village, by two gates, one on each side. I now went over again to where the Glengarry men were placed, and ordered them to advance, as they should observe me do on the other side; and to keep up their fire as much as they could till they came to the bottom ditch; and that if we beat the enemy from their hedges and ditches, they had a fair sight of them, and could give them a flank fire within pistol shot; but I gave them particular injunctions not to fire across the lane, nor to follow the enemy up the muir. I left Colonel Car with them; he was one of the prince's aide-de-camps, but had liberty to be mostly with me. He was an excellent officer, and was riding through the fields in the time of the fire, as if it had been a review. After having spoken with all the officers of the Glengarry regiment, I went to the left of the lane. The dismounted dragoons had not only lined the bottom enclosures, but several of them had come to hedges that lay south and north; the others where we were, and the dragoons at the bottom lay east and west. The Appin battalion were next the lane on that side, and Cluny's farther to their left. We advanced, and had a good deal of fire on both sides. After the Highlanders on that side had given most of their fire, they lay close at an open hedge, which was the second in these fields. We then received the whole fire of the dragoons that were at the bottom, upon which Cluny said, 'What the devil is this?' Indeed, the bullets were going thick enough. I told him we had nothing for it but going down upon them sword in hand, before they had time to charge again. I immediately drew my sword and cried 'Claymore.' Cluny did the same; and we ran down to the bottom ditch, clearing the diagonal hedges as we went. They were a good many of the enemy killed at the bottom ditch, and the rest took to their heels, but received the fire of the Glengarry regiment. Most of Ardsiel's men, being next the lane, did not meet with so much opposition. I had given orders that our men should not pass the bottom ditch to go up the muir, for they would have been exposed to the fire of the Glengarry regiment, that could not distinguish them from the enemy. We had no more firing after this; so we returned to our first post. We had now done what we proposed; and, being sure of no more trouble from the enemy, I ordered the retreat: first Roy Stewart, then Appin, Cluny, and the Glengarry men; and it was half an hour after the skirmish before we went off. The Atholl brigade had come the length of a bridge, within half a mile of Clifton, hearing of my being in sight of the enemy, and there waited for orders. Had the rest of the army come out, and followed the plan that was proposed, they would have been upon the flank of the dragoons that were on horseback by the time we attacked the others. . . . It was lucky I made the stand at Clifton, for otherwise the enemy would have been at our heels, and come straight to Penrith; where, after refreshing two or three hours, they might have come up with us before we got to Carlisle. I am persuaded that night and next morning, when the van entered Carlisle, there was above eight miles from our van to our rear, and mostly an open country full of commons."

Commenting upon the narrative of Lord George Murray, Mr. Mounsey remarks:—"This account is so circumstantial, and so accurate in its local detail, that it has great weight. It candidly puts the affair as an attack by the rear of the Highlanders, 1,000 strong, upon 500 of the duke's dismounted dragoons pushed forward into the Clifton enclosures; and claims no glory for having expelled them, but simply takes credit for having withstood in the outset a movement which, if permitted to have been effected, would, in all probability, have let in the whole body of the dragoons upon the retreating Highlanders. And it receives confirmation from the fact that it stopped the pursuit. If it had been true that, at Clifton, the Duke of Cumberland with a large body of cavalry had beaten the Highlanders from a strong and defensive position, how came it that neither that night, nor even next day, when they were retreating across the open wastes of Inglewood Forest, was any further attempt made upon them? As to the loss of the two parties, it is a matter impossible to be ascertained. The first account on the morning of the 19th, was that the dragoons lost forty men killed, six wounded, and four officers wounded, and that the rebels having carried off their killed and wounded, the number could not be ascertained, but the Gazette account subsequently reduces the duke's loss to a dozen men. In the Clifton parish register of burials is the following entry:—"The 19th day of December, 1745, the dragoons, to wit, six of Bland's, three of Colham's, and one of Mark Kerr's regiment, who were killed y^e evening before by the rebels in y^e skirmish between the Duke of Cumberland's army and them at y^e end of Clifton Moor next y^e — town,—buried." And on the 8th of January following another of General Bland's was buried, who probably had been wounded and left there. This, therefore, would seem to be the foundation of the Gazette's account. What the rebels did with their killed, which they are alleged to have carried off, it has not been explained. The story told of their having thrown forty or fifty into the river, to conceal them, will scarcely bear examination."

The Highlanders continued their retreat that night. When Lord George Murray reached Penrith he found the prince just taking horse, and after a short stay, for the refreshment of his wearied men, he also resumed his march. On the 19th the prince reached Carlisle. On the night of the 18th the Duke of Cumberland lodged at the house of Thomas Savage, of Clifton, and the royal army remained under arms, in line of battle, on the moor. Early on the following day the Duke of Cumberland, with his cavalry, entered Penrith, and was soon followed by the Duke of Richmond, with the infantry. The inhabitants are said to have displayed great joy on the duke's arrival, for the retreating Highlanders appear to have broken open several houses and shops, taken away large quantities of goods, and thrown into the streets, and spoiled and destroyed what they could not carry off. During his stay in Penrith the Duke of Cumberland was the guest of Adison Hutton, Esq., of Hutton Hall, and the Duke of Richmond that of Mr. Grave, of Sandgate Hall. The presence of the duke seems to have roused the dormant loyalty of the inhabitants of Penrith and the surrounding district. They scoured the country in quest of the straggling Highlanders, eighty of whom they captured. As a reward for their services on this occasion, the Duke of Portland made them a present of fifty guineas, with which two large gilt chandeliers were bought, and are still preserved in the parish church. On the morning of the 21st the Duke of Cumberland's whole force marched from Penrith, in three columns, towards Carlisle, and his subsequent proceedings will be found in our notice of that city at page 94.

From the time of the suppression of the rebellion of 1745 there is nothing to record relating to Penrith till 1766. On the night of the 18th of November of that year, Thomas Parker, a butcher, of Langwathby, was found murdered near Nancy Dobson's stone, which stood where the opening is in Cowrake Road. Suspicion at once fell upon a man named Thomas Nicholson, who had been inquiring for Parker at Carleton, and he was at once arrested. He was convicted of the crime at the assize held at Carlisle in the following year, and was sentenced to be hung in chains near the place where the murder had been committed. This sentence was carried into effect on the 31st of August, 1767. The body of the murderer hung, exposed to the winds of heaven, until nothing but the skeleton remained. One stormy night the gibbet was blown down, and some of the inhabitants of Edenhall gathered the bones together, and wrapping them in a winnowing sheet interred them. Until the enclosure of the common the letters T. P. M., "Thomas Parker Murdered," cut in the turf, pointed out to the passer-by the scene of the murder.

At the commencement of the eighteenth century considerable traffic was carried on between Penrith and Kendal, and no less than sixty pack horses were employed between the two towns. On the formation of turnpike roads, the pack horse was superseded by the carrier's wagon and the farmer's cart. In 1763 the first stage coach passed over Shap fells. About this period Penrith began to partake, in some degree, of the character of a manufacturing town. Checks, linen, and gingham were the chief productions, and afforded employment to many of the inhabitants. But the introduction of machinery put an end to the manufactures of Penrith, and it is now supplied from the great markets of the country. In 1787 Penrith, according to Clarke, possessed "some considerable manufactures of checks," and he further tells us the place is "remarkable for its neatness, if we except the shambles and town hall."

The history of Penrith, from this period, is associated with its churches, chapels, schools, and public institutions, and will be found in the accounts of them given in the following pages.

ANCIENT RELIGIOUS HOUSE.

A convent of Augustinian friars existed in Penrith in Catholic times. The date of its foundation is not known, but it was anterior to the thirteenth century. It is very probable that it owed its origin to the piety of some of the Scottish kings, during the time they held Penrith and its neighbourhood. Edward I. on passing through the town, on his way to Scotland, in 1299, bestowed alms upon the community, and again on his return in the same year, giving on the former occasion 2s. 8d. and on the latter 5s. 8d. From the inquisitions post mortem of the reign of Edward III. we learn that the convent was endowed with four acres of land. In 1356 Agnes Denton, widow, left the sum of 10s. to the community. The friars were zealous in the cause of religion, and anxious that the places in their neighbourhood should not be without provision for the spiritual necessities of the people. Newton Reigny appears to have been for some time without a chaplain. The Augustinians of Penrith called Bishop Welton's attention to the circumstance, who, in 1359, empowered the community to officiate in the church of Newton Reigny, and to administer the sacraments there. The same bishop granted an indulgence of forty days, upon condition of their going to confession, and communion to all those who should be present at the offices of the church of the priory on Christmas Day, and to those who bestowed alms upon the community, "because they were very poor." The license granted by Bishop Welton seems to have been renewed by Bishop Appleby in 1365, when that prelate granted to one of the friars, who was sacrist of the convent, permission to officiate in the church or chapel of Newton for four years. From this date upwards of a century elapses before we learn anything further respecting the convent. In 1489 Robert Wrangwis, fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, gave to the Augustinians of Penrith some lands in that town. Richard, the first Lord Scrope, of Bolton, appears to have been one of the benefactors to this convent. In 1542-3 the convent was suppressed, and given by Henry VIII. to Robert Tyrwhit, Esq. It was afterwards held by the Raincock family, from whom it passed to the Gaskarths, one of whom, the Rev. John Gaskarth, sold it to an ancestor of the Earl of Lonsdale, the present possessor. The house in Friargate, still known as the Friary, occupies the site of the convent. Mr. Walker informs us that "When the trenches for the foundation of the walls of the house called Abbot Bank were being dug, the ground floor of the chapel of the convent was discovered, and a quantity of human bones found under the chancel, including a pair of thigh bones of extraordinary size, and several undecayed skulls, with teeth still fresh and even. The bones were exhumed on the day on which George IV. was crowned, and reinterred in a field which the prior and brethren had formerly held in free alms."

CHURCHES AND CHAPELS.

The parish church of Penrith, dedicated to Saint Andrew, is a spacious Grecian structure, after the model of St. Andrew's, Holborn, London, rebuilt, with the exception of the tower, in the years 1720-22, at a cost of £2,253 raised by a parochial rate and voluntary subscriptions. Hutchinson, in his "History of Cumberland," gives the following description of the church:—"The outward fronts are constructed after a plain but neat plan, and connected with the old tower; but the inside of the edifice, for convenience and propriety exceeds most churches in the north of England. It is uniformly stilled with oak, and divided by a centre aisle and two side aisles, well lighted by spacious windows. The body of the church is left open to a lofty ceiling, but the side aisles are covered with galleries which unite at the west end, where is the general entrance to those galleries, by a staircase leading to each wing. The galleries are supported on rows of excellent Ionic columns, ten on each side, each column formed of one entire stone, brought from the quarries of Crawdundle, in the county of Westmoreland. Each column is ten feet four inches in height, and in the middle four feet two inches in circumference. The stone is dressed to a good polish, and, being red and finely veined, has the appearance of mahogany. The upper columns, from the gallery to the roof, are of wood, and what hurts the eye greatly, they are painted white, and their capitals are garnished with gold." Since Hutchinson's time, 1794, the stone columns which support the gallery have also been painted white. The walls of the chancel are ornamented with two paintings representing the Angels appearing to the Shepherds, and the Agony of our Lord in the Garden, executed by Mr. Jacob Thompson, a native of the town, and as works of art have been highly spoken of. The organ at the west end of the gallery was erected by public subscription, aided by a bequest of 100 guineas from Lieut.-Colonel Thomas Dawson, of Chelsea, a native of Penrith. The church possesses two large gilt chandeliers, purchased with the fifty guineas presented by William, second Duke of Portland, in 1745, to the tenants of Penrith, as a token of his esteem for their loyal conduct during the rising of that year.¹ Since the introduction of gas, these chandeliers are more for show than use. There are several marble slabs in the south wall of the chancel, which, in addition to coats of arms, bear the following inscriptions:—"Hic jacet Christophorus Moresby, miles, qui obiit 26^o die mensis Julii, A.D. MCCCCLXXXIX. Jesu. Maria." Here lies Christopher Moresby, knight, who departed the 26th day of the month of July, in the year of our Lord, 1499. Jesus. Mary. "Orate pro anima Christophori Moresby, militis, et Elizabethæ uxoris ejus, quorum animabus propitiatur Deus. Amen." Pray for the soul of Christopher Moresby, knight, and of Elizabeth, his wife, on whose souls may God have mercy. "Orate pro anima Christophori Pykryng militis; qui obiit vii die mensis Sept. Anno Dom. milles D^eXII."² Pray for the soul of Christopher Pykryng, knight, who departed the 7th day of the month of September, in the year of our Lord 1512. "Orate pro anima Ricardi Coldall nuper de Plumpton in comitat. Cumbr. armigeri qui obiit apud Plumpton 27 die mensis Decemb. Anno Domino millesimo cccclxii. cujus anima propitiatur Deus. Amen." Pray for the soul of Richard Coldall, late of Plumpton, in the county of Cumberland, Esq., who departed at Plumpton on the 27th day of December, 1462, on whose soul may God have mercy. There are several other monuments and slabs in the church to the memory of members of the Dalston, Wharton, Todd, Blencowe, Hutton, Bolton, Wallace, Fletcher, and other families. On a brass plate in the chancel is the following inscription, commemorative of the visitation of the plague, noticed at page 595:—"A.D. MDXCVIII. Ex gravi peste, quæ regionibus hisce incubuit, obierunt apud Penrith 2,260; Kendal, 2,500; Richmond, 2,200; Carlisle, 1,196. Posterì avertite vos et vivite." Ezek. xviii. 32. The old tower at the west end of the church is a building of great strength: the thickness of the walls at the base is about six feet, but it gradually diminishes towards the top. This tower is said to have been used during the days of border warfare, as a place of refuge by the inhabitants. When the church was rebuilt, a western entrance was with great difficulty made through the tower. A winding staircase, in the south-west corner, leads to the belfry, which contains a peal of bells with chimcs, and thence to the top of the tower, whence a fine prospect is obtained of the town and neighbourhood. The bells were purchased in 1764, at a cost of £331 15s. 11d. The churchyard was closed against interments, except in particular cases, in 1850. In it is the well-known Giant's Grave; a monument consisting of two stone pillars between ten and eleven feet high, and standing fifteen feet apart, connected on each side by two semicircular stones, each two feet six inches in height. The pillars are rounded to the height of about six feet, when they become nearly square; and these, together with the semicircular stones, were once covered with rude sculpture. Mr. Walker says, "The traditional name of the 'Giant's Grave,' identical in meaning with the 'Hemps' Graves,' and the 'Kemp How' of other parts of these counties, was commonly applied to the Danish burial grounds of a certain period—which were made to contain a number of bodies—simply on account of their extraordinary size. We may conclude, therefore, judging from its position and size, that the grave is a family burial-place, and belongs to the Danic-Celtic period that preceded the breaking in of English laws under the Norman kings, but that the family must have been extinct before the name was conferred. The name once given, tradition was not slow to connect the grave with the caves of Eamont, and with a famous personage whose fame still filled this part of the country. In Dr. Todd's M.S. History of the Diocese, 1689, is to be found the popular story then current, that 'One Ewan, or Owen Cæsarius, famous for hunting and fighting 1,400 years ago,' lies buried in the grave; that his stature was the entire length between the pillars, and that the four smaller stones represent so many wild boars killed by him in the neighbouring forest of Ingleswood. Ewan Cæsario is supposed to have been, in his time, the proprietor if not the founder of Castle Hewen, a building of great antiquity, the foundations of which can still be traced near the former lake of Tarn Wadling, and has likewise been connected with Ewanrigg, in the ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, as well as with the Giant's Grave and the Giant's Caves. This fabulous ubiquity is strong proof that such a person did once flourish in Cumbria. The name Ewan being Celtic, and the surname Cæsario Latin, he seems to be one of those who claimed Roman extraction, and was probably the King Arthur of the north, who made himself a terror to the invading Angles and Danes. The traditions that connect Ewan Cæsario with the caves of the Eamont and the monument of Penrith churchyard, cannot be supposed to be founded in fact, and merely testify to the impression made on the people in this part of Cumbria by the fame of the so-called giant. As to the caves, it can scarcely be doubted that they were at some period a hermitage; but the grave fully identifies itself with the early history of Christianity in these counties."¹ The churchyard was unfenced and open to the public till the year 1820, when it was enclosed; a rate of 2d. in the pound was laid for the purpose.

¹ See page 601.

² See Moresby parish, page 416.

¹ History of Penrith, pages 15 and 16.

The patronage of the church of Penrith was originally vested in the kings of England. As we have seen at page 592, Henry I. granted it to Athelwald, first bishop of Carlisle, on the foundation of that see, and it has since been enjoyed by his respective successors. About the year 1292 the rectory was valued at £40 11s. and the vicarage at £9 6s. 8d. Up to the year 1600 the vicarage appears to have had but a poor provision made for it; according to Dr. Todd all its endowments and perquisites did not amount to more than £30 a year. Sandford, however, estimates it at £40, and the tithes of corn at £200. At the Restoration Bishop Sterne granted an augmentation of £20 per annum to the £12 which appears to have been the ancient endowment payable out of the great tithes. Mr. Mawson who, about the year 1669, was entitled, under a lease from the dean and chapter of Carlisle, to the corn tithes of Sleggill and Thrimby, in Morland parish, for twenty-one years, bequeathed the same to the vicars of Dacre and Penrith, in undivided moieties; but the joint estate being found inconvenient to the trustees, a division was agreed upon, and the tithe of Sleggill was, in consequence, assigned to Penrith, and that of Thrimby to Dacre. In the course of years the Penrith trustees neglected to renew the lease, leaving the sole care to the vicar, in whose custody the lease was, and it was subsequently allowed to run out. Dr. Todd, who was collated in 1699, prevailed upon the dean and chapter to grant a new lease to him and his successors, vicars of Penrith, upon payment of an additional yearly rent. These tithes were afterwards changed into a landed estate of ninety-one acres, under the provisions of an act passed in the 43rd George III. for dividing and enclosing the open wastes and commons in the manor of Sleggill. Bishop Smith, by will, dated October 8th, 1700, gave towards the "augmentation of the vicarage of Penrith, and the better maintenance and encouragement of the vicars and incumbents there, the sum of £500." Mary Bell, a maiden lady, by indenture of the 19th December, 1740, gave and granted to the churchwardens upon trust £250, to place the same out at interest, which was to be applied to and for the vicars of the parish church of Penrith, on condition of their reading morning prayers in the parish church on every week day in the year; and also evening prayers every week day during the time of Lent. The donations of Bishop Smith and Mary Bell, amounting to £750 were, in 1751, 1761, and 1769, invested in land at Clifton, in trust for the vicar of Penrith for the time being. In 1813 an exchange of lands was agreed upon between the late Earl of Lonsdale and the late Rev. J. Fletcher, vicar of Penrith, with the consent and approbation of the Bishop of Carlisle, the vicar and his successors to receive, in lieu of the property in Clifton, ten closes of land in the parish of Penrith, containing thirty-nine acres, two roods, and eighteen perches. The award by consent of the parties interested was made by the commissioners appointed by act of Parliament 51st George III. for enclosing lands in the manor and parish of Clifton. The minor endowments of the vicarage comprise £2 yearly for two sermons, given by William Robinson; half-a-guinea for a sermon, left by Barbara Bland, and £1 a year, given by Mr. William Blamire, as a compensation to the vicar for preaching an anniversary sermon in the parish church, on the first Sunday in January, for recommending and promoting the instruction of youth in grammar and the classics, and the benefits thence arising. According to a terrier made in 1749 the vicar, among other dues, was entitled to mortuaries by act of Parliament. The tithes and prescription money due to him were—for every communicant, three halfpence; for every new-calved cow, three pence; for a cow of the first calf, twopence; for a stripped milk cow, a penny; for a foal, fourpence; for a cast of bees, twopence; and for a plough, a penny. The small tithes have been commuted for an annual rent-charge, but the three halfpence for each communicant is the vicar's due by ancient prescription. The church rate appears to have been anciently raised out of the several divisions of the parish separately, and was called potpence, polepence, or pollpence, from which it is inferred that this rate was collected on the heads of the whole or some particular classes of the parishioners. This mode of assessment seems to have continued till about the year 1683, when a deviation from the old rule was made, and the rate collected upon property. Two years afterwards, in 1685, the old system was revived, but only to cease for ever, as since that time the church money has been raised by rates levied on the whole parish. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas the vicarage is returned as worth £40 11s. a year; in that of Edward II. at £6 13s. 4d., and in the King's Book at £11 9s. 1d. It is now worth about £200 a year.

VICARS.—Symon, —; Walter de Cantilupe, 1223; Sir Thos. de Kirkoswald, died 1318; Sir Alan de Horncastle, 1318; Sir Gilbert de Kirkby, 1323; Sir John —, 1355; John Handkin, 1428; Thomas Beste, 1477; Sir T. Ellerton, died 1565; Sir Robert Pearson, 1565; Sir Robert Robson, 1574; Sir William Walleis, 1575; John Hastie, 1600, ejected during the confusion in church and state; Roger Baldwin, Presbyterian, —; John Hastie, restored 1600; Simon Webster, 1601; Robert Fisher, 1609; Charles Carter, 1665; Marius d'Assigny, 1667; Joshua Emding, 1668; John Child, 1668-9; Alexander Farrington, 1694; Hugh Todd, 1699; John Morland, 1728; Gustavus Thompson, 1748; Rattus Worsopp, 1749; John Cooper, 1750; James Fletcher, 1790; John Tendon, 1823; William Jackson, 1839; Thomas James Clark, 1841; William Holme Milner, 1845; Samuel Johnston Butler, 1853.

The vicarage was erected on glebe land in 1837, with money arising from the sale of the materials of the old vicarage and site, subscriptions, and £372 borrowed from the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty. The old vicarage stood to the south-east of the church, and was an inconvenient and unhealthy building.

Christ Church is a neat structure in the Perpendicular style, situated at the east end of the main street, at the foot of the Beacon Hill. It consists of a nave, with north and south aisles, vestry at the south-east end, and north porch. The material used in the exterior of the edifice is the red sandstone of the district; while the interior pillars, pulpit, &c. are of white freestone from Lammonby Moor. The total cost of erection amounted to £2,700. There are 600 sittings, 450 of which are free and unappropriated. The burial-ground by which the church is surrounded is laid out with excellent taste, and contains a few tombstones displaying considerable artistic skill. Mr. Walker tells us that the circumstances which led to the erection of this church were as follow:—"Most of the pews in the old church were appropriated and regarded by the parishioners as their own private property. The population of the parish in 1846, when an attempt was made to repew the said church, which failed, was nearly double that of 1800, and treble that of 1722; moreover, the state of the churchyard was such that new ground to provide for the proper and decent interment of the dead had long been a desideratum, and with this increase of population, and the difficulty respecting the sittings, a proportionate increase of accommodation for worship was equally desirable. One or two subscriptions of £50 each having been voluntarily offered to the Rev. Mr. Milner, the then vicar, he applied to the late Mary de Whelpdale, who gave £500. Thus encouraged, and other subscriptions being promised, Mr. Milner formed a committee of subscribers,¹ and issued his first address on the subject, 'To the owners of lands and tenements in the parish,' in October, 1847." The foundation stone was laid on the 6th of April, 1848, and the church was consecrated 31st October, 1850, by the late Dr. Percy, bishop of Carlisle. The architects were Messrs. Travis and Mangnoll, of Manchester, under whose direction the works were carried out by local builders, &c. The church possesses two beautiful stained glass windows, by Wailes, of Newcastle, erected by Mrs. de Whelpdale and Mr. Barret; it is attended by the clergy of the parish church.

St. Catherine's Church (Catholic) is a small but handsome edifice adjoining the new churchyard. It was opened on the 11th of June, 1850, and is already much too small for the increasing congregation. Considerable additions are now (1859) in course of being effected, consisting of chancel, transepts, &c., which, when completed, will add materially to the size of the church. The windows are of stained glass, the eastern one being remarkable for its beauty. There are several mural monuments, one of which is in memory of the late Rev. George Leo Haydock.¹ The principles of Protestantism seem to have made but slow progress in Penrith, for some time after the Reformation, and even as late as 1681, there were several who still remained true to the ancient faith. In the year just named five Catholics were summoned to appear before the chancellor of the diocese at Penrith, and in consequence of their non-compliance were declared to be excommunicated. A large room in St. Andrew's Place served for a considerable period as a place of worship, and is still known as the old Catholic Chapel. To the liberality of Catherine, Lady Throgmorton, late of Carleton, Yorkshire, and the exertions of P. H. Howard, Esq., of Corby Castle, the Catholics of Penrith are chiefly indebted for their present church. The presbytery, or priest's house, adjoining the church, was erected in 1853 by the Very Rev. Robert Smith, canon of the Catholic diocese of Hexham, the present incumbent.

The Friends' Meeting House is the oldest dissenting place of worship in the town, and is supposed to have been erected about the end of the seventeenth century. Thirteen members of the society appear to have been resident in the parish as early as the year 1681, in which year they were summoned by the chancellor of the diocese at Penrith, and for non-attendance excommunicated. Their names will be found in "Walker's History of Penrith," page 180.

The Independent Chapel, situated in Duke-street, is a convenient structure, erected in 1824. The congregation seems to have been first formed about the year 1817, when Mr. Pearson, who had been preaching in various parts of Westmoreland, was invited to visit Penrith. Subsequently the Rev. William Thorne became minister, and the chapel was erected, the congregation having previously met for worship in a school-room in Dockray. The present minister is the Rev. William Brewis.

¹ The following gentlemen composed this committee:—The Rev. W. H. Milner, T. D. Blesmyre, Esq., Jos. Salkeld, Esq., James Barrett, Esq., and Jonathan Varty, Esq.

¹ A short memoir of this gentleman will be found in "Walker's Penrith," p. 175.

The Presbyterian Chapel is in Rowcliff Lane. The congregation attached to this chapel dates its origin from the year 1660, when Roger Baldwin was ejected from the living of Penrith. It has since continued firmly attached to the Westminster Confession of Faith, and is one of those congregations which, despite the many changes which have taken place in the Presbyterian body, have retained the Presbyterian name.

MINISTERS.—James Coningham, 1694; Thomas Andrews, 1701; Peter Siddon, 1715; Samuel Threlkeld, 1728; Samuel Lowthian, who removed to Newcastle about the year 1748; Edward Dunce, 1751; John Honeyman, 1772; James Broadfoot, 1789; Richard Paxton, 1788; George Henderson, 1793; James Mc.Connochie, 1794; Henry Thomson, 1799.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel, at the foot of Arthur-street, was erected by subscriptions and donations in 1856. It is a plain substantial building, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Rev. W. Wilson was the first minister, his successor is the Rev. W. Alderson.

The Wesleyan Chapel is a commodious structure, at the head of Sandgate, erected in 1815. Wesleyanism dates its origin in Penrith from a visit paid to the town by the Rev. John Wesley in 1751. We find him again here in 1780 and in 1788, on which occasions he preached either at the Cross or under the old Moot Hall. His first adherents consisted of poor people, with the exception of Mr. Varty, whose school-room, near the Crown Inn, served for a considerable period as a place of worship. On Mr. Varty's demise, in 1814, his co-religionists resolved to build a more suitable chapel, and the present structure was erected in the following year. Mr. Walker tells us that Penrith was formerly comprised in the Dales circuit, of which Barnard Castle was the head. In 1803 the places in Westmoreland and Cumberland where Wesleyanism had been introduced were detached from Barnard Castle and formed into an independent circuit, with 210 members, the head of which was Brough. Penrith is now the circuit town. The present ministers are Rev. G. Greenwood, Rev. J. Wesley Thomas, and the Rev. J. Wright. Mr. Thomas is the author of an excellent translation of Dante.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

As we have seen at previous pages, the education of the youth of Penrith was attended to at a very early period, the successive priests of the chantry of Saint Andrew instructing all who came in such knowledge as was then deemed essential by our forefathers. These teachers seem to have performed their duty well as long as they exercised the privilege, that is till the time of the suppression of the monastic institutions, when the school of Penrith shared the fate of similar institutions in other parts of England, and no provision was made for the education of the rising generation till the reign of Elizabeth, who by her charter, dated July 18th, 1564, founded "the Free Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth in Penrith." By this charter it was ordained that there should be a master and usher and five governors, who were created a body corporate, with power for the survivors, upon the death of any of them, to elect successors from the inhabitants of the town and parish. For the support of the school the rent of the dissolved chantry was granted to the governors and their successors. The governors were to have a common seal, and were to be capable of being parties to actions and suits. They were likewise empowered to provide a school-house within the parish, to appoint a master and usher, and to remove them for any offence at their discretion, also to make orders, in writing, for the government of the school, of the master, usher, scholars, and the revenue. The charter also licensed the alienation of lands and tenements to the amount of £30 a year, beyond the rent of £6 to the governors for the use of the school. As stated at page 596, Penrith school was endowed with a piece of land called Ling Stubbs, which is now worth about £70 a year; but this property was alienated from the use of the school by Mr. Andrew Whelpdale, twenty shillings a year being all that now comes to the school. The charter and other documents belonging to the school were taken possession of by another of the same family; but the charter has been recovered.¹ The £6 a year given by the foundation charter is still possessed by the school, £5 9s. being charged upon the Skirgill estate, and the remainder upon houses in the town. In addition to this the school possesses a benefaction of £10 per annum, given in 1660 by Mr. Robinson; a yearly sum of £5 arising from two fields called Spillamire Closes, given by Mr. Blamire in 1782; a rent charge of £2 a year, given by the same gentleman, for the purchase of a silver medal, to be given annually to the scholar who composes the best Latin theme on a given subject, also a silver pen to the best writer, and a book of arithmetic to the best arithmetician; two guineas a year from the Duke of Devonshire, in lieu of the revenue formerly derived from the old market cross; these and a few other small charges make up the endowment of the school, which altogether amounts to about £26 a year. The revenues being so small, it has not been usual to appoint an usher, as required by the charter, and there are no funds for the repairs of the school. A new front has recently been put into the old school by public subscription. Over the door is a stone in the form of a shield, bearing the arms of Queen Elizabeth, with the motto "Semper Eadem." On the left of this is a stone with the inscription "SCHOLA LIB. GRAM. ELIZABETHÆ REGINÆ, A.D. MDLXIV.," another stone, on the right, is inscribed as follows: "IMPENSIS PBLICIS RESTITUTA, MDCCCLVII." The school of Penrith is one of the twelve schools in Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Yorkshire, which have the privilege of sending a candidate every five years to Queen's College, Oxford, to compete for one of the five exhibitions bequeathed by Lady Elizabeth Hastings, each worth about £100 a year, and tenable for five years.

¹ This charter, with a translation, will be found in the appendix to "Walker's Penrith."

Mr. Robinson's school, situated in Middlegate, was erected about the year 1670, very probably by public subscription. Its name is derived from Mr. Robinson, who, by his will, dated 1660, bequeathed "the sum of £20 a year, for ever, to be issuing and payable out of his premises in Grub-street, London, to the churchwardens of the parish of Penrith, for the education and bringing up of poor girls in a free school, to read and seamstry work, or such other learning fit for that sex, being the poor sort, whose parents were not able to pay for their learning; and to be admitted by and with the consent of the churchwardens of the parish for the time being." On May 1st, 1700, the vicar, churchwardens, vestry, and overseers made regulations for the government of the school, by which the mistress is required "to teach all children that are sent unto her by the minister and churchwardens, gratis, without demanding any reward, and no other." Since Mr. Robinson's time this school has received the following endowments:—Joan Lassells, widow, by will, dated May 19th, 1671, gave "the surplus of her personal estate to the use thereof;" directing that the interest should be applied towards "employing poor children in the working of worsted and knitting in the said school." Roger Sleddale, by will, in 1696, gave £10 to the master and mistress of this school, "wherewith to purchase a stock to carry on a manufactory therein." Thomas Langhorne and Susannah Sleddale, who afterwards intermarried, were the executors of Mrs. Lassells, the surplus of whose estates was applied as directed, and Mrs. Langhorne, who survived her husband, being anxious to preserve the charity money, which produced £5 a year, invested the same in the purchase of land, and afterwards granted by indenture, dated 1700, to trustees for the use of the school, an annuity of the £5 chargeable upon land at Penrith, called Bowerbank Close, or Kitty-cum-Kell, and Low Ingmire; and it was limited by the said indenture that the amount should be paid yearly, on the 2nd of February, at the great Through Stone, in the churchyard of Penrith. Small bequests, amounting in the aggregate to £60 were afterwards given to the school. This £60 included £5 given by Mrs. Langhorne, £5 by Thomas Pattenson, £10 by Christopher Pattenson, and £10 by Mr. Sleddale; £40 of the £60 was laid out with Mrs. Bland's charity money in the purchase of lands, the rents of which, in the proportion of four-fifteenths, belong to the school. What became of the remaining £20 does not seem to be known. Mrs. Dorothy Pattenson left four shillings a year for the purchase of books for poor girls. Mrs. Bland, who was mistress of the school, gave four Bibles, with the Acts of Uniformity, and Common Prayer, and the Apocrypha, to be kept in the school, for the use of poor girls of the communion of the Church of England, who should not be able to provide themselves with such books, or otherwise to be absolutely given to them. The total revenue of the school is about £29 5s. a year, viz., £20 per annum, the gift of Mr. Robinson, £5 per annum secured on land by the executors of Mrs. Lassells, and £4 5s. being the school's proportion of rent of lands arising from an investment of £40. The churchwardens for the time being are governors, and no child can be admitted free without their consent.

The Spinning and Knitting School is a branch of Robinson's school, on the establishment of which, the mistress, besides reading and sempstry, taught spinning and knitting; but it being found that these different branches of learning could not be carried on conveniently together, another mistress was employed to teach scholars to spin and knit, in another room of the same establishment.

The Boys' National School, situated in Benson-street, was erected by subscription in 1816, on a site given by the Earl of Lonsdale. It will accommodate about 180 pupils, and is supported by subscriptions, donations, and the payments made by the children.

The Infant School is the next in the order of time, being founded in 1823, by the exertions of a few benevolent ladies of the town. The present school and teacher's residence were erected in 1833, at a cost of £350, which was defrayed by the proceeds of a bazaar held for the purpose. It is open to children of all denominations, who are admitted at the age of two years, and many remain until they are seven; the charge is one penny weekly. From its commencement this school has been well attended, the average number of pupils being 140. We scarcely need add that the school depends for support upon public subscriptions and donations.

The Wesleyan Day School, Meeting House Lane, is a handsome structure, in the Elizabethan style, erected by subscription in 1844. It comprises two large school-rooms, with galleries, and all the accessories required by the modern systems of education. The school is conducted on the principle of the Glasgow training system, by a master and three pupil teachers; a mistress being employed for the purpose of instructing the girls in sewing and knitting. The school, as reported by her majesty's inspector of schools, is in a very efficient state, and self-supporting.

The British School, erected in 1847, is situated in Canny Croft. It was erected by subscription and a government grant in 1847, on a site given by the Duke of Devonshire, and consists of one large room, with two class-rooms, and a good playground. The school was opened in 1848. It is under government inspection, and has an average attendance of seventy children.

A Ragged School was commenced at the Town Head in August, 1853, and is now attended by forty children.

In addition to these schools there are Sunday-schools attached to the various places of worship.

RELIGIOUS, CHARITABLE, AND OTHER SOCIETIES.

The Penrith Church Missionary Association, and a branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society were established in 1815, and have continued in operation ever since.

The Good Samaritan Society was established here many years ago, by the Wesleyans, for the purpose of administering relief to destitute persons, without distinction of religion or country.

An Agricultural Society was established at Penrith about twenty-seven years ago. The show is held annually in September. A farmers' club was also established here about a dozen years ago, in connection with which there is a library and reading room. The club meets twice a month for the discussion of subjects relating to agriculture.

The town possesses flourishing societies of Free Masons, Oddfellows, Foresters, and Druids, which have conferred great and lasting benefits upon Penrith and the surrounding district.

There is also a Co-operative Building Society, formed in October, 1850, after the model of one at Carlisle. The amount of each share is £30. Since 1850 the society has purchased four parcels of building land, which have been allotted to the members. The first purchase was Newlands Place, containing one acre and three-quarters, the principal portion of which is now built upon; the next, Arthur Croft, on which Arthur-street is built; the next, two fields, which have been formed into Graham-street, so called in honour of Sir James Graham, one of the original promoters and directors of the society; and the fourth, a piece of land long known as the Trodfield, but now Union-street. Since the commencement of the society 219 shares have been allotted, and eighty-one houses erected.

LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS, &c.

Penrith Mechanics' Institution was founded in 1830, and a reading room was subsequently added. This institution possesses the books, coins, &c., left to the inhabitants of Penrith by the late Mr. Harrison Wilkinson, who, in his will expressed a hope that the contribution would induce some person with competent means to found a public library on an adequate scale, the want of which in early life he had experienced, and which was still wanted for the advancement of education.

The Penrith Book Society and the Gentlemen's News Room have been in existence many years.

The Young Men's Christian Association Public Library was founded in 1853, and has for its object "to bring into circulation among young men the best works in sacred literature." The ordinary subscription is 6s. per annum, apprentices of limited means, 4s. The library contains about 300 volumes. In connection with this association are classes for the study of Biblical literature, and lectures.

The Working Men's Reading Room was established in 1853, on the model of a similar institution in Carlisle, whose rule "that no member who is not a working man, or who is able to live independently of his labour, shall be eligible to vote at any of the society's meetings, to hold office, or to sit upon any committee," is followed here. Each member pays an entrance fee of sixpence, a penny a week subscription, and an annual levy of sixpence. On the formation of this institution, the members took the old Catholic chapel for their news-room and library; and shortly afterwards set about erecting a building more suitable for their purpose. An appeal was made to the public, and £350 was soon obtained. Ground was at once purchased, and a building erected at a cost of about £650. The new structure, which is sufficiently large for the holding of lectures, &c., was opened in September, 1855. In connection with the reading room is a dwelling house for the librarian. The number of members at present is upwards of 200. The library comprises nearly 2,000 volumes.

Penrith possesses one newspaper, the Cumberland and Westmoreland Advertiser and Penrith Weekly Chronicle, established by Mr. Sweeten in June, 1855, and published every Tuesday.

The County Constabulary Office, consisting of court-house and lock-up department, is situated in Hunter's Lane. From the report of an inquiry made by virtue of the queen's commission to certain gentlemen, issued in 1572, it appears that Richard Dudley, late steward of Penrith—probably the same gentleman who was, by the queen's letters patent, appointed one of the original governors of the grammar school—had taken from the castle thirty cart loads of stones to build a prison in Penrith. The prison built by Mr. Dudley is probably the place at the Town Head, known to this day as the old gaol. The walls of this building are of great strength, composed chiefly of blocks of red sandstone, which appear as if they had been procured from some edifice which had fallen into decay. Judging from the style of the workmanship, they seem to be contemporaneous with the grammar school. The original doorway, which was a very small one, and in the south side of the building, is walled up. Within living memory, the old gaol has not been used as a prison. Eighty years ago, the house in Sandgate now occupied by the Wesleyan minister was the place where prisoners were detained, and the same house continued to be used as the "Penrith lock-up" until the erection of the old house of detention at the Town Head, in 1825. In former times the keeper of the house of detention was generally a parish constable, who, assisted by the high-constable and about two other parish constables, managed the police business of the parish. By a resolution of the Midsummer quarter sessions, 1854, the Leath Ward of Cumberland and the West Ward of Westmoreland were formed into a rural police district, and by a resolution of the Christmas quarter sessions, 1856, all the district forces in both counties were united under one chief constable, Mr. Dunne. Leath Ward forms one division, the head quarters of which is Penrith, where the superintendent resides, at the new constabulary office, which was opened in the spring of 1859. The total number of the force in Leath Ward is fourteen.

The Westmoreland and Cumberland Yeomanry Cavalry, a local corps of volunteers, raised in 1819, have for many years past, with the exception of 1857, met at Penrith for eight days' permanent drill, and have invariably been reported by the inspecting officers as one of the most efficient yeomanry corps in the kingdom. This corps has on two or three occasions been called out to uphold the civil power, when officers and men alike proved themselves worthy of the uniform they wore. The regimental band has acquired a very high reputation.

MARKETS AND FAIRS.

We have now no means of ascertaining the precise date at which markets and fairs were first held in Penrith. The earliest authentic notice occurs in the Close Rolls of the 6th Henry III. (1223), and is to the following effect:—"The king to the sheriff of Cumberland greeting. Know that we ordain a market to be held in our manor of Penred on the Wednesday of each week; and a fair to be held in the same place each year, to continue from the eve of Pentecost till the Monday next after the Feast of the Holy Trinity, unless the aforesaid market and fair be, &c. And, therefore, we enjoin you to cause to be proclaimed the aforesaid market and fair at the time and place aforesaid, and to hold them as aforesaid until our coming of age. Witness, H. de Burgh, at Westminster, the 16th day of October." It is very probable that markets were held at Penrith previous to the granting of this charter. It will be remarked that the privilege was conferred till the king, who was then under age, should attain his majority, when there is little doubt it was confirmed, as the market, &c., have since been held without interruption. The market of Penrith, held now on Tuesday, has long been known as one of the best grain markets in the north of England. Potatoes are also sold here in large quantities, as well as butter, eggs, poultry, &c. The tolls are now the property of the Board of Health, having been leased from the Duke of Devonshire in 1854 (see page 613). Many places in the neighbourhood are free of toll here, in consequence of their forming part of the honour of Penrith, or at least such parts of them as were anciently in the hands of the lord or his copyholders. The lands formerly held by the convent of Armathwaite are also toll free by the charter of William Rufus, granted in 1088, and Temple Sowerby, in consequence of its having formerly been the property of the Knights Templars, the whole of whose possessions were declared to be toll-free by charter of Henry II. Morland, Newby, Maughanby, Ousby, Hunsonby, Glassonby, Melmerby, and a few other places claim exemption by grant or prescription.

Fairs are held in Penrith as follow:—On Shrove Tuesday and the three Tuesdays following for horses; March 1st, cattle; April 23rd, sheep; April 24th, lean and fat cattle; Whit Tuesday and every other Tuesday till Lammas, for cattle; second Tuesday in July, for wool; September 26th, for sheep, and the day following for cattle and horses; last Tuesday in October, for cattle and cheese; Martinmas Tuesday, for cattle, and every other Monday throughout the year principally for fat sheep and cattle. It cannot be necessary for us to state that these fairs are well attended.

A new butter and egg market, 116 feet in length, forty-one feet in width, and sixteen feet to the cross beams, has recently been formed out of a part of the shambles. It is lighted from the roof, and is a great convenience to the farmers' wives and daughters.

In connection with the markets and fairs, the following extracts from Mr. Walker's "History of Penrith," will no doubt be interesting to the reader:—

"The Moot Hall, which is described at page 589, was in a dilapidated condition, and used on the Tuesdays as a market-house, where the country people, who were in the habit of spinning a considerable portion of their wool, brought their yarn for sale, which was of two kinds, hard and soft; the latter being used for blankets and stockings, and the former for coarser purposes. The Kendal manufacturers were their principal customers. Detached from the Moot Hall steps by a narrow passage, was a small square building, called the Balcony, on the top of which was the market bell, and underneath a stall for the sale of butchers' meat, which was occupied by the late Thomas Carmalt.

"The Cross, where the servants were hired, stood in front of the premises now occupied by Mr. Dempsey. It was covered in; the roof being supported by four pillars, one on each angle of the steps. Except on the term days, the cross was used as the butter and egg market, and was an excellent place for the purpose, as the women were protected from the rain. On the right and left of each corner pillar was a stone slab about 5ft. by 3½ft. These were let as stalls, and were advantageous places for selling hardware, spice, &c. The main road, which was very narrow, lay between Mr. Dempsey's and the cross, and between the cross and the Moot Hall, on the opposite side, was a large square of flags, called the Cross Parade, which was a fashionable promenade, and was also used as a ball alley by the youth of the town, who entered into a subscription to defray the expense of plastering the east wall of the Moot Hall, to make it smooth to cast their balls against. Within the caves of the cross, at the north-western corner, stood the stocks, which were repaired in 1781, by Thomas Langhorne and others, at a cost to the parish of £1 14s.

"The Round-about was a very old building, which stood by itself in the front, nearly opposite to the premises of Mr. Martindale, spirit merchant. It consisted of two stories, with a cellar underneath. There were two shops on the first floor, one of which was occupied by Mr. Morland, tailor and draper. The butchers stood with their meat all round the building, being protected from the rain by a shed hanging out aslope from the main wall.

"The fishstones, of which there were two ranges, stood on the north of the Round-about.

"The old shambles stood above the fishstones, on each side of the street, and extended north as far as the King's Arms passage. They were built in the form of sheds, with oaken rafters to hang the joints upon; but in former times there was little meat killed or shown in Penrith market from Christmas to the first of March, as the country people were in the habit of buying a supply at Christmas to pickle.

"Early in the present century a movement was made in the town, the object of which was, the removal of the moot hall, round-about, the cross, and the old shambles. In a letter from Mr. Atkinson, the Duke of Devonshire's chief agent, to Mr. Hutton, of Penrith, deputy steward, dated the 16th of May, 1805, Mr. Atkinson says, "The duke is disposed to meet the wishes of the men of Penrith by consenting to remove the old shambles;" and in another letter, dated 7th April, 1806, he says, "I think it would not be amiss if you could learn the sentiments of those whose property would be most benefited if the moot hall should be taken away, and what each of them would subscribe for purchasing a thoroughfare from the intended shambles into Sandgate. If they do not come handsomely forward, I will advise the duke to build shops or sell it in building lots."

"A committee was appointed in 1806, in all probability immediately after the receipt of Mr. Atkinson's letter, to take into consideration the measures to be adopted for the improvement of the town.¹

"The Moot Hall, shambles, &c. appear to have been removed prior to the year 1809, for at a meeting of the town's improvement committee, in conjunction with several of the principal inhabitants, held at the George, on the 12th of October, 1809, to consult on taking means for effecting the removal of the round-about, the moot hall, shambles, &c. are never alluded to. The probability is they were not then in existence.² The committee were of opinion that no competent means could be resorted to for purchasing the round-about, except by an assessment on the owners of property; however it does not appear that any assessment was made, for on the 30th of June, 1813, eight gentlemen entered into an agreement to advance the necessary funds for the purpose: the purchase money not to exceed £120; to be repaid out of the rents of the property and the money to be raised by subscription.¹

¹ The following are the names of the committee:—Jno. de Whelpshole, Esq., Wm. Wilson, Esq., Richard Story, Esq., Jno. Hunsdon, Esq., Thomas Broadbent, Esq., A. L. Harrison, Esq., Anthony Harrison, Esq.; Mr. Robinson, innkeeper; William Bleasnyre, Esq., Ed. Grave, Esq.

² The last occupants of shops under the Moot Hall were Matthew Jackson, James Aikin, and William Shaw, a relation of the celebrated mathematician of Tirril.

"The old parish pinfold stood nearly in the front of the premises now occupied by Mr. William Scott.

"The subjoined statements of prices of provisions in this market in 1768 and 1794, will be perused with interest. In 1768, 'bread, oats, and barley and rye, mixed, cost 3d. 3d. and 1d. per lb.; cheese, 2d.; butter, 6d. 18oz.; beef, 2½d.; mutton, 2½d.; veal, 2d.; pork, 3d.; milk, 1d. three pints skimmed; potatoes, 3d. per hoop; candles, 7d.; soap, 7d.; labourer's house rent, 20s.; labourer's firing, 30s.'² In 1794 bread was nearly the same as above; 'best cheese, 5d. per lb.; country cheese, 2½d. to 3d.; butter, 7d. 18oz.; beef, 3d.; mutton, 3d.; veal, 2½d.; pork, 3d. to 3½d.; skimmed milk, three pints 1d.; potatoes, 2½d. per hoop; candles, 7½d. per lb.; soap, 7d.; labourer's house rent for one room, £1 10s.; firing for labourer's family, £2 per annum.'³ In 1787 the prices of fish in this market were as follows:—'Sea-fish in general, 2d. per lb.; salmon, 3d.; Ullswater trout, and char, 3d.; stream and Esk trout, 2d.; Ullswater eels, 2d.; muscles and cockles, 1d. per quart; oysters, 2s. 6d. per hundred.'⁴

"In Ullswater fish of every description has become scarce; but formerly, this market being nearest to that lake, was from thence plentifully supplied with trout, eels, 'skellies,' &c. Old fishers speak with rapture of bygone days, when they could fill a pannier in the course of a few hours, when, at the proper season, Waltonians from all parts of the country resorted to Pooley and Patterdale to enjoy their favourite sport. A dish of Ullswater trout is, in any part of the kingdom, considered a treat. Since the formation of railways, fisheries have commanded good rents. The lake has been hard drawn to procure trout for distant markets. A wholesale system of poaching has been practised with impunity in the brooks where the fish go up to spawn, and the water from the lead mines at Greenside, which have been vigorously worked for some years past, is said to be impregnated with poisonous matter, and these are the causes, but more particularly the two former, to which anglers attribute the present scarcity."

¹ The following gentlemen agreed to advance the sums set opposite their names:—Richard Storey, £92 10s.; Edward Greave, £92 10s.; William James, £52 10s.; Thomas Hutton, £26 7s.; John Robinson, £26 7s.; George Ramsay, £26 7s.; Michael Rummington, £92 10s.; and A. L. Harrison, £52 10s.

² Quoted by Hutchinson from the remarks of Arthur Young, Esq. on the culture of land, &c. from his "Six Months' Tour through the North of England."

³ Hutchinson.

⁴ Clark's Survey.

RAILWAYS, GAS AND WATER WORKS, &c.

Penrith is connected with every part of England by means of the Lancaster and Carlisle railway, the construction of which has proved a source of great benefit to the town. For an account of this railway see page 64.

In 1830 a company was formed, bearing the designation of the "Penrith Gaslight and Coke Company," for the purpose of "making gas, and therewith lighting the streets, houses, and other places within the town." The capital was not to exceed £5,000 in shares of £20 each. In November of the same year, some of the houses and shops were lighted with gas for the first time. The town was only partially lighted till the year 1845, when a rate was laid for that purpose. There are now 105 public lamps, the lighting of which costs £231 5s. per annum. The original charge for gas in Penrith was 14s. per 1,000 cubic feet, which has been gradually reduced to 5s., the present charge.

In 1852 the Board of Health commenced the formation of waterworks, by leasing a piece of ground called the Island, situate on the river Eamont, on which to erect the works, with power to lay one clear water pipe through the Carleton Hall estate, and one impermeable sewer pipe from the town of Penrith to the works on the Eamont, and one main sewer pipe out in a westerly direction along and under the road to Eamont Bridge, also power to lay a pipe at the Low Mill to carry away the surface water of the sewerage from the works to the point in the Holme where the brook, which runs through Penrith, discharges itself into the Eamont, the board to pay all surface damages, except for the first laying of the pipes. Penrith is supplied with water from the Eamont, on the Skirsgill estate, in a meadow about half a mile west of Eamont Bridge, where it passes through filter beds into a settling well, from which it is conveyed by glazed earthenware pipes to another settling well on the Low Mill Island, where the pumps and other apparatus for lifting are situated. From this place it is raised, by means of a water-wheel and pumps, to the lower and upper reservoirs, the former of which, when full, will contain 370,000 gallons of water. Sluice valves and fire plugs, or hydrants, are placed at regular intervals along the line of supply mains, so as to command, by the stand pipe and hose, every building in the town. The waterworks were publicly opened on the 24th of August, 1854.

The Board have also constructed new sewers which, with the exception of the main outlet, are of earthenware. They are laid in straight lines, the beds and arterial junctions being cut out of ashlar, shaped with the requisite curvature. A man-hole, covered with a cast-iron trap, is placed at every junction, at every change of line and gradient, and at other intervals, so as to afford, by means of light from man-hole to man-hole, every facility for examination. Flushing sluices are provided along the beck for the valley lines, and a direct communication is established with the water mains by washing valves, on the higher levels, so as to give the whole when necessary a thorough cleansing. The length of the main and branch sewers is upwards of four miles. The principal portion of the money expended in the construction of the waterworks and sewerage is borrowed on the security of the special district rate, amounting in all to £11,498.

The Baths and Wash-houses were established in 1854 by a joint stock company, with a capital of £2,800, in shares of £1 each. From the great success which has attended similar establishments elsewhere, there is little doubt that the shareholders will derive a handsome dividend from their speculation.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

In 1848-9 the cholera made its second appearance during this century upon the shores of England. In anticipation of its arrival Parliament had passed an act, known as "The Nuisances Removal and Diseases Prevention Act," which gave power to the local authorities to take measures for the prevention of the spread of the pestilence. On the appearance of cholera in the comparatively neighbouring towns of Workington and Barnard Castle, the inhabitants of Penrith deemed it requisite to take what sanitary precautions they could. For this purpose a meeting was held on the 18th October, when a Board of Health was constituted to superintend and direct the cleansing of the town. This Board, not having the necessary power to raise funds for the carrying out of the measures resolved upon at its sittings, soon came to a stand still; and in consequence a petition, signed by a number of the rated inhabitants, was, in November, 1848, forwarded to the Commissioners of the General Board of Health, praying that the provisions of the Public Health Act might be applied to the town of Penrith. Subsequently, by order in council, the Diseases Prevention Act was applied to the whole of Great Britain, and in pursuance of its provisions the board of guardians of the Penrith union appointed the Penrith assistant overseer inspector of nuisances for the said union. By the exertions of this officer many nuisances were abated, and the surveyor of highways for the parish had the cut which runs down the principal street thoroughly cleansed out. Many parties who were averse to the application of the Public Health Act to the town thought these improvements were sufficient, and there would be no necessity for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of Parliament. On November 14, 1849, Mr. Rawlinson, superintending inspector under the Public Health Act, arrived in Penrith for the purpose of making a public inquiry respecting the sewerage, drainage, water supply, state of the burial grounds, and the number and sanitary condition of the inhabitants of Penrith. A numerous party, strongly opposed to the inquiry, sent a statement of the grounds of their opposition to Mr. Rawlinson, who replied that he had no power to close the inquiry as he was acting under instructions from the general board. Mr. Rawlinson's report was published in 1851, and he recommended the application of the act to Penrith. As soon as this was known in the town, the party opposed to the application of the act forwarded a memorial to the General Board of Health, in which they endeavoured to show that Mr. Rawlinson's report was incorrect, and prayed the board "to pause ere they inflicted the expensive machinery of the act on property already burdened with a heavy load of local taxation." In accordance with Mr. Rawlinson's recommendation the act was applied by order in council, dated the 25th of June, 1851. The Local Board of Health was constituted on the 28th of July, when twelve gentlemen who had promoted the application of the act were elected. The boundary line encompassing the town district of the board, as marked out on the plan approved by the general board, is as follows:—"Commencing behind the Halfway House, including the lower reservoir to behind the Barco House and Barco Hill, running across a portion of the Flat upon a direct line, through the sandhole, Fell Lane, then passing behind Caroline Cottage, along the edge of the Beacon to a little above the junction of the Kirksward Road, thence to behind the White Ox, thence near to Thacker Beck, on by the east of the railway to behind Crudmeir, crossing the stream from the Petteril at the angle of the dyehouse, up through the Clowers, crossing Gillwilly Lane near to the north stile of the field now purchased as building ground, making an angle of it where Union-street joins Gillwilly, thence across the Greystoke Road, taking in the whole of Newland's Place, over Myer's Beck, and across the railway to Seumscaw, by the beck, taking in the outbuildings on the south side of Wetherigg Lane, crossing the field a little above the vicarage, and going through another field between the vicarage and the Nursery Gardens to behind the Halfway House." For the purposes of the act the district of Penrith was divided into the following sub-divisions:—"Sub-division of Plumpton according to its present boundary, as a district for the repair of its highways; the sub-division of Carleton according to its present boundary, and district for the repair of highways; and the remainder of the parish now forming one separate district for the repair of the highways, be sub-divided into a town district and a country district." The town district includes "all dwelling-houses built, or which may be hereafter built in the said town, or so near to it as to be within the dotted line in red, marked round the said town, on the plain of the said district of Penrith, together with the household and other offices, yards, and gardens occupied therewith, and all other property within the said boundary line not being used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands, market gardens, or nursery grounds, or covered with water, or as a railway constructed under an act of Parliament. The country district includes all the parish of Penrith not comprised in the other districts, with all the lands which are expressly excepted from being included in the town division. The rates levied in each division are applicable for the purposes of this act within its division only.

In 1852 the Board commenced the water works, and two years later, in 1854, entered into a lease with the Duke of Devonshire, by virtue of which they became the lessees of the Fair Hill, Cannie Croft, the Shambles Market Place, and the tolls of all goods sold therein, for a term of ninety-nine years, at an annual rent of £153, binding themselves at the same time to expend £1,000 in the erection of buildings in Cannie Croft, within five years from the date of the lease. The Board have since entered into an arrangement with the duke, by virtue of which they have surrendered Cannie Croft, have got rid of their liability to expend £1,000, and have had their rent reduced from £153 to about £130. The assets of the board of health on March 25th, 1859, amounted to £561 4s. 6½d.; the total liabilities, £11,538 9s. 3¼d.; £11,498 of which was money borrowed on mortgage of special district rate.

The Board of Health have adopted the ancient seal of the town, the original of which was found about twenty years ago, in digging up a hedge near the old church of Brampton. It is charged with the cross of St. Andrew, the saint to whom the parish church is dedicated, and is inscribed "SIGILLUM COMMUNE VILLE DE PENRITH." From the fact of the existence of this seal it has been inferred that the town formerly enjoyed some kind of municipal incorporation.

THE POOR LAW UNION.

Penrith poor law union is divided into three sub-districts, viz., Penrith, comprising Melmerby, Ousby, Kirkland and Blencarn, Skirwith, Culaith, Langwathby, Edenhall, Penrith, Stainton, Dacre, Soluby, Great Blencowe, Newbiggin, Newton Reigny, Catterlen, and Plumpton Wall; Greystoke, embracing Hutton-in-the-Forest, Thomas Close, Little Blencowe, Johnby, Greystoke, Motherby and Gill, Hutton Soil, Hutton John, Watermillock, Matterdale, Threlkeld, Mungrisdale, Bowscale, Berrier and Murrah, Hutton Roof, Mosedale, Bustabeck Bound, How Bound, Row Bound, Southernby Bound, Stockdalewath Bound, Lamonby, Skelton, Unthank, and Middlesceugh-with-Braithwaite; Kirkoswald, including Upper and Nether Hesket, Petteril Crooks, Itonfield, Calthwaite, Plumpton Street, Lazonby, Great Salkeld, Hunsonby and Winskil, Little Salkeld, Glassonby, Gamblesby, Renwick, Kirkoswald, Staffield, Ainstable, and Croglin. The area of the union is 181,236 acres. Its population in 1801 was 23,307, of whom 11,241 were males, and 11,066 females. The number of inhabited houses at the same period was 4,232, of uninhabited 150, and thirty were building. The following statement of account shows the receipts, expenditure, and balances, of the union, for the year ended March 28th, 1859:—Receipts: Balance in favour of the parishes at the commencement of the year, £1,817 3s. 5d.; contributions paid during the year, £5,793 7s.; balance against parishes at the end of the year, £91 17s. 5½d.; total, £7,703 7s. 10½d. Expenditure: In maintenance, £937 13s. 2d.; out-relief in money, including relief to non-resident poor, £2,312 9s. 6d.; maintenance of lunatics in asylums, £501 0s. 9d.; vaccination fees, £27 7s.; registration fees, £66 19s. 6d.; common charges, £2,382 8s. 9d.; total expenditure, £6,227 13s. 8d. Balances: Against parishes at the commencement of the year, £115 19s. 2d.; balance in favour of parishes at the end of the year, £1,359 10s. 0½d. The sum total, including balances, £7,702 7s. 10½d. Total expenditure of year ending 29th March, 1859, excluding balances, £6,713 10s. 7½d.; showing a decrease in favour of the present year of £485 17s. 1¼d.

CHARITIES.

Robinson's Charity.—Mr. William Robinson, of London, by will, dated in 1601, bequeathed his property in Grub-street, in that city, to the Grocers' Company, whom he directed, among other things, to pay yearly on the 1st of November, to the churchwardens, vestrymen, and overseers of the parish of Penrith £20, to be distributed by them to twenty poor people of the same parish, viz., ten men and ten women, on every Christmas Day yearly for ever.

Pattenson's Charity.—Dorothy Pattenson, by will, dated 10th March, 1755, bequeathed to the vicar, churchwardens, and overseers of the poor of the township of Penrith £105, to be invested in the purchase of land, the rents and profits of which, with the exception of 4s. a year, should be distributed annually at the feast of St. Martin, amongst eight poor needful widows and objects of pity of the town of Penrith, by the vicar, churchwardens, and overseers for the time being, and their successors for ever, such widows to be nominated and chosen yearly by her executrix, Elizabeth Cust, and her nephew, Christopher Pattenson, Esq., of Carleton Hall, and their heirs for ever; and she directed the vicar of Penrith for the time being and his successors for ever, to receive out of the said rent the yearly sum of 4s., and to apply the same yearly for ever, at the said feast of St. Martin, in the purchase of books, which she ordered to be distributed at that time among the poor girls of Mr. Robinson's charity school at Penrith. Of this charity £100 was invested in the purchase of freehold and customary lands called Lowther Gates, at Clifton; and by indenture of the 2nd September, 1761, these lands were conveyed by Mrs. Pattenson's executrix to the churchwardens and overseers and their successors in trust for the charity. It appears that the owners of Carleton Hall estate have had the sole management of this charity from the time of its establishment. In 1814, an exchange having been offered by the Earl of Lonsdale, which was approved of on behalf of the charity by Mr. Wallace, the owner of Carleton Hall estate, the charity lands, consisting of Lowther Gate Close, was conveyed by him to his lordship, who, in exchange conveyed to Mr. Wallace two closes called Red Friars, and a third called Far Thurlbar, the united area of which amounts to eight acres, two roods, and thirty-eight perches. The charity has derived considerable advantage from this exchange. It is now worth £16 17s. 6d. per annum, less 4s. for Bibles for Mr. Robinson's school.

Bland's Charity.—Mrs. Barbara Bland, of Penrith, by will, in 1757, left £100 to Thomas Simpson upon trust, to distribute the interest thereof as follows:—To the vicar of Penrith, every Ash Wednesday, for preaching a sermon on that day, 10s. 6d.; and to the clerk and sexton on the same day, each 2s.; to purchase four Bibles yearly for poor girls, as mentioned in the account of Mr. Robinson's school; and to distribute the residue of such interest on Ash Wednesday, yearly, amongst such poor widows and maids of the said parish, of the communion of the Church of England, and not maintained as parish poor, as the said Thomas Simpson, his executors and assigns, should think fit, giving each person 5s.; and in case the sermon on Ash Wednesday should be omitted, she directed that the legacies to the vicar, clerk, and sexton should be withheld and distributed amongst the poor maids and widows as aforesaid. And she gave the residue of her personal estate, after the payment of all her debts, legacies, funeral and other expenses, to the said Thomas Simpson upon trust, to dispose of the interest thereof among such poor widows and maids, inhabitants of the parish of Penrith, not maintained as the poor of the parish, as he should think proper. The residue of her effects produced £10. These sums, together with £19 belonging to the Spinning and Knitting School, making a total of £150, were invested in land, the proceeds of which are applied to Mrs. Bland's charities and the Knitting School, in the proportion in which their funds contributed to the original purchase, viz., eleven-fifteenths to the former and four-fifteenths to the latter.

Bramwell's Charity.—Sarah, the wife of William Bramwell, by will, dated October 25th, 1763, devised, after the decease of her mother, all her lands at Robberby, in Cumberland, to her husband, William Bramwell, subject to the payment of several legacies therein particularly mentioned; and she bequeathed to twenty families in the parish of Penrith, to be paid on every Good Friday, 5s. each. The validity of this bequest being contested after the death of the testatrix, her husband, in order to give effect to her intention, he having sold the estate at Robberby, by indenture, dated October 30th, 1770, subjected his estates and shops in the market place, Penrith, to the payment of the said charity money. The churchwardens of Penrith receive annually £5 from this rent charge; and that sum is distributed by them every Good Friday, amongst twenty poor householders, each of whom receives five shillings. The recipients of this charity are selected by the churchwardens.

Sewell's Charity.—Susannah Sewell, by will, dated 17th December, 1782, bequeathed unto her cousin, Elizabeth Simpson, widow, and to her daughter Elizabeth, the wife of James Wallace, Esq., of Carleton Hall, and the survivor of them, and from and after the death of such survivor, then to the owners and proprietors of Carleton Hall aforesaid, for the time being, the sum of £200, in trust, to place out the same at interest, and to pay and distribute the same yearly, on St. Thomas's Day, unto and amongst twenty poor families or single persons keeping house in the town and neighbourhood of Penrith, in such proportions as they should think fit and suitable to their circumstances; and the testatrix declared her will to be, that if any proper object applied for the benefit of this charity who could make out the most distant relationship to the family of the Huttons of Penrith, they should have a preference given them in the annual distribution by the trustees. This legacy is invested in the public funds. The dividends, amounting to £8 a year, are distributed on St. Thomas' Day, at Carleton Hall, amongst sixteen poor housekeepers, each of whom receives the sum of ten shillings.

Dawson's Charity.—Colonel Thomas Dawson, in 1793, bequeathed £105 to the care of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Penrith, the interest whereof, he directed should be divided by them annually, on St. Thomas' Day, or the day of his death, to decent poor housekeepers of Penrith, that should be indigent and never asked alms. His administratrix paid this legacy to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Penrith, which, together with £5 14s. added thereto out of the poor rates, making £110 14s. was laid out in July, 1799, in the purchase of £120 Five per Cents. of 1797. This has since been exchanged for £131 14s. 3d. New Three per Cents., producing £3 19s. a year, eight-ninths of which are given to the poor, and one-ninth is equally divided between the mistress of Mr. Robinson's school and the mistress of the Spinning and Knitting School.

Carmalt's Charity.—Richard Carmalt, by indenture, dated 8th November, 1796, for a nominal consideration, granted to Thomas Sisson and four others, their heirs and assigns, an annuity of £4 10s., issuing out of his freehold fields, called Brackenbury Mires, in Penrith, to be paid yearly, on the 1st of December, upon trust, that they should on every Christmas Day dispose of the same in equal shares to eighteen poor people of the parish of Penrith, to be nominated by the churchwardens, vestrymen, and overseers, in like manner as directed by the will of Mr. William Robinson, concerning the money given by him to be distributed amongst the poor of the said parish. Five shillings each is annually given on account of this charity to eighteen poor persons.

Lambley's Gift.—Robert Lambley, by will, dated 27th March, 1797, directed his executor, upon his decease, to distribute and pay amongst the poor people resident within the parish of Penrith the sum of £50.

Forster's Charity.—Peter Forster, of Penrith, by indenture enrolled in Chancery, dated August 7th, 1800, in consideration of 6s., conveyed to trustees a close, called Boustead's Close, in the town fields of Penrith, that they should, from time to time, pay over to the churchwardens and overseers of Penrith, the rents thereof, for the following charitable purposes, namely, to pay and dispose of the same, on St. Peter's Day, yearly, amongst the poor persons resident in the coustablewick of Town Head, in Penrith, not receiving any parochial relief, and who should be nominated and thought fit objects by the churchwardens, vestrymen, and overseers, and in such shares as they should think fit. On the enclosure of the wastes of the honour of Penrith, an allotment of land was awarded to Boustead Close. As the close was required for the railway, another close, containing about four acres, was purchased in the same locality a few years ago, with a portion of the money paid by the railway company. The land produces about £27 10s., which is distributed as directed by the testator.

Idle's Charity.—George Idle, a merchant, in London, but a native of Penrith, by his will of the 19th of May, 1808, bequeathed to the churchwardens of Penrith £100, the interest of which he directed to be applied for the benefit of the poor of the parish, exclusive of the usual aid from the poor rates, in such proportions and manner as the churchwardens for the time being should think fit and proper. This legacy was paid in by the executors on the 26th July, 1811, and was immediately invested in the funds. It was sold out in 1829, and invested in a piece of land known by the name of Coatrooms, in the parish of Penrith.

Sewell's Charity.—George Sewell, merchant, of London, a native of Penrith, by will, dated November 18th, 1825, bequeathed to the overseers of the parish of Penrith, at the time of his decease, £100, to be applied by them for the use of the poor, as they might think best. This money is invested along with Mr. Idle's bequest in the land called Coatrooms.

Langton's Charity.—Ann Langton, of Lutwyche Hall, Shropshire, but a native of Penrith, by her will, dated, January 24th, 1835, gave and bequeathed to the vicar and churchwardens of Penrith for the time being the sum of £1,000, in trust, the interest to be distributed among such poor housekeepers within or belonging to the parish as do not receive alms or parochial relief, according to their discretion, at Christmas annually. The income, amounting to £33 2s. 2d., is distributed as directed.

Wordsworth's Charity.—Mrs. Richard Wordsworth, of Liverpool, left the interest of £100 to be distributed amongst the poor of Penrith.

De Whelpdale's Charity.—John de Whelpdale, Esq., of Bishop Yards, who died May 16th, 1844, left by will the interest of £1,000, to be equally divided amongst ten indigent poor widows or spinsters, they being parishioners and housekeepers within the parish of Penrith, who have each of them severally attained the age of fifty years or more, and who have not at any time received parochial or parish relief or support, except during extreme sickness. The widows or spinsters who are to be recipients of this charity "are to be selected and approved of by the persons next to succeed and residing in the house of Bishop Yards, in Penrith, or his heirs lawfully issuing under the said will, assisted in such selection by the vicar and churchwardens of the parish of Penrith, for the time being, and in trust, to see to the just and proper application of the yearly interest arising and accruing from this £1,000 already bequeathed." The charity is distributed as directed.

With regard to the other charities in which Penrith participates, Mr. Walker, in his "History of Penrith," tells us that, "In an ancient paper writing, which appears to contain a copy in part of the endowment of Barton School, it is expressed that the trustees shall yearly employ £10, part of the rents and profits of the estate, called Lakethwaite, for binding two poor boys, born in the parish of Barton, apprentices; and that if it should happen in any year that no poor boys to be so bound were to be found in the parish of Barton, then two poor boys, born in the parish of Penrith, should for that year be bound apprentices with the said £10; and that if in any year only one poor boy, born in the parish of Barton, should be found, that then one other poor boy, born in the parish of Penrith, should for that year be bound apprentice with one moiety of the said £10."

The same writer observes, "As the name of Nicholson is common in Penrith and neighbourhood, we must not omit to mention that John Nicholson, stationer, of the city of London, by will, dated the 28th of April, 1717, bequeathed for the relief of such poor persons of the kingdom of England, being Protestants, of the name of Nicholson, the income of a certain sum which is annually distributed, by five trustees, in the following manner, one marriage portion of £50, to some such man or woman, towards their advancement in marriage, every trustee having it in his power to grant this gift once in five years; ten apprentice fees of £10 each, to such boys and girls to put them out to trades and manual arts, of which every trustee has two to give every year; and twenty pensions of £5 each, paid half yearly, to such aged men and women—of which every trustee has four to give annually, and which, when once granted, the pensioners continue to receive until their death creates a vacancy for a new appointment. The capital from which the income is derived is invested in Three per Cents. The testator appointed William Nicolson, bishop of Carlisle, one of the original trustees of the charity. Dr. Nicholson, of Penrith, is the present trustee for this district."

Mr. Walker adds, "the rents of Coatroods, Clowers, and land at Unthank, are distributable as follows, viz., four-fifteenths of the rent of those lands purchased with Mrs. Bland's charity money (£100), and £40 belonging to the Spinning and Knitting School, are applicable to the said school. The price of four bibles for the use of the said school, also comes out of the rents, as well as 10s. 6d. to the vicar, and 2s. each to the clerk and sexton, all of which are the gift of Mrs. Bland. The residue of the rents belong to the poor—paupers excluded—and is the joint gift of Mrs. Bland, Mr. Idle, and Mr. Sewell. Mrs. Bland's portion of the charity is restricted to 5s. each, to be distributed amongst poor maids and widows, inhabitants of Penrith, of the communion of the Established Church, but the churchwardens in disposing of the charities of Idle and Sewell have a discretionary power. The lands are let for £22 7s. 6d., out of which, in 1856, £3 18s. 6d. was paid to the mistress of Mr. Robinson's school; £1 6s. 6d. to the mistress of the Spinning and Knitting School; for bibles, and to the vicar, clerk, and sexton, £1 18s. 6d.; leaving for the poor £16 4s."

Lord Wharton's Charity.—This parish is entitled to a share of the benefit of Philip Lord Wharton's Bible Charity. The vicar receives annually twenty bibles, and a proportionate number of catechisms and expositions, which he distributes amongst the following schools in Penrith:—The National School, School of Industry, Robinson's School, and the Sunday School.

With reference to the lost charities of Penrith, the Charity Commissioners observe, "It appears there are several legacies, amounting in the whole to about £200, which do not now exist as charities, and of which the disposition is not accounted for. It is probable that some of these were disposed of to the poor at the time they were received. On reference to the churchwardens' books, it appeared to us, that £40 arising from money belonging to the poor stock, in the hands of Mr. Bramwell, was, in the year 1764, applied in the purchase of a fire engine and building a poor house, and for other general purposes of the parish, and that in the same year, £10, left by Mrs. Jane Adderton, to the parish stock, was disposed of in like manner, and in 1782 £20, left by Mr. Wilkinson, in 1764, for the same purposes, was disposed of in the repairs of the church."

AMUSEMENTS, &c.

Sixty or seventy years ago, bull-baiting and cock-fighting appear to have been amongst the popular amusements of the inhabitants of this ancient town. The Penrith bulldogs were famous; and a notion prevailed that all bulls brought into the town ought to be baited. The bull-baits were originally held in Great Dockray, and sometimes in Sandgate. This barbarous sport was put an end to about the beginning of the present century. The cockpit appears to have been on the south side of the churchyard near the old Catholic chapel.

Penrith formerly had its "Well Sundays." These were four in number, and were attended by a large concourse of young people of both sexes. The first of these meetings took place on the first Sunday in May, at Skirsgill; the second on the Sunday following at Clifton; the third, on the third Sunday, at the Giants' Caves; and the fourth, on the fourth Sunday in the month, at Dickey Bank Well. The visitors filled their bottles with water at the respective wells, mixed the same with Spanish juice, and drank with each other. From the many quarrels which took place on these occasions, and the bad consequences which ensued, Dr. Robinson and the late Lord Lonsdale interfered, and put a stop to their annual occurrence.

REMARKABLE PERSONS.

Among the remarkable persons born in Penrith we may mention the following:—

Benjamin Holme, a minister of the Society of Friends, who was born in 1682, and died at Swansea in 1749. He published the following works:—"Testimony against Mixed Marriages," 1717; "Life and Trials of B. H.," 1749; "Serious Call to all People to Turn to the Spirit of Christ in Themselves;" and "A Collection of the Epistles, and Works of B. H.," 1754.

William Calvin, painter, born in the latter part of the seventeenth or early in the eighteenth century. He appears to have died in London.

Ann Calvin, daughter of the William just mentioned, was born at Penrith in 1747. She appears to have excelled as a painter of plants and flowers, and her skill is highly eulogised by Hutchinson.

Isaac Ritson was born at Eamont Bridge in 1761. He was of Quaker parentage, and became celebrated for classical and mathematical knowledge. He commenced the study of medicine in Edinburgh, from which place he removed to London, with the intention of completing his medical education. While in London he published a translation of Homer's "Hymn to Venus," and wrote critiques on medical works for the "Monthly Review." He also translated Hesiod's "Theogony," and wrote several essays on moral and philosophical subjects, with other works, which were never published. He died in London in 1789, in the 27th year of his age.

James Clark, author of "A Survey and Description of the Lakes of Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire," which is highly prized, was an innkeeper at Penrith.

Charles Graham, a mechanic, published in 1778, "Miscellaneous Pieces in Prose and Verse," some of which are in the Cumberland dialect.

Henry Dixon, solicitor, to whom the parish of Penrith is much indebted for his "Account of Donations for Pious, Charitable, and other Public Purposes, at Penrith," published in 1831.

George Bell, the author of a small volume of poems, published in 1835.

John and Thomas Gaskin, father and son, the former of whom, though originally a weaver, and subsequently a shoemaker, became a proficient in mathematics, astronomy, and natural philosophy. For Sir James South he made a powerful reflecting telescope, which was long used in the observatory of that astronomer at Kensington. Thomas Gaskin, who was second wrangler at Cambridge in 1831, is the author of several valuable papers connected with mathematics.

Jacob Thompson, painter, is another of the men of whom Penrith may well be proud. He studied the theory of optics and perspective under the direction of the John Gaskin just mentioned. In early life he was apprenticed as a house and sign painter, but on becoming his own master devoted his sole attention to the fine arts; in the meantime doing as much in the way of sign painting as was requisite for his support, but soon found a friend and patron in the late Earl of Lonsdale. His paintings may now be seen in the mansions of the nobility and gentry, and several of them have been engraved. Mr. Thompson is still in the full enjoyment of his powers, and it is to be hoped will yet attain to high honours and excellence. Mr. Walker tells us, "The sign board on the top of Kirkstone Pass is said to have been painted by the author of 'Belshazzar's Feast,' and there is yet one sign board in Penrith which was produced by the author of 'The Highland Bride,' and 'The Highland Ferry Boat.'"

ETIMOLOGY.

Carleton is a hamlet and township one mile south-by-east of Penrith. Its area is 447 acres; its rateable value £820. Carleton Hall, the property of Frederick Cowper, Esq., is a plain modern building, surrounded by pleasant walks and grounds, which are intersected by the river Eamont. The manor of Carleton and its various possessors will be found described at page 591.

Eamont Bridge is a hamlet adjoining Carleton, one mile south of Penrith, and comprised in Netherend township. A bridge appears to have existed here as early as the year 1425, for we learn that it was at that time in a dangerous state, and Thomas Langley, bishop of Durham, granted forty days' indulgence to all those who, having gone to confession and communion, should contribute towards the construction of a new stone bridge.

Plumpton Head is a hamlet and township on the High road, three miles north of Penrith. Its area is 1,149 acres, and its rateable value £711 15s.

On a hill to the northeast of Penrith stands the Beacon, a structure of red freestone; the keystone of the arch which supports the roof, bears the date 1719. Beacons are mentioned in our annals at a very early period; and it is very probable that beacon fires were lighted upon this hill from the earliest times. The last time their warning flames were seen was on the occasion of the rising of 1745, when the Highlanders were retreating through Westmoreland. "Previous to the enclosure of the commons," says Mr. Walker, "the Beacon Hill was a red, barren waste, full of sandholes, and dreary to look upon." The wall which divided the enclosed land from the common on the east of Penrith, extended across the breast of the hill, just above the Scaws (a portion of it is still in existence) and above the site of Brent House, the seat of Thomas Scott, Esq. There was a large pond in the Flatt, and the Fell Yat opened into the common below the parish pinfold. On the Fell, a portion of which was covered with whins, stood a solitary tree—a sycamore—though always known by the name of the Round Thorn, the adopted name of the house, the residence of John Unsworth, Esq., near which it still stands, in the centre of a plantation.¹

A short distance from Edenhall, on the banks of the river Edmont, and near its confluence with the Eden, are the remarkable excavations known as the Giant's Caves. These caves, three in number, are cut out of solid red sandstone, as is the flight of steps descending thereto. No anchorite could have fixed upon a place more perfect for its solitude. Even now, the only building to be seen is the lonely and ancient church of St. Ninian, within the walls of which rest the remains of the parents and three of the brothers of the illustrious statesman—Lord Brougham. The cave nearest the confluence of the rivers extends under the rock about fifteen feet, is in width about seventeen feet, and in height about nine feet. Around the bottom is a solid stone bench, of an elliptic form; here, also, was formerly a table of the same material. Near this cave, but further from the confluence, is one of smaller dimensions, and at a short distance from the latter, is one extending under the rock about forty-eight feet, in width about twenty-four feet, and in height about seven feet. These caves—doubtless excavated to form a hermitage,² and in later times probably used as the resort of robbers—have, by fabulous tradition, been converted into the abode of Ewan Casario, who has enjoyed both a real and fabulous existence, being connected with Castle Hewen and Ewanrigg; during the former, and during the latter with the Giant's Grave, in Penrith churchyard, where he was buried, his stature being fifteen feet, the entire length between the pillars. "Having once passed the rubicon of fable, the Giant's Caves were appropriated as his residence," where he sat on a stone or stretched himself at ease, as the caves were not sufficiently high to allow him to stand upright. He then "became a giant of doubtful character, a kind of knight errant," who killed monster, man, and beast, and dragged them away to his den. But it is probable we have here the engrafting of a hero tradition on that of a giant: for these caves are also said to have been the abode of one Isis, who seized men and cattle, and thereupon indiscriminately satisfied the cravings of his appetite. This place of ill-fame has thus been named both Isis Parlis, and Sir Hugh's Parlour, the latter being, apparently, an interpretation of the former, and Sir Hugh representing Ewan himself. According to a tradition still extant, a fair lady from somewhere or other, where the fame of the giant had never reached, went down to walk on the river bank, and unconscious of her danger, approached the cave of this dreadful being. She was seen by the lurking monster, who suddenly issued from his den to seize her. Terror-stricken at the sight, the lady executed a most tremendous step across a wide cleft in the rocky bank, opening on the river beneath, and the giant in the act of pursuing her missed his footing, and broke his neck. Such was his end. The opening in the rock over which the lady so providentially passed is called the Maiden's Step.³ Near this step is the effigy of the maiden, sculptured in the face of the rock. She is in a running posture, bending eagerly forward, but her head has been disfigured by some idle person, who might have employed his time to a much better purpose. "A ballad of Percy's collection has been supposed to be illustrative of the Giant's Caves. According to this composition, the hero of which is Lancelot du Lac, the caves would have been the residence of one Tarquin, who held in captivity three score and four knights of the Round Table, and very obligingly kept a copper basin, to serve as a bell, hanging near his den. He was killed by Sir Lancelot. But the conjectural appropriation of this ballad is solely founded on the already conjectural name of King Arthur's Round Table in the neighbourhood."²

¹ More a soldier has been tied up to the Round Thorn to receive punishment; for after the militia riots, Penrith, for several years, was scarcely ever cleared troops, and the Round Thorn was generally the place of punishment. The cause which led to the riots was as follows:—A ballot was to take place for the supplementary militia. The Alston Moor miners and Fell siders were dissatisfied respecting the numbered men to be raised. They therefore rose in a body, marched to Penrith, entered the magistrates' office, tore up the books and lists, and then attacked Mr. Wainwright at Cardston Hall, who was one of the magistrates, and pelted him with stones a great part of the way home. Troops were immediately despatched to the scene of the riots, and the ballot, after their arrival, took place amidst murmur of dissent, but without any further breach of the peace.

² Note to "Cumberland and Westmoreland, Ancient and Modern."

³ "Cumberland and Westmoreland, Ancient and Modern."

² See underland and Westwoodland, Ancient and Modern.

RENWICK PARISH.

Renwick parish, anciently Ravenwick, is bounded on the north by the parish of Kirkoswald, and on the other sides by the stream Ravenbeck. It comprises no dependent townships. The soil is mostly of a gravelly nature, and, considering its contiguity to the fell, rather fertile. In the year 1814 an act was passed for the enclosure of the parish. Coal is found here, and is worked by Mr. Thomas Dixon on Thackmoor Fell.

The area of Renwick is 4,240 acres, and its rateable value £3,178 2s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 201; in 1811, 277; in 1821, 361; in 1831, 375; in 1841, 319; and in 1851, 316; who are chiefly resident in the village of Renwick and Scalehouses, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. Penrith and Alston are the markets attended.

The first possessors of Renwick on record are the Staveleys, who appear to have settled here shortly after the Conquest, for we find that it was granted by Henry I. to Adam de Staveley and Margaret his wife. It subsequently became the property of Andrew de Hercla, earl of Carlisle, but having been forfeited to the crown by his attainder, it was given by Edward III. to Robert Eaglesfield, Queen Philippa's confessor, and founder of Queen's College, Oxford, who, in the year 1341, settled it upon his newly-founded college. The manor and parish are co-extensive, consisting of a few freeholders and customary tenants, who pay an annual customary rent and a twelpenny fine on change of tenant, according to an agreement made in 1664, by the provisions of which "the tenants are obliged to scour and cleanse the water-course to the lord's mill from the bottom up to the mill trough-head, and maintain the said mill with wall and thatch, and bring the millstones to the same, and grind their corn thereat, paying a twenty-fourth muleture; and that they shall cut down no timber trees, except what shall be set out to them by the steward for the necessary repairs of their houses."¹ The landowners are Queen's College, Oxford; Rev. William de Janey Lawson, John Nicholson, John Lowthian, and Thomas Sanderson. The landowners in this parish formerly paid a prescription in lieu of tithes, excepting the owners of one estate at Scalehouses, long held by the Tallantire family, who claimed exemption on account of an ancient owner having slain a cockatrice at some remote period.

The village of Renwick is situate on the west side of Thackmoor Fell, three miles east-north-east of Kirkoswald.

THE CHURCH.

Renwick church, dedicated to All Saints, is a neat structure in the Norman style, rebuilt in 1733, at the expense of the parishioners, and again in 1845, at a cost of £480, raised by voluntary subscription, aided by a grant of £40 from the Society for Building and Enlarging Churches. The chancel windows are filled with moulded stained glass, and are much admired. There are two bells, supposed to be very old, one of which bears the inscription "Ave Sancta Maria" (Hail Holy Mary). The living of Renwick was rectorial when the Valor of Pope Nicholas was taken, and was rated at £9 11s. 4d. It is said to have been subsequently appropriated to the abbey of Hexham, but of this grave doubts exist, as we find that at the dissolution of the religious houses it belonged to the abbey of St. Mary, at York, no mention whatever being made of Hexham. By letters patent, bearing date 24th February, 1578, Queen Elizabeth granted to Edward Earl of Lincoln, and Christopher Gowfe, gentleman, the church of Renwick, with its appurtenances, excepting the advowson of the church, and the bells and lead, to be held by them and their heirs as of the manor of East Greenwich, by fealty only, in free socage, and not in capite, rendering for the same 13s. 4d. annually. From the parties just named the rectory and tithes were conveyed in parcels. The benefice, now a perpetual curacy, was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £4, and although augmented by £600 from that bounty, and £200 given by the Countess-dowager Gower, is yet very small, being worth only about £90 a year. Lands were purchased with the sums just mentioned in the parishes of Alhingham and Alnstable. The parish register commences in 1649.

¹ Nicholson and Burn, vol. ii, p. 435.

Incumbents.—George Dawson, 1764; Thomas Robinson, 1806; John Watson, 1842.

The Wesleyans have a place of worship here, a small stone building, erected by subscription in 1817.

Renwick School is a neat stone building, erected by subscription in 1838. It is under inspection, and has an average attendance of forty scholars. This school reserves the interest of £5 a year from Tallantire's Charity.

Scale Houses is a hamlet in this parish, four miles north-east of Kirkoswald.

CHARITIES.

Percival's Gift.—William Percival, rather more than a century ago, left £10, the interest of which was to be given at Christmas and Easter, by the minister and churchwardens, to the poor. This charity is now in the hands of the Charity Commissioners.

Tallentire's Gift.—In the year 1775 Thomas Tallentire left £5, the interest of which he directed to be paid to the teacher of Renwick School. This charity being lent to a person in the parish of Croglin, is now lost.

GREAT SALKELD PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Lazonby, on the west by the parishes of Lazonby and Penrith, on the south by the parishes of Edenhall and Penrith, and on the east by the river Eden. The area of the parish is 3,724 acres, its rateable value £2,900. The population in 1801 was 285; in 1811, 289; in 1821, 103; in 1831, 145; in 1841, 141; and in 1851, 497; who chiefly reside in the villages of Great Salkeld and Salkeld Dyke, and whose principal employment is agriculture. The market usually attended is Penrith.

The manor of Great Salkeld was granted by Richard I. to Alan le Sauser, and this grant was confirmed by King John. It subsequently reverted to the crown, and has always been considered an ancient demesne. It was granted with Penrith to Alexander, king of Scotland, and from that time their history is inseparable. The Duke of Devonshire is now lord of the manor, which was granted by William III. to the Duke of Portland. In consequence of its connection with the Scottish crown it is often called Salkeld Regis. The landowners are Lieut. W. T. Youngson, R. W. Sanders, Esq.; John Lord, Esq.; John Bowstead, John Lamb, Thomas Scott, James J. Falter, Mrs. Sanderson, John Nelson, Messrs. Bell.

On the Fell, near Salkeld Dyke, are the remains of an ancient encampment, 400 yards in length, and four yards high; and adjoining it is a circular basin of water, about fifty yards in diameter, and from four to five in depth, which appears to have been excavated for the materials to form the encampment. About a quarter of a mile from this place are the remains of a fortified station, called Alkton Castle, formed of rough stones without mortar, and overgrown with bushes; at a little distance from it is a tumulus of stones, called a raise.

The village of Great Salkeld is pleasantly situated on the western banks of the picturesque vale of Eden, five miles north-north-east of Penrith, and three miles south of Kirkoswald. In the year 1360, the bridge over the Eden having fallen, Bishop Welton published an indulgence of forty days to all who should contribute to its repair. At the same time a monition was addressed to all the rectors, vicars, and chaplains of the diocese, warning them to pay over all money received for the reconstruction of the bridge to Roger de Salkeld, or Richard Hunter, whom he had appointed to collect the same, under pain of excommunication. The present bridge, which was erected about the year 1770, is remarkable for the combination of elliptic, semicircular, and pointed arches. During the civil wars Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart., and Sir Henry Fletcher, Bart., and their Royalist companions, were defeated near Salkeld by the Scottish troops under Leslie.

THE CHURCH.

Great Salkeld church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is an ancient structure, consisting of nave, chancel, tower, and south porch, which exhibit various styles of architecture. The tower has a turret at its south-east corner, and is four stories high, with an embattled parapet. It seems to have formerly served as a place of security and defence, similar to the churches of Burgh-on-Sands and Newton Arlosh, and its construction and arrangements are somewhat similar. The entrance is from the nave by a massy iron-grated door lined with oak. The ground floor is vaulted, with a dungeon beneath. The walls are six feet thick. Messrs. Lysons suppose that the tower was fortified about the time of Richard I. The lintel of the fireplace on the first story is formed of a gravestone, ornamented with a cross flange, on one side of which is a sword and girdle, on the other a hugh-born; there is also an inscription in Lombardic characters, but beyond the words "Rex de Ingleswood" nothing can be made out. It is supposed to refer to some one who was an officer of the forest of Ingleswood. In the chancel are the monumental effigies of a man with his hands clasped together on his bosom in an attitude of prayer, with this inscription, "Hic Jacet—Thomas de Calbeck, archidia. 1373," which was formerly under a recess in the south wall of the nave. In the tower are an old iron helmet, breast plate, and other pieces of armour. The nave is entered on the south by an elaborately-worked Norman doorway, much dilapidated, but receives some protection from the porch. The doorway on the north side of the church has been long walled up. The nave consists of three bays; and at the west end is a choir, with a front of carved wood. The choir has an octagonal window, in the perpendicular style. It is lighted on the north by a square window, and on the south by three square-headed windows. On the north wall are the royal arms, with the initials C. R., and the date 1661, showing that the arms were put up in the reign of Charles II. In the south wall are the remains of the ancient almeries of the church. In front of the rails before the communion table there is a gravestone with a cross flange and a sword, but it is much obliterated. Archdeacon Close lies buried in the chancel, under a large slab bearing a sepulchral cross, the black letter inscription, upon which (now obliterated) was as follows: "Orato pro anima Stephani Close, rectoris et archidiaconis, qui mortuus est, a. d. mccc. xx." A similar inscription formerly occupied a portion of one of the windows. On the outside wall of the porch is a stone, inscribed "Near this place lieth y^e body of Mr. William Dalston, fifth son of John Dalston, of Acorn Bank, Esq., who died y^e 21 of November, 1733, aged 89; and his granddaughter, Mrs. Mary Dalston, who died October y^e 27, 1779, aged 18 years. Requiescant in pace." In the churchyard are several gravestones, bearing crosses and other devices, now much defaced. Salkeld church is rectorial, and was annexed to the archdeaconry of Carlisle. At what period this annexation first took place we have now no means of knowing, but from the absence of any separate institutions or collations to the living, it is generally supposed that they have been united since the foundation of the see. The first mention of it in connection with the archdeaconry occurs in 1337, when a complaint was made to the Archbishop of York that William de Kendale held both the church of Salkeld and the archdeaconry of Carlisle. Since that date the connection of the rector and archdeaconry has been continuous up to 1855. The patronage of the living, which was originally in the crown, was given to the Bishop of Carlisle and his successors about the time of Edward I. Dr. Todd tells us that the rector pays 15s. to the dean and chapter for certain demesne lands which formerly belonged to the priory of Wetheral. Two-thirds of the living anciently belonged to Wetheral Priory, and the remainder to the rector. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas the church of Salkeld is entered at £12, and in the King's Book at £22 10s. 8d. It is now worth about £750 per annum. The parish first commenced in 1695.

References.—WILSON, R. H. 1911. Ann. Ent. Soc. Amer. 4: 299-307, 1912; 1913; Wilson, R. H. 1914. Ann. Ent. Soc. Amer. 7: 407-410, 1914; 1915; 1916; 1917; 1918; 1919; 1920; 1921; 1922; 1923; 1924; 1925; 1926; 1927; 1928; 1929; 1930; 1931; 1932; 1933; 1934; 1935; 1936; 1937; 1938; 1939; 1940; 1941; 1942; 1943; 1944; 1945; 1946; 1947; 1948; 1949; 1950; 1951; 1952; 1953; 1954; 1955; 1956; 1957; 1958; 1959; 1960; 1961; 1962; 1963; 1964; 1965; 1966; 1967; 1968; 1969; 1970; 1971; 1972; 1973; 1974; 1975; 1976; 1977; 1978; 1979; 1980; 1981; 1982; 1983; 1984; 1985; 1986; 1987; 1988; 1989; 1990; 1991; 1992; 1993; 1994; 1995; 1996; 1997; 1998; 1999; 2000; 2001; 2002; 2003; 2004; 2005; 2006; 2007; 2008; 2009; 2010; 2011; 2012; 2013; 2014; 2015; 2016; 2017; 2018; 2019; 2020; 2021; 2022; 2023; 2024; 2025; 2026; 2027; 2028; 2029; 2030; 2031; 2032; 2033; 2034; 2035; 2036; 2037; 2038; 2039; 2040; 2041; 2042; 2043; 2044; 2045; 2046; 2047; 2048; 2049; 2050; 2051; 2052; 2053; 2054; 2055; 2056; 2057; 2058; 2059; 2060; 2061; 2062; 2063; 2064; 2065; 2066; 2067; 2068; 2069; 2070; 2071; 2072; 2073; 2074; 2075; 2076; 2077; 2078; 2079; 2080; 2081; 2082; 2083; 2084; 2085; 2086; 2087; 2088; 2089; 2090; 2091; 2092; 2093; 2094; 2095; 2096; 2097; 2098; 2099; 2100; 2101; 2102; 2103; 2104; 2105; 2106; 2107; 2108; 2109; 2110; 2111; 2112; 2113; 2114; 2115; 2116; 2117; 2118; 2119; 2120; 2121; 2122; 2123; 2124; 2125; 2126; 2127; 2128; 2129; 2130; 2131; 2132; 2133; 2134; 2135; 2136; 2137; 2138; 2139; 2140; 2141; 2142; 2143; 2144; 2145; 2146; 2147; 2148; 2149; 2150; 2151; 2152; 2153; 2154; 2155; 2156; 2157; 2158; 2159; 2160; 2161; 2162; 2163; 2164; 2165; 2166; 2167; 2168; 2169; 2170; 2171; 2172; 2173; 2174; 2175; 2176; 2177; 2178; 2179; 2180; 2181; 2182; 2183; 2184; 2185; 2186; 2187; 2188; 2189; 2190; 2191; 2192; 2193; 2194; 2195; 2196; 2197; 2198; 2199; 2200; 2201; 2202; 2203; 2204; 2205; 2206; 2207; 2208; 2209; 2210; 2211; 2212; 2213; 2214; 2215; 2216; 2217; 2218; 2219; 2220; 2221; 2222; 2223; 2224; 2225; 2226; 2227; 2228; 2229; 2230; 2231; 2232; 2233; 2234; 2235; 2236; 2237; 2238; 2239; 2240; 2241; 2242; 2243; 2244; 2245; 2246; 2247; 2248; 2249; 2250; 2251; 2252; 2253; 2254; 2255; 2256; 2257; 2258; 2259; 2260; 2261; 2262; 2263; 2264; 2265; 2266; 2267; 2268; 2269; 2270; 2271; 2272; 2273; 2274; 2275; 2276; 2277; 2278; 2279; 2280; 2281; 2282; 2283; 2284; 2285; 2286; 2287; 2288; 2289; 2290; 2291; 2292; 2293; 2294; 2295; 2296; 2297; 2298; 2299; 2300; 2301; 2302; 2303; 2304; 2305; 2306; 2307; 2308; 2309; 2310; 2311; 2312; 2313; 2314; 2315; 2316; 2317; 2318; 2319; 2320; 2321; 2322; 2323; 2324; 2325; 2326; 2327; 2328; 2329; 2330; 2331; 2332; 2333; 2334; 2335; 2336; 2337; 2338; 2339; 2340; 2341; 2342; 2343; 2344; 2345; 2346; 2347; 2348; 2349; 2350; 2351; 2352; 2353; 2354; 2355; 2356; 2357; 2358; 2359; 2360; 2361; 2362; 2363; 2364; 2365; 2366; 2367; 2368; 2369; 2370; 2371; 2372; 2373; 2374; 2375; 2376; 2377; 2378; 2379; 2380; 2381; 2382; 2383; 2384; 2385; 2386; 2387; 2388; 2389; 2390; 2391; 2392; 2393; 2394; 2395; 2396; 2397; 2398; 2399; 2400; 2401; 2402; 2403; 2404; 2405; 2406; 2407; 2408; 2409; 2410; 2411; 2412; 2413; 2414; 2415; 2416; 2417; 2418; 2419; 2420; 2421; 2422; 2423; 2424; 2425; 2426; 2427; 2428; 2429; 2430; 2431; 2432; 2433; 2434; 2435; 2436; 2437; 2438; 2439; 2440; 2441; 2442; 2443; 2444; 2445; 2446; 2447; 2448; 2449; 2450; 2451; 2452; 2453; 2454; 2455; 2456; 2457; 2458; 2459; 2460; 2461; 2462; 2463; 2464; 2465; 2466; 2467; 2468; 2469; 2470; 2471; 2472; 2473; 2474; 2475; 2476; 2477; 2478; 2479; 2480; 2481; 2482; 2483; 2484; 2485; 2486; 2487; 2488; 2489; 2490; 2491; 2492; 2493; 2494; 2495; 2496; 2497; 2498; 2499; 2500; 2501; 2502; 2503; 2504; 2505; 2506; 2507; 2508; 2509; 2510; 2511; 2512; 2513; 2514; 2515; 2516; 2517; 2518; 2519; 2520; 2521; 2522; 2523; 2524; 2525; 2526; 2527; 2528; 2529; 2530; 2531; 2532; 2533; 2534; 2535; 2536; 2537; 2538; 2539; 2540; 2541; 2542; 2543; 2544; 2545; 2546; 2547; 2548; 2549; 2550; 2551; 2552; 2553; 2554; 2555; 2556; 2557; 2558; 2559; 2560; 2561; 2562; 2563; 2564; 2565; 2566; 2567; 2568; 2569; 2570; 2571; 2572; 2573; 2574; 2575; 2576; 2577; 2578; 2579; 2580; 2

The Free School.—A free school was founded here about the year 1513, and endowed with several small rents and manorial tines. The school-house was built by subscription in 1686, and, about 1710, had an endowment of £3 per annum. Its revenues were the subject of a long litigation, and were eventually lost. For some years previous to 1856 there was no school taught. In that year a new school was built through the instrumentality of the rector, which is an ornament to the village, and is conferring great benefit upon the children of the poor. It will accommodate ninety-six scholars, is under inspection, and is supported by voluntary subscriptions and quarter pence; average attendance sixty. A master's residence is attached.

The Poor Stock.—The poor stock of Great Salkeld parish amounts to £37, and produces annually 30s., which is distributed, at Christmas and Easter, by the rector and churchwardens, along with the money collected at the offertory.

At Salkeld Dyke is a Wesleyan chapel, a small stone building, erected in 1832.

The single houses bearing particular names are Numerick Hall, Beckbank, Burrell Green, Wolf Green

Gill, Coldkell, Hunter Hall, Inglewood Bank, Eden Lacy, &c.

This parish has been the birthplace of many eminent men, including Edward Law, first Lord Ellenborough, lord chief justice of the King's Bench, who was born in 1749, and died in 1818; the Rev. George Benson, D.D., an eminent dissenting minister, born in 1699, and died in 1762; Dr. Bowstead, bishop of Lichfield, born in 1801, died in 1843; the gallant Colonel Moorhouse, who was killed at the siege of Bangalore, in the East Indies; Rowland Wetherall, the celebrated mathematician and astronomer, and the Rev. Caleb Thomas.

Mr. John Lamb, of Burrell Green, in this parish, is in possession of an ancient brass dish resembling a shield, with an inscription round it, long said to have been to the following effect:—

"If this dish be sold or given, Farewell the luck of Burrell Green."

But which has been read by a friend of Mr. Lamb as follows:—

"Mary, Mother of Jesus, Saviour of Men."

SKELTON PARISH.

The parish of Skelton is bounded on the north by Hutton-in-the-Forest and Middlesceugh, on the west by Castle Sowerby, on the south by Greystoke, and on the east by Newton Reigny. It extends about two and a half miles from north to south, and five from east to west; the soil is generally wet and cold, with a substratum of clay. In 1767 an act of Parliament was obtained for enclosing the common, which comprised nearly 4,000 acres. The parish comprises the townships of Skelton, Lamouby, and Unthank, whose united area is 6,326 statute acres. The inhabitants are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and attend the Penrith markets.

SKELTON.

The area of this township is 2,002 acres, and its rateable value £1,136 18s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 270; in 1811, 285; in 1821, 332; in 1831, 348; in 1841, 314; and in 1851, 303.

Skelton, or Scaletown, is said to derive its name from the scales, shields, or little huts, which were formerly erected here for the shelter of cattle, large numbers of which were pastured here in ancient times. About the time of Henry I. the Boyvilles, lords of Levington, and owners of the manor, first erected a habitation here for themselves, and afterwards set some tenants on the land. It continued to be held by the Boyville family till the decease of Randolph de Levington. His daughter and heir, Hawise, wife of Sir Eustace Baliol, Knt., died without issue, and the estates of the Boyvilles in Levington, Kirk Andrews, and Skelton were divided among her six aunts, the sisters of her father, Randolph. The share of Euphemia, the eldest, wife of Richard Kirkbride, continued to be possessed by her descendants for six generations, after which Walter Kirkbride sold it to Robert Parving, whose nephew sold it to John Denton of Cardew, in whose posterity it remained for four descents, until they sold it to the Southaiks, who held it for a few descents, and then John Southaik sold it to the customary tenants. The second part became the property of Margery, wife of Robert de Hampton, whose grandson, William Lockard, sold it to John Seaton. The son of the latter forfeited his right to Edward I., who gave it to Robert de Clifford, lord of Westmoreland, whose posterity continued to hold it till George Earl of Cumberland sold it to the inhabitants. The third portion was allotted to Isabel, wife of Patrick Southaik, from whom it descended to John Southaik, who sold it to the customary tenants. Walter Corry held the fourth part in right of his wife Eva, but their son and heir taking part with Robert Bruce and the Scots against the King of England, forfeited his estate, which was granted to William Marnion. Julian, the fifth co-heir, the wife of Patric Trump, had issue a son of the same name, who sold his share of the manor to Sir Robert Tilliol, Knt. The sixth portion fell to Agnes, who was married to Sir Walter Twinham, Knt., to whom she bore Adam, father of Walter the younger, who sold it to Walter Kirkbride. Among the knights' fees in Cumberland in the 35th Henry VIII. (1543-4) we find John Southaik, who held fourteen messuages, eighty acres of arable land, twenty acres of meadow, 200 acres of pasture, 100 acres of wood, and a mill, with the appurtenances, in Skelton, of the king in capite by knights' service, with homage and fealty. It is also stated that the vill of Skelton paid yearly to the king 4s. 6d. cornage, by the hands of the sheriff of Cumberland. In 1565 Sir Thomas Dacre, Knt., lord of Gilsland, and Elizabeth his wife, conveyed the of £500 above-mentioned, and bequeathed £1,000 in lieu thereof, to the same persons and upon the same trusts. The school, situated in the village of Skelton, was rebuilt and enlarged by subscription in 1849, at a cost of nearly £300, and is now a neat and commodious structure in the Elizabethan style, capable of accommodating about seventy children. It is under government inspection, and has an average attendance of fifty-five. There is a house for the teacher adjoining the school. In consideration of the charities above-mentioned, thirty of the poorest children of the parish are taught free.

Wilson's Gift.—Thomas Wilson, by deed, dated December 10th, 1584, granted to trustees an annuity or yearly rent of 20s. arising out of the manor of Skelton, that they should pay the same, at the parish church porch of Skelton, between the hours of eight and eleven o'clock on the Sunday next after the feast of the Annunciation (March 25th) to and amongst the poor people of the parish.

Lawson's Gift.—Thomas Lawson, by will, dated February 6th, 1735, bequeathed to the poor of Skelton 20s. a year, to be distributed every Good Friday, to all such decayed families as should not be in receipt of parish relief; and he directed the said money to be paid out of his freehold lands in Little Salkeld Fields to the overseers of Skelton, three weeks before Good Friday.

Dacre's Dole, and Brougham's Gift.—By an entry in the churchwardens' book, under the date of 1744, it appears that there was the sum of £100, called Dacre's Dole, then lent to several persons at interest; and also £5 in the hands of two persons, which is stated to be Mr. Brougham's legacy. The interest of these two sums, amounting to £4 8s. 9d. a year, is divided regularly on St. Thomas' Day amongst the poor not receiving relief.

Pearson's Gift.—The sum of £10 was left by John Pearson for the use of the poor, which it is understood was, long ago, lent on bond to a person of the name of Robinson, who possessed property in this parish. At his death it was found that his property was mortgaged for its full value, so that there was nothing left to discharge this debt, and the charity was consequently lost.

The proceeds of the above-mentioned charities are divided amongst the poor of the parish, £2 on Good Friday, and £4 8s. 6d. to the poor widows of the parish on St. Thomas' Day. The poor of Skelton also participate in the charity of Richardson of Whamhead.

In connection with the school is a library, established in 1846, which contains about 400 volumes. It is supported by about twenty members, who pay an annual contribution of four shillings each.

LAMONBY.

The area of Lamonby is 2,454 acres; its rateable value is £1,018. The population in 1801 was 244; in 1811, 236; in 1821, 274; in 1831, 271; in 1841, 246; and in 1851, 268; who are chiefly collected in the village of Lamonby.

The manor of Lamonby included the estate of the Seatons, in Skelton (see page 622), and passed by the same title; but the demesne called Lamonby Hall was separated and sold to Leonard Wilkinson, about the year 1680. It was subsequently held by the Graysons, and is now the property of Thomas Hutton, Esq.

Ellonby Hall is now a farm house. A manorial court of Sir H. R. F. Vane is held here annually.

Hardrigg Hall, formerly the seat of the Southaick family, and now the property of Sir R. H. F. Vane, is a farm house. To the south of the building are the remains of an old tower, one side of which is still standing.

Lamonby Hall is also a farm house, the property of Thomas Hutton, Esq., of Penrith. For some time after the Reformation there was a Catholic chapel in this hall; and in the reign of Elizabeth, when there was so much religious persecution, one Juliana Buckle, of Yorkshire, purchased this hall, on account, as it is said, of there being a chapel there. She also kept a priest at the hall as long as she could with any degree of safety. About seven years ago, Mr. Hutton's workmen, when repairing the building, found a piscina, which is supposed to have been used in the old chapel.

UNTHANK.

The area of this township is 2,413 acres, and its rateable value £1,097 15s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 215; in 1811, 235; in 1821, 252; in 1831, 235; in 1841, 238; and in 1851, 205.

The village of Unthank is five and a half miles north-west of Penrith.

Laithes is a small village in this township, four miles north-west of Penrith. In the neighbourhood is The Laithes, the property and seat of J. Parkin, Esq.

Scales Hall, for many years the seat of the family of Brougham, from whom it passed by marriage to the families of Lamplugh and Dykes, is now a farm house, the property of Mrs. Dykes, of Dovenby.

Eskdale Ward.

ESKDALE WARD comprises the most northern division of the county. It is of an irregular triangular form, bounded on the north and north-west by Scotland, on the south-west by Cumberland Ward, on the south by Leath Ward, and on the east by Northumberland. Its length is about twenty-four miles, and its breadth twenty miles. Though the south-east of the ward and some other portions of it are wild and mountainous, it contains many fertile plains and rich valleys, well watered by the rivers Esk, Eden, Galt, Irthing, Liddel, Line, Kingswater, Kersing, Sark, and a number of smaller streams. Coal, freestone, and limestone are found here; and on the river Irthing is the celebrated Gilsland Spa. From its close proximity to Scotland, this part of Cumberland was, for a considerable period, the scene of rapine, plunder, and devastation, ample evidence of which is still visible in the numerous forts, towers, and encampments which are everywhere met with. By the re-arrangement of wards made in 1893, Eskdale Ward lost the parish of Crosby-upon-Eden, the whole of Stanwix parish, except the two townships of Cango and Stainton, the townships of Great Corby and Warwick Bridge in Wetheral parish, and the extra-parochial district of Kingmoor, all of which are now in Cumberland Ward. Eskdale Ward at present comprises the parishes of Arthuret, Bewcastle, Brampton, Castle Carrock, Cannew, Cumwhitton, Nether Denton, Upper Denton, Earlam, Hayton, Irthington, Kirkandrews-on-Esk, Kirkintoun, Lanercost Abbey, Sealeby, Stapleton, and Walton, as also the extra-parochial district of Carlatton.

ARTHURET PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the west, north, and east by the parish of Kirkandrews, and lies between the rivers Esk, Line, and Liddel. The soil of about half the parish consists of a fine, deep, blackish loam, in some parts intermixed with sand, especially near the river Line, capable of producing every kind of grain, clover, grass, and potato, in the greatest perfection. The interior of the parish consists of good, light soil, and a portion, which was formerly an extensive waste, has been brought into a very productive state through the exertions of the last and the present owners of Netherby. The Netherby estate comprises nearly the whole of this parish and that of Kirkandrews. By the exertions of the Rev. Robert Graham, D.D., who died in 1782, it has been changed from a sterile and unprofitable tract, to a rich, fertile, and beautiful demesne. By his improvements, the rents have largely increased, and the wealth and happiness of his tenants augmented in a much greater proportion; and, what was still better, it is said that "he saw them, as it were, metamorphosed from an ignorant, quarrelsome, and disorderly rabble, into an intelligent, peaceable, regular, and respectable class of men." Since 1849 the agriculture of this district has been still further improved; the estates of Sir J. G. R. Graham have nearly all undergone a complete drainage; and the farm-houses are very commodious and well-constructed dwellings. The woods and plantations are now in a thriving and luxuriant condition. The parish comprises the townships of Longtown, Freckonhill, Lineside, and Netherby. It includes part of the ancient parish of Easton, or Eiston, which has long been annexed to it and Kirkandrews; and, in 1624, was stated to be bounded on the north-north-west and north-east by Scotland; on the east by Bewcastle, Stapleton, and Kirkintoun; and on the south and south-west by the river Lexin, and parts of the parishes of Rockliffe and Kirkintoun. The parish of Kirkandrews was severed from Arthuret by letters patent of King Charles I.

LONGTOWN.

The area of the township of Longtown is 2,538 acres, and its rateable value £3,648 8s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 1,335; in 1811, 1,579; in 1821, 1,812; in 1831, 2,049; in 1841, 1,990; and in 1851, 2,234.

THE TOWN OF LONGTOWN.

The market town of Longtown is situated in 55° 1' north latitude, 2° 56' west longitude, distant nine miles north-by-west from Carlisle, and 309 miles north-north-west from London. The population in 1851 was 2,142; of whom 1,017 were males, and 1,125 females, inhabiting 372 houses; twenty-one houses being uninhabited, and four in process of erection. Longtown has a very respectable appearance; the streets are regular and spacious; the houses built in the modern style; and its situation is remarkable for its salubrity. The town stands on the south bank of the Esk, and on the west side of the Netherby estate, which is held on a tenure of building leases. The river Esk is crossed here by an excellent bridge of five arches. A bobbin mill gives some employment, and a little hand-loom weaving is carried on. The corn market is on Thursday. Hirings are held at Whitsuntide and Martinmas, but are mere assemblages for sports instead of for serious business, the Carlisle hirings serving for the entire district. There is a horse fair held on the Thursday before Whitsuntide. In 1688 there were only twelve houses in Longtown, built of turf or mud. The town hall was of freestone. There was then a considerable market, being the only one, as Mr. T. Denton observes, in all that country. Gas works were established here in 1857.

CHURCH AND CHAPELS.

Arthuret parish church, dedicated to St. Michael, stands on a beautiful eminence in the township of Longtown, about half a mile from the town. "It is presumed," says Hutchinson, "this point of land was called Arthur's Head, a name now corrupted to Arthuret, and engrafed on the parish." The present church was erected in 1609, with the assistance of "a charity brief," the preceding edifice "having been a mean, low, ruinous building, and often destroyed by the Scots." But the persons employed in the building having absconded with a considerable part of the money collected, the tower was left unfinished until the rectorship of Dr. Todd, through whose exertions the structure was completed. The church comprises nave, aisles, chancel, and tower, and contains some monuments of the Graham family, particularly that of Sir George Graham, Bart., who died in 1657 (son of Sir Robert Graham, the first baronet), and that of the Rev. Robert Graham, D.D., who died in 1782. In the churchyard is the tomb of Lieutenant William Graham, of the Moat, who died in 1657, aged 97; and a rude cross, with a pierced capital, near to which tradition says lie the remains of Archy Armstrong, jester to James I. and Charles I.¹ From the inquisitions ad quod damnum of the 2nd Edward III. we learn that the church of Arthuret was given in the reign of Henry I., by Turgis de Russdale, lord of the manor of Liddell, to the abbot and convent of Jedburgh, in Scotland, but by reason of the almost continual differences between the two kingdoms, that community seldom enjoyed it. In the year 1296 we find John Wake, lord of Liddell, exercising the right of patronage. The kings of England frequently presented; but the advowson has long been attached to the manor. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £1 2s. 1d., and certified to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as of the annual value of £687; it is now worth £900. The parish registers commence in 1610. The ancient parish of Easton, or Eston, now no longer known, is, as we have stated above, merged in the parishes of Arthuret and Kirk Andrews; the last mention of it in ecclesiastical records is in 1384, when John de Morton was presented to the rectory by the bishop. The tithes of Arthuret were commuted in 1849 for £841 0s. 4d., viz., Longtown £317 15s. 8d.; Lineside, £123 10s. 10d.; Breckonhill, £317 15s. 0d.; Netherby, £281 18s. 8d.

RECTORS.—Baldwin Wake, 1296; Thomas de Leicester, 1304; Thomas de Capella, 1304; Richard de Wethermeleek, 1312; John Aurifaber, —; John de Penrith, 1332; John de Pokelyngton, 1333; Ralph de Lepyngton, 1337; William de Ragenhill, 1354; William de Arthuret, 1354; Richard de Tissington, —; John de Rowland, 1361; John de Wyke, 1370; John Berwise, died 1565; Sir Michael Frysel, 1565; Cuthbert Curwen, resigned

¹Archibald Armstrong, commonly known by the name of Archy, who was fool, or more properly jester to James I., and his successor Charles I., is said to have been a native of this place, to which he retired after his disgrace at court, and where he died at an advanced age in 1672. The cause of his dismissal was the latitude of speech in which he indulged himself on occasion of the commotions in Scotland in 1638, which ensued on the attempt of introducing the English Liturgy into that kingdom. "It so happened," says Rushworth, "that on the 14th of the said Month, 1637-8, Archibald, the king's fool, said to his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, as he was going to the council table, 'What's feule now?' 'Doth not your grace hear the news from Strivein about the Liturgy?' with other words of reflection. This was presently complained of to the council which produced an order that Archibald Armstrong, the king's fool, for certain scandalous words of a high nature spoken by him against the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, his grace, and proved to be uttered by him by two witnesses, shall have his coat pulled over his head, and be discharged of the king's service, and banished the court; for which the Lord Chamberlain of the king's household is proposed and required to give order to be executed; and immediately ~~as~~ ^{the} same was put in execution."

1639; George Constable, 1639; George Usher, 1673; Hugh Todd, 1688; William Linsley, 1738; Robert Graham, 1755; John James, 1782; John James, 1786; — Babbington, 1786; Lewis Graham, 1790; William Graham, 1792.

The rectory was built in 1765, at a cost of £300, upon the site of an older structure.

The other places of worship in the town are—a Presbyterian chapel, erected in 1800, and a United Presbyterian chapel, built in 1834.

SCHOOLS.

A very excellent school was erected in Longtown in 1857, at a total cost of nearly £1,000. It is conducted on the principle of the British and Foreign School Society, combining religious instruction with a strict absence of sectarian teaching. There is a large and commodious residence for the teacher. There is adequate accommodation for 300 children; the average attendance (boys and girls) is 180. It is under government inspection, and conducted by a master, mistress, and four pupil teachers.

The school held in the Moot Hall is attended by about sixty children. In this school one child out of every three children of poor parents is taught free, in consideration of £8 allowed from Lady Widdrington's charity.

There is also a female school, supported by the rector, in which eighteen poor girls are taught free and partly clothed.

There are also schools in each of the other townships of the parish, each of which receives £4 a year from Lady Widdrington's Charity.

POOR-LAW UNION.

The Longtown Union Workhouse stands about two miles east of the town. It was erected in 1837, at a cost of £3,000, and is a large and convenient structure of hewn stone, capable of accommodating 150 paupers, but the average number in the house is eighty-five. Longtown Poor-law Union is divided into two sub-districts, High Longtown, comprising Stapleton, Solport, Trough, Belbank, Bewcastle, Nixons, Bailey, Bellbank, and Nichol Forest; and Low Longtown, which includes Moat Quarter, Middle Quarter, Nether Quarter, Netherby, Longtown, Breckonhill, Lineside, West Linton, Middle Quarter, Hethersgill, West Scaleby, and East Scaleby. The union comprises an area of 86,871 statute acres. Its population in 1851 was 9,696, of whom 4,899 were males, and 4,797 females. The number of uninhabited houses at the same period was 1,719, of uninhabited ninety-nine, and four were building. The total receipts of the union for the year ended Lady Day, 1859, amounted to £4,621 19s.; the expenditure for the same period was £3,598.

BRECKONHILL.

This township comprises an area of 4,555 acres, and its rateable value is £2,021 16s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 489; in 1811, 510; in 1821, 441; in 1831, 391; in 1841, 373; and in 1851, 365.

The manor of Breckonhill, or Bruckenhill, held under the manor of Arthuret, was, in 1688, the property of Mr. Richard Graham, a distant relation of Lord Preston. It now belongs to R. E. W. P. Standish, Esq., of Fairley Castle, Berks, whose relation, Rowland Stephenson, purchased it in 1752. On Mr. Standish's property there is an embattled tower, bearing date 1584. It adjoins the Breckonhill farm-house, and it is kept in good repair by the proprietor.

Breckonhill township extends from three to five miles east-north-east of Longtown, on the north side of the river Line.

At Chapel Flish, near the farm called Chapel Town, there was formerly a oratory, called the Chapel of Solom, in which, in the year 1343, a league between the Scotch and English, about fixing the limits of both kingdoms, was, in a solemn manner, sworn to and confirmed by commissioners appointed for that purpose.

The small hamlet of Eston, or Easton, anciently the capital of the parish, is in this township.

LINESIDE.

The area of Lineside is 1,444 acres, and its rateable value is £1,191 0s. 10d. In 1801 it contained 197 inhabitants, in 1811, 219; in 1821, 210; in 1831, 187; in 1841, 128; and in 1851, 181. This township lies on the banks of the Line, about two miles south-south-east of Longtown.

NETHERBY.

The area of Netherby township is 8,873 acres, and its rateable value is £2,607 6s. 8d. The population in 1801 was 397; in 1811, 385; in 1821, 490; in 1831, 326; in 1841, 368; and in 1851, 358. This township extends from one to four miles north-north-east of Longtown.

The barony of Lyddal or Liddell, extending over this parish and that of Kirk Andrews-upon-Esk, was given in the reign of Henry I., by Ranulph de Meschines, to Turgent Brundy (called in some records Turgis de Russedale), or Turgis Brinsdas, a Fleming. In the reign of King John it was in the baronial family of Stateville, or Estoteville, whose daughter, and eventually sole heiress, Joan, brought it in marriage to the baronial family of Wake. John Lord Wake died without issue in 1343; his only sister married Edmund Plantagenet, earl of Kent, whose daughter, Joan, became the wife of Edward the Black Prince. The barony of Liddell, in consequence, became vested in the crown, and appears to have been held as crown land, and as parcel of the honour of Dustanburgh (which honour was parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster) till the year 1604, when James I. granted "all that forest of Nichol, commonly called Nichol Forest, in the county of Cumberland, and in the borders of England towards Scotland, and also all those lordships and manors of Arthurth, Liddel, and Radlington, within the limits of the forest aforesaid, in the said county of Cumberland, parcel of the duchy of Lancaster; and also the fishery of the water of Esk, in the county aforesaid, with all messuages, mills, houses, and hereditaments whatsoever, within the said forest, or to the said forest or manors aforesaid belonging, or in any wise appertaining," to George Clifford, earl of Cumberland, subject to a fee farm rent of £100. In like manner the said King James, by letters patent bearing date the 31st day of March, in the eighth year of his reign (1610), granted to Francis Earl of Cumberland "all those lands called the Debateable Lands, in the county of Cumberland, abutting upon part of the sea called Solway Sands, towards the south, the river of Sarke towards the west, the Scotch dyke towards the north, and the river of Esk towards the east; extending in length, by estimation, five miles, and in breadth three miles; and containing in quantity 2,895 acres of meadow and arable land called Known Grounds, 400 acres of marsh lands, 2,635 acres of pasture, and 1,470 acres of mossy grounds, in all 5,400 acres; and two water corn-mills, within the limits and metes aforesaid; and also the advowson of the church of Kirk Andrews; to hold to the said earl and his heirs, under the yearly fee farm rent of £150." These estates were afterwards sold by Francis Earl of Cumberland to Richard Graham, or Graham, Esq., to whom, in 1629, King Charles remitted a moiety of the above-mentioned rent. The barony of Liddell continued to be held by the descendants of this Richard till the year 1739, when Catherine, one of the sisters of the first Viscount Preston, who had married William Lord Widdrington, became eventually possessed of the before-mentioned estates, and died in 1757, having bequeathed them to the Rev. Robert Graham, second son of her uncle, William Graham, dean of Carlisle, from whom they have descended to the present lord, the Right Hon. Sir James Robert George Graham, Bart., of Netherby.

Netherby Hall, the seat of the lord of Netherby, is delightfully situated on the east bank of the river Esk. The surrounding scenery of this splendid villa is picturesquely and sublimely grand. An extensive lawn opens in its front, diversified by lofty trees, and encircled by a noble sweep of the river Esk, while the ornamental buildings that appear on every hand display at once the taste of the proprietor and enhance the grandeur of the prospect. The house stands on the site of a Roman station. The nucleus of the seat of Sir James Graham is a border tower, with walls of great thickness. These walls were doubtless erected at the expense of the ramparts and buildings of the camp, within which the mansion is situate. The form of the station cannot now be satisfactorily defined; but the number and importance of the coins, altars, and sculptures, which have been found within it, prove that it was a place of consequence during the period of Roman occupation. The site, though not greatly elevated, commands an extensive prospect in every direction. The bank on its western side, which slopes down to the valley of the Esk, is said to have been washed in ancient days by the waters of the Solway. Among the many important inscriptions discovered here, is one to Hadrian, closely resembling those which have been found at Milking Gap, Bradley, and other places. The stone has long been lost, but in Gough's "Camden" the inscription is given thus:—

IMP. CAES. TRA.
HADRIANO
AVG.
LEG. II. AVG. F.

Some very fine sculptured stones, found in the station, are preserved on the spot. Amongst them is one on which is figured a youth standing in a niche, a mural crown is on his head, a cornucopia in his left hand, and a patera, from which he pours a libation on an altar, in his right; it is one of the finest carvings that is to be met with in the north. From the grooves which are cut in the lower part of the stone, it has been concluded that the figure has been formerly set in masonry, perhaps to adorn the approach of some temple. Gordon supposed the figure to be intended for Hadrian; Lysons think that it was intended for the "Genius of the Wall of Severus." Other stones bearing the figures of the Dea Matres have been found here. Netherby is supposed to be the Castra Exploratorum of the Second Itinerary of Antoninus, which was garrisoned by a Numerus Exploratorum. Its situation is very suitable for an exploratory garrison; and its distance from Carlisle on the one hand, and from Middleby, in Dumfriesshire, on the other, nearly corresponds with the distance at which it is set down in the Itinerary both from Luguballium and Blatum Belgium.

Graham of Netherby.

This family is derived from the Hon. Catherine Graham, surviving aunt and heir of Charles, last Viscount Preston, and wife of William Lord Widdrington of Blankney, dying in 1757, without issue, devised her estates to her cousin,

The Rev. ROBERT GRAHAM, D.D., grandson of Sir George Graham, second baronet of F.R.S., who married Frances, daughter of Sir Reginald Graham, of Norton Conyers, and had

- i. Charles, who died before his father, leaving an only daughter, married to John Webb Westring Esq.
- ii. JAMES, first baronet.
- iii. Fanny, relict of Richard Worsley Esq., who married Johanna, daughter of Humphrey Gale, Esq., and was father of Fanny Graham Esq. H.B.M. Esq. Baroness married at the age of 17 to William Evelyn Esq. Esq. of Barrow, Cumberland, and has issue.

William Graham, Esq., married Dora, daughter of Richard Henry Holland, Esq., by Dorothea, eldest daughter of the late Nathaniel Bland, Esq., of Randaile Park, Leatherhead, Surrey, and Bally Carbery Castle, Cahirciveen, Kerry, and has issue.

He was succeeded by his eldest surviving son, JAMES GRAHAM, Esq., of Netherby, who was created a baronet 28th of December, 1782. Sir James married, in 1785, Catherine, eldest daughter of John, seventh earl of Galloway, by whom (who died in September, 1836) he had issue,

- i. JAMES ROBERT GEORGE, present baronet.
- ii. William, in holy orders.
- iii. Charles.
- iv. George, married Maria, youngest daughter of the late Edward Russell, Esq.
- v. Elizabeth Frances, died in 1810.
- vi. Elizabeth Anne, married March 4th, 1816, to the Rev. William Waddilove, only son of the Dean of Ripon.

- vii. George, married 1821, to Sir George Musgrave, Bart., Brayton, co. Cumberland.
- viii. Georgiana Susan.
- ix. Harriett Anne, married 10th July, 1822, to Captain Frederick Madon, of the East India Company's service.
- x. Charlotte, married 26th June, 1828, to Sir George Musgrave, Bart.
- xi. Caroline.

He died in 1824, and was succeeded by his eldest son, The Right Hon. Sir James Graham, Bart., M.P., of Netherby, co. Cumberland; a privy councillor; born 1st June, 1792; married, 8th July, 1819, Fanny Callendar, youngest daughter of Colonel and Lady Elizabeth Callender, of Crayford and Ardkinglass, and has issue,

- i. FREDERICK GEORGE, born 2nd year, 1820; late 17th Lancers, married, 26th October, 1852, Lady Jane Hermione St. Maur, eldest daughter of Edward Adolphus Duke of Somerset, and has two daughters, Margaret Frances, and Violet Hermione.
- ii. Madise Reginald, born 15th February, 1833.
- iii. James Stanley, born 13th April, 1836.
- iv. Constance Helena.
- v. Mabel Violet, married, 7th August, 1851, to the Hon. William Ernest Duncombe.
- vi. Helen.

CREATED, 1782, BARONET, 1784.
Arms.—Or, on a chief, three escallopes, of the field.
Crest.—A crown surmounting an eagle.
Motto.—Reason contents me.

Hallburn and Slealands are hamlets in this township.

BEWCASTLE PARISH.

This parish of Bewcastle is bounded on the north by Nichol Forest and Scotland, on the west by Stapleton parish, on the south by that of Lawcast, and on the east by Northumberland. It comprises the townships of Bewcastle, Bailey, Bellbank, and Nixons, whose united area is 30,000 acres.

BEWCASTLE.

The rateable value of this township is £1,465 1s. The population in 1801 was 173; in 1811, 198; in 1821, 188; in 1831, 177; in 1841, 181; and in 1851, 180. A survey for the enclosure of Grey Fell common was made in the year 1819; a copy of the award and plan is deposited in Bewcastle church. The award was confirmed by the Enclosure Commissioners January 7th, 1850. The population chiefly reside in detached farm-houses and cottages. There is no town or village in the township. The people are industrious and temperate in their habits, there being no inn or beershop in the township. The language appears to be intermixed with a great number of Danish and Norse words. Many of the names of places in this district seem to have been taken from Norse appellatives, raising a probability that there has been a Norwegian settlement along the edges of these hills. A public road to New Castleton, in Scotland, passes through this township. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants. A company was formed about the year 1848 to search for lead and iron at White Preston, on the Grey Fell Common, but did not succeed. They opened a shaft of some ancient workings, and drove a lead into the north side of the hill, but found nothing more valuable than limestone. Several tracings of ancient workings for lead may still be seen on the Grey Fell, and on the Highgrains Waste, especially near Hazelgill Pike. There is a limekiln at the Banks for public sale, but limestone is so abundant in this and the other townships in the parish of Bewcastle, that almost every farm has its own limekiln. There is some excellent grazing land in the township, especially on the Demesne and Park farms, with a large quantity of unimproved common on Grey Fell. The western part of the township is cultivated in farms, producing good crops of corn and meadow hay; the eastern portion is a strong clayey moorland, covered with stunted heather, called the Grey Fell, which lies very high, and from the summit of which the water runs both to the east and to the west. The Back Bone of England passes through this and the adjoining townships. The Helm wind is frequently felt in a moderate degree in the vale of Bewcastle. Brampton is the market usually attended, and sometimes that at Carlisle.

An old British road, called the Maiden Way, afterwards converted into a Roman road (probably the Tenth Iter of the Itinerary of Antoninus) passed through this township. It entered it at the Dollerline, passed the Braes, the Hill, and the Crew, at each of which places we find traces of ancient buildings. It quitted the township at the Crew Burn. A branch of this road passed on the west side of the station at Bewcastle, over the Hall Hills, through the Peelohill and the Park grounds, and left the township at Wellington Gate, apparently aiming for Tinnies Hill, in Scotland. Another ancient road has gone from the Braes to the north-west, passed the Pikefoot, the Parkhead, the Parknook, and over the Bothrigg Hill. There is a large tumulus—a very fine ship barrow—in the Peelohill ground.

We are indebted to the Rev. John Maughan, rector, for the following communication respecting the Roman station at Bewcastle:—

“Bewcastle (from its irregular shape, something between an oval and a circle, and perhaps also from its proximity to the old British road called the Maiden Way,¹ which passes it, and which was probably the Tenth Iter of the Itinerary of Antoninus), has been considered by some to have been a Pictish or British encampment before it was occupied by the Romans. Horsley thinks that the Roman name of the station was Apiatorium. Mr. Hodgson, in his ‘History of Northumberland,’ supposes that it may have been Banna. I will venture to suggest that as Whitley Castle appears to be the Alionis of the Tenth Iter of the Itinerary, then Bewcastle will be the Galava,² and Castleton the Glammaventa of the said Iter.

“It is probable that Agricola, as he proceeded northwards in his career of conquest, would adopt the old British roads, as convenient for carrying out his plans of aggression, and that he would convert them into Roman roads as speedily and efficiently as possible.

¹ The word Maiden, or Madrian, is an old Celtic or British appellation, and signifies raised, or elevated. Hence the term Maiden Way simply means a raised road or highway.

² The name Galava is still retained in the district, under the corrupted form of Whitveval, or Wulheval, which was formerly applied to the valley in which Bewcastle is placed, and also the north side of the parish of Lamerross, which adjoins it. I have treated more at large on this subject in a memoir on the Maiden Way published in the ‘Archæological Journal,’ vol. xi., p. 390, 1854.”

As his troops advanced, suitable stations would be seized upon and occupied as sites for fortresses, which would thus be placed one in advance of another, and afford mutual support to each other—Bewcastle serving as an advanced post to Whitley Castle, and Castleton taking the same position with regard to Bewcastle. The earliest period at which we can suppose that Bewcastle was thus occupied as a fortress by the Romans will be about A.D. 79; for it is generally admitted that Agricola seized upon this district and placed his garrisons here in his second campaign, i.e., about A.D. 79.

“The station at Bewcastle has been placed on the nearly level surface of a low and irregularly-shaped eminence: its form has been hexagonal, but its sides are unequal. Their respective lengths are as follows:—South-west side, 108 yards; south, 78 yards; south-east, 95 yards; north-east, 135 yards; north, 146 yards; and north-west, 83 yards. The station, therefore, would occupy about six acres of ground. The outer wall of the station appears to have been of considerable thickness, but it is now in ruins, and covered with turf. In some places it is nearly level with the ground, but it still shows distinctly the site of the wall. It appears to have been protected by an outer rampart and a small fosse or covered way. The south side would also be defended by the steep bank of the river Kirkbeck. On the north side of the station there are some traces of ramparts or buildings at a small distance from it, which appear to have been a procestrium, or advanced post of defence. The south-east side has declined a little from its original elevation, the river having made encroachments here at different times and washed away the bottom of the bank, which is a sort of quicksand. There is a spring of excellent water on this side called the Priest’s Well. On the western side there has been a kiln for drying corn, placed at the distance of sixty yards from the outer wall. Within the southern side, and nearly upon the southern wall, the new rectory house, out-offices, and garden are placed, which were built in the year 1837; and on the north side of these are the church, and the churchyard, in which stands the celebrated Runie pillar. At the north-east corner of the station is the castle (now in ruins), and its moat; and on the northern side are the present manor house, farm buildings, and garden. The remainder of the station is an excellent pasture. Several traces of the foundations of ancient buildings occur in every part of the station, proving it to have been a place of considerable importance. Almost every grave that is made cuts through foundation walls. There are also several traces of flagging and pavements. Pieces of coal are often found, showing that they were probably acquainted with the coal mines of the district. From a stratum of ashes which is often found in the graves, about three feet below the surface, we may infer that the place has been destroyed by fire at some remote period. On the top of the hill, to the north-west, are some groundworks, connected with the station by a raised road, which are said to have been a hall occupied by some of the younger branches of the family settled at Bewcastle—hence the place is called the Hallhills. On the eastern and western face of this hill we find terraces, the ancient traces of cultivation. About 400 yards above the station, on the margin of the river, is a place called the 'cannon-holes,' where Oliver Cromwell (perhaps erroneously) is said to have planted his cannon when he destroyed the castle. On the south-east side of the station, at a short distance, is a cottage called the Churchcloses, where some sculptured and inscribed stones have been found. It may have formerly constituted a portion of the suburbs of the Roman city. There is a trace of the foundations of a small square building near the cottage; and there is a small embankment or raised road leading from the eastern gate of the station in the direction of these foundations.

"The camp appears to have been built according to the usual mode of Roman castrametation. The streets called the Via Principalis and the Via Quintana may be still accurately traced. The site of the pretorium, or general's quarters, is very conspicuous, being nearly in the centre of the camp, at the north-west corner of the churchyard. The foundations of most of the other buildings, according to the regular Polybian plan, are distinct. The manor house stands on the pretorian or northern gateway. There has been an entrance on the west side from the Maiden Way, which passes the station on this side. The position of this entrance (the left principal gateway) is very apparent, having had a small guard-house at each side. From this gateway the Via Principalis may be easily followed to the east side of the station, where we may also trace the position of the eastern entrance, or right principal gateway, which has also been flanked by a small guard-house at each side. The decuman, or southern gateway, is not so apparent, but in the year 1840 I dug out part of the foundations of one of its guard-houses.

"The station is not destitute of its memorials and evidences of ancient occupation. Several Roman coins, rings, urns, pieces of red Samian and black pottery both plain and figured, vases, flanged tiles, bricks, oxydized iron, beads, glass, votive tablets, inscribed altars, and other relics, have been found at different periods. Several specimens of querns of various sorts have been turned up—those primitive engines for grinding meal which we find so often alluded to in the Bible, and which are shown in antiquarian museums as things of a past age, but which may still be seen flourishing in lively use in the Faroe Islands, and some other of these northern outlandish parts of the earth.¹

"Several inscribed stones have been found at this station. Camden says—'In the church, now almost ruined, there lies a grave-stone brought hither from some other place, with this inscription, Legio secunda Augusta fecit.' Camden, it appears, was not aware at that time that this was a Roman station. On this point, however, there cannot now be a doubt. Horsley thinks that he afterwards saw the same stone in Naworth Garden—if so, it was probably removed by 'Belted Will.' The inference to be drawn from this inscribed stone is this—that a part of the second legion, which was styled Augusta, was engaged in the erection of this fortress.

"When Horsley visited the station he saw an inscribed slab in the churchyard, at the head of a grave, set upright on the edge, with the remains of an inscription, which he ventures to read thus—'Imperatorii Caesaris Trajano Hadriano Augusto Legiones Secunda Augusta et Vicesima valens victrix sub Licinio Prisco Legato Augustali Propretore.'² He says—'It has

¹ A strong tradition exists in the neighbourhood of Bewcastle, that a mill was once situated on the site of the station. The millstone, it is said, was found in the ruins of the station. A small millstone, however, which was found in the ruins of the station, was not found in the ruins of the station, but in the ruins of the station. In the same grave were also found several coins which were not preserved, and part of an old iron grate, which the blacksmith pronounced to be of the best quality that ever passed under his hammer. In another grave, in 1830, an iron sword about two feet in length was found, but was immediately broken into small fragments by one of the persons who found it. In the year 1840 a brass coin of Antoninus Pius was found about five or six feet beneath the surface, close to the west end of the rectory house. A silver coin of the Emperor Nerva was found a few years before near the decuman gateway. This coin of Nerva has COS. III. upon it. The date therefore is A.D. 79, and hence a strong presumption arises that Bewcastle was actually in the occupation of the Romans at that period, as before suggested. In the summer of 1855 I found in the rectory garden a small coin, apparently of Victorinus. Many other coins have been found at different periods but they have been lost. In the year 1855 a small blue bead was turned up, and a piece of lead resembling a small plummet. Portions of leaden conduit have been found formerly—also of a Mosaic floor, as stated in the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' vol. 63, part 2, p. 1044. I have recently found several pieces of yellow-coloured pottery, having apparently been part of the handle, &c. of an amphora. Some of the pieces of red Samian ware have dogs and other devices marked upon them. Some of them have curiously-shaped lips or spouts for the convenience of pouring; and one of them has the maker's name 'Martinus' stamped upon it—MARTINIM, i.e., Martini manu, from the hand of Martinus.

² "It may be translated thus—'The second legion styled Augusta, and the twentieth legion styled Valens Victorix, under Licinius Priscus, an Augustal Legate and Propretor (dedicated this) to the Emperor Cæsar Trajan Hadrian Augustus.'" been a very curious inscription, though it is now imperfect. It was found at first at the bottom of a grave, and has not been published before. I take it to have been an honorary monument, erected to Hadrian by the Legio Secunda Augusta and the Legio Vicissima. I cannot find any name of a proprietor that fully suits the letters in the inscription; but we have Priscus Licinius mentioned in the inscription in Hadrian's time, which seems to approach the nearest. The two names, Licinius and Priscus, might be inverted in an inscription, as we find names are sometimes in authors.¹ If the stone was inscribed in honour of Hadrian which however is not certain, as the name of Hadrian is not legible on the stone, then we may infer from it that a part of the second legion, which was styled Augusta, and a part of the twentieth legion, which was styled Victrix Valeria (not Valens according to the list of Dion Cassius,) kept garrison at this station at the time when the Emperor Hadrian made his very brief visit to Britain. This stone is nowhere to be seen at Bewcastle at the present day.

"Hutchinson, in his 'History of Cumberland,' p. 93, mentions a stone which he discovered over the channel at the gate of the public house yard. This would be the demesne, or manor house, of the present day. The stone appears to have been a plain slab, and he gives the following copy of the inscription, but offers no explanation of it:—

I O M
COH I DAC:::
ATLET: CENTVR
IFCIT

The first word of the third line would probably be ÆELLE, the last two letters being tied together, as we often find two, or sometimes more letters, tied together, in Roman inscriptions. It might be read thus:—'Jovi optimo maximo cohortis prime Dacorum Æellie Centurio fecit.'—'To Jupiter the best, the greatest, a centurion of the first cohort of the Dacians styled Æellia made this.' Besides the legionary troops employed in the Roman service, there were several auxiliary cohorts of foreign troops, which not only assumed the name of the conquered province to which they belonged, but sometimes added another title, in honour of the emperor under whom (perhaps) they enlisted, or were then serving. This cohort was then called Æellia, in honour of Hadrian, who was styled Titus Æellius Hadrianus; and also Dacorum from their country, which stretched on the north of the Danube towards the Carpathian mountains, and comprehended part of Hungary, Transylvania, Moldavia, and Wallachia. The Roman army list called the Notitia places this cohort at Burdowsald,¹ and several stones have been found there which mention this cohort, and as the names of nine different commanders appear on these stones, we may reasonably conclude that it must have been stationed there for a considerable period. From this Bewcastle stone we may infer that a part of this cohort must also have been stationed here, either along with the second legion, or perhaps after its removal.

"Hutchinson also mentions an altar which he says 'was found lately, and is in the possession of the Rev. J. D. Carlyle,' who was afterwards chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle. It is now in the possession of Lieut.-colonel Maclean, of Lazonby. An account of it was communicated by Mr. Carlyle to the Society of Antiquaries, in 1792, which was published with a representation of the altar in the 'Archæologia,' vol. xi., pl. vi., p. 69. He stated that it had been sent to him a few months previously, having been found in the bed of a rivulet at Bewcastle. He supposed this altar to have been dedicated to Cocideus, a local deity, by Titus Auruncus, promoted to the rank of tribune, having been an evocatus, or volunteer, continuing to serve after the usual time of military service had been completed. It may be read thus:—'Sancto Cocideo Titus Auruncus felicissimus tribunus ex evocato votum solvit lubens merito.'—'Titus Auruncus raised to be a very happy tribune from an evocatus, or volunteer, pays his vow willingly and deservedly to the holy Cocideus.'

"On a slip of paper in Mr. Howard's copy of Hutchinson's 'History of Cumberland,' is the representation of an altar, with the following note:—'Found at Bewcastle, near the place where two others were found last Martinmas, and now (1812) in the possession of the curate.' The inscription may be deciphered thus:—'Deo Marti et Cocideo sancto Aelius Vitalianus dat dedicat lubens merito.'—'Aelius Vitalianus gives and dedicates this willingly and deservedly to the God Mars and to the holy Cocideus.' This is the second altar dedicated to Cocideus found at this station.²

¹ This word is generally written Burdowsald. I prefer Burdowsald, as given by Hutchinson. It is probably derived from the Anglo-Saxon word 'burh,' a borough; and hence Burdowsald, by corruption for Burhowsald, 'the town of Oswald.'

² The word Cocideus appears to be simply an abbreviation of the words Coceli Deus—the God of Coecium, which was the name of one of the stations of the Tenth Iter of the Itinerary, and supposed to be the present Lancaster. This confirms my views as to the Maiden Way and the Tenth Iter, and consequently as to Bewcastle being the Galava of the Romans. Several altars have been found elsewhere bearing the name of Cocideus, but they have all been found not far from the line of the Maiden Way. On some of these the name of Mars has been combined with Cocideus; and the name Cocideus has consequently been supposed by some to have been a local name of

"Horsley mentions another stone found at this place, with TEMPLVM distinctly upon it, but says it was then broken and destroyed. In the spring of 1852 I found the upper part of a Roman altar, which is probably the one to which Horsley alludes. It bears the following inscription:—'Jovi Optimo Maximo Immortali Dolichenœ Templum a solo pro.' It appears to have been dedicated 'To Jupiter Dolichenus the best, the greatest, the immortal' on the erection of a temple, probably by the Roman workers in iron a solo, from the ground, i.e., from the foundation; pro salute, for the safety of some person whose name may have been inscribed on the part of the stone now broken off, as there appear to be some vestiges of letters in the fifth line underneath.¹ Jupiter was sometimes styled Dolichenus, from Doliche, a district in Macedonia, famous for its iron. There can be no question that iron has been smelted here at some former period (probably by the Romans) as there are several heaps of slag in the district, showing where the operation has been carried on.²

"An aged neighbour informed me that a stone covered with letters was found about sixty years since on the margin of the river near the Byer Cottage, and that it stood for a considerable period at the rectory door of the Rev. Mr. Messenger. It was afterwards carted away by this man's father to Carlisle, and, as he believed, went to Workington or Whitehaven. A stone with some sculpture in relief, but without letters, was found about thirty years since, near the same place, and is now in the wall in the Bewcastle Barn.

"Such are the vestiges which have been found at different periods proving that Bewcastle was one of the garrisoned cities of the Roman. After the departure of the Roman warriors from Britain, about the beginning of the fifth century, it would most probably be re-tenanted by the inhabitants of the district, but they were not allowed to enjoy their own again for any length of time, as they were soon expelled by a colony of the Anglo-Saxon invaders, whose fortifications (before their inroads on the Roman Empire) were mere earthworks, as in their half-nomadic state they had neither means nor motive for constructing any other; but their conquest and colonization of the greater part of Roman Britain put them in possession of a more solid class of fortifications, such as this at Bewcastle; and about this period we may presume that the old British name Galava was converted into the Wulheva of the Saxons. We have no historic records of Bewcastle during this period, but the inscriptions on the Runic obelisk yet standing in the churchyard render it something more than probable that it was a royal residence in the seventh century, for it is unquestionably a monument pointing out the burial-place of Alfred, one of the Anglo-Saxon kings of this part of the country.

"From the seventh to the eleventh century history gives us no information respecting Bewcastle. Denton, in his 'Manuscript,' says, 'I read of one Bueth,' a Mars. An altar found at Lancaster bears both names.—Archæologia, vol. xiii., p. 401. The Lysons, in their 'History of Cumberland,' mention seven altars dedicated to Cocidens, found in Cumberland, and give the inscriptions, pp. clix., cxlviii. Hutchinson gives a representation of one found at Burdowsald, and mentions another as remaining at Sealeby. There is one at Lanercost said to have been found at Brankshaw; another said to have been found at Hongill, about a mile from Lanercost; and another at Hardriding, near the western border of Northumberland, and not far from Burdowsald. Another was found in 1851 near Bleatun, which is now, I believe, in the possession of the representatives of the late Robert Bell of Irthington.³

"I sent a tracing of the letters to Dr. Bruce, who read them thus:—'Jovi Optimo Maximo Dolichenœ templum a solo pro se ac suis.' I also sent him a drawing of the altar, and he has given an engraving of it in his 'Roman Wall,' p. 378.⁴

"As there have been very few stones dedicated to Jupiter Dolichenus found in England this merits the special notice of archaeologists. In Gibson's 'Additions to Camden' (Monmouthshire) we find a representation of an altar said to have been discovered at St. Julian's, near Kaer-Leion. Mr. Gibson says:—'It seems worth the enquiry of the curious upon what occasion Jupiter is here styled Dolichenus. To me it seems probable that this altar was erected to implore his tuition of some iron mines, either in the forest of Dean, or some other place in this country. The grounds of which conjecture I take from this inscription in Reinesius:—'Jovi optimo maximo Dolichenœ, ubi ferrum nascitur.' (C. Sempronius Rectus, cent. ironotararius, D.D. For unless Caius Sempronius, who dedicates this altar to Jovi Dolichenœ, makes his request to Jupiter, that he would either direct them to find out iron mines, or be propitious to some they had already discovered, I cannot conjecture why he should add the words, ubi ferrum nascitur; which were not only superfluous, but absurd, if they imply'd no more than barely that iron ore was found at Doliche, a town of Macedonia, whence Jupiter was call'd Dolichenus.' Horsley gives another altar thus inscribed, found at Benwell on the Roman Wall; and Hodgdon notices another found at Rishingham, another district where iron ore abounds. These, I believe, are the only altars so inscribed found in England.' 'Mr. Roach Smith, in the 'Collectanea Antiqua,' vol. 1, page 13, gives some account of this title of Jupiter in the notice of a gallo-Roman altar, now a baptismal font in the church of Halinghen, Pas de Calais. To those antiquaries who may desire further evidence on this curious subject of Roman mythology, it may be acceptable to be informed that a detailed memoir on the cultus (or peculiar mode of worship) of Dolichenus has been given by M. Seidl, in the last volume of the 'Transactions of the Imperial Academy of Vienna' (Division of History, &c., vol. xii.) The author gives six plates of altars, and enumerates sixty-eight monuments, vases, &c., bearing the name of Dolichenus.⁵

¹ This Bueth has been generally supposed to have been an Anglo-Saxon. He may, however, have been one of the band of Norwegians who appear to have settled in this district, the word being derived from the old Norse verb, búa, to dwell. Many local appellations are evidently of Norse and Danish extraction."

Cumberland man, about the time of the Conquest, who built Buecastle, and was lord of Buecastle dale.' Here, then, we have the origin of the castle which occupies the north-eastern corner of the station.⁴²

'In King Stephen's time (between 1135 and 1154), when the Scots were let into Cumberland, Bueth took that opportunity to incite as many as he could to recover his estate in Gilsland from Hubert de Vallibus; and it seems, notwithstanding the alliances and other obligations which Hubert had laid upon the inhabitants, to bind them to him, they took part with Gilles Bueth as the right heir.' The Gilles Bueth here mentioned could not be the son of Bueth, as some have supposed, for he was slain before the time of Stephen. He was probably some other descendant of Bueth who was making claim to the property, for it appears that Bueth's posterity in Scotland were called of his name Gilles Bueth, or lairds of Gillesbueth, corruptly Gillesbies. Afterwards, when Henry II. obtained the crown of England, and took Cumberland again from the Scots, he re-granted the barony of Gilsland to Hubert de Vallibus; and it is probable that Bewcastle Dale was included in this confirmation of the previous grant. The country, however, was so greatly infested by Bueth, or his followers, that none of the de Vaux family 'durst inhabit there, until the barons of Burgh barony, who were kinsmen of Bueth, took upon them to summer their cattle there, at which time it was a waste forest ground, and fit for the depasturing of the cattle of the lords of Burgh, and their tenants, who had no pasture for them at home.' Hence Bewcastle is (incorrectly) found in some ancient inquiries as parcel of the barony of Burgh.

⁴² This castle is a large and rude building (about eighty-seven feet square). It has been, partly at least, constructed from the stems of the station, and has been surrounded by a deep and wide ditch. The cement with which it has been built proves it to be of an ancient construction. The south and west walls are nearly of their original height, about forty-two feet, but the north and east sides have only fragments remaining. In the south side are two windows, two loopholes near the top, and a row of square holes in a right line for the ends of the joists, showing that this part of the castle was occupied as the residence. In many parts of the walls we find small holes contracting towards the outside, but whether they have been loopholes for shooting through, or for the discharge of refuse water, is uncertain. The entrance has been on the west side, through a small square tower, which is considered by some to have been added at a later period. It has had two doors, supported by inner bars or beams of wood sliding in cavities left in the wall for the purpose; and the inner door has been supported by a port culla. The outer door has also been protected by a gallery in the wall attained by a narrow flight of steps, with two loopholes on the side of the tower opposite to the entrance. The interior walls of the castle are completely gone, but they would probably be so constructed as to afford accommodation for both the people and their horses and cattle; and there can be no question but it was so occupied for five or six hundred years.

"Robert de Vallibus, who was the only son of Hubert, died without issue, and then Bueth's possessions passed to Thomas de Multon, who married Matilda the daughter and heiress of Hubert de Vallibus. This Thomas de Multon was one of the lords of Burgh, and hence these barons obtained a claim to Bewcastle by marriage, as well as by their consanguinity with Bueth. In the time of Henry III. (between 1216 and 1272) Richard Baron of Levington, by his right in Burgh, held demesne lands, and other lands in Bewcastle, rents and services, as parcel of Burgh.

"Bewcastle, from the Multons, came into the possession of the Swinburnes for several generations. In the seventh year of King Edward I. (1270) John Swinburne obtained a fair and market to be held here.⁴³

"King James I. demised it to Francis Earl of Cumberland for forty years' term; and King Charles I. granted the fee to Richard Graham, knight and barrister, to hold of the crown in capite, by one entire knight's fee, and £7 10s. rent. It is now a manor belonging to the Right Honourable Sir James Robert George Graham, Bart., of Netherby, who is one of the most considerable landowners in the parish. The custom of the manor was established under a decree in Chancery, grounded upon a deed of agreement (dated May 27, 1630), entered into between Sir Richard Graham, then lord, and several of his tenants. The following are the services of the manor as given by Hutchinson, 'A fine of four years' ancient rent, on change of lord by death or alienation, with suit of court; and at the lord's mill, customary works and carriage, and other boons, duties, and services—and that for a heriot, the lord shall have the best beast of which every tenant shall die possessed, the riding horse kept for the lord's service excepted. If the tenant has no beast he pays 20s. in lieu of the heriot. No tenant to let or mortgage his tenement for more than three years, without license of the lord; the lord took a bounty of eight years' rent on giving his assent to the custom.'

⁴³ In the reign of King Henry VIII. (1509 to 1547) one Jack Musgrave was governor of Bewcastle, but in whose right he held it is not mentioned—probably in right of Sir William Musgrave. When the Earl of Cassil was taken prisoner this John Musgrave claimed a part of the reward for the loan of his horse to Batill Routledge, his taker. In a list of the gentlemen of the county called out on border service under Sir Thomas Wharton (1548) we find the name of John Musgrave, with horse and foot. And in a muster in 1554 we find Bewcastle contributing fifty light horsemen to the use of the borders. In 1552 and 1558 we find one Thomas Musgrave mentioned as a deputy warden of Bewcastle, probably under Sir Simon Musgrave, knight; so that Bewcastle would appear to have been in possession of the Musgraves at that period. Camden speaks of it as a castle of the kings in his day, and defended by a small garrison, so that the Musgraves probably only held under the crown.

The lord occasionally holds a court leet, with a court baron, and customary court.

"The castle, although at that time the property of Sir Richard Graham, is said to have been destroyed in 1641 by the Parliament's forces, by whose fury many of the ancient fortresses were laid in ruins. Tradition also says that it was destroyed by Cromwell, and points out the place where he planted his cannon. Perhaps it may have suffered from both parties. From its vicinity to Scotland it was continually subject to the spoils of war. It formed one of the most formidable barriers to the Scottish marauders, as it was garrisoned by a considerable force, and the circumjacent forts were subject to its orders."

1791. 1800.

Bewcastle church stands at the extreme south-east end of the parish, about ten miles north-by-east of Brampton, on the site of a Roman station, where it is supposed a considerable town at one time stood. It is a modern structure, rebuilt in 1792-3; part of the chancel of the old church was left standing, with a view, it is said, of retaining the rector's right to repair. Nicolson and Burn say the church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert—Hutchinson says to St. Mary. It contains two plain mural monuments, one to the memory of the Rev. Matthew Souby, who died September 28th, 1737, having been rector for twenty-four years; the other for the Rev. John Graham, who died August 21st, 1834, having been rector for twenty-seven years. History is silent respecting the foundation of this church. Dr. Todd tells us that it was given, about the year 1200, by Robert de Buethcaestre (more probably Robert de Vallibus) to the prior and convent of Carlisle. This Robert is also stated to have been the grantor of lands at Bewcastle to the prioress and nuns of Marrick, in Yorkshire. The dean and chapter of Carlisle are the present patrons. The living, or rectory, is valued in the King's Book at £2; but has been augmented with a prescript of £60 0s. 6d. a-year in lieu of tithes, which were commuted in 1842 for the same sum; and some time ago it was still further augmented by Sir James Graham with £20 a-year for ever, out of the rents of his estates. In 1844 the Ecclesiastical Commissioners gave £13 a-year to the living, which is now worth nearly £120 per annum. The parish registers commence in the year 1737, but registers of an earlier date are in the registry at Carlisle.

Rectors.—Robert de Southall occurs in 1299; Henry de Whiteburgh, 1356; John de Bromfield, 1360; Adam Armstrong, 1361; Robert —; John de Stapletop, 1380; Thomas Aclonby, died 1380; William Lawson, 1580; Charles Bonetouch, 1623; Henry Sibson, 1613; Robert Lowther, 1663; Ambrose Myers, 1671; George Fisher, 1673; John Lamb, —; Jeffrey Vandenb., 1690; Edward Tongue —; Matthew Searby, 1712; Edward Baker, 1748; James Parrell, 1760; Adam Reid, —; John Graham, 1800; John Jackson, 1811; John Neagham, 1859.

The churchyard of Bewcastle contains the celebrated Runic cross, the subject of so much controversy. We have been favoured with the following account of it by the Rev. John Maughan:—

"This ancient pillar, which may be properly classed among the most celebrated of archeological monuments, is nearly the frustum of a square pyramid, measuring twenty-two inches by twenty-one at the base, and tapering to fourteen inches by thirteen at the top of the shaft, being fourteen and a half feet high above its pedestal. The pillar has been fixed with lead in a shallow cavity which has been cut on the crown of a nearly cubical block of stone four feet square, and three feet nine inches high; which stone is now sunk about three feet into the ground, and has been tooled off at the upper corners so as to assume the appearance of an unequal-sided octagon. On the top of the pillar was formerly placed a small cross, which has been lost for a considerable period, and hence the pillar is now merely an obelisk.

"The traditions of the district say that a king was buried here, and also point out the locality where the shaft of the pillar was procured; and the traditions are probably correct in both respects. On an extensive, and still unenclosed waste, called White Line Common, about five miles from Bewcastle church, is a long ridge of rocks called the Langbar. About the centre of this ridge a stone is now lying on the surface of the ground, which is nearly fifteen feet in length, and which is the very counterpart of the Bewcastle obelisk in its rude and undressed state. It is evidently the relic of a stone which has been split at some distant period into two equal parts, the marks of the wedges used in the operation being still distinctly traceable, and the side, which, from its present position, may be called the western, apparently much fresher than the other sides, and not covered with so thick a coat of grey moss, as if it had been exposed to the effects of the weather for a shorter period of time. The obelisk is a peculiar species of rock; a very hard, gritty, and durable white freestone, with rather a yellow tinge, thickly covered with spots of a grey hue; precisely such as is found at the Langbar, and the adjacent rocks on the south side of the White Line river. A careful comparison of some fragments of the obelisk with other fragments from the Langbar stone, shows them to be unquestionably twins from one and the same parent.

"James Currie appears to have been curate from 1765 to 1794; William Rait, from 1794 to 1797; Thomas Messenger, from 1797 to 1800; John Lawson, or John Jackson, from 1801 to 1806."

"To this supposed and traditional origin of the obelisk it may possibly be objected, that it would be almost impossible to convey such an immense block of stone from such a hilly and now roadless district. This objection, however, is much diminished, if we bear in mind that the old Roman road called the Maiden Way passed near both its present and its supposed original site, which road would probably be in good order at the period when the stone was brought; and that there was an easy and gradual incline across the moor from the Langbar to the Maiden Way, affording facilities for its conveyance to this road.

"We have no authentic copy or record of the inscriptions on this remarkable monument, or of the period when they first became illegible; but of this we may rest assured, that they have not been distinct for more than two centuries. Camden, who died in 1623, devoted his attention to them, but failed in deciphering them. In Gibson's edition of 'Camden's Britannia,' 1695, this monument is thus described:—'In the churchyard is a cross of one entire square stone, about twenty foot high, and curiously cut; there is an inscription too, but the letters are so dim that they are not legible. But seeing the cross is of the same kind as that in the arms of the family of Vaux, one may conjecture that it has been made by some of that family.' If Camden's measurement be correct, it must comprehend the pedestal, shaft, and the cross on its summit, which cross must consequently have been twenty-one inches high. From Camden's observations we may naturally infer that the inscription must have been lost long before his day.

"Lord William Howard (commonly called Belted Will), who died in the same year as Camden, also attempted to recover the inscription, but without success. In the 'History of Cumberland,' published by Nicolson and Burn, in 1777, we read as follows:—'The Lord William Howard of Naworth (a lover of antiquities), caused the inscriptions thereon to be carefully copied, and sent them to Sir Henry Spelman to interpret. The task being too hard for Sir Henry, he transmitted the copy to Olaus Wormius, history professor at Copenhagen, who was then about to publish his 'Monumenta Danica.'

"Sir H. Spelman reads one part of the inscriptions (which is said to have been 'in epistylis crucis,' and which I take to be the bottom line on the south side), thus:—RINES DRYHTNESS, which may be translated, 'of the kingdom of our Lord,' or (the monument) 'of a powerful lord.' Wanleius, in his 'Catalogue,' p. 248, with a slight variation of the letters, reads this line,

'RYNAS DRYHTNESS,' i. e., 'mysteria Domini,'—the Runes or mysterious characters of our Lord.' Wanleius took this from the Cottonian Codex in the British Museum. The learned antiquary, Olaus Wormius, in his 'Monumenta Danica,' pp. 162, 168, notices the inscription sent by Spelman, and prints it exactly as it was sent to him, but owns at the same time that he did not know what to make of it. One part of it, which he says was in epistylis crucis (the bottom line of the south side), supposing the characters to be Scandinavian Runes, and dividing the line into eighteen letters,—he reads thus: i. e., RINO SATU RUNA STINOTH,—'RINO made these Runic stones.' Hickes, in his 'Thesaurus Grammaticæ Anglo-Saxonica,' makes some slight deviations from the reading of Spelman, and gives the line thus: 'RODEN DRYHTNESS,'—'the cross of our Lord.' Bishop Nicolson (formerly Bishop of Carlisle, who devoted much of his attention to the recovery of these inscriptions) says, in the year 1685, 'on the south side, flourishes and conceals as before, and towards the bottom, a decayed inscription, the defects in which are sufficient to discourage me from attempting to expound it; but possibly it may be read thus:—GAG UBBO KLEET—Ubbo conquered the robbers. I may observe that the bishop's copy of these letters is very inaccurate, and embraces portions of the sculpture, which he has mistaken for letters.'

"The late Mr. Kemble, in his memoir ('Archæologia,' vol. xxviii., part 16), read this line nearly the same as Spelman—'RICES DRYHTNES'—'Domini potentis,' which he said may be part of an inscription—the first word or words being lost—or the pillar itself may be taken as part of the sentence, thus: 'Sigmaum Domini potentis,' which means—'the monument of a powerful lord.' Kemble said, 'Whether this inscription (referring to the one read by Grimm) and the stone on which it was cut, stood alone, or whether they formed part of some larger monument, I do not know.'

"In the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' 1742, p. 368, is a paper from the pen of Mr. George Smith, who, according to the 'Biographia Cumb,' was a native of Scotland; a man of genius and learning; who lived for some time near Braampton, and was a great contributor to the 'Gentleman's Magazine.' Mr. Smith gives a description of the north side of the monument, but never favoured the public with his promised dissertation on its remaining sides. The late Henry Howard, Esq., of Corby Castle, in a communication to the Society of Antiquaries in the year 1801 (see 'Archæologia,' vol. iv., p. 118) says that he spent two days in the attempt to recover the inscription on this cross. Although Mr. Howard probably did not actually succeed in deciphering any part of it, yet, so far as I know, he was the first person to whose learned researches we are indebted for the very ingenious suggestion as to Bewcastle being the tomb of King Alfrid. Although Mr. Howard failed in his attempt to open the lock, yet he was probably the first person to point out the right key.

"In the 'History of Cumberland,' published by Hutchinson in 1794, is a long article on this monument, with a copy of the inscription published in the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' which I suspect to have been made first by Lord William Howard, and sent by him to Sir H. Spelman, and afterwards published in the 'Monumenta Danica' of Wormius. The Lysons, in their 'History of Cumberland,' have also favoured this cross with a passing notice. Many antiquarians have visited it at different periods, but I am not aware that any one has published any account or explanation of it, besides the parties already mentioned. I shall now venture to offer a detailed account of it.

"On the crown of the pillar is a cavity seven and a half inches deep and eight and a half inches square, designed to hold the foot of the small cross which formerly surmounted the shaft, the loss of which is much to be regretted. Mr. Smith, in his dissertation already mentioned, says that it was demolished long ago by popular frenzy and enthusiasm. The tradition of the district says that it was broken off by an ill-aimed cannon ball when Cromwell destroyed the castle; but both of these statements are probably incorrect. From Gough's edition of Camden we find that a slip of paper, found in Camden's own copy of his 'Britannia' (Ed. 1607, in the Bodleian Library), accompanied by the following note—"I received this morning a ston from my Lord of Arundel, sent him from my Lord William. It was the head of a cross at Buceale." Now Camden died in 1633, and as Cromwell did not visit these parts till about twenty years afterwards (if he ever visited them at all), it is very evident from this fact, and from this statement of Camden, that the disappearance of this cross may be more justly attributed to the antiquarian propensities of Belted Will, than to any of the errant balls of Cromwell's artillery.

"A vine springing from the bottom of the pillar, and highly relieved, is represented as gracefully winding up the east side in serpentine undulations, with numerous branches starting from it, covered with foliage and bunches of grapes. This side of the monument bears a considerable resemblance to two sides of the Runic monument at Ruthwell, near Dumfries, which is said to be the only stone hitherto discovered in Scotland with a Runic inscription, no Runes having yet been found even in the Orkney or Shetland Isles, where they might have been expected in abundance. In each of the regular and flowing curves of the vine an animal, or a bird, is artfully sculptured (in alto relievo) in what is considered by some people as the old Gothic style, and is in the act of feeding on the fruit. In the lowest curve is a quadruped somewhat resembling a fox-hound. In each of the next two curves is the representation of an imaginary biped, having the head and shoulders of an animal, while the body tapers away into a long, flexible, and curled tail, with an enlarged point, curiously entwined round the stem and branches, the lower biped bearing some resemblance to one on the cross at Ruthwell. In the curve above this is a bird like a hawk or an eagle; and in the next curve is a bird like a raven; these two birds being nearly the same in figure, but considerably larger than two similar birds at Ruthwell. In each of the two succeeding curves is a sculptured squirrel, the Ruthwell cross differing from this at Bewcastle in having more birds and only one squirrel. The vine, gradually growing more slender, winds again into two elegant curves, and appears to terminate with clusters of grapes. The sculpture on this side of the cross has suffered very little damage from the corroding effects of the weather. The buds, blossoms, and fruit have been so carefully and exquisitely delineated by the chisel of the workman, and are still so faithfully preserved, that they seem as if they were things only just starting into life. There is no inscription now on the east side. It is probable however that there have been some letters near the top of the shaft on a part which has been broken off.

"The west side is the most important on account of its ornaments and also its inscriptions. On a plain surface (about nine inches deep, near the top of the cross) which appears to have surmounted the decorated parts on each of the four sides, are the remains of Runic letters, apparently fragments of x, s, and s, in the word KRISTUS, which occurs again a little lower down on this side: the lower part of the letter k, the middle and lower part of the first s, and the termination of the last s, being all that now remains of the word. It will appear from the succeeding pages of this article why I suppose these fragments to be constituent parts of the word KRISTUS. Bishop Nicolson says—"On the west side of the stone we have three fair draughts, which evidently enough manifest the monument to be Christian. . . . On the top stands the effigies of the B. V. with the Babe in her arms and both their heads encircled with glories." Mr. Hutchinson coincides with the prelate as to this figure, and Mr. Armstrong represents it like a mitred ecclesiastic. The Lysons say of this sculpture, 'The female figure is so defaced that nothing more than a general outline can be distinguished; what she holds in her left arm is much better preserved, and is the holy lamb.' On carefully removing the moss from the stone I ascertained that the Lysons were correct as to the Agnus Dei, but not as to the figure of a female, for the beard itself, if there were no other marks, affords sufficient proof that it must be the representation of St. John the Baptist, and not of the Blessed Virgin. The head of the Agnus Dei has been encircled with a small 'nimbus' or 'glory,' but there is no trace of one surrounding the head of the apostle. There is a similar figure on the Ruthwell cross, although it has evidently not been sculptured from the same design. Dr. Duncan, in his illustrations of the Ruthwell monument, describes this image as representing 'the Father standing on two globes or worlds (indicating probably the world which now is and that which is to come) with the Agnus Dei in his bosom.' Immediately below this figure are two lines of Runic letters to which my attention was at first drawn by the very imperfect representation of them in the plates in Lysons. On divesting these letters of their mossy covering, and obtaining a mould in plaster of Paris from this part of the stone, I found that, although extremely dim, the letters were still perfect and legible. This short inscription is in the Latin language, while the other inscriptions on the monument are in the Anglo-Saxon, thus rendering the monument one of the bi-lingual order. The inscription, when rendered into the English language, is simply 'Jesus Christ;' and undoubtedly refers to the figure of our Saviour immediately below it, thus limiting the period of the erection of the monument to the Christian era. It may be read thus, — CHRISTUS REX REGIS. Mr. Smith says — 'That the monument is Danish appears incontestible from the characters: Scottish and Pictish monuments having nothing but hieroglyphics, and the Danish both.' Mr. Hutchinson thinks that 'his assertion was hasty of the Scottish and Pictish monuments,' but he also appears to consider the monument Danish. These letters, however, are undoubtedly Anglo-Saxon Runes, and they, as well as the others found on this cross, generally agree with those found in the 'Codex Exoniensis' published by Hickes, thus proving the monument to be of Anglo-Saxon construction. The first thing that arrests our attention is the mark of the cross which precedes this inscription, and also some of the other inscriptions on this monument. This use of the holy emblem as a prefix is full of interest.

"Below the two lines of Runes above-mentioned is a figure which Bishop Nicolson conjectures to be 'the picture of some apostle, saint, or other holy man, in a sacerdotal habit, with a glory round his head.' Mr. Hutchinson describes it as 'the figure of a religious person, the garments descending to his feet, the head encircled with a nimbus, not now appearing radiated, but merely a circular rise of the stone: the right hand is elevated in a teaching posture, and the other hand holds a roll: a fold of the garment was mistaken by Mr. Armstrong for a string of beads. We conceive this figure to represent St. Cuthbert, to whom the church, as set forth by Nicolson and Burn, is dedicated.' The Lysons say — 'As he holds a roll (the sacred volumen) in his left hand, and the right hand is elevated in the act of benediction, we should rather suppose it was intended for our Saviour, who is frequently so represented in ancient works of art.' The two Runic lines above the figure now show that the Lysons were correct in their conjectures. The figure appears to be nearly an accurate fac-simile of the representation of our Saviour on the Ruthwell cross. On the Bewcastle pillar each of the feet of our Saviour is represented as placed upon a pedestal which is no longer distinct. On the Ruthwell cross each of these pedestals is more perfect, and represents the head of a pig, and they are undoubtedly intended for the same objects on the Bewcastle monument, probably having an allusion to the miracle of the devils cast into the herd of swine. Under this figure of our Redeemer we find the remains of an inscription of nine lines, of which Camden said, 'the letters are so dim that they are not legible,' and which were considered so decayed in the time of Bishop Nicholson that he described them as 'the fore-mentioned ruins of Lord Howard's inscription;' and declined even attempting to make out any part of it. The following is my reading of the inscription in Roman letters, the letters in brackets denoting compound Runes:

+ [TH]ISSIST[EA]CN
[TH]ASET[ON]H
W[AE]TH[WA]TH[WA]
GARDW[AE]
[TH]W[AE]TH[WA]
[TH]W[AE]TH[WA]
[TH]W[AE]TH[WA]
[TH]W[AE]TH[WA]
[TH]W[AE]TH[WA]
[TH]W[AE]TH[WA]

"I read the inscription thus: — + THISSIST BRAC
THUN SETON HWAETHGAR AHW[AE]TH[WA] AFT
AELEFRITHU TAN KYNING EAC OSWITING. + GARD HEO
SINNA SAWH[AE]LA — and it may be thus translated: —
+ Hwaetred, Wæthgar, and Alfwold (the names of three persons); setton, set up; thissig thun beacn, this slender pillar; aft Alefrithu, in memory of Alefrid; eac Kyning, a King; eac Oswitig, and son of Oswy. + Gæbid, pray thou; heo, for them; sinna, their sins; sawhula, their souls. In this inscription the first character or mark is, I now believe, that of a cross, although it is not very distinct. I was for a long time inclined to adopt the idea of Bishop Nicolson that the inscription commenced with the monogram IH̄S for 'Jesus hominum Salvator,' i.e., Jesus the Saviour of men. Good rubbings, however, and repeated examinations of the stone, and the frequent occurrence of this emblem on other parts of the cross, lead me to the conclusion that it has commenced with a cross. The word 'thissig' is not an unusual form of the pronoun 'this,' such a termination being often affixed to adjectives and pronouns. The word 'beacn' is variously written 'beacen, beacn, bocn, bycn, becen, and becn,' and denotes 'a beacon, sign, or token.' The word 'thun' means that or slender, and has probably some reference to the size and shape of the monument. The first letter in the word 'thun' is a trirunor, or compound rune, being composed of the letters 'TH'—and the letter 'U'—and hence by combination we have the trirunor THV. The word 'setton' is the third person plural of the perfect tense of the verb 'settan,' to set or place; and agrees with the three nominative cases Hwætræd, Wæthgar, and Alfwolthū. 'Aft' is the preposition, after or in memory of; and governs the word Alefrithu, to whom the monument was erected. The word 'ean'—one—is very similar to our provincial word 'ane,' which is still in use in this district. The word 'Gebid' stands for 'bid,' and is the second person singular of the imperative mood of the verb 'biddan'—to pray, to bid, or require. The syllable 'ge' is simply an expletive or augment, such an expletive being in common use. The word 'heo' is not an unusual form of the pronoun. 'Sinna' is the plural form of 'sin' or 'syn,' and signifies sins. 'Sawhula' is the plural formation of the word 'saw,' also written 'sawol' and 'sawul,' the letter 'h' being also introduced according to a very common Anglo-Saxon usage.

"The inscription seems to consist of a few couplets of the alliterative versification of Anglo-Saxon poetry. Hence it becomes very important, and takes us far in advance of many of the preconceived opinions respecting our Anglo-Saxon forefathers.¹ It may be read in four couplets thus—

1. Thissig beacn
Thun setton
2. Hwætræd Wæthgar Wæthhla
Aft Alefrithu
3. Hwæt heom
Thæt cearfæring
4. Gebid heo sinna
Sawhula.

"In the first couplet we have the compound letters TH as the alliterating letters; in the second couplet the letters A; in the third the letters E; and in the fourth the letters S. It is remarkable that these couplets rhyme with each other, and thus establish a probability (or perhaps something more) that both alliteration and rhyme have been made use of by the Anglo-Saxons from a very early period. Although we cannot actually produce any Anglo-Saxon poem in rhyme of that era, yet the Anglo-Saxon poets Aldhelm, A.D. 709—Boniface, A.D. 754—the Venerable Bede, A.D. 735—Alcuin, and others—have left behind them Latin poems in rhyme, which pre-supposes that this species of versification was anterior to, and commonly known in their time.

"A very interesting question arises, whether this Newcastle specimen of Anglo-Saxon poetry is not the oldest on record, being nearly 1,200 years old. My own impression is that no earlier example has been discovered. This circumstance considerably enhances the value and importance of this ancient cross. The only specimen of Anglo-Saxon poetry which can be supposed to compete with this is a fragment of a song which was written by Cadmon, a monk, who accustomed himself late in life to write religious poetry, and who died A.D. 680. His song was inserted by King Alfred in his this subject may consult likewise Dr. Hickes's 'Thesaurus Linguarum Septentrionalium,' particularly the 23rd chapter of his 'Grammatica Anglo-Saxonica et Mercatorum.' It appears that the Anglo-Saxons admired, and, in some measure, followed the northern Scaldi or Runes in forming the structure of their verse by a periodical repetition of similar letters, or by alliteration, and disregarded a fixed and determinate number of syllables. Rask, in his 'Anglo Saxon Grammar,' page 108, gives more specific rules for alliteration. Mr. Rask says—'The Saxon alliteration is thus constructed; in two adjacent and connected lines of verse there must be three words which begin with one and the same letter, so that the third or last alliterative word stands the first word in the second line, and the first two words are both introduced in the first line. The initial letters in these three words are called alliterative. The alliterative letter in the second line is called the chief letter, and the other two are called assistant letters. . . . If the chief letter be a vowel, the assistants must be vowels, but they need not be the same. In short verses only one assistant letter is occasionally found. In Anglo-Saxon poetry the words followed each other in continued succession, as in prose, and were not written in half-lines and verses in our modern poetry. The division into verses was made by the regular succession of the alliterating letters.'

¹ Olaus Wormius, in the preface to his 'Tractatus de Literatura Rerum,' has given a particular account of the earlier poetry, commonly called Runes. He informs us that there were fewer than five different kinds of monosyllables used in the Runes. He says that the Runes in many did not depend either upon their compound metrical feet, or quantity of syllables, but solely upon the number of syllables, and the disposition of the letters. In each distich, or couple of lines, it was requisite that three words should begin with the same letter: two of the corresponding words being placed in the first line of the distich, and the third in the second line, frequent inversions and transpositions being permitted in this part. The curious in translation of "Bede's Ecclesiastical History." In this brief fragment two of the couplets appear as rhyming with each other. This inscription also appears to upset some of the statements and theories of our best Anglo-Saxon grammarians with respect to what are called Dano-Saxon idioms and dialects, throwing all their conjectures as to peculiarities introduced by the Danes topsy-turvy, and proving these supposed peculiarities to have belonged from the first to the Anglo-Saxon language.

"No doubt much ignorance prevails generally regarding the habits of our Anglo-Saxon ancestors, for both public and private documents are only few and scanty which give us any insight into the general polity and social history of these our forefathers; and yet there are certain salient points in them which may be interesting to a majority of readers. In this memoir I shall, therefore, endeavour to give a brief philological examination of the words, as well as a biographical sketch of the persons whose names occur on this monument.

"I shall commence my sketch with Oswy, as being the head of the family. I find the name occurring as 'Oswiu,' which is simply an abbreviation of the Latin termination 'Oswius.' I also find the word written 'Osuin,' and Nennius calls him 'Osguid.' The termination 'ing' after a proper name, according to Anglo-Saxon usage, denoted 'the son of such a person;' hence the word 'Oswiung' means 'the son of Oswy.'

"By the Anglo-Saxon kingdom of Northumbria we generally understand all the counties in England north of the river Humber, and the southern counties of Scotland nearly as far as Edinburgh. In the year 633, or, according to some historians, 644, after the death of King Edwin, it was divided into two parts, namely the kingdom of Deira under Osric, which comprehended (nearly) the counties of York, Durham, Lancashire, Westmoreland, and Cumberland; and the kingdom of Bernicia under Eanfrid, which contained the county of Northumberland and the southern counties of Scotland. After the death of Oswin the kingdom of Deira probably devolved upon Alfrid, the son of Oswy; his father retaining the northern portion of the kingdom of Northumbria. In the year 642, Oswy, son of Ethelfrid, succeeded to the kingdom of Northumbria, on the death of Oswald, who was slain by Penda, king of the Mercians. Oswy reigned twenty-eight years, and Henry of Huntingdon (Lib. 2.) tells us that he subdued a great part of the nations of the Picts and Scots, and made them tributary.

"The peculiar way in which the word 'Alcfrithu' is spelt may seem somewhat objectionable, but we ought to bear in mind that orthography has been very capricious, and at all periods has assumed the features of a constant tendency to change. In fact, it would now be quite impossible to settle the orthography which was prevalent at any given former period, or to reduce the various modes of spelling names, which we find in ancient charters and other documents, to any consistent form. The Latin termination of proper names in 'thus' (and its abbreviation 'thu') instead of 'dus,' appears to have been quite common.

"Cases, however, do sometimes occur where the variation of a single letter in the mode of spelling what is apparently the same name makes a very wide and important difference. We may take the word 'Alfrid,' as an example. Oswy had two sons, each of them a king, but at different periods, who in our English translations of Venerable Bede's Ecclesiastical History are generally called 'Alfrid.' On referring, however, to Stephenson's Latin edition of Bede, we find a small but an essential distinction. The name of the first 'Alfrid,' who is the person to whom this pillar was erected, is in that edition written thus, 'Alchfrido.' (Bk. 3, ch. 14.) And a note upon this place says:-- 'Ealhfrith, Saxon version. This individual has frequently been confounded with Alfrid, a natural son of Oswy, who succeeded his father in 685. Upon this subject a note in Lappenberg. 'Gesch. v. England,' I, 180, may be consulted with advantage. Bede in other passages calls the first Alfrid, and the second Aldfrid. In the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle the latter is styled 'Aldfrith,' and 'Ealdferth.' This Aldfrid succeeded his brother Egfrid in the kingdom of Northumbria in the year 685, and died in 705.

"History gives us very little intimation of the various rulers who within their petty territories assumed the names of kings, and exercised the regal power; and just about as little of the extent and the nature of the authority and powers often claimed and exercised by the sons and brothers of the ruling sovereigns. Perhaps in the early periods of Anglo-Saxon history the very name of king 'Kyniing,' may have been assumed by the sons of sovereigns whether they exercised the sovereign rights or not. The word 'kyniing' or 'cyniing' was derived from 'kyn' or 'cyn,' which signified 'a nation or people,' and sometimes 'the head of the nation or people'; the termination 'ing' at the end of proper nouns denoted 'the son of such a person,' and hence the word 'kyniing' would mean simply 'the son of the head of the nation.' It is somewhat strange that scarcely any charters belonging to the kingdom of Northumbria have survived to the present day, and hence from such documents we can form no idea whatever of the style adopted by the kings of that country. It is very probable, however, that they carefully maintained the distinction between Deira and Bernicia, which has been overlooked by many historians of Anglo-Saxon England. Hence in the case of Alcfrid we have every reason to suppose that he was really and virtually king over Deira, and exercised all the rights and jurisdictions, and had all the appanages of an independent sovereign.

"According to the Ecclesiastical History of the Venerable Bede, Alfrid was one of the sons of Oswy, and, according to Eddie, reigned along with his father.

"Of the early life of Alfrid little is recorded, except that 'he was instructed in Christianity by Wilfrid, a most learned man, who had first gone to Rome to learn the ecclesiastical doctrine.' Eddie informs us that he entreated Wilfrid to reside with him, and preach the Word of God to him and his people, and that Wilfrid complied with his affectionate request, and that they became attached to each other, even as the souls of David and Jonathan. Hence Alcfrid became attached to the customs of Rome, and thought that Wilfrid's doctrine ought to be preferred before all the traditions of the Scottish or native priests. Alcfrid probably became King of Deira about the year 650, when his father Oswy slew Oswin, who was at that time king of that province. Of such a fact, however, we have no record, nor is there any record of the time and place of his death. So far as can be ascertained he disappears from history about the year 665, i.e., nearly 1,200 years from this time.

"Alcfrid appears to have been firmly attached to Wilfrid. He gave him a monastery of forty families at a place called Rhyppum (Ripon) according to Bede (Lib. 3, c. 25); which place he had not long before given to those that followed the system of the Scots, for a monastery; but forasmuch as they afterwards, being left to their choice, prepared to quit the place rather than alter their religious opinions, he gave the place to Wilfrid. From Bede's 'History of the Abbots of Weremouth' we learn that Alcfrid was desirous to make a pilgrimage to the shrines of the apostles at Rome, and had engaged Biscop to accompany him on his journey, who had just returned from that place; but the king (Oswy) prevented his son's journey. About the year 652 (according to some authorities 644) we find Alcfrid and Oswy jointly presiding over a religious controversy respecting the observance of Easter.

"Bede informs us that the Middle Angles were converted to Christianity through the instrumentality of Alcfrid. Penda, their king, came to Oswy, requesting his daughter for a wife. Oswy refused to comply unless he would embrace the faith of Christ. When he heard the preaching of truth, the promise of the heavenly kingdom and the hope of resurrection and future immortality, he declared that he would willingly become a Christian, even though he should be refused the virgin; being chiefly prevailed on to receive the faith by King Oswy's son Alcfrid, who was his relation and friend, and had married his sister Cyneburga, the daughter of King Penda. Accordingly he was baptized with all his earls and soldiers.

"In the year 665 Alcfrid sent Wilfrid with a great multitude of men and much money to the King of France, to be consecrated bishop over him (Alcfrid) and his people. From Bede, and others of our old British chroniclers, we find Alcfrid, in the year 655, fighting on the side of his father Oswy against his father-in-law Penda, the king of Mercia.

"Such is the history of Alcfrid as it has been handed down to us by our British historians. We may now take a passing glance at his supposed death. Bede (Lib. 3, c. 27), tells us that in the year 664 a sudden pestilence (called by some the yellow plague) depopulated the southern coasts of Britain, and, extending into the province of the Northumbrians, ravaged the country far and near, and destroyed a great multitude of men. The pestilence did no less harm in Ireland. This plague is also mentioned in the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle' under the same date; in one of the manuscripts of Nennius; and in Henry of Huntingdon (Lib. 3.) It has been presumed that Alcfrid fell a victim to this plague. If so, it is not unreasonable to suppose that he breathed his last in his Saxon city of Bewcastle, and that he was buried here. Against this supposed cause of his death, however, we must bear in mind that, in the year 665, i.e., the year after the plague, Bede informs us that Alcfrid sent Wilfrid to France for consecration, and a similar statement had been previously made by Eddie. Henry of Huntingdon (Lib. 3), and Bede, relate that Tuda, the Bishop of Northumbria, fell a victim to its ravages, but neither of them state that such was the death of King Alcfrid; a strong presumption that the king did not perish in this plague. St. Chad is also said to have been taken with the contagion while on a visit to his beloved solitude of Lestingau, which put an end to his mortal life. Bede, in his life of St. Cuthbert, tells us that 'this great pestilence, which made such havoc in Britain and Ireland, visited also the monastery of Mailros, where St. Cuthbert was seized with it. All the brethren passed the night in prayer for him, as looking upon the life of so holy a man most necessary for the edification of their community. In the morning they told him what they had been doing: at which, rising up, he called for his shoes and his staff, saying, Why do I lie here any longer; God will certainly hear the prayers of so many holy men. And so it was: for he quickly recovered.' It is also said that Boisl had foretold this plague three years before, and that he himself should die of it, which came to pass. It seems strange, therefore, that so many deaths should be detailed, and yet that there should be no record of the death of King Alcfred, if he perished in this plague.

" Besides the names of Oswy and Alcfred, the words Hwætræd, Wæthgar, and Alfwolthu seem to require a slight notice, as they resemble Anglo-Saxon names which we find recorded in history.

" The word Hwætræd is compounded of 'hwæt, wit, with, or wiht'—'quick or sharp';—and of 'ræd, rede, rad, or rod' (differing only in dialect), signifying 'counsel.' Hence Hwætræd means 'quick in counsel.' The word 'Hwætræd' occurs in the 'Codex Exoniensis,' 477, 5, in a poem called 'The Ruin.' Thorpe translates it as an adjective. Ethmüller, in his 'Dictionary,' gives the word as a proper name. A person named Withred, or Wihtred, is mentioned by Henry of Huntingdon (Lib. 4), and by the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle,' as King of Kent in the year 692. Higden mentions him as king in the year 686, and calls him 'Whitred,' the legitimate son of Egbert. This person may possibly be the party whose name is here recorded. At all events he appears to have entertained religious views and aspirations similar to those of Alcfred. Queen Eanfleda had been brought up at the court of Kent, and was sent for by Oswy in the year 651, and became his wife. This Withred, who might at that time be one of the young princes at that court, may have attended her on her marriage journey to Northumbria, or may have visited the Northumbrian court at some subsequent period, and thus have formed an attachment to Alcfred, and afterwards erected this cross to his memory.

" Wæthgar is derived from 'wæth,' 'quick or sharp;' and 'gar or gær,' 'a spear;' hence it signifies 'quick or expert in the use of the spear.' It may be also a proper name. A person named 'Wihtgar' (the h before the t) is mentioned in the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle,' anno 514, as lord of the Isle of Wight. He was the first to establish an Anglo-Saxon colony there. He also was the founder of Carisbrooke Castle. Camden (p. 180) says that it was called 'Whitgaraburgh,' from him, and now by contraction 'Caresbrook.' Of course he cannot be the person whose name is recorded on this monument, but we may draw an inference that such a name was in use among the Anglo-Saxons.

" Aelf," which, according to various dialects, as Camden says, is pronounced 'ulf, wolph, hulph, hilp, helfe, or helpe,' implies 'assistance.' 'Wold or wald' means 'a ruler or governor.' Hence the word Alfwold means 'an auxiliary governor.' But it may also be a proper noun, occurring under a variety of modes of spelling.¹ William of Malmesbury mentions a king of the East Angles, named 'Elwold,' soon after the time of Alcfred, who might possibly be the person mentioned here. Bede says that Sigebert, the king of the East Angles, often visited the court of Northumbria, and was converted to the Christian faith in A.D. 653, through the persuasion of Oswy. This Elwold may have attended Sigebert on some of these occasions, and thus have become acquainted with and attached to Alcfred, and hence from motives of friendship and regard he may have aided in erecting this pillar to his memory.

" We may now return to a further examination of the cross. Below the chief inscription is a figure which, as Bishop Nicholson says, represents the portraiture of a layman with a hawk or eagle perched on his arm.' Hutchinson describes it as 'the effigies of a person of some dignity, in a long robe to the feet, but without any dress or ornament on the head: on a pedestal against which this figure leans is a bird, which, we conceive, is a raffen, or raven, the insignia of the Danish standard. This figure seems designed to represent the personage for whom the monument was erected, and though accompanied with the raven, bears no other marks of royal dignity.' In Lysons it is thus spoken of, 'At the bottom on the west side is sculptured, in bas-relief, the figure of a man bareheaded, habited in a gown which reaches to the middle of his legs, holding a bird (most probably a hawk) on his hand, just above its perch.' To these nearly correct observations of the Lysons I would only add that the figure is not bareheaded, but appears to be covered with something resembling a close hood.

" The sculpture on the south side is divided into five compartments. In the bottom, central, and top divisions are magical knots. In the second are two vines intersecting each other, and in the fourth is another vine, in one of the curves of which a vertical sun-dial has been placed, somewhat resembling the dial placed over the Saxon porch on the south side of Bishopstone Church, in Sussex, and also resembling the Saxon dial placed over the south porch of Kirkdale Church, in the north riding of Yorkshire, a short description of each of which may be found at page 6 of the fourth volume of the 'Archæological Journal.' In the Bewcastle dial the principal divisions are marked by crosses, as on the fore-mentioned dials, which are considered examples of a very early date, the Kirkdale dial having been made, as it is supposed, between the years 1056 and 1065. On the plain surface near the top of the cross we have the several Runic characters LICE. The word 'lie' or 'lice' is very distinct, but of the remaining letters we have only the lower part. On the east side of the cross, where the sentence has probably been continued and completed, this plain surface is totally gone so as to leave no traces whatever, so that this part of the inscription may be considered as irreparably lost. The word 'lie' or 'lice' may, perhaps, be intended to express something respecting 'a dead body.' In the Dream of the Holy Rood (Archæologia, vol. 30, p. 31), the word 'lices' occurs, and signifies the corpse of our Saviour. The word 'lice' may also be part of the word 'liceman,' a body. Between the highest and the next compartment are traces of letters which I read thus: EGFRID [TH]ÆS, i.e., 'of Egfrid.' Egfrid was the son of Oswy, and brother of Alchfrid, and succeeded his father in the kingdom of Northumbria in the year 670, according to the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle.' Eddie (ch. 20) speaks of him as king of both Deira and Bernicia. Between the second and third divisions (from the top) of the decorated parts of the cross we find traces of Runes, which I venture to read thus:—RICES [TH]ÆS, i.e., 'of this kingdom,'—the kingdom of Northumbria. Between the third and fourth divisions we also find traces of characters thus:—KYNINGES, i.e., "king." Between the lowest and second compartment is another line of Runes which had been noticed by Spelman and others as previously described. I would suggest that it may be read thus:—+ FRU[MA]N GEAR, i.e., 'in the first year.' The four lines on this side of the cross are evidently connected with each other, and are to be read thus:—'fruman gear Egfrithu kyninges rices thæs,'—in the first year (of the reign) of Egfrid, king of this kingdom of Northumbria, i.e., A.D. 670, in which year we may conclude that this monument was erected. The form of date used on this monument may be considered rather peculiar. Some are of opinion (perhaps without sound grounds) that the era of the Incarnation was not introduced into England till the time of Bede, i.e., about a century after the erection of this pillar. It is a remarkable fact that we have only two original charters of the seventh century, and that the date of the Incarnation does not appear in either of these documents. We cannot infer, however, from this fact that such a mode of dating was then unknown. This would be pushing an argument to an unjust conclusion. Such an inference would be an abuse of the rules of logic. It may be remarked, however, that the mode of dating by the reignal years of the kings was frequently adopted, as must be well known to every one conversant in Anglo-Saxon diplomacy; and I think there can be little question but such a mode has been adopted on this monument.

¹ The first syllable occurs in the Anglo-Saxon charters under various modes of spelling. We find 'Ailf, Eilf, Alf, Aelf, and in a charter of Eadwig, A.D. 956, Ms. Lamb. 417, fol. 11, b, we have the name 'Aelfric,' which has a great resemblance to the orthography of the Newcastle cross."

"On the north side are also five compartments occupied by sculpture. In the highest and lowest divisions we find vines with foliage and fruit. Mr. Smith considers them 'as probably the Danish symbols of fertility, as Amalthæa's horn was among the Greeks. In the second and fourth divisions are two curiously devised and intricately twisted knots, often called 'magical knots,' and by some considered the 'knot-work of Scottish and Irish sculptors.' The third division is filled with a quantity of chequerwork.¹ Immediately above the lowest compartment is one line of Runic characters of which Bishop Nicolson, in his letter to Mr. Walker, says, 'Upon first sight of these letters I greedily ventured to read them 'Rynburn;' and I was wonderfully pleased to fancy that this word thus singly written must necessarily betoken the final extirpation and burial of the magical Rune, in these parts, reasonably hoped on the conversion of the Danes to the Christian faith.' The learned prelate also conjectured that the word might be 'Ryeburn,' which he takes in the old Danish language to signify 'a burial place of the dead.' The representation of these Runes given by the bishop is inaccurate, and he has evidently comprehended in it some of the flutings of the pillar. It is difficult to imagine how the bishop could fall into such an error, for the letters on this side of the monument are still perfect and legible, having been fortunately preserved from the effects of the weather by their proximity to the church, which has afforded them its friendly shelter; and in the manuscript journal which the bishop kept of his visitation in 1703 the Runes are more correctly traced by him. Mr. Smith dissents from the reading of the bishop, and rather thinks it to be a sepulchral monument of the Danish kings. He reads it 'Kuniburuk,' which, he says, in the old Danish language, imports 'the burial place of a king.' Mr. Smith, however, agrees with the bishop that it may also have been designed for a standing monument of conversion to Christianity which might have happened on the loss of their king, and each be mutually celebrated by it. But from the inscription on the west side it does not appear to have been intended for anything more than a memorial cross. Mr. Kemble, with Mr. Howard's plate as a guide, pronounced the word to be 'CYNEBURUG' or 'CYNIBURUH,' the proper name of a lady; and he attached some value to it as proving the inscription Anglo-Saxon, not Norse. After repeated and careful examinations the letters appear to me to be—KYNNEUR (TH) G, the name of the wife of Alchfrid. Eddie, who wrote about fifty years after the erection of the cross, does not mention the name of Alchfrid's queen; but in Stephenson's edition of Bede (who probably wrote his history about 100 years after the erection of the monument) we read of a lady whom he calls 'Cyneburga,' the daughter of Penda, King of Mercia, and the wife of Alchfrid. This is undoubtedly the same person, the name having somewhat changed in a century. In Ingram's edition of the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle,' in the year 656, we read of 'Kynburg' and 'Kyneswith,' the daughters of King Penda, and the sisters of Wulfhere, who, in that year, is said to have succeeded his brother Penda in the kingdom of the Mercians.

¹ "The chequerwork, according to Mr. Smith, is a Saxon symbol of fertility, as Amalthæa's horn was among the Greeks. In the second and fourth divisions are two curiously devised and intricately twisted knots, often called 'magical knots,' and by some considered the 'knot-work of Scottish and Irish sculptors.' The third division is filled with a quantity of chequerwork. Immediately above the lowest compartment is one line of Runic characters of which Bishop Nicolson, in his letter to Mr. Walker, says, 'Upon first sight of these' (the chequerwork) 'I thought of the Gauls and Britons long before the erection of this cross. The Gauls manufactured of woollen cloth spoken of by Diodorus (Lib. 5), and in Pliny's 'Natural History' (Lib. 8, ch. 48), was woven chequerwise, of which our Scottish plaids are perfect remains. Bishop Anselm's book concerning 'Virginity,' written about the year 650—the era of the cross nearly—when the art of weaving in this country was probably in a comparatively rude state, contains a distinct indication that chequered robes were then in fashion, and many of the figures in Rosellini's Egyptian work are dressed in chequered cloths. The cheques are still retained in common use to this day among the inhabitants of Wales, the descendants of the ancient Britons; and so great is their veneration for their ancient emblem that whenever a Welchman leaves his native mountains to reside in an English town, he is sure to carry this symbol along with him. Shops with the sign of the chequers were common even among the Romans, as is evident from the views of Pompeii presented by Sir W. Hamilton to the Antiquarian Society. A human figure in a chequered robe is sculptured on the side of an altar which was found in digging a cellar for the Grapes Inn, on the site of the Roman station at Carlisle, thus establishing the probability that the cheque was used among the Romans in Britain. We read also of netes et cinapazur in the days of King Solomon.—1 Kings, vii. 17."

"Between the second and third compartments (from the bottom) is another very indistinct line of Runes which I venture to read thus KYNESWI[TH]A. This was the name of the mother as well as a sister of Cyneburg. Of the mother nothing of note is recorded. From the two sisters being so frequently mentioned together, and from the similarity of their religious views and feelings, we may presume that they were strongly attached to each other, and that the sister's name is recorded here.

"Between the third and fourth compartments is another line of Runes which, though indistinct, appears to be—MYCNA KYNG, i.e., King of the Mercians. The above line of Runes appears to be connected with another line between the fourth and fifth divisions, which may be read thus, WULFHERE, who was a son of Penda, brother of Cyneburg, and king of the Mercians. He succeeded his brother Penda in the year 657, according to the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle.'

"On the plain surface near the top of the cross are Runic characters, consisting of three crosses and the word GESSUS. The three crosses may be emblematical of the Crucifixion, the central one appearing rather higher than the others. The word 'GESSUS' is very plain, all the letters being quite distinct except the g, and the part where the v and the s approach each other, which appears to have experienced some injury. The letter s has a little peculiarity in its form, the last stroke being carried up nearly to the same height as the top of the other letters. The letter s in the word 'Oswiung' appears to have the same form; as also some others on this monument; and there is one somewhat similar to it on the Ruthwell pillar. There is also an s of a similar form in the Runic inscription in Carlisle Cathedral. The word 'Gessus' is evidently connected with the fragments of the word 'Kristtus' on the west side, and has probably formed part of a sentence which has been completed on the two other sides, but of which only a small portion now remains."

The parsonage-house was re-built in 1837, at a cost of about £600.

There is a school, built by subscription in 1854, in union with the National Society. It is endowed with the interest of £164, which was bequeathed by the Rev. John Cleathing, of Thorpe Arnold, for the education of the poor of the parish of Bewcastle, his mother having been a native of the parish. The average attendance is about thirty children.

Among the single houses in this township having particular names, there is the Peclobill farm-house, an ancient building with very thick walls. It has been one of the old border fortresses, the word "pecl" meaning a tower—the tower on the hill.

There is a strong petrifying spring at a place called Lowgrains; also a well in the Parkhead estate, called Hobbie Noble's well; a spring on the side of the Bull-cleugh, impregnated with iron; and also a small water mill for grinding corn, on the river Kirkbeck, called Bewcastle Mill.

A celebrated moss-trooper, named Hobbie Noble, born at the Crew, is commemorated in "Scott's Border Minstrelsy" and other border songs.

There are two hills in this township called Black and White Preston, on the east end of the Greyfell Common, and another called the Pike at the west end. On the top of White Preston there are the foundations of a building, perhaps the place for a beacon, or a place of worship. On the west point of the Pike there are also traces of old foundations, where it was formerly customary to burn bonfires on Midsummer Eve, which were called Tanliteens, perhaps from the Celtic word "tan," a fire, implying that on this point of the hill the primitive inhabitants of the district were in the habit of celebrating some of their orgies in former days. The custom of burning the Tanliteens was observed at other places in this district, generally on high ground. There is a tradition that these fires were originally signals for the inhabitants to rise and murder the Danes in one night. If this tradition be correct, it may point to the general insurrection in the days of "Ethelred the Unready," when it is said that, in pursuance of secret instructions sent by the king over the country, the inhabitants of every town and city rose, and murdered all the Danes, who were their neighbours—young and old—men, women, and children—not a single Dane escaping. This massacre of Ethelred, however, is said to have taken place on the 13th of November, 1002—whereas the Tanliteens are burned on Midsummer Eve. It appears to have been the custom in former times throughout a great part of England to light bonfires on the eve of Midsummer-day, and afterwards to spend the night in gaiety and rejoicings. This custom is supposed by some to have originated in some superstitious observances connected, in pagan times, with the apparent recession of the sun from the earth at this season. An important and interesting custom was long observed in London on Midsummer Eve, namely, the setting of the city watch. The old chroniclers report the affair as very magnificent and splendid—the Lord Mayor usually proceeding in grand procession through the streets on the occasion—and the kings, with their trains, riding in royal state to witness the same. These customs may all have had one common origin.

BAILEY.

Bailey township extends from two and a half to six miles north-north-west of Bewcastle. The population in 1801 was 281; in 1811, 311; in 1821, 386; in 1831, 454; in 1841, 431, and in 1851, 397, who are dispersed over the township in single houses; there are no villages or hamlets. Agriculture is the principal employment. The soils are various, from a rich loam to a deep moss. The east and north parts of the township are sheep farms, the property of William Henry Charlton, Esq. The rateable value is £2,880 15s. The Maiden Way runs through the north-east part of the township. In a tumulus at Kemp or Camp Graves, some Roman coins have been found; tumuli were also found at Currack or Curragh, and Roanstrees and Nook.

This township is part of the manor of Nichol Forest, belonging to Sir James Robert George Graham, Bart., of Netherby. The estates are held under small yearly lord's rents, fines, and heriots. These customary rents are paid to the lord of the manor for the time being. A great part of the customary tenements in this township have been enfranchised, or purchased freehold on liberal terms by the tenants from the late Sir James Graham, Bart., and his son, the present baronet. The lord of the manor formerly held courts for this township in Nichol Forest twice a year, but since an act was passed in 1841, giving power to the lord's stewards to do the business at their offices, no courts were held till about two years ago, when a court was held as usual. The court rolls extend over a period of 126 years, beginning in 1733, and continuing regularly to the present time. The principal landowners are William H. Charlton, Esq., who owns nearly one half of this township; Sir Wastel Briscoe; Sir James Graham; Mr. John Dodgson, C.B., and William Hodgson, Esqs.; and several resident yeomen.

Bailey township possesses a school, called Nook School, so designated in consequence of land for the site being purchased by trustees from the proprietor of the Nook estate, in the said township. The school was erected by subscription in 1827, and will accommodate about sixty children. The master is supported by the quarter pence of his pupils, and a grant of £7 10s. a year, received for the last seven years, from the Presbyterian Synod of England. There is a small library at the school for the use of the scholars and others.

Glendew Hill, the highest in Bewcastle parish, is in this township. The Bailey Water runs in a southerly direction through the township, which is supplied by small rivulets or burns, and falls in the Black Line river, which stream forms a great part of the boundary of Bailey, Bellbank, and Nixon townships, as well as the boundary between Bailey township and that of Bellbank, in the parish of Stapleton. There are three small stone bridges, and some wooden foot bridges in the township. There is a mill on the Bailey Water generally called Roanstrées Mill.

Bailey possesses two ancient houses or halls, one called Sleedbeck, which was kept in repair by the owners, the Greenwell family, who resided here about a century ago; the other, called Ash, which was possessed by the Scotts, at about the same period; these are now converted into farm-houses, and are the property of Sir Wastel Briscoe, Bart., of Crofton Hall, near Carlisle. Bailey township is consolidated with the other townships of the parish for the support of the poor, but it repairs its own roads, &c.

BELLEANS.

Bellbank township contained in 1801, 284 inhabitants; in 1811, 344; in 1821, 415; in 1831, 485; in 1841, 445; and in 1851, 456. The Highstone Common in this township was surveyed and enclosed in 1815. A copy of the award and plan is deposited at Bewcastle church. The people live chiefly in single houses dispersedly. There is a small village at Kingry Hill, also at Nether Oakshaw, Shaw Head, and Clatterford. The people are generally of sober, temperate, and industrious habits. There are several public roads here, two of which lead to Scotland. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants. There is a small colliery at Clatterford, but the coals are of a very inferior quality, and the seam is only about fifteen inches. It employs about a dozen men and boys, and is the property of Sir James Graham. Mr. John Harbin being at present the tenant of this and the limeworks in the township of Bewcastle, at a rent of about £100 a year. The soil near the boundaries of the township is very good, being chiefly holm-land by the side of the rivers. The centre was a large moor, called the Highstone Common, which has been enclosed and brought into cultivation, and the principal part is undergoing the regular course of husbandry. The rateable value of the township is £1,581 10s. An old Roman road entered this township at the Wellington Gate, and proceeded in a north-west direction towards Tennies Hill in Scotland. The township is part of the manor of Bewcastle, and the estates are generally in the hands of separate proprietors. There is a school at Kingry Hill in union with the National Society, built by subscription in 1835, and attended by about thirty children.

NIXONS.

The population of this township in 1801 was 179; in 1811, 216; in 1821, 224; in 1831, 220; in 1841, 237; and in 1851, 193. A large tract of moorland on the north side of this township, called Black Line Common, was enclosed in 1820. A copy of the award and plan is deposited at the parish church. There is another large tract of moorland on the south-east side of the township, called White Line Common, which has not yet been enclosed. The population is dispersed in single houses. There is only one small village or hamlet, called the Flat, where Sir James Graham has a shooting lodge. Here it was customary to burn the Tanlites on Midsummer Eve. It is said that the whole of this township formerly belonged to people of the name of Nixon, hence its name. Agriculture is the principal occupation of the inhabitants. The people are in general of industrious and sober habits; there is no public-house in the township. The soil in the western portion of the township is generally good, and in a good state of cultivation; the remainder is moorland, but tolerably good for grazing. The rateable value is £1,192.

There is a large cairn at the Shield Knowe, and another at the Kilnpoth Knowe, also works at a place called the Cross, which is described at length in Mr. Maughan's account of the Maiden Way, published in No. 41 of the "Archæological Journal." The Maiden Way entered this township at the Crew Burn Gate, passed the Green Knowe, the Shield Knowe, the Cross, and left the township at a place called the Beakfoot, on the Black Line river. Another ancient road passed over the Bothrigg Hill, near the Row, and up to Limestead, where the foundations of an ancient building were dug up a few years since. There was formerly an ancient cross at a place called Cross Hill, a part of which still exists. This township is part of the manor of Bewcastle; the lands belong to a great number of small proprietors.

The Presbyterians, the only dissenters in the parish, have a chapel and manse for their minister at the Knowe, in this township; the chapel was erected in the year 1788, about which time the congregation was organised. The Rev. William Lander died in 1832, having been minister thirty-five years. The other ministers have been the Revs. John Wright, Alexander Anderson, Gavin Lochore, and James Laidlaw. The congregation was connected with the Church of Scotland till 1844, the year of the disruption of that establishment, when, Mr. Laidlaw demitting the charge, it joined the English Synod, then recently formed. On the 8rd of December of the same year the present minister, Rev. William Tweedie, was appointed. In 1854 the chapel underwent a complete renovation, at a cost of £120. It stands on a rising ground, has sittings for about 300, and is well attended — some of the people coming a distance of seven or eight miles over the roadless fell.

There is a very high point of land here called Christen-burg Crags, which commands a very extensive prospect to the west. A little way to the south-east of these crags is a spring, from which the water runs both to the east and to the west.

A person named Thomas Armstrong, otherwise "Sockie Tom," resided at a place called Bothrigg, the foundations of which may still be traced.

BRAMPTON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by a detached portion of Upper Denton, Laverstoke, and Walton; on the west by Irthlington; on the south by Hayton and Farlam; and on the east by Nether Denton. It lies between the rivers Gelt and Irthing, and possesses in general a light sandy soil, producing good crops of oats, barley, turnips, potatoes, &c. Good coal is found at Tindale Fell, in the vicinity of which is a small lake, called Tindale Tarn, about two miles in circumference, which abounds with perch, pike, &c. The parish comprises the townships of Brampton, Easby, and Naworth, whose united area is 16,970 acres.

BRAMPTON.

The area of this township is included in the parish returns; its rateable value is £7,642 1s. 7d. The population in 1801 was 1,682; in 1811, 2,043; in 1821, 2,448; in 1831, 2,842; in 1841, 2,754; and in 1851, 3,180.

The manor of Brampton is included in the barony of Gilsland, an account of which will be found under Naworth township.

An inquisition taken in the 31st Queen Elizabeth, gives us the following particulars of the manor of Brampton:—"The amount of the lord's rent, £43 13s. 1½d. There out-bailiff's fee, 13s. 4d.; and paid to Elinore Scroope, widow of Henry Lord Scroope, of Bolton, an annuity of £10 for life. It is stated that the lord had fourteen shops demised in Brampton. The tenants pay a money payment in lieu of bond days work, to wit, Brackenhill, 10½d.; Boitheby, 3s. 6d.; Esbie Magna, 2½d.; Esbie Parva, 1½d.; Coitbill, 7d.; Holmes, 7d.; Crockholmes, 1½d.; Woodside, 10½d.; Tarnhouse, 7d.; Waye, 1½d.; Holehowse, 7d.; Rowbank, 7d.; and Brampton Vill, 9s. 0½d. The demesnes and scite of Cumchae, with the mill, are set forth 72s. rent. Item: there is situate within this manor a faire castle, called Naworth Castle; it is of good strength and built four square, with a gate house to the same, one of the squares thereof hath never been finished further than the walls thereof, of two or three stories high. It is all covered with lead, and the said castle is situate about vij. miles from Scotland; it is now in very great decay in all parts, and the outhouses, viz., the stables, garners, and other howses of offices, are utterlie decayed. Item, there is within this manor one parke, called Naworth Parke; the same containeth by estimation, cc. acres; it is very barren lande; there is in it a greates store of olde oake wood, which is worth, if the same were presently sold, about ccl.; there are no deare in the said parke. Item: there is within the said manner one woode grounde, commonly called the chace of Brigwoode, containing by estimation, cc. acres, it is very barren ground; there is in it verie much good oke wood, which, if it were presentlie to be soulede, it were worth ccl., but there are no deare in it, for they were all wasted and destroyed longe sithence. Item: there are within this manner these commons, heaths, and moor-grounds, following, viz.:—Swerth Fell, Justing Steads, Sprinke Bank, Gelt Wood, Raw Banke Wraye, and Eastby Moore, containing in all by estimation, ccc. acres, wherein the tenants of this manner have common of pasture for their cattle, which, besides their commons, is worth, by the year, nothing. Item: there is kept, weekly, every Tewesday, at Brampton, a market, but there hath been no profit made of the tolle thereof, and there hath been in time past one faire every year upon Magdaline Day; but, of late years, there hath no faire been kept. Item: the late Lord Dacres, and his ancestors, have used to allow for a schoolmaster to teache a grammar schole in the towne of Brampton, the yearly stipend of viij^{li}, xiiij^s, iiii^d, the which hath ever since been continued and allowed, and one Jeffery Milnebourn is now scholmaster. Item: there are within this manner of customary tennants, farmers, and cottagers which do service upon the border of Scotland there, some with horse and furniture, some with nags, and some on foot, the number, four score and six, or thereabout. Item: the boulder of this manner of Brampton beginneth at Irthington Milne, and to a place called the Castle Steads Yeat, called the Wille Tree, and so in at the Castle Steads Yeat owte over Lumbrum, to the Castle Dyke of the Mundholme, and along the dyke eastward, without Irthing, unto the Abbie Bridge, and so up Irthing to the foot of the Castle Beck, and so up the Castle Beck to Denton Milne, and from thence to a place called the Hurrende Well, and so to the Foule Floshe; from thence westward as the little river runneth into Milton Beck at Milton; from thence southward up the Castle Beck to an olde dyke that parteth Farlam and Brampton, and so to the Red Yeat Foot, at Hanbauke; from thence along the south side of the Talken Tarne, and so to Helbecke, as the little river runneth from Talken Tarne to Helbeck; from thence down to Gelt, and down Gelt to Gelt Ryune, in Irthinge, and so up Irthinge, to Irthington Milne Foot.

"The customary tennents, &c., do claim to hould their tenements as customary tenants, for doing their service on the borders, and paying their fines and gressomes at the change by death, or otherwise, either of the lord or tennant; and there laid fines and gressomes have been sometimes two and sometimes three years' rent, according to the rate of the rent they pay for their said tenements. As for such tennants as come to the possession of their tenements by alienation, or marriage of daughter and heir, they have been accustomed to greater fines and gressomes, such as the lord and they could reasonably agree upon. And also concerning the certainty of their said customs, to whom the tenement ought to descend after the death of any tennant, whether to the heir male or to the heir general is not known; so that, in this case, the same hath been sometime allowed the one way, and sometime the other way, and never any certainty therein. Freeholders in Gilsland have been accustomed to pay for their reliefs, after the death of their ancestors, the rent of one year, if in socage tenure; but if they hold by knight's service, and be of full age at the death of their ancestors, shall pay for their relief after the rate of cs. for a knight's fee (with ward, marriage, and escheat, in case of felony or failure of issue, as in general). Item: the freeholders of this baronie, and if they do not inhabit, then their tenants have been accustomed, time out of mind, to serve upon the borders, under the direction, commandment, and appointment of the officer of the said baronie, for the time being, at their own proper costs and charges. Item: all other the tenants inhabiting in the several manners and townships within this baronie, being about the number of 600, ought, in respect of their farms, tenements, and cottages, to serve her majesty on the borders, at all times when need shall require, at their own proper costs and charges, some with horses, some with nags, and some on foote, with such furniture as in time past have been accustomed. Item: the lord of this baronie hath always been accustomed, time out of mind, to have and keep, at Brampton, a court every three weeks in the year, saving in the time of harvest, viz.:— from Lammas to Michaelmas; and two courts leets, the one within a month after Michaelmas, and the other within a month after Easter. And it hath likewise been accustomed that there should be kept one or two court barons every year, at every of the manners of Askerton Castle, Castle Carrock, and Cumrewe, within the said baronie, and the lord hath always been answered of all escheats, fines, amerciements, and profits presented for any offence, at any of the said courts, &c."

THE TOWN OF BRAMPTON.

The ancient market town of Brampton is situated in a vale, surrounded by considerable eminences, in 54° 57' north latitude, and 2° 44' west longitude, nine miles east-north-east of Carlisle, 311 miles north-by-west of London by road, and 360 miles by the Newcastle and Carlisle, and the Lancaster and Carlisle railways. The population of the town in 1851 was 3,074, of whom 1,521 were males and 1,553 females, inhabiting 557 houses, nine houses being uninhabited and six building. The principal occupation is the weaving of checks and ginghams for the Carlisle manufacturers; the collieries of the Earl of Carlisle also afford employment to a number of the inhabitants. There are several corn-mills in the neighbourhood of the town. The weekly market, held on Wednesday, is numerously attended, and is well supplied with corn and provisions. There are four annual fairs for sheep and cattle, viz., on the 29th of April, second Wednesday after Whit-Sunday, second Wednesday in September, and the 23rd of October. These markets and fairs are held in pursuance of charters obtained in the 37th Henry III. (1252-3) by Thomas de Multon, lord of Gilsland. The town being the principal one in the barony of Gilsland, contains many good houses and shops. It is one of the polling places for the eastern division of the county. Petty sessions are held here every alternate Wednesday, and a county court for the recovery of debts under £50.

We are in possession of little relating to Brampton in past ages. About a mile west of the modern town, upon a gentle eminence commanding a view in every direction of a most beautiful country, are the traces of a small Roman camp. The father of English topography, guided in some measure by the similarity of the names, fixed the ancient Bremetanacrum at Brampton; but Horsley, in consequence of the absence of Roman remains, demurred to the correctness of the conclusion.

It is not surprising that this camp escaped the attention of Horsley, as it is situated within the ancient park of Brampton, considerable portions of which were, a century ago, covered with tangled brushwood and venerable forest trees. Its trenches, though still visible, are fast disappearing; every time it is ploughed, the furrow is turned in the hollow of its fosse. Though hundreds of cart-loads of stones have been taken from it, the ground on which the camp stood is thickly strewn with stony fragments. Pottery, millstones, and Roman tiles have been found here. Besides individual coins which have occasionally been brought to light, an earthen jar containing a large number was turned up by the plough in 1826. It contained not fewer than 5,000 pieces, all of them of the lower empire. If Whitley Castle be the Alionis of the Notitia, this, as coming next in order, may be, as Camden conjectured, Bremetnacum. In the plain to the south of the camp are some remarkable tumuli. One mound of large dimensions, standing alone, is covered with oak trees. Three others of small size, and close to each other, are at the eastern extremity of the same field. Two of them are circular, and about twelve yards in diameter; the third is elongated, and measures about thirty-two yards in length. Whatever opinion we may form respecting the larger mound, there can be no doubt that the smaller ones are artificial barrows; the hollow made for the excavation of the soil for their formation is discernible. They do not appear to have been opened. Between the station and the town of Brampton may be noticed the faint traces of an earthen encampment of the usual Roman form; it is fast disappearing under the action of the plough.

At the east end of the town is a conical hill, about fifty yards high, called the Moat. The summit is level, about forty paces in diameter, and defended by a breastwork. Nothing certain is known respecting its origin. Hutchinson says its name "encourages the idea that it was used as a parley hill, or open court for the dispensing of justice; or it might be for the resort of the inhabitants of Brampton on the incursion of an enemy." It is now covered with trees.

About two miles south of the town, on the face of a rock overhanging the river Gelt, is a Roman inscription as follows:—"VALX • LEG • II AVG • COB • AIMP • SVB • AGRICOLA OPTIMO AMO • ET MAXIMO CONSULIBVS OPTIMA MERENTI MERENTIUS CERNI PAVL • PAVL • I PR O NATIONE." Some years ago another inscription was found on the Hayton side of the Gelt, a little higher up the river, but from its indistinctness could not be deciphered.

The history of Brampton for a considerable period was identical with that of the barony of Gilsland. During the rising of 1715 the adherents of the house of Stuart, having crossed the border, took up their quarters at Brampton, where Mr. Foster opened his commission from the Earl of Mar, which appointed him commander-in-chief of the army in England, and at the same time the Pretender was proclaimed. The insurgents subsequently set out for the south. The fate of the expedition is well known. In the more formidable rebellion of 1745 we find Prince Charles Stuart at Brampton, where he arrived about the 12th of November, making it his head quarters. In the Prince's household book there is a note that "when the prince was at Brampton he went one day to Squire Warwick's house, and dined there." This was on the 13th, on which day the troops were reviewed by the prince at Warwick Bridge. During this period siege was laid to Carlisle, which surrendered on the 15th of November; the keys of the city being presented to the Prince at Brampton by the mayor and corporation on their knees. On the 18th Charles Edward entered Carlisle.

CHURCH AND CHURCHYARD.

The old parish church of Brampton, dedicated to St. Martin, is in a dilapidated state, and is now only used on the occasion of funerals. It is a mile and a half from the town, on an eminence overlooking the river and vale of Irthing. The chancel, all that is now remaining, is very ancient. The churchyard contains a head-stone to the memory of a vicar who died so long ago as 1346. In August, 1858, a fine old tombstone, or rather the fragment of one, was discovered on the north side of the churchyard, by the sexton of the parish, while digging a grave for a person who had died in the workhouse. The slab thus found presents evidently one side of an altar-tomb raised to some person of distinction in olden time. The stone is un-inscribed, but displays three shields of arms, enclosed within quatre-foil panels of the Early English period. The first is the bend dexter, chequy, of the De Vaux; the central shield has the three escallop shells of the Dacres, lords of Gilsland (one of the most graceful of cognizances); and the third and last on the slab presents a cross-fleurée, with an escallop shell in the first upper quarter of the shield,—the cognizance of two old Cumberland families of importance, now extinct,—those of Lamplugh and Carlisle. The Howard "crosslet" does not appear. A notion having got abroad that this curiosity was the long-lost tombstone of Lord William Howard of Naworth, it was carefully inspected by the Earl of Carlisle, who at the time was staying at Naworth—and by many others. The stone is of much earlier date, however, than the time of Lord William Howard, and could never have been laid over the remains of Lord William, who died at "Naward," as proved by an "inquisitio post mortem," only in October, 1640. Lord William having been clearly ascertained to have died at Naworth towards the commencement of a very troublous time, there can be little doubt that he was quietly interred in the chancel at Lanercost by the side of Lady Elizabeth, his spouse, and amongst the stately tombs of ancestors of hers. The old tombs of the Dacres, as well as those of other lords of that period, were much pulled to pieces during the civil war of King Charles' time. The old mediæval stone we have been describing, but from which we have somewhat digressed, is now lying in situ, where it was discovered, and where we hope it will continue to remain. In 1788 the greater portion of the old parish church was taken down, and the materials used in the erection of the new church in Brampton, which was considerably enlarged in 1827, at an expense of £1,800, when a new organ and an excellent peal of six bells were added; the organ and five of the bells being the gift of the Rev. Thomas Ramsay, the then vicar. The present, or new church, is a plain stone building, capable of accommodating about 600 persons.

At the foundation of the priory of Lanercost, the church of Brampton was given to that community by Robert de Vallibus, and was soon after appropriated thereto; and about the year 1220 Hugh Bishop of Carlisle endowed it with the "whole altarage and the tithes, oblations and obventions belonging to the said altarage, and the lands belonging to the same, with the tithes thereof." In the Valor of Pope Nicholas, taken in 1291, the church of Brampton is valued at £18, and the vicarage at £8. In the taxation of Edward II. the church is valued at £1, and the vicarage at nothing, because it was totally destroyed. In the King's Book the vicarage is rated at £8. In 1777, when Brampton Common was enclosed, 210 acres were allotted to the vicar in lieu of all tithes; $7\frac{1}{2}$ d. from each house, paid in lieu of hens, hemp, flax, and smoke. He had also mortuaries and surplice fees, and the tithe of hay of Talkin township, in Hayton parish. The latter has since been commuted for a rent charge of £50. He has likewise about 105 acres of ancient glebe, adjoining the old church, the whole producing a net annual value of about £400. After the dissolution of the religious houses, this church, with its advowson, was granted (amongst the other possessions of Lanercost Priory) to Sir Thomas Dacre, from whom they have come to the Earl of Carlisle, the present patron. The parish registers commence in 1663.

VICARS.—Richard de Caldecotes, 1344; John Engge, 1446; John de Hayton, 1504; William de Kirkby, 1573; Christopher Davies, died 1563; John Rudal, 1565; Robert Beck, 1579; Henry Hudson, 1600; William Warwick occurs 1644; John Burnand, ejected, 1662; Philip Fielding occurs 1670; John Cockburn, 1692; Richard Culceth, 1702; Theophilus Garencieres, 1714; John Thomas, 1721; William Plasket, 1747; Robert Wardale, 1750; Charles Stoddart, 1773; Richard Hair, —; William Richardson, 1792; Thomas Ramsay, 1795; Christopher Benson, 1841.

The vicarage is about a mile south of the town.

The Independent Chapel, situated in Back-street, was erected in 1818, at a cost of upwards of £1,000, inclusive of the purchase of the site, and some alterations. It is a plain commodious structure, capable of accommodating about 250 persons. For about three years previous to the erection of the chapel, the Independents of Brampton met for worship in private rooms in the town. The Rev. Robert Joy was the first resident minister; his respective successors have been John Williams, William Merrifield, Mr. Wardlaw, John Baker, Mr. Yuil, T. B. Attenborough, John Smith, George Crowther Smith, and Richard Thompson, the present minister. There is a Sunday school beneath the chapel.

The Presbyterian Church is a neat Gothic structure, built in 1854, on the side of the manse, close to the old church, which is now used as a school. The cost of erection amounted to £1,100, £800 of which was contributed by Mr. Barbour, of Manchester, to commemorate whose princely munificence a marble tablet has been placed in the church by the congregation. The church possesses transepts, and will accommodate about 220 persons. The Presbyterian congregation of Brampton dates its origin from 1662, in which year, on the passing of the Act of Uniformity, the Rev. J. Burnand, then vicar of Brampton, was ejected from the living; but many of his people adhered to the Presbyterian discipline, and founded a separate congregation, which is now connected with the Presbyterian synod of England, and forms a part of the Presbytery of Cumberland. In addition to a house and garden for the use of the minister, the church is endowed with five acres of land near Brampton. The Rev. Peter Taylor is the present minister.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel is in Back-street. It was erected in 1823 at a cost of about £400, and has sittings for 400 persons. Primitive Methodism was established in Brampton in the year 1822, when the late William Clowes, one of the founders of this connexion, visited the town, and after several times preaching to large audiences in the open air, was instrumental in erecting the present chapel.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, in Brampton Lane, is a substantial building, erected in 1836, at a cost of £1,100, and will accommodate about 400 persons. A Sunday school is held in a room beneath the chapel. Wesleyanism may date its origin in Brampton from the time of John Wesley, who several times visited the town and neighbourhood.

SCHOOLS.

The National Schools, situated at the north-east of the town, occupy a neat commodious building (with teacher's house attached), erected by subscription in 1856, at a cost of £1,400, towards which a government grant of £700 was obtained. There are class-rooms, which are furnished with all the accessories of the modern system of education. The school will accommodate about 300 children; the average attendance is 200. It is under government inspection, and is conducted by a master, a sewing mistress, and four pupil teachers.

The Presbyterian School is held in the old chapel, and attended by about forty children.

There is an Infant School in Back-street, which was established in 1825. It is supported by subscription, and has an average attendance of seventy children.

Croft House Academy is an extensive classical and commercial school, under the superintendence of Mr. Joseph Coulthard.

TOWN HALL, &c.

The Town Hall, which stands in the centre of the market-place, is a neat octagonal edifice, with an ornamented cupola, in front of which is a clock. It was erected in 1817 by the Earl of Carlisle, on the site of the old hall. The poultry, butter, and egg market occupies the lower part of the building. The hall is a good-sized room, in which the Earl of Carlisle's courts for the barony of Gilsland are held at Easter and Michaelmas.

The Magistrates' Office and Police Station occupy one building, which was erected in 1856, on the site of the old National School, at the lower end of the town.

The Savings Bank, held in Back-street, was established in 1816, and has proved of the greatest utility to the town and neighbourhood. The total deposits in 1858 amounted to £12,112 11s., belonging to 339 depositors, and two charitable and three friendly societies. The friendly and benefit societies in Brampton are two lodges of Oddfellows and one court of Foresters.

The Mechanics' Institution, established in 1850, is also held in Back-street. It comprises a newsroom and library, the former being well supplied with newspapers and periodicals, and the latter containing 800 volumes. It is quite self-supporting. The number of members is nearly 150, each of whom pays from one shilling to five shillings per quarter.

The Working Men's Reading Room, which is also in Back-street, was re-established in April, 1858. The library comprises about 2,400 volumes, in the various departments of literature and science. There are about eighty members, each of whom pays one penny a week.

Brampton is lighted with gas, works being erected in the town in 1836, by a company of shareholders.

The Earl of Carlisle has about fourteen miles of railway to his various coal-pits in this locality; there is also a branch line for the conveyance of goods and passengers, from the Brampton coal staith to the Milton station on the Newcastle and Carlisle railway.

Amongst the eminent natives of Brampton we may mention James Wallace, Esq., who, from a very humble position, raised himself by his talents and industry to the office of attorney-general; and Dr. Guy Carleton, bishop of Bristol, who suffered much for his Royalist opinions during the time of the Commonwealth.

THE PARISH UNION.

The Brampton Poor Law Union is divided into three sub-districts, viz.: Hayton, comprising Cumrew Inside, Cumrew Outside, Carlatten, Northseugh with Moor-thwaite, Cumwhitton, Castlecarrock, Hayton, Talkin, Faugh and Fenton, and Little Corby; Brampton, embracing Brampton, Easby, Naworth, West Farlam, East Farlam, Midgeholme, Nether Denton, Upper Denton, part of Waterhead, and part of Burtholme; Walton, including the remaining part of Waterhead, the remaining part of Burtholme, Kingwater, Askerton, Irthington, Newby, Laversdale, Newtown, Low Walton, and High Walton. The area of the union is 95,473 acres. Its population in 1851 was 11,923, of whom 5,792 were males, and 5,531 females. The number of inhabited houses at the same period was 2,078; eighty-four were uninhabited, and thirteen building. The income for the year ending 25th March, 1859, was £2,090 15s. 6d.; and the expenditure for the same year £3,118 3s. 7d. Situated a little to the south of the town is the Workhouse, which is capable of accommodating eighty paupers; its number of inmates at present (October, 1859) is fifty-eight.

TAXES.

The rateable value of this township is £1,243 5s.; its area is returned with that of the parish. In 1801 it contained 135 inhabitants: in 1811, 136; in 1821, 96; in 1831, 98; in 1841, 84; and in 1851, 97. Easby belongs chiefly to the Earl of Carlisle, and W. P. Johnson, Esq.

There is a stone bridge of two arches at Cambeck, and at Coathill is a chalybeate spring. The township consists chiefly of a few dispersed dwellings, and the small hamlet of Crooked Holme, one mile and a half north-north-east of Brampton.

NAWORTH.

The rateable value of Naworth is £2,599 17s.; its area is included in the parish returns. The population in 1801 was 308; in 1811, 364; in 1821, 377; in 1831, 405; in 1841, 466; and in 1851, 539; who reside in the small hamlet of Naworth, and a few dispersed dwellings.

"Naworth Castle is situated amidst very picturesque scenery, about twelve miles to the north-east of Carlisle, in what was an almost roadless country when wardens of the marches lived at Naworth, but is now within sight from the railway between Newcastle and Carlisle. Other parts of rocky Cumberland can boast the grandeur of mountain, lake, and flood; but the gentler beauties of woodland scenery surround the ancient towers of Naworth. Its battlements rise gray with age, and in full harmony with the scene around them, islanded by dark woods, amidst the wide sweep of an ancient park and chase. The view is especially striking on the approach through the park from the adjacent town of Brampton, and the road in some parts borders a deep dell, traversed by a murmuring stream, and clothed by ancient oaks. From these heights the gray abbey of Lanercost is seen embosomed by wooded hills beyond the park, and the river Irthing flows by the green holms of the Abbey Church. On the south-east of the castle the picturesque undulations of the park are crowned by bands of trees that rise against the sky; on the south the land, partly covered by plantations, slopes upward to the distant ridges of Cross Fell; on the north and west a country diversified by wood, pasture, and tillage, stretches to the purple hills; and on the north-west the landscape melts in the distant tide of Solway.

"The western, northern, and eastern sides of the castle rise from the steep declivities of a wild and wooded ravine. Two streamlets, descending from lonely glens, flow from opposite directions on the eastern and western sides, and unite in a rocky dell at a short distance under the northern ramparts of the castle, flowing thence to the Irthing through a deep and winding glen, the channel of the stream overhung by mossy rocks and wooded banks. A footpath descends through the woods, which enables the visitor to enjoy the romantic scenery of the glen and the low wild music of the gushing stream, in his walk from Naworth to Lanercost.

This path joins a road which is carried over the Irthing by an old bridge of two wide elliptical arches. A carriage road, which makes a circuit through the park on the western and northern sides of the castle, also conducts from its gates to the river. Standing on that bridge, the spectator surveys a country that has many historic memories. On the north-east are the footsteps of the Romans; for, on the high moorland wastes towards Bewcastle are remains of the paved Roman road, and the country on the south, within a short distance from Naworth, was traversed by the Roman wall.¹ Lower down the river, and about three miles distant from Naworth, is the site of a Roman station, within the fortifications of which the Norman lords of Gilsland afterwards held their place of strength. The secluded valley which now hears

'No sound but Irthing's rushing tide,' was often the scene of martial gatherings when it owned their iron sway. Yonder, on the green holms of St. Mary, the gray pile and cloister of Lanercost is a venerable monument of the power that civilised a turbulent and warlike age; and beneath the antique gateway, now so attractive to the tourist, the early benefactors of Lanercost, and many lords of the adjacent hills, passed to a holy peace which the world could not bestow. Under that gateway, and on the bridge that now spans the broad stream of Irthing, Edward I. was frequently seen when his Scottish campaigns brought him to reside at Lanercost; and the martial followers arrayed in his train mingled on this road with the white-robed monks, for their seclusion was invaded during months together by the rude sounds of military array,

'When on steep and on crag
Streamlet haunter and flag,
And the pennons and plumage of war.'

"Passing from these scenes and their associations to Naworth Castle itself, we find its aspect worthy of its situation.

"Cumberland is not peculiar in regarding Naworth Castle as one of the most interesting monuments of the feudal age that can be found in England; and, although considerable portions of the fortress have been lately rebuilt, it presents a most characteristic specimen of the stronghold of a great border warden in days

'When English lords and Scottish chiefs were foes';

But

'The martial terrors long have fled
That frown'd of old around its head.'

¹ The Roman Maiden Way takes a course nearly north and south, and comes within a mile of Naworth. It is there a road twelve feet broad, paved with stones.

for, no longer paid by armed defenders and maintained with barbican and moat in stern defiance of the foe, it has become the peaceful residence of an amiable and accomplished nobleman eminent in the arts of peace. This stronghold of a martial race passed to the great historical house of Howard by the marriage of the famous 'Belted Will,' of border story, to Lady Elizabeth Dacre, the heiress of Naworth and Gilsland, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and became the inheritance of 'the Carlisle branch' of that illustrious house. Lord Carlisle generally passes some part of every year in this ancient castle, and the influences by which he detains his visitors who come to Naworth are of a very different kind from those which were employed by his ancestors in the days of border fray.

"Naworth Castle has features of interest peculiar to itself. We may see in many parts of England monuments of former power as ancient, but none so characteristic of the times of border warfare. We may see in many counties feudal castles, but how many of them have descended to strangers, and have ceased to stand in castellated pride! Such monuments, when falling to ruin under the slow siege of time, not only exemplify the change of manners, but proclaim the transitory state of man's dominion. At Naworth Castle, on the contrary, we see the fortress of the border chieftain not only inherited by his lineal descendant, but maintained, with a just pride, in that stern character of architecture which is in keeping with the memories of its ancient walls. Naworth Castle, though adapted for a residence in modern comfort, happily has not undergone the destructive process of modernisation, for in his restorations Lord Carlisle has carefully cherished the features of ancestral age that have here been 'sheltered under the wings of time.' But while the scene of the Lord Warden's martial rule and the very towers in which he dwelt, are preserved as far as is now possible, in their ancient state, marked by the scars of olden warfare, the features of the stern old time are on the walls alone. Modern comforts and refinements pervade the chambers of Naworth Castle; and its noble owner's care has been,—

All to improve and nothing to destroy.

"At Naworth Castle, therefore, we see in the outer walls, and the massive towers that rise at the angles of its southern front, the stronghold of the Dacres of Gilsland. It was in the reign of Edward III. that the inheritor of the ancient barony of Gilsland, forsaking the old castle of its former lords, determined on building a stronger and more stately fortress, and came to Naworth to raise its 'wood-environed towers.'

"It may be interesting now to glance briefly at the history of Gilsland from the days of its Norman lords, in whose time no walls of stone were seen amidst the forest slopes and on the rocky dells of Naworth. At a period soon after the Norman Conquest, Naworth and the rest of the hills and vales of Gilsland were the inheritance of a thane whose stronghold was in the Roman station already mentioned, known in modern times as Castle Steads, and situated about three miles from Naworth. The rude keep-tower in which the Cumbrian chieftain resisted the Norman grantee was probably not unlike Thirlwall Castle, the ruins of which crown a steep bank¹ by the road called the Maiden Way which led to Castletown, and was guarded near Thirlwall by a square Roman watch-tower, the lower courses of the masonry of which can still be traced. Thirlwall Castle seems to have been partly built with Roman masonry, and so no doubt was the stronghold of this early lord of Gilsland, which stood within what had been a military camp of the Romans. It overlooked the vale of Irthing, at that time a wild, uncultivated, and very thinly-peopled tract of country. In the reigns of the Anglo-Norman kings, and for a long period after, a great part of Cumberland was still covered by the primeval forest. From the lonely towers on Irthing the howl of the wolf was no doubt frequently heard; the eagle had not forsaken the crags that were still crested by the Roman watch-towers; through the unfrequented thickets of the neighbouring country the wild boar and the red deer roamed undisturbed by man; and the wild cattle might be seen in the pathless woods and on the adjacent wastes.

"Cumberland, it will be remembered, was a part of the kingdom of Scotland when William the Conqueror made it subject to the Norman arms. It was then bestowed on Ranulph de Meschines, a valiant follower of the king, who dispossessed the native owner of Gilsland, and conferred his lands on Hubert, a companion in arms, who took the name of De Vaux—in history De Vallibus—from the possessions of his family in Normandy. The time of Hubert de Vallibus was a time of turbulence and warfare, and the Norman grantee could with difficulty hold what the sword had won. The country was invaded and wasted by Malcolm King of Scotland in 1070, and a period of eighty years from that time elapsed before Cumberland was finally wrested from the Scottish power. The English, meantime, endeavoured to make good their conquests by fortifying the positions they had gained. As early as 1072 King William had occupied Carlisle, and began to fortify that ancient city of the Britons. In 1092—the period which saw the rise of the Norman keep called the New Castle upon Tyne—William had built the castle at Carlisle, and, ‘as colonist rather than conqueror,’ he sent a great number of the Saxon population from the south to inhabit and cultivate the neighbouring country; but in the succeeding thirty years, such were the irruptions of the Scots, it had become necessary to rebuild the walls and castle of Carlisle. In the reign of Stephen, David the Scottish King seized Carlisle, when he invaded England to espouse the cause of the Empress Maud; and the castle of Carlisle was allowed to remain, by treaty, in the government of Scottish princes until 1157, during which period the title of the ancient owner of Gilsland, or rather of his successor, seems to have been maintained by the Scottish allies, as long as they had the power, against the successors of Hubert de Vallibus.

¹ Opposite to the railway, at a little distance to the west of the Green-head station.

“One of the first acts of Henry II. on regaining Cumberland was to confirm to Hubert de Vaux ‘all the land which Gilbert, son of Bueth, had held on the day of his death:’ this comprised the lordship of Gilsland.

In the 11th Henry II. Hubert de Vallibus was succeeded by Robert his son, and this new ‘lord of the hills’ was a person of no small power and eminence in that reign. He bore the sword of justice as a judge-itinerant, and also served the state in martial capacities. As governor of Carlisle, he defended the castle against the long siege of William the Lion of Scotland in 1174. He rendered more lasting service to posterity by founding the priory church of Lanercost. Thus, it may be said of Robert de Vallibus, that he consolidated the realm of his sovereign, and opened a new one for his Saviour.

“Of the circumstances that led him to found the priory of Lanercost, a story has been given by county historians which stains the character of De Vallibus, but seems to have no sufficient foundation. Probably it was he who, before that event, built at Irthington the castle which became the stronghold of the lords of Gilsland, the old tower at Castle Steads having, as it would seem, become unfit for the residence of a powerful baron, in a country so frequently invaded by the Scots.

“But a dark tale of murder has been connected with the desertion of Castle Steads, and the foundation of Lanercost. It is said that Robert de Vallibus treacherously invited the rival lord of Gilsland to Castle Steads, and there slew him, and that by way of expiation he founded the priory of Lanercost, and endowed it in part with the very patrimony which had been the occasion of the murder. It is further alleged that, after committing outrage on the laws, he devoted himself to the study of them, and forsook the sword. Now it is unquestionable that the tower of Castle Steads was conferred on the monks of Lanercost, and the tradition is that the walls were razed to the ground, and the site (which was not to be again built upon) sown with salt, according to the old ecclesiastical usage in cases of blood-shedding. But, although the rival claimant’s blood may have been shed at Castle Steads, the Norman judge seems guiltless of it. The priory of Lanercost was founded not later than 1169; but for years after as well as before that event, he occurs in offices of trust and dignity, and in 1174 had not forsaken arms, for the city of Carlisle in that year witnessed his military prowess, as already mentioned.

“In 1176, when justices itinerant were for the first time appointed to go through England, he was associated in the office of judge for the northern counties, with the great Ranulph de Glanville, Henry’s chief justiciary, but in his case arms never yielded to the gown. His wealth and possessions were great, and he made a noble use of them in founding Lanercost Priory, and rearing the Cross in his native vales of Gilsland, amongst a turbulent population who lived amidst the dark shadows of pagan superstition. In that act of piety he designed that the light of the Christian faith should for ever shine over his Cumbrian hills, and light all future generations to the life of the world to come. The monastery has shared the fate of the other monasteries of England; but such permanence God has gifted even here to works done for the honour of His name, that Christian rites have been maintained in the vales of Gilsland from the reign of Henry II. to the present time. The temporal honours and possessions of the founder have meantime descended on strangers, his castle has vanished, his martial deeds that stirred the hearts and tongues of his contemporaries have passed into oblivion, and all things have so changed, that the soldier-judge, attired in mail and speaking Norman-French and attended by a retinue uncouth in aspect, would inspire astonishment could he ascend the seat of justice in the courts of Queen Victoria; but the brief charters of donation, given under his seal to a little colony of Augustinian monks transplanted from Hexham to Lanercost, have maintained the church he founded for a period of nearly seven hundred years. As the church of the parish of Abbey Lanercost it happily still exists, but its once glorious choir is roofless and shattered, the high tombs of its benefactors are swept by the winter’s storms, and the edifice presents a dull and mournful contrast in the closed doors of its spacious nave—the only portion of the church preserved—and the ruined architecture of its choir, to the animated and solemn scene that was witnessed at Lanercost when it saw the daily worship of a large monastic fraternity, and was the place of resort of the adjacent country, when sovereigns and nobles bowed before its altars, and perhaps acknowledged that the world had not anything to offer that could compare with its heavenward devotions and its holy peace.

"About the period of King John's accession, Robert de Vallibus, after a life passed in the turbulent scenes of three warlike reigns, was laid for his final rest before the altar he had 'gifted for his soul's repose.' His brother Ranulph succeeded to the barony of Gilsland, and died in the 1st of John's reign, leaving Robert his son and heir, who joined a crusade in the 6th Henry III., but lived to return from the spirit-stirring scenes of the Holy Land to the sequestered valleys of his native county, and to marry Margaret, daughter of William de Greystoke by Mary de Merlay, heiress of Morpeth. He was succeeded by his son Hubert, who died leaving only a daughter, Maud, by whose marriage to Thomas de Multon, lord of Burgh-on-Solway, the barony of Gilsland became vested in that family. Thomas de Multon, who thus became lord of Gilsland, was eldest son of Thomas de Multon, justiciar of Henry III., and through his mother, the daughter and co-heiress of Hugh de Morville, inherited the great possessions of the De Morville family, whose chief seat was Kirk Oswald Castle. Thomas de Multon, husband of the heiress of De Vaux, died in 1270, and his great-grandson, also a Thomas de Multon, succeeded, in whose time occurred those ravages by the Scots in which, after burning Hexham Abbey in 1296, they returned through Gilsland and destroyed a great portion of Lanercost Priory. This Thomas de Multon died in 1313, and Margaret, his only child, inherited his great possessions,—

‘Herself the solitary scion left
Of a time-honour'd race.’

It was by an alliance with this heiress that the noble family of Dacre acquired the barony of Gilsland, and the alliance was effected in a manner worthy of that chivalrous race. Margaret de Multon was only thirteen years of age when, by her father's death, she became his heiress. She had been betrothed by him to Ralph de Dacre, by a contract made between her father and William de Dacre, the father of Ralph. The wardship of the young lady was prudently claimed by Edward II., and she was entrusted to the care of Beauchamp Earl of Warwick. We are not told whether the flower of Gilsland preferred her suitor and her native mountains to the alliance destined for her by the king; but certain it is that, when she was in her seventeenth year, the young heiress was carried off in the night-time from Warwick Castle by her adventurous suitor Ralph de Dacre, who was rewarded for his chivalrous exploit by marrying her, and acquiring her great possessions. This was in 1317.

"Naworth is mentioned in historical documents for the first time in the reign of Edward II., and in connection with the name of Dacre. The successors of De Vaux had probably made Kirk Oswald their principal abode, the castle at that place having been the chief seat of the De Multon family, to whom it had descended from the De Morvilles, its original owners. Until some time in the reign of Edward III., the old castle of Irthington was, however, maintained as chief mansion of the barony of Gilsland. Some kind of residence appears to have existed at Naworth before 1335, when Ralph de Dacre obtained the king's permission to convert it into a castle, which he was probably led to do by finding Naworth a more suitable situation than Irthington for the strong and stately fortress which the baron of Gilsland had resolved to build.

"In the summer of 1335 the youthful Edward III. was in these parts—with a great army collected against the Scots; and there is reason to believe that he was the guest of Ralph de Dacre at Irthington on the 27th July, 1335. He there granted to him a licence of that date, which we find on the patent rolls,² by which the king authorised him to fortify and castellate 'his mansion of Naward [it is so described in the patent] with walls of stone and lime, and to hold the same so fortified to himself and his heirs for ever.' From this time Irthington Castle was abandoned, and its materials are said to have been used for the new structure then in course of erection at Naworth; and the mound, on which in Norman fashion the keep was built, is all that has remained of Irthington Castle in the memory of man.

"The character of the new stronghold at Naworth was in keeping with its purpose as well as with its situation; and in its form Ralph de Dacre seems to have followed the plan of his paternal castle on the river Dacre—the place from which his ancient line had sprung. Built ‘In the antique age of bow and spear,

And feudal rapine clothed in iron mail,’

Naworth Castle needed capacity to receive a garrison, and strength to resist the malice of their foes. The country around was in those days frequently the scene of international war, and was constantly subject to invasion by predatory hordes living north of the English border, descended, indeed, from the same Saxons and Scandinavians who had inhabited Cumberland, ² Rot. Pat. 9 Edward III. n. 20.

but who were accustomed to plunder the pastoral inhabitants of the vales. The proprietors of the land were a warlike and unlettered aristocracy, who found it necessary to intrench themselves in fortresses; and it was only under protection of the castle that their tenants could cultivate the neighbouring country. The structure and defences of Naworth bore testimony to a state of things and to modes of life totally unlike those amidst which we live; and times of turbulence and insecurity have left their impress on its walls. Lord Dacre built his castle in quadrangular form, inclosing an extensive court-yard; he defended it on the south—the only side on which it was accessible,—by a double moat, and a barbican guarded the drawbridge. He raised at the angles of the south front massive and lofty battlemented towers, from which the red beacon-fire may have often blazed, a signal to the neighbouring hills. He built a strong curtain-wall which enclosed the outer court; and a lofty archway opening from the path on the edge of the deep ravine gave access to the interior quadrangle, which, with its massive walls of red freestone, pierced by a number of narrow, pointed windows, and two or three low-arched doorways, was full of the stern yet picturesque features of the Edwardian fortress, moulded by the situation of the border castle. And so,—

'When English lords and Scottish chiefs were foes,
Stern on the angry confines Naworth rose;
In dark woods islanded its towers looked forth,
And frown'd defiance on the growing north.'

Its interior arrangements—its long warder's gallery, through which was the only access to the chieftain's tower—its many staircases—its mural chambers—the few and narrow windows of its outer walls—and its gloomy prison-vaults—all proclaimed the feudal age, and their adaptation to the martial manners and rude chivalry of the border five hundred years ago, when—

'—Dacre's bill-men were at hand;
A hardy race on fighting bred,
With kirtles white and crosses red;
Arrayed beneath the banner tall
That stream'd o'er Acre's conquer'd wall.'

"Naworth Castle was marked by all the features of the time when lords of marches there held sway, surrounded by armed retainers, and were wont to issue forth for the chastisement of some lawless foray, or the defence of the neighbouring country:—

'When, as the portals wide were flung,
With stamping hoofs the pavement rung;
And clattering through the hawthorn green,
Shone helm, and shield, and spear.'

"From the time of the Plantagenets down to the dynasty of the Stuarts, the inhabitants of the country were exposed to an almost constant defensive warfare against the predatory Scots and against the robbers who inhabited the border lands, and were continually organised in a sort of militia for defence, originally against the Scots, and afterwards against the moss-troopers. When Naworth Castle was built, and for centuries after that time, the country around was most uncivilised. The land was cultivated with difficulty, and a lawlessness of manners prevailed. Even on the English side there were clans and families whose occupation it was to plunder their neighbours; and the native peasantry of Tynedale, and of the more remote wild dales of the border, were a race almost barbarous in manners. Yet we are told that, with habits of constant depredation, the borderers combined a rude spirit of chivalry, and were inured to hardship and to danger. Two centuries after Naworth Castle was built, we find ordinances for public safety, which required that many hundreds of persons should be continually employed in the night-watches, and form a sort of cordon of defensive militia. The rest of the neighbourhood was obliged to sally forth at any hour upon occasion, and follow the fray, on pain of death. Such was the state of things from before the reign of Edward I. down to the middle of the seventeenth century; and at no period were the inhabitants of the marches in a worse state of insecurity and lawlessness than at the close of the sixteenth century—the time when Naworth became the property of Lord William Howard—that politic and martial chieftain, both scholar and soldier, whose name has given an undying celebrity to Naworth Castle, and who has justly received the honourable distinction of 'The Civiliser of the English Borders.' Happily for us—

'Long rolling years have swept those scenes away,
And peace is on the mountain and the fell;
And rosy dawn and closing twilight gray
Hear but the distant sheepwalks' tinkling bell.'

And if the condition of the people and the country beyond the walls of Naworth was in ancient times so different from what it is at present, the life of the feudal nobles themselves was equally unlike that of which their successors have any experience. The great lords resided chiefly in their castles, leaving them only when required (which in former times was very often) to attend the king in his wars or his parliaments.

"In these days of rapid communication we think with astonishment of times when the ancient forest yet overspread much of the country between here and

London; when there were few roads, no coaches, and no posts; when inns were unknown, and the guest-houses of the hospitable monasteries, or the castles and the mansions of the great, were the wayfarer's only refuge; when a journey from Naworth to London often occupied as long a time as is now required to go to Rome, and when (as an historian remarks) the traveller might encounter between Carlisle and London as many perils by floods and robbers as he could now find on a journey across the Alps. The feudal tenures and services were maintained around the ancient lords of Naworth; upon their walls—

‘Was frequent heard the clanging guard,
And watchword from the sleepless ward;’

they handled the sword constantly—the pen, we may believe, but seldom if ever in their lives; their leisure was much occupied in the sports of wood and field; and they were liberal in all that pertained to hawks and hounds. Their tastes in this respect seem to have been shared by not only the dignified secular clergy of their day, but also by the abbots and priors of some of the monasteries.¹

“But it is in their military character of wardens of the marches that the Lords Dacre of Naworth and Gilsland have left their names in border history.

“The succession of these martial lords from the time when they acquired the barony of Gilsland, may now be briefly stated. The limits of this article do not admit of any description of their paternal castle at Dacre, or of their history from the time of that shadowy ancestor in commemoration of whose visit to the Holy Land the pilgrim's scallop-shell still borne in the arms of Howard was assumed as the cognisance of their lordly and long-descended race. Suffice it, then, to say, that Margaret, the heiress already mentioned, survived her husband Ralph, first Lord Dacre of Gilsland, until 1362, having, after his death, defended the castle of Naworth, and managed the estates, with a masculine energy. Thirteen years after her death, Edward III. committed to Roger Lord Clifford, whose family it will be remembered had large possessions in Westmoreland, the custody of Naworth, a grant which was probably made pending only the minority of William de Dacre, who ere long succeeded, and in whose time (it is related) the Scots again appeared, and drove all the defenceless persons in Gilsland into houses, to which they set fire, leaving the victims of their cruelty to be consumed. During all the turbulent period which extended from the reign of Richard II. to the year 1461, we do not find any mention of Naworth; but in that year Ralph, son of Thomas Lord Dacre, an adherent of the Red Rose of Lancaster, fell fighting for Henry VI. on the ensanguined field of Towton, and Naworth Castle, with all his other estates, were seized by the victorious Edward of York. His brother Humphrey, however, submitted to the dynasty of Edward IV.; he was restored to the family estates, and appointed warden of the west marches, and he received summons as Lord Dacre of Gilsland. He died in 1485, and was buried with Mabel, his wife, beneath one of the well-known richly sculptured altar-tombs in the north aisle of the Priory Church of Lanercost. He was succeeded by Thomas Lord Dacre, who in 1487 imitated the example of his ancestor in the reign of Edward II. by carrying off in the night time from Brougham Castle Elizabeth, the heiress of Greystoke, then a ward of the king, in the custody of Henry de Clifford, earl of Cumberland, who probably intended to marry her. By his marriage with this young lady, who was cousin and heir of Ralph Lord Greystoke, Thomas Lord Dacre added the noble domain of Greystoke to his own inheritance, and the united estates were possessed by his descendants until 1569, when a partition took place. His spirited bearing was afterwards exhibited in the battle of Flodden Field,² where he commanded the right wing of the English forces, and is said to have contributed greatly to the success of the English arms. His services were continued through many succeeding years. He was appointed a knight of the garter, and lord warden of the west marches.

“It was this martial nobleman who built the curtain-wall and massive gate-tower under which Naworth Castle is entered, and some portions of the main building seen before the fire were the work of his time. The gate-tower gives access to the outer court of the castle. The inner quadrangle was in his time entered only through the original archway on the western side of the main building. On the 21th October, 1525, after a life of martial activity, Thomas Lord Dacre was called to “the fading honours of the dead,” and was interred, with his wife, beneath a richly decorated altar tomb, in the south aisle of the choir of Lanercost.

“He was succeeded by his eldest son William, who was appointed warden of the western marches by Henry VIII., on 2nd December, 1527, and his name was a name of terror to the outlaws and marauders of the border lands.¹ He must have been a man of amazing energy and martial spirit, and he took a part in most of the public agitations and many of the warlike campaigns of his day.² The Lords Dacre were all men of high spirit and enterprise, and many of them seem to have been favourites of the ladies. It is remarkable that one of them should have carried off his betrothed bride, the heiress of Gilsland, from the wardship of King Edward II., and that another, Thomas Lord Dacre, dashinglly followed, 170 years afterwards, the example of his ancestor, by carrying off Elizabeth, the heiress of Greystoke, who was likewise in ward to the king. William Lord Dacre, after a long and vigorous reign, died in 1564, leaving Thomas, his eldest son, who followed him in 1565, and three other sons, named Leonard, Edward, and Francis, all of whom were overtaken by misfortune. George, son of the eldest of his brothers, survived his father, and was the last male heir of the lords Dacre of the north. By his untimely death, on 17th May, 1569, from accident at Thetford, when a child in the wardship of the Duke of Norfolk, the estates and baronies of Gilsland and Greystoke, and the rest of the great possessions of his ancestors, were parted among his three sisters and co-heirs. The youngest of these ladies was the Lady Elizabeth Dacre, to whose share fell Naworth Castle and the barony of Gilsland, and of this portion she became heiress before she was seven years of age. By her marriage, these fair domains were transferred to a branch of the noble house of Howard, after having been possessed by the Dacres during 260 years.

¹ The history of Lanercost, as related by Hutchinson, affords an example. In the reign of Edward III. James, a cousin of Hexham, was elected prior of Lanercost, and purchased the custody of Carlisle “not to frequent public huntings, or to keep or receive a pack of hounds as he had formerly done.”

² Fought on the 9th September, 1414.

"It is remarkable that by an heiress—the heiress of De Vaux—Naworth passed to the family of De Multon; that by the heiress of Thomas De Multon it came to the family of Dacre; and that by another heiress—the co-heiress of Thomas Lord Dacre—it was carried to Lord William Howard.

"Of the state of Naworth Castle during the childhood of the young heiress, we have some proof in the fact that when Mary Queen of Scots was a prisoner at Carlisle Castle (which was in 1568), Sir Francis Knollys recommended to Elizabeth that Naworth Castle should be selected for the detention of her royal captive as a place then affording greater security than the castle of Carlisle.

"Mary however was removed to the south, and therefore we cannot add to the historical attractions of Naworth 'the romantic and fascinating, mysterious and sorrowful associations,' which hang round the memory of Mary Stuart. In the following year (1569) occurred the memorable rebellion for the deliverance of the Scottish Queen and the restoration of the Church of England to the Roman communion; and it was to Naworth Castle that the great northern lords—the Earl of Westmoreland and the Earl of Northumberland retired; and they there dispersed their followers and abandoned their chivalrous enterprise. At that time the barony of Gilsland and the possessions of the house of Dacre were in abeyance between the co-heiresses. Naworth Castle was again in the occupation of insurgent forces in a few months from that time; but the forces then collected had been levied for a less generous purpose. Leonard Dacre, uncle of the youthful orphan and heiress, claimed the estates of the Dacres of Gilsland, and, being unsuccessful at law, assembled 3,000 men, chiefly levied among the freebooters of the border lands, to enforce his claim by arms. He actually seized Naworth Castle, and was in possession of it for a time early in 1570. Lord Hunsdon, the governor of Berwick, and Sir John Forster, warden of the middle marches, were speedily sent against his band of desperadoes. They advanced from Hexham at the head of 1,500 men, and arrived on the 20th February, by daylight, before Naworth. The beacons had burned all night, and they found every hill covered by men, on horse and on foot, who rent the air with their cries and shouting. Passing Naworth, they were followed and challenged by Leonard Dacre on a high moor near the Gelt. He mustered a force of 1,500 foot and 600 horse. A sanguinary engagement ensued, which ended in the defeat of Dacre, who fled into Scotland, and, being afterwards attainted of treason, he escaped into Louvain, and died in exile in 1581. It is now time to pursue the history of the youthful heiress, Lady Elizabeth Dacre.

"In 1566, Thomas Howard, fourth Duke of Norfolk, who had twice before entered into wedlock, married Elizabeth, widow of Thomas Lord Dacre, of Gilsland and Greystoke. Their union was brief, for she died in the following year, leaving George Lord Dacre and his three sisters, already mentioned, her children by Thomas Lord Dacre, her only issue. George was killed in his childhood, as already stated, in 1569, and his youthful sisters remained in ward to their step-father, the duke. He seems to have followed the example of Thomas de Multon, the justiciar, in the reign of Henry III., who obtained a grant of the custody of the daughters and heirs of Richard de Lucy, of Egremont, with their lands and marriage, reserving thereout a reasonable dower for Ada, the widow of De Lucy—herself the daughter of Hugh de Morville and co-heiress of his large possessions. De Multon, not content with marrying his own sons to his wards, the daughters of Richard de Lucy, secured to his own family the property both of the father and the husband by marrying the widow herself.

¹ In 1594 William Lord Dacre was accused of treasonable communications, and strange to say, alliances with the Scots. Being committed to the Tower, he was brought to trial before Thomas Boleyn of Norfolk, treasurer and earl marshal of England, appointed lord high steward, and his peers. Probably these accusations arose of enmity, or some jealousy on the part of Henry Earl of Northumberland, warden of the east marches. The indictment is amongst the records of this curious state trial which are preserved in the Tower of London, and it shows Lord Dacre to have been accused of treasonable agreements for the protection of Scottish offenders. The charges alleged against him are hardly creditable at all events to be acquitted.

² See in Arch.Æliana, i. 218, a representation of his seal.

"The Duke of Norfolk by his first marriage, on which he espoused Mary, daughter and heir of Henry Fitz-Alan, earl of Arundel, had issue Philip earl of Arundel, ancestor of the celebrated earl. The duke's second wife was Margaret, daughter and sole heir of Thomas Lord Audley of Walden, lord chancellor of England, who, at the time of her marriage to the duke, was a widow. By this marriage, Thomas, fourth duke of Norfolk, had three sons, namely, Thomas, afterwards Earl of Suffolk, heir to his mother's estate, Henry, who died young, and William, afterwards celebrated as Lord William Howard of Naworth, who was born on the 19th December, 1563. Their mother died within a few weeks from that time. We may here briefly glance at the ancestry of the last-mentioned nobleman.

"The Duke of Norfolk, his father, was the eldest son of that Henry Howard, earl of Surrey, who is the great ornament of his family—'a nobleman,' says Mr. Lodge, 'whose character reflects splendour even on the name of Howard.' Excelling in arts and in arms, a man of learning in an unlearned age, a genius and a hero, of a generous temper and a refined nature, uniting all the gallantry and unbroken spirit of a rude period with the elegancies and graces of a polished era, enjoying splendour of descent, possessing the highest honours and ample wealth, and never relaxing his endeavours to add the distinction of personal worth to his ancestral honours—

'Who has not heard of Surrey's fame?'

"Yet neither his devotion to poetry and letters, nor his eminence in all the accomplishments of that martial age, could save him from the vengeance of his jealous and fickle sovereign when he was arraigned on some frivolous accusations of treason. The accomplished Surrey was beheaded on Tower Hill, in January, 1547, in the thirty-first year of his age. Soon afterwards the sanguinary tyrant himself died, and by the accident of his death the Duke of Norfolk, Surrey's father, who was then a prisoner in the Tower under a like sentence, escaped its execution. The son of the ill-fated Surrey, who became fourth Duke of Norfolk, on the death of his grandfather in 1554, was then about eighteen years of age. Surrey's eldest daughter, the Lady Jane, who married the last Earl of Westmoreland of the noble house of Neville, is described as one of the most learned ladies of her time, whose scholastic acquirements had the rare accompaniments of gentle feminine manners, good sense, and affection for her family and her duties. From the disastrous end of the Rebellion of 1569 to the close of his life the Earl of Westmoreland, her husband, lingered in hopeless exile. The countess spent the remainder of her days in retirement, lamenting the sad fate which had bereaved her of a father and a brother, who both died on the scaffold, and of a husband exiled for life from his honours and his country. The earl languished till 1601; she died in 1593.

"Her brother, Thomas Howard, fourth duke of Norfolk, father of Lord William, was 'the most powerful and most popular man in England;' but, allured by ambition and animated by a chivalrous feeling towards the accomplished and ill-fated Queen of Scots, the duke in 1568, when a year had not elapsed from his becoming for a third time a widower, formed or assented to a project for his marriage with that princess, then the captive of the implacable Elizabeth. The story of this perilous intrigue forms a romantic and memorable feature in the sad history of the time, and it speedily conducted him to the fatal end of his father. He was sacrificed to the animosity of the jealous and artful Elizabeth on the 2nd June, 1572, being the first of her victims who suffered death on Tower Hill. By this tragical event Lord William Howard was made an orphan in the ninth year of his age.

"The iniquitous sacrifice of the duke deprived Lord William of title, dignity, and estate, and reduced him to the condition described by his father on committing him, while himself under sentence of death, to the care of his eldest brother, Philip Earl of Arundel, namely, that he had 'nothing to feed the cormorants withal.' The duke, after his alliance to the Dacre family, had, however, very wisely and prudently destined his three sons for his three youthful wards, the heiresses of the great baronies and estates of Thomas Lord Dacre, and his design was fulfilled as to the two heiresses who survived, but not in his own lifetime. The youthful Lady Elizabeth Dacre was in ward to the queen after the execution of the Duke of Norfolk; and it was well for Lord William Howard that her hand was not disposed of to some minion of the court. Accordingly, when arrived at marriageable age, Anne, the eldest daughter of Thomas Lord Dacre, was married to Philip Earl of Arundel, and Elizabeth, the youngest, to Lord William Howard. Mary, the second daughter, had been betrothed to Thomas, afterwards Lord Howard of Walden, first earl of Suffolk, but died before marriage. Lord William and his youthful bride were born in the same year; she had been left an orphan in her seventh year, Lord William in his ninth. Brought up together, and destined for each other from childhood, it is a remarkable circumstance that, after a union of more than sixty years, he died in little more than twelve months from her death. 'Their long union appears,' says the late Mr. Henry Howard of Corby, in his 'Memorials of the Howard Family,' 'to have been one of the truest affection, and his regard for her seems not ever to have suffered variation or abatement.' His accounts contain entries for many presents to her; and he had her portrait taken at seventy-three, by Jansen, the best painter of the time.

"To return, however, to the story of their early life. They were married on the 28th October, 1577 at Audley End, near Saffron Walden, Essex (the maternal estate of Thomas Howard, elder brother of Lord William), when he was about fourteen years of age, the Lady Elizabeth being some months younger; and they appear to have resided for some time on an estate called Mount Pleasant, in Enfield Chase. But they were destined ere long to experience the rancour of persecution for religion's sake. The sons of the Duke of Norfolk, who was a Protestant, were intended to be educated in that communion; but they appear to have been influenced by the tutor whom he selected to attend them at the University of Cambridge with his own convictions in favour of the Roman Catholic church; and when the Earl of Arundel (Lord William's eldest brother), about 1583, decided on joining that communion, and imparted his resolve to Lord William, who was then about twenty-one years of age, the latter readily agreed with him to adopt the same course, although such a step, in those dreadful days of persecution, rendered it necessary that they should leave their native land, whose councils were swayed by the enemies of their family and faith. In 1582 the young Earl of Arundel attempted to put in practice his design for escaping to the continent, and prepared a letter for the queen, in which he explained his reasons for that resolution, and declared his undiminished allegiance to her as his sovereign; but being jealously watched in all his movements, he was intercepted when about to embark, on the Sussex coast, and was brought a close prisoner to the Tower of London. Lord William, who had now three children to engage his solicitude, was made to share his brother's captivity. This was about Easter, 1585.

"A few months before the noble brothers were thus deprived of their liberty, a new claimant to the Dacre estates appeared, in the person of Francis Dacre, the younger brother of Leonard and of Edward Dacre, both of whom were then dead; and he claimed as tenant in tail, under colour of an attempted limitation of the estates by Thomas Lord Dacre, their father. The Lady Elizabeth, on attaining full age, had received restitution of her paternal lands of Naworth and Gilsland, which she enjoyed down to the time of the imprisonment of Lord William and his brother; but they were no sooner disabled from defending their lands, than, at the suit of Francis Dacre, the estates were sequestered from the heiresses, and they were involved in a costly litigation. Lord William has himself related that "Mr. Francis Dacre, not omitting his advantage of time, prosecuted his cause with great violence, when both his adversaries were close prisoners in danger of their lives, and in so deep disgrace of the time, that scarce any friend or servant durst adventure to show themselves in their cause; nay, the counsellors refused to plead their title when they had been formally retained."

"At length Lord William and the earl his brother, after having being fined by the Star Chamber, were released from imprisonment; and on Saint Peter's day, 1586, obtained judgment in their favour in the suit, notwithstanding which their lands continued to be withheld under a variety of pretexts.¹ In 1588, the Earl of Arundel was again arrested on a charge of treason, and Lord William falling under the weight of hostile suspicion, was also again arrested and committed to custody, but was shortly afterwards liberated for want of any evidence against him. All the charges that the myrmidons of persecution could bring forward were, that the earl had harboured and sustained priests, had corresponded with Allen and Parsons, and had intended to depart from the realm without license. Yet on these accusations he was, after a lingering delay, brought to trial before his peers, in 1589, and condemned to die. Elizabeth perhaps trembled when she thought of the noble blood she had already shed upon the scaffold, and did not wish to charge her soul with his. She therefore thought fit to extend what was called 'her clemency' towards him, and accordingly he never felt the edge of the axe, but was suffered to await the termination of his life immured in the Tower. The room in which the earl was confined has recently received a good deal of public notice. It is a large chamber in Beauchamp's Tower, anciently the place of confinement for state prisoners. A number of inscriptions exist on the walls, the undoubted autographs of several illustrious and unfortunate tenants of this once dreary mansion. Among them, in a fine bold character, is a touching sentence with the signature of the earl, dated 22nd June, 1587. He languished in the Tower until Nov. 1595, when death released him, in the fortieth year of his age. In person the earl is described to have been very tall, of a dark complexion, with an agreeable mixture of sweetness and dignity in his countenance. Before his imprisonment, and in his happier days, he and his wife, the Lady Anne, had settled on the Dacre estate at Greystoke, the noble castle, barony, and domains of that lordship being her portion on the division of the paternal estates. By his attainder, his half of the Dacre estates was forfeited to the crown, and many years elapsed before restitution to his successor. He was survived by his son, the celebrated antiquary and collector, and by the Lady Anne, his widow, who lived until the 13th April, 1630, when she had attained the age of seventy-two. She was a woman of genius, and her letters evince an unaffected piety and tenderness of character.

¹ MS. Lansd. No. 106, art. 25, contains an account of the trial relating to the title of the co-heiresses to their lands.

"This digression from the principal subject of the present article has been occasioned by the feeling that the noble and unfortunate brother of Lord William Howard shares in the interest with which we regard all that relates to himself. To return to the history of Lord William:—

"The estates of the heiress of Naworth and Gilsland were still withheld; and finally Lord William Howard, and the widow of his brother, were compelled in the year 1601 to purchase their own lands of the queen, for the sum of £10,000. Lady Elizabeth had attained her thirty-seventh year before she was permitted to enjoy her patrimony. Mr. Howard, the father of the present lord of Corby, in his 'Memorials of the Howard Family,' remarks that it does not appear how she and Lord William managed to subsist, and meet the high charges and exactions to which they were subjected; and his accounts from 1619 to 1628, inclusive, show that he was still in debt, and paid ten per cent. interest for borrowed money. The accession of King James opened fairer prospects to the house of Howard, which had suffered so much, and lain so long under spoliation and forfeiture, for the attachment of the Duke of Norfolk to the ill-fated mother of that monarch. On the accession of James, Lord William was restored in blood; and, in company with his uncle, Henry Howard, afterwards earl of Northampton, went into Cumberland in 1603, and met James on his entry into the kingdom. Probably Lord William was first invested by the new monarch with the office of king's lieutenant and warden of the marches in 1605.

"It seems that while he was deprived of his wife's patrimony the chief part of the timber in the parks was cut down. By an inquisition taken in 1589 it was found that 'Naworth park' contained 200 acres, 'with great store of old oak wood, worth to sell £200;' and a chase, called Bridgewood, is mentioned as containing the like quantity of woodland, and another £200 worth of timber. In the same inquisition, the commissioners report to the crown that 'the faire castle is in very great decay in all parts.'

"Lord William was no sooner reinstated in his property than he began to contemplate the repair of the old baronial stronghold, which during the long years of persecution had been neglected and deserted. The repairs seem to have been commenced some time before 1607, and to have been then in active progress. At that time Camden, the great antiquary, visited Naworth, where he found its noble owner living the life of a scholar as well as a soldier. His private tastes and his public occupations so blended these characters, that it might be said of him as poets feigned of Sir Philip Sidney, that Mars and Mercury fell at variance whose servant he should be. Camden speaks of him as 'an attentive and learned searcher into venerable antiquity;' and in another passage says, 'He copied for me with his own hand the inscriptions found at Castle Steads;' alluding to the inscriptions on Roman altars and tablets collected from the vicinity, and brought together by Lord William, in the gardens of Naworth Castle.¹

"While the repairs were in progress he resided, with his family, chiefly at his favourite hunting-seat of Thornthwaite, in Westmoreland. Of his income about this time we have interesting particulars in an account-book in his own hand writing, which was at Naworth Castle when the late Mr. Howard, of Corby, wrote his 'Howard Memorials.' On the 14th December, 1611, the auditor delivered in at Naworth Castle an account of the 'true clere values' of my lord's estates for the year, to the Martinmas preceding. They are returned in the counties of Middlesex, Hertford, York, Durham, Northumberland, Westmoreland, and Cumberland. First there is the princely domain of Castle Howard, then known by its ancient name of Hindersekl,² the yearly value of which is set down at £420 10s. 10½d. Then there is the Morpeth property—which Mary de Merley had carried four centuries before to William de Greystoke—this is set down at £741 11s.¹ The Cumberland estates produced £1,178 13s. 2½d.; and the total income from all the counties is the sum of £3,884 11s. 1½d. The yearly income varied, but may be taken to have been on an average equivalent to at least £10,000 a year of money of the present day. Lord William himself declared, twenty years later, that ‘his parks, liberties, and forests, in the compass of his own territories, were as great a quantity in one place as any nobleman in England possessed.’ The demesne lands described in the above-mentioned account as ‘in the lord’s hand,’ at Naworth and Brampton, are set down as containing 2,178 acres, and there were then remaining on them 1,110 cattle of all sorts, and 3,000 sheep. In these rural districts, as might have been expected, a large portion of the available wealth of the owner was commonly invested in live stock. Thus (ex. gr.) a Yorkshire testator in the sixteenth century, the inventory of whose effects is amongst the wills proved at Richmond, died possessed of 3,391 sheep, which were valued at £506 7s. 6d.

¹ See Horsley's Antiquarian Researches particularly at Naworth, pp. 261, 264, 265, 267, 268, 269, 277.

² This property occurs, in 1185, in the possession of the Basset family, and it was bought by the heiress of their estate into the families of Grimthorpe and Greystoke, and on the partition fell to the younger branch of Naworth, Lady Elizabeth Dacre.

“But considerable as was Lord William’s income from his broad lands in so many parts of the country, his extensive alterations and repairs at Naworth, which were in progress during a period of twenty years, must have absorbed a great part of it.

“Lord William’s alterations and repairs greatly changed the aspect of the castle in the inner court, and in its interior arrangements, and the work of his time forms the third of the four divisions or periods now marked in its architecture. Lord William lightened the great hall, and enlarged the windows which light it. He altered the interior of the principal tower which forms the south-western angle of the fortress, by adapting its upper floors for dwelling-rooms. He repaired the warders’ gallery, enlarged its long range of windows, and adapted for the purposes of his own habitation the very remarkable chambers in the tower at the south-eastern angle of the fortress, which is still called ‘Lord William’s Tower.’ He made the present entrance in the southern part of the castle under the gallery and chapel, and built walls in the vaulted chambers or crypt below the chapel and the hall, by which passages and servants’ rooms were formed on the basement. The domestic chambers on the western and the northern side were also repaired and altered in his time. The fire in 1844 destroyed some buildings on the western side of the inner court, which had blocked up the fine pointed archway that formerly gave access to the castle, and was probably disused from the time when Lord William effected these repairs.¹ The late restorations have been so judiciously made that the character has been preserved of the original architecture, and also of the work of Lord William’s time, as each stood at the period of the fire. Some of the interior fittings placed by Lord William in his castle, thus altered and repaired, are still preserved. They may now be mentioned briefly.

“Shortly before the time when he began these repairs, the dismantling and destruction of the castle of Kirkoswald (which by the marriage of the only daughter of the Thomas Lord Dacre, who died in 1457, had fallen to the family of ‘Lord Dacre of the South’), gave Lord William the opportunity of acquiring for his castle the oak ceilings and wainscot work which had been placed in the ancient hall and chapel of Kirkoswald, and he obtained these, and applied them to the same uses at Naworth. These roofs were divided into panels, and a grim old portrait of some historical personage was painted in every panel. In the castle chapel at Naworth, as well as in the hall, there was one of these curious oak ceilings, and the altar end was also fitted up with wainscot in panels filled with portraits of patriarchs and ecclesiastics. All this antique oakwork, in both hall and chapel, perished in the conflagration; but in the chamber which Lord William used as his library, there is still the fine oak roof, in panels, elaborately carved, with bold heraldic bosses, enriched formerly by gold and colours, which is said to have been brought hither from Kirkoswald by Lord William. Some other relics of Kirkoswald Castle escaped the fire. The most remarkable of these are four heraldic figures in oak, the size of life, which were brought by Lord William to his hall at Naworth to bear banners, and they now do duty in the same capacity. One of them represents the Grimthorp Dolphin, with a beacon upon its head—the cognizance borne by Ralph de Greystoke; another is the Mutton Stag; the third is the sable Griffin of De Vaux; and the fourth is the Dacre Bull. They have looked down on many a feast where fish and beef and venison smoked before the successors of those great families; and now, unscathed by time and fire, and with their proper colours restored, they seem to belong to the lares and penates of this noble hall.

¹ Of Lord William Howard’s connection with Morpeth, an interesting memorial is preserved by the corporation, in the form of a silver vase, which he gave to his burgesses of Morpeth in 1691. It bears the arms of James I., and of the several families whose inheritance had centred in the noble donor, and it is perhaps unique amongst relics of this kind.

² On the recent repairs, a pointed window of two lights, which had been walled up, was disclosed on the north side of the great tower at the south-western angle of the fortress.

"Lord William enriched his oratory (which adjoined his library) with some sculptured figures in alabaster, which likewise came from Kirkoswald, and by some curious paintings on panel, which probably the reforming commissioners had ejected from the neighbouring priory church of Lanercost. These also have escaped, and have been lately renovated. The old oak wainscot of the library likewise remains,¹ and the original wainscot of Lord William's bedroom below has also been preserved, and still lines its walls. The bedstead and furniture (which are used by Lord Carlisle on his visits) are new, having been made lately, on the model of those which had been preserved in this chamber from Lord William's time. To these chambers, when he inhabited them, the only approach was through the warders' gallery, and this seems to have been reached only by the ancient winding stairs in the principal tower.

"In the castle thus altered and furnished for habitation, Lord William was residing in (and probably for some time before) 1620. A few years later, when all his family, sons, daughters, and their wives and husbands, surrounded their noble parents at Naworth, they are said to have numbered fifty-two in family. How merrily they must have celebrated Christmas in their paternal hall! It appears from the steward's account² that in 1625 the household charges for fourteen days at Naworth amounted to £16 17s. 1d. Lord William necessarily maintained a large number of followers and domestics, and he was accustomed to move about with many retainers.

"In 1627 he met King James I. at Carlisle with a large body of his armed servants; and when he came from Naworth to visit Lord Scrope, governor of Carlisle, he marched into the castle at the head of a body of armed followers.³ The visitor at Naworth in the present day finds no difficulty in imagining the scene that was presented there—

"When, from beneath the greenwood tree,
Rode forth Lord Howard's chivalry:
And back at noon, with glimmering power,
Brought up the chiefain's glittering rear."

"In 1624 mention occurs of a house in St. Martin's Lane, London, to which Lord William had frequently occasion to repair—not, however, for the purpose of frequenting the dangerous precincts of a court, or going within the vortex of political strife; for, warned by the fate of his ancestors, he had at an early age retired to his estates in the north, and renounced the perilous honours that might have rewarded a contrary and more ambitious course. The cost of each of his journeys to London, with from eighteen to twenty-four attendants and twelve horses, going and returning, varied from £15 to £21, but was sometimes more. In the year last mentioned (1624) he was absent on his journey to London from 25th May to 20th June, and the charges amounted to £38 14s. 8d. In the following year his riding charges from London only, beginning 28th May, were £12 12s. 3d. He seems to have passed little more time in London than he was obliged to do, and to have "Tongue I see none," Shakespeare's Tempest 1900.

"In 1623 he went to Spa, for the benefit of his health, accompanied by Lady Elizabeth. They proceeded by way of London and Calais, and on their return came from Dunquerque to Newcastle by ship. The total cost of this journey was the large sum of £212 10s. 8d.

"Of his pecuniary circumstances in this and preceding years his accounts afford some curious traces. In 1619 he was still so straitened, from the plunder he had suffered by Queen Elizabeth and from the cost of the repairs he was making, that he allowed himself for pocket money only twenty shillings a month, which scanty sum he had increased in 1627 to the magnificent allowance of £36 a year! From that period, however, he bought more costly furniture and books; planted his estates; and was paying marriage portions for his daughters, but still by instalments only. The termination of his steward's accounts in the following year (1628) unfortunately destroys from that time the clue to these curious particulars of his private life.

"It may be interesting to mention here a few of the items of expenditure that are set down in the steward's account.

"There are several payments of 5s. to the barber for cutting hair and trimming my lord's beard. A pair of silk hose cost 36s., another 38s., and this was in 1619. A pair of gloves for my lord 5s., a black frieze jerkin for my lord 16s.; a pair of boots 10s., and a pair of spurs 2s.; a silk belt for the sword 4s.; and a scarf for my lord to wear in riding 6s.; shirts, bands (probably of lace,) and handkerchief, for my lord, £0 8s., and every year at least two pairs of spectacles: one pair is set down at the modest price of eightpence.

"Some articles of luxury occur. Amongst these are, to Mr. Leonard Milborn, for a coach and four horses, ¹ It stands detached from the wall, the restoration of this apartment not being completed.

² Edited by the late Mr. Howard, of Carby Castle, in his 'Memoirs of the Howard Family' (privately printed).

³ Jefferson's 'History of Carlisle.'

£30., (surely this can have been only a part of the price?) two saddle-cloths, bridles, reins and furniture for my lord, £3 18s.; two silver candlesticks £10 17s.; and two silver flagons, bought in 1628, cost 5s. 9d. an ounce; a silver hand-bell for my lord 38s.; six Turkey carpets, in 1619, £6 3s.; three yards of crimson velvet to make a carpet, 42s.; the carpet, with gold and silk fringe, cost altogether £4 16s.

"He frequently made presents to 'my lady.' The cost of some of these is recorded in the accounts. For example, a watch for my lady, in 1624, cost £4; a gown for my lady in 'somer' £6; a black fan, with silver handle, 6s. 6d.; and two fine felt hats for my lady, 14s.

"The steward's accounts for the few years preserved unfortunately do not contain payments for books or works of art. Forensic eloquence was woefully underpaid if we are to take as an example what Mr. Banks received 'for arguing the cause' respecting Corby, viz., 11s.

"The many evidences of Lord William Howard's prudent economy and careful management that might be brought forward, show that the formidable chieftain was not one of those who kept in order (as Lord Byron said) everything and everybody except himself.

"Books which have come down to his successors in the state in which he used them, and many memorials of his devotion to literary tastes and pursuits, testify the way in which this great man was accustomed to occupy his leisure hours.¹ Books appear to have afforded solace in the troubles of his early life, and to have remained dear to him in the prosperity of his age. History, especially ecclesiastical history, seems to have been his favourite reading; he also took much interest in the antiquities of his county, and in heraldry and genealogy.

"He collected many valuable MSS., probably, for the most part, from the spoils of the monasteries scattered in the preceding century; and some of these, inscribed by his own hand, are preserved in the Arundel Collection and in the Royal Society's Library.

"The register of St. Alban's Abbey during the government of Abbot Whethamstede—which is now preserved amongst the Arundel Collection in the Herald's College, and is one of the most remarkable of its class of historical MSS.—belonged to Lord William Howard, and may perhaps be taken as an example of the kind of MSS. he collected. It was commenced in the reign of Henry VI., and is chiefly in the writing of the venerable abbot, and it is adorned with some rich and elaborate illuminations. This MS. bears Lord William Howard's autograph. He was a warm friend of the illustrious antiquary Sir Robert Cotton, to whose diligence it is well known that we owe the preservation at this day of many valuable MSS. that had been once treasured in the monasteries, a large number of which enrich the celebrated collection in the British Museum that bears his name. Lord William gave one of his daughters to Sir Robert Cotton's son, with a portion amounting to £500. Lord William and his distinguished friend seem to have been animated by kindred zeal for the preservation of learning; and the same hand that drew up a list of sixty-eight felons taken by him, and for the most part executed for felonies in Gilsland and elsewhere, and that bore the Lord Marcher's sword to the terror of moss-troopers, edited the Chronicle of Florence of Worcester, one of the old monastic historians of England. His collection of printed books, a large number of which remain in his tower at Naworth, including many works on history—ecclesiastical, ancient, and mediæval; and amongst them are some black and ponderous tomes and books of rarity and value. A catalogue of his books was indorsed in his own hand, and the notes on the margins of several bear witness to his attentive reading. One is not surprised to find that 'Shakspeare's Plays' were (and may still be) amongst his books. He was accustomed to contemplate the examples of heroic and generous actions recorded in history, and he knew how potent is the tragic muse

"To wake the soul by tender strokes of art;
To raise the genius and to mend the heart;
To make mankind in conscious virtue bold,
Live o'er each scene, and be what they behold."

"Were it not for the subjects of the books preserved in his well-guarded tower, and for what is known of his character, it might have been supposed that the mystic projects of the alchemists, or the dreams of judicial astrology, were his pursuits in this place of seclusion. His library was to him the domain of the tranquil past, where the battle-fields of actual life gave place to the scenes of history, where the helmet could be exchanged for her immortal garlands, and conquests be achieved that in the turmoil of public life could not be won. It is very honourable to his descendants that they preserved these, and all other memorials of his life, as nearly as possible in the state in which he left them. It has been already mentioned that 'Lord William's Tower' was in his time accessible only through the long gallery paced by his armed warders; and his chambers were reached by a narrow winding stair, and were guarded by two doors of great strength at and near the entrance from the gallery.¹ The lower chamber was his bedroom; above it was his library, and beside the place of study was his private oratory.² All these apartments, the very furniture he used, the books he read, the trusty blade he wielded for his sovereign, and the altar at which he knelt before the King of Kings, were preserved so completely in their original state down to the time of the fire, that, as Sir Walter Scott remarked, they carried back the visitor to the hour when the warlen in person might be heard ascending his turret-stair, and almost led you to expect his arrival.

¹ The quantity of papers that he wrote on the litigation with regard to the rights of the co-heiresses of Lord Darnley, indicate the service that he took in these questions, and his power of patient labour.

"Of Lord William Howard in his more important yet less pleasing public character, little has yet been said, for one is tempted to dwell on all the traces that exhibit the noble chieftain surrounded by family endearments, and devoting his leisure to his much-loved books. His public life, though of great and permanent utility to the country, by establishing within the borders habits of obedience to the laws, and respect for life and property, does not, however, furnish much of historical incident. But we know that he was diligent and successful in the discharge of his official duties, that he maintained a garrison of 140 men, that his name was a name of terror to the lawless and disobedient, 'who,' says Fuller, 'had two enemies—the laws of the land and Lord William Howard of Naworth,' and that by his vigilance and firmness, his uncompromising justice, and, when necessary, his severity, he restored peace and order to those parts of the realm, and gained the honourable title of 'The Civiliser of our Borders.' The dark and gloomy prison-vault which is situated at the basement of the south-western or principal tower of the castle, is a terrible monument of the severity experienced by prisoners.

¹ 'Down'd in sad durance pining to abide

The long delay of hope from Solway's further side.'

Some rings remain on the walls of this dungeon. Its roof is vaulted with massive elliptical ribs, similar to those which are better seen in the lower apartment of Lord William's Tower, which is now opened to the staircase at the south end of the hall.

¹ "Lord William's Tower seems to have owed its preservation to the enormous thickness of its walls. The lower chamber is very interesting, as the massive arches or ribs of stone, on which the upper stories of the tower are carried, cross its roof diagonally, and are in admirable preservation, although the fire raged fiercely in this part of the castle.

² "A secret chamber has been contrived between the level of the oratory and the floor below. The descent to it was behind the wainscot of the altar, and in the dark days of persecution it probably more than once formed a hiding-place for priests.

"The portraits of Lord William represent a tall person, with sharp features, and a countenance marked by character and energy; and to these pictorial representations Sir Walter Scott has added a chivalric portrait of the noble chieftain's appearance in the well-known lines—

'Costly his garb,—his Flemish ruff

Fell o'er his doublet shaped, of buff,

With satin slash'd and lined;

Tawny his hood and gold his spur,

His cloak was all of Poland fur,

His hose with silver twined;

His Bilboa blade, by March-men felt,

Hung in a broad and studded belt.'

By the epithet 'Belted Will' Lord William Howard is commonly known. A belt said to have been worn by him used to be shown at Naworth, and a 'broad and studded belt' it was, it being of leather, three or four inches broad, and covered with a couplet in German, the letters on metal studs, from which circumstance it has been imagined that some charm was attributed to this belt. The baldric or broad belt was, however, in former times commonly worn as a distinguishing badge by persons in high station, and therefore does not seem likely to have furnished a distinguishing epithet; moreover, in his portraits, Lord William's belt is not prominent, and indeed is represented as remarkably narrow. In Cumberland the characteristic epithet attached to his name was 'Bauld Willie'—meaning 'Bold William'—a just description, certainly, of the noble

'Howard, than whom knight

Was never dubb'd, more bold in fight;

Nor, when from war and armour free,

More famed for stately courtesy.'

"To this gracious quality, testimony has been borne in the very interesting narrative of an excursion by three military officers, who were quartered at Norwich, and started from that place on Monday, 11th August, 1634, and who, after an absence of seven weeks, returned to Norwich, having in that time visited the northern and some other counties of England. Their narrative is preserved in the Lansdowne MSS. The portion relating to Lord William Howard is short. The travellers had been at Hexham, and, continuing their journey westward, passed by Langley Castle, Thirlwall, and Gelt Forest, to visit Naworth. Being prevented by Lord William's absence from paying their respects to him on their arrival, they 'met with lucky entertainment in a little poor cottage in his liberties, driven in thither by very ill weather (to wit,) a cup of nappy ale, and a peece of red deer pye—more than we thought fit (said the cottagers) to acquaint his lordship withal.' The travellers proceeded to Carlisle, and arrived at the inn called the Angel, in the market-place. In the morning, they went to the cathedral, which they thought like a 'great, wild country church,' and they gave an account, by no means flattering, of the organ and the singing.

"'Whilst we were perambulating (they continue) in this strong garison towne, we heard of a messenger from that truly noble lord we the last day missed on at Naworth, with a courteous invitation to dinner the next day at Corby Castle (for there his Lp. then was), which we accepted (as it was indeed) a mighty favour from soe noble a person. The next day we went thither, and were by that generous brave lord courteously and nobly entertayned, and sorry he said he was that hee was not at Naworth to give us there the like. His Lp's. comauds made us to transgresse good manners, for neither would he suffer us to speak uncover'd, nor to stand up (although our duty required another posture), but plac'd us by his Lp. himselfe to discourse with him until dinner time. Anon appeared a grave and virtuous matron, his honble. lady, who told us indeed we were heartily welcome, and, whilst our ancient and myself addressed ourselves to satisfy his lordship in such occurrences of Norfolke as he pleased to aske and desired to know, wee left our modest captaine to relate to his noble lady what she desired to know. These noble twain, as it pleased them to tell us themselves, could not make above twenty-five yeeres both together when first they were marry'd, that now can make above 140 yeeres, and are very hearty, well, and merry. And long may they continue soe, for soe have they all just cause to pray that live neere them, for their hospitality and fre entertainment agrees with their generous and noble extraction, and their yeares retainne the memory of their honble. predecessors' bountifull housekeeping.'

"This was in 1634, and the course of the noble pair was then nearly run. Lord William had become—

'A bearded knight in arms grown old.'

"He had given peace to the borders, and substituted obedience for anarchy. The whole vale from the walls of Naworth to the distant border, once 'Familiar with blood-shed as the morn with dew,' owned the authority of law, and began to respect the rights of property. His life had been passed in acts worthy of the heroism of his ancestors. He had by his prudence and just dealing surmounted the difficulties under which he came to the barony, and he had consolidated a noble inheritance for his posterity. He had seen his children grow to be the comfort and pride of his age, and he had formed for them many honourable alliances. We may be allowed to believe that, after a life passed, as his was passed, he could meet death, as he had been accustomed to meet his enemies, without fear,

'Nor shrink to hear Eternity's long surge Break on the shores of Time.'

He departed this life on the 20th of October, 1640, at Naworth, in the seventy-seventh year of his age, having survived Lady Elizabeth little more than twelve months, she having died on the 18th October, 1639. Of the place or places of their interment no register has been preserved, in consequence, probably, of the ravages of the plague at that time. The late Mr. Howard thought it most probable that she was buried with her ancestors at Lanercost, and he had seen a copy of a steward's account in which it was stated that Lord William was buried in Greystoke church, under the 'great blue stone.' It was raised some years back, and bones were found below, but it bore no inscription. In the now roofless and grass-grown choir of the abbey church of Lanercost, and among its mossy tombs, we look in vain for any sepulchral monument of the noble pair; but the character and feelings of the present Earl of Carlisle, and the spirit evinced in his restorations at Naworth, induce the belief that a monument will ere long be erected to Lord William and Lady Elizabeth Howard. As already mentioned, Lord William caused a full-length portrait of Lady Elizabeth to be painted by Cornelius Jansen, in the year 1637, when she had attained her seventy-third year. This, and a full-length companion portrait of Lord William himself by the same eminent artist, are preserved at Castle Howard, and copies of them decorate the upper end of the great hall of Naworth Castle.¹ The very attire in which Lord William

¹ These escaped the fire by a remarkable accident: they were at the time in the hands of a picture-frame maker at Newcastle. At the time of the fire there was at Naworth a portrait of Lady Elizabeth, taken when she was fourteen years of age. It is known to have been carried out of the castle at the time of the fire, and has been lost. Some description of it is given in the following letter addressed to Lord Carlisle by the late Mr. Henry Howard, of Corby Castle, dated 14th March, 1825.

² "I have sent back the Lady Elizabeth's Dacre's portrait to Naworth Castle, carefully packed, and return your lordship thanks for the permission to my daughter to copy it. The character given to the face makes it probable that it was a true likeness; and considering the personage, I think your lordship will be inclined to pay some attention to its preservation. The dress of the lady is much ornamented; she wears a cap in the form of those given to Mary Queen of Scots, which has a peak in front coming on to the forehead, with is represented is mentioned in his steward's account, and the several items appear to have cost altogether £17 7s 6d. His dress is a close jacket of black figured thick silk, with rounded skirts to mid-thigh, and many small buttons. The hose, of black silk, and black silk stockings come above the knee, and are tied with silk garters and bows. He wears a plain, falling shirt collar; the sleeves are turned up at the wrist. His dress-riper has a gilt basket-hilt, and hangs by a narrow belt of black velvet with gilt hooks.

"Lord William Howard had five sons and three daughters. His eldest son, Philip, born in 1583, died in his lifetime, leaving a son and heir named William, the ancestor of the Earls of Carlisle. Lord William's second son was Sir Francis Howard, for whom he purchased in 1624 the fair estates of Corby, and who was ancestor of the line now represented by Mr. Philip Howard. Charles Howard, a great-grandson of Lord William, succeeded to the barony as early as 1642, by the speedy deaths of his intermediate ancestors, and, preserving their traditional attachment to the house of Stuart, he became instrumental in the restoration of Charles II., and was better rewarded than some other noble Royalists who had suffered for their master. In 1661 he was created Earl of Carlisle, Viscount Howard of Morpeth, and Baron Daere of Gilsland—honours borne by the present earl. The talents of Charles first Earl of Carlisle led to his employment in diplomatic missions, in which capacity, as well as in arms, several of his descendants likewise served their country; and they have adorned their high lineage by mental attainments and personal worth.

Of the fortunes of Naworth Castle during the great rebellion (which intervened between the death of Lord William and the accession of the first earl) we have not any information; but we may suppose that it sustained some serious injury, as Bishop Gibson mentions that it was again repaired by that nobleman and made fit for residence. The building, as left by those repairs, seems to have remained, internally and externally, the letters D. G. which I apprehend is either Daere and Greyhound or Daere of Gilsland. The inscription on the picture is—

'Anna 1664-1678.
aetatis sue 14.'

She wears her wedding ring on the middle finger of the finger, which I have understood indicates a person betrothed or married, but not yet living with her husband. Mr. Lysons, in his 'Gleanings', 'I am not aware on what authority,' states that she was married in 1577. In the genealogy, painted in the chapel at Naworth, her eldest son, Philip, 37 lordship's ancestor, appears to have been born in 1583, when she was nineteen years of age; then follow two daughters; and the birth of my ancestor Sir Francis Howard, is dated 1588, and there are several other sons and daughters.'

without material alterations down to the time of the lamentable conflagration in 1844.

"It was in the walls of the inner quadrangle more especially, that the building suffered. The hall, the chapel, the gallery, and the domestic apartments were so extensively injured that the façades are for the most part of restored work. Still, these portions have been rebuilt in such correct taste that they harmonise well with the portions that escaped the fire, and wear the hues of time. The repairs in the chapel of the castle and the chief tower are not yet (1853) completed.¹

"A more striking contrast can hardly be witnessed, than in passing from warm light chambers, adapted for modern comfort, to the vaulted dungeon at the basement of the keep-tower and the chamber above it. This was the prison of the castle, and it remains in all its ancient gloom and terror. But there is a relique of a very opposite kind on the other side of the court of Naworth, an old jasmine tree, which spreads its fresh verdure and sparkling modest flowrets over the doorway of the great hall, and it must not be passed without mention. There is a something poetical in its aspect and situation, and one does not wonder to find that it induced two previous earls to invoke the muse in its favour, and the present earl to write the following appropriate lines:—

'My slender and slender jasmine tree,
That thou dost on my ladder tower,
Thou art more sweetly loved by me
Than all the wreaths of fairy bowers.

I ask not while I near thee dwell
Arabia's spice or Syria's rose;
Thy light exceeds more freshly smell—
Thy virgin white more purely glows.

My wit! and winsome jasmine tree,
That climb'st up the dark grey wall,
Thy tiny flow'rets seem in glee
Like seven spray drops as they fall.

Say, did they from their leaves thus peep
When would messengers rode the hill,
When helmeted wardens paced the keep,
And bugles blew for Beldad Will?

My free and feathery jasmine tree,
Within the fragrance of thy breath,
Yon carven grand tree-tow'el
And the chain'saptive sigh'd for death.

¹ The chambers in the tower are modernised, but the ancient winding stairs have been preserved. The repairs and necessary by the fire disclosed in this tower some living places in the wall—the contrivances of a darkness of insecurity.

On border fray or feudal crime
I muse not while I gaze on thee;
The chieftains of that stern old time
Could ne'er have loved a jasmine tree.*

"The noble hall of Naworth Castle is now perhaps unique of its kind. The fine open timber roof it has received (from the design of Mr. Salvin, the eminent architect, who has directed the restorations at the castle,) contributes greatly to the antique and impressive character of the hall. Over the spacious fireplace the following appropriate verses have been inscribed: on a scroll bearing the date 1844—

'OUR BEAUTIFUL HOUSE, WHERE OUR FATHERS PRAISED THEE, IS BURNED UP WITH FIRE.'

On a scroll bearing date 1849—

'THOU SHALT BE CALLED THE REPAIRER OF THE BREACH: THE RESTORER OF PATHS TO DWELL IN.'

"Along the whole length of the hall, on each side, heraldic shields are displayed on the corbels supporting the ribs of the roof. Beginning at the upper (the south) end, there are on the eastern side the shields of Howard, Mowbray, Braose, Segrave, De Brotherton,¹ Fitzalan, Warren, Tilney, Audley, Uvedale, Cavendish; on the western side, Dacre, De Multon, De Morville, Vaux, Engaine, Estravers, Greystoke, Grimthorp, Bolebec, De Merlay, Boteler—a 'Long array of mighty shadows.'

"The hall contains many family portraits, some fine tapestry, and several pieces of armour. Of the portraits, seven are on panel, half-length size; one represents Thomas Duke of Norfolk, celebrated as Lord Surrey, the hero of Flodden Field, who died in 1524; another, Philip Earl of Arundel, who died in the Tower in 1595; another, Queen Catherine Parr. There is a

*¹ On the walk outside the eastern wall of the castle, and near 'Lord William's tower,' a noble old yew tree stands on the edge of the declivity—a venerable contemporary of the founders of Naworth Castle—whose dark foliage was stirred by the free winds, while in the course of three centuries many a captive in the adjacent dungeon was pining in sad durance.

"² Sir Robert Howard, who succeeded his father in 1436, married Margaret, elder daughter of Thomas de Mowbray, duke of Norfolk, by Elizabeth, his wife, the daughter and co-heir of John Mowbray, duke of Norfolk. This Thomas de Mowbray was son and heir of John Lord Mowbray, by Elizabeth, daughter and heir of John Lord Segrave, and of Margaret Plantagenet, his wife, who was daughter and heir of Thomas de Brotherton, earl of Norfolk, the eldest son of King Edward I., who was invested with the office of earl marshal of England, 12th February, 1296. By this illustrious alliance, Sir Robert had an only son, John Howard, who was created earl marshal, and Earl and Duke of Norfolk, on 25th June, 1483, and was ancestor of Lord William Howard of Naworth.

full-length portrait of King Charles I. by Vandyck, hung on the north wall; a full-length portrait said to represent Queen Mary of England; she holds in her right hand a crucifix, in her left a candle, lighted, wreathed with flowers, and wears a dress of rich embroidered tissue. There is a portrait of that famous lady, Anne, Countess of Pembroke, Dorset, and Montgomery, who was born 1590, and died 1675.

"In the drawing-room, which adjoins the hall, there is a fine portrait on panel of the duke, Lord William's father; a portrait on canvas of Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel, the renowned collector of the marbles, Lord William's nephew; a portrait of Philip, brother of the first Earl of Carlisle, who fell at Rowton Heath, 1645; one of Theophilus Earl of Suffolk, 1630; and a portrait of Lady Mary, daughter of the first Earl of Carlisle, who married Sir John Fenwick. She is represented in the attire of a widow, and holds his miniature. He was beheaded in 1696. This portrait was brought from Castle Howard. The warders' gallery, instead of being paced by living guards, is now also lined with portraits of buried ancestry, some of which have been brought from Castle Howard. The five noble pieces of tapestry in the hall likewise came from Castle Howard. They are said to have been made as a marriage-present to Henry IV. of France and Mary de Medicis. All the armour that was kept in the gallery at the time of the fire perished, but that which was in the hall escaped. A complete suit, now in the gallery, is of elaborate workmanship. It need not be said that all these reliques add greatly to the antique character and interest of the venerable walls, and aid to place the visitor in presence of 'the spirit of the old time.'

'So Naworth stands, still rugged as of old,
Arm'd like a knight without, austere and bold,
But all within bespeaks the better day,
And the bland influence of a Carlisle's sway.'

This account of Naworth Castle and the lords of Gilsland, from the graceful and facile pen of W. S. Gibson, Esq., cannot have a better appendage than an account of the family of the present noble owner of Naworth, from its establishment to the present time.

Carlisle Family.

LORD WILLIAM HOWARD, second son of Thomas, fourth Duke of Norfolk, was restored in blood, by act of Parliament, in 1603, and having married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas, and sister and co-heir of George Lord Dacre of Gilsland, became in her right proprietor of Naworth Castle, in Cumberland, the ancient seat of the Dacre family. His lordship acquired also, in the same manner, Hinderkelle, the site of Castle Howard. He had, among other children,

- i. Philip (Sir) married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Carrsl. of Hastings, in Sussex, and dying before his father, left, with other issue, William, who succeeded his grandfather.

- ii. Francis (Sir) of Corby Castle, in Cumberland, ancestor of the Howards of Corby. (See Corby, page 194.)

LORD WILLIAM, who was warden of the western marches, and known by the name of Hault Wally, or Bellet Will Howard, died in 1619, and was succeeded by his grandson,

Sir WILLIAM HOWARD, Knt., who married Mary, eldest daughter of William Lord Eure, by whom he had several children; of his daughters, Mary married Sir Jonathan Atkins, Knt., and from this marriage derive the families of Atkins of Fountainville, Fireville, &c., co. Cork (see Burke's "Landed Gentry"), and was succeeded by his eldest surviving son,

CHARLES HOWARD, who was created 20th April, 1601, Baron Dacre of Glisland, Viscount Howard of Morpeth, and Earl of Carlisle. His lordship was subsequently ambassador to the Czar of Muscovy, and deputed to carry the ensigns of the order of the Garter to Charles XI., king of Sweden, from which latter mission returning, he was installed as his majesty's proxy at Windsor. He was afterwards made governor of Jamaica. He married Anne, daughter of Edward Lord Howard of Escrick, and dying 24th February, 1684, was succeeded by his son,

EDWARD, second earl; who married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of Sir William Uredale, of Wickham, Hants, and relict of Sir William Berkeley, Knt., and was succeeded 23rd April, 1692, by his only surviving son,

CHARLES, third earl. This nobleman filled the high office of first Lord of the Treasury, constable of the Tower, and governor of Windsor Castle. His lordship married Anne, daughter of Arthur, first Earl of Essex, and dying 1st May, 1738, was succeeded by his eldest son,

HENRY, fourth earl, K.G., born in 1694; who married, first, 27th November, 1717, Lady Frances Spencer, daughter of Charles, third Earl of Sunderland, and heir of her mother, Arabella, one of the co-heirs of Henry Cavendish, duke of Newcastle, by whom he had, with three sons (who all died in the lifetime of the earl), two daughters, viz.,

- i. Arabella, married to Jonathan Cope, Esq., son and heir of Sir Jonathan Cope, Bart., of Breverne Abbey, co. Oxford, to whom her ladyship conveyed the seat and manor of Overton Longueville, part of the Newcastle estate, and died in 1746.

- ii. Diana, married to Thomas Duncombe, Esq., of Helmsley, co. York, and died in 1774.

His lordship married, 2ndly, 8th June, 1743, Isabella, daughter of William, fourth Lord Byron, by whom (who died 22nd January, 1795), he had

- i. FREDERICK, fifth earl.

- ii. Anne.

- iii. Frances, married in 1768 to John Radcliffe, Esq., and died in April, 1808.

- iv. Elizabeth, married, firstly, in 1769, to Peter Delme, Esq.; and secondly, 13th January, 1774, to Captain Charles Garner, R.N., who was unfortunately drowned, 16th December, 1796. Her ladyship died in June, 1813.

- v. Juliana.

The earl died 4th September, 1758, and was succeeded by his son,

FREDERICK, fifth earl, born 29th May, 1748, elected a Knight of the Thistle in 1768, and installed a Knight of the Garter in 1793. His lordship married in March, 1770, Margaret Caroline, daughter of Granville Leveson, first Marquis of Stafford, K.G., and by her ladyship (who died 25th January, 1821) had issue,

- i. GEORGE, sixth earl.

- ii. William, born 25th December, 1781; died 25th January, 1848.

- iii. Frederick, born in 1785; major of hussars, killed at Waterloo; left issue, by Frances Susan, his wife, only daughter of William Henry Lambton, Esq., of Lambton Hall, one only son, Frederick John, private secretary to H. E. the lord-lieutenant of Ireland, born 11th March, 1814; married 1st July, 1837, Lady Fauny Cavendish, sister of the Earl of Burlington, and has issue, William Frederick, born 26th June, 1838.

George Francis, born 24th April, 1840.

Frederick Compton, born 23rd January, 1847.

Alfred John, born 14th October, 1848.

Gerald Richard, born 7th November, 1853.

Louisa Blanche.

Margaret Emily.

Edith Susan Louisa.

- iv. Henry Edward John, D.D., prebendary of York, dean of Lichfield, and rector of Donington, co. Salop; born 14th December, 1799; married 13th July, 1824, Henrietta Elizabeth, daughter of Ichabod Wright, Esq., of Mapperly, county Notts, and has issue,

- i. George, born 20th June, 1826, barrister-at-law; married, in May, 1852, Marion, only child of Edward Southam, Esq., M.D., and widow of W. Leigh Bennett, Esq.

2. John Henry, lieutenant R.N., born 30th November, 1827.

3. Edward Henry, lieutenant R.N., born 7th June, 1832.

4. Charles John Henry, born 28th September, 1834.

5. Henry Frederick, born 9th November, 1844.

1. Julia Maria.

2. Charlotte Henrietta, married, 29th September, 1853, to the Hon. and Rev. Archibald George Campbell, second son of Earl Cawdor.

3. Emily Georgiana.

4. Caroline Octavia.

5. Elizabeth Henrietta.

- i. Caroline Isabella, married to John, first Lord Cawdor, and died in 1845.

- ii. Elizabeth, married to John Henry Duke of Rutland; and died in 1824.

- iii. Gertrude, married, in 1806, to William Sloane Stanley, Esq., of Paultons, co. Hants.

The earl died 4th September, 1825, and was succeeded by his son,

GEORGE, sixth earl, K.G., lord-lieutenant of the East Riding of Yorkshire; born 17th September, 1773; married, 21st March, 1801, Georgiana, eldest daughter of William, fifth Duke of Devonshire, K.G., by whom he had issue,

- i. GEORGE WILLIAM FREDERICK, present earl,

- ii. Frederick George, an officer in the army; born 8th June, 1805, accidentally killed, 15th November, 1854.

- iii. William George, in holy orders, rector of Londesborough, co. York, born 23rd February, 1808.

- iv. Edward Granville George, captain R.N.; born 23rd December, 1809; married in 1842, Diana, only daughter of Hon. G. Ponsonby.

- v. Charles Wentworth George, born 27th March, 1814; M.P. for East Cumberland; married, 8th August, 1842, Mary, second daughter of the Right Hon. Sir James Parke, baron Wensleydale, late one of the barons of the Exchequer, and by her (who died in August, 1845), he has a son, George James, born 12th August, 1843.

- vi. Henry George, secretary of legation at Paris, born 22nd May, 1818; married 24th May, 1846, Mary Well-lesley, daughter of John Mac Tavi-sh, Esq., of Montreal, which lady died 21st February, 1850.
1. Caroline Georgiana, married, in 1823, to the Right Hon. W. S. S. Lascelles (second son of the Earl of Harwood), who died 2nd July, 1851.
- ii. Georgiana, married, 7th March, 1822, to George James Welbore, first Lord Dover, who died in July, 1833.
- iii. Harriet Elizabeth Georgiana, married 27th May, 1823, to George Granville, duke of Sutherland, K.G.
- iv. Blanche Georgiana, married, 10th August, 1823, to Lord Cavendish, now Earl of Burlington, and died 27th April, 1840.
- v. Elizabeth Dorothy Anne Georgiana, married in 1840, to the Hon. and Rev. Francis Richard Grey.
- vi. Mary Matilda Georgiana, married, 13th July, 1852, to the Right Hon. Henry Labouchere, M.P.

The earl died 7th October, 1848, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

GEORGE WILLIAM FREDERICK HOWARD, earl of Carlisle, K.G., viscount Howard of Morpeth, co. Northumberland, baron Dacre of Gilsland, and co-heir to a moiety of the barony of Greystoke, lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the East Riding of Yorkshire; born 18th April, 1802; succeeded his father, as seventh earl, 7th October, 1848. His lordship was chief secretary for Ireland from April, 1835, to September, 1841; chief commissioner of woods and forests from July, 1846, to March, 1850; and chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster from March, 1850, to February, 1852. The earl was constituted in 1855 lord-lieutenant-general and general governor of Ireland, and was again appointed to the same office in the present year, 1859.

Creation.—April 20, 1661.

Arms.—Quarter of six, 1st, Howard, gu., on a bend, between six cross-crosslets, fitchy, arg., an esccheon, or, charged with a demilion, rampant, pierced through the mouth with an arrow, within a double treasure, flossy-counterflossy, of the first, a mullet for difference; 2nd, Brotherton, gu., three lions, passant guardant, in pale, or, on a chief, a label of three points, arg.; 3rd, Warren, chequy, or and az.; 4th, Mowbray, gu., a lion, rampant, arg., armed and langued, az.; 5th, Dacre, gu., three escallops, arg.; 6th, Greystoke, barry of six, arg. and az.; over all three chaplets, gu.

Crest.—On a chapeau, gu., turned up, erm., a lion, statant guardant, the tail extended, or, ducally gorged, arg., a mullet, sa., for difference.

Supporters.—Dexter, a lion, arg., differenced with a mullet; sinister, a bull, gu., armed, muled, ducally gorged, and lined, or.

Motto.—Volo, non volo.

Briethwaite, or Tarnhouse Forest, lies on the south side of the parish, from five to eight miles south-east of Brampton. It was anciently given to the priory of Hexham by Adam de Tindall, but after the dissolution was granted to the lords of Gilsland. It was formerly considered extra-parochial, but is now annexed to the township of Naworth, and is sometimes called Tindall Forest. There are several coal-mines in the neighbourhood, and zinc works were commenced here some years ago.

CARLATTON EXTRA PAROCHIAL PLACE.

CARLATTON is bounded by the parishes of Castlecarrack, Cumrew, Cumwhitton, and Hayton. The soil is light, uneven, and full of stones, but produces tolerable crops of wheat, barley, oats, &c. The area of Carlatten is 1,810 acres, and its rateable, or rather rental value, is £640. The population in 1801, was 50; in 1811, 51; in 1821, 54; in 1831, 70; in 1841, 61; and in 1851, 67; who are engaged in agriculture, and attend the markets at Carlisle and Brampton.

In the reign of Henry II., the manor of Carlatten was held by Gospatric, son of Macbenck, or Macbenock, paying for it fifty marks. This Macbenock appears to have been a native of Ireland, who had settled in Cumberland, and during the conflicts between King Stephen and Matilda, took part with the former. King John made a temporary grant of it to Robert de Ross; but Henry III. resumed this grant, and gave it to the King of Scotland. After the revolt of John Baliol, it was held for a while by Anthony Beck, bishop of Durham. Richard II. granted it to Ralph Nevill, earl of Westmorland, from whom it descended to the great Earl of Warwick, the "king maker," who was slain at the battle of Barnet. Edward the IV. gave it to his brother the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III. It has since been held by lease under the crown, the Earl of Carlisle being the present lessee, and is also owner of the soil. There are a corn and saw-mill here.

Carlatten was anciently a parish of itself, and its church was given by Robert de Vaux to the priory of Lanercost, and appropriated to that monastery. The tithes are now held by lease under the crown, with the manor. The church is supposed to have been dilapidated long before the Reformation. There is no institution of a vicar on record after the year 1380. Robert de London was rector when the appropriation was made, the vicars are Henry de Newton, 1320; Sir William de Stockdale, 1344; Sir Richard Hogge, 1390. There are no ruins remaining of the church, and it is only known by tradition where it stood.

The township consists of eight houses, about seven miles south of Brampton.

CASTLE CARROCK PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Brampton and Hayton, on the west by Camerow and Carlston, on the south by Leath Ward, and on the east by Northumberland. It is situated on both sides of the river Gelt, and comprehends the northern range of mountains, which extends from Cross Fell, near Alston. The arable land is light, and full of blue stones; the high fell is rugged and sterile, but the lower moor, being dry, and covered with a fine herbage, affords good pasturage. Limestone and freestone are abundant. The commons have been enclosed in pursuance of an act of parliament passed in 1800-1801. Castle Carrock Fell commands fine views of the most fertile portion of Cumberland, the Scottish hills, the Irish Sea, Skiddaw, Saddleback, and the Northumberland mountains. The parish comprises two constablewicks, called Town and Oughterside Quarter. Its area is 3,640 acres, and its ratable value £1,273 9s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 252; in 1811, 307; in 1821, 346; in 1831, 383; in 1841, 351; and in 1851, 346; who are principally engaged in agriculture, and attend the Brampton and Carlisle markets.

The manor of Castle Carrock was given in the reign of Henry II. by Hubert de Vallibus to Eustace de Vallibus, whose posterity seem to have taken the name of Castle Carrock, and probably inhabited the castle, from which the parish took its name. Robert de Castle Carrock, the fourth in descent of that name, died in the reign of Edward I. and left three daughters, among whose posterity this manor having been divided it long continued in severalties; the whole is now vested in the Earl of Carlisle, whose ancestors purchased the several parts at sundry times. Some lands in the parish are held under Charles Aglionby, Esq., of Armathwaite Castle, within the manor of Armathwaite, of which the Earl of Lonsdale is lord. The lands are principally held by resident yeomen.

The village of Castle Carrock is situated on the west side of Geltsdale, four miles south of Brampton. In the neighbourhood are the apparent remains of two ancient fortifications; one in a wet field, about forty yards west of the church, surrounded by a moat, now filled up, is 100 yards in length by forty in breadth; the other, which is a short distance to the south, is about three times as large, and rises seven or eight yards above the surrounding meadow—both have been in tillage for a considerable period. A small stream runs close by the western side of each, and might easily be made to fill the former quite round. Here is a mineral spring possessing water of the same quality as the Gilsland sulphurated spa. On the summit of the fell are two cairns, one of which, called Hespock Raise, is of great size. About the year 1775, a farmer removing a large cairn near Gelt Bridge, found a kist-vaen, or stone coffin, containing a human skeleton.

Castle Carrock church, the dedication of which appears to be unknown, but is supposed to be St. Peter, is a small structure, with a square tower, rebuilt in 1828, at a cost of £250. The old church, which had been long in a ruinous condition, is supposed to have been constructed with materials brought from the old castles above alluded to. The bell, which was removed from the old church, bears the inscription "Praise thou the Lord, O Castle Carrock." The benefice is a rectory, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Carlisle. It is valued in the King's Book at £5 12s. 1d., was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £42, and is now worth about £130 per annum. On the enclosure of the commons 200 acres were allotted in lieu of all tithes. The parish register commences in 1689.

Rectors.—Robert de Holmston, 1312; John de Baglio Kirk, 1340; Sir Adam ——— occurs in 1356; Thomas de Charleton occurs 1340; John Colt, 1380; John Richardson, senr., ———; John Richardson, 1571; John Stodart, 1586; Leonard Milburn, 1580; Christopher Gibson, 1635; Henry Skarron, 1672; Christopher Rieghly, 1679; Joseph Pattinson, 1722; John Pearson, 1739; Richard Dickinson, 1778 (died 1816); — Bowe, ———; Samuel Hinton, 1832; Thomas Charles Vaughan, 1861.

The rectory was built in 1727 by the then rector, the Rev. Joseph Pattinson. It is a plain comfortable building, in the village.

The parish school is situated in the village, and, on the enclosure of the commons, received an allotment of twenty acres of land, which now lets for £12 a year.

GELTSDALE FOREST EXTRA-PAROCIAL.

GELTSDALE Forest is an extensive tract of mountain, forming the southeast portion of Castle Carrock parish, and is a royal forest leased by the Earl of Carlisle. Part of it abounds in birch and alderwoods, and gives rise to the river Gelt, which flows northwards. Previous to the suppression of the monastic institutions, Geltsdale and the adjoining forest of Briorthwaite, belonged to the priory of Hexham, but after the suppression of that house, were granted to the barons of Gilsland.

CUMREW PARISH.

THE parish of Cumrew is bounded on the north by Castle Carrock, on the west by Carlatton, on the south-west and south by Croglin, and on the east by the river Gelt, which divides it from Geltsdale. It comprises the townships of Cumrew Inside, and Cumrew Outside, which are one for parochial purposes. The inhabitants, who are entirely employed in agriculture, reside in the village of Cumrew, and in a few houses dispersed over the parish. They are laborious and healthy, and attend the Brompton and Carlisle markets. The soil here is dry and gravelly. A hill, called Carlunneth, part of the Pennine or Cross Fell range, which runs along the eastern side of the county, is situated in this parish. The area of Cumrew is 2,694 acres, and its rateable value £1,421 12s. 6d.

There are three manors in this parish, viz., Cumrew, Brackenthwaite, and Newbiggin, all of which belong to the Earl of Carlisle, and are included in the barony of Gillsland. In the division of the Dacre estates, Brackenthwaite and Newbiggin fell to Lord Dacre of the South, and came to the Earl of Carlisle by purchase. The Earl of Sussex sold the fines and rents to the tenants for a nominal consideration in the reign of Charles II. The lands here are subject to a fine of two years' value on change of tenant, and a twenty-penny fine on death of lord. Mr. Gill's estate and the enclosed commons are free. The landowners are Robert Leach, Esq., John Gill, Esq., the Earl of Carlisle, L. S. Dixon, Esq., and many smaller proprietors.

The village of Cumrew is about seven miles south of Brompton, and twelve east-south-east of Carlisle.

THE CHURCH.

Cumrew church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small but neat edifice, consisting of nave and chancel, with a tower at the west end, containing two bells. The tower was erected in 1814. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Carlisle, and is worth about £100 per annum. The tithes have been commuted for £45, the rest in land. The tithes are held by the incumbent by lease from the dean and chapter, and a meal modus in lieu of tithe corn is held by Mr. Nanson, of Carlisle, from them. The dean and chapter have transferred their property to the church commissioners.

The parish registers commence in 1579.

INCUMBENTS.—William Wilkinson, 1736; John Ritson, 1763; John Parker, 1765; John Watson, 1828.

The parsonage is a commodious dwelling, erected in 1832, at a cost of about £400, towards which the Rev. J. Watson gave £200, and the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty a similar sum.

The parish school and master's house were erected in 1846, on a piece of ground belonging to the parish, at a cost of £190, of which the Committee of Council on Education contributed £57, the Rev. J. Watson, £55, Lord Morpeth, £10, the dean and chapter, £3, and the landowners the remainder. It is under government inspection, and is supported by subscriptions and the pence of the children. Average attendance twenty-two. So rapidly has the population decreased in this parish, that there are not at present twenty children of age to go to school.

Fifty years ago superstition was rife in this neighbourhood, and there were plenty of ghosts and witches; the schoolmaster, however, has banished them all. The following custom is still preserved. When the corpse of a master of a house where bees are kept is lifted, the hives are raised up at the same time, or the bees would die. Sometimes the bees are invited to the funeral by mixing a little of the eatables and drinkables and putting the mixture into the hives. This occurred here in 1856, on the death of a very old man; it will probably be the last time it will be observed.

In Hutchinson's "History of Cumberland," it is said that the Dacres were supposed to have had a seat here at Drumwalloght, on the estate of Mr. Gill; this is now believed to be merely a conjecture, and to be without foundation in fact. Hutchinson also states that in a field here, near the church, "be the ruins of a large edifice, but so confused and destroyed as not to show its original form, or any marks to discover its strength or the era when it was erected." These two small hillocks were removed in 1832, when one of them was found to have been composed entirely of small stones gathered from the land, and the other of rubbish, but in neither was there any foundations of buildings. On the summit of the neighbouring mountains is a cairn of stones, where a human skeleton has been found; and in a small cairn on the estate belonging to John Gill, Esq., an urn has been discovered.

Abbey Field and Brackenthwaite are two small hamlets in this parish, situate respectively one and one mile and a half north of Cumrew.

The population of Cumrew Inside township in 1801 was 118; in 1811, 126; in 1821, 148; in 1831, 144; in 1841, 112; and in 1851, 100.

The number of inhabitants of Cumrew Outside at the same decennial periods was respectively 63, 68, 83, 72, 71, and 66.

CUMWHITTON PARISH.

CUMWHITTON parish is bounded on the north by Great Corby, on the west by the river Eden, on the south by Leath Ward, and on the east by Cumrew and Carlatton. It is a small oblong district lying on the west side of Castle Carrock Fell, and is held of the Earl of Carlisle as part of the barony of Gilsland. The soil is light and stony, producing barley, oats, and some wheat, with excellent potatoes. The climate is cold but healthy. The parish comprises the townships of Cumwhitton and Northscaugh-with-Moorthwaite, whose united area is 5,400 5,670 according to the rate-book, and the rateable value is £2,002 11s. The soil principally belongs to resident yeomen, but the Earl of Carlisle is the largest owner.

CUMWHITTON.

The area of this township and the rateable value are returned with the parish. The population in 1801 was 244; in 1811, 170; in 1821, 285; in 1831, 324; in 1841, 242; and in 1851, 243.

The manor of Cumwhitton was given by Ranulph de Meschines to Hildred de Carlisle. In King John's reign it belonged to the Bavins, who, after possessing it for three generations, gave the manor to the priory of Lanercost, and the rectory to the priory of Carlisle.¹ The Earl of Carlisle is now lord of the manor.

The small manor of Hornby, given also by the Bavins to the priory of Lanercost, came after the Reformation to the Daeres, and was sold by Henry Dacre before the year 1688 to John Atkinson; it was subsequently purchased by the several proprietors of the small estates which it comprehended.

At Scarrow Hill is a freehold estate, which in 1688 belonged to the Scarrows, a family of great antiquity at the place, since extinct; it is now in severalties.

The village of Cumwhitton is about seven miles south-by-west of Brampton. There was formerly, on the village green, two artificial mounds which had been used as butts for archery, and were known as High and Low Willy Wastel, "probably from the great archer recorded in the old song." Until recent years the old custom of holding a wake on St. John's Eve, with fires, &c., was continued.

THE CHURCH.

Cumwhitton church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure, consisting of nave, chancel, and a small square tower. In 1291, when the Valor of Pope Nicholas was taken, the church was rectorial, and valued at £8 14s.; in 1318 it continued rectorial, but was not taxed by Edward II. on account of its poverty. It subsequently became appropriated to the priory of Carlisle, and the patronage is now vested in the dean and chapter. Hutchinson tells us that "the dean and chapter demised all the rectory of Cumwhitton, except the curate's house and garden, viz., all the glebe lands and meadows called Kirkcroft, tithes, oblations, &c., under the yearly rent of fifteen eskeps of haver-meal, and 10s. in money, besides the curate's stipend of ten pounds. He adds, "the curacy was augmented by lot, and the money laid out in the purchase of land in Nichol Forest, which now yields £9 rent per annum. By the bounty of the Dowager Countess Gower, who gave £200, an additional augmentation was had, by which lands were bought in the parish of Addingham, yielding now near £15 a year; the whole making a comfortable stipend." In 1840 all the tithes were commuted for a yearly rent charge of £175, viz., great tithes for £105, and meal tithes, £70. The curacy is now worth about £101 a year. The parish registers are preserved from 1731.

INCUMBENTS.—Edward Anderson, 1317; Joseph Halson, 1821; Samuel Halson, 1826; William Ford, 1831; Robert Robinson, 1844.

The parish school, at Sandy Syke, is endowed with the interest of £200 left by Mr. Adam Hodgson, of Horsley.

There is also a school situated near Cumwhitton village, built about the year 1819, and supported entirely by subscription.

Upon an eminence in the middle of a dark and dreary waste, commonly called King Harry, in the southern part of the parish, is a Druidical temple, designated Grey Yauds, from the colour of the stones. The circle is fifty-two yards in diameter, and is formed of eighty-eight stones, the largest of which is not more than four feet high. Tradition says the name of this moor is derived from the circumstance of one of the Henrys, kings of England, having encamped here.

In accordance with an ancient custom, the owner of Nunfield estate, in this township, pays a goose and a cartload of coals yearly to the lord of Nunnerly, in Ainstable parish, and is toll-free throughout England.

NORTHSKAUGH WITH MOORTHWAITE.

The acreage and rateable value of this township are returned with the parish. The number of inhabitants in 1801, was 202; in 1811, 308; in 1821, 259; in ¹T. Denton's MSS.

1831, 255 : in 1841, of Northseugh, 216 : of Moor-thwaite, 75 ; and in 1851, Northseugh, 186 ; of Moor-thwaite, 145. The hamlets in the township, and their distances from Cumwhitton are as follow :— Moor-waite, one mile south ; Hornby, one and a half mile south-by-east ; Northseugh (High), three miles south-by-east ; and Northseugh (Low), two miles south-by-east.

DENTON NETHER PARISH.

This parish lies south of the river Irthing, between Naworth and Upper Denton, and includes the small hamlet of Low Row. On the low side of the parish the soil is light and sandy ; on the south or high side it is stronger, but of a cold and sterile nature. The parish has no dependant townships.

The area of Nether Denton is 4,530 acres ; and the rateable value £2,550. Its population in 1801 was 245 ; in 1811, 258 ; in 1821, 287 ; in 1831, 290 ; in 1841, 280 ; and in 1851, 334.

The manor of Nether Denton was given by Eustace de Vallibus to a family who assumed the name of Denton. The heiress of Sir Richard Denton married Adam Copley, of Batley, in Yorkshire, and the heiress of Copley, in the third generation, married Adam de Hall, who took the name of Denton, and had from his father-in-law a grant of the arms of his maternal great-grandfather, Sir Richard Denton. In the reign of Henry VII. John Denton exchanged the manor for Warnell Hall with Lord Dacre, from whom it has descended to the Earl of Carlisle. Denton Hall has long been occupied as a farmhouse. The customary tenants pay two years' value and a heriot on change of tenant, and a fine on the death of the lord. The principal landowners are the Earl of Carlisle, the Rev. Thomas Colbeck, Thomas Ramshay, Esq., and John Waugh, Esq.

Low Row is a small hamlet in this parish, about four miles east of Brampton. Here is a station on the Newcastle and Carlisle railway.

THE CHURCH.

The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a small unpretending structure. The living, a rectory, was given by Robert, son of Bueth, to the monks of Wetheral ; and he also, by the advice, and with the consent of his wife and friends, gave to the church some of his lands that lay near to it, and eight acres besides as well without as within the village. This grant was confirmed by John and Elias, sons of David de Denton, and appropriated to the providing a light before the altar of the Most Holy Trinity in the church of Wetheral. After the decease of Robert, son of Bueth, the church of Nether Denton was given to Lanercost Priory. This transfer led to some litigation between the communities of Wetheral and Lanercost, which was terminated by the mediation of the papal legate, who divided the profits of the living between the two houses, and gave the presentation and advowson to the Bishop of Carlisle, whose successors have since enjoyed the same. The share which each of the communities of Wetheral and Lanercost had out of this rectory was two marks and a half. In 1266 the prior and monks of Wetheral re-leased this part to the bishop of Carlisle. The church is rated in the King's Book at £8 5s. 5d. It was returned to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £16 1s. 6d. In 1761 it was augmented with £400, of which £200 was from Queen Anne's Bounty, and £200 given by the Dowager Countess Gower. It is now worth about £100 a year. At the enclosure of the commons there were about 500 acres allotted, partly in lieu of tithes, and partly by right of common. The parish registers commence in 1710.

RECTORS.—Robert Oriel, 1304 ; Adam de Kale, 1306 ; John de Cuihayth, 1309 ; John de Abington, 1317 ; Richard de Freceke, 1385 ; Edward Bell, died, 1567 ; Christopher Louthier, 1567 ; Miles Matmough, 1576 ; William Thompson, 1580 ; Roland Baxter, 1597 ; Ralph Snowden, died, 1633 ; Nicholas Dean, 1633 ; William Culbeth occurs 1692 ; Richard Culbeth, 1692 ; Thomas Pearson, 1703 ; Nicholas Reay, 1718 ; William Hosket, 1736 ; — Holme, — ; — Harrison, — ; Thomas Ramshay, 1735 ; Thomas Colbeck, 1834.

The parish school is in the village or hamlet of Low Row.

CHARITIES.

Hodgson's Charity.—William Hodgson, who died in 1856, bequeathed to the parish of Nether Denton a field called the Scollicks, containing about twelve acres, which he had purchased a short time previous to his decease. This property now lets for £18 5s. a year, which sum, in accordance with Mr. Hodgson's directions, is distributed in the following manner, viz. :—£8 a year to the school at Low Row, £3 a year to the parish clerk, and the residue among the poor of the parish.

DENTON UPPER PARISH.

THE parish of Upper Denton comprises a small district, bounded on the east by North Denton, on the south by Nether Denton, and on the west and north by the river Irthing. The parish comprises no dependant townships.

The area of Upper Denton is 860 acres, and its rateable value £1,175. In 1801 it contained 85 inhabitants; in 1811, 94; in 1821, 100; in 1831, 106; in 1841, 127; and in 1851, 112.

The manor of Upper Denton, which was anciently part of the barony of Gilsland, was conveyed in the reign of Edward I. by Richard Stonland to John Witherington, in whose family it continued for several generations. Mr. T. Denton says that it was conveyed by that family to Lord William Howard, but Nicolson and Burn make the Tweedales to have been intermediate proprietors. It now belongs to the Earl of Carlisle, in whose family it has been for a considerable period.

The village of Upper Denton is six miles east of Brampton.

Upper Denton church is a very small, unpretending structure. The benefice is a curacy in the patronage of the Earl of Carlisle. It was certified to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners at £47 per annum, all of which arises from lands purchased with Queen Anne's Bounty, except 20s. a year paid by the Earl of Carlisle. The church of Upper Denton was given by Robert de Vallibus, and Robert, son of Auketil, to the priory of Lanercost, and appropriated to that house by Hugh Pudsey, bishop of Durham, in whose diocese this parish then was. For ecclesiastical purposes this parish and the district of St. Mary Magdalene in Gilsland, consisting of a portion of Waterhead township, in the parish of Lanercost, were united in 1859; the incumbent is the Rev. C. Kipling. The names of the incumbents up to the present year will be found in the list of the vicars of Lanercost.

Mumps Hall is a small hamlet in this parish, in which lived Margaret Teasdale, said to be the original Meg Merrilies of Sir Walter Scott's "Guy Mannering." Her grave may yet be seen in the parish churchyard.

Near Mains, on the south side of the Irthing, is a spring, which petrifies the moss through which it passes in its course to the river.

FARLAM PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by the parishes of Brampton and Denton; on the east by the district of Bridgeholme, and the parish of Brampton, with an isolated portion of Lanercost; on the south by Hayton parish; and on the west by Brampton. A survey for the enclosure of the commons was made in 1780, and another for the poor-rates in 1819. The parish comprises the townships of East and West Farlam, and Middleholme, formerly extra-parochial, whose united area is 5,680 acres.

The population is partly settled at the hamlets of Milton, Farlam, Hallbankgate, Forest Head, Coal Fell, Rigg Foot, and a considerable proportion in a more scattered manner. The inhabitants are colliers, lime-burners, and agricultural labourers. There are two collieries, Talkin and Tindal Fell (two of the Naworth coal-mines), the property of the Earl of Carlisle, and leased to Mrs. M. Thompson and Sons, of Kirkhouse. One seam of coal about three and a half feet in thickness is extensively wrought at the Talkin Colliery, by a shaft thirty-two fathoms deep; the same seam, though altered in quality, being used as a steam coal, is wrought at Tindal Fell, by an adit or drift. The strata sunk through at the former colliery consists of alternations of white freestone, shale, and limestone, the number of hands employed at the two places averages about 200. The pits are situated in Hayton and Brampton parishes. There are about seventy hands employed at the lime-works, producing about 20,000 tons annually. In the neighbourhood of Tindal Tarn, and partly in Farlam and partly in Brampton parish, are the zinc and spelter works of J. H. Attwood, Esq., called the Tindale Fell Spelter Works, on the private railway of the Earl of Carlisle, leading from Brampton and Milton station to the Newcastle and Carlisle branch railway at Lambley. These spelter works were erected in 1845, and consist of twelve subliming furnaces, and twenty-eight calcining reverberatory furnaces for roasting or calcining the ores of zinc, a refinery, and a mill worked by water from the tarn, for crushing and grinding the ores. There are also pot-houses and stoves for making and burning the retorts and condensers, with warehouses, offices, manager's house, and upwards of thirty workmen's dwellings, a school-house for children, and a teacher's residence. These works attract considerable attention as being the only zinc works in the north of England, also as the process used is a patented one, and supposed to be superior to any other in the country. The school is supported by the proprietor, with the aid of the children's payments. The ores come from Alston Moor, and various parts of England, and abroad. The population, generally speaking, are sober, steady, and industrious; the parish is clean and dry, and the people are in a comfortable position. The soil about Milton is light and gravelly, but in the neighbourhood of Kirkhouse and Farlam Hall is rich and loamy. Towards the eastern portion of the parish there is a large tract of limestone land used for grazing. The west end of the parish is crossed by the Newcastle and Carlisle railway, which has a station at Milton, and a line belonging to Lord Carlisle stretches the entire length of the parish, for the conveyance of coal, &c., to Carlisle, Brampton, Alston, &c. The rateable value of the parish is £3,005 5s. Brampton and Carlisle are the markets attended.

The only antiquities known to have been discovered in this parish are some stone coffins, with urns, which were found on the removal of a sandhill near Kirkhouse, some ten years ago, but which were destroyed by the workmen in their anxiety to get what they supposed to be a treasure.

EAST FARLAM.

The population of this township in 1801 was 430; in 1811, 505; in 1821, 491; in 1831, 616; in 1841, 526; and in 1851, 648.

The manor of Farlam was granted by Hubert de Vallibus, lord of Gilsland, to Walter de Windsoor, whose posterity took the name of Farlam. John de Farlam, having no children, devised it in the reign of Edward III. to Ralph de Dacre and Margaret Multon, lady of Gilsland, his wife, and their heirs. It has ever since passed with the barony of Gilsland, and is now held by the Earl of Carlisle. The lands here are held by ancient rents, greenhues, and service monies, and also fines on all customary property on the death of the lord or change of tenant. The landowners are the Earl of Carlisle; Mrs. Thompson and Sons; James H. Attwood, Esq.; Mrs. Bell; Messrs. John Bell, Joseph Bell, and others. Courts for the barony of Gilsland, which includes Farlam, are held at Brampton twice a year.

THE CHURCH.

Farlam parish church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a plain structure, consisting of nave and chancel, and dates probably from the twelfth century. It was given by Robert de Vallibus to the priory of Lanercost, to which monastery the tithes were appropriated; but at the Dissolution it was granted to Sir Thomas Dacre, and the patronage and impropriation are now vested in the Earl of Carlisle. The living is worth about £105 per annum, arising from lands in Bewcastle, purchased by augmentation from Queen Anne's Bounty, and £200 given by the Dowager Countess Gower, an annual sum from the Bounty Office, a small rent charge on the Kirkhouse farm, and the fees. There are no tithes. The parish register extends over a period of 200 years.

A new church is now (1859) in course of erection, adjoining Kirkhouse; the site being on the hill immediately above. The designs, which have been supplied by Mr. Salvin, give promise of a simple, but at the same time chaste and picturesque edifice, in the Early English style. It will consist of a nave, chancel, and north aisle; the estimated cost, inclusive of heating apparatus, is about £2,000. Towards this sum the Hon. C. W. G. Howard, M.P., contributed £500; his brother, the Earl of Carlisle, giving the site, and a considerable addition to the churchyard; Mrs. Thompson and Sons also contributed about £300; J. H. Attwood, Esq., £70; and the other landowners in an equally liberal manner. The foundation stone was laid on the 8th July, 1859, by the Earl of Carlisle.

INCUMBENTS.—Sir Simon de Walton, died 1316; William de Richardby, 1316; Sir Thomas de Derby, died 1361; Sir Thomas Roke, 1361; Sir Robert de Hayton, 1373; — Townley, —; George Gillbanks, 1786; George Mercer Tandy, 1843; John Lowthian, 1848. Mr. Gillbanks did not reside in the parish, and had for curates William Thompson, John Wannep, and G. M. Tandy, in succession.

A parsonage was erected in 1859, in the Elizabethan style, at a cost of about £1,000.

A fortnightly Sunday service is held at the school-room connected with the Spelter Works, at the east end of the parish.

The Wesleyans have a neat new chapel at Hallbank Gate.

A mechanics' institution was established about two years ago at Hallbank Gate, for the workmen and others generally. It is supported by subscriptions, and a small quarterly payment from each member. There are about 200 volumes in the library; the number of members is about eighty.

Tindal Tarn is the boundary between Farlam and Brampton parishes. A small stream which has its origin on Tindal Fell and runs past Hallbank Gate, passes Farlam Hall and Kirkhouse, where it is used in driving machinery, and thence to the village of Milton, where it constitutes the boundary of the parish. Another stream called Coal Fell Beck, rising on Talkin Fell, and passing Closepitt Holme, Greenside, Lime-works, and Riggfoot, and after uniting with the Blackburn at Byershall, runs into the South Tyne near Featherstone Castle.

Many of the houses in this parish have undergone considerable alterations and improvements during the last few years.

Hallbank Gate and Kirkhouse are two hamlets in this township, the former of which is four miles east-south-east of Brampton; and the latter, where the church is situated, is half a mile east of Hallbank Gate.

WEST TOWNLAND.

This township contained 162 inhabitants in 1801; 167 in 1811; 172 in 1821; 200 in 1831; 500 in 1841; and 500 in 1851. The acreage, &c., are returned with the parish. Milton is a village in this township one mile and a half east-south-east of Brampton. Here is Milton Hall, the residence of Thomas Thompson, Esq., erected in 1857.

HAYTON PARISH.

THE parish of Hayton is bounded on the north by Brampton, on the north-west by Irthington, on the west by Warwick and Wetheral, on the south by Cumwhitton, and on the east by Farlam and Castle Carrock. The soil here is of various qualities: near Talkin it is dry and gravelly; in Hayton the land, in many parts, is very fertile, and the soil a deep blackish loam, very luxuriant; and in other parts it is light and sandy. The rivers Irthing and Gelt run through the parish; on the latter are quarries of freestone, limestone, and blue slate, and in Talkin are extensive coal mines. The parish abounds in game. The townships are Hayton, Faugh and Fenton, Little Corby, and Talkin, whose united area is 7,737 acres.

HAYTON.

The rateable value of this township is £2,212 10s. Its population in 1801 was 376; in 1811, 436; in 1821, 490; in 1831, 582; in 1841, 534; and in 1851, 532; who are chiefly resident in the village. They are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and attend the Brampton and Carlisle markets.

The manor of Hayton belongs to the lord of Gilsland. Mr. T. Denton says that Hayton formerly belonged to the Denton family, and was given by John Denton to Lord Dacre in exchange, in the reign of Henry VII. The landowners are Thomas Henry Graham, Esq., of Edmond Castle, Sir H. Dalrymple Ross, George Head Head, Esq., and John Ramsbay, Esq.

The village of Hayton is pleasantly situated two and a half miles south-west of Brampton. It possesses a remarkable monument in the shape of a circular eminence, twelve feet high, and about 100 feet in diameter, known as Castle Hill, and which is supposed by some to have served as an outpost for the defence of Edmond Castle, distant about one mile north-west, but upon what ground such a conjecture is founded we cannot ascertain.

THE CHURCH.

Hayton church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a neat structure, consisting of nave and chancel, with a small square tower; it was rebuilt in 1780, and will accommodate about 400 persons; the chancel was rebuilt in 1842, at the expense of T. H. Graham, Esq. The church of Hayton was given by Robert de Vaux or de Vallibus, to the prior and convent of Carlisle, and was shortly afterwards appropriated to that monastery. On the suppression of the monastic institutions it was transferred to the dean and chapter, the legal successors of the prior and convent; the dean and chapter sold their right of patronage, in 1855, to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who are now the impropriators and patrons. Previous to the commutation the tithes were leased out for twenty-one years, by the dean and chapter, reserving the annual payment of seventeen eskeps of oatmeal; and the lessee covenanted to pay the curate £5 yearly, and to repair the chancel; the ancient custom of the lessee of the small tithes giving the inhabitants forty-eight quarts of ale (viz., twelve on the feast of St. Andrew, twelve at Candlemas, and twenty-four at Easter), has been discontinued. The Earl of Carlisle is the impropriator of a portion of the corn tithes of Talkin, and the vicar of Brampton owns the hay tithes of the same township; but all are now commuted for a rent charge on the land. In 1751 and 1757 the living, which is a perpetual curacy, received two augmentations from Queen Anne's Bounty, amounting to £400, with which land was purchased at Hayton, and added to the ancient glebe, making altogether about ninety-six acres. The benefice is now worth about £133 per annum. The parish registers commence in 1620.

INCUMBENTS.—Hugh Brown, 1755; Edmond Wills, 1757; Richard Hair, 1806; Richard Rice, 1821; George Toppan, 1836.

The parsonage, situated near the church, is a good substantial building, erected in 1821 at a cost of £800.

The Wesleyans have a chapel in the village.

Hayton School, situated in the village, is the property of Thomas Henry Graham, Esq., who is also the principal contributor towards its support. There is a good master's house near the school, erected at the expense of Mr. Graham. The school has an average attendance of 100 pupils, who pay from 1s. to 4s. per quarter.

In 1856 Thomas Henry Graham, Esq., established a good reading-room here for the benefit of the inhabitants, which is entirely supported by its founder. There is also a good library in the school, to which its members have access.

To the east of the village is Stone House, the neat residence of Capt. Coulson, but the property of Sir H. D. Ross.

Edmond Castle, distant about one mile north-west of Hayton, is the beautiful seat of Thomas Henry Graham, Esq.

Graham of Edmond Castle.

THOMAS GRAHAM, Esq., of Edmond Castle, Cumberland, descended from a branch of the Grahams of Esk, married, January, 1749, Margaret, daughter of Thomas Coulthard, Esq., of Scotby, and by her (who died, aged 91, in 1846) left at his decease, October, 1807,

- i. THOMAS, his heir.
- ii. James, of Kikstall, created a baronet, 1808.
- iii. William.
- iv. Mary, married to Richard Graham, Esq., of Stone House.
- v. Elizabeth.
- vi. Margaret.

The eldest son,

THOMAS GRAHAM, Esq., of Edmond Castle, born 1751, married, 17th August, 1791, Elizabeth Susannah, daughter of John Davenport, Esq., of Clapham, Surrey, and left at his decease, 23rd June, 1813,

- i. THOMAS HENRY, now of Edmond Castle.
- ii. John, who married, 1831, Caroline Elmer, daughter of the late Lt. J. Curries, Esq., M.P., of Windmill Hill, and has issue,
 1. Reginald John.
 2. Henry Davenport.
 3. Charles.
 4. Edward Curries.
 5. Caroline Curries.

- i. Elizabeth Maria.
- ii. Emily, married to the Rev. Thomas Collins.

iii. Anne Margaret, married to Edward Pothill, Esq.

Mr. Graham was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS HENRY GRAHAM, Esq., of Edmond Castle, co. Cumberland, J.P. and D.L., high sheriff in 1824; born 25th June, 1784; married, 6th March, 1829, Mary, eighth daughter of the late Sir David Carnegie, Bart., of Southesk.

Arms.—Per pale, indurated, erm. and sa., on a chief, per pale of the last, and, or, three escallops, counterchanged.

Crest.—Two armed ants issuing out of the battlements of a tower, ppr., holding an escallop sa.

LITTLE CORBY.

The area of this township is 352 acres, and its rateable value £412. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 120; in 1811, 114; in 1821, 170; in 1831, 313; in 1841, 283; and in 1851, 297; who are resident in the village of Little Corby. The manor of Little Corby is held by P. H. Howard, Esq., of Corby Castle, besides whom George Irving, Esq., is the principal landowner.

The village of Little Corby is situated at the confluence of the rivers Eden and Irthing, about six miles east-by-north of Carlisle.

FAUGH AND FENTON.

The population of this township in 1801 was 200; in 1811, 304; in 1821, 331; in 1831, 333; in 1841, 339; and in 1851, 400. The rateable value is £2,512 7s. 6d.

The manorial rights are the property of the Earl of Carlisle. The principal landowners are John Ramshay, Esq.; George Head Head, Esq.; Messrs. Thomas Taylor, and John Moses.

Faugh and Fenton are two small hamlets, the former one mile and a half, and the latter one mile south of Hayton. How is another hamlet in this township, half a mile south of the same place. The Wesleyans have a small place of worship at Fenton, lately erected by Mr. Taylor.

TALKIN.

The population of Talkin township in 1801 was 249; in 1811, 237; in 1821, 280; in 1831, 376; in 1841, 344; and in 1851, 311. The rateable value is £1,544 12s. 6d. The inhabitants reside principally in the village of Talkin, with the exception of three or four farm-houses, and a few cottages on the common. They are principally engaged in agriculture, and some of them are employed at Blakyske coal-pit, on the common, which is leased by Mrs. Thompson and Sons, under the Earl of Carlisle. Brampton market is usually attended. The land in the neighbourhood of the village is good, and in a fair state of cultivation. It is well suited for the growth of potatoes, turnips, and all sorts of grain. The Newcastle and Carlisle railway passes through the township about a mile west of the village. The common, to the extent of about 1,400 acres, has been recently enclosed, under the Commons Enclosure Act. Besides the coal-mines there are limestone and freestone quarries.

The manor of Talkin is held by the Earl of Carlisle, as parcel of the barony of Gilsland.

The village of Talkin is two and a half miles east-by-south of Hayton, and possesses a neat chapel, which was built about sixteen years ago, by T. H. Graham, Esq., the inhabitants assisting by carting materials, and Lord Carlisle gave the stone. The chapel is a neat and well-finished structure, and is kept in repair by T. H. Graham, Esq., who has also endowed it with £80 out of Wiggillhill estate, a property of his adjoining the chapel. The Rev. James Irving is curate to the Rev. George Toppin, of Hayton. He resides at Talkin, and assists Mr. Toppin at Hayton, as well as doing duty here.

The parsonage is a neat and commodious house, erected by T. H. Graham, Esq., who also gave the site. The grounds around the house are neatly laid out.

Talkin Tarn, a small lake well stocked with fish, is situated in this township.

SCHOOL.

School.—By indenture of bargain and sale, dated 1st September, 1789, John Milbourn granted to trustees a piece of ground called Willy Moor, containing six acres, lying in Hayton Low Moor, on trust to let the same, and apply the rents for and towards the schooling of as many poor children of Talkin quarter as the rents should be sufficient to teach. In or about the year 1842, Thomas H. Graham, Esq., purchased these six acres from the trustees, and in lieu thereof laid a rent charge of £10 a year on his estate adjoining the school. On the enclosure of the common thirty acres were allotted to the school, which now produce £15 a year. The total income is now £30 per annum, exclusive of the children's quarter pence. A new school, with teacher's house attached, was erected in 1858, at a cost of £600, defrayed by subscription and a government grant of £280. The school is under government inspection; the master is assisted by one pupil teacher. Average attendance eighty children.

IRTHINGTON PARISH.

THE parish of Irthington is bounded on the north by Walton and Kirklington, on the west by Scaleby and Crosby, on the south by Hayton, and on the east by Brampton. The river Irthing, from which its name is derived, flows at its southern extremity. The parish is intersected by the site of the celebrated Roman Wall, and by the military road from Carlisle to Newcastle. In Newby township is Watch Cross, the Aballaba of the Romans. The soil of the ancient enclosures in this parish is light and sandy; that between the village and the river consists of a mixture of loam and moss, and clay is found on the hills. Plenty of excellent stone is found throughout the parish well suited for building, being the old red sandstone. The farmers generally attend both Carlisle and Brampton markets. The parish comprises the townships of Irthington, Laversdale, Newby, and Newton, whose aggregate area is 6,050 acres (6,352 in rate book). Population entirely agricultural.

IRTHINGTON.

The area of this township is 947 acres (889 in rate book), and its rateable value £1,045 8s. The population in 1801 was 197; in 1811, 224; in 1821, 251; in 1831, 267; in 1841, 270; and in 1851, 226; who reside in the village of Irthington, and the small hamlets of Old Wall and Ruleholme.

A Roman castle originally existed near the site of the present farm buildings, called Nook, now in the occupation of the Messrs. Bell, whose predecessor, the late Robert Bell, made a collection of the principal Roman relics that were found in the neighbourhood, such as coins, seals, altars, pottery, &c. This collection is still kept on the premises, and is of interest to the historian and the antiquary.

The manorial rights of Irthington are held by the Earl of Carlisle, as lord of the barony of Gilsland, which includes the whole of this parish. The principal landowners are the Earl of Carlisle, Rev. W. Dacre (vicar), Messrs. John and George Bell, Thomas Graham, Thomas Bulman, William Law, John Bowman, George Ramsay, John Boastead.

The village of Irthington, or the "town on the Irthing," is large and straggling. It is situated on the north side of the Irthing, 2½ miles west-by-north of Brampton. King John was here on February 20, 1201.

THE CHURCH.

Irthington church, dedicated to St. Kentigern, or St. Mungo, is the principal object of interest in the parish, having been entirely restored within the last two years, under the present incumbent, and his predecessor, the Rev. J. Hancock. The original church was built about the twelfth century, and consisted of a nave and aisles, with a small bell turret. The present church is erected on the original site, and has been entirely rebuilt, with the exception of the arches in the interior. Of these, the chancel arch is a very beautiful specimen of the Norman Decorated style; the other arches are all plain and massive Norman, with the exception of the two west arches, which are pointed, showing the original church to have been built at the transition period. The exterior of the chancel is restored with stones out of the old Roman wall, on many of which the original chisel marks of the Roman masons are still distinctly visible. There are three very fine windows, by Wailes of Newcastle, to the memory of the late Robert Bell, — besides two minor ones, one in memory of the late Robert Bowman, of this parish, who died at the advanced age of 118 years, and the other in memory of the late Mr. Dodgson, of Beck. The entire expense of the restoration, inclusive of the windows, was about £1,000, which sum was raised by subscription among the owners and occupiers of land in the parish. The church of Irthington was granted to the prior and convent of Lanercost, by Robert de Vallibus, and it was soon appropriated to that house. In the year 1224 the vicarage was taxed as follows by Bishop Malclerk: — The vicar to have the whole altarage, with the corn tithe of the vill of Irthington, and all the land belonging to the said church, with the tithe of hay and mills throughout the whole parish, with all small tithes belonging to the altarage; saving to the prior and convent yearly three eskeps of oatmeal, and two eskeps of malt; which was afterwards altered by Bishop Close to one eskep and a half of oatmeal. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas, the church of Irthington is rated at £13 16s.; and the vicarage at £10. In the Valor of Edward II., they were stated to be worth nothing, because they were totally destroyed. In the King's Book, the vicarage of Irthington is rated at £6 1s. 5½d. On the dissolution of Lanercost Priory, the church of Irthington was granted, among other possessions of the said priory, to Sir Thomas Dacre, Knight, by Edward VI., in the sixth year of his reign (1552-3). The benefice is now a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of Joseph Dacre, Esq., of Kirlinton Hall, brother of the present vicar. The living was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the annual value of £30; it is now worth about £330. The tithes in this parish are very small, the greater part of the land being tithe free. There are about 400 acres of land belonging to the church, which are at present undergoing great improvements; the greater part of this land was given in lieu of vicarial tithes on the enclosure of the commons in 1783. The principal glebe house was erected about ten years ago.

VICARS: — William de Meleburn, 1224; Laurence de Caldre, 1337; John Farebarne, died 1567; Robert Hutton, 1567; Robert Dobson, 1585; Leonard Scott, 1589; Joseph Lowden, 1597; Richard Lowden, 1612; Anthony Salkeld, resigned 1642; Richard Sibson, 1642; John Theakston, 1661; Philip Fielding, 1666; John Gosling, 1692; Matthew Wilkinson, 1731; James Farish, 1745; John Stamper, 1763; John Topping, —; John Hancock, —; William Dacre, 1852.

Irthington School was rebuilt by subscription in 1850. The master receives a sum of £25 a year from subscriptions and endowments, the latter consisting of the interest of about £280 in the funds and out on loan, derived from Hetherington's and Dalton's charities.

CHARITIES.

Hetherington's Charity. — Jane Hetherington, by a clause in her will, dated 27th September, 1792, gave as a donation, towards a free school within the parish of Irthington, for the use and education of poor children, the sum of £100, which was paid by her brother, Edward Hetherington, and was subsequently laid out on mortgage. This money has been since lent out at interest, and the proceeds devoted to the education of the poor in Irthington and Laversdale schools.

Dalton's Charity. — Jane Dalton, about the year 1795, bequeathed £100, upon trust, to be placed out, and directed that the interest of the same should be paid to the minister of the parish of Irthington, by whom she directed the same should be applied towards the education of such poor children within the parish as he should think fit. The interest is applied according to the intentions of the donor.

LAVERSDALE.

The area of Laversdale township is 3,415 acres (3,225 in rate book), and its rateable value £2,852 8s. In 1801 it contained 399 inhabitants; in 1811, 390; in 1821, 450; in 1831, 431; in 1841, 438; and in 1851, 429. The manorial rights are held by the Earl of Carlisle. The principal landowners are Thomas Clark, Thomas Calvert, James de Vitre, Esq., John Hogg, Rev. W. Dacre, Thomas Jefferson, Joseph Dickinson, William Maude, Edward Waugh, Richard Waugh, Thomas Law, Isaac and John Phillips, James Fawcett, Mrs. George Saul, Mrs. James, John Boustead, Edward Standish, Thomas Stanwix, and Thomas Sargison. Great improvements have been made in this township within the last few years, both socially and as regards its agriculture. Lands have been improved, bridges constructed, mosses reclaimed, and schools erected.

A new school and classroom, with good house attached, were erected about three years ago, on a site conveyed to trustees by the late Robert James, of Mireside, who has also left £300 by will to endow the school. There were also £100 given by the late James Boustead, of Cumrenton, lent out at 4½ per cent for the same purpose. The master is also supported by subscriptions amounting to about £17 per annum and the school fees. This school is under government inspection, having been erected at a cost of about £600, £284 of which was given by a grant from the Committee of Council on Education. Service is performed in the school-room every Sunday afternoon by the vicar.

The village of Laversdale is three and a half miles west north-west of Brampton.

At Cumrenton there was formerly a wood containing 300 acres.

Old Wall is a hamlet in this township, three miles west-north-west of Brampton.

NEWBY.

Newby contains 807 acres, and its rateable value is £535 4s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 106; in 1811, 109; in 1821, 97; in 1831, 110; in 1841, 124; and in 1851, 134. This is a small township, chiefly in the possession of T. H. Graham, Esq., of Edmond Castle, Miss Lamb, Messrs. Thomas Little, and James Brough. It overhangs the river Irthing near its junction with the Eden.

In this township is situated Watch Cross, the Aballaba of the Romans. Horsley gives the following account of the station:—"A little detached from the road, to the south, is a Roman fort of about four chains and a half square, called Watch Cross; and as I was assured by the country people, and have had it since further confirmed, a military way has gone near it, or between it and the military road belonging to the wall; for they often plough up paving stones here, and think part of the highway to Brampton to be upon it. This is the least station on the line of wall, and is as usual plundered of its stones, as at Burgh and Drumburgh. However, the ramparts and ditch are very fair and visible." The common on which this station stood being enclosed about eighty years ago, and brought into cultivation, all traces of the camp have been obliterated. This camp has been supposed to have been only a summer encampment, and was garrisoned by a detachment of Moors.

NEWTOWN.

The area of Newtown is 1,536 acres, and its rateable value £831 16s. The population in 1801 was 168; in 1811, 188; in 1821, 222; in 1831, 215; in 1841, 217; and in 1851, 212. The principal landowners are the Earl of Carlisle, W. P. Johnson, Esq., Miss Lamb, and Mrs. Dodgson. The Roman wall runs through this and Laversdale township, and may be very distinctly traced along the whole extent of its course through the parish. At the west end of the township are the remains of a large Roman mile castle, the stones still lie in confusion upon its sites.

The village of Newtown occupies a very picturesque situation two and a half miles north-west of Brampton. It is composed of a number of small cottages, erected at the time when hand-loom weaving was a more flourishing trade than at present; the cottages are now occupied, for the most part, by a wandering class of tenants, who come here during the winter. There is a small place of worship belonging to the Independents.

KIRKANDREWS-UPON-ESK PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by the rivers Liddel, Kershope, Sark, and Scott's Dyke, which separate it from Scotland; on the west by the Solway Frith; on the south by the parishes of Arthuret and Bewcastle; and on the north-east by Kershope. It extends from the Solway to the confines of Northumberland, a distance of about twenty miles, the average breadth being about three miles. This large parish, which forms the principal part of the barony of Liddel, was, previous to the union of England and Scotland, the constant theatre of war, rapine, and bloodshed. It is now inhabited by opulent farmers and a contented peasantry, and is one of the most orderly and peaceable districts in the kingdom. The Caledonian railway intersects the lower part of the parish, and has a station near the river Sark, in Nether township, not far from Gretna. The parish comprises the townships of Middle Quarter, Moat Quarter, Nether Quarter, and the chapelry of Nichol Forest, whose united area is 17,246 acres; the rateable value is £13,359 12s. 7½d. Sir James R. G. Graham, Bart., is owner of the whole parish, with the exception of some estates in the chapelry of Nichol Forest. Agriculture is the employment of the inhabitants, and Carlisle the market attended.

MIDDLE QUARTER.

This township comprises an area of 4,591 acres, and its rentable value is £4,062 5s. 11d. The population in 1801 was 573; in 1811, 600; in 1821, 624; in 1831, 491; in 1841, 458; and in 1851, 403.

In the neighbourhood of the church is an ancient border fortress, consisting of a square tower, "with a ground floor and two apartments above, one over the other; in the first floor it was usual to keep the cattle; in the two last was lodged the family." About a mile from the church is a freestone quarry.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. Andrew, occupies a picturesque situation, on the west side of the Esk, two and a half miles north of Longtown. It was rebuilt in 1776, partly on the site of an older edifice, by the late Rev. Robert Graham, D.D., and is a plain substantial stone structure, consisting of a nave, with a semicircular apse, which serves as a chancel, and a small bell turret containing one bell. There are 240 sittings, all of which are free, with the exception of two, set apart for the rector and the Graham family. There is a small gallery over the entrance at the south end. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £3 11s. 5d., and certified to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as of the average value of £512 a year. According to the Clergy List it is now worth £854 per annum. The tithes were commuted in 1849 for £854 12s. 6d., viz., £853 16s. 3d. for Middle Quarter; £354 8s. 8d. for Nether Quarter; £114 13s. 11d. for Moat Quarter; and £31 13s. 8d. for Nichol Forest Chapelry; this last was in lieu of a modus. The parish registers are preserved from the year 1054. For succession of rectors, see Arthuret parish.

There are four schools in the parish, one in each quarter, which receive £5 a year each from Lady Widdrington's charity. Sir James Graham, in 1826, gave five acres of common to the schoolmaster of Middle Quarter, which now produces £3 a year.

CHARITY.

Lady Widdrington's Charity.—By indenture, dated 14th August, 1754, enrolled in Chancery, reciting that Lady Widdrington and her ancestors, owners of the manors of Arthuret and Kirk Andrews, had for many years then last past, paid unto several schoolmasters the yearly sum of £12, that is to say, £6 to each parish, for teaching the poor children of and belonging to the manors and parishes of Arthuret and Kirk Andrews aforesaid, to read, write, and cast accounts. And further reciting, that Lady Graham had, by her will, dated the 3rd of June, 1743, bequeathed to the parishes of Kirk

Andrews and Arthuret, each £20, as should be judged proper by the ministers of each parish, for their use and benefit; and that the ministers of the said parishes had judged the application thereof to and for the benefit of the said schools, as the best and most proper way of disposing thereof. It is witnessed that the said Lady Widdrington, for the effectual securing the due payment of the said yearly sum of £12, as also of the interest or produce of the said £40, and for the better provision and maintenance of such schoolmasters as aforesaid, for ever granted to trustees a yearly rent charge of £40, issuing out of certain messuages and tenements, or farm holds, called Burnfoot, within the parish of Arthuret, upon trust, that they should pay one moiety thereof to the rector of Arthuret for the time being, and the other moiety to the rector of Kirk Andrews-upon-Esk for the time being, to be by them respectively applied and disposed of to as many schoolmasters, and in such proportion and manner as they should think fit, for the educating and instructing of such poor children of or belonging to the parishes of Arthuret and Kirk Andrews, as the said rectors for the time being should from time to time respectively nominate and appoint, in the principles of the Church of England as by law established, and to read, write, and cast accounts. The rent charge of £40 is regularly paid by Sir James Graham to the different schoolmasters in the parishes of Arthuret and Kirk Andrews.

MOAT.

The area of this township is 1,581 acres, and its rentable value £1,473 12s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 291; in 1811, 281; in 1821, 300; in 1831, 170; in 1841, 205, and in 1851, 199. Moat township extends about two miles along the south bank of the Liddel. Here are the remains of an extensive border fortress, known as Liddell Strength, long the principal seat of the lords of Liddell barony. They occupy the summit of a precipice, and present the appearance of a great mound, covering about five acres, surrounded by a moat. Liddell Strength was taken by William of Scotland in 1174. In the reign of David Bruce it was the scene of most savage cruelty and revenge. The Scottish king, on his march to the county of Durham, invested this stronghold, which was defended by an English knight, Sir Walter Selby, and 200 men at arms. Being reduced to the last extremity, the garrison yielded, upon which the two sons of Sir Walter Selby were strangled in their father's presence, and he himself was afterwards beheaded.

CHARITY.

Lockhart's Charity.—David Lockhart, a native of this parish, who died in the West Indies, left by will, dated 1849, £100 to the rector of this parish, for the time being, upon trust, the interest to be applied towards the support of Moat School. The legacy duty and other incidental expenses being deducted for the £100, the balance has been invested in the public funds, and now produces £2 7s. a year. He also bequeathed, at the same time, a similar sum to the poor of the parish, to be distributed as the curate thought fit. This sum was not invested, but was given to the poor during the five years 1850—54.

NETHER-TOWNSHIP.

The area of this township is 3,832 acres, and its rateable value £4,339 0s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 245; in 1811, 448; in 1821, 516; in 1831, 485; in 1841, 444; and in 1851, 452. The Caledonian railway has a station in this township.

Nether, or Low Quarter, which extends from one to four miles west, north-north-west, and south-south-west of Longtown, comprises the Debateable Lands of border warfare, and Solom, or Solway Moss, celebrated for the victory obtained over the Scots in the reign of Henry VIII., and for the remarkable overflow of the Moss in the year 1771. The eruption began on the 15th of November; it continued to flow for several days, covering with its black stream several hundred acres of fertile land, and destroying many of the tenants' houses. The mischief at first seemed irreparable; but by the spirited exertions of Dr. Graham, who was landlord of the whole inundated tract, the ground was gradually cleared, at a great expense, and again brought into cultivation.

Joseph Faulder, who was born here, and lived in the township for about a century, attained the remarkable age of 104 years. His grave is visible in the parish of Kirklington.

The area of the chapelry of Nichol Forest is 7,302 acres, and its rateable value £3,485 14s. 4½d. In 1801 it contained 668 inhabitants; in 1811, 757; in 1821, 795; in 1831, 907; in 1841, 825; and in 1851, 744; resident principally in scattered dwellings distant from six to fourteen miles north-east of Longtown. The Border Union railway runs through the northern part of the township, and will have a station at Penton. The landowners are Sir James R. G. Graham; William Charlton, Esq.; George G. Mounsey, Esq.; and a few resident yeomen.

THE CHURCH.

The chapel-of-ease, situated at Kingfield, about six miles north-east of the parish church, was rebuilt in 1812. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the rector of the parish, and worth about £132 a year. The Rev. John Wannop is the present curate.

The parsonage is a comfortable dwelling, erected by the rector in 1836, aided by a grant from Queen Anne's Bounty.

The school, which receives £5 a year from Lady Widdrington's charity, is situated at Warwick's Land.

Catlowdy and Scuggate are small hamlets in this township. At Penton, about a mile and half south-west of the chapel, the river Liddell rolls its rapid stream with much grandeur, forming, in some places, fine cascades, which foam over huge rocks and abrupt precipices.

KIRKLINTON PARISH.

This parish, anciently known as Kirklevington, extends about eleven miles on the south side of the river Line, with an average breadth of two miles. It is bounded on the north by the river just named, on the west by Rockliffe, on the south by Stanwix, Scaleby, and Walton, and on the east by Stapleton. The soil, as might be expected, varies; a cold, wet, and barren clay prevailing on the east, while a loamy and fertile soil is found in other parts. The surface is nearly level, having a slight elevation on the north-west only. There are several quarries of limestone in the parish, and in the river Line is an abundance of various kinds of fish. Kirklington parish comprises the townships of Middle Quarter, Hethersgill, and Westlinton, whose united area is 7,800 acres. During the last forty years considerable improvements have been effected in this parish. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in agricultural pursuits, and attend the markets at Carlisle.

The barony of Levington, comprising the parishes of Kirklington and Scaleby, was granted by Ranulph de Meschines in the reign of William the Conqueror to Richard Boyville, a commander under him in the royal army, whose posterity assumed the name of De Levington. This grant was confirmed by Henry I. Sir Ranulph de Boyville, or Levington, the last of the family; died in the year 1253, leaving an infant daughter, Harriet, afterwards the wife of Eustace de Baliol, to whom and her husband a market, at Levington, on Thursday, and a fair for three days at the festival of St. Peter (both long obsolete), were granted in 1263.¹ On the decease of the said Harriet, without issue, this barony was divided between the six sisters of her father, or their representatives, who were at that time Richard Kirkbride, William Lokard, Euphemia, wife of John Seaton, Walter Twinham, Knt., Gilbert Southaik, Maud, wife of Nicholas Aghenlochs, Maud Carrick, Patrick Tromp, Walter, son of Walter Corry, and Margaret, wife of Henry Malton. We have no account of what became of the other parts of this barony, but it appears that the Tilliols became possessed by purchase from the Tromps, of a third, consisting of the manor of Kirkclinton, which passed to the Musgraves, and was sold by Sir Edward Musgrave, of Hayton, to Edmund Appleby, Esq., who died in 1698. Joseph, son of Edmund Appleby, married a daughter of Dacre of Lanercost, and the family eventually becoming possessed of the estates of that branch of the Dacres assumed the name. The barony or manor has since continued in the possession of the Dacre family, Joseph Dacre, Esq. being the present lord.

The village of Kirkclinton, situated four miles east-by-south of Longtown, and nine miles north-north-east of Carlisle, is partly in the Middle, and partly in the Hethersgill townships: the church being in the former, and the hall and rectory in the latter. Kirkclinton Hall, the seat of the lord of the manor, is a fine edifice, situated on a slight eminence, surrounded by stately trees. A short distance from the hall are the remains of an ancient castle, supposed to have been the baronial seat of the Boyvilles, lords of Levington. This fortress commanded an extensive prospect along the beautiful vale of Line to the Solway Frith. The sea is said to have formerly flowed up this valley, nearly as far as the present hall, where numerous foundations of buildings have been discovered.

THE CHURCH.

Kirkclinton church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, was erected in 1845, upon a portion of the site of the ancient parish church, a Norman structure, supposed to have been built by Richard Boyville, in the reign of Rufus, or his successor Henry I. The present church is a handsome Gothic structure of red freestone, consisting of nave, chancel, porch, and embattled tower. The interior presents a chaste and elegant appearance. In the chancel is a fine three-light window of stained glass, with representations of the Redeemer, the Evangelists, &c. It was presented by J. M. Strachan, Esq., who, as guardian of Joseph Dacre, Esq., was patron till the day on which the church was consecrated, when the latter attained his majority. The cost of erection amounted to £1,060. Several interesting remains of the old church are still preserved; among them are an ancient piscina, and several Roman stones, the latter without doubt being taken from the Roman wall, which supplied a great portion of the materials for nearly all the churches in this part of Cumberland. While making the necessary excavations, preparatory to laying the foundations of the tower, sixty human skeletons were discovered buried within a little distance of each other. The benefice is a rectory, in the patronage of the lord of the manor, valued in the King's Book at £1 1s., but is now worth £94, viz., £52 9s. rent charge, as commuted in 1839, a modus formerly paid in money in lieu of tithes; £10 derived from glebe lands; and the interest of £1,110 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty. The parish registers commence in 1652, but are not very legible till 1706.

RECTORS.—John de Bowes, 1293; William de Ayremione, resigned 1316; Richard Ayrmione, 1316; Robert de Tynparon, resigned 1332; Thomas de Barton, 1332; John Bone, 1362; Robert de Kirkby, 1375; John de Norfolk occurs 1378; Cuthbert Dean, died 1567; Robert Hobson, 1567; Robert Beck, 1576; George Watson, 1599; Edward Johnson, 1604; Christopher Parrot, 1611; Robert Priestman, 1643; George Story, resigned 1694; David Bell, 1694; John Murray, 1706; Anthony Wilton, 1722; John Stamper, 1731; William Baty, 1761; T. Pattinson, 1777; W. P. Purvis, 1834; George Bell, 1836.

The rectory, pleasantly situated near the church, was erected in 1839, at a cost of £500.

Besides the school at Shaw Foot, there are two others in the parish, one at Firends, and the other at Blackford.

CHARITIES.

Usher's Charity.—Hannah Usher, of Rockliffe, by will, dated 24th September, 1747, left £20, the interest of which she directed to be divided by the minister and churchwardens for the time being amongst the poor housekeepers of this parish.

Pattinson's Charity.—The Rev. Thomas Pattinson, formerly rector of this parish, by will, dated 25th of February, 1832, left £20, the interest of which was to be paid by the incumbent, after divine service every Christmas Day, amongst the poor widows of the parish. The £20 arising from this charity, and that arising from Usher's Charity, were, on the 1st June, 1848, invested in the purchase of £47 19s. 6d., reduced Three-percents. The interest is divided as directed.

¹ Cart. Rot. 46 Henry III.

HETHERSGILL.

The rateable value of this township is £3,489 6s. 7d.; its area is returned with that of the parish. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 665; in 1811, 692; in 1821, 776; in 1831, 743; in 1841, 799; and in 1851, 792.

Some estates in Hethersgill township were long held by the Hetheringtons, an ancient border family, whose property came by inheritance to John Bacon, Esq., who died in 1816. The landowners at present are Joseph Dacre, Esq.; Captain Thomas Irwin; the trustees of the late Hugh Patrickson, Esq.; John Saul, Esq.; and several yeomen.

The village of Hethersgill is about six miles north-west of Brampton.

At Shaw Foot is a school endowed with £10 a year, left by the late John Lamb, of Newton, Carlisle. At Sike Side is a meeting-house belonging to the Society of Friends, bearing date 1736; they have a burial ground at Meggs, in Middle township. The Wesleyans have a chapel at Ullermire, built in 1833.

In addition to Kirklington Hall, the township comprises Kirklington Park, the property and seat of the late Hugh Patrickson, Esq., but now a farm-house.

There is a corn-mill in this township.

MIDDLE QUANTER.

The population of this township in 1801 was 389; in 1811, 294; in 1821, 532; in 1831, 520; in 1841, 536; and in 1851, 502. The area is included in the parish returns; the rateable value is £2,881 4s. 11d. The landowners are John Saul, Esq.; Joseph Dacre, Esq.; and several resident yeomen. In Milltown

Wood, in this township, are interred the remains of Dr. Graham, formerly a physician at Carlisle, well known for his genius and eccentricity, who, in accordance with his own request, was buried here at midnight. The place of his interment is fenced off with iron palisades and planted with evergreens.

WESTLINTON.

In 1801 Westlinton contained 519 inhabitants; in 1811, 526; in 1821, 623; in 1831, 629; in 1841, 567; and in 1851, 575. Its rateable value is £2,719 13s. 11d. Its area is returned with the parish. The Border Union railway will run through the western portion of this township.

The manor of Westlinton was the property and residence of a younger branch of the Boyvilles, whose heiress brought it to the Highmores of Harby Brow, in the reign of Edward IV. By the latter it was sold in the reign of James I. to the Blencowes. It is now the property of the Earl of Lonsdale; besides whom John Saul, Esq., and Captain Irwin, with some resident yeomen, are the landowners.

The village of Westlinton is situate at Line Bridge, two and a half miles south of Longtown, and five and a half north of Carlisle.

Newton-off-Rockcliffe is a small village in this township, four and a half miles north-north-west of Carlisle.

George Graham, the celebrated watchmaker, esteemed the first general mechanic of his time, who invented and constructed the sector for the Royal Observatory at Greenwich, by which Dr. Bradley discovered the aberration of the fixed stars, was born at Horsgill, in this parish, in the year 1675.

LANERCOST ABBEY PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by that of Bewcastle, on the west by those of Warton and Stapleton, and on the south and east by the river Irthing. It is intersected by the river Kingwater and several smaller streams. The celebrated Gilsland spas are in this parish. The soil in the lowlands is generally loamy and fertile. On the banks of the Irthing and Kingwater it rests upon limestone, and, with the exception of the eastern side, which is cold and sterile, is very fruitful in the production of grain. Roman remains have been found in the parish. The great Roman wall ran through the township of Burtholme, and portions of it, eleven feet high, may still be seen at Harehill and also at Garthside. The road through the small village of Banks is on its site. Lanercost parish comprises the townships of Askerton, Burtholme, Kingwater, and Waterhead, whose united area is 36,510 acres.

BURTHOLME.

The population of this township in 1801 was 279; in 1811, 202; in 1821, 223; in 1831, 239; in 1841, 340; and in 1851, 347. The rateable value is £2,896;

the area is returned with the parish. The principal landowners are the Earl of Carlisle, the trustees of the late Hugh Patrickson, Esq., and Mr. Joseph Bell.

The small village of Abbey Lanercost is two and a half miles north-east of Brampton and eleven and a half east-north-east of Carlisle.

Beyond what its antiquities afford we possess no information relating to Lanercost previous to the year 1169, when Robert de Vallibus founded a priory here for Augustinian monks, which was endowed by himself and subsequent benefactors with ample revenues.¹ The patronage of the priory was granted by the founder to the convent. The "Chronicle of Lanercost" informs us that King Edward I. with his queen, Eleanor, came to Lanercost on the 11th of September, 1180; that the king offered a cloth of silk, and that he had been hunting in Inglewood Forest, where he was said to have taken 200 bucks and does. On the 22nd of March following Ralph Irton, bishop of Carlisle, visited the convent and obliged the canons to receive a new set of statutes. The king appears to have been at Lanercost again in 1299 or 1300. On the 1st of October, 1306, King Edward being then aged and infirm, came to Lanercost with his queen, Margaret, and staid there till the 5th. After a short visit to Carlisle, they returned to Lanercost on the 8th, and the king's health being then in a very declining state, they remained there till the 28th of February following. In consideration of the expenses to which the monks had been put by his long residence among them, and the damage which they suffered by an invasion of the Scots, who burnt the priory in 1296, the king granted them some appropriations as an augmentation of their revenues. Robert Bruce, the Scottish king, was at Lanercost, with his army for three days, in 1311, when he imprisoned several of the monks, but set them at liberty before his departure. Thomas de Hexham, who was elected prior in 1357, was obliged by the bishop, besides the oath of canonical obedience, to make a solemn promise that he would not frequent public huntings or keep so large a pack of hounds as he had formerly done. At the time of the suppression of this priory its revenues were estimated at £77 7s. 11d. per annum. The site of the priory and adjacent lands were granted in 1543 to Thomas Dacre, Esq., afterwards Sir Thomas Dacre, Knight, an illegitimate son of Thomas Lord Dacre of the North, and his heirs male. Upon the demise of James Dacre, Esq., of Lanercost, in 1716, without issue male, the priory estate, consisting of the manor of Lanercost, &c., reverted to the crown, under which it is now held on lease by the Earl of Carlisle, who possesses also the manors of Troddermain or Triermain, Askerton, and Walton Wood, all in this parish, and parcel of the barony of Gilsland.

THE CHURCH.

The grey ruins of Lanercost Priory, approached through the remains of a gateway covered with ivy, stand a little distance from the Irthing, on its northern banks. The priory was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen. The church consists of a nave, with north aisle, transepts, and choir with aisles used as monumental chapels. The western front is one of great beauty and ¹ On the foundation of the priory, Robert de Vallibus endowed it with all the land between the Roman wall and the Irthing, and between Burgh and the Doltross burn. By the same charter he also granted to the community the village and church of Walton, with the chapel of Triermain, and the churches of Irthington, Brampton, Carlleton, and Earlam; and the land of Wartheolman, Roswageth, Apfretthwayt, and Brewskibeth; and pasture for thirty cows and twenty sows, with their young, for two years, and pannage in the forest of Walton; and the mark of his timber wood in his barony, and the dry and fallen wood in his forest for their fuel; with liberty to have mills and fishings in Irthing, King, Hestingham, or elsewhere. Besides these gifts, the founder also granted to this priory the two Askertons, the tithes of all the venison, as well in flesh as skins, of the skins of foxes, wherever through his lands in Cumberland they should be hunted; of his lakes and fishings, and the tithes in his waste lands of fowls, calves, lambs, pigs, wool, cheese, and butter; and, when cultivated, tithes of the produce of his lands. Other benefactions.—Ada Tostyn gave thirty acres of land to Burgh Marsh, two saltpans, and pasture for 200 sheep, a free net in Eden, three marks of silver in the church of Burgh, Lazoby, and Grindale churches, and Little Orton; with a curseote of land at Blencereys, and pasture there, for daily remembrance at the altar of St. Catherine for the soul of her husband, Simon de Morville; David, son of Terrie, and Robert, son of Askell, gave Lesing's Hermitage, and common pasture in Beguon; Alexander de Wyndesore gave tithes of the tithes of the manor of Chetham; and William, son of Talsel, and Henrich the same mill; Peter de Tiltoll, Simon de Tiltoll, and Henry Norring gave lands in Scaile; Robert, son of Buehl, and Robert, son of Asketil, a curseote of land in Denton, and pasture for one milking of sheep, twenty cows, and one bull; William, son of Austin, with the consent of Eva, his wife, gave thirteen acres of land at Astineby, and an acre, called Kirkacre, in the same place; Adam, son of Michael, gave five acres of land at Astineby; Ralph de la Ferte gave one toft and two acres of land in the village of Beaumont; Maud de Multon gave common of pasture at Brampton; Thomas de Multon, and Maud, his wife, gave six acres of land at the same place, called Tenter Bank; Robert, son of Adam, gave lands at Northwode; and lands were also given at Crossfist; Walter Benny gave one improvement at Burdowald; Eustace de Vallibus gave one curseote of land at Castle Carrock; Robert de Castlecarrock gave pasture for 200 sheep, twenty cows, and their young, for one year, eight oxen, one bull, two horses, and thirty goats, with one shilling at Brounsel, in Castle Carrock; William Lawelle gave his house to the priory, with a toft and eight acres at Castle Carrock, containing rather more than two acres, and half an acre at Simebreckell, with common pasture; Robert de Vallibus, son of Hamphyl, gave common of pasture at Carrock; Walter Pykering gave a yearly rent of one shilling, issuing out of his house adjoining to the foss of Carlisle Castle; John de Bumbay gave a messuage in Fisher-street, in the city of Carlisle; William Marschalch and his wife gave a messuage in the same street; Robert de Tybay gave all his tenements in Botchergate, in Carlisle, and also a yearly rent of 20s. 8d.; Walter de Wyndesore granted lands at Clowgill, which were afterwards released by Thessania Werry and Margaret, her sister; Matilda de Vachings gave a well or spring towards Clowgill; Robert de Vallibus gave Cumpeneuch; and Walter Benny gave half a curseote of simplicity: a magnificent pointed door, of many mouldings, fills the west compartment; above it runs a series of elegant niches, then seven tall lancets fill the whole length of the front, having the alternate ones only pierced for lights: in the gable is a niche containing a statue of the Blessed Virgin and Child, and on each side shields charged with the armorial cognizances of the priory and the Dacres, and the top is crowned by the fragments of a beautiful cross. The nave is fitted up as the parish church. For some time previous to the 14th December, 1847, the roof was in a very dilapidated state, when a portion of it above the communion table fell in, and so rendered the church unfit for the performance of public worship. By the aid of a grant from the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, the nave has been rendered more worthy of the uses to which it is appropriated, having been restored in a manner becoming the imposing appearance of the exterior of the fabric. The roof is open. The sittings are of oak, and all open benches. There are eight clerestory windows; these have the toothed ornament, the only kind used, which, with the cornice that runs round the whole building, give a rich appearance to the general plan of the exterior. The low Norman tower, rising about a square above the roof, is supported by massive angular piers. The transepts and choir are unroofed. The opposite sides of the choir are different in their architecture, and the transepts respectively partake of it. Tall circular piers, with only the clerestory windows above, is the disposition of the south side; whilst the north has low massive circular piers, and a triforium as well as a clerestory. The east end is lighted by two tiers of lancet windows, three in each; this and the south side are now profusely covered with ivy. There are several monuments in this part of the church belonging to the Dacres and Howards. Two of the monuments belonging to the Dacres are under ogee canopies, and ornamented with quatrefoils and shields of arms. Those of the Howards are more gorgeously decorated with armorial blazonry. Little care has been taken of these splendid tombs. The cloisters run parallel with the south side of the church, and have been connected with it. The groining is Early English, with cross springers diverging from a row of piers running up the middle, and from pilasters on the sides. The dormitory, which was above, is now a garden. There are some Roman antiquities, which have been found in the neighbourhood, preserved here. A Roman altar, dedicated to Jupiter by the first cohort of the Dacians. This altar, which appears to have been first noticed in 1744, when the inscription was published in the "Gentleman's Magazine," had been lost sight of till it was re-discovered by Mr. Maughan, of Bewcastle. The stone is placed as the keystone of an arch in the clerestory of the priory, in the south-east corner of the choir, having been either found on the spot or brought from one of the neighbouring stations by the founders of Lanercost. Another altar, found at Birdoswald, is land given Robert de Valibus and Robert, son of Anselm, gave the church, over Denton, Henry, son of Barth, gave common of the wood common of pasture to the same place and 3 acres, son of Anselm, Denton, gave the tithes of the oak trees in the land; Walter de Windesover gave all his demesne of Farlam; Robert de Carlattou gave all that land which Richard, son of Gilechrist, held of him in Little Farlam, also all that land at Farlam, called Ympegarit; and Christian, daughter of Adam, son of Hermer, gave five acres, called Biggarth; William de Ireby gave common of pasture upon the mountains belonging to the townships of Gumbelsby and Glassonby; Eustace de Valibus gave a curate of land at Greenwell; William le Sor gave all the land which Gowlne the priest held at Grinsdale, also one acre on Haverig, with common of pasture, also all the land and meadow lying between the Roman wall and the land belonging to the church, except Orme's Acre; Alexander, son of Roger, son of Baldwin, gave seven acres lying between the Kingwater and the Roman wall; Ance, daughter of Henry the chaplain, gave six acres at Kingsgill; Adam Salsarius gave a messuage at Kirkcawood; Mandeville Multon, in his widowhood, gave all her lands and tenements near the river Knaveran, late in the possession of Roger de Mora; Henry Bance gave three acres and a half at Lazonby, and Thomas, son of Thomas, son of Raynburgh, gave lands at the same place; Walter de Flamant gave five acres on the west side of Milneholme; Walter de Sauvage gave half a curate of land at Newbiggin; Thomas Brane gave a burghage house at Newcastle, with a rent of four shillings; Thomas de Multon gave with his body all his lands at Prestover, in the parish of Irthington; William de Mora and Agnes, his wife, released all their land, with the appurtenances, in Little Cambeck, viz., one-third part of Quinguthall; Simon de Tilliol gave a toft and eight acres of land at Sealeby, and Geoffrey Tilliol released the suit to his mill there; diver lands in Scotland were given to the priory by several benefactors; Alan, son of Gilbert de Talkin, gave seven roods and a half of his demesne at Talkin, with a croft called Mariok Croft; Adam, son of Gilbert de Talkin, gave five acres, with their appurtenances, at the same place; and the Alan just mentioned gave more lands at Talkin, with common of pasture, and to be multure free and hopper free; and Richard Haldanfeld and Ayrye, his wife, gave all their land on the east side of Talkin, and one acre at Ragarth; William, son of William de Ulvesby, gave twenty-five acres of land at Ulvesby; Adam de Crakehove gave eight acres, with wood and demesne adjoining, at the same place; Richard de Ulvesby gave ten acres of land of his demesne; and Eudo de Skirwith granted a yearly rent of half a mark of silver out of his lands at Ulvesby; Alicia, daughter of Henry the chaplain, gave lands in Walton, called Smithelands and Cumberverin; and Alexander, son of Robert, son of Baldwin, gave lands there, and a rent of four shillings; William, son of Olard, gave a toft and land near the bridge at Warwick. In addition to these gifts, Hugh de Morville gave to the community of Lanercost one free net in Eden, with liberty to dry the saxe; and Ranulph de la Ferte gave another free net there; Ranulph de Dacre released to them all his right of pulture; Walter, son of William de Ireby, granted to them Walter, son of Simon of Gumbelsby, with all his issue and cattle; Anselm de Newby gave Henry, son of Ledmere, and all that belonged to him; Robert de Castlecrook gave Gamel de Walton and all his issue; and Robert de Vambus gave Geoffrey Prieh, his wife, and posterity for evermore.

preserved in the crypt. It records a dedication of Silvanus, by the huntsmen of Banna. A third altar, also in the crypt, is dedicated to the god Cocideus by the soldiers of the 20th legion, named Valeria Victrix. There is also another altar, dedicated to the same god, Cocideus, by the soldiers of the 2nd legion. There has recently been found in the east wall of the crypt, about two feet from the ground, near the south-east corner, a centurial stone, bearing the inscription "C. CON. X. P. F." A second centurial stone is found on the outside of the eastern wall of the refectory, inscribed "O Cassii Prisci." Of the remainder of the conventual buildings, we may observe two towers, one of which was the residence of the Dacres after the suppression of the priory, and the other now forms a part of the incumbent's residence. In the churchyard is the recumbent effigy of a knight, having the hands clasped on the breast. The benefice of Lanercost is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the Earl of Carlisle, who is impropiator of the great tithes belonging formerly to the priory. An act of parliament was passed in 1802, for enclosing the moors, &c., in the parish of Lanercost, under which allotments of land were made, in lieu of tithes, to the impropiator and to the curate. The living, now worth £93 a year, has been augmented with £200 obtained from Queen Anne's bounty. The parish registers commence in 1644.

PRIORS.—Henry de Burgh, died 1315; Robert de Neburn, 1315; William de Southaik, died 1337; John de Bowtheby, 1337; John de Botheastre, 1338; Thomas de Hexham, 1354; Richard de Rydal, 1355; Martin de Brampton, guardian in 1360, during the absence of Prior Rydal. This is the last prior of whom there appears to be any account, until the time of the suppression of the religious houses, when John Robyson occurs as prior.

INCUMBENTS.—George Story, —; William Townley, —; George Gillbanks, 1786; Isaac Dodgson, 1845.

The parsonage, as above stated, forms part of the ancient conventual buildings.

At the Island is a school towards which the Earl of Carlisle and others subscribe annually.

In addition to the hamlet of Burtholme, this township contains the hamlet called the Island, and the chief part of the straggling village of Banks, which is about four miles north-east of Brampton, and was formerly a distinct township, but is now divided between Burtholme and Waterhead. Banks House and St. Mary's Holme are residences in the township.

ASKERTON.

The area of Askerton is returned with the parish; its rateable value is £3,313. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 366; in 1811, 433; in 1821, 503; in 1831, 473; in 1841, 496; and in 1851, 479.

This township, which extends between the rivers

Line and Kingwater, from four to six miles north of Brampton, comprises the ancient parish of Kirk Cambeck, or Cambeck, the church of which was ruined by the Scots in the reign of Edward II., and has long since disappeared, save a small arch or doorway, which still remains. From the charter rolls of the 36th Henry III. we learn that a market at Kirk Cambeck on Tuesday, and a fair for three days at the festival of St. Peter and St. Paul, were granted in 1251 to William de St. Edmund, then rector, and his successors. Edward I. was at this place for four days (March 1—4) on his way from Lanercost to Carlisle in 1307. The manor was held under the barony of Gilsland successively by the families De Cambeck, Terrye or Tyrer, Leversdale, and Stapleton. It now belongs to the Earl of Carlisle, as part of the barony of Gilsland. The church was given at an early period to the priory of Carlisle. The rectory now belongs to the dean and chapter, who covenant to repair the church and provide an able and efficient curate. The inhabitants resort to Lanercost church for the rites of baptism and sepulture. No account is taken of this parish in the late population returns.

RECTORS.—Randolph de Tiliol, 1259; Simon de Tyrer, died 1304; Alexander de Crokedake, 1304; Simon de Tyrer, 1305; John de Southwell, 1386.

At Askerton, on the banks of the Cambeck, is a small castle, built for the protection of the barony. It was the usual residence of an officer called the Land Sergeant, whose duty it was to take the command of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood in repelling the inroads of the borderers. It appears that Thomas Lord Dacre, when lord warden, in the reign of Henry VIII., occasionally resided at this castle. It is stated to have been in great decay in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; it has since been repaired and converted into a farmhouse. There was formerly a park belonging to it.

The manor of Askerton extends into the parishes of Kirk Cambeck and Stapleton.

The manor of Trierman, in the reigns of Henry I. and II., belonged to Gylanders and his son Gilamoor. It was afterwards the seat of a younger branch of the Vaux family, having been given by Hubert de Vaux to his second son Ranulph, whose descendants continued to possess it till the reign of Edward IV. There was formerly a chapel here, built of wood, in the reign of Henry I. A tower of the old mansion of the Vaux family remained in 1388.

KINGWATER.

In 1801 this township contained 374 inhabitants; in 1811, 357; in 1821, 351; in 1831, 365; in 1841, 390; and in 1851, 407. The area is included in the parish returns; the rateable value is £3,627. King-water township derives its name from the rivulet which flows to the Irthing, near Walton; being formed by the union of several mountain streams north of Gilsland. There are upwards of 1,400 acres of mossy waste land in this township, including the wild mountainous tract called Spadeadam Waste, which belongs to the Earl of Carlisle, who, with Mr. John Ramshay, is the principal landowner.

The hamlet of West Hall, in this township, is about five miles north-east of Bampton.

There is a school at Crossgate.

WATERHEAD.

For area of Waterhead township, see parish returns; its rateable value is £2,720 19s. The population in 1801 was 234; in 1811, 343; in 1821, 455; in 1831, 473; in 1841, 366; and in 1851, 411. The Earl of Carlisle is the principal landowner. The soil here is mostly wet and cold, except on the banks of the Irthing, and in the north-west parts. The township includes a portion of the village of Banks, from which it extends to Gilsland, where the river Irthing divides Cumberland from Northumberland.

Waterhead township comprises the Roman station Amboglanna, the Birdoswald of the present day. This is an interesting station. Numerous inscriptions have been found within its walls, mentioning the first cohort of the Dacians, surnamed the Ælian, which, according to the Notitia, was quartered at Amboglanna. One of them, in the possession of the Messrs. Bell, of the Nook, Irthington, is inscribed—

ICOMI	•	ICOMI	ICOMI	To Jupiter the best and greatest.
SEN	VENIVENS	AVG	VSTI	And the deities of Augustus.
COH	IVS	PRIMA	ÆLII TA	The first cohort (the Ælian)
DA	COMI	ÆLII	SEN	Of the Dacians, commanded by
		GALLIENS		Gallienus
		TR	IB	The Tribune.

The name of Amboglanna seems to signify the circling glen, and here the name has been most appropriately bestowed. The camp stands on the precipitous edge of a tongue of land, which, on every side except the west, is severed from the adjoining ground by deep scars. The modern name Birdoswald, or Burdoswald, is supposed to be derived from King Oswald, and the name is said to mean the burh, or town, of Oswald. The station contains an area of between five and six acres. The walls are in an unusually good state of preservation; the southern rampart showing eight courses of facing stones. The moat which surrounded the wall may also be satisfactorily traced. The southern gateway may be discerned, though it is encumbered with rubbish; the eastern and western were cleared some time ago, when the pivot holes of the gates, and the ruts worn by the chariots or wagons of the Romans were discovered. The ruts are nearly four feet two inches apart. The whole area of the camp is marked with the lines of streets and ruins of buildings. According to Horsley, the present farm-house occupies the site of the Pretorium. On the east side of the southern gateway are the remains of a kiln for drying corn; the stones are reddened by the fire. Near the eastern gateway a building, furnished with a hypocaust, has been partially excavated. From its ruins a sculptured figure, draped and in a sitting posture, was taken some time ago. The head and other highly relieved parts were found to have been broken off; it remains on the ground. A large altar with an inscription, which is in a great measure illegible, lies within the walls of the camp. A stone, broken in two pieces, and which is preserved on the spot, bears testimony to the presence of the sixth legion here. It may be read, LEGIO SEXTA VICTRIX FIDELIS. "The sixth legion, the victorious and faithful." Besides these, several centurial stones, mill-stones, and coping stones; as well as portions of tile and fragments of pottery, are preserved in the farm-house. In draining the field to the west of the station, many small altars, without inscriptions, have been found, which were broken, and used with other materials in filling the drains. On the east of the station are extensive and well-defined marks of suburban buildings. The present proprietor of Birdoswald, Mr. Norman, has recently discovered a very interesting building in the neighbourhood of the station. It is of excellent masonry, and of large size, at least ninety feet by sixty. The walls now stand about ten feet high. Several bronze articles have been found in the diggings, and some large brass coins in an excellent state of preservation. Among the latter is one of Vespasian, struck in the year 71, with the legend PAX AVG; on the reverse. Another is of Hadrian, having on the reverse FELICITAS AVG; this coin belongs to the year 130. There is also a fine coin of Antoninus, another of Marcus Aurelius, and a third of Diocletian.

On the margin of the river Irthing, about two miles west from Birdoswald, and about a quarter of a mile on the south side of the Roman wall, are the romantic rocks called Gait Craggs, of which Caeme Crag forms a part. They are chiefly remarkable for a Roman inscription, which has been thus read by the Rev. J. Maughan, of Bewcastle: LOCUS SEPTIMUS SEVERUS IMPERATOR AVG. About fifteen inches above the inscription just given, is the word MATHA, which Mr. Maughan reads MATHERIANUS, in consequence of that word appearing in clear and perfect letters about four yards on the south side of the Severus inscription on the same face of the rock. About five yards on the north side of the first-name inscription are the letters D E, very well defined, and about two feet below these letters we find nearly the whole of the word AVGVSTVS. About a yard on the north side of the word Augustus are marks and traces of letters, which appear to be centurial, and which Mr. Maughan reads CENTURIO LEGIONIS SEXTÆ CENTURIO—a centurion of the sixth legion.

THE CHURCH.

Gilsland church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was erected in 1851; licensed for public worship in the same year; consecrated in 1854; and had an ecclesiastical district assigned to it in 1855.¹ For ecclesiastical purposes, Gilsland and the parish of Upper Denton were united in 1859. (See page 675.) The church stands in a beautiful and romantic situation, overlooking the valley of the river Irthing. The style is Early English. The east window consists of three lights; the pulpit (which is of stone) and the font are much admired for their chaste appearance. The cost of erection amounted to £800. The living, a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of George Mounsey, Esq., is worth about £40 a year. The Rev. C. Kipling is the first and present incumbent.

¹ The district of Gilsland commences on the south at a point on the north side of the river Irthing, where a fence divides the lands of Bindoswald from the lands of Underhough, and proceeds northerly along such division as far as the highway leading from Lanercost to Bindoswald; then westerly along the middle of such highway to the division between the lands of Bindoswald and Kilnhill; then northerly along such division to the highway leading from King Bridge to Kilnhill, crossing such highway to the south-western corner of the Earl of Carlisle's Waterhead and Triernain to the division between Waterhead and Snowdon Close and Triernain, to the division between Snowdon Close and Clark's Hill; then northerly along such division as far as King Water, crossing the same, and proceeding still northerly along the division between Palmer Hill and the Ash farms and the division between Desogin and the Ash farms to the south-western corner of Dunbar Rigg; then along the division between Dunbar Rigg and the lands of Spaedadam House and White-rigg to Priory Lancy Gate, and along the division between Sidelfell and Spaedadam Waste to the Watch Craggs at the north-eastern corner of Sidelfell; and then westerly along the division between Highgrains and Sidelfell to the Kirkbeck, which divides the parish of Lanercost from the parish of Bewcastle; then following the line of boundary of the parish of Lanercost north-easterly, south-easterly, easterly, southerly, and south-westerly to the point where the boundary line commenced.

In this township is Gilsland, celebrated for its chalybeate and sulphuretted spas, which are situated in the romantic and picturesque vale of the Irthing, ten miles east-north-east of Brampton, eighteen miles east-north-east of Carlisle, and one mile north of the Rose Hill station, on the Newcastle and Carlisle railway. This part of the township has been much improved by its late owner, Major Mounsey, and also by the present proprietor, George Gill Mounsey, Esq.

Gilsland Spa is a place of great resort, and in point of salubrity and natural beauty, it is far superior to many spas of modern celebrity in the northern part of the island. From the railway station at Rose Hill a good carriage road leads up in a gradual ascending sweep until it reaches the Shaw's Hotel, which stands upon an eminence skirted with wood. This hotel has been recently destroyed by fire. Behind the hotel is a field with walks and seats, exhibiting various windings of the Irthing, in its course from the wild fells in the waste. This field covers the mass of rocky strata, at the foot of which, and on the margin of the river, the celebrated spa issues forth. The strata below the surface mould are said to be disposed in the following order:—First a course of stratified sandstone, then bituminous shale, which includes a stratum of aluminous schistus, and next porphyry slate, beneath which the sulphurated water issues through a leaden tube, enclosed in a small stone fountain, at the rate of two gallons and a half per minute. The whole height of the precipice is about ninety feet. The strata are intersected by two veins, one upon each side of the sulphurated water, which, commencing at the surface, approximate pretty uniformly until they reach the river, at which place they are about 150 yards distant. These veins are composed of calcareous spar and iron pyrites, and contain the above-mentioned strata between them. The water is remarkably transparent; when poured from one tumbler to another it sparkles very briskly. To most palates the taste is very agreeable, being somewhat acidulous, and it has generally been found to sit lightly on the stomach. The spa was originally known by the name of the Holy Well, also by that of Wardrew Spa. These waters may be employed externally or internally in a diversity of diseases with great success. There are hot and cold baths fitted up in the immediate neighbourhood of the spring, and also at the hotel.

SCALEBY PARISH.

SCALEBY PARISH is about two miles in length from north-east to south-west, and on an average little more than a mile in breadth. It is bounded on the north-east by Kirklington and Irthington, on the north-west by Kirklington, on the south-west by Stanwix, and on the south-east by Irthington and Crosby. The greater part of the parish is very level, and is mostly divided by growing hedges, which give it a woody appearance. Towards the north-east end is some rising ground, where may be had a fine and extensive view of East Cumberland. The parish is divided into the townships of Scaleby East and Scaleby West, whose united area is 3,100 acres (according to a survey made by the late Mr. Studholme, in 1841, for parochial purposes 3,482 acres); the rateable value is £2,566 19s. 10d.

East and West Scaleby are united for all parochial purposes, except the highways, and have the same rights and privileges, with some slight exceptions, that are hereafter noticed; yet each township has its churchwardens and overseers of the poor, the latter of which offices is now merely nominal, as an assistant overseer, appointed for the lower district of the Longtown union, in which this parish is included, does all the duty pertaining to that office. On the west side of the parish, bordering on a brook that divides it from Irthington and Crosby parishes, is an extensive tract of meadow land, the soil of which is principally composed of peat moss and sand, which, when well drained and managed, produces excellent crops of hay and after-grass. The arable land extending in the same direction through the middle of the parish, is for the most part a heavy loam, much inclining to clay. The north-west side is mostly a black soil—a mixture of moss and clay—and there are here and there, interspersed through the parish, some pieces of nice free soil, which may most properly be denominated a sandy loam. Most of the soil of the parish rests upon a close retentive subsoil, though here and there are veins and strata of sand. The greatest portion is now drained and improved, and produces fair crops of grain and green crops, where a few years ago there was very little of the latter grown. Summer fallowing, once so extensively practised, is now very limited, and growing less every year as science and industry make progress.

The manor of Scaleby was given by Edward I. to Richard Tilliol. Robert de Tilliol had the king's license for castellating his manor house at Scaleby in 1307. Robert de Tilliol, the last of this ancient family, died without issue in 1435, leaving two sisters, co-heirs, the eldest of whom, Isabel, brought this estate in marriage to John Colville, whose son William left two daughters, co-heirs,¹ who both married into the Musgrave family; the younger, Margaret, brought Scaleby to Nicholas Musgrave. His descendant, Sir Edward Musgrave, Bart., who was a zealous royalist, garrisoned Scaleby Castle in 1648;² but it was not of sufficient strength to stand a siege, and surrendered, after firing one shot to a detachment of General Lambert's army, who are said to have set fire to the castle. Sir Edward, in consequence of the losses he sustained by the war, was obliged to sell a great part of his estates. The manor of Scaleby was conveyed to Richard Gilpin, Esq., who repaired the castle, and fitted it up for his own residence. His descendant of the same name sold it in 1741 to Edward Stephenson, Esq., some time governor of Bengal. It is now the property of his descendant, R. E. W. P. Standish, Esq., of Fairley Castle, Berks. The castle is at present occupied by Mr. Fawcett, as farmer upon an improving lease, who, within the last few years, has rebuilt a considerable portion of it, and improved and beautified the remainder. The principal landowners are R. E. W. P. Standish, Esq.; Sir Wastel Brisco, Bart.; William Maude, Esq.; James Fawcett, Esq.; Rowland Graham, Esq.; Thomas Phillips, Esq.; C. B. Hodgson, Esq.; Rev. Joseph Hudson; Mrs. Farrer, Mrs. Jefferson, Miss Aglionby; Messrs. John and Robert Sutton, Thomas James, William Bell, William Dalton, Thomas Dalton, and others. There are thirty-four proprietors in Scaleby West, and twenty-six in Scaleby East. Many are owners of very small properties. A great number of tenements are in the hands of proprietors, whose ancestors have occupied them for generations; and it is the boast of the "lairds," as they are here called, that they own no lord of the manor, but that every one possesses his own manorial rights and privileges, and cannot be interfered with, their lands having been enfranchised, except three small tenements in Scaleby West, and do neither suit nor service. Every freeholder has a right to work free-stone for his own use, from the south side of Hether Quarries.

¹ It was contested, but without success, by Robert, the younger brother of William Colville, who assumed the name of Tilliol.

² It had been before a fortress for the king, and was taken in 1645, during the siege of Carlisle.

WEST SCALEBY.

The population of this township in 1801 was 257; in 1811, 328; in 1821, 363; in 1831, 348; in 1841, 354; and in 1851, 373. The acreage and rateable value are included in the parish returns.

The village of Scaleby is composed of a few small cottages six miles north-north-east of Carlisle, and is only separated from the churchyard by the highway.

THE CHURCH.

Scaleby church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient structure, situated about the centre of the parish, and appears to have formerly been of much larger dimensions. The Bishop of Carlisle had the advowson by purchase from the Tilliols, which was confirmed by fine in the 21st Edward I. (1293-3), since which period the presentation has been vested in the bishop. The living, a rectory, is valued in the King's Book at £7 12s. 1d., but it was augmented about the year 1817 with £652 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, the interest of which, together with sixty-one acres of glebe, now produces about £120 a year. The tithes have been commuted for a rent charge of £31.

RECTORS.—John de Blencow, died 1315; Stephen Marescall, 1315; William de Carleton, 1342; Robert de Howes, 1342; Roger de Crumwell, —; Walter Swetehop, died 1356; Henry Martin, 1356; John de Grandon, 1362; Elias —, —; Robert Caylis, 1380; Henry Munich, died 1578; George Howell, 1578; Rowland Vaux, resigned 1585; Thomas Nicholson, 1585; Christopher Wilton, 1587; Thomas Kirkby, —; Thomas Wilson, died 1641; William Green, 1641; Robert Priestman, died 1680; Nathaniel Bowey, 1680; James Jackson, 1713; Christopher Hewitson, 1724; Henry Shaw, 1759; — Fawcett, 1800; John Hill, 1826.

There is no rectory house in the parish; the rector resides in a house of his own erection at Summer Hill.

Scaleby School is a neat building, lately erected with the aid of a government grant, and is under inspection. It is endowed with the interest of £40, bequeathed in 1773 by Mr. Joseph Jackson; the churchwardens of the parish are the trustees. It also receives ten shillings per annum from James Fawcett, Esq., being the interest on the purchase money (that is £12) of a piece of land, lying near the highway, and adjoining the east end of the churchyard, on which are now a cottage and garden, and which was sold to Mr. Fawcett, a few years ago, by the parish officers and principal inhabitants.

Scaleby Castle, mentioned above, is in this township. In this castle was born that well-known author, the Rev. William Gilpin, one of our Cumberland worthies.

In this township is an extensive peat moss, containing upwards of 200 acres, which was divided in 1852, under the General Enclosure Act, W. Bell, of Highberries, acting as valuer. Here are cut large quantities of peats by parties who make a living by cutting, winning, and carrying the same to Carlisle and other places. Since the formation of the railways, some have been carried as far as Liverpool and London. A few years ago there was found, while digging peats in Scaleby Moss, about eight feet below the surface, a human skeleton in a state of perfect preservation. It was enclosed in the skin of some animal, and carefully bound up with thongs of tanned leather.

The villages in the parish, and their bearings and distances from Carlisle are—Barclose, six miles north-north-east; Stone Knowle, five and a half miles north-east; Longpark, about four miles and a half north-east; and Scaleby Hill, about six and a half miles north-north-east. At the last-named place there is a Methodist chapel, which was erected in 1827. There is also a straggling village contiguous to Scaleby Hill, called, from its locality, Moss Edge, almost exclusively occupied by people employed in the peat trade.

SCALEBY EAST.

The number of inhabitants in this township in 1801 was 211; in 1811, 229; in 1821, 255; in 1831, 212; in 1841, 230; and in 1851, 223. East Scaleby comprises Scaleby Hall, built by the late Henry Farrer, Esq., and now occupied by his widow, Mrs. Farrer. It is a handsome mansion of polished stone, beautifully situated near the castle.

Scaleby parish is about equally distant from Carlisle and Brampton, at which places the farmers generally dispose of the produce of their lands.

STAPLETON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Kirkandrews, on the west by Kirklington and Arthurst, on the south by Walton, and on the east by Lanercost. It comprises the townships of Stapleton, Solport, Trough, and Bellbank; but there is no village, if we except Hagbeck, in Solport township, consisting of eight or ten houses—the other dwellings are all farmhouses, with a few detached cottages. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants. Some years ago coal was obtained at Hagbeck, and there was also a lime works, but both were discontinued on account of the unprofitableness arising from the want of proper apparatus for working them. There is nothing remarkable in the character of the population—they are cleanly and comfortable, and attend the Brampton and Carlisle markets. The rivers White Line and Black Line run southwest through the parish, but not through any township of it; they are in part boundaries of the townships. The Black Line divides Trough from Bellbank, and the White Line Stapleton from Solport, Trough, and Bellbank. The White Line is crossed by two bridges, one of stone and the other of wood, the latter being a foot bridge. On the Black Line are two wooden foot bridges. After the junction of the two streams, there occurs a stone bridge and a foot chain bridge. Superstitions were formerly prevalent here as in other parts of the county, but they are rapidly disappearing, though their sway has not as yet entirely departed. Witches, fairies, and ghosts are still spoken of. The "White Lady," near the Bride's Well, below the church, is not yet banished from the minds of some. Bozles appear to have become rare, and dead lights are never seen, though both were common enough formerly. Marriages never take place on a Friday. Among the traditionary stories, that of "Gib and Jean" is still current; it relates to two lovers whose union their parents opposed, who died for each other, and were interred on the same day in Stapleton churchyard. There is a quaint old ballad on the subject. Great improvements have been effected in Stapleton parish during the last thirty years; much has been effected by draining and better modes of husbandry.

STAPLETON.

Stapleton township contains 4,495 acres, and its rateable value is £2,412 18s. 8d. The population in 1801 was 239; in 1811, 377; in 1821, 487; in 1831, 447; in 1841, 550; and in 1851, 542. It occupies the southern portion of the parish, and is about eight miles north of Brampton. The manor of Stapleton and Solport belonged to the lords of Levington, and were divided among the co-heirs, the former becoming at an early period the property of the Stapleton family. It was afterwards successively held by the Dacres and Howards, and is now vested in the Earl of Carlisle, and is included in the barony of Gilsland, the courts for which are held at Brampton.

THE CHURCH.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands about the centre of the township, near the Kirkburn, and is a rectangular building, sixty feet by forty, with a square castellated tower at the west end, and a small chancel at the east. It is in the Gothic style, with tall lancet windows, that in the chancel being filled with stained glass bearing the arms of the Earl of Carlisle, the bishop of Carlisle, and Sir James Graham. The church was erected in 1830, at a cost of about £1,000, to which the Church Building Society contributed £300. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Carlisle, valued in the King's Book at £8 1s. 11d., but is now worth about £109 a year, arising from a tithe modus of £17 12s. 3d., and other sources. Nicolson and Burn tell us that in the year 1525 John Stapleton granted to Thomas Lord

Dacre this advowson; but that clearly must be understood only of his own moiety, for the owners of the other moiety of the manor presented to the rectory in their turn both before and after. The patronage is vested in the Earl of Carlisle. Previous to the appointment of the present rector, Lord Carlisle and the Grahams of Netherby presented alternately, but by a lawsuit, which took place some years ago, the sole presentation was vested in the present patron. The parish registers commence in 1725, and continue to the present time, but there is a deficiency of three or four years previous to 1738. In the churchyard is a coffin-shaped tombstone with this inscription—"Here lies Robert (Hob) Forrester, of Stanegarthsides, 1598!" He seems to have been called Hob, from that name being placed above Robert.

RECTORS:—Gilbert de Mancheton, 1294; Thomas de Leicester, 1296; Nicholas de Coventry, 1296; John de Stapleton, 1323; Hugh —, —; John de Kirby, 1338; Henry de Whitebergh, —; Robert de Southayke, 1350; Robert de Bolton, 1361; William de Strickland, 1363; Nicholas de Stapleton, —; Henry Hudson, 1600; William Culcheth, —; Richard Culcheth, 1686; James Jackson, 1714; Wm. Graham, 1771; Thomas Pattinson, 1790; John Hope, 1834.

The parsonage is a plain two-storied house of eight rooms, erected in 1836.

The parish school is situated in this township, near the church, and is a good building, forty feet by twenty, erected upon the site of the old one. This school is endowed with about £10 a year, being part of the interest of £80 bequeathed by Edward Irving, of Harperhill, in 1778, and also a portion of £15 1s. 8d., the interest of £500 (now £502 16s.) left by the late Sir S. Howard, of Carlisle, for the education of the poor of the whole parish of Stapleton. The average attendance is seventy-two.

¹ This rector was non-resident, and had four curates during his incumbency, viz., John Topping, George Topping, Thomas Waite, and John Hope.

CHARITIES.

Irving's Charity.—Edward Irving, in the year 1778, bequeathed to the rector of Stapleton for the time being, and others, the sum of £80, the interest of which is divided as follows:—£2 as an endowment of Stapleton School as above, the remainder is divided upon his tombstone on Old Christmas Day among the poor of Stapleton township not having received any parochial relief.

Sir S. Howard's Charity.—Sir S. Howard, late of the city of Carlisle, by will, dated 14th March, 1843, and proved by the Consistory Court of Carlisle, on the 14th August, 1846, bequeathed to the clergyman and churchwardens of the parish of Stapleton £500, to be invested by them, and the interest applied for and towards the education of the poor inhabitants of that parish. The money was transferred to the Bank of England in 1847; present amount, £502 16s., at three per cent. The interest, £15 1s. 8d., is applied as directed.

A library and reading room have been recently established in the parish school; the library contains between 200 and 300 volumes in general literature.

SOLEFORTH.

The area of Solport is 3,121 statute acres, and its rateable value £1,227 15s. Its population in 1801 was 259; in 1811, 277; in 1821, 360; in 1831, 354; in 1841, 353; and in 1851, 306. The township occupies the north-west end of the parish. The manor of Solport was anciently, like Stapleton, the property of the Lord of Levington, from whom it passed successively to the Tilliols, Colvilles, and Musgraves. Sir Edward Musgrave sold it to Lord Preston, from whom it descended to the Grahams of Netherby, in whose possession it still continues, Sir James Graham being the present lord of the manor, which includes the townships of Solport, Bellbank, and Trough. At Shank, in this township, there is an old castle partly in ruins, belonging to Sir James Graham. On the north side of Solport there is a small Presbyterian meeting house, capable of accommodating 120 persons. There is also an old school-room here, which is at present being rebuilt upon an improved and larger scale. It is endowed with about £7 10s.

TROUGH.

Trough township is situated on the north side of the Line, near Bellbank, and belongs mostly to resident yeomen. Its area is 2,322 acres, and is rateable value £664 18s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 129; in 1811, 137; in 1821, 143; in 1831, 169; in 1841, 143; and in 1851, 150. This township, as said above, is included in the manor of Solport.

BELLBANK.

The population of Bellbank in 1801 was 109; in 1811, 120; in 1821, 137; in 1831, 127; in 1841, 124; and in 1851, 121. The area of the township is 1,397 acres, and its rateable value £400 6s. 4d. Bellbank is situated above the confluence of the White and Black Lines, about a mile north of the parish church.

The Rev. William Graham, rector of this parish from 1771 till his death in 1795, published a translation, in verse, of the Eclogues of Virgil, and some sermons.

WALTON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Kirkcubright and Stapleton, on the east by Irthington, on the south by Brampton, and on the east by Lanercost. It is divided into the two townships of High Walton and Low Walton, which jointly maintain their own poor. The area of the parish is 3,592 statute acres. The principal employment is agriculture, and Brampton is the market usually attended. The Roman wall runs through the parish, as do also the rivers King and Cambeck. Many Roman antiquities have been discovered here from time to time, and may be seen at Walton House. The manor of Walton was given by Robert de Vaux to the priory of Lanercost, and after the dissolution of that house it came into the possession of Sir Thomas Dacre. It passed with the priory estate till sold in 1789 by William Dacre, Esq. to John Johnson, Esq., from whom it has descended to William Pensonby Johnson, Esq., of Walton House, the present lord of the manor. The rateable value of the parish is £2,900.

LOW WALTON.

The population of this township in 1801 was 276; in 1811, 256; in 1821, 303; in 1831, 313; in 1841, 288; and in 1851, 281.

The village of Walton is three miles north of Brampton. Its name bears testimony to its relationship with the Roman wall, many of the stones of which may be detected in its cottages. Horsley says, "At Walton there seems to have been some fortification or encampment. One side of the square is yet very visible, and the ramparts pretty large, about eighty yards long. It is high ground and dry. Perhaps it has been a summer encampment or exploring post for the garrison at Cambeck."

Petriana, the Cambeck fort of Horsley, and the Castlesteads of the locality, is to the south of the vallum and wall. The site of the station may be recognised, but its ramparts have long since disappeared, and the ruined buildings of the interior entirely obliterated. It has yielded many altars and sculptured stones, some of which are still preserved upon the spot, and from time to time the spade still reveals to the antiquarian coins and other remains of ancient days. The finest of the altars stands in the garden of Walton House. The thunderbolt of Jupiter adorns one side of it, the wheel of Nemesis the other. The inscription has been read by Mr. Thomas Hodgson, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, as follows:—

IN REPERTORY OF THE ROMAN MUSEUM, BRITISH MUSEUM, LONDON.
[The following inscription is from the garden of Walton House.]

ALTARE JUPITERIS ET MINERAE
[The following inscription is from the garden of Walton House.]

To Jupiter, the best and greatest,

The second best of the Tungrians,

A military castrum, to secure the prompt supply of horse, and consisting of citizens of Latium, commanded by Aulus

Severus, the fact of the Tungrians, erects this;

The work being superintended by Aulus Severus, and Severus, the princeps.

According to the Notitia the "Ala Petriana" were stationed at Petriana, under a prefect. No inscriptions have, however, been found here which name the Ala Petriana, although two belonging to this place mention the second cohort of the Tungri. Hence it has been supposed that this cohort was a part of the Ala Petriana. Until this point be cleared up, the only evidence we have that this station is Petriana, is its occurrence next in order to Amboglanna in the Notitia.

The church, a small but neat edifice, erected in 1811, is situated in the village, and consists of a nave and chancel with porch, the latter of which was built in 1843. The living was formerly a vicarage, but was appropriated to Lanercost Priory, under the gift of Robert de Vaux. Robert de Chester, the last vicar, was presented by the prior and convent of Lanercost in the year 1380, after whose death till the Dissolution the church was served from that monastery. Edward VI. granted the benefice, together with that of Lanercost, to Sir Thomas Dacre, in whose descendants it still remains; Joseph Dacre, Esq., of Kirklington Hall being the patron. W. P. Johnson, Esq., is the impropiator. The living is now a perpetual curacy in the deanery of Carlisle, and is worth about £125 per annum. The incumbent receives £30 3s. annually, in lieu of small tithes and Easter offerings. The great tithes have been commuted for £176 a year.

The parish registers commence in 1684.

Parishes, &c. — Source : — Thomas Ireland, 1838; — Parvis, 1844; Joseph Smith, 1846; Isaac Bowman, 1844.

The parsonage is a plain building, erected in 1838.

Situated in Walton village is a Primitive Methodist Chapel, erected in 1858.

The parish school is a neat structure, erected in 1859 at a cost of £250, and is attended by from fifty to sixty children in winter, and from twenty to thirty in summer.

Walton House, the seat of W. P. Johnson, Esq., is a beautiful mansion, situated on a sloping bank surrounded with groves and plantations, and within its extensive gardens and grounds are numerous remains of the Roman station Petriana.

History and Topography

OF

WESTMORELAND.

Geographical Description of Westmoreland.

SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, EXTENT, POPULATION, DIVISIONS, &c.

Westmoreland is one of the lake counties of England, extending from $54^{\circ} 10'$ to $54^{\circ} 42'$ north latitude, and $2^{\circ} 9'$ to $3^{\circ} 10'$ west longitude. It is of an irregular form, bounded on the north and north-west by Cumberland; on the south-west and south by Lancashire; on the south-south-east, east, and north-east, by Yorkshire; and for a short distance on the north-east by the county of Durham. Its length from Arnside Knot to the river Tees is forty miles, its greatest breadth twenty-five miles, average breadth seventeen miles, and circuit about 135 miles. The area of the county is 758 square miles, or 485,432 statute acres, of which about 180,000 (") may be arable and pasture. The population in 1801 was 40,805; in 1811, 45,922; in 1821, 51,359; in 1831, 55,041; in 1841, 56,454; and in 1851, 58,287; showing an increase of forty-three per cent in the number of inhabitants during the last fifty years; of this number 29,079 were males, and 29,208 females. There were, in 1851, 10,849 inhabited houses, 875 uninhabited, and thirty-nine in process of erection. The number of persons to a square mile was seventy-seven, of inhabited houses fifteen; the average number of persons to each inhabited house was 5.2, of acres to a person 8.3, and of acres to a house 43.3.

Westmoreland is divided into two baronies—the barony of Kendal, which appears to have been anciently a part of Lancashire, and comprehended so late as the time of Henry VIII. several places in that county; and the barony of Appleby, sometimes called "the bottom of Westmoreland," which now comprehends some places formerly included in the barony of Kendal. There is some diversity in the customs of inheritance in the two baronies of Kendal and Westmoreland; in other respects the division into baronies is little used; but of this more in our account of these baronies at a subsequent page. The usual division is into four wards. East Ward, north-east; West Ward, north-west; Kendal Ward, south-west; Lonsdale Ward, south-east. Kendal and Lonsdale Wards are in the barony of Kendal; the East and West Wards in the barony of Westmoreland. Westmoreland has no city; it contains the county town of Appleby, the parliamentary borough of Kendal, and the market towns of Ambleside, Brough, Burton-in-Kendal, Kirkby Lonsdale, Kirkby Stephen, Milnthorpe, Orton, Ravenstonedale, and Shap.

For ecclesiastical purposes the county is comprehended in the diocese of Carlisle, and province of York. For an account of the diocese of Carlisle, see page 114. According to the Census of Religious Worship, taken in 1851, it appears that there were at that period in the county 165 places of worship, of which seventy-eight belonged to the Church of England, fifty-nine to the Wesleyan Methodists, sixteen to Primitive Methodists, thirteen to Association Methodists, nine to Independents, four to Baptists, four to Quakers, and two to Catholics. The total number of sittings provided was 37,138. Of Sunday schools there were 121, of which seventy-four were in connection with the Church of England. The total number of Sunday scholars was 7,516. Of day schools there were 214; of which 119 were public schools, with 6,594 scholars; and ninety-five were private schools, with 2,384 scholars. There were five evening schools for adults, with 157 scholars. Of literary and scientific institutes there were five, with 348 members, and libraries containing 2,545 volumes.

Westmoreland is included in the Northern Circuit, and the assizes are held at Appleby. The quarter sessions for the county are held at Appleby, and by adjournment at Kendal. County courts are held at Ambleside, Appleby, Kendal, and Kirkby Lonsdale. A county gaol and house of correction is at Appleby, and a county house of correction at Kendal.

The county returns two members to the imperial parliament, and the borough of Kendal one. Under the provisions of the Poor Law Amendment Act, Westmoreland was apportioned into the following three unions, East Ward, West Ward, and Kendal; the statistics, &c., of which will be found in the notices of the parishes and townships in which the workhouses are situated.

It is observed by Sir Daniel Fleming that although it is generally said that Richard II. created the first earl of Westmoreland, yet there seems to have been some earls of this county before that reign, for he finds Humphrey de Bassingburne, one of the knights of the Earl of Westmoreland, about the period of the Conquest. It is, however, certain that Richard II. conferred that title upon Ralph Neville of Raby, in the county of Durham, whose heirs continued to possess it till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when, in consequence of the Earl of Westmoreland's share in the "Rising of the North," it was lost to his family. Francis Fane, a descendant of the Nevilles, was created Earl of Westmoreland by James I., in 1624, and the title is now possessed by his descendant, John Fane, earl of Westmoreland.

STRATA.

Westmoreland is wholly mountainous. The eastern side is traversed by the great Pennine chain, and the western side and the centre are occupied by the mountains of the Cumbrian group, which are separated from the Pennine chain by the valley of the Eden. The principal ridge of the Pennine chain enters the county across its northern border, just to the south of Cross Fell, and extends across Milburn Forest to the border of Yorkshire; it then turns south-south-west, and runs above Kirkby Stephen to the head of the valley of the Eden, into which, on the west side of this ridge, the mountains have a steep and almost precipitous descent; on the east they extend a considerable distance, far beyond the boundaries of Westmoreland, subsiding more gradually into the wide valley or plain of the Tees, which occupies the south-east of the county of Durham, and the north of Yorkshire. On each side of the ridge numerous transverse valleys are drained by small streams; those on the west side falling into the Eden; those on the east forming the upper waters of the Tees, the Swale, and other rivers, which ultimately pour their waters into the German Ocean. Proceeding from north to south, the principal mountains of the Pennine chain in Westmoreland from north to south are Dun Fell, Dufton Fell, Eagle's Chair, Scordale Head, Warcop Fell, Middle Fell, Musgrave Fell, and Helbeck Fell; all north of the depression through which the river Belo passes. South of that depression is a number of summits grouped together, and forming the district of Arken-garth Forest, of which the Nine Standards, Dowphin Seat, Browner Fell, and Hugh's Seat, the last on the border of Westmoreland and Yorkshire, are among the chief. The principal ridge of the Cumbrian mountains reaches the border of the county on the west side near Helvellyn, which is just within the border of Cumberland, and runs south-east to Kirkstone Fell, at the head of the valley drained by the Coldrill or Goldrill, otherwise the Hartsop Beck, which flows into Ulleswater; from Kirkstone Fell it runs east-by-south to the head of the valley of the Eden, on the eastern side of the county; by which valley, here very narrow, it is separated from the Pennine chain. The ridge, about midway between Kirkstone Fell and the valley of the Eden, is divided into two parts by a depression, through which the Lune passes. Among the principal mountains along the ridge are Grisedale Brow and Dow Craggs, between Helvellyn and Kirkstone Fell; High Street and Harter Fell, near the head of Kentmere; and Birkbeck Fells and Hause Hill, near the head of Borrowdale. On the north side a principal branch is thrown off from the main ridge at High Street, a short distance east of Kirkstone Fell, of which branch Dod Hill, Place Fell, Aldsay Pike, Kidsty Pike, the peaks in Martindale Forest, and Swarth Fell, are summits. This branch extends nearly to the bank of the Eamont, a principal feeder of the Eden, opposite Penrith. Ulleswater Lake, the upper part of which belongs wholly to Westmoreland, while its lower part is on the border of Cumberland and Westmoreland, is about seven miles long, with an average breadth of half a mile. The upper part of the lake is in the valley of Patterdale, into which open other dales or valleys, including Glencoin, Glen-ridden, Grisedale, and Deepdale, which are formed by the short branches thrown off towards the lake by the semicircle of mountains which here surround it. Martindale opens at its northern end upon the south-east side of Ulleswater; it lies between the hills of Martindale Forest on the east and a detached mountain or hill on the west. These dales are watered by mountain streams flowing into Ulleswater, from the lower extremity of which the Eamont flows. From the main ridge, near Birkbeck Fells, an important branch is thrown off in the north east direction; but between this and the branch ridge, which has been described as parting from the main ridge at High Street, are two shorter branches, separated from the High Street branch by the valley of Martindale, from each other by the valley of Swindale, and from the Birkbeck Fells branch by the valley of Wet Sleddale. The branch from the principal ridge of the mountains at Birkbeck Fells is known in the part nearest the ridge as Shap Fell. It extends northward in several ridges, separated by intervening vales. Knipe Scar, and the hills of Shap Moor, Newby High Moor, Ravensworth and Meaburn Moors, and Colby Common, all belong to this branch. The intervening valleys have a general direction north and south, and the waters which drain them unite to form a stream which joins the Eden between Kirkby Thore and Temple Sowerby. The branches from the main ridge on the south side extend on the western side of the county a very short distance from the main ridge, subsiding in the valley of Grasmere, by which they are separated from a detached group of the Cumbrian mountains, which occupies the western extremity of the county. Numerous branch ridges and groups of hills extend in various directions, including many forests, drained by numerous streams, and presenting varieties of picturesque scenery. The western extremity of the county is occupied by part of another group of the Cumbrian mountains, divided into two parts by the valley of Great Langdale. Langdale Pikes, Silver How, and Loughrigg Fell are between Grasmere and Great Langdale; and Bow Fell (2,911 feet high) on the border of Westmoreland and Cumberland, and Wrey Nose, or Wrynose, form the western termination of the valleys of Great and Little Langdale, which are separated from each other by a ridge, called Lingmire. We subjoin the names and altitudes of the principal mountains:—Fairfield, 2,950 feet; Bow Fell, 2,914; Rydal Head, 2,910; High Street, 2,700; Hill Bell, 2,500; Harrison Stickle, 2,400; Pike o' Stickle, 2,300; Wans Fell, 1,590; Whin Fell Beacon, near Kendal, 1,500; Benson Knot, near Kendal, 1,098; Loughrigg Fell, 1,103; Kendal Fell, 648.

THE PENNINE CHAIN, &c.

The Pennine chain of mountains separates the waters which flow into the Irish sea from those which flow into the German Ocean. Westmoreland is chiefly on the western side, but a small portion is on the eastern side of the ridge, and in this some of the upper waters of the Tees have their source. The Tees itself rises just beyond the northern border at the foot of Cross Fell, but its source, as far as the fall at Cauldron Snout, is on the border of Westmoreland. On the western side of the Pennine chain the county is divided by the principal ridge of the Cumbrian chain into two basins—the basin of the Eden on the north, and the basin of Morecambe Bay on the south, drained by the Kent, the Lune, and other streams, which flow into that estuary.

The Eden rises on the border of Westmoreland and Yorkshire, on the side of Hugh's Seat, one of the mountains of the Pennine chain, and passing Kirkby Stephen, shortly afterwards quits the county for Cumberland. Its course in Westmoreland is thirty miles; no part of which is navigable. It has numerous affluents, among which may be named the Beelah or Belay, the Helbeck, the Troutbeck, and the Crowdundale, on the right bank, and the Lowther and the Eamont on the left bank. All the larger affluents of the Eden which join it on the left bank rise on the northern slope of the Cumbrian ridge.

The Belo, which rises below the hills east of Kendal, consists of two main streams, which unite near the hamlet of Overthwaite, two miles north of Beetham, below which is a waterfall over a limestone rock sixteen feet in perpendicular depth.

The Eamont flows from Ulleswater and enters Cumberland with the Eden.

The Kent rises at the foot of High Street, in the Cumbrian ridge, and after receiving the Sprint and Mintbeck, it flows into Morecambe Bay, along with the small rivers Pool and Belo, or Betha, which there join it. Its whole course of twenty-three miles belongs to Westmoreland, but it is not navigable.

The Leven, which flows out of Windermere, belongs to Lancashire; but the Rothay or Raisebeck, which drains the valley of Grasmere, the streams which drain the valleys of Great and Little Langdale, and the Troutbeck, all of which flow into Windermere, and may be regarded as the upper waters of the Leven, belong to Westmoreland.

The Lowther has its source in the moors above Wet Sleddale, and after washing the venerable ruins of Shap Abbey, runs to Rosgill Hall, where it receives Swindale Beck, and after its confluence with the Thornthwaite, which issues from Haweswater, it rolls in a narrow and stony channel through the woods of Lowther, till it loses its name in the Eamont opposite Carleton Hall.

The Lune rises in Ravenstonedale, on the northern side of the Cumbrian ridge. It passes Orton and Kirkby Lonsdale, a little below which it enters Lancashire. Its course in Westmoreland is about twenty-seven miles, no part of which is navigable.

The Underbarrow meets the Kent, as seen above, with which it flows into Morecambe Bay.

The Winstar, also called the Pool, rises in Westmoreland, and flows south ten miles along the border of Westmoreland, and of Furness in Lancashire, into Morecambe Bay.

Elterwater, Grasmere, Rydal Water, and some other smaller lakes, or tarns, are connected with the streams which flow into Windermere. Windermere belongs, by its position, rather to Lancashire, but the fisheries (which comprise all the lake) are held under the barony of Kendal by the payment of certain lord's rents, and they are also rated and pay to the relief of the poor in Westmoreland.

The small size of the lakes is favourable to the production of varied landscapes, and their boundary lines are either gracefully or boldly indented; in some parts rugged steep, admitting of no cultivation, descend into the water; in others, gently sloping lawns and rich woods or flat and fertile meadows stretch between the margin of the lake and the mountains. The margins of the lakes generally lined either with a fine bluish gravel thrown up by the water, or with patches of reeds and bulrushes; while the surface is variegated by plots of water-lilies. The disproportionate length of some of the lakes would, by making their appearance approximate to that of a river, injure their characteristic beauty, were not this effect prevented, especially in Ulleswater and Haweswater, by the winding shape of the lakes, which prevents their whole extent from being seen at once. The islands are neither numerous nor very beautiful. The water is remarkably pure and crystalline. What are locally called tarns are small lakes, belonging mostly to small valleys or circular recesses, high up among the mountains. Loughrigg Tarn, near the junction of the valleys Great and Little Langdale, is one of the most beautiful. The mountain tarns are difficult of access, and naked, desolate, and gloomy, but impressive from these very characteristics. The streams of Westmoreland are rather large brooks than rivers, with very limpid water, allowing their rocky or gravelly beds to be seen to a great depth. The number of torrents and smaller brooks, with their waterfalls and waterbreaks or rapids, is very great. The wide estuary of the Kent presents at low water a vast expanse of sands. The lakes and tarns abound with various species of fish, as trout, eel, bass, perch, tench, roach, pike, charr, and others. Sea-fish are also abundant on the shore of Morecambe Bay.

For economical purposes the rivers and lakes of Westmoreland are of little importance; but in combination with the rugged mountains and the secluded valleys amid which they are found, they give to the county a high degree of picturesque beauty. "The forms of the mountains," says Wordsworth, in his "Scenery of the Lakes," "are endlessly diversified, sweeping easily or boldly in simple majesty, abrupt and precipitous, or soft and elegant. In magnitude and grandeur they are individually inferior to the most celebrated of those in some parts of the island; but in the combinations which they make, towering above each other, or lifting themselves in ridges like the waves of a tumultuous sea, and in the beauty and variety of their surfaces and colours, they are surpassed by none." The mountains are generally covered with turf, rendered rich and green by the moisture of the climate; forming in some places an unbroken extent of pasturage, in others laid partially bare by torrents and burstings of water from the mountains in heavy rains. Wood is not abundant; the want of timber trees is particularly felt, but coppices are tolerably numerous. The trees are chiefly oak, ash, birch, and a few elms, with underwood of hazel, holly, and white and black thorns. Scotch firs, beeches, larches, and limes have been introduced of late years. Fern is commonly found on the mountains; heath and furze are only occasionally found. The valleys are for the most part winding, and in many the windings are abrupt and intricate; the bottoms of the valleys are most commonly formed by a comparatively spacious gently-declining area, level as the surface of the lake, except where broken by the rocks and hills that rise up like so many islands from the plain.

Westmoreland has only one canal, the Lancaster Canal, which commences on the east of Kendal, at a height of 144½ feet above the level of the sea, and runs southward with some bends by Burton in Kendal, to Lancaster and Preston, in Lancashire. About twelve miles of the canal are in Westmoreland.

For further account of the mountains, lakes, &c., see page 39.

ROADS, TURNPIKE TRUSTS, AND BRIDGES.

The principal roads in the county are the main road from Lancaster to Carlisle and Glasgow; and the road (formerly a mail road) through Stamford, Newark, Doncaster, and Greta Bridge, to Carlisle and Glasgow. The Carlisle road enters the county on the south side, at Burton, in Kendal, eleven miles from Lancaster, and runs northward by Kendal, Shap, and Brougham, to Penrith; before reaching the last-mentioned place it crosses the Eamont into Cumberland. Roads lead from Kendal south-westward to Ulverstone and Dalton in Furness; westward to Bowness, and across Windermere by the ferry to Hawkshead and Conistone Water in Furness, and to Egremont and Whitehaven in Cumberland; north-eastward by Orton to Appleby, with a branch road to Kirkby Stephen and Brough; eastward favourable years, and, as those who keep horses generally hire a meadow to make hay of, it is seldom sold in the dry state. Young cattle are kept on inferior land in summer, and have hay and straw in winter, with turnips where these are raised; a few are fatted at three years old, but most of them are sold to graziers in Yorkshire and Lancashire. Scotch cattle are purchased in September, at the great fair at Brough Hill, held in that month; they are wintered in coarse pastures, and occasionally in straw yards. The next year they are put on the best grass, and are fit for the butcher in October. A few horses are reared, but not to any extent. The sheep are of a hardy kind, fit for the mountain pastures; they are brought down to the valleys at the approach of winter and kept in the enclosed grounds till April. The fattening of hogs, and the curing of bacon and hams are well understood in Westmoreland, and many hams are sent to other parts of the country. The breed is not large. The hogs are not made so fat as they are in some places; the hams are more delicate, and are very well cured and smoked. They are often sold as York hams, whereas the latter are much larger and fatter, the Yorkshire breed of hogs being large and fattening very readily. The plantations are extensive in most parts of the county; they are chiefly of oak, ash, elm, beech, sycamore, Scotch fir and larch, which last thrive best. Many ornamented cottages and villas have been built on the borders of the several lakes; and men of talent, reputation, and wealth, have taken their temporary, and some their permanent abode there. This has tended to improve the immediate neighbourhood more rapidly than would otherwise have been the case.

GOVERNMENT OF THE COUNTY, &c.

A full account of the government of the county will be found at page 67, and the following pages; we have only to add here a brief account of the shrievalty of Westmoreland. The first sheriff of Westmoreland on record is William Fitz Hugh, who occurs in the reign of Henry II. (1160) in a trial between Robert de Musgrave and the Abbot of Byland in the county court at Appleby. In the 22nd year of the same king's reign (1175-6), Elias, son of Gilmichael, occurs, and three years later mention is made of Ranulph de Glanville as sheriff of Westmoreland. In the 2nd Richard I. (1190-91) we find Osbert de Lonchamp; six years afterwards Hugh Bardulph occurs, and in the following year Adam de Deepdale. In the 1st John (1199-1200), Gilbert, son of Reinford, is mentioned as passing his accounts in the Exchequer, and in the 2nd John, Geoffrey Fitz Peter and Roger de Bellocampo occur as sheriffs. In the following year we have William Stuteville and Philip Escroper. In the fourth of John (1202), Robert de Veteripont was sheriff, and in the following year the office was made hereditary in his family, "to have and to hold of the king and his heirs." On two occasions the grant was resumed by the crown, and the estate of the holders confiscated as the punishment of rebellion, but the inheritance was subsequently restored, and with these two interruptions the office has been handed down till the demise of the last Earl of Thanet, on the 12th June, 1849. On this event a question arising as to the validity of a devise of the office made by that nobleman, the 13th and 14th Vic., c. 30, was passed (15th July, 1850) assimilating Westmoreland to other counties. Thus terminated the hereditary shrievalty of Westmoreland, after having been vested in Robert de Veteripont and twenty-two of his descendants for the long period of nearly 650 years. George Edward Wilson, Esq., was appointed sheriff for the time being, in July, 1849, under the provisions of a short act specially enacted for the purpose, and passed just previously, and he attended the assizes in the same year in his official capacity. In February, in the following year, he was nominated in the usual way by the queen, thus serving the office twice consecutively. The following is a list of the high sheriffs, from the first nomination under the new system till the present time:—1849-50, George E. Wilson, Esq.; 1851, Edward Wilson, Esq.; 1852, Richard Burn, Esq.; 1853, John Wakefield, Esq.; 1854, John Wilson, Esq.; 1855, John Hill, Esq.; 1856, William Wilkinson, Esq.; 1857, Richard L. Watson, Esq.; 1858, Robert Addison, Esq.; 1859, William Moore, Esq.

We subjoin a summary of the county accounts for the year 1858:—To amount of receipts for the year ended at the Epiphany general quarter session, 1859, £3,913 13s. 2½d. Expenditure: Bridges building and repairs, inclusive of bridge master's salary, £587 18s. 4d.; account books, £1 18s.; clerk of the peace's salary, £120; ditto for additional charges, £10 4s. 10d.; high constable's salary, £21; ditto additional charges, £8 16s. 7d.; coroner's fees, £172 6s. 8d.; expenses of lunatic paupers, £27 16s. 6d.; militia stores, for extras and coal, £23 2s. 9d.; expenses of prisoners at Appleby, £410 4s. 7½d.; expenses of prisoners at Kendal, £575 13s. 10d.; maintaining and improving court houses at Appleby, £8 8s. 3d.; expenses of the court at Kendal, £13 6s. 7d.; conveyance of convict prisoners to depôts, £42 13s.; costs of prosecutions at assizes, £242 11s. 5d.; parliamentary representation, £95 2s. 9d.; poor prisoners confined in the queen's prison, London, £10; printing, bookbinding, and advertising, £52 7s. 1d.; treasurer's salary, £50; expenses of the inspector of weights and measures, &c., £69 10s. 5d.; ordinary incidental expenses, £25 19s. 4d.; extraordinary incidental expenses, £769 14s. 8d.; balance due to the county, £571 13s. 2d.; total, £3,913 13s. 2d.

The foundation, organisation, and distribution of the county constabulary will be found fully noticed at page 70.

PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION.

Westmoreland has sent two members to Parliament since the 26th Edward I. The following are the names of the members as far as we have been able to discover from that period to the present time:—

EDWARD I.

- 1297. Thomas de Derwentwater, Roger de Burton.
- 1298. Hugh de Louthere, Robert de Washetun.
- 1301. Robert de Askeby, Thomas de Bethum.
- 1304. Hugh de Louthere, Nicholas de Leaburne.

EDWARD II.

- 1307. William de Goldington, Walter de Sirkeland.
- 1308. Robert English, Thomas de Bethum.
- 1310. Robert English, Thomas de Bethum.
- 1311. Robert English, Thomas de Bethum.
- 1312. Robert English, Walter de Sirkeland.
- 1313. Robert de Askeby, Matthew de Redeman.
- 1314. Nicholas de Leyburne, Thomas de Hellebeck.
- Robert de Leyburne, Henry de Wartheope.
- 1315. Nicholas de Moreland, John de Kirkby Thore.
- 1316. Henry de Wartheope, Robert de Sandford.
- 1318. William English, Robert de Botiler.
- 1321. Walter de Sirkeland, Robert de Sandford.
- 1322. Walter de Sirkeland, Robert de Sandford.
- 1323. Walter de Sirkeland, Robert de Sandford.
- 1324. Robert de Sandford, John de Wakethwayt.
- 1325. Robert de Burton, Robert de Sandford.

EDWARD III.

- 1327. John de Lancaster, Robert de Sandford.
- John de Sirkeland, William English.
- 1328. William English, Robert de Sandford.
- Roger de Brondecheved, Hugh de Moriceby.
- John de Lancaster, Robert de Sandford.
- 1329. William English, Robert de Sandford.
- Thomas de Wartheope, Robert de Sandford.
- 1330. William Threlkeld, William English.
- 1331. William English, Robert de Sandford.
- 1332. Walter de Sirkeland, William English.
- 1333. William English, Robert de Sandford.
- 1334. William English, William de Langwathby.
- William English, Robert de Sandford.
- 1335. William English, Robert de Sandford.
- 1336. Ralph de Restwald, William de Langwathby.
- William English, Hugh de Moriceby.
- 1337. William de Brampton, William de Langwathby.
- William English, William de Langwathby.
- 1338. Richard de Moreland, Roger de Kendal.
- William de Langwathby, Thomas de Sandford.
- 1339. William de Brampton, William de Langwathby.
- 1340. Hugh de Louthere, Robert de Sandford.
- Roger de Brondecheved, Thomas de Musgrave.
- 1341. William English, Thomas de Musgrave.
- 1343. Walter de Sirkeland, Robert de Sandford.
- Richard de Preston, Thomas de Musgrave.
- 1344. William English, Thomas de Musgrave.
- Robert de Sandford, John de Wakethwayt.
- 1346. William de Sandford, junior, Thomas de Sandford.
- 1347. William English, Thomas de Sandford.
- Robert de Boteler, Thomas de Highton.
- 1359. Richard de Preston, junior (one only summoned).
- 1354. William de Windesore, Robert de Sandford, junior.

- 1355. Roland de Thornburgh, Ralph de Bethom.
- 1357. Matthew de Redman, Hugh de Louthere.
- 1359. Hugh de Louthere, Nicholas de Layburne.
- 1360. Rowland de Thornburgh, Thomas de Berwys.
- 1361. Henry de Threlkeld, Thomas de Sandford.
- 1362. James de Pickering, John de Preston.
- 1363. Thomas de Sandford, Henry de Threlkeld.
- 1365. Henry de Threlkeld, John de Preston.
- 1368. Henry de Threlkeld, John de Preston.
- 1369. Gilbert de Culven, John de Derwentwater.
- 1371. Hugh de Louthere, John de Preston.
- 1372. Hugh de Louthere, John de Preston.
- 1373. Rowland de Thornburgh, William de Thornburgh.
- 1376. Christopher de Lancaster, Thomas de Wartheope.
- 1377. Richard de Roos, John, son of Hugh de Louthere.

RICHARD II.

- 1377. James de Pickering, Hugh de Salkeld.
- 1378. James de Pickering, John de Louthere.
- 1379. William de Threlkeld, John de Louthere.
- 1380. Walter de Sirkeland, Thomas de Wartheope.
- 1381. William de Threlkeld, Hugh de Salkeld.
- John de Preston, John de Crakanthorpe.
- 1382. James de Pickering, John de Kirkby.
- Richard de Roos, John de Dente.
- 1383. Richard de Roos, Robert de Clibbourne.
- Robert de Clibbourne, John de Mausegh.
- 1384. Walter de Sirkeland, Robert de Windesore.
- 1385. Richard de Roos, John de Crakanthorpe.
- 1386. John de Derwentwater, Robert de Clibburne.
- 1387. Thomas de Blenkinsop, Thomas de Sirkeland.
- 1388. Robert de Sandford, Hugh de Salkeld.
- 1389. John de Crakanthorpe, Hugh de Salkeld.
- 1390. Christopher de Moresby, Hugh de Salkeld.
- 1391. William de Culven, William de Thornburgh.
- 1392. John de Crakanthorpe, Hugh de Salkeld.
- 1393. William de Culven, William de Thornburgh.
- 1394. Walter de Sirkeland, William de Crakanthorpe.
- 1396. John de Lancaster, Hugh de Salkeld.
- 1397. William de Culven, William de Crakanthorpe.

HENRY IV.

- 1399. Thomas de Musgrave, John de Crakanthorpe.
- 1400. William de Thornburgh, Hugh de Salkeld.
- 1402. William de Threlkeld, William de Crakanthorpe.
- 1403. Rowland Thornburgh, Richard Duckett.
- 1404. Robert de Leyburn, Thomas de Sirkeland.
- 1406. John de Betham, John de Lancaster.
- Alan de Pennington, Thomas de Wartheope.
- 1407. Alan de Pennington, Thomas de Wartheope.
- 1410. Robert de Leyburn, Christopher de Moresby.

HENRY V.

- 1413. Robert Crakanthorpe, John Hoton.
- 1414. Thomas de Warcup, William Thornburgh.
- 1415. Rowland de Thornburgh, Robert de Crakanthorpe.
- 1417. Rowland de Thornburgh, Richard de Wherton.
- 1420. Alan de Pennington, Thomas de Wartheope.
- William Beauchampe, Thomas Grene.
- 1420. John de Lancaster, William de Blenkinsop.

HENRY VI.

- 1422. Robert de Layburne, Thomas, son of William de Bleukansope.
- 1424. Thomas de Bethom, William de Crakanthorpe.
- John Dennyngre, Robert de Crakanthorpe.
- 1428. Thomas Sirkeland, Christopher Lancaster.
- 1441. Walter de Sirkeland, Richard de Redeman.
- 1446. Nicholas Cerlington, George Dacre.
- 1440. Thomas Curwen, William Malets.
- 1450. Thomas Paul, John Strete.

EDWARD IV.

- 1460. William Parr, Christopher Moresby.
- 1472. William Parr, John Sirkeland.

* All the indentures, writs, and returns, from this time to the first year of Edward VI. are lost, except one bundle in the 33rd Henry VIII.

HENRY VIII.

1544. Nicholas Leyburn, Nicholas Bacon.

EDWARD VI.

1547. Charles Brandon, Thomas Warcop.

1553. Thomas Warcop, Thomas Lancelotti.

MARY.

1554. Thomas Warcop, Thomas Lancelotti.

EDWARD AND MARY.

1554. Thomas Warcop.

1555. Thomas Warcop.

1556. Anthony Kempe, Thomas Sackville.

ELIZABETH.

1558. Lancelot Lancaster, Thomas Warcop.

1562. Walter Strickland, Robert Lowther.

1570. Allan Bellingham, Thomas Warcop.

1571. Thomas Knivet, John Warcop.

1584. Francis Clifford, Thomas Warcop.

1585. Francis Clifford, Thomas Warcop.

1588. Francis Dacre, Thomas Warcop.

1592. William Bowes, Edward Dorey.

1596. Walter Harcourt, Henry Chomley.

1600. George Wharton, Thomas Strickland.

JAMES I.

1603. Thomas Strickland, Knt., Edward Musgrave, Knt.

1614. Thomas Wharton, Knt., Henry Lord Clifford.

1620. Henry Clifford, Thomas Wharton, Knt.

1623. John Lowther, Robert Strickland.

CHARLES I.

1625. John Lowther, Sir Henry Bellingham, Bart.

1626. John Lowther, Sir Henry Bellingham, Bart.

1627. Sir John Lowther, Knt., John Lowther.

1639. Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart., Sir Henry Bellingham, Bart.

1649. Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart., Sir Henry Bellingham, Bart.

COMMONWEALTH.

1653. Charles Howard.

1653. Christopher Lister, Henry Baynes.

CHARLES II.

1660. Sir John Lowther, Bart., Sir Thomas Wharton, Knt.

1661. Sir Philip Musgrave, Sir Thomas Strickland.

1678. Sir John Lowther, Bart., Alan Bellingham.

1679. Alan Bellingham, Christopher Philipson.

1691. Sir John Lowther, Bart., Alan Bellingham.

JAMES II.

1685. Sir John Lowther, Bart., Alan Bellingham.

1689. Sir John Lowther, Bart., Henry Wharton.

Goodwyn Wharton.

WILLIAM AND MARY.

1690. Sir John Lowther, Bart., Sir Christopher Musgrave, Bart.

WILLIAM III.

1695. Sir John Lowther, Sir Richard Sandford.

William Fleming.

1698. Sir Richard Sandford, William Fleming.

1700. Henry Graham, Sir Christopher Musgrave.

1701. Sir Richard Sandford, Henry Graham.

ANNE.

1702. Sir Christopher Musgrave, Robert Lowther.

William Fleming.

1705. Henry Graham, Robert Lowther.

William Fleming.

1707. Sir William Fleming, Robert Lowther.

1708. Daniel Wilson, James Graham.

1710. Hon. James Graham, Daniel Wilson.

1719. Hon. James Graham, Daniel Wilson.

GEORGE I.

1714. Hon. James Graham, Daniel Wilson.

1722. Anthony Lowther, Hon. James Graham.

GEORGE II.

1727. Hon. Anthony Lowther, Daniel Wilson.

1734. Hon. Anthony Lowther, Daniel Wilson.

1741. Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart., Daniel Wilson.

1747. John Dalston, Edward Wilson.

1754. John Dalston, Sir George Dalston, Bart.

GEORGE III.

1761. Sir James Lowther, Bart., John Upton, Esq.

1768. John Robinson, Thomas Fenwick.

1774. Sir James Lowther, Bart., Sir Michael Fleming, Bart.

James Lowther.

1780. James Lowther, Sir Michael le Fleming, Bart.

1784. James Lowther, Sir Michael le Fleming, Bart.

1790. James Lowther, Sir Michael le Fleming, Bart.

1795. James Lowther, Sir Michael le Fleming, Bart.

1802. James Lowther, Sir Michael le Fleming, Bart.

1806. James Lowther, Lord Muncaster.

1812. Lord Muncaster, Hon. H. C. Lowther.

1818. Lord Muncaster, Hon. C. Lowther.

GEORGE IV.

1820. Viscount Lowther, Hon. H. C. Lowther.

1826. Viscount Lowther, Hon. H. C. Lowther.

WILLIAM IV.

1830. Viscount Lowther, Hon. H. C. Lowther.

1831. Hon. H. C. Lowther, Alexander Nowell.

1832-5. Viscount Lowther, Hon. H. C. Lowther.

1835-7. Viscount Lowther, Hon. H. C. Lowther.

VICTORIA.

1837-41. Viscount Lowther, Hon. H. C. Lowther.

1841-7. Viscount Lowther, Hon. H. C. Lowther. On the elevation of the former to the peerage, in September, 1841, William Thompson was elected.

1847-52. Hon. H. C. Lowther, William Thompson.

1852-6. Hon. H. C. Lowther, William Thompson (died 1854);

Earl of Bective.

1857-8. Hon. H. C. Lowther, Earl of Bective.

1859. Hon. H. C. Lowther, Earl of Bective.

The number of polling places for the county is fifteen, viz., Ambleside, Appleby, Bowness, Brough, Burton, Grayrigg, Kendal, Kirkby Lonsdale, Kirkby Stephen, Milnthorpe, Morland, Pooley Bridge, Shap, Staveley, and Temple Sowerby.

TRADE, &c.

With the exception of Kendal and the neighbourhood, there is no place in the county where any manufactures worth speaking of exist. Kendal, nearly as late as the beginning of the present century, exported largely of coarse woollens to America, but the rapid progress made in that branch of industry in Yorkshire and other places has nearly destroyed it. The manufacture of carpets is at present carried on; and hosiery, wool-card making, and comb making, as trades, still exist to some extent. Besides the woollens and carpet manufacture at Kendal and its neighbourhood, worsted and woollen are made at Kirkland and Milnthorpe; waistcoatings, hosiery, sacking, canvas, bobbin-net, &c., at these and other places; and paper at Milnthorpe.

Looking at the quarrying and mining industry of the county, we find gypsum quarried at Acornbank; grey or greenish lime or marble, bearing a good polish, near Ambleside, Kirkby Lonsdale, and Kendal (which has marble works); plenty of good roofing slate is wrought at Kentmere, Ambleside, Thrang Crag, White Moss, &c.; pink and bluish granite are found in Wastdale Crags, besides many single blocks, along with ragstone, and coarse "galliard" slate, dispersed about in all parts. Lead is worked at Dufton Fell, and at Eagle Crag, Greenside, Glenridding, and Staveley, in Patterdale; copper near Asby, Kirkby Stephen, Orton, Raine, and Shap; poor coal on Stainmore, and near Mallerstang and Casterton. These various departments of industry will be found noticed more at length in the accounts of the various parishes and townships at subsequent pages.

TENURE OF LAND, &c.

In this county real property for the most part consists of customary freeholds of inheritance, or tenant right; that is to say, held according to the custom of the manor; the tenant having a freehold interest, but not a freehold tenure. It is conveyed by bargain and sale and admittance, not by surrender and admittance, as lands of copyhold tenure are. Copyhold was made willable, or devisable by will, by the 55 George III., c. 192 (12th July, 1815), without a prior surrender to uses as sanctioned by the custom of some manors. Customary hold was made willable by the 1 Vic., c. 26 (3rd July, 1837). It should be observed that an act was passed on the 21st June, 1841, for facilitating a voluntary enfranchisement of such lands. By custom, within the barony of Kendal, the widow enjoys the whole customary estate during her widowhood. And for the widow's estate is due to the lord an heriot; which, as the widow could not go to war, was a recompense, in order to provide things necessary for the marching of the army; and this heriot was anciently the best beast of the deceased. In some manors custom has obtained for the lord to have "the best of the dead or quick goods at his option." In some places also are claimed parcel heriots; that is, an heriot for every parcel of land acquired to the original estate. In the barony of Westmoreland, the widow has in some places half, and in others only one-third of her husband's customary estate; and in that part of the county not many heriots are paid; for in those cases there is an heir-at-law, who enters immediately; and consequently the lord did not want a soldier, or if the heir was under age, the lord had the wardship of his lands. Generally a fine is due upon change of the lord by death, and change of the tenant by alienation; the one called a general, the other a special or dropping fine. But as to the general fine, there is this exception, where a man purchases the manor and dies, the former lord being yet living: in that case there is no fine due upon the death of the purchasing lord, nor of his son, or other descendant or assignee, so long as the last general admitting lord is living; but upon the death of the last general admitting lord, it has been determined that a fine shall be paid to the lord then in possession. A fine arbitrary or uncertain is lost, if the tenant dies before it is asserted by the lord and demand made for the same. But in most of the manors the fines have been reduced to a certainty; and in others extinguished, and the estate purchased to freehold. Besides rent, fines, heriots, suit of court, and the like dependencies, there are likewise boons, which vary in the several manors: as, to pay a farm hen or capon; to plough, harrow, mow, reap, for a certain number of days; and such like.

The natives of Westmoreland have great privileges in the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. The fellowships and valuable livings of the Old Foundation in Queen's College, Oxford, are exclusively appropriated to natives of Westmoreland and Cumberland. In the same college there are valuable exhibitions (by the Lady Elizabeth Hastings) to youths from Appleby and Haverham schools. In Cambridge there are also valuable exhibitions, scholarships, &c., an account of which will be found in the histories of the various parishes, &c., in the following pages, to which we must also refer the reader for a particular account of the charities of the county, which produce about £5,000 per annum. The value of the capital and property from which this arises may be estimated at upwards of £130,000.

BARONY OF WESTMORELAND.

This barony comprises the whole of the east and west wards, and is called the barony of Westmoreland in consequence of the remainder of the county, which forms the barony of Kendal, being anciently considered part of Lancashire, and we find it entered in the celebrated Domesday Survey under the title of "Agemundrenesse." It comprises the honours and seignories of Appleby and Brough, which contain under them the forests of Mallerstang, Oglebird, and Stainmore, with all the subordinate manors held of Sir Richard Tuflet, by the service of carriage; he himself holding the barony of the sovereign by the service of four knights fees. The total amount of carriage paid by the tenants of the barony in 1634 was £52 1s. 6d., besides 517 bushels and three pecks of "serjeant oats," or "bailiff earn," and "684 peat hens." In 1733 it was decreed "that the tenants hold their tenements according to ancient custom of tenant right, and as customary estates of inheritance, descendible from ancestor to heir, under ancient yearly rents, and such general and dropping fines "as were then settled by arbitration, which also determined the right of the tenants to get turf, peat, &c., for their own use; to cut and sell underwood; to mortgage, lease, or demise their tenements for any term not exceeding three years; and to exchange lands lying intermixed in common fields for lands of equal value in the same manner, without license or fine." It was also settled "that the lord may sell timber, provided he leave sufficient for repairs, necessary huts and estovers." The tenants of many of the estates within the barony have been enfranchised, or pay only very small rents, as will be seen in the histories of the respective manors in the following pages. All the customary tenants pay arbitrary fines, except those of the manor of Drybeck, Little Asby, and Rampion, who pay fines certain. The descent of the barony will be best understood from the following account of its lords:—

Lords of the Barony of Westmoreland.

As we have seen in previous pages, William the Conqueror gave the whole of Cumberland and this great barony to RANULPH DE MESCHINES, who, in the year 1088, granted the churches of St. Michael and St. Lawrence of his castle of Appleby, to the abbey of St. Mary, at York. He married Lucia, sister of Hugh Lupus, earl of Chester, by whom he had issue, besides a daughter, a son, RANULPH DE MESCHINES, who succeeded to his father's extensive estates, with the exception of a large portion of Cumberland which had been granted to his uncle, William de Meschines, and others. This Ranulph became, in right of his mother, Earl and Count Palatine of the county of Chester, where he fixed his residence. He gave the barony of Westmoreland and his Cumberland estates to his sister, the wife of

ROBERT D'ESTRIVERS, or TREYERS, whose daughter, Ibris, brought it in marriage to

RANULPH ENGAYNE, who had a son and heir,

WILLIAM ENGAYNE, whose daughter and heiress, Ada, was the wife of

SIMON DE MORVILLE, who had a son and heir,
ROGER DE MORVILLE, whose son and heir,

HUGH DE MORVILLE, was one of the four knights who murdered St. Thomas à Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of Henry II. For this offence the estates of the De Morvilles were seized by the king, who granted the custody of Appleby Castle to Gospatric, the son of Orme, but the barony was retained by the crown till the reign of King John, when it was granted, together with the custody of the castles of Appleby and Brough, and the "shutwick and rent of the county of Westmoreland," in perpetuity, to

ROBERT DE VETERIPONT, son of William de Veteripont, by Maud, sister of Hugh de Morville, who had for her portion that part of Meburn, or Meaburn, since known as Mauld's Meaburn. This Robert de Veteripont "was a man of great parts and employments, and was trusted with the custody and disposal of much of the king's treasure." He was entrusted with many offices of honour, and had the custody of several castles and towns of importance at different times. His name occurs among the benefactors of the abbey of Ship, to which he gave Milburn Grange, and "the tithes of the renewal of all the beasts taken by him or his men in all his forests in Westmoreland." He confirmed to the said abbey "all the gifts which had been made by Thomas, son of Gospatrick, and Thomas, his son; and the grant of Kameill, which had been made to the said abbey, by Maud, his mother, and Ivo, his brother." Robert de Veteripont married Idonea, daughter and heiress of John Builly, and having been twenty-four years sheriff of Westmoreland, died in 1228, and was succeeded by his son,

JOHN DE VETERIPONT, who sold a portion of the lands of the barony. This John died young, about the year 1242, leaving, by his wife, Sibilla, daughter of William Ferrars, earl of Derby, a son,

ROBERT DE VETERIPONT, who being under age, became a royal ward, and as such was placed under the guardianship of the prior of Carlisle. On attaining his majority, this baron joined the disaffected nobles against Henry III., and died of the wounds he had received in the battle of Lewes, in Sussex, or that of Evesham, in Worcestershire, after which his possessions were seized by the king, but were subsequently restored to his two young daughters, Isabella and Idonea (by his wife, Isabella Fitz-Peter), who were committed in wardship to Roger de Clifford, of Herefordshire, and Roger de Leybourne, of Kent, who married them to their two sons and heirs, between whom the barony of Westmoreland was divided, till the death of Idonea, without issue, when the whole became vested in the heirs of Isabella, by her husband, Roger de Clifford, whose son and successor,

ROBERT DE CLIFFORD, was about eight years of age, at the time of his father's decease. This nobleman is said to have been "the greatest man of all this family, being of a most martial and heroic spirit." In the 25th Edward I. (1296-7) he was made the king's captain and keeper of the marches in the north towards Scotland, and made several inroads into that kingdom. He was also one of the four guardians appointed by King Edward I. for Edward, his son and successor; and was justice of the king's forests north of the Trent. In the 1st Edward II. (1307-8) he was made admiral of England, and about the same time Lord Marcher. The king just named granted to him the honour and castle of Skipton, in Craven. He married Maud de Clare, daughter of Thomas de Clare, younger brother of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hereford, by whom he had issue,

- i. ROGER, who succeeded his father.
- ii. ROBERT, who succeeded his brother.
- iii. Idonea, who became the wife of Henry Lord Percy.

Robert de Clifford was killed at the battle of Bannockburn, in 1314, in the fortieth year of his age, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

ROBERT DE CLIFFORD, who was attainted of high treason in the 16th Edward II. (1321-2), being then about twenty-three years of age, for his adherence to Thomas Earl of Lancaster, and his estates became forfeited to the king, who granted a portion of them to Andrew de Hercla, but on De Hercla's treason they reverted to the crown, and were, with the other parts of the barony, restored to Roger de Clifford. In about a month afterwards Roger died, and as he had never married, the barony passed to his brother,

ROBERT DE CLIFFORD, who received a great addition to his property by the death of his great-aunt, Idonea de Veteripont, when the estates of the Veteriponts, which had been divided between the two sisters for want of male issue, became again united in the same family. This Robert married Isabella, daughter of Maurice, Lord Berkeley, upon whom he settled, by way of jointure, all the lands of Skipton, and a great part of the lands in Westmoreland. By this lady he had

- i. ROBERT, his heir.
- ii. ROGER, who succeeded his brother.
- iii. Thomas.

He died May 20th, 1344, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

ROBERT LORD CLIFFORD, who, being under age at the time of his father's decease, became ward to the king. During his minority he served in the French wars, and was present at the battle of Cressy, though but sixteen years of age. He married, previous to his father's death, Euphemia, one of the daughters of Ralph de Neville, the first of that family who was created Earl of Westmoreland, but had no issue. This Robert died in France, and was succeeded by his brother,

ROGER DE CLIFFORD, who is described as a man of "much gallantry and valour," and was accounted one of the wisest men of his time. He married Maud de Beauchamp, daughter of Thomas Earl of Warwick, by whom he had issue,

- i. THOMAS, his heir.
- ii. William, subsequently governor of Berwick.
- iii. Lewis, from whom the present Lord Clifford of Chudleigh is descended.
- i. Margaret.

Roger de Clifford died in the 15th Richard II. (1392), and was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS DE CLIFFORD, who was about twenty-six years of age at the death of his father. In his early years he was much at court, and in great favour with Richard II., but being somewhat wild and extravagant, he was one of those that were banished by authority of parliament in the year 1387, and died fighting against the infidels, at Spruce, in Germany, in 1393, leaving issue by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Lord Ross, of Hamlake Castle, in Yorkshire, besides a daughter, Maud, an infant son and heir,

JOHN DE CLIFFORD, who thus became a royal ward. In the year following the demise of Thomas de Clifford, the king (Richard II.) granted the shrievalty of Westmoreland to the queen consort, who granted the same, with the approbation of the monarch, to Elizabeth, mother of the said John. This John was made a knight of the Garter by Henry V. He married Elizabeth Percy, only daughter of Henry Lord Percy, surnamed Hotspur, by whom he had issue,

- i. THOMAS, his heir.
- ii. Henry, who died without issue.
- i. Mary, who became the wife of Sir Philip Wentworth.

John Lord Clifford was slain at the siege of Meaux, in France, in the 10th Henry V. (1422).

THOMAS DE CLIFFORD, son and heir of John Lord Clifford, was about seven years of age when he succeeded to his ancestral estates, and in consequence became a ward of the king. This Thomas de Clifford distinguished himself in the French wars during the reign of Henry VI., and was present at the battle of Poitiers. He married Johanna, daughter of Thomas Lord Daere of Gilsland, by whom he had issue,

- i. JOHN, his heir.
- ii. Roger.
- iii. Robert.
- iv. Thomas.
- i. Elizabeth.
- ii. Maud.
- iii. Anne.
- iv. John, married to Sir Richard Musgrave, Knt., of Hartley Castle, from whom the present Sir George Musgrave is descended.
- v. Margaret.

Thomas de Clifford was slain in the battle of St. Albans, in 1435, and was buried in the abbey church there. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

JOHN DE CLIFFORD, a distinguished knight, son of the Duke of Lancaster, by whom he was killed the young Duke of York, son of the Duke of York, at the battle of Wakefield. This John de Clifford was present at the second battle of St. Alban's, and was slain the day before the battle of Towton, leaving by his wife, Margaret Bromflett, by birth Baroness Percy,

- i. HENRY, his heir.
- ii. Richard.
- iii. Elizabeth, married to Sir Robert Ake.

HENRY DE CLIFFORD, eldest son of John Lord Clifford and Margaret, his wife, was seven years old or thereabouts when his father was killed. This nobleman was deprived of his lands and honours for the period of twenty four years, during which time he lived as a shepherd in Yorkshire, or in Cumberland about Threlkeld, where his father-in-law's estate was, and sometimes in the borders of Scotland. During this time we find the Clifford estates granted to several persons, and amongst the rest to Richard Duke of Gloucester, subsequently Richard III., who granted the sheriffwick to Sir Richard Ratcliffe during his life, for his good services; but when Henry VII. obtained the crown, Lord Clifford was restored to his honours and estates, and he subsequently repaired several of his castles, which had gone to decay during the late troubles. He was twice married, firstly, to Anne, daughter of Sir John St. John, of Bletso, by whom he had issue,

- i. HENRY, his heir.
- ii. Thomas, who married Lucy, daughter of Sir Anthony Brown.
- iii. Mabel, who became the wife of William Fitzwilliam, earl of Southampton.
- iv. Margaret, married to Sir Michael.
- v. Joan, married to Sir Ralph Boves.
- vi. Margaret, married to Christopher, son and heir of Sir Edward, afterwards a Canon of Bath, and a knight.

By Florence Pudsey, his second wife, he had two or three sons, all of whom died when they were very young, and a daughter, Dorothy, married to Sir Hugh Lowther of Lowther. He died in the 15th Henry VIII. (1533-4), and was succeeded by his eldest son,

HENRY DE CLIFFORD, who was thirty years of age when his father died, so that he immediately became possessed of his family honours and estates. He was subsequently created earl of Cumberland, and was invested with the order of the Garter. He was also made by the king (Henry VIII.) lord-president of the north parts of England, and many times filled the office of lord-warden of the marches. Lord Clifford is described as one of the most eminent lords of his time for nobleness and gallantry. Like his father, he was twice married, his first wife being Margaret Talbot, eldest daughter of George Earl of Shrewsbury, but she died within two or three years after their marriage, leaving no issue. His second wife was Margaret Percy, daughter of Henry Percy, fifth earl of Northumberland, by whom he had two sons and four daughters,

- i. HENRY, his heir.
- ii. Isabella, who married Anne, sole daughter and heir of Sir Henry Ratcliffe, Knt.
- iii. Katherine, married to John Lord Scroope of Bolton Castle.
- iv. Maud, married to Sir John Conyers.
- v. Elizabeth, married to Sir Christopher Medefall of Napper, co. York.
- vi. Jane, married to Sir John Hudleston, Knt., of Millom.

He died at Skipton Castle in 1542-3, and was succeeded by HENRY DE CLIFFORD, his eldest son. This nobleman, during his father's lifetime, was made a knight of the Bath, at the coronation of Anne Boleyn. He is stated to have wasted some of his estate; but "in the latter end of his time he retired and lived a country life." He was twice married: first to the Lady Eleanor Brandon, youngest daughter of Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk, by his wife Mary, who was queen of France, having by her several sons, who all died in infancy, and one daughter, married to Edward Stanley, lord Strange, afterwards earl of Derby. His second wife was Anne, youngest daughter of William Lord Daer of Gilsland, by whom he had,

- i. George, his heir.
- ii. Francis, who was made knight of the Bath by James I., when he was a minor, but died without male issue, he succeeded to the title of Earl of Cumberland. He married Griffith, daughter of Thomas, Lord of the Isle of Man, and a widow of Edward Stanley, lord Abergavenny, by whom he had several children:—

1. George, who died unmarried.
2. Francis, who became a knight of the Bath, earl of Cumberland, the last heir male of the northern Cliffords.
3. Margaret, married to Sir Thomas Wentworth, afterwards earl of Strafford, who was beheaded in 1641.
4. Frances, who was married to Philip Lord Wharton, and had issue.
5. Eleanor, who died unmarried.

Henry Lord Clifford was succeeded by his eldest son,

GEORGE CLIFFORD, third earl of Cumberland, who, being a minor, became a ward to Queen Elizabeth. He married the Lady Margaret Russel, youngest daughter of the Earl of Bedford, by whom he had issue two sons, Francis and Robert, who died in infancy, and a daughter, Anne, of whom hereafter. This earl signalled himself in the service of Queen Elizabeth, both by land and sea; and was one of the forty peers commissioned to try Mary Queen of Scots, and after her attainder was one of the four earls who were sent to Fotheringay Castle, to be present at the execution. Having no surviving male issue, Lord Clifford, for the preservation of his name and family, in 1590-91, levied a fine, and cut off the entail of the estate which had been made by his father, and settled the same to himself and his wife for life, then to the heirs male of his body, then to his brother Francis and the heirs male of his body, in default of these to the heirs (general) of his own body, and in default of these to his own right heirs for ever. And in the same year, by his will, he devised the same to the purposes aforesaid; giving to his daughter, besides the said reversion, the sum of £15,000 for her portion. He devised also the sheriffwick to his brother, which, not being in the aforesaid entail, his brother took possession of during the widow's life. He died in 1605.

ANNE DE CLIFFORD, only daughter and heir of George Earl of Cumberland, by his wife, the Lady Margaret Russel, on her father's demise, by the advice of her mother, contested the settlement, which was however confirmed by James I. During this litigation she was married to Lord Buckhurst, afterwards earl of Dorset, by whom she had (besides three sons who died very young) two daughters, Margaret and Isabella, the latter of whom became the wife of James Compton, earl of Northampton, to whom she bore six children, who all died without issue, and most of them very young, so that after the death of Isabella, Margaret remained sole heir of the Clifford family. About six years after the death of Lord Buckhurst, the Lady Anne married a second husband, Philip Herbert, earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, and to him had two sons, who died in infancy. After the death of her second husband, Lady Anne remained a widow for twenty-seven years, during which period she resided in the north of England, and was employed in repairing her castles, which had gone to decay or been ruined in the civil wars; and in many private and public works of charity. She died on the 23rd of March, 1675, when her estates descended to her daughter Margaret, the wife of John Lord Tufton, afterwards earl of Thanet, a title which had been bestowed upon his father by Charles I. in 1628.

JOHN, second earl of Thanet, by his wife, the Lady Anne Clifford, had six sons,

- | | | |
|--------------|---------------|---------------|
| I. NICHOLAS. | II. JOHN. | III. RICHARD. |
| IV. THOMAS. | V. SACKVILLE. | VI. GEORGE. |

Of whom the first four, and a son of the fifth, became successively earls of Thanet. He had also six daughters,

- I. Anne, who died young.
- II. Margaret, married to George Lord Coventry.
- III. Frances, married to Henry Drax, Esq., of Boston, co. Lincoln.
- IV. Cecilia, married to Christopher Lord Hatton.
- V. Mary, married to William, son and heir of Sir William Walter, Bart., of Sarsden, co. Oxford.
- VI. Anne, married to Samuel Grimston, son and heir of Sir Harbottle Grimston, Bart., master of the rolls.

His lordship died in 1664, his countess surviving till 1676, in which year she devised the Clifford estates to John, her second son, in tail, with remainder to Richard, Thomas, and Sackville, her other sons. In pursuance of his mother's will,

JOHN TUFTON became possessor of the estates, and in three years after, his elder brother, Earl Nicholas, dying without issue, he succeeded to the title, becoming in this manner fourth Earl of Thanet. His lordship did not long enjoy this accession of dignity, for he died in the following year, when the title and estates devolved upon his brother,

RICHARD TUFTON, fifth earl of Thanet, who also died unmarried in 1683, and was succeeded by the fourth brother,

THOMAS TUFTON, sixth earl of Thanet, who, as heir to his grandmother, Anne Baroness of Clifford, Westmoreland, and Vesci, being entitled to the baronies, brought his claim into the House of Lords, when the barony of Clifford was adjudged to him in 1691; but on his death, in 1729, it fell into abeyance among his daughters, but was afterwards confirmed to his third daughter, Margaret, wife of Thomas Coke, earl of Leicester, and has since been enjoyed by the family of Southwell, whose heiress, Sophia, widow of Commander John Russel, R.N., is the present Baroness De Clifford. Lord Tufton married Catherine, daughter and co-heir of Henry Cavendish, duke of Newcastle, by whom he had three sons, who all died in their infancy, and five daughters,

- I. Catherine, married, in 1708, Edward Watson, viscount Sondes, son of the Earl of Rockingham, and had issue,

1. Lewis, } Earls of Rockingham.
2. Thomas, }

1. Catherine, married to Edward Southwell, Esq., and left a son and heir, EDWARD, subsequently 17th Baron Clifford.

- II. Anne, married to James Earl of Salisbury.
- III. Margaret, married to Thomas Coke, earl of Leicester.
- IV. Mary, married, 1stly, to Anthony Earl of Harbord; 2ndly, to John Earl Gower.

- V. Isabella, married to Lord Nassau Powlet, and afterwards to Sir Francis Blake Delaval.

The Earl of Thanet died in 1729, when the earldom devolved upon his nephew,

SACKVILLE TUFTON, seventh earl of Thanet, who married the Lady Mary Savile, younger daughter and co-heir of William Marquis of Halifax, and by her had issue,

- I. John, who died before his father, and unmarried.
- II. SACKVILLE, his successor.
1. Mary, married to Sir William Duncan, Bart.
- II. Charlotte.

This earl differing with his tenants in Westmoreland about their fines, after the demise of Earl Thomas, after a long contest in Chancery, the customs of the barony were decided as given above. On his demise the family honours and estates devolved upon,

SACKVILLE TUFTON, eighth earl of Thanet. This nobleman married Mary, only daughter of Lord John Sackville, and sister to John Frederick, third duke of Dorset, by whom he had issue,

- I. SACKVILLE, his heir.
- II. CHARLES, who succeeded his brother.
- III. HENRY, born January 2nd, 1775.
- IV. Edward William, born November 16th, 1777, drowned in the Thames, July 1st, 1788.
1. Elizabeth.
- II. Caroline, married July, 1782, John Foster Barbour, Esq., and had issue.

His lordship died April 10th, 1786, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

SACKVILLE TUFTON, who thus became the ninth earl of Thanet. This earl married Anne Charlotte de Bojanovitz, descended from a noble family in Hungary. He was a great patron of agriculture, and much improved his estates in Westmoreland. His lordship died in January, 1825, when the honours of the family devolved upon his next brother, CHARLES, tenth earl, born September 10th, 1777. This nobleman dying unmarried, April 20th, 1832, the honours devolved upon his only surviving brother,

HENRY TUFTON, eleventh earl of Thanet, born January 2nd, 1775. This nobleman sat in the House of Commons during one parliament, that of 1796-1803, for the city of Rochester. In 1826 he was returned for Appleby, a borough in the nomination of his family, and again in 1830 and 1831. His lordship was the last surviving male heir of his family; and, as he never married, it became extinct on his decease, June 12th, 1849, when his estates passed, by will, to

Sir RICHARD TUFTON, Bart., who thus became lord of the barony of Westmoreland. Sir Richard was created a baronet in 1851. He married, August 22nd, 1843, Adelaide Amelie Lacour, and has issue,

- I. HENRY JACQUES, born June 4th, 1843.
- II. Alfred Charles, born May 15th, 1852.
1. Therese Elizabeth.

Arms.—Sa., an eagle, displayed, erm., within a bordure, wavy, arg. Crest.—A sen lion, sejant, arg., duly differenced.

Motto.—Ales volat propriis.

East Ward.

This division of Westmoreland is bounded on the north by Cumberland, on the west by the West Ward, on the south by a part of Kendal Ward and Yorkshire, and on the east by Yorkshire and Durham. It is about twenty three miles in length from north to south, and from ten to fourteen miles in breadth. A considerable portion of this ward is mountainous, but many of the fells afford good pasture for sheep and cattle. The whole district is as remarkable for its pastoral as for its wild and picturesque scenery. It is well watered by the rivers Eden, Tees, and Lune, which, with a great many of their tributary streams, have their source within its boundaries. Lead is found at Dufton and Hilton, and there are excellent quarries of limestone and freestone. It contains the borough of Appleby, the market towns of Brough, Kirkby Stephen, and Orton, and is divided into the parishes of Appleby St. Lawrence, Appleby St. Michael, Asby, Brough, Crosby Garret, Dufton, Kirkby Stephen, Kirkbythorpe, Longmorton, Great Musgrave, Newbiggin, Ormside, Orton, Ravenstonedale, and Warcop. The present rating of this ward is £85,852.

APPLEBY ST. LAWRENCE AND APPLEBY ST. MICHAEL PARISHES.

THESE parishes, which contain the borough of Appleby, are bounded by those of Dufton, Warcop, Ormside, Crosby Ravensworth, and Morland. They lie on opposite sides of the river Eden, the former being on the west, and the latter on the east bank. St. Lawrence's parish comprises the township of Appleby St. Lawrence, Burdels, Cally, Drylock, Hoff, and Scattergate; St. Michael's, commonly called Bongate, includes the townships of Bongate and Langton, Crackenthorp, Hilton, and Murton.

THE BOROUGH OF APPLEBY.

Appleby, the county town of Westmoreland, is beautifully situated on the river Eden, in 54° 35' north latitude, 2° 28' west longitude, thirty-one miles south-east of Carlisle, 270 miles north-north-west from London by road, and 300 miles by the North-Western railway via the Trent Valley line. Its population in 1851 was 1,294. The town is situated in two parishes, St. Lawrence on the left, and St. Michael on the right side of the river, the greater part lying in the parish of St. Lawrence; St. Michael, popularly called Bongate, contains but few houses, and is principally an agricultural parish. The two parishes are separate vicarages and will be found fully noticed at a subsequent page. The high road from London to Carlisle by Brough and Penrith passes through Bongate. An ancient stone bridge of two arches crosses the Eden and connects the two parishes of Appleby with each other. The main street, which is irregularly built on the slope of a hill, is of considerable width, having the castle at its upper and the parish church of St. Lawrence at its lower extremity. The town contains some well-built houses and has a neat appearance. It is lighted with gas. The weaving of linen and checks is carried on to some extent in Appleby; also brewing and malting. There is a good retail trade. A woollen manufactory is situated at Coupland Beck. The Eden Valley railway passes on the north side of the town, where there is to be a station for the convenience of the inhabitants of Appleby. The town is principally comprised in the township of Appleby, the area of which is forty-eight acres, and the rateable value £1,633 6s. The population of the township does not appear to have been separately returned till 1821, in which year it was 824; in 1831, 851; in 1841, 751; and in 1851, 883. The remaining portion of the borough of Appleby is in the township of Scattergate.

Of Appleby in early times, history is entirely silent.

It has been supposed that it was a Roman station, but there is no satisfactory evidence of this. It was, however, a place of some importance before the Norman Conquest, as it gave name to one of the shires, Applebyshire, into which the county was divided. It continued to maintain its dignity until the time of Henry II., in the 22nd year of whose reign, (1175-6) it was surprised and destroyed by William of Scotland. Jordan Fantosme says, "the king very soon had the castle of Appleby; there were no people in it, it was quite unguarded. Gospatric, son of Orme, an old grey-headed Englishman, was the constable; he soon cried mercy." The Scottish king left a garrison here under three constables, and proceeded to attack Brough.¹ For his conduct on this occasion Gospatric was fined 500 marks by King Henry, and the subordinate officers in sums varying according to their ranks. In the time of Edward II. Appleby paid a fee farm rent of twenty marks a year, equal to 2,200 burgages, from which the population at that time may be estimated at upwards of 11,000. King John was at Appleby on June 17th and 18th, 1212. In the 12th Richard II. (1388-9) Appleby was again laid waste by the Scots, and, in consequence, was unable to pay the fee farm rent due to the crown. From this time the town never recovered its pristine splendour and importance. The greatest part still lay in ruins in the time of William and Mary, and on this account the rent due to the crown was reduced from twenty marks annually to two marks, or £16 6s. 8d. The foundations of buildings brought to light by the plough, for two or three miles round the town, evince its former greatness, and the Borough Walls (Burrells) are now distant a mile from the present town. In 1598 the plague raged here with such severity that the market was removed to Gilshaughlin, near Cliburn. From this period we hear no more of Appleby till the time of the Commonwealth, when, in consequence of the adherence of the town to the royal cause, Cromwell imposed upon it a "Charter of Restrictions," which for a time was enforced by a garrison stationed here for the purpose. In July, 1648, a conflict took place near Appleby between the Scottish army, under the Duke of Hamilton, and the Parliamentarians, under General Lambert, in which the latter was victorious. In October of the same year, when Colonel Ashton had relieved Cocker mouth Castle with the Lancashire forces, he advanced against Sir Philip Musgrave and the Royalists under his command, whom he pursued to Appleby, and compelled to surrender at discretion, with their "ordnance, arms, ammunition, and horses."¹ The restrictive charter just mentioned was annulled on the restoration of Charles II., which event was celebrated in the town with great pomp and festivity under the auspices of the celebrated Anne Clifford, countess of Pembroke and Montgomery, who at that time occupied the castle of Appleby, which she had fortified for Charles I., and who now, aged as she was, "thought not her gates too wide to receive her guests."

The castle of Appleby is finely situated upon a lofty and well-wooded eminence, and commands from the summit of its ancient keep a noble view of the surrounding country. The keep is still surrounded by a moat, but the drawbridge has been removed. This fine keep, called Cæsar's Tower, though not of Roman date is of great antiquity, as is also a portion of the castle; but the larger part of it was rebuilt in 1686, by the then Earl of Thanet, who inherited it from the Clifford family, and in the possession of whose descendants it still remains. The gardens belonging to the castle are of considerable extent, and from their elevated position command a rich and varied prospect. A suit of steel and gold armour, said to have been worn by George Clifford in his capacity of champion to Queen Elizabeth, is preserved in the castle. At the upper end of the principal hall are several full length portraits of members of the Clifford and Tufton families. This ancient structure is the baronial castle of the barony of Westmoreland, and has been so since its erection. Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., occasionally resides here, and Rear-admiral R. Elliot, the steward of Appleby Castle, has his residence in Cæsar's Tower.

CHURCHES, CHAPELS, &c.

The parish church of St. Lawrence was partly rebuilt in 1665, by the Countess of Pembroke, who also left a fund for keeping it in repair. The church is large and handsome, consisting of nave, chancel, aisles, and square tower, in which are six excellent bells, with a clock and chimes presented by the mayor and corporation. In the chancel is a beautiful marble effigy of Margaret Countess of Cumberland, who died in 1616; and on the opposite side is an elegant altar-tomb, in memory of her daughter, the Countess of Pembroke, who, in 1656, conveyed an estate at Temple Sowerby, now worth about £70 a year, to trustees, for the reparation of this church,

¹ Quant il ot Applebi, le chastel e la tur;

* * * *

E mettent là dedenz lur serjanz marchis,
E treis cunestables el chastel unt asis.

Jordan Fantosme, p. 66.

When he had Appleby the castle and the tower;

* * * *

And they placed within it their border officers,
And they have appointed three constables in the castle.

¹ See also page 20.

the bridge, the crosses, the moot-hall, her own monument, and that of her mother. The church of St. Lawrence was given by Ranulph de Meschines, together with the church of St. Michael, to the abbey of St. Mary, at York, with two parts of the tithes of all his demesne lands on both sides of the river Eden, which grant was confirmed by Henry I., and subsequently by the Bishop of Carlisle, under the following limitations: "That the house of Wetheral, in the name of the said abbey, possess the same to their own use, but having, nevertheless, the pension usually paid thereout to the abbey; and that the said abbey do present fit persons to be vicars thereof, to be sustained out of the revenues of the said church, so that such vicar receive thereout six marks yearly, he paying all episcopal and archidiaconal charges." In 1251, the then bishop of Carlisle, Silvester, judging the six marks just named insufficient, increased the taxation of the vicarage, and exempted the vicars of St. Lawrence from the payment of the twenty shillings pension which they had previously paid to the vicar of St. Michael's. This church formerly possessed two charities, dedicated respectively to the Blessed Virgin and St. Nicholas. The chantry of the Blessed Virgin was founded by the family of Goldington, and endowed by them with revenues in the town and elsewhere, "for celebrating mass at the altar of St. Mary for the mayor, bailiffs, and commonalty, and for the souls of the founders and their ancestors, and all faithful people, and especially of those who should be benefactors to the said chantry." The chantry of St. Nicholas was founded by Robert Threlkeld, and was endowed with several burghage houses in Appleby. Both these chantries were dissolved by Edward VI., who granted their revenues, amounting at that time to £5 11s. 8d. per annum, to William Ward and Richard Venables, to hold in free socage. In the Valor of Pope Nicholas the rectory of St. Lawrence is valued at £15, and the vicarage at £10. In the King's Book the vicarage is returned as worth £9 5s. 2½d. In 1823 it was endowed (in addition to fifty acres of ancient glebe) with about 236 acres of land as a commutation for the tithes of Hoff township. The tithes of the other townships have since been commuted for a rent charge; so that the living is now worth £300 a year. The patronage is vested in the dean and chapter of Carlisle. The parish registers commence in 1654.

RECTORS.—Radulphus, 1070; Roger Dean, 1210; William.

VICARS.—Jurdan, 1230; William de Kirketun, —; Walter de Doncastre, 1303; Stephen de Popilton, 1307; John de Carleton, 1332; William Colyn, 1359; Robert Baynes, 1379; Thomas de Brunby, 1399; Richard Appleby, 1406; Richard Garnett, 1518; Henry Hartley, 1520; Hugh Sewell, 1541;

Lancelot Manfield, 1573; Christopher Walker, 1582; William Crackanthorp, 1624; John Scott, 1628; Edward Guy, 1630; Anthony Shaw, 1653; Ambrose Rowland, 1656; James Buchanan, 1661; Michael Hodgson, died 1681; Gabriel Smalwood, 1681; James Lamb, 1698; John Christopherson, 1720; Sandford Latham, 1758; William Paley, 1777; John Rowland Sprole, 1789; William Phillips, 1797; Joseph Milner, 1820.

The vicarage, a plain commodious house, is situated on the west side of the church.

St. Michael's parish church is in Bongate, on the east side of the Eden, a short distance south-east of Appleby. The Countess of Pembroke raised this church "out of its ruins" in 1658, but not it appears on the site of the previous church of St. Michael, which is said to have stood at the Holme. It comprises nave, chancel, transept, and small tower with two bells. There are mural monuments to the memory of members of the Crackanthorpe, Hall, Hutchinson, Cock, and Sawtree families. On the north side is a large vault, the ancient burial place of the Hiltons of Hilton, in this parish. As seen above, this church was appropriated to the abbey of St. Mary at York, but the patronage of the vicarage was afterwards vested in the bishops of Carlisle. There was formerly a chantry in this church, founded by Sir William English. The living, valued in the King's Book at £20. 13s. 9d., is now worth about £140. At the enclosure of Bongate common, ninety-two acres were given to the dean and chapter of Carlisle, in lieu of the great tithes, and fifteen acres to the vicar, as the release from the small tithes, besides five acres allotted to the ancient glebe.

VICARS.—Walter Fealdwell, 1256; Richard de Bradewood, 1302; Henry de Appleby, 1339; Richard de Aslackby, 1362; John de Merton, 1369; John Raynald, 1369; John Marshall, 1452; George Lancaster, —; John Smith, 1561; Gregory Scot, 1569; Thomas Burton, 1576; Thomas Fairfax, 1579; William Porter, 1582; John Teasdale, 1611; John Spencer, —; Robert Symson, 1661; Barnaby Symson, 1661; James Cock, 1712; John Hill, 1738; Harrison Shaw, 1789; Thomas Bellas, 1823.

The vicarage is a neat house, a short distance south of the church.

At the north end of Bongate, about half a mile from St. Michael's Church, is Battleburgh, called in the Latin records "Vicus le Fyte," and in common language Battlebarrow; but why or wherefore neither history nor tradition informs us. Here the Lords Clifford, Percy, and Vesci founded a convent of Carmelite friars, in 1281, which existed until the year 1543, when it shared the fate of the other religious houses of England. Henry VIII. granted it, with Hale Grange, and the manor of Hardendale and Wastdale, to C. Crackenthorp, Esq., of Newbiggin, for the sum of £255. 3s. A little further north, about a mile from Appleby, there formerly stood the hospital of St. Leonard, for the reception of lepers. The date of its foundation is not known, but it was given to the abbey of Shap by John de Veteripont, the Bishop of Carlisle confirming the grant, with a stipulation that the abbey should maintain three lepers here for ever. In 1544 its possessions were granted to Thomas Lord Wharton, whose successor, Philip, sold them in 1613 for £700, to J. Fielding, Esq., of Starforth, in Yorkshire, from whose descendant they were purchased in 1632 by the Countess of Pembroke, who settled them upon her hospital at Appleby. At the west end of the bridge of St. Lawrence there was anciently a chapel, but it is described as ruinous as early as the year 1445. It occupied the site of the old prison, or probably was the same building, and had a chamber or oratory over it.

In the town are two chapels, one belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists, and the other to the United Free Church; the former was erected in 1833, and the latter in 1847.

SCHOOLS.

That there was a school in Appleby as early as the year 1453, is manifest from the name of a lane which was at the end of Kirkgate, called "School House Lane," and which is mentioned in old records. The chantry priest of Appleby, like those of Penrith, in Cumberland, and other places, appears to have been enjoined to teach a free grammar school in the borough as part of his duty, and this state of things continued till the period of the suppression of the monastic establishments. In consideration of the loss sustained by the dissolution of the chantries, in the time of Edward VI., Queen Mary granted to the school at Appleby a rent charge of £5 10s. 8d. per annum, to be paid out of the rectory of Crosby Ravensworth. The school was refounded by Queen Elizabeth, "with ten governors, who are to appoint successors, nominate the master and usher, make statutes for the regulation of the school, and receive lauds and possessions, so as they exceed not the clear yearly value of £40." But this limitation has been greatly exceeded, for the school at present has a yearly revenue of upwards of £200, though it only receives six free scholars, all the others having to pay a small quarterage, even for the classics, and additional charges for writing and arithmetic. Since the foundation by Elizabeth, the school has received the following benefactions, viz., £300 (of which £240 was given by Dr. Miles Spencer) and a rent charge of £20 a year purchased in 1579, to be paid out of Newton Garthe's estate in the county of Durham. In 1589 the governors received £40 by bequest of Rainold

Hartley, with which they purchased the field adjoining the school, called Pear Tree Garth. In 1661 Dr. Smith, afterwards bishop of Carlisle, procured a lease of the corn tithes of Drybeck, to be granted by the dean and chapter to the schoolmaster, who pays for them a yearly rent of £3 3s. 4d. The demesne lands of New Hall, in the manor of Sandford, now let for £130 per annum, were purchased in 1685 by the governors with £500 out of the £700 given in 1671 by Bishops Barlow and Smith, the Rev. Randal Sanderson, and Sir John Lowther, Bart., all of whom had been scholars here, and gave their several donations to the school in consideration of the governors having ceded for ever the right of nominating the master to the provost and scholars of Queen's College, Oxford, where the Appleby scholars, natives of Westmoreland, have five exhibitions, endowed with £40 per annum by the Earl of Thanet in 1720, besides the privilege of becoming candidates for one of the five exhibitions, founded in the same college by Lady Hastings, and those established by its founder, Robert Eaglesfield, for the education of scholars from Westmoreland and Cumberland. The school is open to all the boys of the parish of St. Lawrence and the township of Bongate. The school-house is a neat edifice, in the Low Weind, and was rebuilt in 1826, at the cost of the Temple Sowerby trust. There was formerly a curious collection of inscriptions in stone near to this school, said to have been for the most part copied from others, and placed there by Reginald Bainbridge, who was master of the school in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. A number of eminent men have been educated at Appleby School, among them we may mention William Bell, bishop of Kilmore and Ardagh; Thomas Barlow, bishop of Lincoln; Thomas Smith and John Waugh, bishops of Carlisle; Dr. John Langhorne and his brother William, joint translators of "Plutarch"; Rev. William Thompson, M.A., rector of South Weston, Oxfordshire, and author of a volume of poems, printed in 1750; Dr. Richard Monkhouse, vicar of Wakefield, and author of three volumes of sermons, in 1805; William Pattinson, of Sidney College, Cambridge, author of two volumes of poems, published after his death, in 1728; John Robinson, Esq., under secretary during Lord North's administration; Rev. Richard Yates, M.A., fifty-eight years master of this school; and Sir Joseph Relph, author of a volume of pastoral poems, published after his death, in 1746. The school is at present attended by forty pupils, fourteen of whom are boarders, and twenty-six day scholars. From the year 1860 to the year 1863 there will be one, and afterwards two exhibitions, of the value of £75, and tenable for five years, annually open to all pupils educated at this school, without regard to place of birth. Four Eaglesfield scholarships of the same value are still reserved at Queen's College, Oxford, for natives of Cumberland and Westmoreland; and an exhibition of £40 per annum has been attached to this school. The Rev. John Richardson, M.A., is head master; and the Rev. Henry Fell, second master.

Bongate National School is a neat building, in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1844, by subscription, a grant of £60 from the Committee of Council on Education, and £20 from the National Society. The site was given by the Earl of Lonsdale. The school is supported by the interest of £320, of which £200 was given by Robert Wilkinson, Esq., £100 by Thomas Dent, Esq., £20 by the late Mr. T. Robinson of Leeds, but formerly of Bongate, and by voluntary subscriptions.

The British School is a neat building, erected in 1849 by subscription, and a grant of £125 from the Committee of Council. It is under inspection, has two pupil teachers, and has an average attendance of eighty-eight children. It is supported by voluntary contributions.

The Mechanics' Institution, established in 1848, occupies a large room in Boroughgate. It is well supported by the gentry of the town and neighbourhood, and possesses a good library and reading-room.

There is also a news-room at the King's Head Inn, and a book club called the Appleby Book Club.

GOVERNMENT, &c.

Appleby received a charter of incorporation at a very early period, but it has long been lost or destroyed, though the corporation still exists by prescription, and possesses many charters and confirmations of privileges and immunities. Henry II. granted to the burgesses freedom from toll, stallage, pontage, and lastage, throughout England, except in the city of London, for which privileges they paid forty marks. This grant was confirmed by charters granted by King John, Henry III., Edward I., II., III., Henry VIII., Elizabeth, James I., Charles I., and James II. King John also granted to the burgesses "the borough or town of Appleby, rendering to the sheriff the rent due for the same, one moiety at the feast of St. Michael and the other at Easter." As far back as the reign of Henry III. mention is made of the "burghmote" and the "common seal" of the burgesses of Appleby; and in the reign of this monarch there was an exchequer here, called the "Saccarium de Appleby." As seen above, Cromwell imposed upon the town a charter of restrictions, but this was annulled at the Restoration. All the charters of Appleby were surrendered to James II., who, in the first year of his reign, incorporated the burgesses anew by the name of mayor, twelve aldermen, and sixteen capital burgesses, with a coroner, sword bearer, serjeant-at-mace, two chamberlains, and two bailiffs, and the following privileges, viz.:—"A fair on the second Thursday and Friday in April, and courts leet, view of frankpledge, fairs, markets, waifs estrays, deadlands, goods of felons and fugitives, felo-de-se, of persons put in exigent and outlawed, and all other things as they had formerly enjoyed, paying the farm to the king as heretofore." The mayor is chosen by the capital burgesses or common councilmen, and he appoints all his officers. The common seal has on one side the arms of the town, and on the reverse St. Lawrence laid at length, naked, with his hands across, on a gridiron, beneath which is a representation of burning coals. The seal is inscribed "Sigillum communitalis burgi de Appleby." All the waste lands within the liberty of the borough belong to the corporation, who apply their revenue to the repairs of the streets and local improvements. Several distinguished men have been invested with the freedom of this ancient borough. Though the mayor and corporation still exist scarcely any functions are exercised. By immemorial custom, the mayor takes place of the judges of assize.

Appleby was one of the twenty principal towns called upon in 26th Edward I. to return members to parliament, and it returned two burgesses from that period (1298) until the passing of the Reform Bill, in 1832, by the provisions of which Appleby was placed in schedule A, and disfranchised accordingly. Its first two members, elected 26th Edward I., were Hugh de Graunger and John de Karl, and its last two were the Right Hon. Viscount Maitland, elected on the 3rd of May, 1831, and Charles Henry Barham, Esq., elected on the 24th of May, 1832. Appleby was the borough for which the Right Hon. William Pitt was first returned, and a short time previous to its disfranchisement it was represented by three different prime ministers. It is still the place from which the return is made of members elected to serve for the county.

The Town Hall is an ancient and inconvenient structure, occupying the centre of the main street.

The County Gaol and Court House were erected in 1771, at the expense of the county, except £357 15s., raised by voluntary subscription. They stand on the east side of the Eden, and are commodious buildings, encompassed by a strong wall. The Crown and Nisi Prius courts adjoin the gaol, as does also the House of Correction.

Previous to the year 1818 the assizes were only held here once a year, except in case of a special commission.

They are now held in March and August. The judges for many centuries have been entertained at the castle. The office of governor of the gaol is at present held by Mr. Jonathan Ridge, whose salary is £100 per annum; Mrs. Ridge is matron, with a salary of £20 a year. The Rev. John Richardson, the chaplain, receives £52. 10s.; Mr. F. Armstrong, surgeon, £20. We subjoin the following summary of offences and number of commitments to the gaol and house of correction at Appleby, from January 1st, 1858, to January 1st, 1859:—

OFFENCES.	Males.	Females.	TOTAL.
B felony	2	2	4
Criminal Justice Act	1	1	2
Juvenile Offenders Act	4	4	8
Vagrancy	10	10	20
Bribery	2	2	4
Game laws	1	1	2
Assault	1	1	2
Societal of family	1	1	2
Attempt to pick pockets	1	1	2
Wild game	1	1	2
Drunk and disorderly	1	1	2
Breach of contract	1	1	2
Breach of the peace	1	1	2
Breach of the articles of war	1	1	2
Deserters	1	1	2
Remanded and discharged	1	1	2
Contempt of court	1	1	2
Debtors	1	1	2
TOTAL	61	9	70

Average number of prisoners, daily, for the last year, nine; the greatest number at any time, eighteen; the least number at any time, two. Cost of diet per head, per week, including fuel and light, 4s. 10d. Cost of clothing and bedding per head, per week, 9½d. Amount of earnings of the prisoners at Appleby, for the year 1858, paid the county treasurer, £20 19s. 8d.

The quarter sessions for the East and West wards are held in the Shire Hall on the Monday after the first whole week in Epiphany, on the Mondays in the first whole week after Easter and St. Thomas à Becket, and on the Monday after the 11th of October; they are held by adjournment at Kendal on the Fridays following these days, for the other two wards of the county. This arrangement was made in 1676.

The county court for the recovery of debts under £50 is held here monthly, and the magistrates of the town and neighbourhood sit at the Shire Hall every alternate Saturday.

MARKETS, FAIRS, &c.

The Market House, or Cloister, is a convenient building, at the bottom of Boroughgate, where it was rebuilt by the corporation in 1811, after a design by Mr. Smirke, at a cost of £1,000. On the front of it is a stone obelisk, called the "Low Cross," and at the other end of the town is the "High Cross," both of which were rebuilt in 1817 and 1818. On the latter, is this inscription,— "Retain your loyalty, Preserve your rights."

The market is held on Saturday, and is well supplied with corn, provisions, &c. In 1598 Appleby market was removed to Gilsaughlin, near Ciliurn, in consequence of the plague, which was then prevalent in the town and neighbourhood. A cattle market is held at the High Cross every alternate Saturday; the fairs are held on the feast of St. Lawrence (August 21st.), Whitsun-eve, and Whit-Monday; King James' fair, is held on the second Wednesday in June, on Gallow Hill, an extensive pasture in Bongate, one mile from Appleby. This fair is free from the tolls imposed upon the fairs and markets in the borough. Fairs for fat cattle are held here every alternate Thursday during winter, and monthly during summer. Hirings for servants are held at the High Cross on Whit-Monday, and at the Low Cross on the nearest Saturday to Martinmas.

The Gas Works were erected in 1837, at a cost of £1,500, raised in shares of £5 each.

CHARITIES.

St. Anne's Hospital.—This excellent charity was founded in 1653 by Anne Countess of Pembroke, who endowed it with an estate at Brougham, and the lands in Bongate, formerly belonging to the hospital of St. Nicholas, which now yield about £500 a year, of which £4 belong to the poor of Brougham, pursuant to the bequest of the founder. When this institution was first established its annual revenue was only £100, but, from the increased value of the land it is now worth the amount stated above. The hospital is a neat building, occupying a pleasant situation near the head of Boroughgate, and possesses apartments and gardens for thirteen poor widows, besides a small chapel, in which prayers are read every morning, a payment of £32 10s. a year being made for the performance of that duty. Twelve of the inmates receive a stipend of £6 17s. 6d., and the eldest, who is styled the mother, receives £8 2s. 6d. a quarter, besides which a cart-load of coal is given to each yearly. The affairs of the charity are managed by ten trustees, one of whom is the mayor of Appleby for the time being. Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., is visitor.

The following charities belong to the parish of St. Lawrence:—

Temple Sowerby Trust.—By indenture, dated the 2nd February, 1656, Anne Countess of Pembroke, left to trustees a house, barn, buildings, and garden, and rather more than eighteen acres of land, at Temple Sowerby, upon trust that they should out of the rents of the same "repair and keep decent the parish church of Appleby," and likewise "repair and keep decent" her tomb in the said parish church, as also the tomb of her mother, the Countess Dowager of Cumberland; and also repair the grammar school house and the moot hall or court house of Appleby; and likewise repair Appleby Bridge. There is also about fourteen acres of allotment upon Down Moor, near Temple Sowerby, belonging to this charity. The rents are received annually by the mayor of Appleby for the time being, and by him applied in the execution of such trusts as are required in the course of the year.

Rudd's Charity.—Christopher Rudd, by will, dated 2nd February, 1596, gave 8s. a year to the poor of Warcop parish, to be divided by the churchwardens. The next year he gave the said 8s. to the poor of Ormside parish; the third year to the poor of Appleby parish; and the fourth year to the poor of Bongate. This charity is received every fourth year by the parish of St. Lawrence, and the money is distributed amongst the poor of the parish.

Bird's and Robinson's Charity.—By deed, under the corporation seal, dated 18th April, 1733, the mayor, burgesses, and commonalty of the borough of Appleby, in consideration of £60 to them paid by the Rev. William Bird of Crosby Garrett, and Charles Robinson of Appleby, did promise and agree that they would, yearly, on the 15th April, dispose of £3 in putting out poor boys, the sons of decayed burgesses or freemen of the said borough, or others residing within the limits of the said borough, or within the limits of the corporation, or of the parish of St. Lawrence in Appleby, apprentices to such trades as the mayor and the vicar of the said parish should think proper.

Coulston's Charity.—Jane Coulston, by will, gave £34, the interest to be laid out in bread and distributed by the minister, churchwardens, and overseers, to the poor of St. Lawrence, Appleby. This sum of £34 is lent on security of the tolls of the turnpike road from Brough to Eamont Bridge, and the interest is distributed as directed.

Orton's Charity.—Mrs. Orton, who died about 1812, left £21, the interest to be disposed of in bread to the poor of Appleby, in the church, every Sunday.

Poor Stock.—There is a sum of £110 belonging to the poor of the parish of Appleby, the origin of which is not known. This money is secured on mortgage of the tolls of the turnpike road from Appleby to Kendal, and the interest forms part of the distribution to the poor on St. Thomas' Day. The practice is to distribute about £25, arising from different charities, on St. Thomas' Day, to the poor of the parish, in sums of from 2s. to 5s., and the remainder is reserved for distribution on the Wednesday in Easter week.

Thomas Carleton's, William Carleton's, and Humphrey Carleton's Charities.—Thomas Carleton, senior, of Appleby, by will, dated 14th November, 1728, gave to his eldest son, Thomas Carleton, and his heirs, £100, to be laid out in land or by way of rent-charge, and the increase yearly to be by him and his heirs distributed on St. Thomas' Day, by the advice of the vicar of Appleby, amongst the poor housekeepers within the borough. William Carleton, of Appleby, by will, dated 17th August, 1733, gave to the vicar of St. Lawrence and his successors the legal interest of £100, which he thereby ordered his executors to pay to him and his successors every St. Thomas' Day, to be distributed among the poor of the said parish. Humphrey Carleton, who died in 1805, added £34 to the sums just mentioned as belonging to this charity, and purchased £400 stock in the Old South Sea Annuities, and by his will directed that the dividends should be applied to the relief of the poor of the borough of Appleby on St. Thomas' Day in every year, for ever, as directed by the wills of the said Thomas Carleton, senior, and William Carleton, above-mentioned.

John Robinson's Charity.—John Robinson, by will, dated 13th March, 1743-4, left £150 to be placed out at interest, and the proceeds distributed every Good Friday, to the poor of the borough of Appleby, and parish of St. Lawrence. The interest of this sum, being £7 10s., is regularly received and given away on St. Thomas' Day and at Easter, as before-mentioned.

John Robinson's Charity for Books.—John Robinson, of Wyke House, in the parish of Isleworth, Middlesex, bequeathed £177, directing the interest to be applied in providing the poor children of the grammar school, and the children within the parish of St. Lawrence and St. Michael, with the several books thereafter mentioned, for the purpose of promoting Christian knowledge and virtue. It is understood that the mayor of Appleby, the two vicars of St. Lawrence and Bongate, and the schoolmaster, should always be official trustees. The books directed are, "Glass's Lectures," "Crossman's Introduction," "Glass's Exposition of the Commandments," "Lewis's Catechism," "Waldo on the Sacrament," and "The Whole Duty of Man." Some little variation has been made in the books.

John Robinson's Charity for Organist.—There is also £5 annually paid to the organist, arising from the donation of £100 from the same John Robinson.

Donowell's Charity.—John Donowell, by will, dated 7th May, 1793, gave £200, Three-per-cent. Consols, to trustees, directing them to divide the interest among the poor inhabitants of the parish of Appleby. This forms part of the St. Thomas' and Easter distributions before-mentioned.

The following charities belong to St. Michael's parish:
Poor Stock—Addison's Gift.—There is the sum of £30 belonging to the poor of this parish, but it is not known when or by whom it was left or given. There is also the sum of £20, given by Ann, otherwise Agnes Addison, of King's Meaburn, in her lifetime, November 21st, 1765, to the minister and churchwardens, for the benefit of the poor of the parish; the interest to be distributed on St. Thomas' Day yearly.

Rudd's Charity.—Every fourth year this parish is entitled to 8s., the gift of Christopher Rudd, as seen at page 719.

Township of Murton.—Thwaites School.—There is a township school-house, situate at Thwaites, which is between Hilton and Murton. The earliest endowment arises from £20, given by the Rev. James Cock, vicar of Bongate, who died in 1738. Joseph Idle, by will, left £12 to trustees, the interest to be expended in paying for the schooling of two poor children within the township of Murton. Robert Hodgson left a close, called Moorend, consisting of about six acres and a half, and a cattlegate in a common pasture, called Thwaite, in the township of Murton, for the benefit of the schoolmaster. For further particulars see Thwaites School.

We may here mention a few of the more eminent men, born in Appleby or its immediate neighbourhood. Thomas de Appleby, who was bishop of Carlisle from 1363 till his decease in 1395. Roger de Appleby, bishop of Ossory, in Ireland, in 1404. Thomas Veteripont, or Vipont, of the illustrious family of the then lords of Westmoreland, bishop of Carlisle, in 1255. Dr. Potter, vice-chancellor of Oxford, who died in 1615.

Out-townships and villages of the parish of St. Lawrence.

BURRELLS.

The area of this township is 689 acres, and its rateable value £502 1s. 6d. The population in 1801 and 1811 was returned with the parish; in 1821 it was 75; in 1831, 90; in 1841, 97; and in 1851, 90. The manorial rights are vested in Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., besides whom Jonathan Hous, Mrs. Twaites, and Sarah Waistell, are the landowners.

The village of Burrells is a mile and a half south of Appleby, on the Orton road. See the account of Appleby, page 714.

COLBY.

Colby township comprises 919 acres. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 141; in 1831, 148; in 1841, 156; and in 1851, 147.

The manor of Colby was held by a family bearing the local name from the reign of Henry II. to that of Richard II., when it passed by an heiress to the Warcopcs. This latter family held it from 1402 till the Restoration, when most of the tenements were "sold to freehold;" the remainder have been since enfranchised. The priory of Wetherall and the abbey of St. Mary, at York, had each a carucate of land here, that belonging to the first-named community having been granted in 1086 by Ranulph de Meschines, and the latter in the reign of Henry II. by Esmand, son of Walter. The Bishop of Carlisle has a few tenants here who pay an annual rent of £3 6s. 8d. The landowners are Robert Addison, Esq.; Ralph Bird, Esq.; John Earl, Esq.; Thomas Kirsey, Esq.; and Mrs. Pattinson. Colby Hall is now a farm-house.

The village of Colby stands on an eminence, about a mile and a quarter west-by-north of Appleby. There is a corn-mill in this township.

DRYBECK.

The population of Drybeck in 1821 was 100; in 1831, 92; in 1841, 86; and in 1851, 81. The township comprises an area of 1,351 acres, and its rateable value is £701. Drybeck forms a joint manor with Hoff, of which Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., is lord. The landowners are Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.; Rev. J. H. Milner, William Leadley, and Matthew Steadman. There is a corn-mill in the township.

The village of Drybeck is three and a half miles south-south-west of Appleby.

HOFF.

The area of this township is 1,383 acres, and its rateable value £850 12s. 6d. In 1821 it contained 93 inhabitants; in 1831, 99; in 1841, 108; and in 1851, 93.

The manor of Hoff, which includes Drybeck, is supposed to derive its designation from the Anglo-Saxon proper name Offa. Mr. Ferguson, in his "Northmen in Cumberland and Westmorland," derives the name from the old Norse hof, a temple, of which, according to him it has originally been the site; "and," he adds, "an extensive wood, in which is situated the residence of the proprietor, is still called Hoff Lund," the temple grove, "from old Norse lundr, a grove." A William de Olla occurs as witness to a deed in the reign of Henry III.; but before this time, in the reign of Henry II., Hoff appears to have been possessed by Sir Hugh de Morville, from whom it came to his two daughters, co-heirs, Ada and Joan, and was by them held in moieties. By failure of issue in the younger branch, Hoff subsequently came to the Multons, who derived from the elder daughter, Ada. In the 20th Edward I. (1291-2) we find Sir Hugh de Multon of Hoff acting as a juror at Appleby. From the Multons Hoff came to the Dacres of Gilsland, from whom it passed to the Howards, who continued its possessors till the reign of Elizabeth, when, in consequence of the part taken by them in favour of Mary Queen of Scots, their estates were forfeited to the crown, and so continued till the tenth year of Charles I. While these estates were held by the crown, Queen Elizabeth demised to Richard Southwaite the woods, underwoods, and trees growing in Hoff Lund Wood, in the manor of Hoff and Drybeck; and in the 35th year of his reign the same queen granted the herbage and hay ground of Hoff Lund Wood to Thomas Yaire, Miles Yaire, and Anne Yaire. In the 44th the said queen granted (amongst other particulars) the manor of Hoff and Drybeck, to Edward Carill, John Holland, John Cornwallis, and Robert Cancefield; but at length William Williams, who had been steward at Greystoke Castle, purchased this manor, and died leaving four daughters co-heirs; the eldest of whom became the wife of Sir Edward Hassel, Knt.; the second of John Winder, Esq.; the third of Mr. Relph, of Cockermonth; and the fourth of Dr. Gibbon, dean of Carlisle. Hoff came to the second daughter, whose son, William Winder, Esq., devised it to his kinsman, Edward Milward, Esq., grandson by the mother's side to the said Dr. Gibbon, and son of the Rev. Thomas Milward, rector of Murton and Kirkby Thure. The manor is now held by Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., besides whom Robert Addison, John Sedgwick, John Thwaites, and Mrs. Jackson, are the principal landowners.

This township includes the hall and demesne of Barwise, which, in the reign of Henry III., was possessed by Alan de Barwise, a "man of considerable note." In 1255-6 this Alan was empowered by Thomas Veteripont, bishop of Carlisle, to erect a chapel on his own ground at Barwise, and to endow the same, in consequence of the distance of the place from the parish church; the chaplain was, however, obliged to take a vow of obedience to the vicar of the mother church. The Barwise family continued to hold this estate till the 34th Edward III. (1350-1), in which year Thomas de Barwise represented the county of Westmoreland in Parliament. This is the last of the name that occurs in connection with Barwise. The estate subsequently came to the Roos family, but whether by marriage, or otherwise, we are not informed. In the 12th Henry VII. we find Thomas de Roos at Barwise. Machel tells us that the Roos family forfeited the estate in consequence of having committed sacrilege, by stealing a chalice out of the church. Barwise subsequently came into the possession of Sir John Sudwick, by whom it was sold to Sir John Boyer. Lady Boyer sold the same to Reginald Dobson, of Dufton; and it was afterwards bought by John Stephenson, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, from whom it was purchased, in 1748, by Thomas Carleton, Esq., of Appleby. It is now the property of Robert Addison, Esq., and Barwise Hall is used as a farm-house.

At a place called Douglass-Ing, near Hoff Bridge, tradition tells us that a great battle was fought between the English and the Scots in the reign of Richard II. Considerable quantities of human bones have been dug up in the vicinity.

The village of Hoff is two and a half miles south-west of Appleby. There was anciently a chapel at Hoff, wherein a chaplain was to officiate three days in every week. It appears to have been endowed with thirty-seven acres of land in the field of Hoff. The sum of 18s. a year was paid out of Hoff to Shap Abbey, for and in the name of alms corn. Hoff Nether is a large farm one mile and a half west-by-north of Appleby. Hoff Row is a hamlet half a mile west-by-south of Hoff. A family named Hall, who have resided here for the last four centuries, is remarkable for its longevity.

SCATTERGATE.

The township of Scattergate comprises an area of 960 acres, and its rateable value is £1,241 4s. 10d. The population in 1821 was 108; in 1831, 179; in 1841, 156; and in 1851, 159. This township forms part of the borough, and extends to Barrels. Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., is lord of the manor, besides whom, John Hill and Robert Addison, Esq., are the principal landowners. Castle Bank, the residence of John Hill, Esq., and Bank Villa, are in this township.

OUT-TOWNSHIPS AND VILLAGES OF THE PARISH OF ST. MICHAEL.

BONGATE.

The area of Bongate township is 3,201 acres, and its rateable value £3,223 16s. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 637; in 1831, 645; in 1841, 618; and in 1851, 646. Bongate, as before stated, is situated on the east side of the Eden, and is said to derive its name from its being inhabited by the "bondmen" of the manor of Appleby. It is also called in the ancient records "Old Appleby." Battlebarrow, in this township is within the limits of the borough of Appleby. It has been already noticed. The church, and other public buildings, have been already described. The principal landowners are Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.; John Hill, Esq.; the heirs of Major Hartley; Mrs. Hall; Messrs. John Heelis and Thompson, with many other small proprietors.

The village of Bongate is about three quarters of a mile south-east of Appleby, and half a mile north of St. Michael's Church.

The Friary, the residence of Robert Addison, Esq., stands on an eminence on the north-west of the town of Appleby, a little north of the site of the old Friary. On the north side of the house is an ancient well, known as Lady's Well.

Langton is a village and joint township with Bongate, one mile and a half east of Appleby. Ada, daughter of John Tailbois, sold it to Robert Veteripont. It seems to have been very populous at one period, and a church or chapel is said to have stood at Kirkbergh, which has always been held free and independent of the manor, with the exception of the payment of 2s. cornage. From an inquisition taken after the decease of Roger Lord Clifford in 1327-8, we learn that "at Langton, the site of a certain manor burned by the Scots, was worth nothing yearly for want of tenants," there being only four cottages and a water-mill in the whole manor.

CRACKENTHORP.

The area of this township is 1,341 acres; the population in 1821 was 134; in 1831, 115; in 1841, 104; and in 1851, 121.

The manor of Crackenthorp was possessed by the Machell family from the time of Henry II. till the last century, when it was sold to the Earl of Lonsdale, the present lord of the manor.

Machell of Crackenthorp.

The antiquity of this family is beyond dispute, and can be established by family papers, some of which are coeval with the Norman Conquest. Several writers, too, of note, add their testimony. In Holinshed's "Chronicles of England," Rogerus Malus Catulus¹ occur as vice-chancellor of England, temp. Richard I.; and in Lingard's "History of England," Henry VI. is recorded as having taken refuge in the house of John Machell, of Crackenthorp, after the battle of Hexham. Guillim, in his Heraldry, makes honourable mention of two Machells, Hugh and Guy, who served at Tournay under Henry VIII.

¹ In many of the early documents the name is written Mains Catulus within the deed, and Machell on the seal of the same parchment.

HALTH MALUS CATULUS, son of "Catulus de Castro Catulino," in Westmoreland, had two sons, RALPH of Crackenthorp, and Umfridus of Lowther. The former, Ralph de Crackenthorp, was father, by Eva, his wife, of three sons, WILLIAM, Galfrid, and Alexander. The eldest, William Mauchell, styled also in one deed Willichinus Malus Catulus, had two sons, WILLIAM, his heir, and Roger, vice-chancellor of England, temp. Richard I., who was drowned off Cyprus during the Holy War. The elder son, WILLIAM Malchael of Crackenthorp, living temp. Henry II., was father, by Margarey, his wife, of

JOHN SEE MALCHIEL, lord of Crackenthorp, temp. King John, who was witness to the grant by Adam de Kirkbythore of the advowson of that church to Robert de Veteripont. By Beatrix, his wife, he had a son and successor, THOMAS MALCHIEL, of Crackenthorp, father of WALTER MALCHIEL, of Crackenthorp, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Beauchamp, and left at his decease, 1369-70, a son, John Malchael, who married a daughter of William Threlkeld, and was succeeded by his son, William Mauchel, of Crackenthorp, who married Margaret, daughter of William Thornborough, and was father of JOHN MAUCHELL, in whose house, at Crackenthorp, according to Lingard, King Henry VI. took refuge, after the battle of Hexham. This John, living in 1446, married Catherine Hudeleston, and had issue,

JOHN, of Crackenthorp, who married a daughter of Gilbert Wharton, and died 1510-11, leaving issue,

I. HENRY, LL.D., prebendary of York, and rector of North Newbald.

II. Philip, vicar of Lawrence, and rector of Croglin.

III. Guy, lord of Crackenthorp, who served at the siege of Tournay. He was ancestor of the Machells of Buckinghamshire.

IV. Hugh, who also fought at Tournay, and was appointed deputy warden of the west marches, under his son-in-law, Lord Warrton, 1506-7; by Julianne, his wife, he had, with other issue, a son, John, (Sir) Knt., M.P. for Horsham, (from whom derived, through a pedigree of six descent, Isabella Machell, heiress of the estates at Hills and Horsham, married, firstly, to Arthur Lord Ingram, third viscount Irvine) and a daughter, Eleanor, married to her cousin, John Machell.

V. Ambrose, who married, and had a son, Henry.

WILLIAM.

The third son,

WILLIAM MACHELL, was father of

RICHARD MACHELL, of Caldbeck, co. Cumberland, in 1554, whose son,

JOHN MACHELL, died in his father's lifetime, leaving by Eleanor, his wife, daughter of Hugh Machell, of Crackenthorpe, a son,

HUGH MACHELL, Esq., who married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Blenkinsop, of Helbeck, by Magdalen, his wife/daughter of Edwin Musgrave, Esq., of Hartley Castle, and by her had, with several other sons and daughters,

I. Henry, who served Charles II. in Ireland, and whose will is dated 1646.

II. LANCELOT, of whom presently.

III. John, of Arice, Ireland, who married Miss Ruxton, and had a son John.

The second son,

LANCELOT MACHELL, Esq., of Crackenthorp, first mayor of Appleby, after the Restoration, destroyed in open court, Cromwell's charter, before he took office. This gentleman married Frances, daughter of Sir Richard Sandford, of Howgill Castle, and by her had, with other issue,

HUGH MACHELL, Esq., of Crackenthorp, who married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Beck, and died in 1643, leaving, with other issue, LANCELOT, his heir, and John, whose son, Hugh, went to Ireland. The eldest son married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Steddall, and died in 1681, leaving a son and heir, HUGH MACHELL, Esq., of Crackenthorp, who married Anne, daughter of Edward Nevinnson, Esq. of Newbystones, and had two sons,

1. LANCELOT, his heir.

2. JOHN, ancestor of the Macchells of Hollow Oak, Lancashire.

LANCELOT MACHELL, of Crackenthorp, married Deborah Baines, and by her, who died November 6th, 1767, left at his decease, May 7th, 1767, with several other children, a son and heir,

The Rev. RICHARD MACHELL, of Crackenthorp, rector of Ashby and Brougham, who married Mary Gibson, and had, with other children, who died young or unmarried,

1. LANCELOT, his heir.

2. Christopher.

3. Anne, married to Thomas Heelis, Esq.

The eldest son,

LANCELOT MACHELL, Esq., of Crackenthorp, to the Lowthers, as above. The present head of this family is CHRISTOPHER SCOTT MACHELL, Esq., of Beverley, who derives from the Christopher just mentioned.

Arms.—Sa., three greyhounds, courant in pale, arg. collared, or.

Crest.—A stag's head erased, ppr., ducally gorged, or; the more ancient crest was a boar do. iss.

The ancient hall of the Macchells is now a farm-house.

The village of Crackenthorp is two miles north-west of Appleby.

At Chapel Hill, in this township, are the ruins of an ancient chapel, said to have been dedicated to St. Giles. Near the road which leads from Crackenthorp to Kirkby Thore, on the south side of the old Roman road, is the site of an encampment, near to which is a small fort called Maiden Hold, which, according to the Rev. Mr. Macchell, was a watch-tower belonging to the camp.

In connection with a place bearing so many reminiscences of the Macchell family we may mention the Rev. Michael Macchell, who, in the seventeenth century was, for several years, rector of Kirkby Thore. This gentleman was a great antiquarian, and from his MSS. collections for a history of Westmoreland, much valuable assistance has been derived by subsequent writers.

HILTON.

The area of this township is 4,182 acres. The population in 1821 was 300; in 1831, 311; in 1841, 271; and in 1851, 277. In Hilton are some rich veins of lead, which have been worked for a number of years by the London Lead Company.

The manor of Hilton, or, as it is often called, Hilton Beacon, appears to have been held in moieties at a very early period. In 1285-6 we find it possessed by Thomas de Hellerton, Robert de Bacon, and others. In the 43rd Edward III. the Hellerton moiety was held by William English and John de Appleby, and the other moiety by Adam Bacon. In the 4th Henry IV. William Whapelote and Helen, his wife, in the right of the said Helen, and Adam Bacon, held Hilton Beacon, which from that time became the designation of the entire manor. Shortly after this period we find the manor possessed by the Hiltons, who continued to hold it till the direct line of the family failed in male issue, in 1676; and in 1796 it was purchased by the Lowthers, the Earl of Lonsdale being the present lord of the manor. The tenants were enfranchised by the Hiltons.

The village of Hilton is three miles east of Appleby. There was formerly a chapel in the neighbourhood of the village, but every vestige of it has long disappeared. Cardinal Bainbridge, archbishop of York, who died at Rome in 1514, was a native of Hilton.

Coupland Beck is partly in this township, and partly in that of Sandford, in the parish of Warcop.

MURTON.

Murton township comprises an area of 5,766 acres. In 1821 it contained 204 inhabitants; in 1831, 193; in 1841, 172; and in 1851, 212. This township is nearly surrounded by lofty fells, and possesses lead mines, worked by the London Lead Company. The Hilton and Murton mines are very productive, the average quantity of lead raised yearly being about 700 bings.

The manor of Murton was anciently held by the Cliffords. From an inquisition taken in 1283 we learn that at that date the manor house of Murton was worth 2s. a year, and the demesne, which consisted of 120 acres of land, 8d. per acre yearly, and that there were in the manor six free tenants and nine bondsmen. In 1315 the manor came to the Musgraves, who held it till 1614, when it was sold by Sir Richard Musgrave to Thomas Hilton, Esq., of Hilton, whose successors sold part of the demesne to the Fletchers of Strickland, and the remainder, with the manor, to Sir John Lowther, ancestor of the present lord, the Earl of Lonsdale. Murton Hall, the ancient manor house, is now occupied by a farmer. It appears that a chapel of ease formerly stood in this township, but its site is no longer distinguishable.

The village of Murton is two and a half miles east-by-north of Appleby, at the foot of a lofty conical eminence called Murton Pike. Here is a Methodist chapel, and a school endowed with land now let for £7 a year, and a rent-charge of 10s.

ASBY PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Crosby Ravensworth, and St. Lawrence Appleby; on the west by Crosby Ravensworth; on the south by the lofty fells and scars of Crosby Garret and Orton, and on the east by Ormside, Warcop, and Crosby Garrett. It is intersected by several rivulets, in one of which, Asby Gill, is the entrance to Pate Hole, a remarkable cavern 1,000 yards long, with a stream running through it. Between the great limestone scar of Orton and Crosby Fell is Sunbiggin Tarn, from which a stream flows southward to the river Lune. Some years ago copper ore was raised in this parish by the Union Company of Copper Miners, but the undertaking proved unsuccessful. The parish comprises the township of Asby Coatsforth, Asby Little, and Asby Winderwath, whose united area is 8,395 acres. Grange Hall, in this parish, is deemed extra-parochial. The population in 1801 was 357; in 1811, 388; in 1821, 421; in 1831, 436; in 1841, 407; and in 1851, 412.

ASBY WINDERWATH.

The area of this township is included in the parish return: its rateable value is £1,298 10s. 5d. The population of the township has not yet been returned separately.

Of this township during the ages anterior to the Norman invasion we know nothing beyond what the earthworks existing here have furnished. About twenty years ago a quantity of human remains, as well as implements of war, were discovered here. Coming to the Norman period, it seems that all the Asbys constituted one manor, though they now form three, which are separate and distinct. Nicolson and Burn say, that, "Afterwards the same became distinguished with Little Asby and Great Asby. Little Asby seems to have been originally the principal place, for in ancient writings we sometimes find it styled Old Askeby (Askyb Vetus). Great Askeby became again divided into Askeby Wynanderwath and Askeby Cotsford." The earliest proprietors of Asby Winderwath on record are the De Askebys, several of whom are named as early as the reign of Henry II., when William, son of Robert de Askeby, and Gilbert and Adam his brothers, witness a grant of lands at Blaterne to the abbey of Byland. In the reign of Richard I. Sir Robert de Askeby occurs, and it is probable that he was the son of William. The next of the family on record is Gilbert, whose son, Robert, granted to Adam, son of Hugh de Sowerby and Idonea, daughter of William de Cotesford, kinswoman of the said Robert, in frank marriage, four acres of his demesne land of Winderwath. In the 14th Edward I. (1285-6) Robert de Askeby held the manor of Great Askeby of the two daughters and co-heirs of the last Robert de Veteripont; and in the 28th year of the same king's reign (1299-1300) Robert, son of Henry de Askeby, founded the chantry of the Blessed Virgin in the parish church of Asby. This Robert occurs as knight of the shire for Westmoreland, in 1302. In the 3rd Edward II. (1309-10) it was found, by inquisition, that Robert de Askeby held by corgage, a moiety of Great Asby and Winderwath, and one carucate of land in Winton. Four years later the said Robert was knight of the shire for the county. In the 8th Edward II. (1314-15) it was found that Robert de Askeby held a moiety of Asby Winderwath, the wardship of which was worth £10, the corgage, 19s. In 1318 Robert de Askeby and Margaret, his wife, granted to Gilbert, son of Richard Engayne, of Clifton, a toft and croft, and all their land, at Clifton, to hold during his life of Margaret de Askeby, their daughter, by the rent of a rose on the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist. This Margaret de Askeby, their only child, became the wife of Sir Hugh de Moresby, Knt., who, in the 2nd Edward III., and again in the 10th Edward III., was knight of the shire for Westmoreland. In 1337 Sir Hugh de Moresby had a grant of free warren in Winderwath and Asby; and in 1342 a fine was levied between Hugh de Moresby and Margaret, his wife, and Robert de Askeby, of the manor of Winderwath, and of a moiety of the manor of Rookby, to hold to the said Robert for life, with remainder to the said Hugh and Margaret and their heirs, remainder to the right heirs of the said Robert in fee. Hugh de Moresby appears to have died within two years after this, for in the 18th Edward III. a fine was levied of the manor of Great Asby, between Christopher de Moresby and Isabel, his wife, of the one part, and Margaret, wife of Hugh de Moresby, of the other part, to hold to the said Christopher and Isabel and their heirs, with remainder to the heirs of the said Margaret in fee. In 1354, amongst the escheats in Cumberland, it was found, that Christopher Morieby held a moiety of the manor of Distington, and the manor of Moresby, in Cumberland, and the manor of Asby, in Westmoreland. In 1373 the king (Edward III.) made a presentation to the rectory of Asby, in right of the heir of Christopher de Morieby, who was at that time a royal ward. The heir here alluded to was a daughter, Anne, who was married to Sir James Pickering, Knt., of Killington. From a rental of Henry, earl of Cumberland, in the 18th Henry VIII., (1526-7) it appears that this lady then held a moiety of Asby, called Winderwath, and one carucate of land in Winton. By her husband, Sir James Pickering, Anne, had a son and heir, Sir Christopher Pickering, whose only child, Anne, was thrice married, first, to Sir Francis Westby; secondly, to Sir Henry Knevet; and, thirdly, to John Vaughan, Esq. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth the manor was purchased by Lancelot Pickering, Esq., from whose family it was bought by Sir Richard Fletcher, of Hutton, whose descendant, Sir F. F. Vane, Bart., sold it with the advowson of the rectory to John Hill, Esq., of Appleby, the present lord of the manor.

The manor of Garthorne, in this township, or at least a part of it, seems to have belonged to the hospital of St. Leonard, at York; for in the 9th Edward I. (1280-1) the hospital had a grant of free warren in Docker and Garthorne, and it does not appear to have been held at any time by the Veteripont or Clifford families. A small part of it is in Crosby Ravensworth. It formerly belonged to the Pickerings, one of whom, Sir James Pickering, sold it in the reign of James I. to Sir James Bellingham, of Over Levens. His descendant, Adam Bellingham, Esq., sold it in the reign of Charles II. to Colonel James Grahame, whose daughter, Catherine, brought in marriage to Henry Bowes Howard, fourth earl of Berkshire, from whom it has descended to the Hon. Mary Granville Howard, the present possessor of the manorial rights and privileges. Garthorne Hall, formerly the seat of a branch of the Bellingham family, is now a farm-house.

The landowners in the township are John Hill, Esq.; the Hon. Mary G. Howard; John Wakefield, Esq.; E. W. Wakefield, Esq.; and the Rev. Henry Guy.

The village of Great Asby is situated partly in the township of Asby, Winderswath, and partly in that of Asby Coatsforth, about four miles and a half south of Appleby. At the time of the dissolution of the religious houses the abbey of Shap had three houses in Great Asby.

THE CHURCH.

Asby church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient building, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, and low square tower, containing two bells. The living is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £23 13s. 4d., but is now worth about £200 a year. The tithes were commuted, in 1843, for £243 a year. There are five and a half acres of glebe land. The patronage has descended with the manor, and is now enjoyed by John Hill, Esq. In the year 1299 Robert de Askeby founded a chantry in this church, which he dedicated to God, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, and endowed it with one messuage and six acres of land in Great Asby. A little east of the church is St. Helen's well, which was formerly seated round, and of great repute for the medicinal properties of its waters.

Rectors.—Adam, —; Richard de Enchele, occurs 1298; William de Brampton, 1298; William de Keldersyke, 1319; Thomas de Anant, 1345; Stephen de Meburn, 1374; Percival Kirkbride, 1383; John Barnes, 1522; Thomas Fairfax, 1574; Oswald Dykes, 1593; Lancelot Dawes, 1618; George Tibbold, 1661; Henry Fleming, 1691; Joshua Burrow, 1728; Richard Machel, 1739; H. Atkinson, —; Henry Guy, —.

The rectory stands near the church, but in the township of Asby Coatsforth. It is a handsome commodious building, erected in 1834.

CURATES.

School.—By indenture, dated June 21, 1682, between Thomas Smith, D.D., dean of Carlisle, of the one part, and George Tibbold, clerk, rector of Asby, and others, of Asby, of the other part, it is witnessed, that the said Dr. Smith granted unto the said George Tibbold, and others, their heirs and assigns, his messuage and tenement, with the appurtenances, at Raisebeck, in the parish of Orton, to hold the same upon trust, that one half of the rents should, on St. Thomas' Day, yearly, for ever, be paid by the trustees unto the poor householders and poor people dwelling within the parish of Asby, as his trustees should think requisite; and that the other half part of the rents, should be yearly, for ever, employed for the maintenance and continuance of a school and schoolmaster, at Great Asby, to teach and instruct the poor and other children of the said parish; and it was agreed that the trustees should, from time to time, elect and appoint the schoolmaster, and remove him when necessary. By indenture, dated 2nd February, 1683, Anthony Clementson and Elizabeth Clementson, in consideration of the sum of £40 paid by Edward Musgrave, George Tibbold, and others, granted and confirmed to them and their heirs, several parcels of free land in Raisebeck, therein particularly described, and estimated altogether at six acres, to hold the same to them, and the rest of the twelve sworn men of the parish of Asby, and their heirs and assigns, upon trust, that the rents should be yearly employed to and for the maintenance and continuance of a school and schoolmaster at Great Asby, to teach and instruct the poor and other children of the said parish. By indenture, dated 13th July, 1688, between George Smith, citizen and merchant tailor of London, on the one part, and George Tibbold, Edward Musgrave, and others, of the other part; it is witnessed that the said George Smith granted to the said George Tibbold and others, his messuage or tenement in Asby, to hold the same upon trust, to dispose of the rents on the 23rd

April, yearly, for ever, for the maintenance of a school and schoolmaster at Great Asby, to teach and instruct the poor and other children of the said parish. There is now no distinction preserved between the several properties at Raisebeck. The open fields were enclosed about the year 1770, and an allotment made to the trustees in lieu of the open field lands. The rent of this land is divided into three parts, two of which are paid to the schoolmaster yearly (subject to a small deduction); and the other third is given away on the 21st December yearly, amongst the poorest persons not receiving weekly pensions, in sums varying from 10s. to 30s. The deduction from the schoolmaster's portion consists of 4s. annually on St. George's Day, given to four poor widows, and 5s. to the school-boys, for ale and gingerbread, and 1s. for a foot-ball. These gratuities, amounting together to 10s., are understood to be allowed in respect of a gift of £10 by George Smith, and in compliance with his directions. The old school-house, which, according to an inscription over the door, was erected by George Smith, merchant tailor, citizen of London, in 1688, was destroyed by fire. A new school was erected by subscription in 1853, which will accommodate about fifty children. The school is under the management of seven trustees, and the annual income is about £35.

St. Helen's Almshouse.—William Fairer, of Asby, by will, dated 3rd April, 1811, after devising his real estate, and leaving several pecuniary and other legacies, and charging the payment thereof as therein mentioned, gave as follows:—"After all the above legacies shall be paid and discharged, I give and bequeath to my executors, in trust, all the remainder of my estate, and that they purchase a convenient piece of ground; but as I am afraid a convenient place for the purpose cannot be got, I therefore give and bequeath to my executors in trust, a piece of ground at the top of the garth, fourteen yards long, adjoining to the lane, and nine yards deep, to hold the same in trust (they and their successors, for ever), and that they shall build three small good houses, under one roof, with one room below and another above stairs, for three poor widows or widowers, to be all natives, or who have been born in the parish, but none of the Carlton's or Ion's families to have any benefit in the charity; and after it is completed, the remainder and remaining money to be put out at interest, on good security, and the interest so arising to be equally divided amongst the poor inmates, share and share alike, after deducting any expenses that may have accrued in the last year, and to be divided every St. Thomas' Day, for ever; and the said trustees shall nominate a proper person to the houses when one becomes vacant; and when one of the trustees shall die, the other two shall appoint another in the room of such person so dead, so that the number may still be three, to conduct the affairs of the said charity."

Pindar's Charity.—The Rev. Simon Pindar, who was rector of Great Musgrave from 1719 to 1756, wrote a letter directed to the principal inhabitants of Asby, in which place he was born, which letter is still preserved in the church chest. It is without date or signature, but is understood to be in his own handwriting. In this letter he states, that being desirous to promote a public charity in the parish of Asby, he had put £60 in the hands of John Bowness, which money he had for some months past endeavoured to lay upon a freehold estate, to be charged with the payment of £2 12s. yearly, for ever, to be paid quarterly, and the money applied to discharge the price of six twopenny leases, which he desired might be given every Lord's Day, in Asby church, to six of the most indigent persons, male or female, legally settled in that parish, being members of the Church of England, and constantly attending divine service. And he further desired that when a pensioner died, the parish clerk should have the loaf that belonged to him, deceased, the Sunday following the death; and on that Sunday he should publicly signify to the trustees, that a new member was to be that afternoon elected in the room of such a one deceased, according to the direction of the benefactor. The sum of £60 was received into the parish funds, and applied, upwards of twenty years ago, in the discharge of some law expenses which had been incurred by the parish; and the sum of £2 12s. has ever since been paid out of the poor rates to supply bread, according to the directions of the donor.

ASY COATSFORTH.

The area and population of this township are included in the parish returns, not having been as yet returned separately. The rateable value is £1,663. The township stretches eastward from the beck, which runs through Great Asby.

The manor of Asby Coatsforth was held at an early period by a family bearing the local name, one of whom, Richard de Coatsforth, witnessed the grant made to the abbey of Byland, in the reign of Henry II. In the first year of the reign of King John, Hugh de Cottesforth occurs as paying £3 for lands in Asby. In the 14th Edward I. (1285-6) Peter de Cotesford held Asby Coatsford of the two daughters of Robert de Veteripont. In the 8th of Edward II. (1314-15) John de Cottesford held a moiety of Great Asby, the wardship of which was worth £6 13s. 4d. a year, and the corange 1s. 2d. In 1365 the manor was held by John de Cotesforth, and in 1391 by Stephen de Cotesforth. In the 31st Henry VI. (1454-5) John de Cotesforth held Asby Coatsforth, by homage and fealty, and 4s. 2d. cornage; owing also for the same wardship, marriage, and relief. In 1464 John de Cotesford occurs as one of the jurors on the inquisition post mortem of John de Clifford. He appears to have been the last of his family, as no more of the name occur in connexion with the manor, which afterwards became the property of the Musgraves, by whom it was transferred by marriage to Dr. Boucher, who sold it to Roger Pindar. It was subsequently purchased in the year 1800 by James Park, Esq., of Asby Hall, whose son, George Park, Esq., is the present lord of the manor. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale; John Hill, Esq.; W. Wakefield, Esq.; Robert Addison, Esq.; George Park, Esq.; Messrs. Anthony Sawers, George Jackson, and Richard Dixon.

Asby Hall is an ancient mansion, situate in the village of Great Asby; over the door is a coat of arms, supposed to be that of the Musgraves.

Nicolson and Burn state "there are two estates in that parish which go by the name of Grange; one of them went along with the manor of Asby Coatsforth; the other belonged to the abbey of Byland, in Yorkshire; but by whom it was given we have not found."

The single houses having particular names are Grange Hall, Breaks Hall, Catterine Holme, and Lower Griseburn.

A small Methodist Chapel was erected in this township in 1859.

At Asby Gill, about one mile from the village of Great Asby, is the entrance to Pate Hole, a singular cavern about 1,000 yards long, through which runs a small rivulet, said to be that which rises again at St. Helen's Well.

LITTLE ASBY.

For acreage and population see the parish returns.

The earliest notice of the first possessors of this manor occurs in a deed of lands at Crackenthorp, in the reign of Henry II., three of the witnesses to which are William de Askeby, Richard de Cotesford, and Richard English, or L'Engleys, who were severally lords of the three Asbys. In the 4th year of the reign of King John (1202-3) an agreement was made between Robert de Scotland and Richard L'Engleys concerning half a carucate of land, with its appurtenances, in Old Asby. Nine years later a William English witnessed a grant made by Robert de Veteripont to the abbey of Shap. In the 20th Edward I. (1291-2) Sir Robert de Engleys occurs as a juror at Appleby, in a cause between the king and the abbey of St. Mary at York. In 1308, 1310, and 1311, Robert L'Angleys, Knt., represented the county of Westmoreland in parliament. In 1328 William Englishe and Helena, his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Little Asby, and lands in Great Asby, to the use of the said William and Helena, and their heirs; with remainder to Robert, brother of the said William, and his heirs; remainder to Thomas, another brother; remainder to John Dawney and his heirs; remainder to the right heirs of the said William. In 1338 William English received a license to impark 100 acres of land in Kirklevington in Cumberland, 100 acres elsewhere in the said county, 100 acres at Tebay and Runthwaite in the county of Westmoreland, and 100 acres at Assmudely in the county of York. Three years later a fine was passed of the manors of Tebay and Runthwaite, to the use of William L'Englishe, Knt., for life; remainder to William, his sons, and his heirs male; remainder to Julian, his sister. William L'Engleys served as a knight of the shire for Westmoreland in most of the parliaments from the 12th Edward II. to the 22nd Edward III. In the 34th year of the last-named monarch's reign (1360-1) John, son of Robert L'Engleys, made a settlement of his estate at Little Asby. In 1369, in an inquisition of knights fees in Westmoreland, it was found that Robert L'Engleys then held Little Asby. This Robert had a son Thomas, who died during the lifetime of his father, and was the last of the name of Little Asby. His daughter, Idonea, became the wife of Edmund de Sandford, a younger brother of Sir William Sandford, Knt., of Sandford, in the parish of Warcop. Idonea removed with her husband to Askham, and they were the founders of the Sandfords of Askham and Howgill. After the death of Edmund de Sandford, Idonea married Sir Thomas Ughtred; and in the 15th Richard II. (1391-2) we find that Thomas Ughtred and Idonea his wife, in right of the said Idonea, held the manor of Little Asby, by homage and fealty and the payment of 2s. 10d. cornage. In the 10th of Henry V. (1422) after the death of John de Clifford, an inquisition was held when it was found that Robert de Sandford held the manor of Little Asby. This Robert appears to have been the second son of Edmund de Sandford and Idonea English, his elder brother, William, having died without issue, for by an inquisition of the services of knights and others, free tenants, holding of Thomas de Clifford as of his barony of Westmoreland, in the 31st Henry VI. (1452-3) it was found that "Robert Engleys heretofore held Little Asby, and paid for the same ad conjugum 2s. 10d., and owed wardship, marriage relief, and suit to the county court, and now Thomas Dalmore, Esq., holds the same as of right of Margaret his wife, late wife of William Sandford elder brother of Robert Sandford, Esq., which Margaret had the same vill in jointure with the aforesaid William, her late husband, the reversion thereof belonging to the said Robert." Shortly after this we find Thomas Sandford, son of Robert just mentioned, holding the manor by similar services. In the 18th Henry VIII. (1526-7) Thomas Sandford, Esq., held the manor, which passed to his second son, Richard of Howgill, in whose posterity it continued till the Sandfords of Howgill failed in issue male, when it was transferred by marriage to the Honeywoods of Mark's Hill, Essex, one of whom, Philip Honeywood, sold it in 1780 to the Earl of Thanet, from whom it has descended to Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., the present lord.

The village of Little Asby is two miles south-south-east of Great Asby, and five miles and a half east-by-north of Orton. There was anciently a chapel here, dedicated to St. Leonard, which was endowed by Richard le English, rector of Asby, with a messuage and six acres of land in Great Asby, for the foundation of a charity.

Though this township is mountainous, still some parts of it are tolerably fertile, and it abounds with limestone. The single houses having particular names are High Grange, Whygill Head, Mazonwath, and Waterhouses.

BROUGH PARISH.

Brough parish is bounded on the north by the lofty fells of Hilbeck, Warcop, Dow Craggs, &c., on the west by the parish of Great Musgrave, on the south by Kirkby Stephen, and on the east by Yorkshire. It is about eight miles in length, by five in breadth, and with the exception of the middle portion, which consists of fine pasture and meadow land, is a wild mountainous region, rich in lead, iron, limestone, and freestone. Some coal, but of an inferior quality, is also found. The parish comprises the townships of Church Brough, Brough Sowerby, and Hilbeck, and the chapelry of Stainmore, whose united area is 24,517 statute acres. It comprises the principal portion of the forest of Stainmore. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in agricultural pursuits.

CHURCH BROUGH.

The township comprises an area of 966 acres, and its rateable value is £2,442. The population in 1801 was 694; in 1811, 758; in 1821, 940; in 1831, 966; in 1841, 899; and in 1851, 773, who principally reside in the town of Brough.

Of Brough, during the British period of the history of this country, we possess no information, though there is little doubt it formed the site of one of the encampments of the natives. When the Romans advanced as far north as Eburacum (York), they constructed their great roads east, north, and west. One of these proceeded by Isurium (Aldborough), Cataractonium (Catterick Bridge), and Lavatras (Boves), crossed the mountains, the pass being defended by a Roman castle, remains of which may still be traced, and arrived at Vertere (Brough), from which place it continued its course by Brovanace (Kirby Thore), Brocavium (Brougham), Voreda (Plumpton Wall, in Cumberland), and so on to Luguballia (Carlisle), one of the principal Roman stations in the north. Vertere (Brough) appears to have been garrisoned by a body of troops, called Directores. Brough has been fertile in Roman remains. In the time of Leland it seems to have been proverbial for the antiquities constantly found here. In his "Itinerary," he says—"Brow, now a village, set in Lunesdale a vi miles beneath the foote of Dentdale, hath been by likelihood sum notable town. The plough menne find there yn ereng lapides quadratos, and many other straung things; and this place is much spoken of the inhabitants there." During the last thirty years large quantities of Roman coins, fibule, &c., have been discovered from time in the bed of the river, and also in its north bank opposite to the castle, at a depth of about six feet. The river has changed its course, and is now much nearer the castle than formerly. Few gold coins, but many of silver, and thousands of brass ones. They are of various periods; and some of the inhabitants of Brough are in possession of hundreds. On the withdrawal of the Roman legion, Vertere fell into the hands of the Celtic people, who, at that time, inhabited Westmoreland. They at once gave it a descriptive name, calling it Burgh or Brough, which means a fortification. It continued to be known by this description till the arrival of the Angles, who, to distinguish it from other places bearing the same name, called it Brough-under-Stainmore, or Brough-under-the-Stony-moor, from the bleak fells by which it was surrounded. The Northmen, in their incursions, settled in the neighbourhood, and until the period of the Norman Conquest were the dominant people.

On the partition of England among the followers of the Conqueror, the manors of Brough, Sowerby, and Stainmore, were included in the grant of the barony of Westmoreland, made to Ranulph de Meschines, and from him came to the Veteriponts, Cliffords, and their descendants, never being granted off to any inferior lords. A castle appears to have been erected here shortly after the Conquest. In the 8th Edward II. (1314-15), on the decease of Robert Clifford, it was found, by inquisition, that the said Robert, amongst other places, had held the castle of Brough-under-Stainmore, "with the precinct of the trenches thereof, the herbage of which was worth yearly 6s. 8d. Two hundred acres of demesne land, twenty-two whereof, at the least, were worth yearly 9d. each. An hundred and ten acres of meadow, each of which worth by the year 12d. Two parks, the herbage whereof, with all issues, was worth by the year 100s. Also free tenants, who paid yearly 17s. 2d. Also twenty oxgangs of land, worth each by the year, 4s. Ten tofts coterell, worth yearly 6d. each. One bakehouse, with the profits of measuring the corn of the village, 20s. One water-miln, burned, worth yearly £6 13s. 4d. Also the constableness [of the castle], worth yearly 40s. Also the profits of the fairs, worth, by the year 10s. [And this was before any grant of a fair that we now know of.]—Also, in the Lower Burgh, twenty-four tofts and a half, which are burned, each whereof pays yearly 12d. Also, upon Stainmore, ten vaccaries which are burned; each whereof, with the meadow adjoining, worth by the year 10s. And five vaccaries, not burned, each whereof worth by the year £20. Also, Alan de Cabeigh, Nicholas de Musgrave, and Geoffrey de Tesedale held there four closes of new improvement, of the yearly rent of one hundred and fifteen shillings and one farthing. Agistment there, worth yearly 10s. Pleas and perquisite of the court 13s. 4d. The sum total, £49 18s. 4½d.—Also, at Sowerby, nigh Burgh, one capital messuage, worth by the year 12d. Four score acres of demesne land, worth yearly 8d. each. Sixteen acres of meadow, worth yearly 18d. each. Two free tenants, who pay yearly 7d. Sixteen oxgangs of land, worth yearly 5s. each. Ten messuages coterell, worth by the year 12d. each. One water-miln, worth yearly 40s. One vaccary, worth yearly 26s. 8d. The sum total, £11 15s. 7d." In 1422, after the death of John de Clifford, an inquisition found that at Burgh he died possessed of eleven messuages, called vaccaries, and a park, called Old Park, worth, in the whole, £10 10s. 10d. per annum. The same inquisition also informs us, that Elizabeth, mother of the said John de Clifford, held the castle and manor, together with several messuages, or vaccaries, and also the vill of Sowerby, parcel of the said castle and manor, and the services of different tenants of Great and Little Brough, who paid to her the sum of ten shillings a year. The manor is now held by Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.; besides whom, William Wilkinson, Esq.; Thomas Hodgson Hobson, Esq.; A. Turner, Esq.; Robert Buckley and Sons, and others, are landowners.

Brough Castle was erected shortly after the Conquest, on the site of the Roman station. Its keep, like that of Appleby Castle, was known by the name of Cæsar's Tower, and appears also to have been known as the Round Tower. During the inroads made by the Scots under William the Lion, Brough Castle was attacked, but it was well prepared for defence, being garrisoned by six knights and their followers. The castle was very soon attacked on all sides; and the Flemings and the border men in the pay of the Scottish monarch made a fierce assault upon the garrison, and the first day took from them the outworks, which the defenders had soon abandoned, and shut themselves up in the tower. Here they might have held out for some time, but the Scots applied fire to the tower, and they were reduced to the alternative of surrendering or being burnt. "But a new knight had come to them that day. Now listen to his deeds and great courage; when his companions had all surrendered, he remained in the tower, and seized two shields, which he hung on the battlements, and held his ground there a long time, and threw at the Scots three sharp javelins, with each of which he struck a man dead. When these failed him, he takes up sharp stakes and hurled them at the Scots; and overthrew some of them, and ever keeps shouting, you shall all be vanquished soon. Never by a single vassal was strife better maintained. When the fire deprived him of the defence of the shields, he is not to blame if he then surrendered." The castle of Brough was beaten down, "with the best part of the tower."¹ The castle was subsequently repaired, and continued to take rank among the defences of Westmoreland till 1521, in which year it was accidentally set on fire, and it continued in ruins till the year 1661, when it was rebuilt by the Lady Anne Clifford, countess-dowager of Dorset, Pembroke, and Montgomery. This re-edification was commemorated upon a stone which, about eighty years ago, stood over the gateway of the castle, and bore the following inscription:—"This castle of Brough-under-Stanemore, and the great tower of it, was repaired by Lady Ann Clifford, countess-dowager of Pembroke, Dorset, and Montgomery; Baroness Clifford, Westmoreland, Vesey; high-sheriff, by inheritance, of the county of Westmoreland, and lady of the honour of Skipton, in Craven, in the year of our Lord God, 1659; so as she came to lie in it herself for a little while in September, 1661, after it had lain ruinous, without timber or any covering, ever since the year 1521, when it was burnt by a casual fire." The keep, or principal tower, of this ancient castle, except the walls, was demolished, and the timber sold by Thomas Earl of Thanet, about the year 1695, when he was repairing Appleby Castle. From this period the castle has been allowed to go to ruin. The chief parts now standing are portions of the keep and other towers; the keep is in its general appearance similar to those of the Tower of London, Rochester Castle, &c. The ruins stand upon a lofty eminence, near the church, in the midst of what is supposed to have been the Roman station.

¹ On est encore à l'heure de la nuit, "Chronicle of the War between the English and the Scots, in 1173 and 1174," by Jordan Fantosme," 8vo., 1840, p. 69.

THE TOWN OF BROUGH.

Brough, or Brough-under-Stanemore, is situated in 54° 28' north latitude, and 2° 20' west longitude. It is eight miles south-east from Appleby, and 262 north-north-west from London by road. Tebay station, on the Lancaster and Carlisle railway, which is sixteen miles from Brough is 203 from London.

The town of Brough is little more than a village, the railway having destroyed the coaching trade, which, from its position on the north mail road it formerly possessed. A small weekly market is held on Thursday, in consequence of a grant made by Edward III., in 1330, to Robert Lord Clifford. The charter empowered the holding of an annual fair of four days' duration, on the two days before the feast of St. Matthew (September 21st) the day of the festival, and the following day. This charter was confirmed by Edward VI. in 1549. The duration of the fair is now limited to two days, which, in consequence of the change from old to new style, are the 30th September and the 1st October. This fair is held on Brough Hill, a common two miles north-by-west of the town, and is numerously attended. Great numbers of horses, sheep, and cattle are brought for sale. Fairs are also held in the town on the second Thursday in January, March, and April, and on the Thursday before Whitsuntide, for cattle, sheep, &c. Brough is a polling place for the county. Petty sessions are held here the first Thursday in every month. The town is divided into two parts, called Market Brough and Church Brough, by the Helbeck, a small feeder of the Eden. The ancient custom of bearing the holling, or holy tree, on the eve of the Epiphany, is still observed at Brough, and is now considered peculiar to this place. The procession sets out at eight o'clock, with a band playing, and stops and cheers at the bridge and again at the cross. The crowd then separates into two parties, one of which endeavours to take the tree to one of the inns, the other to another. An obstinate scuffle ensues, and the inn-keeper patronised by the successful party is expected to treat his men well.

THE CHURCH.

Brough church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a neat structure of the fourteenth century, with a handsome embattled tower, of a somewhat later date, and a peal of four bells, said to have been given to the parish by a yeoman of the name of Brunskill. The windows contain many fine specimens of stained glass, but they have been much disfigured by modern repairs. The pulpit, which is fixed against the south wall, is of stone. There are several mural monuments. In 1344 this church was appropriated by Pope Clement VI. to the provost and scholars of Queen's College, Oxford, who are still the patrons, and had previously received a grant of the advowson from Edward III., at the instance of his chaplain, Robert Eaglesfield, who was rector of Brough, and founder of the said college. The living is valued in the King's Book at £8 18s. 9d., but is now worth upwards of £600 a year. There was formerly a chantry in this church. It was founded in the reign of Henry III., by Thomas Musgrave, who granted certain lands and tenements "to God and the Blessed Virgin Mary, and to his chapel of Brough-under-Stanemore, and to Sir William de Askeby, chaplain, and his successors serving God there, whom he and his heirs should present to the said chapel." The presentation to this chantry soon afterwards passed to the Helbeck family. The altar of this chantry was in the north aisle, which, in consequence, was known as our Lady's Aisle. We need not add that this chantry was suppressed at the period of the Reformation. The living is now a vicarage.

VICARS.—Thomas Bowett, —; Peter de Chamberi, —; William de Clifford, —; John de Langton, —; Hugh de Buerg, 1304; William de Northwick, died 1302; Robert de Eaglesfield, 1332; John Rainold occurs 1369; John de Merton, 1369; — Raisbeck occurs 1366; Thomas Rigg occurs 1392; Lancelot Shaw, 1508; Roger Salhild, 1504; David Hecksletter, 1611; William Richardson, 1623; Christopher Harrison, 1664; Joseph Fisher, 1695; Francis Thompson, 1703; Thomas Hodgson, 1735; Thomas Barnett, 1768; Lancelot Bellas, 1792; Lancaster Dodgson, 1810; Lancelot Jefferson, 1828.

The vicarage is a plain building, situated near the church. It was erected in 1829, by the present vicar, at a cost of £2,000.

In 1506 John Brunskill founded at Market Brough, a chapel or oratory, which was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St. Gabriel. It was endowed by Thomas Blenkinsop, of Hilbeck, with a piece of ground, called Gilgarth, on condition that the said John Brunskill should build a chapel there, and also an hospital, "with two beds in it, for travellers and other poor people; and maintain the same for ever. Two priests were established to sing and pray in the chapel for ever for the souls of all the benefactors of the said chapel that were departed from the world, and for the welfare of them that were living." One of these priests was to teach grammar, the other to instruct children willing to learn singing, freely and without charge. The foundation of the chapel was confirmed both by the Bishop of Carlisle and the Archbishop of York. This chapel continued to exist till the time of the dissolution of the religious houses, when the priest who taught singing was removed, and the other who taught grammar was retained as first master of the free school, to which the king's commissioners granted £7 11s. 4d. a year.

The Baptists, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels here.

CHARITIES.

School.—From a copy on paper of a deed poll purporting to be sealed with the seal of the Abbey of Shap, A.D. 1506, it appears that by the providence, labours, and means of John Brunskill, of Brough, by the assistance and aid of Thomas Blenkinsop, there was a chapel founded at Brough, with two priests, the one to teach grammar, and the other to instruct children, willing to learn song freely, without paying; and that Richard, then Abbot of Shap, having the governance and oversight of the same, at the appeal, request, and by the advice of John Brunskill, willed and ordained as follows:—20d. to be paid to the Bishop of Carlisle yearly; and 20s. yearly to the Vicar of Brough. The singing priest to have £5 wages of the oblations in the said chapel, to be paid by the said abbot and the schoolmaster of the grammar school. The said abbot also willed and ordained a man and his wife to be keeper of the ornaments in the said chapel, of the books, &c., and of the alms beds of the hospital, &c. The said keeper to receive his wages of the oblations of the said chapel, by the hands of the said abbot and of the schoolmaster of the said grammar school. And it further appears that over all these the said abbot willed and ordained that the right heirs of the aforesaid Thomas Blenkinsop, after the decease of the said John Brunskill, should have the nomination and gift of the room of the said priest, and of the keepership of the chapel, &c. The surplusage of the oblations of the said chapel, if any, to be kept in a chest in the monastery of Shap, for the care of which chapel and chest the abbot to receive 23s. 4d. The schoolmaster of the grammar school, for his care and labours, 8s. 4d. of the said oblations. And when it should fortune that any honest priest should be named to the aforesaid office, or mastership in grammar or song, then the examination of the said priest to belong to the Bishop of Carlisle or his deputy. Among the records of the Court of Exchequer of Hilary term, 4th and 5th Philip and Mary, is an order from the barons to the receiver general of the county of Westmoreland, to pay £7 11s. 4d. clear, yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas, to John Beck, then schoolmaster, of the school of Brough, and to the schoolmaster of the same place for the time being; which sum, it is stated, that certain commissioners, appointed by letters patent, 20th June, 2nd Edward VI., had ordered to be paid to the schoolmaster of a certain grammar school, which had been continually kept at Brough, before the 20th day of July, in the second year of Edward VI., for his wages, as had been of ancient time done. This is the only endowment of the school, which is now attended by about fifty children.

Broadas Close.—There is a field called Broadas, containing about six acres, lying in the township of Waitby, in the parish of Kirkby Stephen, which formerly belonged to the parish of Brough. We cannot obtain any information how this field came to the parish, or to what objects the rents were applied. This close was sold in 1777 for the sum of £97 1s. The estate has since passed through several hands, and it now belongs to the trustees of Thompson's charity, in the parish of Kirkby Stephen. The money received for the sale of this close, was divided amongst the different townships, in the same proportion as they pay to the church-rate. The portion received by the townships of Market Brough and Church Brough is understood to have been laid out in building a poor-house on a piece of land in Church Brough, purchased in 1772 for £9, and conveyed to Thomas Hodgson in trust, for the churchwardens, overseers, and principal inhabitants and landowners of Church Brough and Market Brough, for the sole use of the poor of the said townships.

Hayton's Charity.—The returns of 1780 state that Anthony Hayton (no date mentioned) gave £10, which was then laid out in repairing the poor-house, and was supposed to be a rent charge upon it. The name of Anthony Hayton is not known as a benefactor in Brough.

Hodgson's Charity.—By indenture, dated 17th October, 1760 (enrolled in Chancery 21st March, 1761), between the Rev. Thomas Hodgson, vicar of Brough, of the one part, and John Thompson, Esq., of Market Brough, and six others, it was witnessed that the said Thomas Hodgson granted to the said John Thompson, and others, and their heirs, an annuity of £3 issuing out of the grantor's freehold dwelling-houses in Market Brough, and out of the castle gates in Market Brough intact, with a rateable part and share in the soil, to hold the same in trust, to distribute amongst such of the poorest parishioners of Brough as the said Thomas Hodgson should direct during his lifetime; and after his death, monthly, on the first Sunday in every month, in twelve equal shares, lay the same out in the purchase of bread, to be distributed by the churchwardens of the parish of Brough, in the parish church, to such of the poorest parishioners who should constantly attend divine service, as the vicar of Brough should think fit, and in such shares and portions as the vicar should appoint; and when the trustees should be reduced to two, that they should choose others to make up the number to seven. The sum of £3 is regularly laid out in the purchase of bread. A certain quantity is given away every other Sunday in Brough church, to the poor of the several townships attending service. The poor persons receiving the bread are either appointed or approved of by the vicar, and when once appointed generally continue to receive it for life. Each person generally has one twopenny loaf. The poor belonging to any of the townships are entitled to this, if they come to the parish church.

Waller's Charities.—Philip Waller, of Park Houses, by will, dated 19th May, 1778, gave to Robert Bell, of Kirkby Stephen, and Leonard Bonson, their heirs and assigns for ever, £400 in trust, to place out the same, and apply the interest in manner following, viz.:—He directed his trustees, their heirs and assigns, to lay out, yearly, £3 18s., part of the interest, in wheat bread, after the rate of 1s. 6d. a week, the same to be made into six threepenny loaves, and distributed every Sunday, in the forenoon, in the parish church of Kirkby Stephen, by his trustees, their heirs or assigns, to such widows or poor householders as they should appoint, being inhabitants of or belonging to the townships or liberties of Kaber or South Stainmore, in the parish church aforesaid. And the testator ordered his trustees to lay out yearly the sum of £3 18s., further part of the said interest, in wheat bread, after the rate of 3s. every two weeks, the same to be made into twelve threepenny loaves every second and fourth Sunday in every month, to be distributed in the parish church of Brough, by his trustees, their heirs or assigns, to such widows or poor housekeepers, inhabitants and belonging to the parish of Brough, as they should appoint. And he further directed his trustees to pay to the schoolmaster teaching in the school-house of Great Musgrave for the time being, the sum of £4 yearly, further part of the said interest, to be paid for such poor children in Musgrave parish as should be named by his trustees, their heirs and assigns, and whose parents should not be able to pay for them. And he further directed his trustees to pay a further sum of £1 yearly to the schoolmaster teaching school at Brough Sowerby for the time being, for teaching such poor children, not exceeding eight, belonging to the said township, as his trustees should nominate and appoint. And he directed that the remaining part of the interest arising from the said £400, if any, should yearly be divided equally between the said trustees, their heirs and assigns, for their trouble and expenses.

Market Brough, Church Brough, and Hilbeck.—Robson's Charity.—William Robson, of Brough, left £20 to the Vicar of Brough and the churchwardens and overseers of the two Broughs and Hilbeck, for the use of the poor of these places. The sum of £20 is secured by mortgage on the tolls of the road leading from Brough to Eamont Bridge, with interest at four per cent. The sum of 16s. on account thereof is regularly received by the overseers and divided, by giving 12s. to the townships of Market Brough and Church Brough, and 4s. to the division of Hilbeck. It is given away in each of the townships in small sums to persons not receiving regular parish pensions.

Brough Sowerby, and Hilbeck.—Poor Stock.—There is in this township the sum of £20, which is understood to be the portion of the sale of Broadas close, paid to Brough Sowerby. The interest of the £20 (20s.) used to be given to the poor not receiving pensions; but of late it has been added to the poor rates.

Richardson's Charity.—The returns of 1780 state the sum of 5s. yearly, as an unknown benefaction to the poor of Hilbeck. It will appear, however, from the report of the charities in Great Musgrave parish, stated hereafter, to have been given by George Richardson in 1715, though that name is equally unknown here as it was at Great Musgrave. This money is given away at Christmas to poor persons not receiving pensions, with the 1s. a year from Robson's Charity, as already stated.

BROUGH SOWERBY.

This township comprises 1,083 acres, and its rateable value is £1,374 11s. 10d. Its population in 1801 was 139; in 1811, 155; in 1821, 180; in 1831, 155; in 1841, 142; and in 1851, 147, who were in the village of Brough Sowerby, and in detached farm houses. Agriculture is the principal employment, and Kirkby Stephen markets are usually attended. The manor of Brough Sowerby has undergone the same change of ownership as that of Brough, and is now held by the same lord. The landowners are A. Cleasby, Esq.; William Hopes, Esq.; Rev. John Dickinson, Mrs. Kirkpatrick, Messrs. John Waistell, and John Grainger, with several small proprietors. The single houses having particular names are Thornby Scale, Hollins View, Park House, Blourn, Field Head, and Sowerby Lodge.

The village of Brough Sowerby is a mile and a half south of Brough, on the road to Kirkby Stephen.

HILBECK.

The area of Hilbeck township, inclusive of Stainmore, is 22,468 acres, and its rateable value is £363 1s. 3d. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 74; in 1811, 98; in 1821, 101; in 1831, 51; in 1841, 42; and in 1851, 94; who are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and reside in the scattered village of Hilbeck, and a few dispersed houses. Upwards of fifty years ago an attempt was made by John M. Carlton, Esq., who then possessed the property, to establish a cotton-mill in the township, but the undertaking proved a failure. Appleby is the market usually attended. In Hilbeck Wood, on an eminence west of the hall, is Fox Tower, also built by Mr. Carlton.

The manor of Hilbeck, anciently Helbeck, from the old Norse Hella, to pour rapidly, in allusion to the rushing of the beck from the hills, belonged for a considerable period to a family bearing the local name. Its history will be best shown by the following account of its possessors:—

Helbeck of Hilbeck.

The first of this family on record is

THOMAS DE HELBECK, who, with Wido (Guy's) son, in the reign of Henry II., witnessed a grant of lands at Rensell, made by Maude de Veteripont, to her son, the first Robert de Veteripont. Thomas was succeeded by his son.

Wido, who in the 13th of King John (1211-12) witnessed Robert de Veteripont's charter to the abbey of Shap. He also occurs as Guido de Helbeck. The next of this family met with is

ROBERT DE HELBECK, probably son of Wido, who was collector of the aid in the reign of Henry III. The next on record is

SIR THOMAS DE HELBECK, who witnessed a grant of lands at Appleby, in the 20th Henry III. (1210-11). This gentleman had lands in Brough Sowerby, and Westmoreland by knight's service. He was succeeded by his son,

SIR THOMAS DE HELBECK, who lived in the time of Edward I. He married Avicia, daughter of Adam de Henecastre, by whom he had issue,

i. Theobald, his heir.

ii. Richard, who married Isabella de Sapherston, a daughter of the lord of Sapherston, and the daughter of a knight. They had issue, viz. theobald and Richard. Helbeck & sons.

Followed,

iii. Alan, a priest, who received from his father a grant of one messuage and garden in Hilbeck.

i. Alice, married to Robert, eldest son of Sir Richard de Suleby, knight, and was the mother of theobald, her husband's homage, &c., in Appleby, to his son and daughter-in-law.

ii. Isabel, married to Patrius de Castlecarrick, who had for her portion lands at Sunbigin, Raisebeck, Keldich, and Constat, with half of the fulling mill there.

iii. Margaret, married to William de Lanecastre, who had for her portion lands at Brough Sowerby.

Sir Thomas was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS DE HELBECK, who, by an exchange, taken in the 12th Edward II. (1309-10), appears to have then held by knight's service Hilbeck and Asum. In 1314-15 he was knight of the shire for Westmoreland. His wife's name does not appear, but he had an only daughter, Isabella, who became the wife of Robert de Blenkinsop, and was transmitted the direct line of the Helbecks of Hilbeck.

James, of Hilbeck, was a son with a land & tenement.

Blenkinsop of Hilbeck.

As we have just seen, the first of this family who obtained possession of Hilbeck, by marriage with the heiress of the Helbecks, was

RICHARD DE BLENKINSOP, younger brother of Robert de Blenkinsop, to whom Edward King of Scots gave all the lands and tenements of Ughtertye with the appurtenances, to the value of twenty marks yearly. Thomas de Helbeck, on the marriage of his daughter to Robert de Blenkinsop, settled upon them the whole manor of Hilbeck, with some trifling exceptions. Robert de Blenkinsop was coroner of Westmoreland in the 19th Edward II. (1325-6). He died about the beginning of the reign of Edward III., and was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS DE BLENKINSOP, who appears to have been very young at the time of his father's demise, as he did not attain his majority till the 10th Edward III. (1345), when he came into possession of his estates. He had a son,

THOMAS DE BLENKINSOP, Esq., who on his marriage had all the lands at Hilbeck, Overton, Souby, and Braumton, settled upon him and Katherine his wife. He had the office of constable of Brough Castle granted to him and his heirs for 600 years, with all its privileges, by Roger de Clifford, lord of Westmoreland. The grant was dated at the castle of Brough, on Sunday before the feast of St. James the apostle (July 25), in the 4th Richard II. (1380). In 1387 he represented the county of Westmoreland in parliament. He was succeeded by his son,

WILLIAM DE BLUNKANSOP, Esq., who married Maud, daughter of Richard de Salkeld, and had then settled upon him a moiety of the demesne of Overton, and other property. He was knight of the shire for Westmoreland in 1421, and lived about 20 years after. His son,

THOMAS BLUNKANSOP, Esq., succeeded him, and was the first of the family who dropped the prefix de. He represented the county of Westmoreland in parliament in 1422. He was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS BLUNKANSOP, Esq., who had settled upon him, on his marriage with his wife Katherine, all the lands in Overton above-mentioned, and certain lands in the village of Tebay. He also appears to have held lands and tenements in Kyrkely-upon-Wyke, co. York. His son and heir,

THOMAS BLUNKANSOP, succeeded. This gentleman, about the 9th Edward IV. (1469-70), married Margaret, daughter and co-heir of Richard Salkeld, Esq., of Corby, and in the 7th Henry VII. (1491-2) articulated with John Brunskill for the building of St. Mary's Chapel, in Brough. By an inquisition of quo warranto, taken in the 19th Henry VII. (1503-4), "against Henry Lord Clifford, the jurors find that Thomas Blunkansop was seised of the manor of Hilbeck with the appurtenances in his demesne as of fee, and being so seised, held the said manor of Henry Lord Clifford by knight's service, namely, by homage, fealty, and scutage, that is to say, when scutage runs at 40s. for each knight's fee, then to pay 40s.; when more, more; and when less, less; and by the corange of 6s., and by the service to do suit at the court of our lord the king in the county of Westmoreland, from month to month, at the king's castle at Appleby; and that the said manor is worth £40 above reprises; and that the said Thomas died in the 18th year of King Henry VII., Thomas, his son and heir, being then seventeen years of age; that the said Henry Lord Clifford had received all the issues and profits of the said manor, during the minority of the said Thomas, the son, and married the said heir to Eleanor, daughter of Robert Leygh, esquire, and received the profits of the said marriage." He was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS BLUNKANSOP, Esq., who, in the 10th Henry VIII., was employed in the king's wars against the Duke of Albany, and set forward the 10th October in the said year, having made his will, and appointed Sir Thomas Rigg, vicar of Brough, together with his wife (if he should die before his return) executors in trust for his younger children. But he returned and lived to make another will. This gentleman was a benefactor to the church of Brough, which he repaired. He served the office of under sheriff of Westmoreland in the 21st Henry VIII. (1529-30). He married Eleanor Leigh, by whom he had a son and heir,

THOMAS BLUNKANSOP, Esq. This gentleman seems to have taken an interest in local affairs, and it is recorded that he gave 20s. 8d. towards the building of the bridge at Brough. He married Magdalene, daughter of Sir Edward Musgrave, of Hartley, by whom he had issue,

I. THOMAS, his heir.

II. Charles.

III. Matthew, steward to Lord Wharton; with several daughters.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS BLUNKANSOP, Esq., who, on his marriage, had settled on him by his father, his whole part and share of the manor of Corby, with its appurtenances. In the 9th Elizabeth (1560-7) he made several purchases at Ellegil in Tebay. He died in 1570, leaving by his wife Margery, daughter of William Wykcliffe, Esq., of Wykcliffe, co. York, with three daughters, who died unmarried,

I. THOMAS, his heir.

II. Henry.

III. Frances.

IV. Barbara, married to Robert Ward, Esq., of Bowes.

V. Katharine, married to John Wareop, Esq., of Wareop.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS BLUNKANSOP, Esq., who was thirty-four years of age at the time of his father's demise, and had livery of his lands in the 14th Elizabeth (1571-2). He was succeeded by his son,

HENRY BLUNKANSOP, Esq., a minor, and ward to Sir Simon Musgrave of Edenhall. He sold his part of Corby to Lord William Howard and others for £770 in 1605. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Tankard, Esq., of Borough-bridge, co. York, and died in 1613, leaving issue,

I. THOMAS, his son and heir.

II. Katherine, who died unmarried.

III. Dorothy, a nun at Lisbon.

IV. Jane, married to Thomas Bird, Esq., of Colby.

V. Frances, died unmarried.

VI. Elizabeth, died unmarried.

VII. Mary, married to Robert Cawell, Esq., of Bolton, Lancashire.

His successor,

THOMAS BLUNKANSOP, Esq., was under age when his father died, and in consequence became ward to the Countess of Cumberland. He married in 1618, Anne, daughter of Sir Edward Osbaldeston of Osbaldeston, co. Lancaster. This Thomas sold the estates at Overton and Segill to the tenants. He also sold part of the manor of Hilbeck, in the 13th Charles I. (1637-8) to Richard Burton, clerk, and in 1757 conveyed the residue of the manor to Thomas Burton, Esq., of Brampton, son of the Richard Burton just mentioned, and one of Cromwell's sequestrators. The Blunkansops were Catholics, and suffered much for their attachment to the old religion from the barbarous penal laws. Mr. Blunkansop was living in 1675, when this account of his family was first written, and had had ten children, viz.:-

I. FRANCIS, his heir.

II. Henry, who died in infancy.

III. Thomas.

IV. John, who also died in infancy.

V. John, died an infant.

VI. Mary, died unmarried.

VII. Elizabeth, died unmarried.

VIII. Anne.

IX. Dorothy.

X. Katherine.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

FRANCIS BLUNKANSOP, Esq., the last of the family of whom any account has come down to our times. He sold the hall and demesne to Major Scaife, another of Cromwell's sequestrators.

Arms.—Arg. a fess. between three garbs, banded sa.; on the fess a crescent, for distinction.

In the year 1687 Richard Burton, clerk, rector of Huntingdon, in the county of Kent, conveyed the manor of Hilbeck to George Bake, Esq., of Crook, in the county of Durham, who, in his turn, conveyed it to Thomas Carleton, Esq., of Appleby, by whom the hall and demesne were purchased in 1726. This Thomas Carleton, Esq., had two daughters, the elder of whom, Elizabeth, became the wife of John Metcalf, Esq., of Bellerby, Yorkshire, and had issue two sons and one daughter. The eldest son, John Metcalf Carleton, Esq., sold the manor to Robert Woodgate, Esq., from whom it was purchased by John Lodge Hubbersty, Esq., by whose family it was sold to Joseph Pitt, Esq. It was subsequently bought by John Barham, Esq., whose widow married Lord Clarendon, who, in right of his wife, sold the manor in 1851 to William Wilkinson, Esq., of Warcop, the present lord; besides whom there are several small landowners and yeomen. In this manor there is a small fine certain upon the death of the lord, or change of tenant. A court leet is annually held at the Black Bull, in Brough.

Hilbeck Hall is a large building, delightfully situated on an eminence, which commands very extensive prospects. It is now occupied as a farm-house.

The village or hamlet of Hilbeck is situated at the foot of Hilbeck Fell, one mile north of Brough.

There are two corn-mills and a brewery in this township.

STAINMORE CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry comprises the township of Stainmore, which is divided into the two districts of Augill Row and Mousgill Row, and contains many scattered hamlets and houses dispersed in deep and narrow gills and thwaites, in which the traveller, while passing the intervening wastes and healthy moorlands, is surprised to see stretched out before him a fertile pasture, watered by small rivers, which carry down a deep channel from the surrounding fells, where sterility wears her wildest and most forbidding aspect.

The area of Stainmore, inclusive of Hilbeck, is 22,468 acres; its rateable value is £3,772. The population in 1801 was 530; in 1811, 512; in 1821, 616; in 1831, 707; in 1841, 611; and in 1851, 549; who reside in two or three small hamlets and in dispersed houses. Agriculture is the principal employment, but some of the inhabitants are engaged in the coal and lead mines, which are worked on a small scale. The soil in the valleys is fertile, but the land is mostly laid out in grass. The Durham and Lancaster line of railway runs through the south-east of the township, where there are two large viaducts, that which crosses the river Bela being 200 feet high, and that which crosses the Mosgill 107 feet. Kirkby Stephen is the market usually attended.

Of the British period of the history of this country we have no remains in this township. The Romans, while in occupation of Britain, erected one of their castles here, the site of which has long been known as Maiden Castle. This Roman fort stood on the line of Roman road from Bowes to Brough, four miles east of the latter place. About ten years ago some Roman coins of silver were found in the peat-moss, not far from Maiden Castle, and are now in the possession of Mr. Hill, of Appleby. Of the Anglo-Saxon period of our history, Stainmore furnishes us with no more than its own name. Of the Norman period we have the remains of Rear Cross, or Rere Cross, called by the Scottish writers Roy Cross, which, according to Boethius, was erected as a boundary mark between England and Scotland when Cumberland was ceded to the latter country by William the Conqueror. This relic of by-gone days stands on the top of Stainmore, on the Westmoreland side. A short distance from it, but in the adjoining county of York, an hospital was erected by the abbey of Marrick; but which, after the dissolution of the religious houses, was converted into an inn, where guides could be obtained to accompany travellers over the dreary wastes of Stainmore. It is recorded that Joseph Horn, a blind man, frequently acted as a guide. Previous to the formation of the present road from Bowes to Brough, six hours were required to travel that distance between the two places.

The manor of Stainmore has descended along with that of Brough. In the reign of Henry III. we find Adam de Slegill forester of Stainmore under the Veteriponts. The forest of Stainmore is very extensive. It is not all comprised in the parish of Brough, the southern portion being in that of Kirkby Stephen, and the eastern portion in that of Bowes, in Yorkshire. Sir Richard Tufton is the present lord of the manor, besides whom the Rev. James Saurey, Michael Ewbanke, Matthew Ewbanke, Rev. E. Heelis, William Hope, Anne Robson, Thomas Raine, Philip Robson, James Cleasby Richard Dixon, John Adamthwaite, Benjamin Burnop, John Brogdon, Robert Birkbeck, with various other yeomen, are the landowners. There is a court leet and court baron held annually by the lord of the manor, at the White Swan, Brough, at the beginning of October. There is a customary fine of 10d. at the death of the lord or change of tenant.

THE CHAPUL.

Stainmore chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, stands at Dummah Hill. It is a neat Gothic structure, erected in 1859, at the sole expense of the Rev. Lancelot Jefferson, vicar of Brough, and consists of nave and chancel, with small bell turret, containing one bell. The windows are lancet-shaped, the eastern one containing three lights. The chapel will accommodate nearly 200 persons. Baptisms are performed here, but neither marriages nor funerals. The previous chapel served for a free school in former times, having been built for that purpose in 1594, and endowed with £8 a year by Cuthbert Buckle, to be paid out of the Spital estate to the schoolmaster. The school-house, which the inhabitants had built, was consecrated as a chapel in 1608; and was, in 1693, repaired by Thomas Earl of Thanet. The earl also enclosed a large parcel of waste land, called Slapestones, and granted the same to fourteen trustees, for the benefit of the curate and schoolmaster, who now derive from it upwards of £50 a year, and have also the above-mentioned rent charge divided between them. The said earl also gave £200, and the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty £200, with which the Raisgill Hall estate in Orton parish was purchased and annexed to the curacy. It consisted of forty acres, but at the enclosure was increased to eighty acres, now let for about £30 a year. The curacy afterwards received £200 from the Countess Dowager Gower, with which an estate of thirty acres near the chapel was purchased. The living, a perpetual curacy, is now worth £170 a year, out of which the incumbent pays £40 a year to a schoolmaster.

INCUMBENTS.—James Uinton, senior, James Futton, junior; those two gentlemen, father and son, held the living for about a century; James Sawrey, 1827; J. Irving, 1857.

The parsonage house, a plain building, stands near the church.

The Methodists have two small places of worship in the township.

Augill Row is that part of Stainmore chapelry lying north of the Augill-beck, and extending from one and a half to six miles east of Brough. In this division is a large estate called Borrenthwaite, belonging to Mr. Michael Ewbanke, and containing rich pastures and meadow land; the hamlet of Light Trees, three miles and a half south-east of Brough, where there are seams of coal; Park Houses, one mile and a half east of Church Brough, where there was formerly a park belonging to the castle; and Dummah Hill, where there is a good public house, are all in Augill Row division.

Augill Castle, about one mile east of Brough, the seat and property of John B. Pearson, Esq., is an extensive Gothic building, with six massive towers,—four at the front and two at the west end. The conservatory is forty yards long, and the opening cloister of the same length, has a splendid groined ceiling. In the main tower, which is twenty-one yards in height, is a spacious staircase twelve feet broad, with one of the most splendid windows in the north of England, designed from Melrose Abbey, in Scotland. The doors of the drawing-room are in the decorated style of architecture, and its chimney-piece is of beautiful white marble. The library and its stained glass window are designed from those at Abbotford. In this window are the armorial bearings of the Pearsons, and in the centre is St. Peter, holding a key in each hand. This mansion was commenced in 1841, by its present occupant, and takes its name from the rivulet which runs a little to the north of the building. The view of the Cumberland mountains which is obtained from the summit of its main tower is truly magnificent.

Mousgill Row is the southern portion of Stainmore chapelry, stretching from two and a half to seven miles south-east of Brough, and containing the hamlets of Ewbank, four miles and a half south-east; Strice Gill, two miles and a half south-east; and Oxenthwaite, two miles and a half south-east of Brough. The latter stands on a lofty eminence, and in the deep dale below it is some rich grazing land.

At Black Cragg several species of marine shells have been found embedded two feet in the rock.

Sir Cuthbert Buckle, who was born at Stainmore, was lord mayor of London in 1593. He gave a handsome reading desk to Brough church, and built the bridge at Stainmore, still bearing the name of Buckle Bridge. William Thompson, author of the poem on "Sickness," in four books, and of some political poems, was born at Brough.

There are two public-houses in the south part of the township, at a place called the Slip Inn; and others in the north part at Dummah Hill.

Augill and Dowgill, with other streams, have their source in the hills here, and after a course of from six to seven miles fall into the river Bcla.

CROSBY GARRET PARISH.

This parish, which is situated between the river Eden and Crosby Fell, is bounded on the north by the parishes of Ashby, Ormside, Warsop, Musgrave, and Kirkby Stephen; on the west by the parishes of Ravenstonedale and Orton; on the south by the parish of Ravenstonedale; and on the east by Musgrave and Kirkby Stephen. It consists of the townships of Crosby Garret and Little Musgrave, lying on each side of the chapelry of Soulby, which is in the parish of Kirkby Stephen. Crosby Fell is a lofty green eminence, at the south-west end of the parish, below which the soil is a fertile loam resting on clay.

CROSBY GARRET.

The area of this township is 3,008 acres. The population in 1801 was 177; in 1811, 194; in 1821, 193; in 1841, 202; and in 1851, 214.

The first possessors of Crosby Garret on record are the Soulbys, one of whom, William de Soulby, occurs as early as the year 1206, when he appears to have been under age, and a ward of Isabella, daughter of the last Robert de Veteripont. In the next generation we find the manor in the hands of the Musgraves, and it is very probable that it came to them in marriage, as William de Soulby had a daughter Jean, who is mentioned about this period. In the 8th Edward II. (1314-15) Richard de Musgrave occurs as holding Crosby Garret and Little Musgrave, as also a moiety of the manor of Orton; the cornage paid for the three amounting to 26s. 3d. In the 43rd Edward III. (1369-70) Peter Morland, John de Kabergh, and the Prior of Walton held the manor of Crosby Garret (probably as trustees in a settlement) paying 8s. 6½d. cornage. In the 15th Richard II. (1391-2) Thomas de Musgrave and the Prior of Walton held Crosby Garret, by homage, fealty, and 10s. 1d. cornage. In the 10th Henry V. (1442) Richard Musgrave held the manor, paying the cornage just mentioned; and in the 31st Henry VI. (1452-3) Richard Musgrave, Knt., held three parts, and the prior of Walton the fourth part, of the manor of Crosby Garret, paying 8s. 6d. cornage. Crosby Garret continued to be held by the Musgraves till the reign of Charles I., when Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart., conveyed the manor and advowson to Sir Richard Musgrave, Knt., his eldest son, who had issue only two daughters, the elder of whom died an infant, and the other daughter, Mary, was married to John Davison, Esq., of Blakeston, in the county of Durham. Early in the eighteenth century the manor and advowson were sold to Thomas Gale, Esq., of Whitehaven; who, by his last will and testament devised the same to the Rev. William Bird, whose grandson, of the same name, sold them for a term of three lives, and they are at present held by William Crawford, Esq. The land-owners are the Earl of Lonsdale, Jonathan Alderson, S. Greenwood, D. Fawcett, John Sewell, Matthew Thompson, Isabella Stowell, and many other small proprietors.

The village of Crosby Garret lies in a deep secluded vale, at the foot of Crosby Fell, three and a half miles west-by-north of Kirkby Stephen. Its name was formerly written Crosby Gerrard, which means the cross town, or village of Gerrard, supposed to be the name of one of its ancient owners.

THE CHURCH.

Crosby Garret church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is an ancient Gothic structure, consisting of nave, aisles, and chancel, with a small turret containing two bells. The chancel is kept in repair by the lord of the manor. Inside of the communion rails is a neat marble tablet to the memory of several members of the family of Bird, both clergy and laity, from 1723 to 1822. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £19 4s. 4½d., and certified at £47 2s. 6d. to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, who subsequently gave £200 for its augmentation, which sum, together with £200 given by the Rev. James Bird, was expended in the purchase of a piece of land near the church. A modus of twelve guineas a year was formerly paid in lieu of the hay and corn tithes of Crosby Garret, and £5 for those of Little Musgrave; but the whole of the tithes have been commuted for an annual rent-charge of £88 14s.; besides which the rector has about seventy-four acres of glebe land and a good house and garden. The living is now worth £127 a year. The advowson seems to have been always attached to the manor; William Crawford, Esq., is the present patron. The parish registers commence in 1550.

Rectors.—Thomas de Burch, sub Mora, 1296; Henry Sanford, 1304; John de Calve, 1381; Laurence Shaw, died 1505-6; Richard Fallowfield, 1505-6; Edmund Maulerorer, 1606; Christopher Jackson, ejected 1602; Thomas Denton, 1602; Joseph Parsons, 1702; James Fawcett, 1713; William Bird, 1717; James Bird, 1742; James Fenton, 1763; William Bird, 1760; Thomas Bird, 1822; Mark Nerby, 1832.

The rectory is a plain commodious dwelling.

A Baptist chapel was erected here in 1815, by Mr. George Greenwood. It is a neat structure, in the Gothic style; the Rev. William Fawcett is minister.

CHARITIES.

The School.—The school of Crosby Garret possesses the following endowments:—£10 given in 1682 by Reginald Robinson; £2 10s. given in 1683 by James Bell; £40 given in 1684 by Thomas Bowland; £2 10s. given in 1732 by Isabella Bird; and several smaller donations. The school stock was laid out, together with a poor stock belonging to the parish, in the purchase of lands at Waitby. These lands were sold in 1803, and produced £300, of which £220 8s. 6d. was invested in the purchase of £399 1s. 9d. stock in the Three-per-cent Consols. The dividends amount to £11 19s. 4d., out of which 6s. are paid to the rector, who retains one shilling, giving the rest to such poor persons as he thinks fit, and 1s. 6d. a year is applied to the repairs of Smardale Bridge. The rest is divided into two equal parts, and half given to the schoolmaster, and the other half to the overseers, who carry it to the poor rates. Before the estate was sold the rent was divided in the same manner. The school is also entitled every other year to a payment of 5s. from lands at Sandford, in accordance with a bequest of John Symson, of Sandford, who in 1648 gave to the use of the school at Crosby Garret and Warcop 5s. a year, to be paid one year to Crosby and one year to Warcop. The school has also received an additional benefaction from Thomas Wilson, who, by will, dated 16th of April, 1767, gave £80 to the minister of Crosby Garret for the time being, and to two trustees, to pay one half of the interest to the schoolmaster of Crosby, for the education of the poor children, boys if poorest, to be nominated by the trustees; the other half of the interest to go to the education of three poor children of Souby; on account of this bequest 30s. a year are paid to the schoolmaster at Crosby Garret for teaching the poor children; and a similar sum is paid to the schoolmaster of Souby. The total income of the school is now about £9 a year.

Poor Stock.—£10 given by Reginald Robinson to the poor stock of Crosby Garret in 1682, the interest to be divided at Easter by the parson and churchwardens; £2 by George Robertson in the same year; £2 10s. by James Bell in 1683; £40 by Thomas Bowland in 1684; £10 by Richard Bell in 1687; £3 by an unknown hand in 1709; £2 10s. by Isabella Bird in 1732; making a total of £70. The investment of these sums in land, and the subsequent sale of that land, has been already stated in the account of the school. Half of the rent of the land, and half of the dividends of the stock since the sale of the land (deducting 7s. 6d. as before mentioned), has always been carried to the account of the poor rates.

Rev. William Bird's Charity.—The Rev. Wm. Bird, who died in February, 1822, left by will £50 to the poor of Crosby Garret, not directing whether the interest was to be distributed annually or the principal sum given away.

LITTLE MUSGRAVE.

The area of this township is 1,216 acres, and its rateable value is £851 18s. 2d. Its population in 1801 amounted to 68; in 1811, 66; in 1821, 80; in 1831, 75; in 1841, 72; and in 1851, 63; who are engaged in agriculture. The soil is principally good, on a clay sub-soil. The Eden Valley railway runs through the township.

The manor of Little Musgrave, which is separated from that of Great Musgrave by the river Eden, has been held by the Musgrave family from time immemorial. In the reign of Charles II. Sir Christopher Musgrave, Knight, member of parliament for Westmoreland, resided here during the lifetime of his elder brother Sir Richard. The landowners are Sir George Musgrave, Bart. (who is also lord of the manor); Matthew Thompson, Esq.; John Loy; Rev. Mr. Col-linson, and several yeomen.

Poor Stock.—There is in this township a poor stock of £30, the interest of which is distributed annually to poor widows.

DUFTON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Milbourn Forest, on the west by Long Marton parish, on the south by Mutton and Warcop Fells, and on the east by the river Tees, which separates it from the county of Durham. It is a mountainous district, containing excellent veins of lead ore. In the neighbourhood of this parish the Tees expands into a broad lake, called the Wheel, and forms the cataract known as Calderon Snout. Dufton parish has no dependent townships.

The area of Dufton is 18,129 acres, and its rateable value £2,164 3s. 6d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 392; in 1811, 489; in 1821, 511; in 1831, 554; in 1841, 466; and in 1851, 488 souls; who are chiefly resident in the village of Dufton, and some scattered farm-houses. Appleby is the market usually attended. The inhabitants are principally engaged in agriculture and lead mining. The Dufton Fell Mining Company has extensive works here, access to which is gained by numerous shafts, which vary in depth from thirty to sixty fathoms. The strata bored through here are the Melmerby Scar limestone, twenty fathoms in thickness; the Robinson limestone, four and a half fathoms; the Little ditto, five fathoms; the Rough ditto, four fathoms; the Smeddy ditto, five fathoms; the Little ditto, ten fathoms; the Jew ditto, four fathoms; the Tyne Bottom, four and a half fathoms; the Cockle ditto, two and a half fathoms; and the Scar ditto, two and two-thirds fathoms.

The Greystoke family are the first recorded possessors of Dufton after the Norman Conquest; of its history previous to that period we have no account. By an inquisition taken in the 9th Edward II. (1335-6), it appears that at that period Ralph de Greystoke held the manor of Dufton, Brampton, Bolton, and Yanwath, the wardship of which was worth 100 marks a year, and the cornage 25s. 6d. Another inquisition, taken in the 10th Henry V. (1422), informs us that John, son of Ralph de Greystoke, held the manors just named, with the same cornage as before. Again, in the 31st Henry VI. (1452-3), it was found by inquisition that Ralph Lord Greystoke held of Lord Thomas Clifford, Yanwath, Bolton, Brampton, and Dufton; and that Lancelot Threlkeld held Yanwath of the said Ralph, Nicholas Radcliff held Bolton, and Thomas de Lancaster held Brampton, while Dufton was held by Lord Dacre himself. In the 4th Edward IV. (1464-5), Ralph Baron of Greystoke was still possessor. He died in the 2nd Henry VII. (1486-7), when it was found at the time of his demise he was seised of the manor of Dufton, and the advowson of the church there, held of Henry Lord Clifford, as of his manor of Appleby, by the service of rendering to the said lord 25s. 6d. yearly for cornage, and by suit to the county court at Appleby yearly from month to month, and that Elizabeth Greystoke, his grand-daughter, was his kinswoman and heir, being the daughter and heir of Robert Greystoke, Knight, son and heir of the aforesaid Ralph. This Elizabeth was married to Thomas Lord Dacre of Gilsland, and brought with her Dufton into that family. By an inquisition of knights' fees in Westmoreland, in the 18th Henry VIII. (1526-7), it appears that William Dacre, Knight, lord of Dacre, held then the manor of Dufton; and by a like inquisition in 1554 he appears also to have held the same. This family of Dacres ended in daughters, co-heirs, on the demise, unmarried, of George Lord Dacre, when the inheritance came to his three sisters, the eldest of whom, Anne, married Philip Howard, earl of Arundel, eldest son of the Duke of Norfolk, and in the partition of the estates Dufton became her property. She had a son and heir, Thomas Earl of Arundel, whose son and heir, Henry Earl of Arundel, granted a lease of the lordship of Dufton for ninety-nine years to Sir Christopher Clapham, Knight, in which lease the clause prohibiting having been omitted, he cut down all the wood called Dufton Wood, and sold it for more than the estate cost him. The remainder of the term, and afterwards the perpetuity of the estate, was purchased by John Winder, Esq., of Lorton, in Cumberland, who was succeeded by his son and heir William Winder, Esq., who, dying without issue, demised the same to Edward Milward, Esq., son of the Rev. Thomas Milward, M.A., rector of Marton and Kirkby Thore. In 1785 it was purchased by the Earl of Thanet, from whom it has descended to the present possessor, Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., besides whom the Rev. Edward Heelis, Rev. Thomas Jackson, Messrs. Allison, John and Thomas Boyles, Robert Blencarn, senior, Robert Blencarn, junior, Thomas Blencarn, John Elwood, John E. Robinson, Thomas Watson, John Milner, and others, are landowners.

Dufton Hall, a very ancient building on the north side of the village, is now occupied as a farm-house.

The village of Dufton, which is small but well built, is about three miles and a half north of Appleby. It is situated on the south side of a rivulet, which rises in Scardale Head and flows westward to the river Eden. It is very probable that its name is derived from the Scandinavian proper name Duf, and the affix ton signifying the town or village of Duf.

THE CHURCH.

Dufton church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a plain substantial edifice, about half a mile north of the village. It was rebuilt in 1775, and underwent considerable repairs in 1853. It consists of nave, chancel, and tower containing two bells. All the windows are filled with stained glass, and the seats are low and open. Take it altogether, Dufton church is one of the neatest country churches in the county. There are a few mural monuments. The patronage of this living has always been appendant to the manor, and is now enjoyed by Sir Richard Tufton, Bart. The living is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £19 2s. 6d.

Three large stunted pastures, containing 2,500 acres, were enclosed here in 1827, when about forty acres were allotted to the rectory in lieu of tithes for that part of the parish; and in 1847, the tithes of Dufton were commuted for an annual rent-charge of £148. The value of the living is about £250 a year. The parish register commences in 1560.

RECTORS.—Sir Robert —, died 1393; Henry de Waley, 1293; Matthew de Romaw occurs 1315; Roger de Kendal, 1344; William Hawys, resigned, 1340; Robert de Holton, 1340; William de Brampton, died 1366; William de Threlkeld, 1366; Robert Coldall, 1412; Roland Threlkeld, died 1566; John Dent, 1566; Christopher Walker, 1575; Richard Burton, 1625; Simon Webster, 1661; James Buchanan, 1675; John Lindsey, 1680; William Gibbon, 1728; Thomas Milward, 1736; William Milner, 1762; John Heelis, 1803; Edward Heelis, 1823; Edward Jackson, 1833; Joseph R. Henderson, 1840.

The rectory is a fine house, in the neighbourhood of the church, erected in 1821 by the then rector, the Rev. John Heelis.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels in the village.

The parish school possesses an endowment.

CHARITIES.

Todd's Charity.—Michael Todd, by will, dated August 11th, 1692, devised to his wife, Mary Todd, all his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold property, during her life and widowhood, charged after her decease with the payment of the following annuities, viz.:—£5 to the churchwardens of Dufton, to be distributed at Michaelmas among the poor people of the said parish; £4 a year to the said churchwardens, to be employed in the binding and putting apprentice to some trade two poor boys, natives of the said parish; £4 yearly to the schoolmaster of Dufton for the time being; 10s. a year to the minister of Dufton for a sermon on Michaelmas Day, or the Sunday after; and 20s. a year to be distributed among twenty poor men of the said parish, who should be present at the said sermon, share and share alike. These charities, amounting to £14 10s. per annum, were charged upon premises at Knowle Green, in the county of Middlesex, subsequently exchanged for lands, &c., at Dufton, which in consequence became charged with the annuities. Arrears having taken place in the payment of these various charges to the amount of £123 10s., that sum when obtained, was, with £76 10s. hereafter mentioned, called St. Thomas's Money, amounting altogether to £200, put out at interest, which is distributed annually with the annuities as specified above.

St. Thomas's Money.—Walker's Charity.—In Nicolson and Burn's "History of Westmoreland" (page 358) it is stated that Christopher Walker, by will, in 1670, gave £40, the interest thereof to go to a schoolmaster at Dufton, to be appointed by the rector, the lord's bailiff, and six sufficient men of the town of Dufton. It is understood that this legacy forms part of the sum of £76 10d. known as St. Thomas's Money, as above mentioned, the residue of which is supposed to be ancient poor stock. The interest of £40 is accordingly applied to the use of the schoolmaster; and the interest of the remaining £36 10s. is annually applied on St. Thomas's Day for the use of the poor, in sums varying from 2s. to 5s. each.

Richardson's Charity.—Joseph Richardson, by will, dated 14th February, 1799, gave £100 stock in the Four per Cents. in trust, to be paid to the churchwardens of Dufton, the interest to be given to the poor of the parish yearly on St. Thomas's Day. This charity is distributed as directed.

HARTLEY.

This township contains an area of 3,350 acres, and its rateable value is £1,819 4s. 11d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 139; in 1811, 141; in 1821, 136; in 1831, 125; in 1841, 158; and in 1851, 177; who reside principally in the village of Hartley, and some scattered farmhouses. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants. The soil in the vale is a good fertile loam, and the greater portion of the township is devoted to pasturage. Hartley is intersected by the Durham and Lancaster railway, which crosses the Podd Gill by a splendid viaduct of eleven lofty arches, and the Merry Gill by one of nine arches. Kirkby Stephen is the market usually attended.

The manor of Hartley appears to have belonged to the family of Harcla, or Hercla, at a very early period. This family occurs as owners of the manor of Dalton in Cumberland as early as the first year of the reign of Edward I. (1272-3). In the fourteenth year of the same king's reign (1285-6) they occur as holding the manor of Hartley under the Veteriponts. In the 8th Edward II. (1314-15) it was found by inquisition that Andrew de Hercla held the manors of Hartley and Smardale; and that the wardship of the former, when it should happen, was worth £40 a year, and of Smardale £6 13s. 4d.; and the cornage for them both was 26s. In the fifteenth year of the same king (1321-2) this Andrew de Hercla was created Earl of Carlisle, to him and the heirs male of his body; which is the first record that mentions the curtail of a title to the heir male. He afterwards, in the reign of the same king, rebelled against Edward, "and," as Capgrave says, "drow to the Scottis, and favoured ther part ageyn the kyng. Thanne was there a nobil knyte in that cuntre, cleped Sir Anthony Lucy; he, supposing to stand the bettir in the kyngis grace, soodeynly fel upon this tyrant at Karlhil, took him, put him in yrunnes, and brout him to London to the kyng, and there was he schamefully deposed of alle worship, and deed as a tretoure." Well might the old monk write "schamefully deposed of alle worship," for the sentence on Sir Andrew de Hercla, earl of Carlisle, ran to this effect:—"He and his heirs are to lose the dignity of the earldom for ever; he is to be ungirt of his sword, and his golden spurs are to be hacked from his heels. He is further adjudged to be drawn, hanged, and beheaded; one of his quarters to be hanged at the top of the tower of Carlisle, another at the top of the tower of Newcastle, the third on the bridge at York, the fourth at Shrewsbury, and his head to be spiked on London Bridge." But the memory of this warrior lay green in the heart of his sister Sarah. When the restless, changeful king, had fallen by the hands of assassins, and his high-spirited son had come to the throne, though the crows and kites had feasted on the flesh of her brother's body, and its bones had whitened to the sun and the storm, fit burial was obtained for the relics. The king's prerogative was exercised for their sacred solace in the following formula:—"The king to his beloved and faithful Anthony de Lucy, warden of the castle of Carlisle, greeting. We command you that you cause to be delivered without delay the quarter of the body of Andrew de Hercla, which hangs by the command of the Lord Edward, late king of England, our father, upon the walls of the said castle, to our beloved Sarah, formerly the wife of Robert de Leyburn, sister to the aforesaid Andrew, to whom we of our grace have granted that she may collect together the bones of the same Andrew, and commit them to holy sepulture, whenever she wishes, or to her attorney. And this you shall in no wise omit. Witness the king at York, the tenth day of August, by the king himself." The like letters were directed to the authorities of the towns in which the earl's remains had been exposed. The record of this mandate is on the Close Roll of the tenth year of King Edward III., among the great chancery records of the country. On the attainder of Sir Andrew Hercla, as above-mentioned, the manor of Hartley was granted to the Nevilles of Raby, who sold it to Sir Thomas Musgrave, Knight, in whose posterity it still continues, Sir George Musgrave, Bart., being the present lord of the manor.

The family of Musgrave often resided at Hartley Castle, during which time it was kept in good repair. Nicholson and Burn tell us "it was a noble building, standing upon an eminence, and overlooking the village of Hartley, the town of Kirkby Stephen, and many other villages." Sir Christopher Musgrave demolished the greater portion of this castle, a few remains of which may still be seen.

The principal landowners are Sir George Musgrave, Bart.; Thomas Robinson, Esq., Matthew, Chamley; Mr. C. Harker; with some other small proprietors.

KIRKBY STEPHEN PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by the parishes of Brough and Warcop, on the west by those of Crosby Garret and Ravenstonedale, and on the south and east by Yorkshire. It is very extensive, being about ten miles in length, and averaging about five in breadth. The district is rugged and uneven, consisting of lofty fells, hills, and valleys. The river Eden rises at the southern extremity of the parish, receiving in its course many tributary streams; the Smardale rivulet flows down its western side, and on its northern limit is the river Belo; there are also a number of small becks. The land in the valleys is tolerably fertile, and some of the higher lands and fells afford good pasturage for cattle. The parish comprises the townships of Kirkby Stephen, Hartley, Kaber, Nateby, Smardale, Waitby, Warton, and Winton, and the two chapelries of Mallerstang and Soulbys, whose united area is 27,921 acres. Lead, copper, and a variety of minerals are found in this parish.

KIRKBY STEPHEN.

The area of this township is 3,522 acres, and its rateable value £2,925 6s. 3d. The population in 1801 was 1,141; in 1811, 1,235; in 1821, 1,312; in 1831, 1,409; in 1841, 1,345; and in 1851, 1,339; who are principally resident in the town of Kirkby Stephen. Agriculture is the principal employment. The manor of Kirkby Stephen in the time of Roger Lord Clifford was held by his family as parcel of the manor of Brough; part of it has been sold off, and it now belongs to Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., Sir George Musgrave, Bart., and the Earl of Lonsdale. Courts are generally held by each lord annually. The landowners are Matthew Thompson, Esq.; Miss Thompson; Matthew Robinson, Esq.; James Brougham, Esq.; Mrs. Stowell; Messrs. Isaac Sowerby, Joseph and John Thompson, and many smaller proprietors. The soil in this township is a good fertile loam. The Eden Valley railway terminates a little south of the town, on the Kendal road. A station is in course of erection, which will serve for the Eden Valley line as well as for the North Durham and Lancaster.

THE TOWN OF KIRKBY STEPHEN.

The ancient market town of Kirkby Stephen is situated on the left bank of the Eden, eleven miles south-east from Appleby, and consists principally of one long street, extending from north to south. The houses have a clean and respectable appearance. Of the foundation of the town we possess no authentic information. Its name, Kirkby Stephen, or the church town of Stephen, brings us back to the time of the Danish settlements in this part of England, but whether a town existed here previous to their coming we have now no means of ascertaining. In the 25th Edward III. (1351-2) Roger de Clifford, baron of Westmoreland, obtained a charter for a market to be held here on Friday, and two yearly fairs on St. Mark's and St. Luke's Days, and the day following. James I., by his charter, in 1606, granted to George Earl of Cumberland, instead of the foregoing markets and fairs, "one market on Monday and two fairs yearly; one on the Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday after Whitsuntide, and the other on the two days next before the feast of St. Luke, and on that feast day, with a court of piepowder, tolls, tollages, and other jurisdiction thereunto belonging." In accordance with this charter the market is still held on Monday, and is well attended. The Whitsuntide fair is obsolete; but St. Luke's fair is noted for a very extensive show of sheep, and is proclaimed by the lord's bailiff with the usual formalities. Two other fairs for sheep and cattle are held here in spring, viz., on the Monday before March 20th, and April 24th; there is also one on the 29th of October. The horse fair, held on the day previous to Brough Hill fair, is the largest. The market-place, which is tolerably spacious, has a middle row of shops, and on its north side a convenient market-house and piazza, called the cloister, on account of its being raised over the entrance to the churchyard. It was erected in 1810. The upper part of the building rests on eight stone pillars. The markets and fairs of Kirkby Stephen seem to have been of considerable importance for a lengthened period. Hollinshed, in his chronicles, published in 1577, mentions one of the spring fairs. Burn and Nicolson say that "Kirkby Stephen is a considerable market town, noted for the sale of a great number of stockings knit there and in the neighbourhood," for many years this species of manufacture has ceased to be of any importance. About sixty years ago an attempt was made to establish a manufactory of coarse woollen hats here, and about the same time a cotton mill was attempted, but without success. A tannery was also commenced here, but with no better result. The curfew is still rung in Kirkby Stephen.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a venerable structure, consisting of nave, aisle, north and south transepts, chancel, and a lofty tower, containing four bells. The nave is in a very dilapidated state, but the other parts of the church have been recently restored. The chancel was rebuilt by subscription in 1847, at a cost of £1,290, half of which was contributed by the vicar. The chapel belonging to Hartley Castle was restored in 1849, by Sir George Musgrave, Bart., at an expense of £300; and the Wharton chapel was rebuilt by subscription in 1850. During these restorations several antiquities, &c., were discovered. Previous to the rebuilding of the chancel there stood under the arch, which divided the chancel from the Hartley chapel, a tomb, which has been removed to the north-west corner of that chapel, its site being required for a pillar. It is a fine altar tomb, ornamented with carved niches on each side, but the figures which stood in them are defaced. On the tomb is the recumbent figure of a knight in armour; his gauntleted hands being uplifted in the attitude of prayer. It is traditionally said to be the tomb of Sir Andrew Hercla, who was beheaded by Edward II. (see page 740). At the time of the removal two skeletons were discovered in a vault under the tomb. The bones were re-interred in an old stone coffin, which had been taken out of the ground on the south side of the tomb thirty years previous, when some workmen were repairing the floor. It should be stated, that it is the opinion of many that the effigy just mentioned is that of some member of the Musgrave family, to whom, as owners of Hartley Castle, the chapel belongs. At the time of rebuilding the chancel, on raising the old flags, the foundation of an old Norman wall, which ran across the chancel, were discovered, and is supposed to be all that remains of the Norman church which formerly stood upon the site occupied by the present church. In the chapel belonging to Wharton Hall is an elaborate altar tomb, on which recline three full-length figures of Thomas, the first Lord Wharton, the hero of Sollow Moss, in complete armour, who died in 1568; on his right side open to all the boys of the town and neighbourhood for grammar, the master receiving five shillings per quarter for other subjects of education.

There is also a boarding and day school for ladies in the town.

The Temperance Hall and Literary Institution is a neat structure, erected by subscription in 1856, at a cost of about £600. The hall is spacious, and has a gallery at the end. The library and reading-room are well supplied with books, periodicals, papers, &c.

There is a book club and reading-room in the market-place, and also a book club at the Post-office.

CHARITIES.

John, Eleanor, and William Thompson's Charities.—John Thompson, by will, in 1718, gave £100 to be laid out in land, the rent of which he directed should be employed as follows:—Half for helping poor children in Kirkby Stephen to learning, and the other half for helping some of the poorest boys in the same town to trades. He also directed that his executors should take care that £40 was provided by them for the poor of Kirkby Stephen, and that the interest should be given to them every year, at Christmas time. Eleanor Thompson, by will, in 1747, gave to the poor of Kirkby Stephen, for ever, the sum of £40, the interest of which was to be distributed yearly to the uses mentioned above. The sum total of these charities, £180, was further increased by £11 given by William Thompson, and this £191 was expended in the purchase of land, the rent of which is distributed as above directed.

Dorothy Munkhouse's Charity, and Jane Hartley's Charity.—Dorothy Munkhouse, by will, dated 2nd June, 1755, gave the interest of £50, for ever, for the purchase of six loaves of bread to be given in the parish church of Kirkby Stephen every Sunday, to six poor persons residing within the parish. Jane Hartley, in 1713, left £100, the interest of which she directed should be given in bread to the poor.

Philip Waller's Charity.—The particulars of Philip Waller's bequest of £3 18s. yearly, for bread to the poor of this parish, have been fully given in our account of the parish of Brough.

Robert Barnett's Charity.—Robert Barnett, about the year 1780, gave £100 Four-per-cent Stock, the interest to be given away in six threepenny loaves weekly, to six poor persons of the parish.

Nelson and Bliss's Charity.—Joseph Nelson, of Kirkby Stephen, being desirous of granting a rent charge of £2 12s. a year, to be applied in the purchase of six twopenny loaves weekly throughout the year, to be distributed amongst certain poor persons of the parish, died without being able to carry his design into effect, whereupon William Bliss, as a token of his respect and esteem for the memory of the said Joseph Nelson, granted an annuity of £2 12s. a year, arising out of his close at Millriggs, within the townfields of Penrith, upon trust, to lay out the same for the purchase of six twopenny loaves, and to distribute the same every Sunday to poor persons belonging to the parish.

John Waller's Charity.—John Waller, by will, dated 30th July, 1808, gave to the vicar, churchwardens, and overseers of the parish of Kirkby Stephen, £1,000 Four-per-cent Consols, for the poor of that parish, the interest to be paid half-yearly, as the dividends should become due, and to be distributed in such portions as they should think best. By the payment of £100 legacy duty, this bequest was reduced to £900, the dividends for which are received regularly; but the distribution is only made once a year, when the different officers of the parish meet for that purpose. The overseer of each township receives the share allotted to him for distribution, and it is given away in each township to the poor who need it.

Ann Thompson's Charity.—By indenture, dated 27th June, 1821, enrolled in Chancery, Ann Thompson charged certain property belonging to her with the payment of £6 a year, for the purchase of bread for the poor of Kirkby Stephen parish; and also with the payment of a like sum, for the same purpose, for the benefit of the poor of the townships of Langdale and Tebay, in the parish of Orton.

Higmore's Charity.—For the particulars of this charity see Waitby and Swardale school.

Lord Wharton's Charity.—The vicar of Kirkby Stephen annually receives, on account of this charity, forty bibles and forty-eight catechisms, together with 10s. for distribution, and every third year the further sum of 10s. for a sermon. He distributes the bibles and catechisms to the most deserving poor.

Edward Barnett's Charity.—In the parliamentary returns of 1786 it is stated that Edward Barnett gave £20 to the poor of this parish. This charity appears to have been lost.

For the other charities of the parish see the different townships.

POOR-LAW UNION.

The East Ward Poor-law Union has its workhouse in Kirkby Stephen. The union is divided into three sub-districts, viz., Appleby, comprising Newbiggin, Milbourne, Temple Sowerby, Kirkby Thore, Long Marton, Dufton, Crackenthorpe, Murton, Hilton, Bongate, Appleby, Scattergate, Colly, Burdels, Half and Row, Drybeck, and Ormside; Kirkby Stephen, including Warcop, Great Musgrave, Brough, Hilbeck, Stainmore, Brough Sowerby, Kaber, Winton, Hartley, Kirkby Stephen, Nateby, Wharton, Mallerstang, Smardale, Waithy, Soulby, Little Musgrave, and Crosby Garret; Orton, embracing Ravenstonedale, Orton, and Asby. The area of the union is 177,910 statute acres. Its population in 1851 was 13,600, of whom 6,830 were males and 6,830 females. The number of inhabited houses at the same period was 2,824, of uninhabited 147, and twelve were in course of erection. The receipts of the union for the year ending the 25th March, 1859, amounted to £3,839 3s. 8d.; the expenditure for the same period was £3,898 17s. 11d.

KABER.

Kaber township comprises an area of 3,962 acres, and its rateable value is £1,956 14s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 135; in 1811, 152; in 1821, 164; in 1831, 180; in 1841, 214; and in 1851, 207. The Durham and Lancaster railway passes through the south-east end of the township.

The first recorded possessor of the manor of Kaber is Robert de Kabergh, who lived in the reign of Henry II. Another Robert de Kabergh occurs in the reign of King John; and in the 8th Edward II. (1314-15), an Alan de Kabergh, who held Kaber by homage, fealty, and 17s. 8d. cornage. In the next king's reign we find Kaber, or at least a part of it, in the possession of Thomas de Rookby, who obtained from Edward IV. a grant of free warren in his lands there; and in the 31st of the same king's reign (1357-8), John de Rookby levied a fine of the moiety of the manor of Kaber; or rather, as is observed by Nicolson and Burn, "this seems to denote the village of Rookby as being part of the manor of Kaber at large." The Fulthorps next occur as holders of the manor, possessing it from the 43rd Edward III. (1369-70) till the first Philip and Mary (1554). It came afterwards to the Wandesforths of Kirklington, in the county of York, by whom it was conveyed, in the 2nd James I. (1604-5), to Robert Wadeson of Yafforth, in the said county; and in the fifteenth year of the same king's reign, John Wadeson, afterwards Sir John Wadeson, Knt., in consideration of the sum of £1,200, sold the manor of Kaber to Robert Jackson, of Brough; Thomas Robinson, of Nateby; Robert Hindmore, of Kirkby Stephen; and Anthony Fothergill, of Tranna-hill, in Ravenstonedale, in trust for the inhabitants and landowners. Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., Rev. John Dickinson, Rev. Seward Heelis, the Trustees of the late John Morland, Miss Pattinson, Joseph Thompson, William Dent, and John Moreland, are the principal landowners.

The village of Kaber is two and a half miles north-east of Kirkby Stephen. Here is a small Primitive Methodist chapel, erected in 1859. In 1663, after the restoration of Charles II., an insurrection of the republican party was intended, and a great number of the disaffected party held their meetings at Kaber Rigg, where several of them were taken prisoners by the militia, and afterwards executed at Appleby, for joining in this conspiracy, called the Kaber Rigg Plot. A cattle fair, established here in 1833, is held on the Friday before Hawes fair, which is held on the last Tuesday in February.

Higher Scales and Rookby are two villages in this township, the former, three miles north-east of Kirkby Stephen, and the latter two miles.

This township is in the south division of Stainmore Forest, and being mostly on the south side of the river Belu, is principally in the parish of Brough.

CHARITY.

Kaber School.—The only evidence we have been able to obtain respecting the origin of this school is afforded by an ancient document in the possession of the trustees, which states that several of the inhabitants of Kaber and others promised to pay upon demand various sums of money therein specified, from £1 to £3 each, towards purchasing a house and croft for the use of a free school, and that Thomas Waller, the elder, of Kaber, did promise to give to the maintaining of the same £125, which will produce £7 10s. per annum, to be paid to the master yearly. The subscriptions of the parties mentioned in this document amounted to £34 10s. These sums were increased by £5, left by Miles Monkhouse, in 1725; £20, left by George Petty, in 1744; and £50, left by Anthony Morland, in 1792. The income of the school is now about £11 a year; the first bequest having been long lost. The number of children in attendance is about twenty.

NATEBY.

The area of Nateby township is 2,075 acres, and its rateable value £977 6s. 8d. The population in 1801 was 108; in 1811, 111; in 1821, 140; in 1831, 136; in 1841, 108; and in 1851, 103; who are chiefly resident in the village of Nateby. Agriculture is the principal employment. The Durham and Lancaster railway goes through a portion of this township.

Nothing is recorded of the manor of Nateby previous to the 8th Edward II. (1314-15) when we find Nicolas de Hastings holding the manors of Nateby and Crosby appears to have been surrounded with a moat and rampart. During the division of the Intack among the various cattlegate owners, the foundations of the chapel were laid bare, the stones being dug up and used in the erection of a wall. It appears to have consisted of a nave and chancel, in the Early English style. The outline of the cemetery may still be traced. In a rental of the estates of Philip Lord Wharton, in the latter end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, mention is made of a place called Abbot Hall, at Waitby, then in the tenure of the wife of James Hindmore. Can this have any reference to the castle, chapel, &c., just mentioned?

CHARITY.

School.—Township of Waitby and Smardale.—James Highmore, of London, some time previous to the 31st August, 1682, erected a school at Waitby, and endowed it with £100 for the instruction of the poor children of Waitby and Smardale, of both sexes, in reading and writing, English, and Latin grammar; he also, by his will, dated 23rd July, 1684, gave the further sum of £300 to be invested in land for the maintenance of the said school, and for the providing of twelve twopenny leaves, which he directed should be given every Sunday to twelve poor widows, being sixty years of age and upwards. With the £400 thus acquired land was purchased at Cautleythwaite, near Sedburgh, now let for forty-five guineas a year, out of which the sum of £5 4s. is distributed as directed among poor widows, and the remainder paid to the schoolmaster. About twenty-five children of both sexes attend this school.

WHARTON.

Wharton township comprises an area of 1,483 acres, and its rateable value is £678 8s. 6d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 80; in 1811, 67; in 1821, 81; in 1831, 76; in 1841, 55; and in 1851, 67; who reside in farm-houses dispersed over the township, which is about two miles south of Kirkby Stephen.

We have no information relating to Wharton previous to the reign of Edward I., when we find it held by a family bearing the local name. One of these Whartons married a daughter of Philip Hastings, of Croglin, in Cumberland, and in consequence obtained a share in that manor, and subsequently came into possession of the whole. By an inquisition taken in the 3rd Edward II. (1309-10) we find that Henry de Wharton held of Robert Clifford the manor of Wharton, paying for cornage 6s. a year. In the 15th Richard II. (1391-2) and again in the 4th Henry IV. (1402-3) William de Wharton occurs as holding the manor of Wharton, paying cornage as above. In the 10th Henry V.

(1422) Henry de Wharton held the manor of John de Clifford. The following pedigree, certified at the herald's visitation in 1585, will show the subsequent descent of the manor:—

Pedigree of Wharton.

Making no mention of the various members of the family noticed above, and of others who occur as presenting to the living of Croglin, the pedigree begins with

THOMAS WHARTON, who held the manor of Wharton in 1423 of Thomas de Clifford. About which time Thomas, the grandfather of the family of the Whartons of Kirkby Thore, who descended from John Wharton, probably a younger brother of this family. Thomas Wharton married a daughter of Lowther, and by her had issue,

1. Henry Wharton, who married Alice, daughter of Sir John Conyers, Knt., of Hornby, and had issue, THOMAS, who married Anne, daughter of Richard Wray, of Smardale, and by her had issue,

1. Thomas, his heir.
2. Christoper.
3. Joan, married to John Maliverer, of Howarth.
4. Thomas, married to Thomas Maliverer, of Howarth.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir THOMAS WHARTON, Knt., who, in consequence of his victory over the Scots at Sullom Mess, was created a baron by Henry VIII. Sir Thomas was twice married. By his first wife, Eleanor, daughter of Sir Bryan Stapleton, Knt., of Wighill, he had issue, besides two other children,

1. THOMAS, his heir.
2. Sir Thomas Wharton, Knt., who married Jane, daughter of Thomas Maliverer, of Allerton.
3. Anne, married to John Maliverer, Knt.
4. Joan, married to William Pennington.

By his second wife, Anne, daughter of George Earl of Shrewsbury, he had no issue.

THOMAS, second Lord Wharton, married Anne, daughter of Thomas Maliverer, earl of Devon, and died in 1574, leaving issue,

1. PHILIP.
2. James.

PHILIP, third Lord Wharton, married twice. His first wife was Frances, daughter of Henry Clifford, earl of Cumberland, by whom he had issue,

1. Sir George Wharton, Knt., who married Anne, daughter of John Manners, earl of Rutland, but died without issue, in 1599.
2. Thomas, who married Philadelphia, daughter of Sir Robert Cary, Knt., and died in his father's lifetime, leaving issue,
 1. PHILIP, who succeeded to the title and inheritance.
 2. Francis, married to Sir Richard Musgrave, Bart.
 3. Margaret, married to Thomas Lord Wootton.

PHILIP, fourth Lord Wharton, died of a fever, at Long Marston, co. York.

His lordship's second wife was Dorothy, daughter of — Colbie, Esq., and by her he had a son, Henry. He was succeeded by his grandson, PHILIP, fourth Lord Wharton, who led a regiment of horse during the Parliamentary wars, and noted for his activity against the Royalists. He was three married. By his first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Rowland Wandesford, he had a daughter,

1. Elizabeth, married to Lord Willoughby d'Eresby, and afterwards to Robert Earl of Lindsay.

His second wife was Jane, daughter of Arthur Goodwin, of Upper Winchendon, Bucks, by whom he had,

1. Thomas.

Goodwin.

11. Colonel Henry Wharton.

1. Margaret, married to Major Dunch, of Pusey, co. Berks.

2. Mary, married to William Thomas, Esq., co. Glamorgan.

111. Philadelphia, married to Sir George Lockhart, of Carnwath.

His third wife was Anne, daughter of William Carr, Esq., by whom he had a son,

1. William, who was killed in a duel.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS, fifth lord Wharton, who took an active part in effecting the revolution in 1688, and afterwards in opposing the Tory ministry in Queen Anne's time; for which services he was created Viscount Winchendon, and Earl of Wharton, and ultimately Marquis of Wharton. By his first wife, a daughter of Sir Henry Lee, of Ditchley, in Oxfordshire, he had no issue. His second wife was Lucy, daughter of John Lisburne, and by her he had issue,

1. PHILIP, his heir.

2. Jane, married to John Holt, Esq., of Redgrave, Suffolk.

11. Lucy, married to Sir William Morice, Bart.

On his decease,

PHILIP, his eldest son, succeeded as sixth lord Wharton, and second marquis Wharton, though only in his seventeenth year. This nobleman is described as "a person of unbounded genius, eloquence, and ambition: had all the address and activity of his father, but without his steadiness: violent in parties, and expensive in cultivating the arts of popularity; which, indeed, ought to be in some measure charged to his education under such a father, who, it is said, expended £80,000 in elections—an immense sum in those days; by which the estate became encumbered, and the son was not a person of economy enough to disengage it." The young marquis set out in the world a violent Whig, and for his extraordinary services was created Duke of Wharton. After that he set up in opposition to the ministry, then became a Tory, then a Jacobite, then he quitted the country and accepted a commission in the army which the King of Spain was employing against Gibraltar. He ended his life in a Bernardine monastery, in Spain, where the charitable monks sheltered this outcast of society, who, as Pope says, "wanted nothing but an honest heart." He died in the thirty-second year of his age, and though thrice married left no issue.

In 1728 the manor of Wharton was sold to a member of its present owner, the Earl of Lonsdale. The hall, the splendid residence of the Duke of Wharton, has long been in ruins; a small part of it is still occupied as a farm-house. It was a large quadrangular building, with four corner towers, and a central court. The date, 1539, and the arms of the family are on one of the towers. Its park, which was very large, was extended over the ancient village, which was destroyed, and the inhabitants driven to Wharton Dikes, on the opposite side of the Eden. About half a mile south of the hall are the ruins of an old building, called Lamerside Castle. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale, Matthew Thompson, Esq., Mrs. Bowness, and some small proprietors.

WINTON.

The area of Winton township is 3,383 acres, and its rateable value £1,752 15s. 3d. The population in 1801 was 262; in 1811, 252; in 1821, 284; in 1831, 267; in 1841, 358; and in 1851, 257; who are principally resident in the village. The soil in the vales is fertile. The township is intersected by the Durham and Lancaster railway.

The manor of Winton has always been held by the lords of Brough barony, but several portions of the manor are held by inferior lords; among others by the Earl of Lonsdale, John Wakefield, Esq., Henry Jackson, Esq., and Matthew Robinson, Esq. The landowners are Matthew Thompson, Esq.; Messrs. John Longrigg, junr., Joseph Whiteside, Matthew Robinson, William Hutchinson, junr., John Dodd, Robert Hemgill, Isaac Ebdale, and Captain Tinkler, with several small proprietors. Winton Hall is now a farmhouse.

The village of Winton is one mile north-by-east of Kirkby Stephen. Here is a Baptist chapel, erected about twenty years ago.

CHARITY.

School.—Winton school was erected in 1659, by subscriptions raised principally through the exertions of the Rev. William Morland, who had been ejected from the rectory of Greystoke by Cromwell's commissioners. It was endowed in 1681, by Robert Waller, with land at Kaber, now let for £9 a year. In 1722 Richard Monkhouse gave, for the better endowment of Winton school, £100, provided the fees of the said school for the time being should, within three months after his decease, grant the sole nomination of a schoolmaster on all future vacancies unto his brother, Thomas Monkhouse, and his heirs. He also gave £10 towards the repairs of the said school, and 40s. for making a garden on the waste grounds thereto adjoining. None of the scholars are taught free, but the master is limited to an average charge of 8s. 6d. per quarter for the education of boys and girls.

About a mile north-by-west from Kirkby Stephen is a neat mansion called Beck Foot, the seat of Dorothy Pattinson. Skelcies is a large estate in this township, the property of Matthew Robinson, Esq. Part of the house is old, and bears an inscription and the date 1691.

Winton is the birth-place of Dr. Richard Burn, vicar of Orton and chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle, and joint author, with J. Nicolson, Esq., of the "History and Antiquities of the Counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland;" and also of Dr. John Langhorne, a prolific writer, who, with his brother William, translated "Plutarch's Lives."

MALLERSTANG CHAPELRY.

The chapelry of Mallerstang extends from the source of the Eden northwards to within nearly a half mile of Kirby Stephen, being nearly five miles in length, and containing the hamlets of Castlethwaite, Hanging Lund, Outh Gill, Short Gill, and Southwaite, with several scattered dwellings dispersed through the deep vale of the Eden, and the secluded glens and thwaites on either side of that river. This district was anciently a vast forest, inhabited by every description of game.

Mallerstang contains 4,944 acres, and its rateable value is £1,272 8s. In 1801 it contained 314 inhabitants; in 1811, 249; in 1821, 243; in 1831, 256; in 1841, 223; and in 1851, 204, who are principally engaged in agriculture. In the lower end of the township there is a small coal mine, worked by Messrs. Horn and Brothers. The soil in the vales is fertile; but the township is principally grazed.

Before the grant of the barony of Westmorland to Robert de Veteripont, the forest of Mallerstang, with the remainder, belonged to Sir Hugh de Morville, and a large round hill is still known as Sir Hugh Morville's seat, where Anne Countess of Pembroke erected a stone pillar, with an inscription, "A. R. 1664." The castle of Mallerstang, of which more hereafter, is said to have been erected about the time of the landing of the Saxons in this country, by Uther Pendragon. Who this Uther was we have no means of ascertaining. After the death of John de Veteripont, in the reign of Henry III., the wardship of his son Robert, during his minority, was committed to the Prior of Carlisle, who suffered great wastes to be committed in the estates of the said Robert; and particularly, as we learn from an inquisition taken at the period, in the vale of Mallerstang, which was much decayed by the multitude of vaccaries, and chiefly by the archery of Roger the Forester, and other archers of Lonsdale, by default of the prior, and for want of keeping. After the death of Roger de Clifford, in the 11th Edward I. (1282-3), it was found, by inquisition, that the forest of Mallerstang, in herbage and agistments, and all other issues, was worth yearly £14 7s. 6d. In the 8th Edward II. (1314-15); the jurors find, that in the vale of Mallerstang there is one castle, called Pendragon, with a vaccary, held by Andrew de Hercla of the rent of 6d. a year; and six vaccaries more, worth 20s. a year each; agistment, worth 6d. a year; turbary, 6s. 8d.; pleas and perquisites of court, 13s. 4d. In the 15th Edward III. (1341-2), the Scots burned Pendragon Castle to the ground; and in the 36th of the same king's reign (1362-3), Edward granted to Roger Clifford, in fee, the vaccary called Southwaite, in the forest of Mallerstang. In the reign of Edward IV., during the attainder of Henry Lord Clifford, part of the estate was granted to Sir William Parr, of Kendal Castle; and after the death of Sir William, his son Thomas being under age and in wardship of the king, the said king granted to Lancelot Wharton the office of bowbearer of Mallerstang in right of his ward. Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., is the present lord of Mallerstang; besides whom, John Grimshaw, Matthew Thompson, George Blades and Sons, Thomas Cleasby, and Mary Fawcett, with a number of small proprietors and yeomen, are the landowners.

THE CHAPEL.

Mallerstang chapel, which stands near the centre of the township, is of very ancient foundation, and about sixty years ago had a burial-ground attached to it. It is now much in need of repairs. After remaining about sixty years in a state of dilapidation, this chapel was repaired in 1663, by the Countess of Pembroke, who endowed it with lands at Cautley, near Sedbergh, in Yorkshire, then worth £11 a year, which was to be given to the curate, on condition that he teach "the children of the dale to read and write English in the chapel." The property now lets for £26 a year. In 1714 it was augmented with an estate at Gardale, now worth £60 a year, purchased with £100, given by the Earl of Thanet and the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty; the latter of whom, in 1772, gave £200 more, which, with another £200, given by the Countess-dowager Gower, was expended in the purchase of another estate at Cautley, now let for £35 a year, so that the living is at present worth, after deducting payments which have to be made by the incumbent, about £100 a year. Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., is patron. The chapel is licensed for burials and baptisms. The burial-ground was consecrated in 1813, by Bishop Goodenough. The registers commence in 1730.

INCUMBENTS.—Jeffrey Downess, —; John Bird, —; William Bird, —; John Fawcett, —; Robert Robinson, 1844.

CHARITIES.

School.—It is stated in Nicolson and Burn's "History of Westmoreland" that the Countess of Pembroke, in 1663, repaired the chapel of Mallerstang, and endowed the same, as above, for the maintenance of a person qualified to read prayers, and to teach the children of Mallerstang to read, &c., in the chapel there. This statement is confirmed by an original document, which the Charity Commissioners in their report state to be in the possession of the schoolmaster. The lands thus settled are in the possession of the incumbent, who hires a teacher for the school. There is also £5 from some charity in London. Adam Robinson, by will, dated September 15th, 1813, left two cattle-gates in Aisgill, and other leasehold property, charged with a yearly payment of £2 out of the rents if they cleared so much, for the purpose of buying school-books for the children attending the chapel school, and also to buy coals for the fire in the said school for those scholars who should not be able to pay for coals. The school is attached to the chapel, and is attended by about twenty-eight children, all of whom are taught free, and supplied with the requisite school-books gratis.

Middleton's Charity.—George Middleton, of Sedbergh, in the county of York, by will, dated 8th May, 1784, left £100, the interest of which he directed should be expended in the purchase of bread, to be distributed weekly, every Sunday, in the chapel of Mallerstang, among such of the poor residing in the said chapelry who should not receive parish relief.

Hunter's Charity.—Lancelot Hunter, who died in 1731, left £10 to the poor of the dale of Mallerstang. This money was laid out, some years ago, in the purchase of two cattle-gates in Mallerstang, which now produce generally from 25s. to 28s. each. This money is given away on Christmas Day, with the share of John Waller's money, and the interest of the poor stock next mentioned, to the poor of the township not receiving parish relief.

Poor Stock.—The poor stock consists of the sum of £11, of which the origin is unknown.

Castletwhaithe is a hamlet in this township about four miles south of Kirkby Stephen. Here are the ruins of Pendragon Castle, one of the most interesting relics of antiquity in the county. This castle, formerly the capital seat of the Forest of Mallerstang, which, as we have already seen, belonged to Sir Hugh de Morville before it was granted to the Veteriponts, was a very strong fortress, the walls being battlemented, and in some parts four yards thick. It was burned by the Scots in 1340, but subsequently restored. It was again laid in ruins in 1541, and continued in this state till 1660, when it was repaired by Anne Countess of Pembroke; but in 1685 it was dismantled by the Earl of Thanet, and has since suffered so much from age and neglect, that the mouldering ruins of a square tower, which stands on the eastern bank of the secluded vale of Eden, are all that now remain. Its name of Pendragon (the dragon's hill) has reference, no doubt, to its site, though why it should be called dragon's hill, we have now no means of ascertaining. We can only conjecture that tradition located here one of those dragons, or worms, so much spoken of in the old legends. In later times, this story was probably forgotten, and to account for the name, tradition handed over the castle to Uther Pendragon, one of the mystic heroes of Welsh history, and one of the supposed fathers of the world-renowned King Arthur. It is said he built the castle, and attempted to turn the course of the Eden, so as to surround his dwelling with the river; but in this he failed, and hence arose the popular rhyme:—

"Let Uther Pendragon do what he can, Eden will run where Eden ran."

Besides repairing this ancient structure, the Countess of Pembroke also built the bridge across the river Eden, near the castle.

The other hamlets in this chapelry, and their distance from Kirkby Stephen are as follow:—Hanging Lund, six and a half miles south; Outhgill (where the chapel is situated), four and a half miles; Shortgill, five miles south; and Southwaite, three miles south.

SOULBY CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises the township of Zailly, the commons of which were enclosed in 1810. The soil here is tolerably fertile. The Eden Valley railway runs through the chapelry.

Soulby township comprises an area of 2,495 acres, and its rateable value is £1,921 9s. 2d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 277; in 1811, 403; in 1821, 251; in 1831, 256; in 1841, 300; and in 1851, 309: who principally reside in the village.

The first owner of Soulbly on record is Henry de Salleby, or Soulbly, who occurs as a witness to the grant of the advowson of the church of Kirkby Thore by Adam de Kirkby Thore to Robert de Veteripont, in the reign of King John. Several other members of this family occur at different periods down to the reign of Edward II., when the manor appears to have passed to the Musgraves, but how we are not informed. It was afterwards held in moieties by the Musgraves and Whartons; and some property in the manor appears to have been held by the Stricklands and Lowthers; but from the 10th Henry V. (1422) the manor of Soulbly seems invariably to have continued in the Musgrave family, with the exception of two or three tenements which are held of Smardale Hall, Sir George Musgrave, Bart., being the present lord of the manor, besides whom, Thomas Hutton, Esq., and E. J. Jackson, Esq., are the principal landowners. The hall, or manor-house, seems to have been in the grounds now called Hall Garbs.

The village of Soulby is situated near the confluence of the Eden and the Smardale Beck, two and a half miles north-west of Kirkby Stephen. Two large cattle fairs are held here annually, viz., on the Tuesday before Easter and on the 30th of August; the latter was established about 1797, and the other in 1825. There is a good bridge of three arches in the village, erected in 1819.

THE JOURNAL

Soulby chapel, which stands in the centre of the village, is a neat building, with turret containing one bell. It was erected in 1605 by Sir Philip Musgrave, lord of the manor, and consecrated on St. Luke's Day, in the same year, by Bishop Stern. In the act of consecration it was set forth that the said Sir Philip Musgrave and his heirs and assigns, lords of the manor of Hartley Castle, shall repair the said chapel from time to time, and have the power to nominate a fit minister to be approved and licensed by the bishop. Sir George Musgrave, Bart., is therefore patron of the living, which, by various augmentations, now possesses about 100 acres of land, worth £96 a year. The chapel, which will accommodate upwards of 100 persons, is licensed for baptisms and funerals. There is a small marble tablet to the memory of the Tebay family. John Wakefield, Esq., is the impropiator of the corn and hay tithes, which have long been let to the inhabitants on a lease for 999 years, at £50 a year. The registers commence in 1813.

— Sewall, —; Joseph, —; S. H. —, 1844.

There is a small Wesleyan chapel in the village, erected in 1846.

School.—Lancelot Bell, in 1768, gave £40, with which was purchased a yearly rent-charge of 30s., issuing out of a close called Flatts, at Waithy, in this parish; and also out of two cattle-gates in Waithy intack, to which he directed to be paid on the 13th August and the 13th February yearly, at the chapel of Soulbly, in trust, to pay the same to the schoolmaster of Soulbly, who, in consideration of the same, should duly teach three poor boys of Soulbly. A further annual sum of 30s., derived from the charity of Thomas Wilsen (see Crosby Garrett parish, page, 738), is also paid to the schoolmaster for teaching three other poor boys of this township. There is also the interest of £5, left by Mrs. Jane Grainger. The total income from these endowment is now £22 16s., for which six children are taught free. The average attendance is about fifty.

Poor Stock.—The sum of £24 poor-money, the origin of which is unknown, was laid out some years ago, with other moneys, in the purchase of a house for the use of the township, and the annual sum of 22s. has been since paid out of the poor-rates as interest upon it. This interest, with the addition of the share of John Wallor's money, and a rent of 8s. arising from small lots of ground belonging to the township, is distributed at Christmas among the poor not receiving parish relief.

KIRKBY THORE PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Crowlendale and Newbiggin, on the west by the river Eden, on the south by Longmarton parish, and on the east by that of Dufton. The soil is generally fertile and in a good state of cultivation, except at its western extremity, where there is a mountainous tract comprising Dun Fell and Milburn Forest, bordering on the source of the river Tees, the north of which is Cross Fell, in Cumberland. In the neighbourhood of the river is a sandy loam: the higher grounds have a mixture of gravel and clay. The parish comprises the townships of Kirkby Thore, Milbourn, and Temple Sowerby, whose united area is 11,030 acres. The commons were enclosed in 1812.

KIRKBY THORE.

The area of this township is 4,572 acres, and its rateable value £2,593. Its population in 1801 was 247; in 1811, 305; in 1821, 377; in 1831, 468; in 1841, 442; and in 1851, 412. The Eden Valley railway crosses the western portion of this township. The Troutbeck, which runs through Kirkby Thore, falls into the Eden, and turns a corn and saw mill, near the bridge.

Of the importance ascribed to Kirkby Thore in the Roman period of British history, we have evidence in the fact of its being selected as the site of a station on the line of road between Verterre, (Brough), and Brocavium, (Brougham). This station, supposed to be the Brovonnac of the Notitia, stood near the spot where the Maiden Way branched off from the road which led from York to Carlisle. An account of the Maiden Way will be found at page 3. The site of the Roman station, now known as Burwens, has been fertile in antiquities. In 1687 Mr. Machell found a four-fold wall here, made of hewn stone, each wall being two feet four inches thick. Several arched vaults were also discovered, lead pipes, &c., and an altar, inscribed FORTVNAE SERVATRICI. He also discovered near the bridge and the great Roman road, an ancient well containing urns, curious earthen vessels, the clasp of a spear, and sandals. Horsley tells us that the following inscription was found here:—"DEO BELATVCADRO LIBENTER VOTVM FECIT IOLVS." Many other Roman antiquities have since been discovered here. In 1838, while making the foundations of a new bridge, on the river Troutbeck, the following were brought to light:—A bronze ligula, five bow-shaped fibulae, and four ring-shaped fibulae; also four bow-shaped Roman and two enamelled fibulae—one of the crescent-shaped, the other in the form of a cock—and the upper ornament and the chape or lower end of a scabbard of Romano-Celtic workmanship. In September of the present year (1859) some workmen, employed on the Eden Valley railway in this township, discovered a number of Roman antiquities, amongst which were several vases containing bones and ashes, which, on being exposed to the air, crumbled to pieces. A beautiful specimen of sculpture, in a high state of preservation, of a horse and rider, said to be about seven feet in height, but wanting a portion of the horse's legs, was also found, which, after having been exhibited during the day to the curious, was privately conveyed away in the evening.

Whelp is the first lord of the manor of Kirkby Thore on record. He occurs about the reign of Stephen or Henry II., and from him probably Whelp Castle (of which more hereafter) derived its name. Whelp had a son, Gamel, whose son Waldeve, or Waltheof, gave lands at Kirkby Thore and Hale to the abbey of Holme Cultram, which grant was confirmed by Lyulph, the son of Lyulph, who seems to have held a portion of the manor under Waldeve, for in his charter of confirmation he styles the said Waldeve his lord. By another charter Waldeve released to Holme Cultram Abbey all his right and claim, as lord of the manor, in certain lands therein specified, given to the said abbey by Lawrence de Newbiggin. This Waldeve had two sons, Adam and Alan, the former of whom confirmed the grants made by his father. This Adam de Kirkby Thore granted the advowson of the church to Robert de Veteripont. Adam de Kirkby Thore had a son Gilbert, who confirmed the grants made to Holme Cultram Abbey by his father and grandfather; and also, by charter, dated 1247, made some gifts of his own to the same community. A considerable portion of the land in this manor appears to have been given to Holme Cultram Abbey about this period; among the grantors we find Lyulph son of Lyulph, Adam son of Lyulph, Robert de Broy, and Amabil, daughter of Robert de Berford. John de Veteripont also gave certain lands here to the said abbey, and this John, as lord of Westmoreland, of whom this manor was held in chief, granted to the inhabitants of Kirkby Thore freedom from pature of his foresters in Westmoreland, and from finding testimony to his foresters which is called witnessman, and that if they should be found guilty of offences in hunting or vert, they should not be called to account for the same in any of his courts of the forest, but only in the county court. After Gilbert, John de Kirkby Thore occurs (probably the son of Gilbert), who in the 8th Edward II. (1314-15) held the manor of Kirkby Thore. In the following year, and again in 1340, John de Kirkby Thore occurs as knight of the shire for Westmoreland. In the 31st Henry VI. (1452-3) an inquisition was taken, when it was found that "Gilbert de Kirkby Thore heretofore held three parts of the manor of Kirkby Thore, and paid yearly for cornage 19s. 10d.; and owed wardship, marriage, and relief; and now John de Kirkby Thore holds the same three parts by all the services aforesaid, and makes fines by suit of the county court, notwithstanding that the lord of Westmoreland re-leased to one of his ancestors the said suit. And Robert de Berford heretofore held immediately the fourth part of the same vill of Kirkby Thore, and paid yearly for cornage 12s. 8d., and owed wardship, marriage, and relief. And now Ralph Pudsey, Bart, lord of Berford-upon-Tees, holds immediately the same fourth part, by the services aforesaid. And John Wharton holds the said fourth part of the said knight, by all the services aforesaid." This is the first mention of the Whartons in connection with this manor. This family continued to possess the manor of Kirkby Thore from the period just named till the middle of the eighteenth century, when the male issue failed. The manor is now held by Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.; Sir T. B. Lennard is lord of a large portion of the township, and the rector receives lords' rent from eight different tenements. The landowners are the Rev. Edward Cookson, Sir T. B. Lennard, John Crosby, W. Crackenthorpe, and J. L. George, Esqs.; Messrs. John and Thomas Nicholson, James Crosby, and a number of small proprietors. Kirkby Thore Hall has long been used as a farm-house. Mr. Machell says that the hall and a great part of the village were built out of the ruins of Whelp Castle, which stood on the site of the Roman station, and was the principal seat of the manor. It is said to have been a fortress of some strength, but its site has long been cultivated.

The village of Kirkby Thore occupies a pleasant situation, near the confluence of the Eden and Troutbeck, four miles and three-quarters north-west of Appleby, and consists of three clusters of buildings, some of which are very neatly built. In the vicinity is Pott's Well, a spring of a sulphureous nature, supposed to rise from a bed of alabaster, lying at a great depth below the surface. The name of this village has long been held to mean "the village of the temple of Thor;" but Mr. Sullivan, in his "Cumberland and Westmoreland, Ancient and Modern," remarks, "Kirkby Thore cannot have any connection with the god Thor; it is so called from the Roman, road; Norse, thor; Hiberno-Celtic, tochar, a highway." We are inclined to agree with him in this derivation.

THE CHURCH.

Kirkby Thore church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient structure, in the early English style, consisting of nave, aisles, and chancel, with a square tower, containing one bell, said to be the largest in the county, and formerly belonging to the abbey of Shap. The interior has a very chaste appearance. The nave is lofty and spacious, and is filled with low open seats. A lofty pointed arch separates the nave and chancel. The windows are all filled with stained glass; the eastern one, of three lights, with tracery above, commands general admiration. The pulpit is of oak, most elaborately carved, as are also the rails of the communion table. In the chancel is a brass plate, bearing a long Latin inscription to the memory of John Dalston, Esq., of Acorn Bank, who died in 1692, aged eighty-six years. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., as the descendant of Robert de Veteripont, who purchased it in the thirteenth century of the then lord of the manor. It is valued in the King's Book at £37 13s. 8½d.; but is now worth £615 a year, arising from 667 acres of land, of which sixty-four are ancient glebe, the remainder being allotted to the rectory at the enclosure, in 1812, as a commutation for the great and small tithes.

RECTOR.—Roger de Clitford, 1345; Ralph de Brantingham, 1347; Thomas de Ripplingham, resigned 1354; Adam de Hoton, 1354; William de Corbridge, 1367; Roger de Crackenthorpe occurs in the reign of Henry VI.; Henry Wharton occurs in the reign of Edward IV.; Richard Rawson, resigned, 1526; Richard Evenwode, 1526; Michael Crackenthorpe, died 1568; Robert Warcop, 1568; Thos. Warcop, 1597; Lancelot Lowther, 1629; Thomas Warcop, —; William Walker, died 1677; Thomas Machell, 1677; Edmund Wickens, 1699; Carleton Atkinson, 1722; Thomas Milward, 1762; Gilpin Corst, 1775; John Rippon, —; Gerald Elliott, 1840; John Brown, 1845; Charles H. Barham, 1848; Edward Cookson, 1852.

The rectory, situated north of the church, is one of the finest in the county.

In the village are two Methodist chapels, and one belonging to the Presbyterians.

Kirkby Thore school is a neat building, erected by subscription in 1832. It possesses a small endowment; the interest amounts to £6 14s. 3d. £20 of the endowment was left in 1823 by Mr. John Horn. The average attendance is forty children.

CHARITY.

Poor Stock.—There is an ancient poor stock of £20, the origin of which is unknown. It is secured upon the tolls of the turnpike road from Brough to Eamont Bridge, and the interest, amounting to 16s. a year, is given to poor persons of the township of Kirkby Thore.

In this township is a freehold estate called the Spittle, said to have formerly belonged to some religious house, most probably some hospital for lepers.

MILBURNE.

This township contains 5,282 acres; its rated value is £1,263 4s. 7d. In 1801 it contained 337 inhabitants; in 1811, 281; in 1821, 303; in 1831, 325; in 1841, 348; and in 1851, 320.

The first account we have of Milburne is in the reign of King John, who granted to William de Stuteville the forest of Milburne. Some time afterwards Nicholas de Stuteville granted to Robert de Veteripont the whole village and grange of Milburne, as William de Stuteville or his ancestors had held the same. Robert de Veteripont granted to Shap Abbey the whole village of Milburne Grange. In the 3rd Edward II. (1309-14) Patrick Earl of Dunbar appears to have held Milburne of the Cliffords, that is, that portion of it which had not been previously granted away. In the 43rd Edward III. (1369-70) it was found, by inquisition, that Bertrine de Johnby and Robert de Vallibus had held the manor of Milburne of Patrick Earl of Dunbar, who held the same of Robert de Clifford, and the said Robert de Clifford held the same of the king, in capite, by knight's service. This Earl Patrick forfeited the manor for his adherence to Robert Bruce, and it came into possession of the Lancasters, very probably by grant from the crown. These Lancasters were descended from Roger de Lancaster, bastard brother of William de Lancaster, third baron of Kendal of that name. Milburne continued in this family till the reign of Henry VI., when, on the demise of Sir John de Lancaster, of Howgill, the estate came to his four daughters, co-heirs. Christian was married to Sir Robert de Harrington, Kut.; Isabel, married to Sir Thomas Le Fleming, Kut., of Coniston; Margaret, married to Sir Matthew de Whitfield, Kut.; and Elizabeth, married to Robert de Crackenthorpe, Esq., a younger branch of the Crackenthorpes of Newbiggin. In the partition of the estates, consequent on the demise of Sir John de Lancaster, Christian and Elizabeth were to have the manors of Deepdale, Blencoyne, Howgill, and Knock Salcock, and the lands there, as also in Milburne and Lowenthwaite; and Margaret and Isabel were to have the manor of Rydal and Loughrigg. In the division between Christian and Elizabeth, Howgill fell to the latter, who thereupon brought the same in marriage to the Crackenthorpes, with whom it remained for only two generations, the family failing in issue male, on the decease of Anthony Crackenthorpe, brother of Adamson, son of Robert de Crackenthorpe. This Anthony had three daughters, co-heirs, the eldest of whom, Anne, had Howgill for her portion of the family estates. She became the wife of Sir Thomas Sandford, Kut., of Askham, thus bringing the manor to that family. From the Sandfords the manor passed, by marriage, to the Honeywoods of Marks Hall, in Essex, from whom it was purchased, in 1780, by the Earl of Thanet, and it is now held by Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., besides whom, Joseph Parker, Esq., and John Brown, Esq., are the principal landowners. Howgill Castle, the ancient manor house, now occupied by a farmer, stands half a mile south-east of the village. It was formerly a fine building. Some of the walls are ten feet thick, and part of the rooms in the lower story are strongly arched over. Close to the castle is the rivulet Howgill, from which its name is derived.

The village of Milburne is three miles north-by-east of Kirkby Thore.

THE CHAPEL.

Milburne chapel is a very ancient Gothic edifice, consisting of nave, aisles, and chancel, with low turret, containing two bells. It is much in want of repairs. It contains a mural brass to the memory of Anne, the wife of Richard Sandford, Esq., and mother of eighteen children, who died in 1605. The living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of Sir Richard Tufton, Bart. In 1752 Sackville Earl of Thanet, gave £600, and the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty £400, for the joint benefit of this chapel and that of Temple Sowerby; to be paid out of land which had been purchased at Firlank, Howgill near Sedbergh, and Dillicar, now let for about £100 per annum, besides which the curates of these chapels receive a yearly rent of £20 each from the rector. This chapel was augmented in 1762 with £400, with which land was purchased at Bolton, now let for about £30 a year. In 1838 the tithes of Milburne were commuted for an annual rent charge of £100. The curacy is now worth about £93 a year. There was anciently a chantry at Milburne, which seems to have been intended as an augmentation to the chapel, for the abbot and convent of Shap had to pay £4 a year to a chantry priest out of the property given to the community by Robert de Veteripont.

INCUMBENTS.—Henry Wilkinson, 1738; Thomas Kilner, 1763; Philip Threlkeld, 1780; Philip Threlkeld, jun., —; John Wharton, 1842; William D. Tyson, 1858.

The Wesleyans have a chapel here.

CHARITIES.

School.—Sarah Atkinson, of Milburne, who died in 1790, left £100, the interest of which she directed should be applied for the education of the children of the poor within the chapelry. There is a neat school in the village of Milburne, erected in 1851, and has an average attendance of twenty-five children. The above bequest is applied to this school.

Margaret Atkinson's Charity.—Margaret Atkinson, who died in 1767, gave in her lifetime £10, the interest to be given annually to the poor, who had no parish relief. The interest of this money is distributed as directed at Easter.

Jackson's Charity.—Thomas Jackson, of Kirkhouse, who died in 1755, gave £10 for the same purpose, to be distributed on St. Thomas' Day.

Gullom Holme is a small hamlet in this township, two miles and three-quarters from Kirkby Thore; Milburne Grange is a village a mile and a half east of Milburne. Kirkhouse is an estate here, held of the rector of Kirkby Thore. In this township, near to a place called Green Castle (a round fort surrounded with deep trenches, on the south end of Dun Fell) was found an altar bearing the inscription, DEO SILVANO.

TEMPLE SOWERBY.

Temple Sowerby comprises an area of 1,176 acres, and its net value is £1,258 18 24. The population in 1801 was 299; in 1811, 328; in 1821, 371; in 1831, 438; in 1841, 381; and in 1851, 372.

The ancient name of this manor was Sowerby, and several persons are on record who derived their name from the place, such as Adam de Soureby, William de Soureby, and others; but whether any of these held property here we are not informed. It received the prefix of Temple from the Knights Templars, to whom the manor was granted at an early period, but at what particular date history is silent; it is equally reserved with respect to the name of the grantor. The lords of this manor claim and exercise for themselves and their tenants many privileges granted to the Knights Templars, the most important of which is the exemption from toll throughout England. The order of the Temple was suppressed in the year 1312, and eleven years after their possessions were, by act of parliament, given to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem; in the intermediate period, we find Temple Sowerby in the possession of Robert Clifford, who held it by way of escheat. The Knights of St. John continued to hold Temple Sowerby till the dissolution of the religious houses in the reign of Henry VIII., which king, by letters patent, bearing date July 15th, 1543, granted to Thomas Dalston, Esq., with other possessions, the whole of the manor of Sowerby, with the appurtenances in the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, reserving to himself all mines of lead and coal within the manor. This Thomas Dalston was the eleventh in descent from the first of that name of Dalston in Cumberland, and was the common ancestor of the Dalstons both at Dalston and Temple Sowerby. This manor continued in the possession of the Dalston family till the demise of Sir William Dalston, when his daughter brought it in marriage to William Norton, Esq., and subsequently to Mr. Edmondson. It afterwards passed to William Hodgson, Esq., whose sister brought it in marriage to John Boazman, Esq., of Aycliffe, in the county of Durham, and it is now possessed by Henry Boazman, Esq. The landowners are William R. Boazman, Esq.; Admiral Caton, Richard Atkinson, George Gibson, John Cleaton, and Richard Temple, with a number of small proprietors. Acorn Bank, the ancient manor-house, commands an extensive and beautiful prospect of the surrounding country.

The village of Temple Sowerby is pleasantly situated at the confluence of the Eden and Crowdundale Beck, on the Pourth road, six and a half miles north-west of Appleby. It is large and well built, and consists of two spacious streets, in which are many good houses. Two important fairs for sheep and cattle are held here annually, on the last Thursday in January, February, and March, the second Thursday in May, and the last Thursday in October; these fairs were established about half a century ago. The Eden bridge below Temple Sowerby was erected in 1743, at a cost of £2000. The church is a fine specimen of the style.

THE CHURCH.

Temple Sowerby chapel, dedicated to St. James, is a handsome structure of red sandstone, rebuilt and considerably enlarged about the year 1770 by Sir William Dalston, the inhabitants defraying the expense of carrying the stone from Crowdundale. The clock was given in 1807 by the lady of the manor. There are a few mural monuments to the memory of John Marriott, Esq.; Matthew Atkinson, Esq.; and the family of Dalston of Acorn Bank. Under the date 1338 there is an entry in the episcopal register of Carlisle of a confirmation of an old award made by Ralph de Itron, bishop of Carlisle, between the parishioners of Kirkby Thore and the inhabitants of Temple Sowerby, whereby it is declared that the latter "are and shall be (as they have ever been) free from contributing anything towards the repairs of the church, belfry, or churchyard walls, at Kirkby Thore; saving that if hereafter it shall be thought necessary to enlarge the nave or body of the church, they shall then bear a third part of the expense." In the valuation made by King Henry VIII. the chapel at Temple Sowerby is rated at 20s., by a pension from the rector of Kirkby Thore. The curacy was augmented in 1752 in connection with that of Milburne, and of the land then purchased the Davy Bank estate, in Firbank, is allotted to this benefice, which is in the patronage of Sir Richard Tufton, Bart. The living was again augmented in 1762 with £400, including an allotment of eight acres, awarded at the enclosure; besides which the curate has also a stipend of 20s. from the rector of the parish. The total income is now about £114 per annum. In the registers of this chapel, as well as in others, are certificates of persons who have been buried in woollen only. The first legible entry in the register occurs in 1678. The tithes of the chapelry are now commuted for £115.

INCUMBENTS.—William Burton, 1670; John Langhorn, 1750; Jonathan Sewell, 1776; Robert Harrison, 1803; Bryan Killock, 1830; Robert Harrison, 1845.

There is a parsonage house in the village.

The Methodists have a small place of worship here.

Temple Sowerby school is endowed with £6 14s. 6d. a year, and is attended by about thirty children.

Some years ago a curious sun-dial was found in this township. It is now at Mill Rigg, formerly a residence of the Dalston family.

CHARITY.

Lowes' Charity.—Richard Lowes, of King's Meaburn, in the parish of Morland, by will, dated 23rd September, 1691, gave to the poor of the township of Temple Sowerby five roods of land, situate at Kurrydale, within the manor of Temple Sowerby, and directed that the rents should be divided amongst poor widows or fatherless children of the township of Temple Sowerby, upon St. Thomas's Day, yearly. This charity now produces about £5 a year.

LONG MARTON PARISH.

This parish lies on the east side of the river Eden. It is bounded on the north by Alston, in Cumberland, on the west by Kirkby Thore, on the south by Appleby St. Michael's, and on the east by Dufton. It comprises the townships of Long Marton, Brampton, and Knock, whose united area is 3,200 acres. The commons have been enclosed in the following order:—Brampton in 1770; Knock in 1815; and Long Marton in 1824. The population in 1801 was 432; in 1811, 599; in 1821, 714; in 1831, 819; in 1841, 804; and in 1851, 762. Agriculture is the principal employment, and Appleby the market attended.

LONG MARTON.

The area and population of this township are included in the returns for the parish. The rateable value is £1,961 2s. 4d.

The manor of Marton appears to have belonged to the Veteriponts. In the partition of Marton between the daughters of Robert Veteripont each of their shares was estimated at £13 3s. 5½d., besides the advowson of the church, which was estimated at forty marks. In 1369 the heirs of Thomas de Wake held the manor of Marton of Roger de Clifford, by homage and fealty, paying 8s. 6d. cornage. In 1391-2 John de Holland, Knt., held Marton; and in 1422 John de Gray and Margaret, his wife, held the same manor, as of the right of the said Margaret. In 1452-3 we find Thomas Gray, Knt., holding Marton, and afterwards, in the same year, Thomas Salinger, Knt. In 1526-7 the manor was in the hands of the king, Henry VIII., but we have no information as to the manner in which he became possessed of it. Marton came subsequently to the Lowthers, with whom it still remains, the Earl of Lonsdale being the lord of the manor. The landowners are the Rev. Edward Heelis; Joseph Jameson, Esq.; George Atkinson, Esq.; Messrs. Jonathan and Edmund Thompson, John Simpson, John Pearson, Joseph Pearson, George Belasis, John Ballas; and Mrs. Courtney. The old hall serves at present for the rectory.

The village of Long Marton is situated on the north side of the Troutbeck rivulet, three miles north-east of Appleby. Most of the houses have been rebuilt within the last forty years, so that it is now one of the neatest villages in the county.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. Margaret and St. James, is a large plain structure, standing in the fields of Brampton, about a quarter of a mile south of the village of Long Marton. It comprises different periods of Gothic architecture, and consists of nave, aisles, chancel, and tower, containing three bells. It is much in need of repair and renovation. There are mural tablets to the memory of members of the Rippon, Milward, Thompson, Atkinson, and Ballas families. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of Sir Richard Tufton, Bart. It is valued in the King's Book at £21 15s. 5½d., but it now possesses forty-five acres of glebe, besides 445 acres awarded at the enclosure, in lieu of the tithes of Knock and Marton townships. The tithes of Brampton township have also been commuted for a yearly rent charge of £165 1s. 11d. The total income is now about £500 a year.

RECTORIES.—John de Havelda, about 1150; William de Cornub occurs 1298; John de Malham, 1300; Thomas de Harwood, 1302; Ralph de Malton, 1311; John de Marchall, 1344; Wm. de Loundras, 1359; Robert de Wolsely, 1363; John Donkyn, 1369; Henry Kirkby, 1393; Edward Wharton occurs 1470; William Bury, died 1562; George Bury, 1562; John Baynes, 1577; Richard Burton, 1591; Henry Hulton, 1610; Lancelot Lowther, died 1661; Robert Symson, 1661; Barnaby Symson, died 1712; Christopher Grandorge, 1712; Robert Leyborne, 1736; John Middleton, resigned 1730; Thomas Milward, 1750; Joseph Milward, 1775; Gilpin Gorst, 1782; John Ripon, 1803; Edward Heelis, 1833.

The rectory (Marton Hall) stands on a gentle eminence on the north bank of the Troutbeck.

The Wesleyans have a chapel here, built in 1816, at a cost of £400, on land given by Mrs. Mary Brunskill, who afterwards bequeathed two acres of land, which sold for £160, to assist in paying off the debt contracted in its erection.

The parish school, near the church, was endowed in 1624 with the interest of £20 left by Mr. Thomas Machel, who also bequeathed £20 for the encouragement of a singing master to teach psalmody at church. The number of children in attendance is about fifty.

There are also two private schools. A good library was established in 1858.

CHARITIES.

Burton's Charity.—Poor Stock.—Burton, by will, about 1655, gave to the poor stock of the parish of Marton £40, the interest to be applied in binding apprentice a poor boy born in the said parish. It is understood that £10 of this legacy was lost by the insolvency of a person to whom it had been lent. The remainder is supposed to form part of a sum of £100 now belonging to the parish, the other £70 being understood to be an ancient poor stock, applicable to the use of the poor not receiving parish relief. The apprentice money accumulates till it amounts to a sufficient sum to put out a proper object.

Lord Wharton's Bible Charity.—Five or six Bibles, with catechisms, and other small books, are annually received by the minister of Long Marton, on account of this charity, who duly distributes them among the poor of the parish.

BRAMPTON.

For acreage and population see parish returns. The rateable value is £1,865 12s. 7d. This township lies between the Eden and the Troutbeck.

The manor of Brampton appears to have been held by the family of Greystoke as early as the reign of Edward II., and they continued to possess it till 1422. It subsequently became the property of a family bearing the name of Lancaster, said to be a younger branch of the Lancasters of Sockbridge, by whom the manor was held of the Greystokes, as the latter held it of the Cliffords, by homage, fealty, and scutage. The family of Lancaster ended in three daughters in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and upon their respective marriages the manor became divided into three portions, one coming to the Birbecks of Hornby, another to the Backhouses of Morland, and the third to the Whartons of Kirkby Thore. That part held by the Birbecks was subsequently exchanged with the Earl of Thanet for land at Hornby; the other parts were afterwards sold to the tenants; in consequence of this arrangement Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., possesses the manorial rights of one-third of the township. The landowners are Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.; Rev. Thomas Bellas; William Spedding, Esq.; T. B. Lennard, Esq.; Rev. Edward Heelis; Messrs. John Thornburrow, Jonathan Thompson, Richard Atkinson, Samuel Crosby, R. Blackburn; Miss A. Milner, and many other small proprietors. The ancient manor-house, or at least a portion of it, now serves as a farm-stead.

The villages of Brampton and Brampton Croft End are about two miles north-by-west of Appleby. Brampton Crofts and Brampton Tower are neat residences, the former being the seat of William Hopes, Esq., and the latter of William Spilling, Esq.

Hopes of Brampton Crofts.

WILLIAM HOPES, Esq., of Brampton Crofts, co. Westmoreland, J.P., born 2nd December, 1800; married 12th March, 1838, Jane, daughter of Thomas Swanwick, Esq., of Macclesfield, co. Chester, and has issue a daughter, Jane. Mr. Hopes is only son of William Hopes, Esq., of Stainmore, co. Westmoreland, and Jane, his wife, daughter of William Dickinson, of the same place.

INCLOSURE.

The area and population of this township are included in the parish returns; its rateable value is £1,174 18s.

The manor of Knock, anciently Knock Shalcock, belonged to the Veteriponts and Cliffords, lords of the barony of Westmoreland. It appears to have been held under the Cliffords by the Boyvilles, Rookbys, Soublys, and Lancasters, from the co-heirs of which last family it was probably purchased by the Clifords, and has since continued in the possession of their descendants, Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., being the present lord; besides whom Francis F. Pearson, Esq.; Rev. Edward Heelis; John Milner, Esq.; Messrs. Richard Atkinson, Joseph Bland, Thomas Bland, Robert Bland, Richard Lowes, and others are landowners. The abbey of Shap had some lands here, given by John de Veteripont.

The village of Knock is two miles north-north-east of Long Marton, in the neighbourhood of Knock Pike and Dutton Fell. The Wesleyans have a chapel here.

Close Houses is a hamlet in this township, two miles and a quarter north-north-east of Long Marton.

GREAT MUSGRAVE PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north and west by Warcop, on the south by Crosby Garret and Kirkby Stephen, and on the east by Brough and the county of York. It comprises a small district lying on the east side of the river Eden, and consists of but one township.

The area of Great Musgrave is 4,080 acres, and its rateable value £956 13s. 7½d. The population in 1801 was 159; in 1811, 165; in 1821, 168; in 1831, 179; in 1841, 167; and in 1851, 175; who are chiefly engaged in agricultural pursuits; they attend the market of Kirkby Stephen. The Eden Valley railway passes through a part of this township.

The manor of Musgrave is still held by the family which gave name to the place, and is called Great Musgrave to distinguish it from Little Musgrave, which also belongs to the Musgrave family, and is situated in the parish of Crosby Garret, on the other bank of the Eden. A full account of the Musgraves will be found in the account of Elen Hall, given at page 532. The landowners are Sir George Musgrave, Bart.; Thomas Mason, Esq.; Samuel Highmore, Joseph Collinson, William Ladley, John Raine, Thomas Alderson, and other small proprietors. The lord of the manor holds a court baron at Hall Garth at midsummer annually. The township is nearly all held by customary tenants, who pay arbitrary fines on the change of lord or tenant, limited so as not to exceed two years' value. The township has been enclosed.

The village of Great Musgrave occupies a pleasant situation on an eminence about two miles south-west of Brough, and commands a fine view of the picturesque vale. Rush bearing, an ancient custom of old midsummer day, is still performed here annually, when twelve or eighteen couples of females, dressed in their holiday garb, and each bearing a garland of flowers to the village green, proceed to the church, where they hang up their garlands and take down those placed there on the preceding anniversary; the day is closed with rustic sports.

THE CHURCH.

Great Musgrave church, dedicated to St. Theobald, is a small neat building, consisting of nave, chancel, and small western tower containing two bells. It is in the early English style, and was erected upon the site of an older church in 1845-6, at a cost of £550, of which Sir George Musgrave, Bart., gave £125; the Church Building Society, £40; and the remainder was raised by local subscription. The windows are lancet-shaped, that at the east end containing three lights. There are several ancient monuments in the church, as well as some neat mural tablets to the memory of members of the Collinson, Loy, and Pindar families. A valuable communion service was presented to the church in 1809 by the late Rev. Septimus Collinson, provost of Queen's College, Oxford, and a native of this parish. Musgrave church was appropriated to the Abbey of St. Mary at York, but has always continued a rectory. The living, valued in the King's Book at £16 1s. 11½d., was certified to the governors of Queen Ann's Bounty as of the clear yearly value of £48. About the year 1750 it was augmented with a small estate at O-ton, purchased with £200, given by the Rev. Simon Pindar, rector of the parish, and £200 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty. It is now worth about £200 a year. The tithes have been commuted for £120. The patronage is vested in the Bishop of Carlisle, to one of whose predecessors it was granted in 1248 by the community of St. Mary at York.

Rectors—Thomas Oake, —; William de Barton, 1298; Robert de Hildston, 1391; John de Barden, 1411; Thomas de Godington, 1417; Robert de Donham, 1430; Adam de Levinton, 1447; John de Brydlang, 1488; John de Skelton, 1512; William de Southwell, —; William de Hildston, —; John de Southy, 1539; Peter de Morland, 1561; Richard de Upton, younger son, William, to whom he appears to have given the third part of the manor of Brougham, for in 1554-5, Margaret, widow of William Crackenthorpe, and John, their son and heir, held the third part of Brougham; these are the last of the Crackenthorpes we find at Brougham. John de Crackenthorpe was succeeded by his son,

CHRISTOPHER CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., who built Newbiggin Hall, as described above. In the 35th Henry VIII. (1543-4) this gentleman, for the sum of £255 8s., purchased of the crown Isle Grange, in Kirby Thore, the property of the suppressed abbey of Hulme Cultram, with lands in Kirby Thore and Newbiggin belonging to the said abbey, amounting in the whole to 192 acres; and also the house and other possessions of the Carmelite friars, in Appleby, and the whole manor of Hardendale and Wasdale, the property of the monastery of Byland in Yorkshire; to hold of the king, in capite, by the twentieth part of one knight's fee, and paying to the king yearly, for Byland 10s. 8d., for the Friary 2s. 8d., and for Byland 16s. This Christopher married a daughter of Blenkinsop of Helbeck, and had, besides Henry, his heir, a younger son John, who was founder of the family of the Crackenthorpes of Little Strickland. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

HENRY CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., who was married four times, but had issue by his fourth wife only. This lady was Winifred, sister of Sir Christopher Pickering, and by her he had four sons and four daughters. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

CHRISTOPHER CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., who married Mary, daughter of Sir James Bellingham, and by her had issue,

- i. Henry, killed at Wigan during the parliamentary wars.
- ii. RICHARD who succeeded his father.
- iii. Robert, who died unmarried; and four daughters.

He was succeeded by his second son,

RICHARD CRACKENTHORPE, Esq. This gentleman was twice married. By his first wife, Mary, daughter of Sir Christopher Dalston, Knt., of Acorn Bank, he had issue,

- i. Henry, who died young.
- ii. CHRISTOPHER, who succeeded his father.
- iii. John.
- iv. THOMAS, of whom hereafter.
- v. William.
- i. Mary.
- ii. Barbara.

His second wife was Lettice, daughter of the Rev. Mr. Lowgher, a clergyman in Staffordshire, by whom he had four sons and a daughter.

CHRISTOPHER CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., second son and heir of Richard, married Anne, daughter of Robert Rawlinson, Esq., of Cark Hall, Carlisle, co. Lancaster, and by her left issue,

- i. RICHARD.
- ii. Robert.
- iii. Christopher.
- i. Mary.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

RICHARD CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., who married Deborah, eldest daughter and co-heir of Samuel Mottram, Esq., of Thorp Hall, co. Lincoln, and by her had issue,

- i. MOTTRAM.
- ii. Henry, who died an infant.
- i. Deborah, who died unmarried.

ii. Anne, who became the wife of Adam Askew, M.D., Newcastle-upon-Tyne, who after the death of her brothers and sisters without issue remained her general of the Crackenthorpes, but by the entail on the male issue was excluded from the inheritance.

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

MOTTRAM CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., who dying unmarried, the direct line failed, and the property came to

CHRISTOPHER CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., son and heir, by Mary, daughter of Threlkeld of Melmerby, of Thomas Crackenthorpe, fourth son of Richard Crackenthorpe, as above. This Christopher married Dorothy, second daughter of William Sandford, Esq., of Askham, and dying without issue, was succeeded by his brother,

RICHARD CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., who married Dorothy, daughter of Edward Crewe, Esq., of London, and had issue five sons and five daughters, most of whom died young. He was succeeded by his only surviving son,

JAMES CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., of Newbiggin. This gentleman married Anne, second daughter of George Vane, Esq., of Long Newton, co. Durham, and died without issue, when the name of Crackenthorpe of Newbiggin became extinct. He devised the inheritance to his widow, during her life, and after that to his sister Dorothy, wife of William Cookson, Esq., of Penrith, and the heirs male of her body; in defect thereof to the Rev. Adam Askew, second son of Dr. Adam Askew above mentioned. Under this settlement, on his demise, Newbiggin passed to his nephew,

CHRISTOPHER CRACKENTHORPE COOKSON, Esq., who thereupon assumed the additional surname and arms of Crackenthorpe. He married Charlotte Cust, and dying in 1800, left (with two daughters, Charlotte and Sarah), an only son, WILLIAM CRACKENTHORPE, Esq., of Newbiggin Hall, J.P., high-sheriff of Cumberland in 1826, born 25th February, 1790.

Arms.—Or, a chevron, between three mullets, pierced, az.
Crest.—A holly tree, pp.

The village of Newbiggin is seven miles north-west by north of Appleby.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a neat structure, in the Early English style, consisting of nave and chancel, with small turret containing two bells. It was erected in 1853-4 on the site of the former church at the expense of the lord of the manor. The east window is of three lights, and is filled with stained glass, on which is emblazoned the arms of the Crackenthorpes. The living is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £4 14s. 2d., and is in the patronage of the lord of the manor. In 1759 it was augmented with £200, given by Mrs. Dorothy Crackenthorpe, and £200 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, with which sum the Potter Banks estate at Kirkoswald was purchased, now let for £40 a year, besides which the rector has eleven acres of ancient glebe, and receives a prescriptive rent of £9 6s. 8d. from the lord of the manor, for the corn tithe of the parish. The tithes were commuted in 1811 for about £62 a year. The rectory is now worth £82 a year, irrespective of forty-eight acres of land and common.

Rectors:—Thomas de Newbiggin, 1333; John de Hale, 1339; Gilbert de Tindale, 1342; Robert de Appleby, resigned 1364; Thomas de Appleby, 1364; Robert de Merton, 1367; John de Culwen, 1375; Roger de Kirkoswald, 1375; Giles Robinson, died 1384; Roland Vaux, 1384; Thomas Dawson, died 1398; Thomas Jackson, 1398; Richard Smith, 1731; George Dawson, 1766; John Murray, 1813; John Robinson, 1818.

The rectory is a good commodious house, erected some years ago.

Hale is a small hamlet, partly in this and partly in Kirkby Thore parish, three quarters of a mile south of Newbiggin.

CHARITIES.

Poor Stock.—There is an ancient poor stock of £57, arising from £6 left by some person unknown; £1 by William Jackson; £3 by Mary Crackenthorpe; £40 by Dorothy Crackenthorpe; £5 by John Teasdale; and £1 by John Harrison. The interest of this money is distributed yearly amongst such poor persons as do not receive parish relief.

ORMSIDE PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by those of St. Lawrence and St. Michael Appleby, on the west by the parish of St. Lawrence, on the south by the parishes of Warcop and Asby, and on the east by Warcop. It comprises a small fertile district on the west bank of the Eden, and consists of the two villages and constablewicks of Great and Little Ormside, whose united area is 2,430 acres. The population of the parish in 1801 was 171; in 1811, 195; in 1821, 202; in 1831, 190; in 1841, 190; and in 1851, 198. The rateable value is £1,034 10s. 3d.

The first noteworthy person we meet with at Ormside is John de Ormsheved, who occurs in the reign of King John. He, together with Robert de Boell, was appointed to receive possession of Appleby Castle, in behalf of Robert de Veteripont, to whom the king then granted the same during his pleasure. In the eighth year of the same king, we find John de Ormsheved sheriff of Westmoreland under Robert de Veteripont. In the 36th Henry III. (1251-2) Robert, son of Guy de Ormsheved witnessed a grant of lands at Appleby made by the last Robert de Veteripont. In the 14th Edward I. (1285-6) John de Ormsheved, son of Robert, lord of the manor of Ormsheved, granted to John, his son and heir, certain lands in Ormsheved, and also land in Little Ormsheved; in the same year John de Vesci occurs as holding part of the manor of Ormsheved of the two daughters of Robert de Veteripont. In 1309-10 John de Derwentwater held the manor of Ormsheved, and it continued in his family till 1406, when we find it in the possession of John de Barton and Alice his wife, who made a settlement of the manor. In 1422 Nicholas de Ratcliffe held the manor in right of his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of John de Derwentwater. In 1451 there is a letter of attorney from Thomas Barton, of Ormsheved, and others, to Richard Martendale of Patterdale, to deliver seisin to John de Barton and Catherine his wife, of lands in Ormshead, Great Salkeld, and Great Asby; and in the following year Thomas Ratcliffe held a moiety of Ormshead immediately of Thomas de Clifford, called Ormshead Vesci, because it had been previously held by John Vesci, and John Barton held the same of Thomas Radcliffe. Robert Barton in 1526 held the manor of Ormshead of Cuthbert Ratcliffe. From this time the Bartons continued to hold the manor till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when it was sold by Thomas Barton to Sir Christopher Pickering, Knt., who, dying unmarried, left the manor to his natural daughter, the wife of John Dudley, Esq., of Dufton. This gentleman dying before his wife, she married Cyprian Hilton, Esq., of Burton, who had with her the manor of Ormside. From the Hiltons the manor passed with a heiress in marriage to Thomas Wybergh, Esq., of Clifton, in whose time the manor was sold to George Stephenson, Esq., of Warcop, who died intestate and without issue, and his property descended to two co-heirs, sisters of his father, John Stephenson, and upon the partition thereof, this manor came to the share of John Fawell, of Temple Sowerby, who in the year 1770 sold the same to the Earl of Thanet; it is now held by Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.; besides whom John Wakefield, Esq., is the principal landowner. The manor house is an ancient building now used as a farm-house; as is also Becks Hall, another old mansion. Near to the former, in the bed of the river Eden, several brass vessels were found in 1689, supposed to have been buried during the turmoil of the civil wars in the reign of Charles I.

The village of Great Ormside occupies a pleasant situation near the Eden, three miles south-south-east of Appleby.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedication unknown, but supposed to be St. James, is a small ancient edifice, standing on a considerable eminence, near the hall, and consists of nave, chancel, chantry or chapel belonging to the Tufton family, and a tower with two bells. Inserted in a slab in the floor of the nave are three brasses bearing the dates 1620, 1625, and 1693; the first commemorates Sir Christopher Pickering, who was five times high-sheriff of Cumberland; the others, members of the Hilton family. The church, a rectory, was appropriated to the abbey of St. Mary at York, and in 1248 the abbot and convent granted the advowson to the Bishop of Carlisle, whose successors have continued to exercise the patronage. The living is valued in the King's Book at £17 17s. 3½d., and certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the clear yearly rent of £40. The tithes were commuted in 1846 for an annual rent charge of £78 16s. 4d.; the living is now worth about £200 a year.

Rectors.—William de Gasford, 1394; John de Morland, 1449; John de Grete, 1503; Robert Bix, 1507; Richard de Colley, 1468; Christopher Parker, died 1565; Richard Towson, 1565; John Watson, 1569; John Barnes, 1571; John Corry, 1572; Lancelot Mansfield, 1577; John Braythwaite, 1582; John Hudson, 1587; Richard Burton, 1591; Robert Symson, 1635; Barnaby Symson, 1661; John Symson, 1679; Thomas Nicolson, 1726; William Nicolson, 1727; Thomas Cantley, 1731; William Preston, 1762; Thomas Spooner, 1778; William Monkhouse, 1807; Robert Whitehead, 1811; James Bush, 1851; Christopher Parker, 1854; Thomas Clarke, 1856.

The rectory is a handsome modern house, situated on a gentle eminence about a quarter of a mile south of the church.

There is a national school in the parish.

CHARITIES.

Rudd's Charity.—The sum of 8s. is received every fourth year from Rudd's Charity (see Appleby, page 719) and is given away to the poor of the parish.

Sarah Michaelson's Charity.—This charity consists of a sum of £4, which appears to have been given by Sarah Michaelson, the interest to be paid to the poor of Ormside, yearly, for ever.

Mary Hilton's Charity.—Mrs. Mary Hilton, in 1575, gave the sum of £12, the interest to be given to the poor of the parish of Ormside, for ever.

Burton's Charity.—Poor Stock.—Burton, by will, about 1655, gave to the poor stock of Ormside the sum of £40, the interest to be applied yearly to the binding of some honest poor man's legitimate child, born in the said parish, and apprenticed to some honest trade; the said child to be elected by the incumbents of Ormside, Appleby, and St. Michael's, or the major part of them.

Little Ormside is a small village, lying north-east of the parish church, about three miles south-by-east of Great Ormside. The tenants seem to have been purchased off the manor of Ormside at large, and are now within the manor of Gathorne, in the parish of Asby; but most of them have been enfranchised.

ORTON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Asby, Ravensworth, Crosby, and Shap; on the west by the parish of Kendal; on the south by Kendal and Sedburgh, in Yorkshire; and on the east by Ravenstonedale, Crosby Garret, and Asby. It is very extensive, being about ten miles in length and eight in breadth, and comprises many fells and valleys, in which grazing is largely carried on. Limestone and freestone are abundant here. The river Lune, and many of its tributary streams, have their sources in this parish. The moors are well stocked with game, and Orton Scarr is famous for dovecotes. Besides a portion of Fawcett Forest and Girkbeek Fells, the parish contains the townships of Orton, Brethendale, Langdale, Raisbeck, and Tebay, whose united area is 24,130 acres. The population in 1801 was 1,230; in 1811, 1,333; in 1821, 1,525; in 1831, 1,501; in 1841, 1,449; and in 1851, 1,456. The population of the townships of this parish have not, as yet, been returned separately.

ORTON.

The rateable value of this township is £2,700, its area and population are included in the parish returns. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants, who generally attend the markets at Kendal.

The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township.

Of olden time Orton possesses a few remains. The Britons have left a tumulus at Grantlands, about a mile east of Orton. It is circular in form, and nearly one hundred yards in diameter, rising gradually from the circumference to the height of about three yards in the middle, and is composed of stones promiscuously thrown together. A human skeleton was found here. In 1847 there were found on a hill, not far from Orton, some ancient jewels, which a writer in the Kendal newspaper supposed to have been deposited there in the time of Petilius Cerealis. Behind Orton Scar, nearly two miles north-east of the town, is a place called Castle Folds, formerly surrounded by a strong wall, with a small fort, for the defence of the cattle, &c., during the border forays. There was also a beacon on the high grounds, which communicated with those of Penrith, Stainmore, and Whin Fell. At a place about a mile south of the parish church is a well, called Lady Well, near to which, according to tradition, a chapel formerly stood; its site is now recalled by the name of Chapel Field. In this vicinity is a farm, bearing the name of Friarsbiggin, probably on account of the community of Conishead having built a house here for their tenant.

The first lord of the manor of Orton on record is Gamel de Pennington, who gave the church to the priory of Conishead in the reign of Henry II. In the reign of Edward I. we find the manor divided into moieties, which were held by the Dacre and Musgrave families respectively. The Dacre moiety continued to be held by that family till the year 1614, when it was sold to the landowners. The Musgrave moiety, after having been subdivided and successively held by the families of Henecastre, Hilbeck, Blinkinsop, Warcop, Dalston, and Boves, was also sold to the landowners, for the sum of £965. The whole is now consigned in trust to four nominal lords, for the purpose of holding courts leet and baron, for the convenience of tenants. The landowners are Richard Burn, Esq.; Rev. C. Parkin; E. Braithwaite, Esq.; Robert Wilson, Esq., and a number of small proprietors. Orton Hall, for many years occupied as a farm-house, is a fine old building, bearing the date 1662. Where the ancient manor-house stood is unknown.

THE TOWN OF ORTON.

The market town of Orton (anciently Scar Overton) is pleasantly situated on the road between Appleby and Kendal, from the former of which it is distant nine miles and a half south-south-west, and from the latter fifteen miles north-north-east. The market is held under a charter granted by Edward I., but the market day has been changed from Wednesday to Friday. At the request of the Countess of Pembroke, Oliver Cromwell, in 1658, granted to the inhabitants of Orton a license to hold a fair, annually, in Whit-week, and a fortnight fair "to begin on Wednesday next after Whitsun-week and continue till the day of St. Simon and St. Jude following, with a court of pie-powder, and power to take tolls." The seal appended to this document is about six inches in diameter. On one side are the arms of the Commonwealth, with this motto underneath, "Pax queritur bello," and circumscribed "Magnum Sigillum Reipublice Angliæ, Scotiæ, et Hiberniæ." On the reverse is the Protector in armour, with the legend "Olivarius, Dei Gratia, Republicæ Angliæ, Scotiæ, et Hiberniæ, Protector." The fairs are now held on the 3rd of May, Friday before Whitsuntide, and the second Friday after Michaelmas Day, for sheep, black cattle, &c.; there is also a cattle fair on the 20th of August.

THE CHURCH.

Orton church, dedicated to All Saints, is a large Gothic structure, comprising nave, aisles, chancel, and low embattled tower, with a clock, porch, and peal of four bells. The chancel possesses a window of three lights; and a portion of the ancient sedilia still exists. In this part of the church is a monument to the memory of Dr. Richard Burn, a former rector; another to the memory of John Burn, of Orton, son of Dr. Burn; and in the north aisle is one commemorating John and Thomas Redman. In the south aisle, an ancient piscina with a trefoil-headed canopy, shows the existence of an ancient chapel. All the seats, with the exception of the vicar's, are repaired at the public expense, and no one of the parishioners has a right to any particular seat. The church of Orton, as above stated, was appropriated to the priory of Conishead in the reign of Henry II., this appropriation being confirmed by John Bartholomew, prior of Carlisle, in the time of Hugh, third bishop of that see. On the suppression of the religious houses, the advowson of Orton came to the crown. It was purchased by Francis Morice, Esq., and Francis Phelps, Esq., who in their turn sold it, in 1618, to the landowners of the parish for £570. The patronage is therefore in about 240 individuals, but in order to avoid confusion they keep the advowson in the hands of twelve trustees, who are bound to present according to the majority of votes when an election takes place. The living is valued in the King's Book at £16 17s. 3½d. At the enclosure, made about eighty years ago, it was augmented with two allotments, called the Knott and Vicar's Moss, consisting of about 200 acres given in lieu of the tithes of lamb and wool, and the living is now worth about £280 a year. The parish registers commence in 1596.

VICARS.—Richard de Barnard Castle, 1293; Henry——, 1392; Thomas de Appleby, died 1338; Richard de Wessington, 1398; Robert de Berdeshay, 1373; Thomas Bell, —; William Birkbeck, 1455; Thomas Lorde, 1534; Philip Machel, died 1573; Robert Corney, 1573; Henry Atkinson, 1594; John Corney, 1595; Alexander Featherstonhaugh, 1643; George Fothergill, ejected in 1662; Roger Kenyon, 1662; Thomas Nelson, 1703; Richard Burn, 1736; John Redman, 1785; Robert Milner, 1802; J. S. Sisson, 1849.

The vicarage is an old house, much in need of renovation.

Here is a Wesleyan chapel erected in 1833. Wesleyanism was first introduced into Orton by the late Mr. Stephen Brunskill.

CHARITIES.

School.—This school appears to have originated in private subscriptions about the year 1730. From the fund then raised a school-house was built, which continued to be used for the purposes of education until the year 1809, when, being considered too small, and the situation bad, a new one was built on another spot at the expense of about £210, of which Mrs. Margaret Hilmie contributed £135; William Holme, Esq., £25; and Joseph Burne, Esq., £50. The old school-house was conveyed to the church-wardens upon their engaging to pay £3 a year to the church singing-master. In 1740 Agnes Holme left to the school a rent charge of 10s. a year towards paying for the teaching of two poor scholars. Thomas Addison, by will, dated in 1750, gave to the school of Orton £5; Henry Bland, in 1769, gave £10; and Francis Wardale, in 1781, £400. From these various charities the school now possesses an income of £50 a year; it is attended by about sixty children. There is also a female school, built by Richard Burn, Esq., and partly supported by that gentleman.

Agnes Holme's Charity.—Agnes Holme, but at what date is not known, left £10 to be given among such poor single women of the parish of Orton as were not maintained by the parish. This charity is distributed as directed.

Baurgh Estate.—In November, 1720, the closes at Barfe, called Great Closes, or High Closes, were purchased for £110, of which £30 was church stock, and £80 poor stock, in trust for the repairs, &c., of the parish church and the benefit of the poor of the parish. This estate was augmented at the enclosure of the commons, and one moiety of the rent is now appropriated to the relief of poor householders.

Frances Wardale's Charity.—Frances Wardale, by will, dated November 9th, 1781, gave to the overseers of the poor of the parish of Orton, £20, which she directed should be invested, and the interest distributed amongst the poor of the parish.

Rounthwaite, Bretherdale, Birkbeck Fells, Upper and Lower Scales, and Greenholme School.—George Gibson, by will, dated 23rd November, 1733, gave £400 bank stock towards the endowment of a free school in Bretherdale or Birkbeck Fells, for the benefit of the places named above. With this bequest an estate was purchased at Dillicar which now produces about £50 a year, the whole of which, with the exception of 20s. for a dinner for the trustees, is given to the master.

Langdale, Tebay, and Bretherdale.—Lord Wharton's Bible Charity.—These townships share in the annual distribution of bibles, catechisms, &c., distributed in pursuance of the will of Lord Wharton.

Langdale and Tebay.—Anne Thompson's Charity.—The particulars of this charity have been given in our account of the parish of Kirkby Stephen. Six four-penny loaves are placed every Sunday in the parish church of Orton, of which three are given to poor persons of Tebay, and three to other poor of Langdale.

Birkbeck Fells.—Poor Stock.—A sum of £15, supposed to be ancient poor stock, belongs to this township, amongst the poor people of which the interest is distributed.

Langdale.—Atkinson's Charity.—Abraham Atkinson, by will, dated November 1st, 1819, left about £40, the interest of which he directed should be given to the poor people of Langdale.

The Temperance Hall is a neat building, erected by subscription in 1858. In connection with it are a library and newsroom, the former of which comprises about 300 volumes.

Orton Hall, the seat and property of Richard Burn, Esq., is a fine old mansion, occupying a pleasant situation near the town.

Bousfield is a small hamlet in this township, one mile west of Orton. Park and Low Scales are two other small hamlets, the former three quarters of a mile north-west, and the latter about two miles south-west of that town.

BRETHEDALE.

For area and population of this township, see parish returns. This place belonged to the abbey of Byland, in Yorkshire, and is supposed to have been given to that house by Thomas, son of Gospatric. In the reign of Edward I. we find the abbot of Byland holding Bretherdale of the two daughters of the last Robert de Veteripont, with Asby Grange, paying for all services, 31s. 11½d. In the reign of Henry VI. the abbot of Byland paid for Bretherdale a white rent of 5s., for all services. After the dissolution of the religious houses, the Whartons purchased this manor, and it is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale.

The hamlet of Bretherdale is three miles south-south-west of Orton.

LANGDALE.

Langdale, or Longdale, is a mountainous township lying between Ravenstonedale, Yorkshire, Tebay, and Raisbeck. Its area and population are returned with the parish. The rateable value is £964 11s. 8d.

The manor of Langdale was never held of the Cliffords, having been given by Henry II. to the priory of Walton, in Yorkshire, which grant was confirmed by King John, on the 29th March, 1200. In the 36th Henry III. (1251-2) there was a grant of free warren in Langdale and Ravenstonedale to Walton Priory. On the suppression of the monastic establishments, this manor was granted to the Wharton family, from whom it was purchased by Robert Lowther, Esq., of Mauld's Meaburn, and it is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale. The landowners are Matthew Thompson, Esq.; John Beck, Esq.; John Sawyer, Esq.; Thomas Fawcett, Esq.; and some small proprietors.

The hamlet of Langdale is three miles south-east of Orton. Dr. Thomas Barlow, a learned divine of the seventeenth century, and bishop of Lincoln, was a native of this place. Here is a Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1841.

Coatgill is a hamlet in this township, four miles south-east of Orton.

RAISBECK.

The rateable value of Raisbeck township is £1,773; its area and population are included in the parish returns. The landowners are Richard L. Watson, Esq.; John Wakefield, Esq.; Stephen Bland, Esq.; Matthew Thompson, Esq.; John Brunsell, Esq.; Richard Burn, Esq.; Rev. J. Sisson, and a number of small proprietors. On the south side of the township is Reasgill Hall, where the manor courts were formerly held.

The village of Raisbeck is about a mile and three quarters east of Orton. Sunbiggin is another village, at the foot of a lofty scar, two and three quarter miles north-east of the same town. The hamlets are Coat Flat, one mile and a half south of Orton; Kelleth, three miles south-east; and Rayne, three miles south-south-east. Coatflat Hall is a commodious dwelling, a mile and a quarter from Orton, erected in 1797, on the site of an ancient castellated structure, at which, according to tradition, the judges on the northern circuit often regaled themselves between Appleby and Lancaster. Sunbiggin tarn is a small lake, a little west of Sunbiggin. Human bones have been found at several places in this township.

TEBAT.

The area and population of Tebay are returned with the parish; the rateable value is £3,599 3s. 6d. The township is large, consisting of two divisions, called High End and Low End, both of which are fertile.

The first possessor of Tebay on record is Radulph de Tybai, who occurs as a witness to a grant of land at Kirkby Thore to the abbey of Holme Cultram. Herbert de Tibay is the next of the name we meet with, but he does not appear to have held the manor, which was parcelled out amongst several owners. He occurs as a landowner, and it is very probable that he possessed a part of the manor. We afterwards meet with the families of Hastings and English as owning portions of the manor of Tebay. In the 31st Edward I. (1302-3), Henry Threlkeld, of Crosby Ravensworth, had a grant of free warren in Tebay and Rounthwaite. Besides Hastings and Englishes, the Restwolds and Whartons had lands here, and the whole manor came at length to the latter family. The Whartons subsequently sold it to the Lowthers, and it is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale. The landowners are John Beck, Esq.; Richard Branthwaite, Esq.; John Brunsell, Esq.; the Rev. George Wilson; and the lord of the manor.

The village of Tebay is situated on the Kendal road, two miles south of Orton, near the junction of the Birbeck with the Lune. Here is a station on the Lancaster and Carlisle railway. Tebay is to be the terminus of the Barnard Castle and Lancaster line. There is a Methodist chapel in the village. In the Galloper Field, in this township, is the Brandery Stone, on which there was formerly an inscription; and near Low Borrow Bridge are the remains of a castle, which seems to have been a fortress of some strength. At Tebay and Greenholme are two places called Castle How, both of which are supposed to have served as places of defence during the Scottish inroads.

School.—By indenture, dated 30th of April, 1672, Robert Adamson gave two messuages and tenements, and the lands thereto belonging, the one called Ormondic Biggin, and the other Blocket Bottom, to trustees, for the use of a grammar school at Tebay, and for the maintenance of a schoolmaster there; the school to be open house of charity to poor children. The property just received being in about 1755 a year, out of which the master receives £45. The school is under the management of six trustees, and is attended by about seventy children of both sexes.

This township also shares in other charities, for which see pages

Ellergill hamlet is two and a half miles south by east of Orton; Gaisgill hamlet, two miles south-by-east; Redgill, two and a half miles south-by-east; and Bounthwaite, three miles south of the same town.

OTHER LORDSHIPS.

Birkbeck Fells is an extensive lordship within the manor of Crosby Ravensworth, and part of it is also in the parish of Crosby Ravensworth, where it will be found described more in detail. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township, the part of which in this parish is rated at £435 3s. 4d. At Greenholme, a small hamlet in this division, two miles south-south-west of Orton, is an endowed school. (See page 764.) High Seales is another hamlet in this division, two miles south-west of Orton.

THE BORROWDALE.

Borrowdale, six miles south-south-west of Orton, is a deep romantic dale, forming part of Fawcett Forest, which is mostly in Kendal parish. This part of Fawcett Forest township is rated at £612.

RAVENSTONEDALE PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by those of Crosby Garrett and Kirkby Stephen, on the West by Orton, on the south by Sedburgh and Kirkby Stephen, and on the west by Kirkby Stephen. It comprises a picturesque region of valleys, ditches, and fells. The river Rother and several streams which form the source of the Lune rise here, as does also the Ravenbeck, which flows northward to Smardale, through a fine open valley, formed into rich pastures, and from which the parish has its name. Ravenstonedale parish comprehends only one manor and township, though, for the convenience of collecting rates, &c. it is divided into four annexed parts, called respectively Town, Bowderdale, Fell-End, and Newbiggin Angles.

The area of Ravenstonedale is 18,450 acres, and its rateable value is £6,428 11s. The population in 1801 was 1,138; in 1811, 1,091; in 1821, 1,059; in 1831, 1,036; in 1841, 973; and in 1851, 939; who are principally engaged in agriculture. Kirkby Stephen is the market attended. The Durham and Lancaster line of railway intersects the parish.

The manor of Ravenstonedale, with the advowson of the church there, was granted by Torphin, son of Robert, "to God, and the Blessed Virgin, and all the holy men serving God in the monastery of Walton." This community belonged to the order of Sempringham, founded by St. Gilbert at Sempringham, in Lincolnshire, in 1148. Numerous privileges were granted to this order by several popes and kings, in all of which the manor of Ravenstonedale participated. Pope Celestine III., who was elevated to the pontifical chair in 1191, granted to the order of Sempringham the privilege of exemption from payment of tithes of lands which they had in their own cultivation. King John, Henry III., Edward III., and Henry VI. confirmed the immunities enjoyed by the order. From these confirmations we learn that besides freedom from toll and other personal and pecuniary charges, the monks of Sempringham had also the privilege of sanctuary throughout their whole possessions. In pursuance of these grants it is recorded that if in Ravenstonedale "a murderer fled to the church or sanctuary, and tolled the holy bell, as it was called, he was free; and if a stranger came within the precincts of the manor, he was safe from the pursuer." The privilege of sanctuary was abolished here, as well as in other places, in the reign of James I., and many of the other privileges have been taken away by act of parliament. After the suppression of the monastic institutions Henry VIII. granted the church and manor of Ravenstonedale to the Archbishop of York during his life; and in November, 1546, he granted the reversion to Sir Thomas Wharton, Knt., for the sum of £935 16s. 8d. The rectory and manor continued to be held by the Wharton family till they were sold by the Duke of Wharton to Robert Lowther, Esq., from whom they have descended to the Earl of Lonsdale. The greater number of the estates have been enfranchised. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale; Matthew Thompson, Esq.; Richard Winn, Esq.; John Hewitson, Esq.; Richard entire, and so descended from father to son. It appears from an indenture, made between Lord Wharton and the tenants in 1579, "that any tenant having no issue of his body, lawfully begotten, and being of the age of sixteen years, may, by his last will in writing, or by any other lawful act done in the presence of four of the tenants of the said manor, give and bequeath his tenements to whom he will." Bishop Nicolson, on his visitation, in 1783, was informed by the churchwardens that they had not had a beggar in the parish within the memory of man, nor never had any gentleman amongst them "except only the curate and schoolmaster."

There are many good residences in the parish.

WARCOP PARISH.

Warcop parish is a large irregular district lying partly on the west and mostly on the east side of the Eden, from which it extends to Warcop Fells. It is bounded on the north-east by a part of Yorkshire, on the west by St. Michael's Appleby, Ormside, and Asby; on the south by Crosby Garret and Kirkby Stephen; and on the east by Musgrave parish. The western portion, being in the vale of the Eden, is very fertile, but the remainder is chiefly a wild mountainous region. The parish comprises four manors and townships, whose united area is 10,020 acres. The population in 1801 was 707; in 1811, 673; in 1821, 713; in 1831, 680; in 1841, 705; and in 1851, 740. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants; Appleby and Kirkby Stephen the markets attended.

The area and population are returned with the parish. We possess no information relating to Warcop during the Roman period. Behind the hall is what is considered to be a Roman camp, or station; and a Roman road is supposed to have passed through the township near a place called the Street House, and so on towards Brough.

This manor appears to have been held at an early period by a family bearing the local name. In the reign of King John, William de Warthcop occurs as a witness to a grant of lands made by the first Robert de Veteripont to Robert de Sandford. In the time of John de Veteripont, son of the Robert just mentioned, the lord of the manor of Warcop, as well as the lords of Sandford, Burton, and Helton, received a grant of freedom from "culture of the foresters," and other privileges. The manor continued to be held by the Warcop family till the period of the wars of the Roses, when it seems to have been forfeited and granted to the Nevilles, several of whom occur as holding Warcop even so late as the 1st Philip and Mary (1554). Shortly after this the Warcop's appear to have regained possession, and we find the manor held in 1574-5 by Edward Warcop, Esq. The last mention of the Warcop's in connection with this manor occurs in 1589-90, when the manor was sold by John Warcop to Thomas Braithwaite, Esq., the eldest in the direct line of the Braithwaite's of Ambleside, in whose family it continued for six generations, and was then purchased by Thomas Calkton, Esq., of Appleby, who gave it as a marriage portion with his younger daughter, Dorothy, to George Stephenson, Esq. This last-named gentleman dying without issue, his property came to co-heirs, sisters of his father, John Stephenson, and upon a partition thereof, the manor of Warcop came to Elizabeth, wife of the Rev. William Preston, rector of Brougham, in whose family it still remains. The Rev. William Preston came from the western division of the county, where the family originally possessed large landed estates. Some of the elder branches of the family ending in daughters carried the bulk of the property by marriage into other families; other branches siding with the king against the parliament in the civil wars, by confiscation and misfortune lost nearly all they possessed in that part of Westmoreland. Mr. Preston, of Brougham, having, through his wife, succeeded to the manor of Warcop, seems to have sold what property he possessed in the west of the county and removed to Warcop. William S. Preston, Esq., is the present lord of the manor, besides whom, the Rev. C. M. Preston, William Wilkinson, Esq.; Matthew Charnley, Esq.; Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.; William Tinkler, Esq.; Mrs. Atkinson, Christopher Richardson, Mrs. Beeks, Rev. G. D. Whitehead, John Gregson, Henry Campbell, John Blackett, and others, are the landowners. The lord of the manor holds a court baron, and a customary court annually in June. Part only of the township is enclosed by act of parliament, passed in 1815. Warcop Fell is unenclosed.

Warcop Hall, the seat of the lord of the manor, is a stately mansion, pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence overlooking the village. Some parts of the house are very old.

The village of Warcop is situated on the east bank of the Eden, at the confluence of two rivulets, five miles south-east of Appleby, and about the same distance north-by-west of Kirkby Stephen. At a short distance south-east of the village is Castle Hill, where a large fortress once covered more than an acre of ground, but it has long disappeared, most of its ruins being removed for the erection of the church steeple at Kirkby Stephen, at least, so says tradition. Mr. Machell, who was vicar of Kirkby Thore in the seventeenth century, says he saw some parts of the walls of the castle which were fifteen feet in thickness. About 200 yards south of Castle Hill is Kirkstead, where a chapel is supposed to have stood in former times. An ancient cross, which stood on the common, was removed after the enclosure and placed in the village.

The old English festival, called the Rush-bearing, has been in existence at Warcop from time immemorial. The rush-bearing generally took place in old times on the festival of the saint to whom the church was dedicated. At Warcop the custom is somewhat different, for the church is dedicated to St. Columb, but the village festival has always been held on St. Peter's day. Perhaps, as there are various Druidic remains in the parish, our forefathers, in the early days of Christianity, may have fixed the village festival as near as possible to the time of some great heathen gathering. It was the policy of the ancient Christians to give as little a shock as they could to the feelings of the people. It was perfectly lawful to change a heathen gathering into a Christian festival, and certainly easier than to abolish it altogether. With regard to the name :—It was customary in former times to strew the floors both of churches and halls with fresh rushes ;—and we may, perhaps, imagine a heathen midsummer feast with its various offerings of fruits, or flowers, or bloody sacrifices, changed, by the mild and loving influence of Christianity, into the grateful offering in the house of God of that which might make it more seemly and comfortable. With regard to the present village festival,—the young girls of the parish collect flowers in the village and neighbourhood for some days beforehand. These are arranged in tasteful upright garlands, and fixed in a white cushion decorated with green, and adorned with bunches of flowers at each corner. The little maidens have been accustomed to assemble near the centre of the village. The members of the village reading-room have lately shown a great interest in the old festival, and have greatly added to the appearance of the procession by the different flags belonging to them. The procession is now formed near the reading-room. The members of the society, the children with the garlands, and the flag-bearers, march through the village, preceded by a brass band and the large flag of the society. According to old custom, they then come up to the hall, and the garlands being duly arranged on the grass, and the flags tastefully displayed, a spirited dance is commenced. Refreshments are provided for the children by the lady of the hall. In about an hour the procession is again formed and all march down to church, where the proper service for the day is said, and the garlands of flowers fixed up by the churchwarden, in a place arranged for them, where they remain until next year. They are then replaced by new ones. In the afternoon various country sports used to be the order of the day : but these having given occasion for much real evil and more evil report, they are now nearly discontinued. About two o'clock in the afternoon a procession swelled by numbers is again formed in the hall grounds, which, by the kindness of the lord of the manor, are thrown open to all comers. A tent, decorated with evergreens and flowers, is laid out for a gigantic tea-drinking, under the active and very efficient superintendence of the committee. The services of the band are put in requisition, and dancing commences with spirit and energy. From time to time interesting addresses are delivered on such subjects as may be most useful and amusing. The kindness of the lord of the manor in throwing open his grounds, and the efficient manner in which the various arrangements have been conducted, bid fair to make Warcop rush-bearing one of the most attractive festivals in the country. It is heart-enlivening to see the old festival kept up with so much spirit, somewhat of the old religious character—heartiness, beauty, and simplicity of arrangement, with much that is likely to make it both useful and popular at the present day. It seems calculated to produce good feeling in the neighbourhood, and is a bright spot to which the poor man may look forward—a day of wholesome recreation to cheer him in his round of toil.

THE CHURCH.

Warcop church, dedicated to St. Columb, is an ancient structure, in the Early English style, comprising nave, chancel, north and south transepts, south porch, and tower with two bells. The arch separating the nave and chancel was rebuilt in 1855, by the lord of the manor. The windows are lancet-shaped ; the eastern one consists of three lights, filled with stained glass. The centre light contains a full-length figure of the Redeemer, supported by St. John on one side, and St. James on the other. The chancel contains six Bowes, Esq., and Agnes, his wife, daughters and co-heirs of Thomas Warcop, Esq., sold to the tenants their tenements at Sandford to freehold, with a respective proportion of the wastes, mosses and commons; and in 1671 Sir Thomas Braithwaite, of Warcop, Kut., and Elizabeth, his wife, (daughter of the said John Dalston, by his wife, Frances Warcop) sold the manor of Sandford, with the soil, profits of courts, waifs, strays, deadlands, goods of felons, escheats, rents, boons, and the like, to Andrew Wharton, Esq., from whom the demesne and rents were purchased by the inhabitants and landowners. The Rev. G. D. Whitehead; Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.; William Wilkinson, Esq.; Mrs. Harrison; Messrs. Hugg and Anthony Harrison;

William Stephenson Preston, Esq.; John Hill, Esq.; William Tinkler, Esq.; John and Edmund Fawcett, and others, are the present landowners.

The hall or manor house was sold by the Andrew Wharton above-mentioned to Richard Fawcett. It serves as a farm-house. There was anciently a chapel attached to this hall, many remains of which may be seen.

The village of Sandford is situated on the east bank of the Eden, four miles south-east of Appleby. Here is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Association.

Coupland Beck is a hamlet in the townships of Sandford and Hilton, two miles south-south-east of Appleby.

West Ward.

THIS Ward is bounded on the north and north-west by the county of Cumberland, on the south-west by Kendal Ward, and on the south-east and east by the East Ward. It averages about sixteen miles in length by twelve in breadth, and is nearly all comprised in the barony of Westmoreland. It is a fertile and picturesque region, intersected by the river Lowther, to the west of which it has the lakes of Haweswater and Ulleswater, with several tarns, and a fine range of lofty mountains and deep dales. Its eastern portion presents a smoother aspect: the beautiful vales of the Lowther, Eden, Eamont, and several smaller streams, forming its most interesting feature. The Ward is intersected by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway. Limestone, freestone, and slate are its principal mineral productions, but lead ore has been found at Patterdale, and a variety of spars and other variegated stones at Shap Wells. It comprises the parishes of Askham, Bampton, Barton, Brougham, Cliburn, Clifton, Crosby Ravensworth, Lowther, Morland, and Shap. This Ward is rated to the county rate at £58,465.

ASKHAM PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by those of Lowther and Barton, on the west by Barton, on the south by Bampton, and on the east by Bampton and Lowther. The soil here is mostly incumbent on limestone and generally fertile. The parish comprises the townships of Askham and Helton, whose united area is 4,377 acres; and its rateable value £2,696. Agriculture is the principal employment, and Penrith the market attended.

ASKHAM.

The area and rateable value of this township are included in the returns for the parish. The population in 1801 was (inclusive of that of Helton) 448; in 1811, 466; in 1821 (Askham alone), 355; in 1831, 395; in 1841, 442; and in 1851, 437.

Nothing appears to be known respecting the manor of Askham previous to the reign of Henry III., when Sir Thomas de Helbeck received it in exchange for lands held by knights' service. The Helbecks continued in possession of the manor till the 8th Edward II. (1314-15) when it appears to have passed to the Swinburnes. In the 46th Edward III. (1372-3) Robert de Swinburne conveyed the manor to William de Sandford, sen.; William de Sandford, jun.; Thomas Bannay, and Edmund de Sandford, who, two years afterwards, all joined in a conveyance to William Colynson, which William Colynson re-conveyed the same, in the following year, to the said Edmund de Sandford in fee. This Edmund was the common ancestor of the Sandfords of Askham and Howgill.

He was a younger brother of William de Sandford, lord of the manor of Sandford, in the parish of Warcop. From this period the Sandfords continued to possess Askham till the year 1724, when the family failing in issue male, the manor was brought in marriage to the Tatham; it was subsequently sold to the Lowthers, and is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale, who is also the principal landowner. The hall or manor house, which for well nigh four centuries was the residence of the Sandford family, is a turreted building, rebuilt in 1574 by Thomas Sandford, Esq., who caused the following inscription to be placed over the gate:—

"Thomas Sandford esq^r
For this paid meat and hyr:
The year of our Saviour
XV hundred the seventy foure"

In 1828 it was converted, by the permission of the bishop of the diocese, into the rectory house for Lowther parish.

The village of Askham occupies a pleasant situation opposite to Lowther Park, five miles south of Penrith. The ancient form of the name was Ascum, or Ascom, meaning the dwelling place of Aske, one of its Anglo-Saxon proprietors.

THE CHURCH.

Askham church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a neat Gothic structure, rebuilt by the Earl of Lonsdale in 1832-3, and possesses accommodation for 300 persons. It has a neat embattled tower. There is a small chapel containing several handsome mural monuments to the memory of several members of the Sandford family. There is also a tablet to the memory of the late Edmund Bolton, Esq., of Askham Hall. The old church contained a chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, which belonged to the Sandfords. By the first will of Dame Idonea Sandford, made in 1412, her son William was enjoined "on pain of her blessing or malediction, to charge his sons and his sons' sons after him, to provide a fit priest to celebrate mass in the church of Ascome, for ever, for the repose of the souls of their benefactors, and the souls of all faithful people departed this life;" and by her will, made in 1418, she bequeathed to Robert, her son and heir, her son William being then dead, eight oxgangs of land, and half of the mill of Askham upon condition that he found a chaplain to celebrate mass for the soul of her father, and the souls of her ancestors in the chapel of St. Mary of Askham. The church of Askham was granted to the monastery of Wartre, in Yorkshire, which appropriation was confirmed by Pope Innocent IV. in 1245. The canons of Wartre had also a curacate of land in Askham. On the suppression of the monastic institutions, the church was granted to the Earl of Rutland, who sold the rectory and advowson to Lancelot Lancaster and Michael Hudson, and they, for the sum of £256 2s. 3d., in 1542, conveyed the same to Thomas Sandford, Esq., of Askham, whose descendant, William Sandford, Esq., sold the rectory to Sir John Lowther in 1680, but reserved the advowson of the vicarage, which was, however, purchased in 1815 by the Lowthers, so that the entire patronage is now vested in the Earl of Lonsdale. The vicarage is valued in the King's Book at £4 13s. 8d., but was subsequently certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £31 16s. The tithes have been commuted for a yearly rent charge, and the present value of the living is about £160 a year.

Vicars.—Richard de Seterington, 1295; William de Maizen, —; John de Chaworth, about 1340; Robert de Drie, 1346; John de Wynteringham, 1359; Robert de Ferryb occurs 1360; Henry de Holmes, 1375; John de Wynter, 1380; John Danby, 1407; Robert Wrogh, 1448; Thomas Waker, from 1460; John Waker, 1500; John Sing, 1510; Thomas Waker, 1604; John Hutchinson, 1611; Lancelot Hutchinson, 1695; Christopher Lancaster, —; John Adams, 1678; Thomas Bell, 1681; David Bell, 1690; John Sisson, 1695; Jeremy Seed, 1696; Archer Chambers, 1707; Lancelot Sisson, 1711; Jeffrey Sisson, 1714; William Mearns, 1733; John Sisson, —; James E. Bond, —; James E. Bond, 1800.

The vicarage, which occupies a beautiful situation, has been partly rebuilt, enlarged, and much improved, by the present vicar.

SCHOOL.

School.—There is in Askham an ancient school, of which the Earl of Lonsdale and seven of the principal inhabitants are the trustees. The school had no endowment till about sixty years ago, when the sum of £20 was given for its support by Jane Bowman. About the year 1809 a subscription was raised amongst the principal inhabitants and landowners, to which the Earl of Lonsdale contributed £100. The amount of this subscription was laid out in the purchase of £400 stock Three-per-Cent reduced. The stock was afterwards sold out, and, in 1818, £212, part thereof, was laid out in the purchase of about five acres of land in the parish of Askham, and the remainder thereof, which, with a legacy of £10, left to the school in 1819, amounting in the whole to £121 7s. 3d., is lent out at interest. The total income of the school is at present (1859) £12 a year.

Poor Stock.—There was in this parish an old poor stock of £10, which, for a long period, was handed over from overseer to overseer. It was at length taken to the account of the poor-rate, out of which 8s. 4d. is regularly allowed as interest, and distributed among the poor not receiving parish relief.

Sandford's Charity.—William Sandford, by will, dated February 19th, 1724, left to trustees about forty acres of land, the rents of which he directed should be distributed as follow:—40s. to be laid out in bread and wine for the celebration of the Lord's Supper at Askham four times in the year, namely, Christmas Day, Easter Day, Trinity Sunday, and the first Sunday next after the 14th of September; and if any surplus should remain, that the same should be distributed on St. Stephen's Day amongst poor persons of Askham, by the vicar and overseers. He also directed 20s. a year to be paid to the parish clerk of Askham; and £5 to be distributed amongst the poor. This charity is distributed according to the instructions of the donor.

Mounsey's Charity.—James Mounsey, by will, dated 6th October, 1766, left to the poor of Askham £400. This charity was lost after £150 had been incurred for land expenses.

HELTON.

For area and rateable value see parish returns. The population in 1801 and 1811 were returned with Askham township; in 1821 it was 162; in 1831, 192; in 1841, 193; and in 1851, 179.

The manor of Helton, or Helton Flecket, belonged in ancient times to the De Morville family, from whom it passed by heiress to the Wessingtons and Englishes, who held the manor in moieties, both of which came ultimately to the Lowthers, and the Earl of Lonsdale is now lord of the whole manor, and principal landowner.

The village of Helton is one mile south of Askham. Helton Dale, one mile south of Helton, forms the southern extremity of the parish, and is watered by a rivulet which flows eastward to the Lowther farm at Swarth Fell, near Ulleswater.

BAMPTON PARISH.

BAMPTON parish is bounded on the north by the parishes of Lowther and Askham, on the west by Askham and Barton, on the south by Shap, and on the east by Shap, Morland, and Lowther. It is surrounded on almost every side by lofty and rugged mountains, but the soil in the vales is very fertile. In the Earl of Lonsdale's manor of Thornthwaite, at the south-western extremity of the parish, is the beautiful lake of Haweswater. Bampton parish has no dependant townships. It includes part of the chapelry of Mardale, the other part of which is in Shap parish. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants. In 1856 a company was formed for the working of a mine of copper ore in the south part of the parish. Penrith market is usually attended.

Bampton comprises an area of 10,390 acres, and its rateable value is £2,739 19s. 2d. The population in 1801 was 600; in 1811, 595; in 1821, 614; in 1831, 636; in 1841, 579; and in 1851, 535.

The earliest notice we possess of the manor of Bampton describes it as being divided into moieties, distinguished by the names of Bampton Patric and Bampton Cundale, the former of which seems to have received its name from Patricus, or Patric de Culwen, who possessed it in the reign of Henry II., and from whom it descended to the Curwens of Workington, for an account of which family see page 467. In the reign of Henry VIII. we find it stated that the heir of Thomas Curwen, Knt., and Thomas Cliburne, held the portion of the manor called Bampton Patric. It came subsequently to the family of Warwick and Hassel, but is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale. In the reign of Henry II. we find the other moiety of the manor in the possession of the family of Cundale, from whom it derived its designation of Bampton Cundale. It subsequently passed by marriage to the Cliburnes; and we find that in the 15th Richard II. (1391-2) it was held by Robert de Cliburne in right of Margaret his wife. The last account we have of the Cliburnes here occurs in 1554; it is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale. Thornthwaite is another manor belonging to the Earl of Lonsdale. It extends into the parishes of Bampton and Shap, and into the chapelries of Mardale and Swindale. It includes the whole of Haweswater. The landowners of Bampton are the Earl of Lonsdale, Thomas Atkinson, William Noble, William Stephenson, John Cowburn, the Misses Holme, William Rawlandson, Thomas Mounsey, John Braidley, and many small proprietors.

Bampton and Bampton Grange are two neighbouring villages on the opposite banks of the Lowther, and near the confluence of that river with the stream which flows from Haweswater, four miles north-west of Shap, and about eight miles south of Penrith.

THE CHURCH.

Bampton church, dedicated to St. Patrick, stands in Bampton Grange, and is a neat edifice, with nave, chancel, and square tower containing five bells. It was erected in 1726 on the site of the former church. It contains several mural monuments to the memory of the family of Gibson. There was anciently a chapel or oratory, dedicated to St. Thomas, in connection with this church, to which John de Askeby, vicar of Bampton, in 1362, gave by his will two shillings. Nothing is now known respecting the site of this chapel. The church of Bampton was granted to the abbey of Shap in 1170, and the appropriation was confirmed by Robert, bishop of Carlisle, in 1263, who, in consequence of the smallness of the revenues of the abbey, granted to the community the privilege of officiating in the said church, by two or three of their own canons, one of whom should be presented to the bishop as vicar, to be answerable to the bishop in spirituals, and another to be answerable to the abbot and convent in temporals. The community of Shap was also bound to provide a chaplain for Bampton church out of the secular clergy, to hear confession, and perform such duties as did not fall within the province of secular canons. The vicarage is valued in the King's Book at £7 5s., but in 1750 it was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £33, having been augmented with land at Rossel Bridge, near Kendal, purchased with £200, obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, and £200 given by Dr. Gibson, bishop of London. The tithes have been commuted for £238 4s., of which the Earl of Lonsdale receives £164, the vicar, £19 16s.; and the grammar school, £54 8s.; the total income of the living is about £96 per annum, together with four acres of glebe land. On the suppression of the religious houses the patronage came to the crown, to which it has since continued to be attached.

VICARS.—Roger de Barton, 1300; John de Appledale, 1303; John de Hanville occurs 1308; John de Marland, 1308; John de Askeby, 1362; Gilbert Raket, 1365; John de Bampton, 1369; William de Wiche, 1369; William de Sutton, 1382; Edward Harpocress 1399; John Harrison, 1395; Richard Winter, 1397; Christopher Symson, 1380; Barnabas Scott, 1386; James Atkinson, died 1641; Matthew Wilkinson, 1641; Thomas Knott, 1672; Thomas Wearing, 1698; William Stephenson, 1712; William Langhorn, 1763; Thomas Kilmer, 1775; Thomas Pearson, 1802; William Hodgson, 1834.

The vicarage is a plain old structure, situated near the church.

CHARTERS.

Free Grammar School.—This school was founded in 1623 by the Rev. Thomas Sutton, D.D., who endowed it with £500, collected in the parish of St. Saviour's, Southwark, and elsewhere, which was afterwards laid out in the purchase of tithes in the neighbourhood. William Walker, Esq., in 1657, bequeathed a yearly rent charge of fifteen guineas, for the purpose of providing the school with books; and in 1693, the Rev. William Stephenson, rector of Laxton, in Nottinghamshire, left to the school a legacy of £150. Thomas Denny, in 1721, gave £5 for buying ink and paper for the poor scholars. In 1816 it received £500 Three-per-Cent. stock from the executors of John Noble, Esq. The school is under the management of twelve governors, six of whom are appointed trustees. According to an agreement made in 1665, the master was required to be in orders, and a licensed preacher, but this regulation has been dispensed with. The present revenue of the school is about £75 a year. A charge is made by the master for all children who do not belong to the parish.

School Library.—There are in the school-house about 200 books, given by Dr. Bray's associates; and there is also a library from the gift of William Noble, Esq., who in 1798, left £100 for that purpose.

Roughill School.—There is a school at Roughill, in this parish, which is stated to have been founded by Edmund Noble, who, by his will, dated 6th January, 1662, left to trustees £40 for that purpose. £7 5s. have since been added to the school stock by Messrs. William and John Noble, and John and Thomas Hudson, the interest of which is applied for educational purposes. Joseph Noble left £6 to buy books, and Dorothy Noble £5 towards paying for two poor scholars. These sums were all expended in the purchase of land, the rent of which, together with the interest of £0 left by Elizabeth Hotblack, and £10 given by Elizabeth Atkinson, now produces about £10 a year.

Measand School.—This school was founded in 1711, by Richard Wright, who gave for that purpose an estate called Nether Scales, in the parish of Orton. In 1723 Richard Law gave a parcel of ground and customary estate at Measand, called the Old Garth, for the use of the schoolmaster of Measand School. The income is now about £68 a year.

Poor Stock, including Kitchen's, Denny's, Collinson's, Noble's, Atkinson's, and Walker's Gifts.—A terrier belonging to this parish states that Jenny Kitchen, in 1714, gave £10, and Thomas Denny, in 1721, the same sum, the interest of both which legacies were distributed every year, at or before Christmas, to the poor of the parish. The terrier also states that Edmund Collinson, in 1743, gave £5, the interest distributed at the time aforesaid, to the poor of Skews only. Deborah Noble, by will, in 1770, gave the interest of £10, to be distributed amongst the poor of the parish of Bampton, on St. Thomas's Day. Elizabeth Atkinson, by will, in 1781, left the interest of £10 on the same terms. William Walker, by will, in 1657, gave £40 to the poor stock of this parish. The sum total of these bequests amounts to £113, the interest of which, amounting to £5 13s. per annum, is distributed among the poor.

Tinlar's Library.—By indenture, dated 1st September, 1750, Jonathan Tinlar gave to trustees £50, upon trust, to lay out the same in the purchase of land, and to apply the rents towards purchasing and supplying a library, to be kept and preserved for ever in the parish of Bampton. This library was increased by some works, chiefly on divinity, given by Lord Viscount Lonsdale, in 1710.

Lord Wharton's Bible Charity.—The schoolmaster of the grammar school receives annually, from the trustees of Lord Wharton's Charity, ten bibles, twelve catechisms, and one copy of Crossman's "Introduction," for distribution in Bampton, and five bibles, six catechisms, and one Crossman, for the manor of Carhullen, which is a district of Bampton, containing only two houses.

Besides the villages of Bampton and Bampton Grange, the parish includes several hamlets, amongst which are Bombay, half a mile south; Butterwick, one mile north-west; High and Low Kuiper, two hamlets, one mile north-by-east; and Roughill, one mile west-north-west of Bampton. The hamlet of Measand is in Mardale Chapelry, on the west side of Haweswater, four miles south-west of Bampton. Riggendale is a deep romantic glen, stretching from High Street Mountain to the bridge between Chapel Hill and Mardale Green, distant about eight miles from Shap, in which parish it is partly situated. Of Thornthwaite manor we have spoken above.

Amongst the eminent men born in this parish we may mention Thomas Gibson, M.D., who married the daughter of the Protector, Richard Cromwell. His nephew, Edmund Gibson, D.D., the translator of the "Anglo-Saxon Chronicle," and editor of two editions of "Camden's Britannia," was successively bishop of Lincoln and London.

BARTON PARISH.

BARTON parish is bounded on the north and west by the parishes of Penrith, Dacre, Greystoke, and Crosthwaite in Cumberland; on the south by those of Grasmere and Kendal; and on the east by Bampton, Askham, Lowther, Clifton, and Brougham. It is about fifteen miles in length, and from two to four in breadth, and forms one of the most picturesque districts in the region of the lakes. On its northern side is the beautiful Ulleswater, and at its western extremity the mighty Helvellyn. Penrith is the market usually attended. The parish comprises the townships of High Barton, Sockbridge, Winder, and Yanwath and Eamont Bridge, with the chapelries of Hartstop and Patterdale, and Martindale. Its area is 33,312 acres. The whole parish of Barton, except Yanwath, belonged to Ivo Tailbois, baron of Kendal, whose descendants took the name of Lancaster, and granted the other parts of it to one of his own name, from whom it passed by marriage and purchase to the Lowther family, in the seventeenth century. In the 17th King John (1215-16) William de Lancaster, baron of Kendal, obtained a grant of a market at Barton.

HIGH BARTON.

The population of this township in 1801 was 249; in 1811, 254; in 1821, 322; in 1831, 346; in 1841, 323; and in 1851, 320. Its area is 5,653 acres, and its rateable value £2,750 18s. 11d. The soil here is principally a good loam; agriculture the only employment. The inhabitants reside in the villages and hamlets of Pooley Bridge, Bowerbank, Celleron, and Barton Church, with several dispersed dwellings, from three to five miles south-west-by-south of Penrith. As we have seen above, the manor of High Barton was held in ancient times by the Lancasters, from whom it came to the Multons of Gilsland, and from them to the Dacres, who, in the reign of Charles II., sold it to the Musgraves. It was subsequently purchased by an ancestor of the present lord, E. W. Hasell, Esq. The landowners are E. W. Hasell, Esq.; Frederick Cooper, Esq.; W. B. Sisson, Esq.; Anthony Parkin, Esq.; W. H. Parkin, Esq.; and many small proprietors.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a large building situated, in the picturesque vale of Eamont, consisting of nave, aisles, and chancel, with central tower containing two bells. In one of the aisles is a sepulchral brass, commemorating William de Lancaster, who is supposed to have died about the year 1575. It bears the inscription:—"Here lyeth William Lancaster, son of Christopher: on whose soul Jesu have mercy." The coats of arms, &c., which formerly occupied the space above the communion table are now defaced. The church of Barton was given in the thirteenth century by Sir John de Lancaster to the priory of Watre, in Yorkshire, to which it was afterwards appropriated. On the suppression of the monasteries it was granted by the crown to Thomas Earl of Rutland, who sold it to Lancelot Lancaster, of Sockbridge, and Michael Hudson. The Lancaster portion passed in marriage to the Lowthers, who have since become possessed of the entire advowson, so that the Earl of Lonsdale is the present patron. The living is a vicarage, valued in the King's Book at £11 1s. 0½d., but is now worth about £170 a year, arising from glebe land, and a yearly rent charge, for which the tithes were commuted in 1841. The impropricators pay an annual pension of £6 to the bishop of the diocese.

Rectors.—William de Corbrige, died 1301; John de Lowther, 1304.

Vicars.—Gilbert de Sandale, 1319; William de Elvington, 1322; William de Kyrton, 1336; John de Panton, 1345; John de Sherborn, 1354; Robert de Berly, 1354; John de Whiston, 1354; William de Newton, 1361; William Spencer, 1422; Robert Wresyl, 1456; John Hilsdon, 1463; James Daves, 1608; Timothy Roberts, 1653; John Harrison, 1660; Richard Sainton, 1705; Richard Jackson, 1734; William Lindsey, 1738; Joseph Wilson, 1753; John Cowper, 1759; — Myers, —; — Fletcher, —; Thomas Gibson, —; Arthur Wilkin, —; Thomas Gibson, the younger, 1847; B. C. Hodgson, 1855.

The vicarage is a commodious residence, erected in 1851 by subscription and a grant from Queen Anne's Bounty, at a cost of £1,000.

CHARITIES.

Free Grammar School.—This school was founded in 1649 by Dr. Lancelot Dawes and Dr. Gerard Langhaine, the latter of whom endowed it with £30 and an estate at Culgaith, out of which £10 a year is "to go to bind two poor boys apprentices." Dr. Dawes gave £25 and a yearly rent charge of 20s. out of the tithes of the estate called Barton Kirk. The money, with a donation given by Dr. William Lancaster, and several contributions, was laid out in land at Firbank, in the parish of Kirkby Lonsdale, and at Howgill, near Sedburgh, now let for about £80 a year, out of which the £10 mentioned above is paid yearly for the binding apprentice two poor boys of Barton parish, the remainder is the master's salary. The school is open to all the children of the parish free of expense. It is under the management of twelve trustees, and is attended by about thirty-five children.

Dudley's Dole.—Agnes Dudley, of Yanwath, by will, dated April 19th, 1671, gave to trustees £100, to be laid out in land, and the profits to be distributed among the aged poor of the parish of Barton, on the 9th of September, yearly. This charity is distributed as directed.

Trust of Robert Nicholson's Dole.—Robert Nicholson for the use of the poor of this parish, between Surtliffe and Sockbridge Hall, was laid out in the purchase of land for the grammar school, the trustees of which pay £1 1s. a year in respect of this legacy, which is divided between the overseers of Barton and Sockbridge, and is distributed by them amongst poor persons of their respective townships not receiving parish relief.

For the other charities of this parish, see the several townships and chapelries.

Pooley Bridge is a pleasant village at the foot of Ulleswater, in the township of High Barton, five miles south-west-by-south of Penrith, where a handsome bridge of three arches crosses the river Eamont, which flows from the lake opposite the conical hill of Dunmallet, or Dunmallerd, anciently crowned with a British fort, vestiges of which, surrounded by a luxuriant grove, were visible till a comparatively recent period. A small market for fish was formerly held here; there is still a fair for sheep and cattle on the third Monday in September.

Bowerbank, Celleron, and Barton Church are hamlets in this township. The principal residences are Bowerbank, John Carr, Esq.; Bewlah House, Captain David Ladyman; Barton Hall, Captain D. Ladyman; Ensemere House, Major Bristow; Sharron Bay, Anthony Parkin; Elderbeck, — Scisson, Esq.; Raven Cragg, W. H. Parkin, Esq.

There is a corn-mill on the Eamont, a short distance below Pooley.

Dr. Adam Airey, principal of Edmond Hall, Oxford; Dr. William Lancaster, provost of Queen's College, Oxford, in the seventeenth century; and Dr. Gerard Langhaine, provost of Queen's College, who lived during the time of the Commonwealth, were all natives of this parish.

SOCKBRIDGE.

Sockbridge comprises an area of 11,818 acres, and its rateable value is £1,581 12s. 10d. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 175; in 1811, 213; in 1821, 190; in 1831, 263; in 1841, 212; and in 1851, 279; who reside principally in the villages of Sockbridge and Tirril. The manor of Sockbridge was held by the Lancasters from a very early period, till the family failed in issue male, when it passed by marriage to the Lowthers. The Earl of Lonsdale is lord of the manor; but the tenants have all been enfranchised. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale; John Nicholson, Esq.; William Wordsworth, Esq.; Mrs. Winch; and a number of small proprietors. Sockbridge Hall, long the seat of the Lancasters, but now occupied by a farmer, is an old quadrangular building.

The village of Sockbridge is on the south side of the Eamont, three miles south-south-west of Penrith. Tirril is another village in this township, one mile north-east of Barton church, and contains a meeting house of the Society of Friends, with burial ground attached. A celebrated mathematical academy was established here by John Slee, a member of the Society of Friends, well known for his mathematical acquirements. He was a native of Mungrisdale, in Cumberland, but died here in 1821. His son, Thomas Slee, conducted the school from the time of his father's demise till 1849, when he died much regretted. Here are also two breweries. Thorp is a hamlet in this township, half a mile east of Sockbridge. There are several good residences in this township.

WINDER.

This is a small township comprising only 298 acres. Its population in 1801 was 12; in 1811, 17; in 1821, 19; in 1831, 19; in 1841, 16; and in 1851, 11. The soil here is a good strong loam. This township is partly in the manor of Barton, and partly in that of Sockbridge. It is of the marquis fee, parcel of the barony of Kendal. George Gibson, Esq., of Kendal, is the owner of the township. Winder Hall, the only inhabited house in the township, now serves as a farm-house.

YANWATH AND EAMONT BRIDGE.

The area of this township is 1,160 acres, and its rateable value £3,077 1s. 8½d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 198; in 1811, 223; in 1821, 244; in 1831, 327; in 1841, 316; and in 1851, 356; who reside in the villages of Eamont Bridge, Yanwath, and a few scattered houses. Agriculture is the principal employment. The soil here is a good strong loam. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township.

The manor of Yanwath, or Evenewit, as it is called in old charters, is the only manor in the large parish of Barton which appears to have been held under the Cliffords, lords of Westmoreland, the other portions of the parish seem to have been comprised in the barony of Kendal. In the year 1314-15 Ralph, son of William, baron of Greystoke, held the manor of Yanwath, as mesne tenant under the Cliffords. The manor was held under the Greystokes by the Threlkelds and Lancasters. The whole manor was subsequently held by the Threlkelds, from whom it passed in marriage to the Dudleys, who continued in possession till about the year 1654, when the family failing in male issue, Yanwath was sold to Sir John Lowther, and is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale.

Yanwath Hall, which stands at the north end of the village of Yanwath, on the banks of the Eamont, is a tower, which in the days of border warfare was found the most convenient form of building. The principal residence of the family was on the ground floor. Yanwath Hall is probably of the fifteenth century, as may be inferred from the battlements and parapets. The bay window of the hall is rather peculiar, being very heavy at the head. The roof is perfect, and there is a large fire-place in the hall of considerable archaeological interest. On the second floor, above the fire-place, is carved a specimen of the arms of Queen Elizabeth, and from initial letters found in another part of the building it would seem to have belonged at that period to the Dacres. In the tower is seen a massive wooden ceiling, which formerly formed the roof of the principal hall, but is now cut off by an intervening floor. The court yard is a perfect specimen of the period of Henry VIII. About a mile south of the hall, at the end of Yanwath wood, is a circular entrenchment, called Castlesteads. The landowners in the township are the Earl of Lonsdale, Lord Brougham, and Frederick Cooper, Esq., with several small proprietors.

The village of Yanwath is one mile and a quarter south of Penrith.

Eamont Bridge is another village in this township, lying chiefly on the south bank of the Eamont, one mile south-by-east of Penrith. A bridge has existed here from a very early period. In 1425 there seems to have been a general subscription towards building or repairing the bridge, and an indulgence of forty days was granted by Cardinal Langley, bishop of Durham, to all those who, observing the usual conditions of going to confession and communion, should contribute towards the carrying out of the work.

In the immediate neighbourhood of Eamont Bridge is the famous monument of antiquity, "King Arthur's Round Table," a trenched amphitheatre, above 160 yards in circumference. Excavations were commenced some time ago with a view to discover some remains which might give a clue to the origin or use of this remnant of the olden time; but no satisfactory result has been obtained, and the general idea now is, that the mound formed part of a sacred grove. Local tradition states, however, that it was devoted to the purpose of combats, and that turf seats for the spectators were ranged around. In modern times it is used as the arena of wrestling matches whenever any occur in the neighbourhood. About a quarter of a mile from the "Round Table," is Mayburgh, the site of another sacred grove, which is deemed of so much importance that it is walled in. Mayburgh rises gradually on every side, about 140 yards from the level of the land below. The summit of the hill is fenced round, except an opening left to the east, with a quantity of loose pebbles, which seem to have been gathered from the bed of the Eamont. Inclining a little to the west and from the centre is a large boulder, consisting of a mass of limestone, of a kind not usually found in the district.

Here is a neat school, with teacher's house attached, erected by subscription in 1855, at a cost of £290. It is under government inspection, and attended by about sixty children. Mr. Wm. Sanderson, of Sockbridge, who died in 1836, left the interest of £100 for the instruction of the poor children of the villages of Sockbridge, Tirril, Thorpe, and Yanwath. The school at Eamont Bridge shares in this charity.

The West Ward Union Workhouse is in this township. The union consists of two sub-districts; Morland, including Crosby Ravensworth, Shap, Little Strickland, Thrimby, Great Strickland, Newby, Slengill, King's Meaburn, Bolton, Morland, and Cliburn; and Lowther, comprising Brougham, Clifton, Lowther, Helton, Askham, Low Winder, High Barton, Sockbridge and Tirril, Yanwath and Eamont Bridge, Martindale, Patterdale-with-Hartsop, and Bampton. The total area of the union is 120,523 acres. Its population in 1851 was 8,155, of whom 4,258 were males and 3,897 females.

The number of inhabited houses at the same period was 1,540; uninhabited, 54; and two were building. The workhouse is an old structure, with about forty-five inmates. The total receipts for West Ward union for the year ended Michaelmas, 1859, amounted to £2,483 1s. 1½d.; the expenditure for the same period was £2,752 5s. 8½d.

The residences in the township are Poplar Lodge, C. S. Jackson, Esq.; Grotto, F. Cooper, Esq.; and Bleach Green, Mrs. Mason.

Dennison's Charity.—John Dennison, about the year 1768, left £20, the interest to be distributed for the use of the poor of Yanwath and Eamont Bridge, on St. Thomas' Day.

HARTSOP AND PATTERDALE CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry comprises no dependent townships, but includes Upper and Nether Hartsop, Deepdale, Glenridding, and Grisedale, as well as Patterdale. Its area is 8,314 acres. The population in 1801 was 261; in 1811, 319; in 1821, 282; in 1831, 400; in 1841, 573; and in 1851, 686. Mining and slate quarrying are the principal employments of the inhabitants, upwards of 300 being constantly engaged at the Greenside Lead Mine, which is worked by the Greenside Mining Company. The mine has one shaft, thirty-seven fathoms in perpendicular depth; the metal bearing strata are from half an inch to seven or eight inches in thickness, producing about 900 tons of lead ore per annum, and 1,600 ounces of silver per month. There are also other lead mines. At Hartsop, Place Fell, and other parts of this chapelry, are extensive slate quarries.

Upper and Nether Hartsop are two adjacent hamlets, two miles south-by-east of Patterdale chapel. They are comprised in the marquis fee of the barony of Kendal, and were formerly held by the Lancasters; they are now the property of the Earl of Lonsdale. Hartsop Hall, an ancient building, is now a farm-house. Deepdale is a grand romantic valley, mostly in a high state of cultivation, and decorated with a profusion of wood, one mile and a quarter south of the chapel. The manor of Deepdale is the property of H. Howard, Esq., of Greystoke. The tenants here pay a heriot on the death of lord or tenant. Glenridding is a deep, rocky, and well-wooded valley, stretching from Helvellyn to Ulleswater, three miles west of Patterdale chapel. The manor of Glenridding was purchased by the present lord, William Marshall, Esq., in 1824, previous to which it was held by John Mounsey, Esq., the king of Patterdale. Grisedale extends from half a mile north of the chapel to the confines of Cumberland; the manorial rights of Grisedale, as well as those of Place Fell, are held by E. W. Hasell, Esq. These different places are surrounded by the lofty mountains of Hel-vellyn, Great Dod, Fairfield, High Street, Dow Craggs, and Place Fell. Patterdale extends six miles southward from Gowbarrow Park, along the highest and most beautiful reach of Ulleswater, to the source of the Goldrill, which flows to the lake from Brotherwater, Haweswater, and Angletarn. Patterdale is also part of the barony of Kendal, and was held by the Lancasters. E. W. Hasell, Esq., is the present lord, who resides at Patterdale Hall. The principal landowners in the township are the lords of the respective manors, as above, together with W. H. Askew, Esq., and Daniel and John Mounsey.

The following memoranda of the visits of royal and other personages will be interesting in connection with Patterdale. On the 17th July, 1840, the late Dowager Queen Adelaide, and her sister Ida, duchess of Saxe Weimar, with a numerous suite, arrived here; as did also two foreign princes from Ashantee, on the coast of Africa, who were presented to the Queen Dowager on the following morning. On the 19th July, 1844, the King of Saxony and suite visited Patterdale. On Sunday the 18th of August, in the same year, Prince William of Prussia and suite arrived here, whence they set out for Windermere. On May 16th, 1857, his royal highness the Prince of Wales arrived at Geldard's Hotel from Keswick; on the following day, Sunday, the prince and party attended divine service in the church at Patterdale; and on Monday they departed by way of Pooley Bridge, Lowther Castle, and Brougham Hall, on their tour through the Lake District.

THE CHAPEL.

Patterdale chapel, dedicated to St. Patrick, is a neat Gothic structure, erected by subscription in 1852, from designs furnished by A. Salvin, Esq., of London, at a cost of £1,681 17s. 4d., of which £643 was contributed by William Marshall, Esq.; £100 by Mrs. Marshall; £100 by the Earl of Lonsdale; £200 by the Rev. Henry Askew; £50 by Captain John Washington; and £150 by the Hon. Henry Howard. It consists of nave and chancel, with a small belfry. There are about 300 sittings in the nave, most of which are free and unappropriated. The chancel, which is paved with encaustic tiles, contains sittings for the lords of the different manors in the chapelry; the pulpit is of oak, and has a very neat appearance. The chapel was consecrated by the late bishop of Carlisle on November 3rd, 1853. The communion plate, of Helvellyn silver, is of the most approved ancient form and pattern, by Keith of London. The silver was presented by the Greenside Lead Mining Company as an offering to the church at Easter, 1850. The chapel is situated near the head of Ulleswater, and has in its burial ground two venerable yew trees. The benefice is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale, and is worth about £73 a year. The tithes are commuted for £64, of which the Earl of Lonsdale receives £20, William Marshall, Esq., £17 16s., Henry Howard, Esq., £4 4s., and the incumbent £22. In 1807 the present incumbent purchased part of a messuage and tenement, called Bearbow, adjoining the ancient globe to which it is now attached, for the sum of £168, part of an augmentation of £200 Queen Anne's Bounty. In 1812 the incumbent gave £100, which was promptly met by the Earl of Lonsdale with a like sum, which obtained a grant of £300 from the parliamentary fund, making together the sum of £500 still remaining in the Parliamentary Grant Fund for the augmentation of the living.

INCUMBENTS.—Longhorn, —; Peter Birkett, 1675; Edmund Kilmer, 1676; John Matteson, 1705; Thomas Thompson, 1765; John Thompson, 1800.

The parsonage was erected by the present incumbent in 1820, at a cost of £500.

Near to the chapel is a well called St. Patrick's Well, where it is said that saint baptised several of the inhabitants of the dale. The ancient name of Patterdale was Patrick's dale, of which the modern name is evidently a contraction.

At the head of Ulleswater is a Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1842 by G. H. Head, Esq., at a cost of about £100.

CHARITIES.

School.—There was a very ancient stock of £116, applicable partly to the school and partly to the poor of Patterdale. Of this stock £96 was laid out in 1766 in the purchase of land; the other £20 was put out at interest. The total income of the charity at present is £12 a year, of which the schoolmaster receives £5 14s. 7d., and the poor £2 5s. 5d. The school is a neat structure, rebuilt in 1836, and is attended by forty-five children.

There is an infant school at Glenridding.

Freeman's Charity.—John M. Freeman, Esq., left by will £50, the interest of which he directed should be distributed by the minister and churchwardens in bread, to poor labourers, not in receipt of parish relief, to be given on Sundays at church, after divine service.

There is a library in the school, established in 1847, the books having been given by the neighbouring gentry. It consists of about 500 volumes; the members contributing two shillings a year.

The principal residences in the chapelry are Patterdale Hall, William Marshall, Esq.; Glenridding House, H. W. Askew, Esq.; and Place Fell House, Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson.

Marshall of Patterdale Hall.

This family is derived from

JOHN MARSHALL, Esq. of Headingley, near Leeds, M.P. for Yorkshire, born 24th July, 1765, second son of John Marshall, of Yeadon, Esq. M.A., es. York, who acquired great wealth by his successful introduction of mechanical improvements into a branch of the linen manufacture, the spinning of flax, in which he has formed establishments at Leeds and Shrewsbury. He married 31st August, 1791, Anne, fifth daughter of William Patterdale, Esq., of Halifax, and had issue,

1. WILLIAM, of Patterdale Hall, in Westmoreland, M.P.

2. JONATHAN, M.P. for Leeds, born 8th December, 1797, married, 18th November, 1825, Mary, eldest daughter of Col. Josiah Dykes Ballantine Dykes, Esq., of Bevington Hall, Cumberland, and died 31st October, 1850, leaving issue,

1. Reginald Dykes.

2. Herbert John.

3. Julian.

4. Janet Mary.

5. Catherine Anne.

Mrs. Marshall married, secondly, P. O'Callaghan, Esq., 11th Hussars.

III. James Garth, of Monk Coniston Park, Amldeside, and Hendon, Leeds, F.R.S. and D.L., born 26th February, 1802; married, 2nd February, 1811, Hon. Mary Anne Peers, Spring Row, daughter of Thomas Spring Rice, Lord Montagu, and has issue,

1. Victor Alexander Garth, born 16th November, 1841.
2. James Andrew Garth, born 1st January, 1844.
1. Julia Mary Garth.
2. Constance Eleanor, died 1853.

IV. Henry Cowper, of Westwood Hall, co. York, born 8th March, 1801; married, 26th August, 1807, Catherine Anne Lacy, second daughter of Thomas Lord Montagu, and has issue.

v. Arthur.

1. Mary Anne, married, 13th April, 1811, to Thomas Lord Montagu.

II. Cecilia, married, in 1811, the Rev. William Whewell, master of Trinity College, Cambridge.

III. Jane Dorothea, married, 26th July, 1818, to John, second son of Sir Grenville Temple, Bart., and has issue.

IV. Ellen.

1. Julia Anne, married, 31st October, 1833, to the Rev. Henry Veon Elliot, of Bright, and has issue.

VI. Susan Harriet, married in March, 1842, to the Rev. Frederick Myers, Keswick, and has issue.

Mr. Marshall was succeeded by his son,

WILLIAM MARSHALL, of Pastoral Hall, co. Worcester, M.P. for East Cumberland, born 26th May, 1796; married, 17th June, 1828, Georgiana Christiana, seventh daughter of the late George Hibbert, Esq., of Munden, Hertfordshire, and has issue.

Arms.—Arg., three bars, sa., a canton, erm.

Crest.—A man in armour, ppr.

Branch of "Anthony" and Glenridding.

The pedigree of this family is deduced from

ADAM ASKEW, M.D., son of Anthony Askew, M.D., of Newcastle, by Anne, his wife, daughter of Adam Storrs, Esq., of Storrs Hall, co. Lancaster, and the lineal descendant of Hugh Askew, of Greymines, Cumberland, settled at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, about the year 1725, and acquired extensive practice. He married Anne, daughter and co-heir of Richard Crackenthorpe, Esq., of Newbigin, Westmoreland, and had issue,

- I. ANTHONY, his heir.
- II. Adam, M.A., rector of Plumland.
- III. Henry of Richmond.
- IV. John of Pallinsburn.
1. Deborah, who died unmarried.
- II. Anne, who also died single.

Dr. Askew died in 1774, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

ANTHONY ASKEW, M.D., of London, so celebrated for his extensive collection of books and manuscripts, born in 1722. Dr. Askew married first, Margaret, daughter of Cuthbert Swinburne, Esq., of Longwiton and the West Gate in Northumberland, but had no issue. He married, secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Holford, Esq., one of the masters in Chancery, by whom

I. ADAM, his heir.

II. Anthony Linnare, fellow of King's College, Cambridge; died in 1818.

III. Henry, in holy orders, rector of Greystoke, in Cumberland; married, in 1766, Anne, daughter of Thomas Stanwood, Esq., of Little Croft, Ulverston; died December 25th, 1852, leaving issue,

1. HENRY WILLIAM, now of Conishead Priory.
1. Anne Elizabeth, married in 1830 to John Dalrymple Murray, Esq., of Murrythwaite, and died in 1845.
2. Eleanor, married to Captain Washington, R.N.

IV. Richard, formerly major, 27th Regiment.

V. Thomas, married to Lucy, daughter of Robert Carey, Esq., of London.

1. Anne Elizabeth, married to George Adam Askew, Esq., of Plumland.

II. Sarah, died unmarried.

III. Deborah, married to Sir Lucas Pepys, Bart., M.D.

IV. Amy, married to the Rev. John Washington, of Winchester.

V. Mary, died unmarried, in 1786.

VI. Elizabeth, married to Henry Percy Pullsine, Esq., of Carlton Hall, York.

Dr. Askew died in 1774, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

ADAM ASKEW, Esq., of Rillington, who inherited the county of Durham in 1809; married, 1stly, Amy, daughter of Robert Carey, Esq., of London, and 2ndly, Elizabeth, daughter of the late Rev. Sir Richard Rycroft, Bart., but died without children. He was succeeded by his nephew,

HENRY WILLIAM ASKEW, Esq., of Conishead Priory, co. Lancaster, and of Glenridding, co. Cumberland, born in 1803; married in 1832, Lucy, third daughter of the Hon. and Right Rev. Hugh Percy, D.D., bishop of Carlisle, and has issue,

1. Henry Hugh, born July 23rd, 1847.
- II. Edmund Adam, born May 26th, 1849.
1. Charlotte Elizabeth.
- II. Emily Mary.
- III. Frances Louisa.

Arms.—S., on fesse, or, between three asses passant, arg.

Crest.—A man holding a sword transfixing a Satan's head.

MARTINDALE CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry comprises the romantic glens of Boredale, Fowlsdale and Howgrave, with the hamlets of Howtown and Sandwick. It lies between Ulleswater, and a chain of hills, which afford pasturage to thousands of sheep. The area of Martindale is 8,060 acres, and its rateable value £1,071 ss. 9d. The population in 1801 was 165; in 1811, 159; in 1821, 155; in 1831, 182; in 1841, 198; and in 1851, 208. Agriculture is the principal employment, and Penrith the market attended.

The manor of Martindale, like that of Barton, came from the Multons by marriage to the Dacres, and is now the property of E. W. Hasell, Esq., who is also the principal landowner. The lord of the manor has a large quantity of red deer on the mountains.

THE CHAPEL.

Martindale chapel is a small old structure, situated in the vale of Howgrave, five miles south-west of Pooley Bridge. It is supposed to have been rebuilt in 1633; and about the year 1833 underwent considerable repairs. All the rites of the church are performed here, except the solemnisation of marriages. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of John de Whelpdale, Esq. In 1682 the living was augmented with £100, left by the Rev. Richard Birkett, who was then the incumbent, and has since received five donations, amounting to £1,000, from Queen Anne's Bounty, all of which, except £115, has been expended in the purchase of thirty acres of land in Martindale, and eleven acres at Salkeld, in Cumberland, and in the erection of a new parsonage, built in 1808, making the present value of the living £65. The township pays £3 per annum for "priest's wages." The registers of the chapelry commence in 1633.

INCUMBENTS.—William Townley, —; John Heaton, 1702; Thomas Cookson, 1765; Thomas Grisdale, 1772; William Sisson, 1782; Henry Johnson, 1783; Joseph Docker, 1819; W. H. Leech, 1821; H. Robinson, 1833; W. P. King, 1837; J. Woodcock, 1843; Thomas H. Wilkinson, 1847; S. Golding, 1868.

The parsonage is an unpretending structure, and of no particular style.

CHARITY.

The School.—The endowment of Martindale School is attributed to — Sisson, who is supposed, about a century and a half ago, to have left a legacy of £20 for that purpose, which was afterwards laid out in land. The school was erected by subscription in 1834, aided by a parliamentary grant of £37. It is endowed with £14 per annum, arising out of property in the township, and an annual subscription of £5 from Betton's Charity. The average attendance is thirty.

Boredale, in this township, is eleven and a half miles south-south-west of Penrith; Fewdsdale, five miles south-south-west of Barton; Howgrave, about five miles south-south-west of Pooley Bridge.

Howton hamlet is pleasantly situated at the south-west angle of the lower reach of Ulleswater; Sandwick hamlet is near the head of Boredale, a mile and a half south-west from Martindale chapel.

BROUGHAM PARISH.

THIS parish, which is situated at the north-eastern extremity of the West Ward, is about five miles in length, and from one to three in breadth. It lies between the rivers Eden, Eamont, and Lowther, which here unite and bound it on every side, except the south, on which it is bounded by Clifton, Melkinthorpe, and Cliburn. The commons were enclosed and divided about sixty years ago, with the exception of about 900 acres, which have been thickly planted with trees. The soil is generally fertile and in a high state of cultivation. The Eden Valley railway passes through a small portion of the parish. Agriculture is the only employment of the inhabitants; Penrith is the market attended. This parish comprises no dependant townships.

The area of Brougham is 6,040 acres, and its rateable value £3,226. The population in 1801 was 167; in 1811, 164; in 1821, 143; in 1831, 171; in 1841, 249; and in 1851, 179.

The earliest record we find of Brougham occurs in the Itinerary of Antoninus, and the Notitia, from which we learn that it was a Roman station of some importance, bearing the name of Brocavium, from which, no doubt, the modern name is derived. The remains of the station may still be traced, near the present Brougham Hall. Many coins, altars, and other antiquities, have been found upon the site of the camp. One of the altars was dedicated to the transmarine mothers by a vexillation of Germans, as the following inscription testifies:—

DEARIVS MATRIVS
TRANSMARINVS GERM
NORVM PRO SATVTE
RVSVS L M

To the goddess mothers transmarine, the vexillation of Germans, for the safety of the state, perform a vow willingly and dutifully.

The station of Brocavium appears to have been garrisoned by a company of Defensores. On the fall of the Roman power Brocavium would of course fall into the hands of the Celtic inhabitants of this part of the country, and would continue in their possession till the arrival of the Angles, who gave it the name of Burgham, or Brougham, meaning the castle town.

Brougham Castle is connected with the Norman period of English history. When or by whom it was erected is not known. It is evidently of Norman and Early English architecture, and was long one of the feudal strongholds of the Veteriponts and Cliffords. Some MSS. in the Tower, of the time of Henry III. inform us that an inquisition of waste was taken of the Veteripont estates during the minority of Robert de Veteripont, and from this inquisition we learn that the house of Brougham had been suffered to go to decay. From this it is evident that the king's license had not then been obtained to embattle. According to the Countess of Pembroke, the greater part of it was built and repaired by Roger de Clifford, who caused a stone to be placed over the inner gallery, bearing this inscription: "This made Roger." His descendant of the same name enlarged and otherwise improved it in 1380; but it was destroyed by the Scots in 1412. In 1333-4 Baliol, king of Scotland, was the guest of Robert Lord Clifford, at Brougham Castle. Whinfell Park was then well stocked with deer. His majesty, on one occasion, accompanied by Clifford—so the tradition runs—chased a stag with a single hound out of the park, and after a run of fabulous length the stag returned to the park, leaped the fence, and fell dead. The hound, which was named Hercules, attempted to leap after the game, but not having strength, fell on the other side and died from exhaustion, and hence arose the couplet—

"Hercules killed Hart-a-grease,
And Hart-a-grease killed Hercules."

The antlers of the stag were nailed to a tree in the park. A tree known as "Hart's Horn Tree" was standing within living memory. Edward IV., on the attainer of the Cliffords, in 1460, gave this, with many other castles, to his brother, the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III. When Henry Clifford was restored to the estates of his ancestors, he found this, and his other castles in Westmoreland, in a very dilapidated state, but he soon had them repaired. After this Brougham appears to have been one of the principal residences of the Cliffords. We find that James I., on his return from Scotland in 1617, was entertained here for three days by Francis Earl of Cumberland. Shortly after this royal visit the castle is supposed to have been destroyed by fire, for an inscription records that it was repaired by the Countess Dowager of Pembroke in 1651, after it had lain ruinous for thirty-four years. The countess died here in 1675. This is the Lady Anne Clifford of whom it is said by the facetious Dr. Donne that she could "discourse of all things, from predestination to slea silk." Her well-known answer, returned to a ministerial application as to the representation of Appleby, shows the spirit and decision of the woman,—"I have been bullied by an usurper (Cromwell), I have been neglected by a court, but I'll not be dictated to by a subject: your man shan't stand!" The castle has since been neglected, and is now in ruins. Tradition records, but on what authority we know not, that Sir Philip Sidney wrote part of his "Arcadia" at this baronial residence. Wordsworth's "Song at the Feast of Brougham Castle" is one of his noblest lyrical effusions. In its pristine days the castle of Brougham was a place of great strength. The rampart, a portion of which still remains, was five feet in thickness, and upwards of thirty feet high. The entrance was secured by a portcullis, from which a wide paved passage led to the court yard, underneath a portion of the building erected by Roger Clifford in the early part of the fourteenth century. Part of this passage, which is still perfect, is vaulted with beautiful groined arches. The groove for the portcullis is in a perfect state, and surmounting the entrance is the old stone above-mentioned. This stone disappeared after the death of the Countess of Pembroke, and its resting place was for many years unknown. About forty years ago a portion of the weir of the castle mill was carried away by a flood. When the water subsided it was discovered that one particular block of stone had been turned over and carried a short distance down the river. It was the stone which Roger de Clifford, nearly six centuries previously, had placed over the entrance to the fortress. How long it had formed a part of the embankment is not known, but it must have been a considerable period. The central tower, the most ancient part of the castle, formerly comprised five stories, the central one of which was twenty feet in height from floor to ceiling. Near this tower are the remains of the chapel, in which the ancient sedilia may still be seen. A strong watch tower stands at the south-west corner of the court-yard. Brougham Castle passed from the Veteriponts and Cliffords to the Tuftons, and is now the property of Sir Richard Tufton, Bart. We have seen at pages 709-12 the descent of the barony of Westmoreland. This barony included the manor of Oglebird, within which Brougham is situated, and is held of Sir Richard Tufton, Bart, as part of the forest of Whinfell. This was not well ascertained till after the division of the common in 1775, when the commissioners were directed to set out such a proportion of ground as they thought proper to Henry Brougham, Esq., for the lordship of Brougham. Mr. Brougham made no claim, knowing he had no manor, and the commissioners, upon inquiry, found that the manor belonged to the Earl of Thanet, and that the tenants were all freeholders. Mr. Brougham, therefore, took his share among the other tenants, without attempting to establish any claim as lord. The landowners of the township are Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.; Lord Brougham; the Earl of Lonsdale; the Mother and Sisters of St. Ann's Hospital; and John Jameson, Esq.

Brougham Hall, the seat of Lord Brougham, stands on an eminence, near the river Lowther, a mile and a quarter south-east of Penrith. It has been termed, from its elevated position and the prospect it commands, "The Windsor of the North." It is a structure of a mixed character—half castle and half mansion—of which there are many examples in this part of England. Its origin dates from a remote period. The mansion is irregularly built, and with the court-yard and offices cover a vast extent of ground. The garden-court comprises, on two of its sides, nearly the whole of the buildings occupied by the family. At the tower end of this court is a massive arched entrance gateway, which, together with the surrounding buildings, is very old and picturesque, and clothed with a garb of most luxuriant ivy. The western side of the hall is considered to be the most ancient part of the structure. It is singularly solid in construction, the works being several yards in thickness. The large tower contains the apartment which was formerly the armoury. The terrace commands an extensive view of scenes rich in historic interest, and of great natural beauty, comprising in the distance the whole of the mountains of the Lake District. The interior of the mansion contains many apartments of great interest; several of them having been renovated in the best possible taste, and in perfect harmony with the rest of the building. The great hall is a double cube, forty feet by twenty, and twenty high; the roof is supported by arches, with open spandrels, made of walnut wood. The ceiling has been lately restored; and the windows (six in number) are filled with very fine stained glass. There is a good deal of curious armour here, especially a very old and perfect suit of Edward IV. or Richard III.'s time. The most curious relic in the hall is an ivory horn, of very early workmanship, and used (as is believed) in the service of cornage—an ancient border service, by which certain of the lands of Brougham are held. In one of the bedrooms is a carved bedstead of the year 1571, brought from Sheffield Castle, where Mary Queen of Scots was confined for some years, and it is supposed that if Mary herself has not slept in it, the bed is one which has been occupied by some of her maids of honour. The Shrewsbury arms is carved upon it, and the last time it was occupied was by a member of that house. In an adjoining room is a bedstead of the fourteenth or fifteenth century.

The chapel in connection with the hall is a most interesting and picturesque building. It is a very ancient structure, and was repaired and beautified in 1659. In this chapel there was formerly a well, dedicated to St. Wilfrid, which rose through the ancient font by a hole bored through the shaft into the bowl. The hill near the chapel was cut through about fifty years ago, for the purpose of lowering the road; and from that time the spring which supplied the well was cut off, so that the water now rises only to the height of the chapel floor. At the east end is some very remarkable carving, said to be the work of Albert Dürer. The windows at the east end are said to be Anglo-Norman, and are filled with the earliest stained glass known in England. The ancient ambry still retains its place on the north side of the altar. The vessels used for the communion are said to be of great antiquity. The sedilia and piscina are still in existence. Service is performed here whenever the family are resident, and generally by the rector of the parish.

Brougham Family.

The family of Brougham is of Saxon descent, and derives its surname from Burgham, afterwards called Brougham, which belonged to the family before the Conquest. This is proved from the fact that the earliest of the family had Brougham at the time of the Conquest, and continued to hold it afterwards by the tenure of drengage, a tenure by military service, but distinguished at that time from knights' service, inasmuch as those only held their lands by drengage who had possessed them before the Conquest, and were continued in them after submitting to the Conqueror. Hence, when we find the name of Gilbert de Broham among the drengi of Westmoreland, who made fine with King John that they might not go with him into Normandy, it proves not only that he at that time held his lands of Brougham in capite, but that in the time of King John he continued to hold them by the same service of drengage as his ancestors had done from the Conquest to the reign of John, and that his ancestors had been in possession before the Conquest. This Gilbert, about the fourth year of King John, granted to Robert de Veteripont one half of the town of Brougham, together with the advowson of the rectory. We now proceed to the descent of the family from Walter, who possessed Brougham before the Conquest.

WALTER DE BURGHAM WAS POSSESSOR OF THE ESTATE OF BURGHAM in the time of Edward the Confessor, and he retained possession after the Conquest, as tenant in capite, by the tenure of drengage. From him descended

WILFRED DE BROUGHAM, who lived in the time of Henry I. He was succeeded by—

SIR ULAUD DE BROUGHAM, Knt., &c., as it is sometimes written, Odard de Brougham) who, in the early part of the reign of Henry II., had the custody of Appleby Castle, and was found in the Exchequer twenty marks for delivering it to the King of Scots. In the 22nd Henry II. he was again heavily fined, as appears by the record belonging to the Court of Exchequer (Account side) in the Public Record Office, in the custody of the Right Hon. the Master of the Rolls, pursuant to the statute 1 and 2 Vic., c. 94. He was succeeded by his son,

GILBERT DE BROHAM, mentioned in the record of the Seven-teen Dregi. He was succeeded by HENRY DE BROGHAM, in the form of Edward I. In 1293, his daughter, Dorothy, married John de Carlton, ancestor of the barons of Dorchester.

In the time of Edward III. JOHN DE BROUGHAM possessed Brougham, and was sheriff of Westmoreland in 1351, under Lord Clifford. He was succeeded by his son,

SIR JOHN DE BROUGHAM, Knt., who, having some dispute with Lord Clifford respecting the extent of the manor, a solemn deed was entered into between them, for the purpose of defining and fixing for ever the boundaries of the manor of Brougham. This instrument bears date the 2nd Richard II., and is enrolled among the records preserved in the Rolls' Chapel. In 1383 Sir John de Brougham was knight of the shire for Cumberland, with John de Kirkby. He married the daughter and heiress of John de Tyndale, and his daughter, Alice, married John Vaux, of Catterlen. He was succeeded at his decease, as found by the inquisitio post mortem, by his son,

JOHN DE BROUGHAM, lord of Brougham, M.P. for Carlisle in 1394 and 1396, who was succeeded by

THOMAS DE BROUGHAM, lord of Brougham, and in 1436 knight of the shire, with William Stapilton, for Cumberland. This Thomas appears subsequently to have dropped the de before his name. He was one of the king's justices for the northern counties, as appears by the Record of Assizes and Gaol Delivery, preserved in the Treasury of the Exchequer, in the Chapter House, Westminster. Thomas Brougham married a daughter of Sir John Kirkbride, of Braithwaite Howes, in Cumberland, and thus acquired that estate. He was succeeded by JOHN BROUGHAM, who was lord of Brougham in the reign of Edward IV.; and by an inquisition post mortem, taken at Brougham in 1404, it was found that the said John died seised of the manor, and that he was succeeded by his son and heir,

JOHN BROUGHAM, who, in 1504, possessed Brougham. He married a daughter of Dudley of Yanwath; and his daughter, Isabella, married Thomas de Carleton. He was succeeded by

GILBERT BROUGHAM, lord of Brougham temp. Henry VIII., who was succeeded by—

THOMAS BROUGHAM, lord of Brougham in 1553. This gentleman married Jane, daughter and heiress of John Vaux of Catterlen and Triermain, and had two sons, viz.:—

I. HENRY BROUGHAM.

II. Peter Brougham, of whom presently. The elder son,

HENRY BROUGHAM, was lord of Brougham in the reign of Elizabeth, as appears by grant signed "Henricus Brougham," and sealed with the seal of his arms. This Henry married Catherine Neville, daughter and heir of Sir Ralph Neville, of Thornton Briggs, co. York, and widow of Sir Walter Strickland, Knt., as appears by a fine levied by her in the 18th Henry VIII. He was succeeded by his son and heir,

THOMAS, who was in the possession of the manor of Cumberland; he died without children in 1607, as appears by deed, dated 29th March, 1608, reciting that Elizabeth, Margaret, and Katherine, being the sisters and co-heirs of the said Thomas Brougham, did, for the consideration therein mentioned, demise unto the said Agnes, his widow, all that manor, capital messuage, and demesne lands called Brougham Hall, with the appurtenances, to hold to Agnes and her assigns during her life, &c.

PETER BROUGHAM, of Blackhall, in the co. Cumberland, uncle and heir of the last-mentioned Thomas, married Anne, daughter and heiress of John Southaick, of Scales Hall, in Cumberland, and thus acquired that estate. He died in 1670, and was succeeded by his son,

HENRY BROUGHAM, of Scales and Blackhall. This gentleman served the office of sheriff for Cumberland. He married, 1st, Jane, daughter of John Wharton, of Kirkby Thore, by whom he had an only daughter, Jane, married to Edward Aglionby. Mr. Brougham married, 2ndly, Catherine, daughter of Thomas Fallowfield, of Melkinton Hall, co. Westmoreland; and dying in 1622, was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS BROUGHAM, Esq., of Scales, who served the office of sheriff for Cumberland. He married Mary, daughter of Daniel Fleming, Esq., of Skirwith (ancestor of the Flemings of Rydal, created a baron in 1705), and had issue,

I. HENRY, his successor.

II. Thomas.

III. Christopher.

IV. William.

V. John.

VI. Toby.

VII. AGNES, married to Arthur Wharton, Esq., son of Sir Thomas Wharton, Esq., of Catter Hall, Westmoreland.

II. Mary.

Mr. Brougham died in 1648, and was succeeded by his son,

HENRY BROUGHAM, of Scales, who enlarged his possessions there, and greatly added to Scales Hall. A MS. preserved in the dean and chapter library, at Carlisle, called "Bishop Nicholson's MS.," and described as a cursory relation of all the antiquities of families of Cumberland, written about 1675, speaks thus of this Henry and his predecessors:—"Next adjoining Squire Browham, ancient heir male of all the Squire Broughams of Browham Hall, in Westmoreland, built him a very fine house at Scales, and lives there. His grandfather, Henry Browham, married Jane Wharton, daughter of Squire Wharton, of Kirby Thore. His father, Thomas, married Mary, daughter of Squire Daniel Fleming, of Skirwith, and cousin of Squire Fleming, lord of Rydal; and this Squire Browham married fair Miss Slee, daughter of Mr. Slee, of Carlisle, a jovial gentleman of £300 a year." By his first wife, Mr. Brougham had four children,

I. Thomas.

II. Henry.

III. Anne, born in 1687; died in February, 1780, at the age of 100, having lived in the reigns of seven sovereigns, viz., Charles II., James II., William and Mary, Anne, and the first three Georges.

IV. Joane.

Neither of his sons survived him. He married, 2ndly, Elizabeth, daughter and ultimately sole heir of John Lamplugh, Esq., of Lamplugh, in Cumberland, and had,

- i. Thomas, receiver general of Cumberland and Westmoreland, who died in 1716, before his father.
- ii. Bernard, died without children in 1750.
- iii. John, who succeeded to the estate of Scales Hall, and possessed, besides large estates in Cumberland, among others, the manor of Distington, which he sold in 1737 to Sir James Lowther, Bart. It is now the property of the Earl of Lonsdale, and from it he derives his chief coal revenue.
- iv. Peter, married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Christopher Richmond, Esq., of Highhead Castle, co. Cumberland (who was grandson and heir of John Vaux of Caterlen, through his mother, Mabel Vaux, that gentleman's daughter and sole heir), and left issue,
 1. Henry Richmond, sheriff of Cumberland in 1748, who possessed the estates of Brougham in Westmoreland, and Highhead Castle and Caterlen in Cumberland. He died without children in 1749.
 2. John, who died before his brother, also issueless.
- v. Samuel, married Dorothy, only daughter of John Child, and had two sons,
 1. JOHN, one of the benchers of the hon. society of Gray's Inn.
 2. Henry, born in 1717.
- i. Elizabeth, married to — Forster.

ii. Mary, married to her cousin, John Brougham, of Cockermouth, son of John, sixth child of Thomas, who married Mary Fleming. Her grandson, Peter, took by sign-manual, in 1783, the name of Lamplugh, under a limitation in the will of Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Thomas Lamplugh, of Lamplugh, who devised her estates to him, although Mr. Brougham, of Brougham, became by her death, without issue, heir-general of the Lamplughs.

The four eldest sons of Mr. Brougham having died without children, he was succeeded eventually in his estates by his grandson,

JOHN BROUGHAM, of Brougham, in Westmoreland, and of Scales Hall and Highhead Castle, in Cumberland. He had issue two daughters only, both of whom died without issue. On his own death, in 1756, he was succeeded by his brother,

HENRY BROUGHAM, of Brougham, who married Mary, daughter of William Freeman, and had issue,

1. HENRY, his heir.
- ii. John, fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and rector of Ballyhaise, and Ballinabrough, diocese of Kilmore, Ireland; married, 17th October, 1785, Sarah, daughter of James Scammon, by Anne Balgoun, his wife, and died 23rd May, 1811; his widow surviving until 24th March, 1843. He had issue,
 1. John Henry, died 26th May, 1798.
 2. Henry, born 18th March, 1799, rector of Yellow, diocese of Waterford; married, 16th May, 1826, Catherine Anne Maria, daughter of Sir John Macartney, Bart., by Catherine Hussey Burgh, daughter of Walter Hussey Burgh, chief baron of the Exchequer, distinguished when Ireland had a parliament. Henry Brougham died 30th January, 1851, leaving issue, two sons, Henry William, born 27th February, 1827.

John Richard, born 4th August, 1829.

1. Anna Rebe.
2. Sarah, died 3rd February, 1808.
- i. Mary, married to Richard Meux (father of Sir Henry Meux, Bart., of Theobald's Park, Herts), and had issue,
 1. Richard, married Catherine Rooby.
 2. Henry, created a baronet in 1832.
 3. Thomas, died without issue.
1. Mary, married to Richard Arabin.
2. Fanny, married to Vicissimus Knox.
- ii. Anne, married to George Aylmer, Esq., and had issue,
 1. George, married to Henrietta, daughter of Culbert Ellison, of Hepburn, co. Northumberland.
 2. Thomas, a general in the army.
 3. Charles.
 1. Anne.

iii. Rebecca, born in 1753; married, 12th April, 1787, to Richard Lowndes, Esq., of Rose Hill, Dorking, co. Surrey; and died 10th January, 1828, leaving issue,

1. Henry Dalton, born 20th July, 1789; died 17th October, 1831.
2. William Loftus, born 16th March, 1793; one of her Majesty's counsel.
3. Richard John, born 11th January, 1798; died in July, 1798.
1. Rebe, married to the Rev. James Randall, rector of Binglefield, co. Berks.

Mr. Brougham died 21st December, 1782, and his widow in 1807, aged 93 years, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

HENRY BROUGHAM, Esq., of Brougham, born 18th June, 1742, who married, 22nd May, 1777, Eleanora, only child of the Rev. James Syme, by Mary, sister of Robertson the historian, and had issue,

i. HENRY Lord Brougham and Vaux.

ii. James, born 16th January, 1780; member in the successive parliaments of 1836, 1839, and 1841, for Fregony and Winchester, and in the first reformed parliament for Kendal, co. Westmoreland; died without issue 24th December, 1833.

iii. Peter, in the army, killed in a duel by Mr. Campbell of Shawfield, in 1801.

iv. John, married Margaret, daughter of James Rigg, Esq., of Morton, in Scotland, and had issue,

1. Henry, born 7th February, 1813; died 10th October, 1839.
2. Peter, born 12th June, 1819.
3. John, born 27th May, 1821.
4. James Rigg, born 5th May, 1826.
5. William, born 27th Nov., 1826; died 2nd April, 1829.
1. Margaret.
2. Eleanora.
3. Katherine.
4. Mary.
5. Lindsay.

He died at Boulogne-sur-Mer, in October, 1829; his widow in December, 1839.

v. William, M.P. for Southwark in 1831 and 1832, and a master in Chancery; married, 12th August, 1834, Emily Frances, only daughter of Sir Charles William Taylor, Bart., of Hollycombe, co. Sussex, and has issue,

1. Henry Charles, born 2nd September, 1836.
2. Wilfrid, born 22nd January, 1842.
3. Another son, born 2nd December, 1853.
1. Alice Eleanora.
2. Emily Evelyn.
3. Sybil Mary Granville.

Mr. Brougham died 13th February, 1810, aged 68 years, and his widow 31st December, 1839, aged 69. He was succeeded in his estates in Westmoreland and Cumberland by his son and heir,

HENRY BROUGHAM, baron Brougham and Vaux, F.R.S., of Brougham, co. Westmoreland; president of University College, London; born 10th September, 1778; married, in 1819, Mary Anne, eldest daughter of Thomas, fourth son of Sir John Eden, Bart., of Windleston, co. Durham, niece of the Lords Auckland and Henley, and widow of John Spalding, Esq., by whom he had two daughters,

1. Eleanora Sarah, died in 1820.
- ii. Eleanora Louisa, died 30th November, 1839.

This eminent person, admitted an advocate in Scotland in 1800, and called to the English bar in 1808, was constituted, after a long series of great and gratuitous public services, lord chancellor, and created a peer of the realm on the accession of the Grey administration, in 1830. He retired with his party in 1834. Lord Brougham is heir-general, and representative of a branch of the ancient and noble house of Vaux.

Creation.—23rd November, 1830.

Arms.—Quarterly: 1st, gu. a chevron between three lucres, arg., for Brougham; 2nd, az. a fesse, chequy, gold and gu., between three barbs of the third, lanced, of the first; in chief, a wheel of three points, or, for Vaux, of Castles; and, above a lion, or, or and gu., for Vaux, of Tryernayne; 4th, gu., a cross fleury, or, for Delamare.

Crest.—A hand and arm in armour, holding a key, arg.; on the elbow, a rose, gules.

Supporters.—Dexter, a lion, vert; armed and langued, or; collared with a Vaux collar, chequy, or, and of the second; sinister, a white hart, antlers and hoofs, or, in his mouth a rose, gu.; barbed and seeded, vert, in allusion to the castle of Highlead, which Lord Brougham holds of the king in capite, by the service of the red rose, rendered annually, at Carlisle. It came from the family of the L'Engleys, or English, to the Richmonds, and thence by marriage to the Broughams.

Motto.—Pro rege, lege, grege. (This is not a newly assumed motto; it has been long borne by the family, and is to be seen in an old apartment at Brougham, of the age of Elizabeth.)

THE CHURCH.

Brougham church, dedicated to St. Ninian, stands on the borders of a meadow, close to the river Eamont, at a point where there is a ford. It is about two miles from the nearest village, called Woodside, and still further from the place where the town of Brougham formerly stood; there is no trace of any habitations having ever existed near it. It is generally called Ninekirks, and is best known in the neighbourhood by that name. The church contains numerous monuments commemorating various members of the Brougham family. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £16 10s. 7½d.; and is in the patronage of Sir Richard Tufton, Bart.

Rectors.—Robert de Appleby, 1310; Thomas del Close occurs 1355; Thomas de Derby, 1362; John de Merton, 1365; Thomas de Derby, 1367; John Wandsford, deprived, 1375; Thomas Burton, 1375; Culbert Bradley, 1383; Christopher Beecroft, 1024; William Crackenthorp, 1629; Arthur Savage, 1644; Anthony Savage, 1664; Samuel Grasty, 1664; Roland Borrow, 1680; John Atkinson, 1709; Carleton Atkinson, 1713; William Preston, 1722; Richard Machell, 1770; John Heelis, —; Edward Howells, —; from 1833; J. Mc Kibick, 1844; Hon. Thomas Edwards, 1846.

CHURCH.

Countess of Pembroke's Charity.—The only charity in this parish is a payment of £4 a year, out of an estate at Yanwath, in the parish of Barton, given by Anne Countess Dowager of Pembroke, for the poor of the parish of Brougham, in 1656, and which she directed to be distributed to the poor of Brougham upon the 2nd April, at a certain pillar at the foot of Winter Close, by the road side, about a quarter of a mile from Brougham Castle. This pillar, called the "Countess' Pillar," was erected by the Countess of Pembroke, as "a memorial of her last parting at that place with her good and pious mother, Margaret Countess Dowager of Cumberland, the 2nd day of April, 1616."

Hornby Hall, now occupied as a farmhouse, was long the seat of the Birkbeck family, having been granted in the reign of Edward VI. to Edward Birkbeck, Esq., by Henry Clifford, earl of Cumberland. It is situated near the church. One of the members of this family, Simon Birkbeck, was an eminent preacher of the seventeenth century.

Windervath Hall is in this parish, though both it and the demesne belong to Cliburn parish.

Woodside, a small hamlet belonging to Brougham Castle, is near the confluence of the Eden and Eamont, two miles north-by-west of Temple Sowerby.

CLIBURN PARISH.

CLIBURN is bounded on the north by the parishes of Lanthorpe, Clifton, and Brougham; and on the west, south, and east by that of Morland. The soil here is a good loam, with a sub-soil of strong clay. The Eden Valley railway runs through a part of this parish. Feurith is the market usually attended by the inhabitants. This parish comprises the township of Cliburn only.

The township of Cliburn contains 1,360 acres; its rateable value is £1,769 10s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 157; in 1811, 161; in 1821, 205; in 1831, 229; in 1841, 251; and in 1851, 259.

The manor of Cliburn was divided into moieties at a very early period. These moieties were known as Cliburn Tailbois and Cliburn Hervey. The former derived its name from its owners, a branch probably of the Tailbois of Kendal. We may say the same of the latter, though it had passed from the Herveys before the commencement of any of our accounts. The Tailbois family continued to hold a moiety of the manor until the 10th Henry V. (1422); shortly after which the family appears to have ended in a daughter, by whom it was brought to the Franceys family, but how long it was held by them we have now no means of ascertaining; but it became at length united with the Hervey moiety, most of the tenants having been previously enfranchised. The Cliburns are the earliest possessors on record of Cliburn Hervey; they also held the manor of Bampton Cundale in the reign of Edward III. In the reign of Richard II. Robert de Cliburn was knight of the shire for Westmoreland. This family continued to hold the manor for several generations, and how it passed from them we are not informed—probably by the failure of the family in issue male. After passing through several hands it became at length mortgaged to Sir John Lowther, from whom it has descended to its present possessor, the Earl of Lonsdale. Cliburn Hall, which stands on a gentle eminence near the Leeth rivulet, on the south side of the parish, was repaired, or rebuilt, by Richard Cliburn, as the following inscription testifies:—

Richard, Cleburn, thus, they, did, me, cawle,
Who, in, my, time, builded, this, hall.
1577.

The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale, Miss Salmonds, Rev. C. W. Burton, Sir Richard Tufton, Mrs. Robinson, Nicholas Temple, and George Workman, with many small proprietors.

The village of Cliburn is situated on the Leeth rivulet, six miles south-east of Penrith.

THE CHURCH.

Cliburn church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a small ancient edifice, comprising nave and chancel, with a small gable belfry containing one bell. It was thoroughly repaired and resealed in 1849. The living, a rectory, was appropriated to the abbey of St. Mary at York at a very early date, and the appropriation was confirmed by Athelwold, the first bishop of Carlisle. In the time of Walter Malclerk, fourth bishop of Carlisle, the abbot and convent of St. Mary, on an arbitration, were ordered to give up the perpetual advowson of the church of Cliburn to the bishop and his successors, which orders were carried out in the year 1284; the usual pension of 10s. a year being reserved to the abbey. The benefice is valued in the King's Book at £9 1s. 5½d. It was subsequently certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £40 10s. The rector has thirty acres of ancient glebe; and, on the enclosure of the common, in 1807, there were 169 acres allotted, as a commutation for the tithes of the parish, and ten and a half acres for the endowment of a school. The living is now worth £180 a year. The parish registers commence in 1565.

RECTORS.—Nicholas Malvesyn, about 1284; Peter Tilliol, 1302; Simon de Laton, 1309; John de Burdonne, 1317; Henry de Rosse, 1342; Edward Knype, 1556; Richard Pher, 1557; Christopher Wotton, 1577; William Meys, 1587; Richard Fleming, 1625; Timothy Tullie, 1639; John Ardrey, resigned 1673; William Fenwick, 1673; Nathaniel Spooner, 1687; Richard Shepherd, 1688; Marmaduke Holme, 1709; Robert Stephenson, 1670; John Poole, 1803; John Robinson, 1833; William Jackson, 1841; C. W. Burton, 1858.

A new rectory is now in course of erection by the present rector.

The Wesleyans have a small chapel here, erected in 1852.

CHARITIES.

The School.—Until 1857 the only endowment possessed by Cliburn school arose from an allotment of land made on the enclosure of Cliburn common. This land now produces £19 10s. a year, which, with £5 per annum, left in the year just named by the late Jonathan Robinson, of Cliburn, is the total income of the school. The school was erected in 1809. It is under the management of five trustees, and is attended by about thirty children.

Knipe's Charity.—The Rev. Edward Knipe, rector of this parish and vicar of Warcop, by will, dated 1574, left on trust a sum of money, which he directed should be expended in the purchase of twenty nobles of white rent, to be bestowed yearly to ten poor families of his own kin, mentioned in his will, and to the poor of the parishes of Warcop and Cliburn for ever.

Poor Stock.—It appears that this parish possesses an ancient poor stock of £58, the interest of which, together with the proceeds of Knipe's Charity, amounting together to £3 6s., is distributed among the poor on St. Thomas's Day.

Townhead is a hamlet in this township, a little north of Cliburn village. Windervath is a detached farm of 365 acres, which is separated from this parish by that of Brougham. It is the property of Miss Salmond, of York, and the residence of James Atkinson, Esq. It is said that a chapel once stood in the neighbourhood of this house; where Chapelgarth still recalls its site. Mr. Atkinson pays seven shillings a year to the rector of Cliburn, in lieu of chapel salary.

A market was held at Gilsaughlin in this township, in 1598, in consequence of the ravages of the plague at Appleby, from which town it is distant seven miles.

CLIFTON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the west by the river Lowther, and on every other side by the parishes of Brougham and Lowther. It comprises no dependent townships. The soil, which varies much, is in some places loamy, and in others clayey. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the parish, and has a station about a mile south of the village of Clifton. Penrith market is usually attended; agriculture is the only employment.

The area of Clifton is 1,520 acres, and its rateable value £3,321 12s. 7½d. The population in 1801 was 219; in 1811, 219; in 1821, 283; in 1831, 288; in 1841, 288; and in 1851, 289; principally resident in the village of Clifton. The commons of the township were enclosed in 1812.

Of the Roman occupation of this part of the country evidence was furnished in 1845, when the workmen employed in making the excavation for the Lancaster and Carlisle railway discovered a Roman altar, on the sides of which are the figures of a vase and prefericulum; the back is plain and in a rough state. The inscription may be read thus:—

[The following is a faint, illegible image of a Roman altar inscription, likely the one mentioned in the text.]

This altar is now the property of C. Mould, Esq., of Coldale Hall, near Carlisle.

In the reign of Henry II. the manor of Clifton was given by Sir Hugh de Morville to Gilbert Engayne, whose descendants continued to possess it till the year 1364, when Eleanor, the heiress of the family, brought it in marriage to the Wyberghs, to whom the hall and demesne still belong, though the manorial rights have passed under a mortgage to the Earl of Lonsdale, besides whom Lord Brougham, William Brougham, Esq., and John Wybergh, Esq., are the principal landowners. Clifton Hall, now used as a sort of outoffice to a farm-house, was formerly a fine turretted mansion, supposed to have been built by the Engaynes, who, as well as their successors, the Wyberghs, were long resident here. A considerable portion of the old hall has been demolished, a tower, with a turret at one of the corners, being all that now remains. For an account of the skirmish at Clifton Moor in 1745, see page 599.

The village of Clifton is pleasantly situated in the vale of Lowther, two and a quarter miles south-south-east of Penrith.

THE CHURCH.

Clifton church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a neat edifice in the Early English style, consisting of nave, north aisle, and chancel, the latter of which was rebuilt in 1849, when the church was thoroughly repaired and resecated. There is still a turret with one bell. Some of the chancel windows are filled with stained glass. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £8 3s. 4d. When Clifton Moor was enclosed in 1812, the tithes of the parish were commuted for nine acres of land, and the sum of £5,600 raised by subscription, with which an estate of 175 acres was purchased at Bowness, in Cumberland. The living is now worth £150 a year. The Bishop of Carlisle is patron. The parish registers commence in 1675.

Rectors:—Peter Tithel, 1604; Henry de Carlisle, resigned 1614; William de Robeson, 1617; Thomas de Salkeld, 1664; Peter de Morland, 1679; Robert de Merton, 1679; John de Merton, 1676; Thomas Byre, resigned 1465; Richard Shaw, 1465; Thomas Ellerton, died 1466; John Wybergh, 1566; Edward Maplett, 1583; John Fletcher, died 1632; Robert Symson, 1632; John Winter, 1634; Rowland Burrowes, 1688; Jeremiah Seed, 1707; Jeffrey Bowness, 1722; Curwen Huddleston, 1745; Wilfrid Huddleston, 1769; Curwen Burrowes, —; William Hazen, —; Jonathan Mortimer, —; John Robinson, 1819; Michael Dand, 1841; Joseph Wood, 1847.

The rectory is situated on the north side of the church.

Clifton school, which is attended by about thirty scholars, has a small endowment of £2 a year, left by Mary Scott, in 1764, for the education of three poor children. Subscriptions, amounting to about £20 a year, are the principal support of the school.

Clifton Moor and Clifton Dykes are hamlets in this township.

CROSBY RAVENSWORTH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by those of Morland and Shap, on the west by Shap and Orton, on the south by Orton and Asby, and on the east by Asby and St. Lawrence Appleby. It is nearly six miles in length by three in breadth, and is generally a fine open district, except at its southern extremity, which forms part of the wild and mountainous township of Birkbeck Fells. The parish abounds in limestone. It comprises the townships of Crosby Ravensworth, Mauld's Meaburn, Reagill, and Birkbeck Fells, whose united area is 15,024 acres. The population, which has not yet been returned in separate townships, was, in 1801, 789; in 1811, 764; in 1821, 863; in 1831, 928; in 1841, 909; and in 1851, 971.

CROSBY RAVENSWORTH.

The first lord of the manor of Crosby Ravensworth upon record is Torphin de Alverstain, who, in the reign of Henry I., gave the church to the abbey of Whithy. This Torphin had a son, Alan, who confirmed the grant made by his father. His son, Thomas de Hastings, also confirmed the grant just mentioned. Hugh de Hastings received from Henry II. a grant of free warren in Crosby Ravensworth and Teyay. In the same king's reign Hugh de Hastings appears to have held the manor of Crosby Ravensworth of John de Veteripont. The manor continued in the possession of the Hastings family till the 31st Henry VI. (1452-3), when it appears that Edward Hastings held the manor by the payment of 13s. 7d. cornage, subject also to wardship, marriage, relief, and suit of court. At this date Lancelot Threlkeld, Knt., held Crosby Ravensworth of Edward Hastings, and from that period all mention ceases of the Hastings family. Crosby Ravensworth was the property of the Threlkelds till that family ended in daughters, one of whom was married to a younger son of Sir James Pickering, who thus became possessed of this manor. It was purchased from the Pickering by Sir John Lowther, and is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale, besides whom W. Dent, Esq.; Thomas Reively, Esq.; the Hon. Mary Howard; John Hill, Esq.; Sir Richard Lupton, Bart.; and Rev. Thomas Balles; Thomas Gibson, Esq.; and others, are the landowners. The old hall is now a farm-house.

The village of Crosby Ravensworth is situate near the source of the Lyvennet rivulet, four miles east-by-north of Shap, and five south-west of Appleby. It is surrounded on almost every side by wild and bleak moors; and, till a very few years ago, was scarcely approachable from the west, except either by a circuitous route of five or six miles, or over the well known Harberwain Rigg. A broad and well-made road has, however, been constructed, and the village is now easily reached.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a handsome structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave, aisles, and chancel, with a lofty square tower containing three bells. It was repaired in 1811, and has since been restored and considerably improved, principally through the exertions of the late George Gibson, Esq. On entering the sacred edifice by a richly moulded doorway, the interior, with its tall clustered columns and lofty Gothic arches, has an imposing appearance. Between the nave and chancel a lofty arch has been erected, which has greatly improved the appearance of that part of the church. Another, but smaller one, has been lately erected between the north transept and the private chapel belonging to Crosby Hall, where the tomb, supposed to cover the remains of the celebrated Sir Lancelot Threlkeld, has been raised to its proper height above the present flooring. The choir, occupying the transverse transept, is quite a new introduction, and some of the seats exhibit richly carved work in the Early English style. The sanctuary also presents an elaborately carved altar table on a foot pace, floored with encaustic tiles, and raised by two steps above the floor of the chancel. The old wooden pulpit has been removed, and a substantial stone one erected in its stead. Service is performed here in the cathedral style. A large stained glass window, at the west end, transmits its solemn light into the recess of the tower, and another lights the west end of the north aisle. A few years ago, a vestry was built adjoining the north side of the chancel. The church is heated by means of hot water. Torphin de Alverstain gave the church, with two carucates and 140 acres of land at Crosby Ravensworth to the abbey of Whithy, which grant was confirmed by his successors, and also by Athelwold, first bishop of Carlisle. The church was afterwards appropriated to the abbey. At the period of the Reformation, the rectory and advowson were purchased by the Bellinghams, of Levins and Garthorne, and, together with the estate of the Bellinghams, were sold by Alan Bellingham, Esq., to Colonel James Graham, whose daughter and sole heir, Catherine, brought them in marriage to Henry Bowes Howard, earl of Berkshire, who sold the rectory to the Lowther family; but the advowson continued in the Howard family, and is now possessed by the Hon. Mary Granville Howard; the Earl of Lonsdale is impropriator. The living, a vicarage, is valued in the King's Book at £7 12s. 4d.; it was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £35 12s. 7d.; but in 1721, was augmented with land at Lazonby, purchased with £200, given by Colonel Graham, and a like sum from Queen Anne's Bounty; it is now worth £150 a year. The tithes were commuted in 1846 for £142. The parish register commences in 1560. According to tradition a friary formerly existed on the north side of the church yard, and the names of Monkgarth, Monkbarn, and Monkbridge, seem to bear out the tradition.

VICARS.—William de Insula, 1367; John de Linton, 1364; Robert de Threkeld, 1361; John de Regill, 1362; Roland Thwaites, —; Christopher Witton, 1572; Edward Smith, 1576; William Willaine, 1597; Matthias Braddel, 1617; William Willain, jun., 1617; William Curwen occurs 1660; William Wilkinson, 1685; James Watson, 1709; George Williamson, 1747; — Bowker, —; Samuel Rowley, 1781; Joseph Briscoe, 1812; Salisbury Ellard, —; Edward Carus Wilson, —; George F. Weston, 1841.

The vicarage has been enlarged and much improved by the present vicar. The gardens are laid out with great taste.

CHARITIES.

The School.—Crosby Ravensworth School was endowed in 1630 with £100 by the Rev. William Willaine, and rebuilt in 1784 by William Dent, Esq., who, in conjunction with Viscountess Andover, Robert Dent, Dent, Esq., and Thomas Wilkinson, Esq., endowed it with £500, which in 1800 was invested in the Old South Sea Annuities, together with £47 10s. given by the other benefactors. Besides the interest of these sums the master has £10 a year from two fields purchased about the year 1799, with £145 of the original school stock, and £1 a year from Mauld's Meaburn Hall estate, left in 1749 by Mr. Edward Thwaites, who also bequeathed 10s. a year for the purchase of books for poor scholars. Several of the children are taught free in respect of these charities.

Thwaites' Charities.—Edward Thwaites, by will, dated 16th April, 1749, gave to trustees a rent charge of £2 10s. per annum on his estate at Mauld's Meaburn, to be distributed to poor people for ever. He also gave 5s. a year to the vicar of Crosby for a sermon, £1 a year to the master of the free school, and 10s. for the purchase of books for poor children.

Poor Stock.—There is in this parish the sum of £62, called poor stock, the interest of which is divided with the rent of the Tenterow estate hereafter mentioned amongst the poor of the parish.

Poors' Land.—There is an estate at Tenterow, in Crosby, which was purchased with £63 10s. in 1725.

It produces about £10 10s. a year, a portion of which is set apart for the poor of Crosby township exclusively; the remainder is distributed to the poor of the parish on St. Thomas' Day, with the interest of the poor stock before-mentioned.

Addison's Charity.—Thomas Addison, by will, left a legacy of £30, the yearly interest to be applied in giving so many penny loaves, every Sunday, to such a number of poor women as the interest would pay for, the said women to be always of the township of Crosby.

Holme's Charity.—The Rev. Edward Holme, in 1757, gave £105, in trust, for the purchase of bread for distribution among the poor of the parish of Crosby Ravensworth, who should duly attend service at the parish church. This money was laid out in land, the rent of which, amounting to about £6 a year, is distributed along with the produce of Addison's Charity, in two-penny loaves, as directed.

In the village is a dame's school, for girls and infants, established in 1830, and endowed with £12 a year.

The park belonging to the manor of Crosby Ravensworth was a little south of the village, and is now known as Crosby Gill. A little south of this place is Black Dub, where Charles II. halted with his army on his march from Scotland, in 1651. This solitary spring, which is the source of the Lyvennet, is surrounded on all sides by unenclosed moors, and though now so silent and deserted, it was once the great thoroughfare from Scotland, by way of Lancashire, to the south. In August, 1840, a rustic obelisk was erected here, which bears the following inscription:—"Here at Black Dub, the source of the Lyvennet, Charles II. regaled his army, on their march from Scotland, August 8th, A.D. 1651."

On the east of Crosby Gill is Penhurrock, a remarkable heap of stones, supposed to be a sepulchral monument.

Gilts is a hamlet in this township, near Blasterfield, and the source of the Lyvennet, two miles north of Orton.

Oddendale is another hamlet, consisting of three farm-houses. It has long been the property of the Gibson family.

There are three or four houses on the east side of the village of Crosby, called Bank and Row, which are within the manor of Garthorne, most of which manor is in the parish of Asby.

DIREDDON FIELDS.

This township comprises a large mountainous district, which extends into the parishes of Shap and Orton, comprising a number of scattered houses, distant from three to five and a half miles south-by-east of Shap, and forming a lordship within the manor of Crosby Ravensworth, belonging to the Earl of Lonsdale. Most of the tenements here have been sold to freehold, the lord reserving only the royalties and power to enclose 200 acres of the common, and should the tenants agree to enclose the remainder of the common, the lord is to receive sixpence an acre as rent. The rateable value is £1,957 11s. 6d. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale, Rev. John Gibson, G. Bigge, Esq., Mary Ann Abdale, Rev. John Hayton, and Richard Simpson.

There is a free school at Green Holme, in this township.

In this township is Shap Wells, a saline spa, stated by Mr. Alderson to be a most genial and sanative spring, milder than the Harrogate purgative spa, more active than the Gilsland water, and in its properties nearly allied to that of Leamington. There is an hotel here, fitted up with every requisite convenience, in first class style, with baths, pump-rooms, &c. A new bath has been recently fitted up in the hotel for the use of invalids, or persons wishing to be strictly private. On a hill north of the hotel is an octagonal column, surmounted by a richly ornamented capital, erected, as an inscription records, to commemorate the accession of Queen Victoria to the throne of these realms.

MAULD'S MEABURN.

The rateable value of this township is £1,975; the area and population are included in the parish returns. The soil here is principally loam, with a clayey and gravelly sub-soil. In the township is a stinted common of 250 acres, called Cow Close, belonging to thirty-two landowners. Graybar, an open field containing 120 acres, was enclosed and divided in 1818.

The manor of Meaburn anciently comprised the two Meaburns and the intervening tract of country known as Meaburn Field, and was possessed by the Morvilles. Maud, the sister of Sir Hugh de Morville, brought this manor to her husband, William de Veteripont; and after the confiscation of the estates of Sir Hugh de Morville, the other portion of Meaburn being taken into the king's hands, these two divisions became known as King's Meaburn and Maud's (or Mauld's) Meaburn, names which they have retained to the present day. William de Veteripont gave four oxgangs of land here to the hospital of St. Leonard at York; and Ivo, his son, gave other lands here to the same institution. Robert de Veteripont, son of Ivo, gave to the abbey of Shap twenty-two shillings a year, to be paid out of Meaburn in the name of alms corn. This Robert de Veteripont, in 1242-3, granted this manor to John le Fraunceys, who was to render yearly for all services, except those due to the barony of Westmoreland, one pound of cummin. The family of Frauncey ended in a daughter, who brought Mauld's Meaburn in marriage to the Vernons, from whom it came to the Lowthers, and is at present held by the Earl of Lonsdale, besides whom, William Dent, Esq.; Thomas and John Thwaite, Esq.; James Betham, Esq.; and Mrs. Salkeld, are the principal landowners. Meaburn Hall is an Elizabethan structure, supposed to have been erected by Robert Lowther, Esq.

The village of Mauld's Meaburn is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Lyvennet, in a fine rich vale, four and a half miles east-by-north of Shap. A fair for horses, sheep, and cattle was established here in 1828, and is held yearly on the Monday before Easter. Here is a school for children of both sexes, erected by subscription in 1834. It is endowed with £16 a year, arising from lands purchased with the sum of £475, subscribed for that purpose by six gentlemen. The school is under the superintendence of three trustees, and is attended by about thirty children.

CHARITIES.

Dame Eleanor Lowther's Charity.—There is an estate in this township, purchased with a legacy left by Dame Eleanor Lowther, in 1659, the rent of which, amounting to £4 12s. 6d. is distributed amongst the poor of the township.

Knot's Charity.—John Knot, of Mauld's Meaburn, by will, dated 16th August, 1734, left an estate in the township, the rents and profits of which he directed should be distributed amongst the poor.

Moss's Gift.—Richard Moss, in 1738, left the sum of £20, the interest of which he desired should be given to the poor.

Witherslack is a hamlet in this township, three and a half miles east of Shap.

Flass House, an elegant mansion in the Italian style, erected in 1851, is the seat and property of Wilkinson Dent, Esq.

On the summit of a gentle hill, a little west of Flass House, is a rustic monument bearing the following inscription:—"On this spot dwelt the paternal ancestors of the celebrated Joseph Addison, dean of Lichfield, who was born here A.D. 1632." His son, of the same name, was the author of "Cato," and of numerous papers in the "Tatler," "Spectator," and "Guardian."

REAGILL.

The rateable value of the township of Reagill is £2,051 11s. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants. A seam of coal has been discovered here, but its quality is very inferior. The soil is loamy, with a subsoil of clay, limestone, and sandstone. On the boundary between Reagill and Sleagill are the remains of what are considered to have been earthworks, constructed by some of the early inhabitants of this part of the country. At Chapelgarth, as its name implies, there was formerly a chapel, but every vestige has long since disappeared.

The manor of Reagill, or Renegill, as it was called in ancient times, was the property of the Veteriponts. Maude de Veteripont gave half a ploughland of her demesne here in frank marriage with her daughter, Christian, to Robert, son of Derman; and afterwards gave to her son, Robert, the whole vill of Reagill, he rendering to her one hawk for all services. In the 13th King John (1211-12), the Robert de Veteripont just mentioned gave the manor to the abbey of Shap, to which it continued attached till the period of the suppression of the religious houses, when Henry VIII. granted the revenues, &c., of the abbey to Thomas Lord Wharton, whose descendants sold Reagill Grange and half of the demesne to Dr. Lancelot Dawes, and the other half to Sir John Lowther, who, afterwards, purchased the whole. The manor is held by the Earl of Lonsdale, in addition to whom Richard Gibson, Esq., Thomas Salkeld, Esq.; Rev. F. J. Courtney; and Messrs. Thomas, Wharton, and John Bland, are the landowners.

The village of Reagill is three miles north-east of Shap. A festival, of a somewhat unique character, is held here annually, on the anniversary of her Majesty's accession, on the grounds of Mr. Bland, which are richly ornamented with pictures, statuary, &c. A band of music is engaged for the occasion, and the day's amusements are interspersed with lectures, addresses, music, dancing, and other recreations.

Reagill Grange, an Elizabethan structure, has been long the residence of the Thwaites family.

CHARITIES.

Reagill School.—This school was founded in 1684, by the Rev. Randal Sanderson, who gave £120 for that purpose. It subsequently received £10 from Thomas Harrison, and £5 from Joseph Wilkinson; William Thwaites, Esq., of London, gave £500. On the enclosure of the common, in 1803, an allotment of twenty-eight acres was made to the school, the total income of which is now £30 a year. The school is managed by trustees, and is attended by about thirty children.

Lord Wharton's Bible Charity.—Five copies of the Bible, bound up with the Common Prayer, are annually sent by the trustees of Lord Wharton's Charity for the poor children of Reagill.

LOWTHER PARISH.

LOWTHER parish is bounded on the north by that of Clifton, on the west by the river Lowther, on the south by the parishes of Bampton and Shap, and on the east by Morland. It comprises a fertile district three miles in length and two in breadth; the soil is of good loam, with freestone subsoil. The parish comprises the townships of Lowther, Hackthorpe, Melkinthorpe, and Whale, whose united area is 3,520 acres. Its population in 1801 was 373; in 1811, 560; in 1821, 599; in 1831, 494; in 1841, 470; and in 1851, 494. The rateable value of the parish is £4,400 18s. 3d.

LOWTHER.

As early as the reign of Henry II. the manor of Lowther appears to have been divided into three parts, and in 1277-8 one of these three parts seems to have been divided into two by means of two co-heirs, one of whom became the wife of Robert de Morville, and the other of Gilbert de Whiteby; the other two parts of the manor were held by the priory of Watton and William de Strickland. In 1309-10 we find the manor held under the Cliffords by the heir of John de Coup-land, Henry de Haverington, Simon de Alve, and the prior of Watton. Five years later, the family of Lowther appear as owners of a fourth of the manor, probably by purchase from the Simon de Alve just mentioned, for an inquisition taken in that year gives Adam de Coup-land, Henry de Haverington, Hugh de Lowther, and the prior of Watton, as lords of the manor, the cornage of which is stated to be worth 20s. 4d. In the 10th Henry V. (1422) Sir Robert Lowther, Knt., appears as lord of the entire manor of Lowther, and it has since continued in his family. In the rental of the Clifford estate for 1452-3, it is stated that John de Coup-land, Adam de Haverington, Simon de Alve, and the prior of Watton heretofore held Lowther William and Lowther John by homage and fealty and 20s. 4d. cornage, and that Hugh Lowther now holds the same by similar service. This distinction of Lowther William and Lowther John again occurs in the rental of the Earl of Cumberland in 1520-7. From this time we hear no more of the manor till 1638, in which year it was found by inquisition that two parts of the manor of Lowther were held of the Earl of Cumberland by the servage called noltgeld, paying yearly to the said earl 20s. 4d.; and by the service called sergeants' food, paying 10s. yearly. It is also recorded that the third part was held of Robert Strickland, Esq., paying yearly one hawk, or sixpence. The Earl of Lonsdale is the present lord of the manor, and sole landowner in the township.

Lowther Family.

The family of Lowther is of great antiquity in the counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland. The first whose names we meet with are William de Lowther and Thomas de Lowther, who appear as witnesses to a grant in the reign of Henry II. The names of Sir Thomas de Lowther, Sir Gervase de Lowther, Knt., and Gervase de Lowther, archdeacon of Carlisle, occur in the reign of Henry III. The regular pedigree commences in the reign of Edward I. with Sir HUGH DE LOWTHER, Knt., attorney-general in 1292, and knight of the shire in 1300 and 1305. He was subsequently justice itinerant, and escheator on the north side of the Trent, and in 1331 was made one of the justice of the Court of King's Bench. He married a daughter of Sir Peter Tiliol, Knt., of Scaleby Castle, by whom he had issue, besides a son Thomas, a son and heir.

Sir HUGH DE LOWTHER, who married, 1stly, a daughter of Lord Lucy of Cockerthorpe, and 2ndly, Margaret, daughter and heiress of William de Quale. In 1324 he was one of the commissioners to array all men-at-arms in Cumberland to assist in the expected invasion from France. He served the office of sheriff of Cumberland for three successive years, was thrice returned for the county of Westmoreland and twice for Cumberland. The next member of the family on record is

Sir ROBERT DE LOWTHER, Knt., probably son and heir of Hugh. He had two brothers, John and William; and often represented Cumberland in parliament. He died in 1430, leaving by his wife, a member of the Strickland family, three daughters and a son.

1. HUGH, his heir.
2. Anne, married to Sir Thomas Curwen, Knt. of Workington.
3. Mary, married to Sir James Pickering, Knt., of Killington.
4. Elizabeth, married to William Lancaster.

He was succeeded by his son,

Sir HUGH DE LOWTHER, Knt., who married Margaret, daughter of John de Derwentwater. He took part in the battle of Agincourt, there being with him Geoffrey de Lowther and Richard de Lowther. He served the office of sheriff of Cumberland in 1440. He was succeeded by his son and heir,

Sir HUGH DE LOWTHER, Knt., who was knight of the shire and sheriff of the county of Cumberland. He died 1475-6, leaving, by his wife, Mabel, daughter of Sir William Lancaster of Sockbridge, a son and heir,

Sir HUGH DE LOWTHER, Knt. This gentleman married Anne, daughter of Sir Lancelot Threlkeld, by Margaret Bromley, heiress of Vesci, and widow of John Lord Clifford. In 1501-2 he was made a Knight of the Bath. He died about 1510 or 1511, leaving issue three sons and two daughters. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir JOHN DE LOWTHER, Knt., who was called out on the border service in 1543, with one hundred horse and forty foot, and was sheriff of Cumberland for three years. By his wife, Lucy, daughter of Sir Thomas Curwen of Workington, he had issue,

Sir HUGH LOWTHER, Knt., married Dorothy, daughter of Henry Lord Clifford, and by her had issue,

1. RICHARD, who succeeded his grandfather.
2. Gerard, a benchman in Lincoln's Inn.
3. Margaret, married to John Richmond, Esq., of High-head Castle.
4. Anne, married to Thomas Wybergh, Esq., of Clifton.
5. Frances, married to Sir Henry Goodyer, Knt., of Powells-worth.
6. Barbara, married to Thomas Carleton, Esq., of Carleton.

As Sir Hugh died during the lifetime of his father, on the latter's demise the family honour and estates descended upon his grandson,

Sir RICHARD LOWTHER, Knt., who was high-sheriff of Cumberland in the 8th and 30th of Queen Elizabeth. He succeeded his cousin, Henry Lord Scroop, as lord-warden of the west marches, and was thrice commissioner in the great affairs between England and Scotland, temp. Queen Elizabeth; and in the same reign, when Mary Queen of Scots fled into England; and arrived at Workington, in Cumberland, in May, 1568, Elizabeth sent orders to Sir Richard, during his sheriffalty, that he should convey the Scottish queen to Carlisle Castle; but while the princess was in custody the sheriff incurred the displeasure of his queen by admitting the Duke of Norfolk to visit the fair prisoner. Sir Richard died 27th January, 1607, leaving, by his wife, Frances, daughter of John Middleton, Esq., with other children,

1. CHRISTOPHER (Sir), of whom presently.

2. Gerard (Sir), of St. Michael's, Dublin, chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas in Ireland; and subsequently, in 1634, lord high chancellor of that kingdom. His lordship married, 1stly, Anne Welbury, widow, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Ralph Bulmer; 2ndly, Anne, daughter of Sir Lawrence Parsons, justice-grandson, Lowther Parsons, who bequeathed his manor of St. John's, co. Wexford; and 3rdly, Margaret, daughter of Sir John King; but died without issue.

3. Lancelot (Sir), co. Kildare, one of the barons of the exchequer, and a privy councillor in Ireland.

4. William, of Ingelton, co. York, whose daughter and sole heir, Anne, married T. Heber, Esq., of Marton and Stainton, co. York.

Sir CHRISTOPHER LOWTHER, the eldest surviving son, was father of several children. The fifth son, William Lowther, was ancestor of the Lowthers of Ingelton, Lowtherstown, and Kilru, now represented in the male line by George Lowther, Esq., of Hampton Hall, co. Somerset, son and heir of the late George Lowther, Esq., of Kilru, county Meath. He married Julia Huntingford, niece of the bishop of Hereford, and has issue, Ponsonby, St. George, Beresford, Drabazon, Marcus, and four surviving daughters.

Sir JOHN LOWTHER, Sir Christopher's eldest son, was M.P. for the county of Westmoreland in the reigns of James I. and Charles I. This gentleman dying in 1637, was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir JOHN LOWTHER of Lowther, M.P. for the co. of Westmoreland, who was created a baronet of Nova Scotia in 1740, and was succeeded at his decease, in 1755, by his grandson,

Sir JOHN LOWTHER, who was the 31st knight of the family in almost direct succession. Upon the accession of King William, Sir John was sworn of the privy council. In 1689 he was nominated as lord-lieutenant of Westmoreland and Cumberland; in 1690 appointed first commissioner of the treasury; and elevated to the peerage, 28th May, 1696, by the titles of Viscount Lonsdale and Baron Lowther. His lordship died 10th July, 1700, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

RICHARD, second viscount; who died in 1713, and was succeeded by his brother,

HENRY, third viscount; at whose decease, without issue, 12th March, 1750, the viscounty ceased, but the baroncy and estates devolved upon his grandnephew,

Sir JAMES LOWTHER, eldest son of Robert Lowther, Esq., governor of Barbadoes, and Catherine, daughter of Sir Joseph Pennington, Bart. (which Catherine Pennington's mother was the Hon. Margaret Lowther, daughter of the first Viscount Lonsdale.) This gentleman represented the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland for several years in parliament, and was elevated to the peerage, 24th May, 1784, by the titles of Baron Lowther of Lowther, Viscount Lowther, and Earl of Lonsdale. He married 7th September, 1761, Margaret, daughter of John Earl of Bute; but having no issue, he obtained a new patent 10th October, 1797, creating him Baron and Viscount Lowther, with remainder to the heirs male of his cousin, the Rev. Sir William Lowther, Bart. of Swillington; and dying 24th May, 1803, all his honours expired except those of the latter creation, which devolved, according to the limitation, with the deceased earl's estates in Westmoreland and Cumberland, upon

Sir WILLIAM LOWTHER, Bart., as Baron and Viscount Lowther. His lordship, born 29th December, 1757, was created Earl of Lonsdale 7th April, 1807. He married, 19th July, 1781, Augusta, daughter of John, ninth and late Earl of Westmoreland, by whom (who died 10th March, 1838) he had issue,

I. WILLIAM Viscount Lowther, present earl.

II. Henry Cecil, born 27th July, 1790; M.P. for Westmoreland, and colonel of the Cumberland militia; married 19th May, 1817, Lucy Eleanor, eldest daughter of Philip, fifth Earl of Harborough, and by her (who died 8th June, 1835, less issue,

1. Henry, born 25th March, 1818; captain 1st Life Guards, M.P.; married, 31st July, 1852, Emily Susan, eldest daughter of St. George James Caulfield, Esq. and their issue, a son, born 22nd July, 1854; another son, born 4th October, 1855.

2. Arthur, born 12th July, 1820; captain; died 15th February, 1855.

3. William, secretary of legation at Naples, born 14th December, 1821; married, 17th December, 1854, Charlotte Alice, daughter of Lord Wensleydale, and has issue a son, born 1st April, 1855.

1. Eleanor Cecily; married, 22nd April, 1844, to J. Talbot Clifton, Esq., of Lytham, co. Lancaster.

2. Augusta Mary.

3. Constantia; married, 1850, to Colonel Robert Blucker Wood, C.B.

I. Elizabeth, died unmarried.

II. Mary; married, 16th September, 1820, to Major-general Lord Frederick Cavendish Bentinck, youngest son of William Henry, third Duke of Portland.

III. Anne; married, 20th January, 1817, to the Right Hon. Sir John Beckett, Bart.; and died 31st May, 1847.

IV. Caroline; married, 3rd July, 1815, to Lord William John Frederick Poulett, son of the late Duke of Cleveland.

His lordship K.G., lieutenant-colonel in the army, lord-lieutenant of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and recorder of Carlisle, died 10th March, 1844; and was succeeded by his eldest son, WILLIAM LOWTHER, F.R.S., second Earl of Lonsdale, Viscount Lowther and Baron Lowther, and a baronet; born 21st July, 1787; succeeded as second earl, on the death of his father, 19th March, 1844. His lordship had been summoned to the House of Peers, in his father's barony, 6th September, 1841. He is lord-lieutenant of the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and lieutenant-colonel commandant of the Westmoreland militia.

Creations.—Baronet, 22nd August, 1764. Baron and viscount, 10th October, 1797. Earl, 7th April, 1807.

Arms.—Or, six annulets.

Crest.—A dragon, passant, arg.

Supporters.—Two horses, arg., each gorged with a chaplet of laurel, ppr.

Motto.—Magistratus indicat virum.

Seats.—Lowther Castle, Westmoreland; Cottesmore Park, Rutland; and Whitehaven Castle, Cumberland.

Lowther Castle, the seat of the Earl of Lonsdale, stands in a noble park of 600 acres, on the east side of the woody vale of Lowther. It was erected by the late earl, after the designs of Sir Robert Smirke, upon the site of the old hall, which had been nearly destroyed by fire as far back as the year 1726. The light-coloured stone of which it is built is in pleasing contrast with the vivid green of the park and woods. The effect of the whole pile is strikingly grand, worthy the residence of its wealthy and powerful owner. The north front, in the Castellated style of the fourteenth century, is 420 feet in length; the south front is in the Gothic-cathedral style, and has a number of pinnacles, pointed windows, &c. So far from the diversity of the fronts being discordant, the art of the designer has made them increase each other's effect—a circumstance not unnoticed by Wordsworth, who has a sonnet commencing—

"Lowther! in thy majestic pile are seen
Cathedral pomp and grace, in apt accord
With the baronial castle's sterner mien;
Union significant of God adored,
And characters won, and guarded with the sword
Of ancient honour."

Surmounting the whole is a lofty tower, from the summit of which the prospect is extremely fine. The fitting up of the interior is in a style corresponding with the external appearance. Oak and birch occupy in a great measure the place of foreign woods, in the furniture and carvings. The staircase, sixty feet square, which climbs the great central tower, with the ceiling, ninety feet from the ground, is highly imposing. The library, forty-five feet by thirty, decorated entirely with oak, is plentifully stored with books, and hung round with family portraits. A Lady Lowther, by Lely, is a favourable specimen of his pencil. The saloon is a splendid apartment on the south front, sixty feet by thirty, having the dining-room on one side and the drawing-room on the other. The corridors and rooms are adorned with busts from the chisels of Chantry, Westmacott, and other sculptors. Amongst them is a bust of her Majesty Queen Victoria, taken when a child of three or four years old. Upon the walls of the various apartments are hung many paintings by the ancient and modern masters, of great excellence and value. Amongst them we may particularise the following:—In the breakfast-room: Village Wake, Village Feast, and Fete Champetre, by Teniers; a Hawking Party, and a Halt of Cavalry, by Wouvermans; Fruit and Animals, by Fyft; Oyster Supper, Jan Steen; Charity, Vandyke; Madonna and Child, Sasso Ferrato; Dutch, F. Hals; Holy Family, Rubens; Two Infants Embracing, attributed to Leonardo da Vinci; Head, Rembrandt; Head, Titian. In the dining-room: the Duke of Wellington, Jackson; Sir James Lowther (first earl of Lonsdale), in a masquerade dress; in this room is a cast from Flaxman's celebrated model of the shield of Achilles. North drawing-room: the late Earl of Lonsdale, by Lawrence; Landscape, by Poussin; Adoration of the Shepherds, by Bassano; and a Marine View, by Vandervelde. The small sitting-room: Lieut.-colonel Lowther (the earl's brother) as major in the 10th Hussars, by Lawrence; St. John Preaching in the Wilderness, by Salvator Rosa; Landscape, by Poussin; the poet Wordsworth, a drawing. In Lord Lonsdale's study: Boors Playing at Cards, by Teniers; Alehouse Interior, by Bronever; Old Man Mending a Pen by Candlelight, by Gerard Dow; Dutch Village Inn Scene, by Ostade; Boys Eating Fruit, by Murillo; Head of a Martyr, by Titian; Soldiers Quarrelling—the Tribute Money, by Valentine; Anne Clifford, countess of Pembroke; Christ and the Woman of Samaria, by Vanderwerf; Female Head, by Holbein; Crucifixion, by Brengel; Fawn and Dancing Nymphs, by Vanderwerf; River Scene—Farrier's Shop, by Wouvermans; Two Croncs, and Boors Revelling, by Ostade; Female Reading, by Gerard Dow; Dancing Children and Bacchanalian Revellers, by Le Nain. Gallery round staircase: St. Francis, by Guido; St. Sebastian, by Guido; St. Jerome, by Guido; a Magdalen, by Tintoretto; a Gentleman, by Tintoretto. Ante-room, west of staircase: The Palmist, and Two Soldiers Gaming, by Pietro da Vecchia; Belisarius, Rembrandt; William III. in his robes, and the Duke of Monmouth in armour, by Dobson. Dressing-room, east front: Magdalen

Reading, by E. Sirani; Landscape, by Salvator Rosa. Billiard-room: George IV., by Lawrence; William Pitt, by Höppner; the late Lady Lonsdale, by Lawrence.

Lowther village and Lowther Newtown are situated within a mile of the castle, and four and a half miles south-by-east of Penrith. Machell tells us that the ancient village of Lowther was pulled down in 1682, by Sir John Lowther, in order to enlarge his demesne. The village called Newtown was soon afterwards built.

LOWTHER CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient cruciform structure, standing on the eastern bank of the Lowther, in the outskirts of the castle park. It consists of nave, aisles, transepts, chancel, and embattled central tower. The pillars separating the north aisle from the nave are circular, with curiously enriched capitals. The chancel arch, and the arches supporting the tower are Early English. The church was restored, re-seated, and a new porch added in 1857, at the expense of the Earl of Lonsdale and the present rector, the latter of whom restored the chancel. There are numerous monuments, tombs, and tablets to the memory of various members of the Lowther family, and others. In 1857 a beautiful mausoleum was erected in the churchyard, by the present Earl of Lonsdale; it consists of a vault capable of containing twenty-five coffins, and above the vault is an upper chamber for monuments; the whole of the workmanship is of the most excellent description. At the sides are six tablets, three on either side, for inscriptions, each tablet is eight feet by three feet four inches, in one stone; they were got from the celebrated granite mountain on Shap Fell, and were cut and polished at the marble works of Messrs. Nelson, of Carlisle, bear a high polish, and are altogether unique in their kind. The building was designed by B. Band, Esq., architect, London; and the whole carried out under the immediate direction of Mr. James Mawson, of Lowther. Inside the vault is a magnificent sarcophagus, of the best Italian marble, designed by Mr. Band, and executed by Mr. B. Stephen, Esq., sculptor, of London. The two gentlemen before named carried out the restoration of the church of Lowther in 1855 so as to give general satisfaction. The living of Lowther is a rectory, and has always been attached to the manor, the various lords of which have presented. It is valued in the King's Book at £25 7s. 3d. The tithes were commuted in 1838, for a rent charge of £93 10s. 2d. The total income of the living is about £300. The parish registers commence in 1540.

Barons.—William de Capela, 1299; Walter de Wills, 1302; John Bone, 1370; John de Raby, 1425; Thos. Cleveland, —; John Whiston, 1469; Anthony Garnet, about 1570; Thomas Fairfax, 1579; Leonard Lowther, 1586; Christopher Lowther, 1609; John Teasdale, 1640; William Smith, died 1676; Richard Threlkeld, 1679; Richard Holmes, 1694; Joseph Robinson, 1738; Henry Lowther, 1763; William Lowther, 1769; James Setterthwaite, 1814; William Jackson, 1828.

Askham Hall serves as Lowther rectory.

HACKTHORPE.

The soil here is a light loam, with a subsoil of limestone and freestone. The township is intersected by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway, but there is no station nearer than Clifton. The rateable value of Hackthorpe is £1,939. 10s.

The manor of Hackthorpe is included in the marquis fee of the barony of Kendal. In the reign of Henry III. "Ralph de Aincourt released to William de Lancaster and his heirs his right in fifty shillings of land, in which he was bound to him by the charter of William de Lancaster, his grandfather, for the quit claim, which the said William made to the said Ralph, of the service of Gamel de Hakethorpe. The said William released to Ralph de Aincourt and his heirs the service of the said Gamel, in drainage and other services." In 1361, Sir Thomas de Strickland, who held under the barons of Kendal, had a license from the crown to impark his woods at Hackthorpe and other places, for his good services in France. Hackthorpe was sold by the Stricklands to the Lowthers, and it is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale. The old hall is now used as a farm-house.

The village of Hackthorpe is a mile and a quarter south-east of Lowther Castle, and five miles south-south-east of Penrith.

MELKINTHORPE.

The rateable value of this township is £364 2s. 5d. The soil here is principally a light loam, with a subsoil of clay and freestone. The township is intersected by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway.

The manor of Melkinthorpe is also part of the marquis fee of the barony of Kendal. It was held in ancient times by a family bearing the local name, one of whom, Galfrid de Melkinthorpe, was constable of Appleby Castle, under Roger Lord Clifford. An inquisition taken in 1309 informs us that Margaret de Ros then held Melkinthorpe, paying five shillings cornage. The manor came afterwards to the Musgraves, then to the Fallowfields, from whom it was brought in marriage to the Dalstons of Acorn Bank, who sold it to Sir John Lowther. It now belongs to the Earl of Lonsdale.

The village of Melkinthorpe is three miles and a half south-south-east of Penrith.

WHALE.

The township of Whale is nearly all included in one farm. Its rateable value is £481 4s. 6d. The manor of Whale was anciently held by a family bearing the local name, from whom it appears to have passed to the Fraunceys family, who paid for wardship 40s. a year, and for cornage 33s. It subsequently came to the Lowthers, and is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale.

The village of Whale is situated near the south end of Lowther Park, five and a half miles south of Penrith.

MORLAND PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Ulburn, on the north-west and west by the parishes of Lowther and Baughton, on the south-west by Ship, on the south by Crosby Ravensworth, on the south-east by St. Lawrence's Appleby, and on the east by St. Michael's Appleby and Kirkby Thore. Limestone is abundant here. The river Elen runs on the eastern side of the parish, while the Leath forms its northern and western limits. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants, and Penrith and Appleby the markets attended. The parish comprises the townships of Morland, Kings Meaburn, Nowby, Sleggill, Great Strickland, and Little Strickland, with the chapelry of Bolton and Thrimby. Its area is 15,260 acres.

MORLAND.

The area of this township, inclusive of that of Bolton and Sleggill, is 5,449 acres; and its rateable value £1,400 12s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 273; in 1811, 304; in 1821, 372; in 1831, 415; in 1841, 426; and in 1851, 394; who are principally resident in the village of Morland. The township is clean and healthy, and the houses in general well built.

The manor of Morland is included in Kendal barony. Ketel, grandson of Ivo de Tailbois, baron of Kendal, is the first lord of the manor on record. He appears to have granted a portion of the manor to Wetherall Priory, as well as the church and some lands here. Ketel's grandson, William de Lancaster, granted the remainder of the manor of Morland in free marriage with his daughter to Alexander de Windsor, in whose time the wood of Morland was divided between him and the prior of Wetheral. From an inquisition taken in 1351, we learn that the Windsors held this manor by wardship, cornage, and relief. In 1362 William de Windsor obtained a grant of a market and fair at Morland. This privilege, if ever exercised, has long been obsolete. The Windsors continued to hold Morland till the failure of the family in issue male. In 1491 the prior and convent of Wetheral appear to have had twenty-one tenants in Morland, whose total rents amounted to £11 10s. 10³d., and ninety acres of demesne. At the dissolution of the religious houses, that portion of the manor of Morland which belonged to Wetheral Priory was given to the dean and chapter of Carlisle, from whom it has recently been transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. In 1566 the other portion of the manor was held by Robert Bowes and Eleanor his wife, who in the year just named, obtained a license from Queen Elizabeth to alienate Morland to the Musgraves. Four years afterwards we find John Southaik holding a moiety of the manor, with 100 acres of wood which he purchased of Simon Musgrave. In 1591 it appears that Lancelot Backhouse died seised of a moiety of the manor of Morland, and also of the wood and underwood commonly called Morland wood, containing fifty acres, which he held by feoffment from John Southaik, Esq. He also possessed other lands here. A survey of the manor was made in January, 1649, when it was found that the free rents amounted to £2 19s.; the assize from copyholders at Michaelmas and St. Thomas' Day, £14 13s. 1d.; mill moultier rent, £1; pension for the parson at Lowther, £1 6s. 8d.; fines, royalties, &c., £8 3s. 2d. The same survey supplies us with the following memoranda relating to the manor:—The tenants are obliged to perform suit and service to the lord's courts. The copyhold customary tenants within the manor hold their lands and tenements by copy of court roll to them and their heirs for ever, according to the customs of the manor. The widows within the manor after the death of their husbands have a right to one moiety of all customary estates which their husbands held seised of. All customary tenants in the manor, upon descents or alienations, pay to the lord three years old rent as a fine certain. That strangers, such as are not tenants, pay to the lord for a fine sometimes five years old rent and sometimes seven years. The tenants within the manor have usually had by custom necessary timber out of Morland Wood for the repair of their ancient houses and barns. The lord of the manor of Morland, his tenants, servants, and freeholders, are free from tolls, and possess many other privileges in accordance with the provisions of a charter granted in the 5th Henry VIII. The land-owners are F. B. Atkinson, Esq.; Robert Addison, Esq.; Rev. W. Rowley, and a number of small proprietors.

Morland Hall, now occupied as a farm-house, is on the north-east side of the village. A dilapidated old building, called Morland Old Hall, is a little north of the village.

The village of Morland, which is large and well built, occupies a romantic situation on the banks of a small rivulet, seven miles north-north-east of Shap, and about the same distance, west-by-north, of Appleby. In the village is a branch of the Carlisle savings bank, and a flourishing benefit society.

Atkinson of Rampsbeck and Morland.

This family inherits at Temple Sowerby, by direct descent from William Atkinson, who, with his mother, is included in a lease for 999 years, granted in the 18th Elizabeth (1576) by the then lords of the manor, on the compromise of suits at York, which had originated out of questions on the tenures of the landowners of Temple Sowerby, which manor had formerly belonged to the Templars, and to the Knights of St. John. The great-grandfather of the present head of the family,

MATTHEW ATKINSON, of Temple Sowerby, had two sons. The younger son, Richard Atkinson, born in 1738, a merchant of London, and admitted to the freedom of the Goldsmiths' Company, who sat in parliament for Romney, and was senior alderman present at the Mansion House during the attack on the bank, in Lord George Gordon's riots, after Keenett, the lord mayor, had absconded, and who died unmarried in 1785. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

GEORGE ATKINSON, Esq., born 16th August, 1780, who was receiver-general for Cumberland and Westmoreland. He married, 7th January, 1758, Bridget, daughter and heiress of Michael Maughan, Esq., of Wolsingham, and Dorothy, his wife, co heiress of George Lowtham, Esq., of Staffield, and died October, 1811, having had, with other children, who died in infancy,

- i. Michael, of Mount Maehal, Kent and London, died 1829.
- ii. GEORGE, of whom presently.
- iii. Richard, died unmarried, 1793.
- iv. Matthew, of Carr Hill, near Newcastle-upon-Tyne, died 1829.
- v. John, died unmarried, 1798.
1. Dorothy, married to N. Clayton, Esq., of Chester, Northumberland.
- ii. Bridget, married to H. Tulip, Esq., of Brunton, Northumberland, and died 1850.
- iii. Jane, of Temple Sowerby.

The second surviving son,

GEORGE ATKINSON, Esq., of Morland, called also of Lee, in Kent, born 17th September, 1764, was secretary at Jamaica, and aided to Lord Balcarras when governor of that island, and afterwards agent-general for that colony in England. He married 30th July, 1794, Susan Mackenzie Dunkley, of Clarendon, Jamaica, and died 11th May, 1814, having been, by his wife (died February, 1830),

- i. George, born June 6th, 1795, died unmarried, 1849.
- ii. Thomas, born September 11th, 1800, captain 13th Light Dragoons, died unmarried, 1848.
- iii. FRANCIS BARING, now of Rampsbeck Lodge and Morland.
- iv. William, in holy orders, rector of Gateshead Fell, co. Durham, and hon. canon of Durham, born June 13th, 1809, married Jane Elizabeth, daughter of William Clarke, Esq., of Belford Hall, co. Northumberland, and has issue.
- v. Richard, born August 5th, 1813, married Catherine, daughter of the Rev. J. Landon, of Aberford.
- i. Bridget, married to Robert Robertson, Esq., of Auchlecks, co. Perth, and Memlands, Devon.
- ii. Cary, married to Alexander Turnbull, Esq., British Consul at Marseilles.
- iii. Jane, married to Edward Johnson, Esq., of Newcastle-on-Tyne.
- iv. Harriet Eliza, married to Alexander Adair, Esq., of Heather-ton Park, Somerset.

Mr. Atkinson was succeeded by his third son,

FRANCIS BARING ATKINSON, Esq., of Rampsbeck Lodge, co. Cumberland, and Morland co. Westmoreland, born Dec. 30th, 1805; married first in December, 1831, Mary Anne, daughter of Sir John Stoddart, Knt., chief justice of Malta, which lady deceased in November the following year. He married secondly, August 3rd, 1837, Ellen Francis, daughter of John Hime, Esq., of Edgbaston, son of John, who was son of the late Hime of Whitfield, a branch of HIME (or HUME) of MINEWELLY, and by her has issue,

- i. GEORGE, born November 24th, 1838.
- ii. Francis Hime, born March 2nd, 1840.
- iii. Thomas, born August 2nd, 1841.
- iv. William, twins, born October 1st, 1844.
- v. Thomas, twins, born October 1st, 1844.
- vi. Alexander Henry, born August 16th, 1840.
- vii. Robert Septimus, born February 15th, 1848.
- viii. Edward, born July 19th, 1855.
- i. Ellen Francis.
- ii. Mary Jane.
- iii. Bridget Harriet.

Mr. Atkinson is a deputy-lieutenant for Cumberland, for which county he was high sheriff in 1853.

Arms.—Gn. an eagle displayed with two heads, arg.: on chief of the second, three martlets of the first.

Crest.—A falcon, wings expanded.

THE CHURCH.

Morland church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a large cruciform structure, standing on a gentle eminence, on the north side of the village, and consists of nave, aisles, transepts, chancel, and centre tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire. The entrance to the church is beneath a low receding arch into the porch, on each side of which are low stone benches. The general appearance of the architecture of the interior marks that period when the Norman changed into the Early English, with the exception of some of the windows which have fallen victims to the debased styles of the last century. The two rows of cylindrical pillars between the nave and the aisle are Norman, most of them having moulded capitals. The chancel arch, which is very much broken, is similar to the others, only the apex is not carried so high above the capital. The windows lighting the body of the church are modern. The transept affords a good specimen of semi-Norman work in its lancet-shaped windows. In the south transept is fixed a white marble monument, to the memory of the late Lieut.-general Markham, erected by his brother officers of the 32nd Regiment. The chancel is lighted on the south side by two windows of four semi-circular-headed lights each, and a similar one at the east end, only the two middle lights rise a little higher. Opposite to the chancel door is a white marble monument, to Stanwix Nevinson of Newby Hall, lord of the manor of Newby, who died in 1772. On the north side is a low arch, supported on moulded imposts between the chancel and the chapel, now belonging to the Earl of Lonsdale; across this and on the opposite side, against the wall, are some old oak railings, ornamented with grotesque heads of kings, bishops, monks, cherubims, &c. In the vestry is part of an old brass plate, which formerly belonged to some monument in the church. Engraved on one side is what appears to be a knight and his son; the larger figure is nearly all cut away, and also the inscription at the bottom, the only part of which now remaining is "orate pro an . . . et Sybille . . . On the reverse side of this brass, in black letter characters, is the following inscription:—

"John Blythe lyved here yrear of this church by the Space of xxxv years, xiii dayes, and departed this lyfe the xvi day of January, in the year of our Lord God, 1541, on whose soule Jesu have mercy. Amen."

There are also monuments to the memories of the Rev. Edward Backhouse, the Rev. John Jackson, Robert Kendal, William Dobson, Mary, widow of Captain Kilner, and Elizabeth, wife of Stanwix Nevinson. At the west end of the church there is a gallery for the use of the choir. The south aisle of the church formerly belonged to Thrimby Grange, but was given to the parishioners by Henry Viscount Lonsdale. Dalston porch, the small aisle north of the chancel, belonged to Great Strickland Hall. The church was given by Ketel, grandson of Ivo de Tailbois, to the abbey of St. Mary at York for the support of the priory of Wetheral. On the suppression of the monastic institutions the advowson was given to the dean and chapter of Carlisle, from whom it has passed to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in whom the patronage is at present vested.

The living is valued in the King's Book at £11 18s. 1½d., and was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty as of the clear yearly value of £45. At the enclosure of the commons, about the latter end of the last century, land was given in lieu of the tithes of the townships of Morland, Bolton, Great Stickland, Slegill, and Thrimby, and the tithes of the other townships have since been commuted for a yearly rent charge. The present value of the living is about £150 a year. The parish registers commence in 1638.

RECTORS.—Gilbert; Walter; Thomas.

VICARS.—Richard de Agneta, 1290; Michael —, 1334; John de Warwyke, 1310; Henry de Billington, 1316; Henry —, 1332; Henry de Appleby, 1334; Richard de Haverington, 1334; John Murrays, 1362; William de Laysingby, 1363; John Bray, 1368; John Richemont, 1424; Alexander Hall, 1513; John Blythe, died 1562; George Neville, 1562; Thomas Warwick, 1567; William Hall, 1624; Piercy Burton, 1600; John Hutchinson, 1668; Michael Hudson, 1679; William Atkinson, 1690; James Rickerby, 1720; John Brown, 1743; Daniel Brocklebank, 1757; John Jackson, 1773; William Monkhouse, 1811; William Rice Markham, 1828.

The Wesleyan Methodists and the Society of Friends have places of worship here; to the latter a burial ground is attached.

In Catholic times a chapel dedicated to the Blessed Virgin appears to have stood near the Lyvennet, about half way between Morland and King's Meaburn, at a place now called Chapel Garth, but no remains of it are now visible. In 1424 there was a dispute between the vicar of Morland and the prior of Wetheral, concerning the oblations in the chapel, and half an acre of land lying upon Little Aynesbergh, which was referred to the arbitration of the abbot of St. Mary at York, who awarded the same to the prior.

CHARITIES.

School.—The school of Morland possesses an endowment of £19 a year, arising from land given by the dean and chapter of Carlisle, in lieu of the wood with which, as lords of the manor of Morland, they were bound to provide the tenants. The school is attended by about fifty children, who pay from one to seven shillings each per quarter; should the total income of the school from the endowment and the school fees fall short of £80 a year, the deficiency is made up by the vicar, and paid to the master. A female and infant school in the village is partly supported by Mrs. Markham.

Atkinson's Charity.—Mr. Atkinson of Low Hall bequeathed the sum of £20, to be employed for ever as a poor stock, and the interest thereof to be distributed yearly, in Morland Church, to twelve of the most needy widows, or other aged persons, within the township of Morland. This legacy, with the addition of a few pounds more, given by some unknown persons, was laid out in the purchase of several parcels of land in the township of Morland, the rent of which, amounting to about £3 10s. a year, is distributed as directed. For the other charities of the parish see the respective townships.

A library of 300 volumes and a reading room have been established here by the vicar.

KING'S MEABURN.

The area of this township is 2,381 acres, and its rateable value is £1,184. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 178; in 1811, 168; in 1821, 176; in 1831, 203; in 1841, 200; and in 1861, 216; principally resident in the village of King's Meaburn. The soil here is loamy, with a subsoil of clay and limestone.

The manor of King's Meaburn derived its name from its being held by the crown on the forfeiture of Sir Hugh de Morville, and was so named to distinguish it from Mauld's Meaburn, the other moiety of the ancient manor of Meaburn. This manor was granted, with the other portions of the barony of Westmoreland, to Robert de Veteripont by King John, and has descended with that barony, Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., being the present lord. The landowners are Robert Addison, Esq., Robert J. Addison, Esq., Robert Burra, Esq., Rev. W. Airey, Robert Addison, Esq., and several small proprietors. Sir Hugh de Morville gave to the priory of Carlisle thirty-two acres in Milburne Field, in this township, with the meadow at the head of two corn lands, and common of pasture for the cattle of their men. The priory of Wetheral also had some lands here, granted to it by John de Ravensby.

The village of King's Meaburn is pleasantly situated on the east bank of the Lyvennet rivulet, about two miles east-by-south of Morland. Here is a school, a small neat building, erected and endowed by subscription in 1831. The income from the endowment is £8 10s. a year, which, with the pence of the children, supports the school.

CHARITIES.

Addison's Charity.—The sum of £15 is said to have been left by Nanny Addison, the interest thereof to be distributed amongst the poor of the township not receiving parish relief.

Donor unknown.—This township also possesses the sum of £3, the interest of which is given to the poor.

The Lyvennet rivulet separates this township from that of Morland.

NEWBY.

In 1801 Newby contained 253 inhabitants; in 1811, 298; in 1821, 338; in 1831, 300; in 1841, 284; and in 1851, 279. The area of the township is 2,857 acres, and its rateable value £2,350. The soil here varies considerably, some is a strong loam, with a clayey subsoil, while other parts are a rocky limestone. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants. There is a thin seam of coal here, formerly worked for lime burning.

The manor of Newby, or Newby Stones, as it is sometimes called, does not appear to have been comprised in Westmoreland barony. It seems to have been held by a family who bore the name of De Newby, but we possess no information respecting them. In 1518-19, Richard Vernon, of Nether Haddon, Derbyshire, occurs as holding of the king, in capite, sixteen messuages and 300 acres of land, in Newby. The Nevinsons of Newby are first mentioned in 1556-7; they continued to hold the manor for several generations; but it came ultimately to the Lowthers, the Earl of Lonsdale being the present lord; besides whom Matthew Betham, Esq., Rev. Mr. Courtney, Miss Straughan, and others, are the landowners. Newby Hall, the residence of the Nevinsons, is an ancient structure, with the arms of the family (three eagles, displayed with a chevron azure, on a shield argent) sculptured in stone over the door.

The village of Newby is five miles north-by-east of Shap. There is a Wesleyan chapel here, erected in 1845.

Towcett is a small hamlet in this township, about three miles south-west of Newby.

The Society of Friends have a burial ground here.

There is a corn-mill on the Newby Beck.

SLEAGILL.

The area of Sleagill is included with those of Morland and Bolton townships; its rateable value is £779 12s. 4d. The population in 1801, was 114; in 1811, 138; in 1821, 157; in 1831, 184; in 1841, 153; and in 1851, 123. The soil here is loamy.

The manor of Sleagill seems to have been anciently included in that of Newby, and in the reign of Edward II. is described as "Sleagill, in the hamlet of Newby." It forms part of the barony of Kendal. Sleagill was formerly held by a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed, by grant, to the Stailes. In the reign of Charles I. William Fayer occurs as holding some messuages and tenements in Sleagill, which were held of the king as of his manor of Kendal, called the marquis fee, by knights' service. The Blenkinsops of Helbeck seem to have had considerable property here.

In 1670, William Mawson, with the consent of the dean and chapter of Carlisle, gave a lease of the tithes of Sleagill to the vicarage of Penrith. The manor is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale. The landowners are the Rev. Edward Salkeld, John Thwaites, Esq., Thomas Buck, Esq., Robert Salkeld, Esq., Miss M. Braithwaite, and others.

The village of Sleagill is seven miles west-by-south of Appleby. There is a school here, erected in 1858, at the sole expense of Miss Braithwaite, of Low Mill Flat, in this township, who also supplies the children with books and other school requisites. There is also a school in the village for girls and infants.

CHARITIES.

Robinson's Charity.—Christopher Robinson, by will, dated March 22nd, 1750, left two closes in the parish of Crosby Ravensworth, upon trust that the rents should be distributed annually among the poor of Sleagill. The income of this charity now amounts to £6 a year, which, with £9 added by Miss Braithwaite, is given to the poor of the township.

Lord Wharton's Bible Charity.—Five copies of the Bible, bound up with the Common Prayer, are received annually from the trustees of Lord Wharton's Charity, for poor children of Sleagill.

GREAT STRICKLAND.

The area of this township is 2,265 acres, and its rateable value £1,517. In 1811 it comprised 211 inhabitants; in 1811, 241; in 1821, 246; in 1831, 245; in 1841, 277; and in 1851, 345, who reside principally in the village. The township is clean and healthy, and many of the inhabitants are remarkable for their longevity. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township.

Great and Little Strickland form one manor, and from it the Stricklands ofSizergh, who resided here for many generations, derive their name. About the time of Henry VI. a family of the name of Fallowfield became possessed of Strickland, but whether by marriage, purchase, or grant, we are not informed. In the reign of James I. Richard Fallowfield, Esq., of Strickland Hall, married Helen, daughter of Sir Christopher Lowther, Knt., and by her had a daughter and heiress, who became the wife of John Dalston, Esq., of Acorn Bank. Christopher, son of this John Dalston, sold Great Strickland to Sir John Lowther, from whom it has descended to the Earl of Lonsdale, who is also the principal landowner; but there are many resident yeomen.

The village of Great Strickland is about six miles south-south-east of Penrith. Here is an old Quakers' chapel, with burial ground attached. A school was erected here in 1790, with money belonging to the township. In 1848 a handsome new school, with teacher's residence, was built by Mrs. Sarah Plummer, at a cost of £500. The same lady also endowed it with an estate, which now produces £90 a year. The average attendance is forty-five. The girls' school has an endowment of £4 15s. 2d.

CHARITIES.

Poor's Land.—This township possesses some land in Morland, which has been purchased for £22, and the rent is distributed with Stephenson's Charity, as hereafter described.

Fletcher's Charity.—William Fletcher, by will, dated December 1st, 1756, left £10, to be applied for buying books, or paying for the education of poor children. (See Stephenson's Charity.)

Stephenson's Charity.—William Stephenson, by will, dated 23rd March, 1797, left £20 on trust, the interest to be applied in putting to school poor children; and should there be any surplus, he directed it to be given to the poor of the township. Of this legacy £10 was expended in the purchase of the poor's land as above; and the remainder was laid out, together with £10 left by William Fletcher as before-mentioned; and £30 borrowed from a fund belonging to the township, called the Bull Stock, making in the whole £40, in the purchase of land, which, with the poor's land, produces about £4 6s. 6d. a year, out of which 17s. is paid yearly as the interest of £22 7s. 6d., being the money advanced by the township for the purchase. Out of the remainder, £1 is paid towards the education of poor children, as the interest of William Stephenson's money; and the residue is divided among poor people at Christmas.

There is a corn-mill on the river Leeth, in this township, the property of the lord of the manor.

Strickland House is the residence of Thomas Fallowfield Longrigg, Esq.

BOLTON CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry comprises no dependant townships. Its area is included in the townships of Morland and Sleagill; its rateable value is £2,157 12s. 11d. The population in 1801 was 324; in 1811, 365; in 1821, 445; in 1831, 391; in 1841, 388; and in 1851, 384. The soil here is principally a strong clay.

The first recorded possessor of Bolton is Ralph Baron of Greystoke, who, as we learn from an inquisition taken in 1314, held at that time Dufton, Bolton, Brampton, and Yanwath. In 1326 the Derwentwaters occur as holding Bolton under the Greystokes. The next mesne tenants mentioned are the Ratcliffs, who held of the Greystokes as the Greystokes held of the Cliffords. The manor was subsequently purchased by the Fletchers of Hutton, and is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale, the heirs of the late Richard Tinkler, Esq.; John Dent, Esq.; Robert Harrison, Esq.; Ralph Bird, Esq.; Robert Addison, Esq.; William Brougham, Esq.; B. C. Caton, Esq.; and others.

The village of Bolton is situated on the west bank of the Eden, four miles north-west-by-north of Appleby. In ancient times its name was written Boelthum, Boeltum, Bovelthum, and Botheltum.

THE CHAPEL.

Bolton chapel, dedicated to All Saints, is a low antique building, situated near the centre of the village. It consists of nave and chancel, with a small belfry, containing two bells. The east window is filled with stained glass, on which the Crucifixion and the Four Evangelists are represented. The chapel underwent considerable repairs about twelve years ago; it will accommodate 160 persons. In ancient times this chapel was worth only £4 10s. a year; viz., £3 paid by the vicar of Morland, and thirty shillings arising "from the produce of the yard, surplice fees, and the tithes of garths, chickens, eggs, ducks, hemp, and flax in the lordship of Bolton;" but since 1753 it has been augmented with £1,000, of which £800 was received from Queen Anne's Bounty in 1754, 1761, and 1785, and £200 was given by the Countess Dowager Gower. Two estates were purchased in Bolton with the £800 named above, the remainder was expended in the purchase of the Seaside estate at Orton. The Derwentwater family had a chantry in this chapel. On the enclosure of the common this township was exonerated from all tithes. The living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the vicar of Morland, and is worth about £80 a year.

There is a small parsonage house; but the incumbent resides at Longmarton.

The Wesleyans erected a chapel here in 1818. It was afterwards occupied by the Wesleyan Association, and being purchased by John Dent, Esq., in 1840, is now designated the United Wesleyan Free Church.

CHARITIES.

School.—Bolton school has been endowed with benefactions amounting to £312, the principal of which are £40 left in 1721 by James Hanson; £10 by Elizabeth Hanson, his wife; £40 by Joseph Raiton, in 1762; £50 by William Bowness, in 1762; £50 by Michael Richardson, in 1765; £50 by Nicholas Dent, in 1782; £2, by John Fallowfield, in 1804. The yearly interest of this money amounts to £14, for which thirteen of the poorest children in the township are taught free. The present school is a neat building, erected in 1856, on the site of the old school, at a cost of between £500 and £600, defrayed by the late Richard Tinkler. The average attendance is about sixty children.

Poor Stock and Chapel Stock.—From the parish books we learn that there was, in 1723, an ancient chapel stock, the interest of which amounted annually to 8s. or 10s., and an ancient poor stock, amounting to £15 or £16. £10 was taken from each of these stocks and added to the £200 with which the estate at Scarside was purchased (see chapel); a portion of the proceeds of which are devoted to the repairs of the chapel and to the poor.

Bowness's Charity.—William Bowness, by will, in 1709, left a rent charge of 10s. a year to the poor of the chapelry.

Blamyre's Charity.—John Blamyre, in 1713, left £5, the interest to be given to the poor of Bolton.

In connection with the school there is a library, established in 1854, which now comprises upwards of 200 volumes.

The principal residences in the chapelry are Eden Grove, Captain Tinkler; Crossrigg Hall, Robert Addison, Esq.; Elm House, John Dent, Esq.

Builly Castle, now a farm-house, about a mile and a half west of Appleby, is in this manor. It is supposed to have been erected in the twelfth century, by John Builly, whose daughter and heiress married the first Robert de Veteripont, but it was the property of the Bishop of Carlisle in 1256, as appears by a deed relating to the vicarial tithes of St. Michael's Appleby, executed there in that year. It has since continued to be held by the successive bishops of Carlisle.

About a quarter of a mile east of the village the Eden is crossed by a good iron bridge, erected in 1816.

THRIMBY CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises the townships of Thrimby and Little Strickland.

THRIMBY.

The area of this township is 1,506 acres, and its rateable value is £2,049. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 60; in 1811, 79; in 1821, 62; in 1831, 81; in 1841, 66; and in 1851, 69. The township is intersected by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway.

This manor seem to have been possessed by the Thrimby family at a very early period, some of them occur in the reign of King John. In the reign of his successor, Henry III., John, son of William de Thrimby, gave to the priory of Wetheral certain lands and a grange at Thrimby. The manor came afterwards to the Harringtons, who held it in capite under the Richmond fee of the barony of Kendal. It came subsequently to the Lowthers, and is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale, who is also the principal landowner.

The hamlet of Thrimby is about two miles north-east of Morland.

LITTLE STRICKLAND.

This township contains 772 acres, and its rateable value is £1,044. The population in 1801 was 98; in 1811, 102; in 1821, 115; in 1831, 121; in 1841, 134; and in 1851, 135. For an account of the manor see Great Strickland, page 803. A branch of the Crackenthorpe family appears to have resided at Little Strickland for several generations; and in the reign of Charles II. Thomas Fletcher, Esq., had a good estate here. The Earl of Lonsdale has a corn-mill here on the river Leeth.

The hamlet of Little Strickland is three miles north of Shap.

THE CHAPEL.

Thrimby chapel, situated in this township, was rebuilt in 1814, at the expense of the Earl of Lonsdale and the incumbent, the farmers giving their services in the carting of materials. It is a small unpretending structure. The original chapel was quite deserted, and dilapidated for many years prior to 1681, when Thomas Fletcher left a yearly rent charge of £10 to be paid out of property in Little Strickland, for the benefit of the curate and the schoolmaster, which offices were to be filled by one man, who was to remain unmarried as long as he officiated, unless a dispensation was granted to him by a majority of the trustees. It has also been augmented with £30 by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The vicar of Morland is patron of the perpetual curacy, which has been four times augmented from Queen Anne's Bounty, amounting to £800, one half of which was expended in the purchase of the Stonyhill estate, in Crosby Ravensworth, and the other half remains at interest. The living, in the patronage of the vicar of Morland, is now worth about £80 a year.

CHARITIES.

School.—Little Strickland and Thrimby school possesses an endowment of £5, being half of the £10 bequeathed by Mr. Fletcher, as above-mentioned, to the chapelry. The average number of children in attendance is about twenty.

Fletcher's Charity.—Mary Fletcher, widow of Thomas Fletcher, left by will £10, the interest of which she directed should be distributed yearly amongst the poor of the township.

Cowper's Charity.—Thomas Cowper, in 1799, left the interest of £5 for the use of the poor.

SHAP PARISH.

THE parish of Shap is bounded on the north by those of Morland, Lowther, and Bampton; on the west by Bampton, Barton, and Kendal; on the south by Orton and Crosby Ravensworth; and on the east by Crosby Ravensworth and Morland. It is a mountainous district, about five miles and a half in length and four in breadth, and comprises within its limits several deep and fertile vales, watered by a number of rivulets, the principal feeders of the rivers Lowther and Leeth, and the lake of Haweswater. The manors of Birbeck Fells and Fawcett Forest are partly in this parish. At Thornsap, Rosgill Beck, and Mosdale are excellent slate quarries. For parochial purposes the parish is divided into four constaberies, viz., Shap-with-Keld, Rasat, Tailbert, and Thornsap; Hardendale-with-Wastdale; Mardale-with-Swindale; and Rosgill-with-Wet-Slededale. Its area is 27,779 acres. The population in 1801 was 828; in 1811 795; in 1821, 969; in 1831, 1084; in 1841, 996; and in 1851, 1,009.

SHAP.

The rateable value of this township is £5,642; its area and population are returned with the parish. The soil here is chiefly loam upon a subsoil of limestone and sand. Agriculture is the principal employment of the inhabitants; some, however, are employed in the slate quarries at Thornsap. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township, and has a station, with coal depôts, &c., on the south of the village.

The manor of Shap belonged in ancient times to the Culven, or Curwen family, who held it under the Cliffords, lords of Westmoreland. In the 4th Edward III. (1360-1) Sir Gilbert de Culven, Knt., re-leased to the abbey of Shap all his right in certain lands and tenements in Shap. In 1422 the manor was held jointly by the abbot of Shap and Christopher Curwen; and subsequently the whole manor came into the possession of the abbey, by gift, probably, of the Curvens. On the suppression of the monasteries, the manor was granted to Lord Wharton, and the heirs male of his body, and continued in the possession of the Wharton family till the Duke of Wharton sold it to Robert Lowther, Esq., from whom it has descended to the Earl of Lonsdale, the present proprietor, besides whom Thomas Clarke, Esq.; Adam Potts, Esq.; Thomas Wilkinson, Esq.; James Lewis, Esq.; Walter Parker, Esq.; Major Salmond, and others, are the landowners.

In the deep secluded vale of the Lowther, about a mile west of the town of Shap, are the venerable and time-honoured ruins of Shap Abbey, one of those structures which may be justly regarded as the great landmarks fixed in the history of our country. The abbeys of England stand like monumental pillars in the stream of time, inscribed with the names of her native chivalry and early hierarchy, whose patriotic deeds and works of piety they were raised to witness and perpetuate. The community of Shap formed a branch of the Præmonstratensian order, founded in 1120 at Præmonstratum, in France, by St. Norbert, archbishop of Magdeburg. The members of this institute were also called White Canon, from their habit, which was a white cassock, with a white rochet over it, a long white cloak, and a white cap. They were brought to England shortly after 1120, and first settled at Newhouse, in Lincolnshire. They soon began to increase in numbers, and to enlarge the sphere of their operations. Some of them proceeded to the north of England, and settled at Preston Patrick, where lands were given to them by Thomas, son of Gospatric. From causes with which we are now unacquainted, the community removed from Preston Patrick to Shap, or Hepe, as it was then and long afterwards called, where a church and abbey were erected and dedicated to God, under the invocation of St. Mary Magdalene. The founder endowed the abbey with land and various privileges and immunities, which were considerably augmented by gifts from other persons in various parts of England and Scotland.¹ The abbey was not exempt from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The bishop of the diocese admitted the abbots, who took the customary oath of canonical obedience. Shap Abbey continued to flourish, subject to many vicissitudes, until the period of the change of religion in this country. It escaped dissolution in 1535-6, but four years afterwards was surrendered by Richard Evenwood, the last abbot, who received a pension of £40. The other members of the community and the pensions were as follow:—Hugh Watsonne, Robert Barlande, John Addison, Edward Michael, and Edmund Carter, £6 each; Martin Macrethe, John Dawstone, and Richard Mill, £5 each; John Bell, £5 6s. 8d.; George Ellerston, Anthony Johnson, John Rode, and Ralph Watson, £4 each. The valuation of the abbey at the time of its suppression amounted to £154 7s. 7½d. a year; the community numbered twenty members. The names of those given above are those who were living and in receipt of pensions at the beginning of the reign of Queen Mary, 1553.

The abbey church appears to have been a spacious structure, but the large tower is the only part now standing, the other portions having entirely disappeared. In 1825 extensive foundations of buildings were discovered on the south side of the abbey, near which the pillar of an ancient bridge may be distinguished in the middle of the river. Thomas, son of Gospatric, mentioned above, was buried in Shap Abbey, as were also several of the Clifford family.

In the vicinity of Shap are two of those rude structures to which no certain date can be assigned, and which are therefore usually referred to the primitive times of the Druids. Karl Lofts, the name of one, consists of two parallel lines of unhewn masses of granite, half a mile long by sixty or seventy feet broad. At the south end of the enclosure, about two miles from Shap, there was a circle about forty feet in diameter, consisting of thirteen blocks of granite, the largest seven to eight feet high; but this interesting memorial of bygone days was destroyed in the formation of the Lancaster and Carlisle railway; and it is probable that, in a few years more, what now remains of Karl Lofts will disappear altogether. Many of the stones have already been carried off for building purposes, or some other "base uses." At a place called Gunnerskeld Bottom there is a circle of large stones, supposed to be a sepulchral cairn.

The village of Shap, anciently Hep, or Hepe, extends about a mile along the great high road between Penrith and Kendal, on the western side of the Lancaster and supporting three lepers in the said hospital for ever. The same John de Veteripont gave to the canons of Shap a parcel of his demesne land in the field of Kneek Salcock. Robert de Veteripont, son of John, gave to the said abbey four marks a year out of his rents at Ashburnham, Milneburn. Ralph, son of Adam de Bothelton, gave certain lands at Bolton, as did also Adam, son of William de Derwentwater, Uctred, son of Simon de Bothelton, Henry de Threlkeld and Walter, son of Thomas de Bothelton. The abbey had also possessions at Gargrave in Craven. It had also the appropriated church of Johnstun in Annandale, which was confirmed to them by William, son of Walter de Lindsay. Adam, son of Ughtred, gave lands at High Kuisse. Sir Richard de Askeby, Knt., gave several parcels of land at Ormside. William de Hoff gave to the abbey a message in Appleby. Thomas, son of Henry de Releman, confirmed to the abbey two oxgangs of land in the vill of Appleby, which Norman, his brother, had received from John de Veteripont, for which the abbot and convent were to render to the said Thomas, and his heirs, three barbed arrows, or one penny yearly on the feast of St. Lawrence, and doing for the same foreign service. In 1369 Margaret, widow of Sir Hugh de Lowther, gave all her lands in Westmoreland to Shap Abbey. These lands, after a period of near 400 years came back to the Lowthers, when the abbey possessions were purchased by that family. Besides these and many other grants of land, the abbey had the rectories and advowsons of the churches of Warcop, Bampton, and Shap, and also the manor of Shap, as above stated.

¹ Thomas, son of Gospatric, by charter, gave to God and St. Mary Magdalene and the canons of Preston of the Penens-matres manor, a portion of his lands at Preston, in Kendal, to build a mansion for the said canons, to wit, his whole demesne park there, and also other lands, specifying the respective metes and bounds. He granted to them also as much of his woods as they had a mind to take, and also as much of the bark of such wood as they should cut down without the view of his foresters, and mastage also for their hogs, and the tithes of his pannage, and liberty to grind at his mill there moultier free, whosoever they should come. The same Thomas subsequently granted to the same community, on its removal to Shap, a considerable quantity of land, with pasturage for sixty cows, twenty mares, and 500 sheep, and for five yoke of oxen. He also gave them wood for the abbey, for timber, for fire, hedging, and other necessities. His son, of the same name confirmed these grants, and on his demise his widow gave nine acres of land, in the ville of Hepe, to the abbot and canons. In the 13th King John (1211-12), Robert de Veteripont, being then baron of Westmoreland, confirmed to the abbey of Shap the grant of Shap and also of Renegill, which had been made by Maude, his mother, and Ivo, his brother, and he granted further to the abbey the grange of Milneburn, and the tithes of all his mills in Westmoreland, and of all the removal of beasts in his forest in Westmoreland taken by him or his men. John de Veteripont, son of this Robert, gave the hospital of St. Nicholas, near Appleby, to Shap Abbey, and this grant was confirmed by the Bishop of Carlisle, upon condition of the community of Shap

Carlisle railway, ten miles and a half south-by-east of Penrith, and sixteen miles north-east of Kendal. It contains two inns and about 150 detached houses. In 1687 Philip lord Wharton obtained a charter for a weekly market here on Wednesdays, and three fairs yearly, viz.:—on the 23rd and 24th of April, 1st and 2nd of August, and the 17th and 18th of September, but these fairs have long been discontinued, and the only one worthy of the name is now held here on the 4th of May; there is another on the 28th of September. The market also has become almost obsolete; the old cross, or market house, is now occupied as a school.

THE CHURCH.

Shap church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient edifice, in the Norman style, consisting of nave, aisles, chancel, and low embattled tower containing three bells. The church was restored and repaired in 1829, when a new gallery, containing 100 sittings, was erected. In consequence of a grant having been obtained from the Incorporated Society for Building Churches, &c., these sittings were declared free and unappropriated. There is a curious font standing against one of the pillars at the west end. The families of Hall, Holme, and others, are commemorated by mural monuments. Shap church was rectorial till it was given to the abbey by Thomas, son of Gospatric, when it became a vicarage. The appropriation was confirmed by several bishops of Carlisle, with the exception of the altarage. It is valued in the King's Book at £8 15s. 7½d. Nicolson and Burn tell us "This vicarage being so small, few persons have been willing to be at the expense of institution and induction; but it hath been generally suffered to go in lapse, and supplied by curates under a sequestration. But having received augmentations by the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, it hath since become necessary to have vicars canonically appointed." It has received grants amounting to £1,300 from the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, with whom £900 still remain at four per cent. interest; the remainder, with £200 given by the Countess Dowager Gower, was many years ago laid out in the purchase of two estates, one at Staveley, in this county, and the other in the parish of Crosthwaite, in Cumberland. At the enclosure of the commons in 1820, the vicarial tithes were commuted for an allotment of three-and-a-half acres of land, and the rectorial, which have been long annexed to Lowther rectory, for an allotment of 223 acres. The patronage has descended with the manor, and is at present possessed by the Earl of Lonsdale. The living is now worth about £88 a year.

VICARS.—Walter de Dittton, died 1295; William de Kirkedal, 1295; Thomas de Wynton, 1319; John de Richmond, resigned 1342; John de Langeton, 1342; Alexander English occurred 1514; John Whinfell, died 1574; John Brookbank, 1574; William Langhorn, 1759; James Holme, 1775; J. Rowlandson, 1810; James Simpson, 1857.

The parsonage house is a plain residence, on the south side of the church.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here.

Shap possesses a spacious school, erected in 1838, by the Earl of Lonsdale, who also endowed it with £500, which has since been augmented by the donations of private individuals. The Earl of Lonsdale also pays £20 a year for the free education of twenty-five children. The endowment of the school produces £25 17s. a year. In connexion with this school is one for girls, held in the Old Market Hall, and endowed with £13 a year.

CHARITIES.

Poor's Land.—There is a field called the Poor Hagg, in Wet Sleddale, containing between twenty and thirty acres of rough and wet ground, the rent of which has been for many years applied for charitable purposes among poor householders.

School.—The master of Shap school receives 7s. 6d. annually out of the Poor Hagg just mentioned.

Lord Wharton's Charity.—The vicar of Shap receives annually about twenty Bibles, with tracts on the Catechism, from the trustees of Lord Wharton's Charity. A sermon is preached every third year at Shap as directed by Lord Wharton's will, for which the vicar receives ten shillings.

Holme's Charity.—Gertrude Holme, widow of the Rev. Thomas Holme, of Wellingborough, by will, dated February 20th, 1782, left a number of shares in the Newport Pagnell and Kettering turnpike trust, the produce of which she decided should be divided amongst the poor relations of her husband of the name of Holme, resident in the parish of Shap.

It is traditionally stated in Shap that the ancestors of the Great Washington were natives of this parish.

Egdale is a hamlet near the source of the Lowther, two miles and a half north-west-by-north of Shap. Keld, or Keilde, is an ancient village near the ruined abbey, on the east bank of the Lowther, three quarters of a mile west of Shap. Here are the ruins of a small chapel which serve as a cow-house. The other hamlets are Rasat, two and a half miles west of Shap; Tailbert, two and a half miles west-by-south; and Thornshap, three quarters of a mile south-west.

Thornthwaite was formerly an extensive forest, and belonged successively to the Curwens, Howards, Warwicks, and Hasels, from the latter of whom it was purchased by the Lowthers.

HARDENDALE.

The area and population are returned with the parish; the rateable value is £628 lls. The soil here is generally poor, the greater portion of the township consisting of moor and fells. Hardendale and Wastdale form a joint manor, which formerly belonged to Byland Abbey, in Yorkshire, but by whom it was given to that house we are not informed, though Thomas, son of Gospatric, is generally supposed to have been the donor. On the suppression of the religious houses, the manor was granted by Henry VIII. to Christopher Crackenthorpe, Esq., of Newbiggin, from whom it has descended to the present proprietor, William Crackenthorpe, Esq. The Earl of Lonsdale, Richard Ferguson, and Lady Howard, are the principal landowners.

The hamlet of Hardendale is one mile east of Shap. Dr. John Mills, chaplain in ordinary to Charles II., was born here, and is known for his edition of the Greek Testament.

Wastdale is four miles south-by-west of Shap. Near the foot of Wastdale are Shap Wells.

MARDALE.

For area, population, &c., see the parish returns. The soil here is fertile; but the greater portion of the township is used for grazing purposes.

This township is included in the forest of Thornthwaite, which extends into Shap and Bampton parishes; the Earl of Lonsdale is lord of the manor of Thornthwaite forest. The landowners are William Marshall, Esq., Rev. Thomas Holme, and John Holme, Esq. There is no village or hamlet in the township, the houses being all detached.

THE CHAPEL.

Mardale chapel occupies a most picturesque situation, one mile south of the head of Haweswater, and seven miles south-west-by-west of Shap. It is a small edifice, surrounded by beautiful old yew trees, and in the back ground are the "everlasting hills." The living has been augmented with £800 from Queen Anne's Bounty, and £75 given by different individuals. Part of the money was expended in the purchase of two small estates at Kentmere and Rosgill, now let for £24 a year. The income is now about £100 a year. The registers commence in 1684. The vicar of Shap is patron. All the rites of the Church of England, with the exception of marriage, are performed here.

INCUMBENTS.—Richard Holme was minister here from 1749 till 1799; John Bowstead, from 1799 to 1839; John Rowlandson, vicar of Shap, attended from 1844 till 1853, when the Rev. John Holme, the present incumbent, was inducted.

There is no parsonage. The present incumbent has erected a handsome house here at a cost of £1,200, exclusive of the site. It stands at the foot of Castle Crag, and commands extensive views of the surrounding country.

There is a free school at Measand in this chapelry, but in the parish of Bampton.

Chapel Hill is the residence of John Holme, Esq., whose ancestors are said to have resided in this township since the time of the Norman conquest.

A pleasure fair is held here annually on Whit-Monday.

Greenhead is a hamlet in this township, about a mile and a half south of Haweswater.

ROSGILL.

The rateable value of this township, inclusive of Mardale and Swindale, is £294; its area and population, not having as yet been returned separately, are included in the parish returns.

The manor of Rosgill was anciently held by a family bearing the local name, one of whom, John de Rosgill, occurs as a witness to a grant of lands at Thrimby in the reign of Henry III. In the reign of Richard II. it was brought in marriage to the Salkelds of Corby Castle, who continued possessors till the 7th Charles I. (1631-2), when Dorothy, sister of Richard Salkeld, brought it in marriage to the Christians of Unerigg, in Cumberland, by whom it was afterwards sold to the Lowthers; the Earl of Lonsdale is the present lord, and the principal landowner.

The village of Rosgill is situated on the east bank of the Lowther, two and a half miles north-west of Shap.

SWINDALE.

This township comprises the narrow vale of the same name, and contains only a few dispersed houses, about four and a half miles south-west of Shap. It forms part of the Earl of Lonsdale's manor of Thornthwaite; the landowners are the Rev. Thomas Sewell, Joseph Abbott, John Fell, Rev. Mr. Tinkler, and others.

THE CHAPEL.

Swindale chapel is a small old building, the west end of which serves as a school. It was erected in 1749, and was repaired and newly roofed in 1855. The living has received several augmentations from Queen Anne's Bounty, with part of which land was purchased in 1822, and the remainder (£800) is still at interest in the Bounty Office : it is now worth £64 a year, besides a house and nineteen acres of land. The vicar of Shap is patron ; and the Rev. Thomas Sewell the present incumbent.

CHARITY.

The School.—Thomas Baxter, by will, dated 1703, endowed Swindale school with lands for the gratuitous education of the children of the township. The lands were subsequently conveyed to the Earl of Lonsdale, subject to a yearly rent-charge of £25, to be paid to the schoolmaster.

Mosdale, or Mosedale, is a bleak mountainous region, between Swindale and Wet Sleddale, where there is a slate quarry, four miles south-west of Shap.

WETSLEDDALE.

Wetsleddale, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Shap, is a narrow dale, surrounded by lofty mountains, and extends from two to four miles south-south-west of Shap. It is said to derive its name from the frequency of wet weather here. The manorial rights are possessed by the Earl of Lonsdale, besides whom there are several small landowners.

BARONY OF KENDAL

THE Barony of Kendal comprises the whole of Kendal and Lonsdale Wards, with several manors in the other divisions of the county, and that part of Lancashire adjoining Westmoreland. It was given by William the Conqueror to

IVAN DE TAILLOIS, brother of Fulk Earl of Anjou, who thus became first baron of Kendal. Ivan de Taillois gave the church of Kirkby Stephen and all the churches in his barony to the abbey of St. Mary at York. By his wife Elgiva, daughter of our Saxon monarch Ethelred, he had a son,

EILDRED, or ETHELRED, second baron of Kendal, who was succeeded by his son,

KETEL, third baron of Kendal. This baron married Christiana, as appears by his grant of Morland to the abbey of St. Mary at York, to which she was a witness. Ketel had three sons, Gilbert, Orme, and William, but which of the two former was the eldest is a subject of dispute. All the pedigrees of the Curwen family (which derives its descent from Orme) make Orme the eldest; but Nicolson and Burn will not concede this, in consequence of the inheritance of the barony of Kendal having descended to Gilbert. Ketel received from William de Meschines a grant of Workington, Salter, Kelton, and Stockhouse; and gave the parish church of Workington, with two curacies of land and a mill there, to the abbey of St. Mary at York. He was succeeded by his son,

GILBERT, who thus became fourth baron of Kendal, whose son,

WILLIAM DE TAILLOIS, the fifth baron, according to Dugdale, from being governor of Lancaster Castle, assumed the surname of Lancaster. This William was a great benefactor to many religious houses, particularly to St. Bees, Furness, Cockersand; St. Leonard's, near Kendal; and others. He also occurs as founder of Conishead Priory. He married Gundred, daughter of William Earl Warrenne, and by her had issue,

WILLIAM DE LANCASTER, the second. This baron filled the office of steward to Henry II. From an exchequer roll we learn that he gave thirty marks to the king for permission to have a duel with Gospatric, son of Orme, his relative. He married Helwise de Stuteville, by whom he had an only daughter, Helwise, who became the wife of Gilbert, son of Roger Fitz-Reinfred. To this Gilbert, Richard I., in 1189-90, granted the whole forest of Westmoreland and of Kendal and of Furness, with many other privileges, inclusive of a weekly market at Kendal on Saturday. By another grant from the same king he obtained lands in Levens, Farleton, Deton, Preston, Holme, Barton, Henecaster, and Lupton, with the fishery belonging to the said lands; and all other liberties and privileges. In his turn Gilbert granted lands in Holme, Preston, and Hutton, to Thomas, son of Gospatric. He took part with the barons against King John, and, in consequence, had to pay a fine of 12,000 marks to obtain his pardon. Gilbert died in 1719-20, leaving, besides three daughters, a son and successor,

WILLIAM DE LANCASTER, the third who took the name of De Lancaster, together with the inheritance, from his mother. This baron was justice itinerant for Cumberland in 1225-6, and was sheriff of Lancashire from 1233-4 to 1245-6. He confirmed the grant made by his father to Thomas, son of Gospatric; he also occurs as a benefactor to Furness Abbey. In 1226-7 there was a contest between Roger de Veteripont, sheriff of the county, and this William de Lancaster, concerning suit being made to the county court by the latter and his tenants; and by a fine levied that year, William de Lancaster granted suits for his lands to the county. By his will he directed his body to be buried in the choir of the abbey church at Furness, near to the tomb of William, his grandfather. By his wife, Agnes de Brus, he had no issue, and consequently, on his demise, his estates passed to his two sisters, Helwise and Alice, the former of whom received for her share what was afterwards called the Marquis and Lumley Fee, and the latter what was subsequently known as the Richmond Fee. We shall first notice

The Richmond Fee.

ALICE, sister of the last William de Lancaster, just mentioned, was married to William de Lindsey, and brought with her in marriage one moiety of the barony of Kendal. They had a son,

WALTER DE LYNDESAY, who died in the 50th Henry III., at which time he held, as found by inquisition, of the king in capite, a moiety of Kirkby in Kendal. He had a son and heir,

WILLIAM DE LYNDESAIE, on whose death, in the 2nd Edward I., the inquisition finds that he died "seised of the forest of Gresmere, Langden, Troutbeck Forest, Applethwaite, Wynander-mere, Ecclesall, Skandall, Lyth, Crosthwayte, Stirklund Ketell, Kirkeby in Kendal, Helsington, Kent Fishery, and Hoton in the Hay." This William had a son and heir,

WILLIAM DE LYNDESEY, concerning whom nothing is related, except that he died without issue male, having only a daughter and heir,

CHRISTIAN DE LYNDESEY, who was married to Ingelram de Guisnes, lord of Coucy, in France. They had a son William, born in France, who after his father's death inherited his estate there. They had a second son, Ingelram, born in England, who died without issue; and his brother William being an alien, and thereby incapable to inherit, the estate escheated to the crown. The aforesaid elder brother, William, had two sons, Ingelram, the elder, and William, both of them born in France. Ingelram enjoyed the paternal estate there; and the king granted to William, the younger brother, his grandmother Christian's estate in England, which William also died without issue, and the estate again escheated to the crown. After which, the said king, Edward III., in 1347, granted the same to John de Coupland (of Coupland, in the county of Northumberland), and Joan his wife during their lives. We have observed above that the last William had an elder brother, Ingelram, who inherited the Coucy estate in France. This Ingelram had a son, Ingelram, lord of Coucy, who married Isabel, daughter of Edward III.; and the king granted them the reversion of the English estate, after the death of John de Coupland, and Joan his wife, to them and the heirs of their body; except the reversion of the moiety of the manor of Ulverston, which he gave to the abbey of Furness. Ingelram de Coucy and Isabel his wife, daughter of Edward III., had a daughter, Philippa, married to Robert de Vere, earl of Oxford and duke of Ireland, from whom, in the reign of Richard II., she was divorced for lack of children. She died in 1411-12, and by an inquisition taken in that year it was found that Philippa, who had been the wife of Robert de Vere, late duke of Ireland, died seized of a moiety of the manor of Kirby in Kendal. And the same having reverted again to the crown for want of heirs, Henry IV. granted the moiety of the barony to his third son, John Duke of Bedford; and by an inquisition of knights' fees in Westmoreland, taken at Appleby in 1427-8, it was found that John Duke of Bedford, then held of the king, in capite, a moiety of the manor of Kirby in Kendal by the service of one knight's fee, and that the same lately belonged to dame Philippa, duchess of Ireland. The said John Duke of Bedford died in 1435-6, as appears by the inquisition after his death. Henry VI., in 1443-4, granted this moiety of the barony to John de Beaufort, duke of Somerset and of Kendal, and his heirs male, with remainder to the crown. This John Duke of Somerset was son of John de Beaufort, earl of Somerset; son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster; son of King Edward III. The Duke of Somerset died in the same year in which his grant was made, without issue male, and the barony reverted to the crown. The king thereupon granted the same by letters patent to Margaret, daughter and heir of the said John Duke of Somerset, by the name of Margaret Countess of Richmond, she having been the wife of Edmund, late earl of Richmond, and being then (by her second marriage), wife of Henry Stafford, son of Humphrey, late duke of Buckingham. The grant was to her and the said Henry; and there is a private act of Parliament, 3rd Henry VII., c. 2., confirming to her the said grant. This grant seems to have been the reason why this moiety of the manor of Kendal received the name of the Richmond Fee, which it still retains. In 1491-2 she caused a rental to be made of the said moiety, of which the particulars were as follow:—"Gresmere, £11 1s. 11d.; Langden, £6; Loughbrigg, £2 3s. 9d.; Amelside, £20 14s. 8d.; Troutbeck, £4 4s. 1d.; Applethwait, £30 4s.; Undermilnbeck, £8 10s. 6d.; Crosthwait, £10 7s. 6d.; Hutton, £17 4s. 6d.; Stirkland Ketell, £1 8s. 1d.; Forsthwait, £1 6s. 8d.; Fishery of Kent, £1; Burgence of Kendal, £2 2s. 8d.; Toll of Kendal, £4 10s.; Whittington, £6; Casterton, £3 10s.; Thoroton, £12 12s. 1d.; Whiersdale, £49 12s. 1d.; Scoforth, £6 1s.; the office of land serjeant, £10 6s. 7d.; Warton, £60 3s. 9d.; Kneton and Middleton, £6 13s. 4d. Fees and pensions paid forth of the same:—To the steward, £5; to the land serjeant, £10; fees to the foresters of Troutbeck, £2 3s.; to Reginald Bray, Knt., general receiver, £4 11s.; to Richard Berwick, bow-bearer of Troutbeck, £3 1s. 6d.; unto St. Mary Holme, £6." The aforesaid Margaret Countess of Richmond was mother to King Henry VII.; and from her this Richmond Fee came again to the crown. Henry VIII., in 1531-2, granted the moiety to his natural son, Henry Duke of Richmond and Somerset, who, dying without issue, it reverted the eighth time to the crown. The Marquis Fee escheated not long after, first by attainder, and afterwards for want of heirs of the last grantee; both have continued in the crown ever since, and have commonly passed together by temporary grants, as will afterwards appear.

The Marquis Fee.

HELWISE, the eldest daughter of the last William de Lancaster, became the wife of Peter de Brus, or Bruce, to whom she bore, besides four daughters, a son and heir,

PETER DE BRUS, who after his mother's decease, succeeded to a moiety of the barony of Kendal. This Peter confirmed to the inhabitants of Kendal all the liberties and free customs which they had received from his uncle, William de Lancaster. He died in 1278-9, when his possessions passed to his four sisters, Margaret, Agnes, Lucy, and Laderina. Margaret, the eldest, the wife of Robert de Ross, received as her share Kendal Castle, and "whatsoever belonged to the said Peter in demesnes, villages, rents, and services of free men and others, except the vill of Kenmere, which was assigned to Laderina." Agnes, the second sister, had no share in Westmoreland. Lucy, the third sister, had that which is now called the Lumley Fee. Laderine, the fourth, had Kenmere, as we have just mentioned. Robert de Ross died in 1273-4, leaving by his wife, Margaret, above-mentioned, a son and heir,

WILLIAM DE ROOS, who appears to have died before his mother, leaving a son,

WILLIAM DE ROOS, who in 1328 obtained a charter for a market at Staveley. He was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS DE ROOS, who died in 1390-91. This Thomas had a son, John de Roos, who died before his father, leaving an infant daughter, who subsequently became the wife of WILLIAM DEL PARR, Knt., but died before him. Sir William del Parr died in 1404-5, seized of the fourth part of Kirby Kendal, which was held by the service of one knight's fee. He was succeeded by his son and heir,

JOHN PARR, Knt., who died in 1407-8. He was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS PARR, Knt., who by an inquisition taken in 1427-8 appears to have held one-fourth part of the manor of Kirby in Kendal by the service of the fourth part of one knight's fee. This Thomas died in 1464-5, leaving issue,

1. WILLIAM, his successor.

II. John, to whom Edward IV. granted the sheriffwick of Westmoreland during his life. Henry Lord Clifford being then deprived of his honours and estate in consequence of his father's attachment to the house of Lancaster, the same king also granted to John Parre, and his brother William, all the lands of Sir Henry Bellingham, of Burneshead, who was attainted on the like account.

Sir WILLIAM PARR, Knt., son and heir of Sir THOMAS, married Elizabeth, one of the three sisters and co-heirs of Henry Lord Fitz-Hugh. He was made a Knight of the Garter by Edward IV., and represented Westmoreland in parliament in 1466 and 1472. The date of his decease is not known, but he left besides a son William, his heir.

Sir THOMAS PARR, Knt., brother of the wards, and controller to Henry VIII., from whom he received a grant of free warren in his manor of Kendal, and in all his lands in the county of Westmoreland. He married Maude, daughter and co-heir of Sir Thomas Green, by whom he had a son and two daughters. The elder daughter, Katherine, was married first to Edward Borough, or Burgh; secondly, to John Neville, Lord Latimer; thirdly, to King Henry VIII., being his sixth wife; and, lastly, to Thomas Lord Seymour of Dudley, one of the uncles of Edward VI. She died in 1548. The other daughter, Anne, became the wife of William Herbert, earl of Pembroke. Sir Thomas Parr died in 1517-18, and was buried in the church of the Black Friars, in London. His wife, Maude, survived till 1531-2. He was succeeded by his son,

WILLIAM PARR, Esq., who in 1538-9 was created Lord Parr and Ross of Kendal; and five years afterwards he was made baron of Hart in Northamptonshire. He married Helena, daughter and heir of Henry Bouchier, earl of Essex, and in the same year was created earl of Essex, and knight of the Garter. In 1547 he was elevated to the dignity of marquiss of Northampton, and from this title the part of the barony of Kendal held by him has received the name of the Marquiss Fee. On the accession of Queen Mary, the marquiss was attainted of high treason for his share in the usurpation of Lady Jane Grey, and his estates became forfeited to the crown, but he was soon afterwards pardoned, and his estates restored to him. He died in 1590, and was interred in the choir of the Collegiate Church of Warwick. He does not appear to have had any children, and his widow continued to hold his estates till Queen Elizabeth gave her other lands in exchange for them; and in this manner both the Marquiss and Richmond Fees came into the hands of the crown. He had two sisters, Catherine, wife of Henry VIII., who died before her brother, without issue; and Anne, who was married to William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, ancestor to the present Earl of Pembroke, who still bears amongst his other titles that of Baron Ross and Parr of Kendal. Queen Elizabeth, in 1580-81, granted to Ambrose Earl of Warwick, a part of the demesne lands belonging to the castle, by the name of the Park of Kendal, with divers edifices, buildings, &c., to hold the same in socage, as of the manor of East Greenwick. From this time we hear nothing of the demesne, park, or lands, until the reign of Charles II., when they appear to have been in the hands of Sir Francis Anderson, Bart., of Lostock, in Lancashire. His son and heir, Sir Charles Anderson, on his marriage, in 1685, settled the same to the use of himself for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with divers remainders over. Sir Charles died in 1691, and left issue Charles, James, Lawrence, Francis, and Joseph, and three daughters. Charles, the eldest son, succeeded his father and died without issue, when the estate passed to James, who also died without issue. Lawrence, the third son, became a monk, and thereupon Francis, the next brother, assumed the title and possessed himself of the family estate; but taking part in the rising of 1715, he was taken prisoner at Preston, and tried and attainted of high treason. He was pardoned as to his life, but the commissioners of forfeited estates seized all his real estate. Upon this Lawrence, the monk, claimed it, insisting before the commissioners that his brother had no right. Lawrence, on his examination before the commissioners confessing himself a monk, they decreed for the crown. Subsequently Lawrence conformed to the Protestant religion, and so enjoyed the title and estate. In 1723 he sold the premises to John Huggins, Esq., who dying in 1735, the same came to his brother and heir, William Huggins, Esq. The latter, by his will in 1761, devised the same to his two sons-in-law, Sir Thomas Galtrose, Knt., and the Rev. Dr. James Musgrave, in trust to sell the same for the purposes in the will mentioned: who accordingly sold the premises in the year 1765, to Thomas Holme, Esq. and James Dowker, Esq.

As to the rest of the Richmond and Marquiss Fees, James I., in 1614-15, granted the same to his son, Charles Prince of Wales. Amongst the schemes for raising money devised by King James, one was that of taking all the crown lands of Cumberland and Westmoreland into his own hands, on the plea "that as the border service had then ceased by the union of the two kingdoms in his own royal person, the estates were determined likewise which the tenants held by that service." And to keep his avarice in countenance, "he encouraged all the other lords of the manors within the said counties to take to themselves the absolute estate of the several tenants, and refuse to admit the heirs of their ancestor's estates." But though the service was gone, the border spirit still remained, and a long struggle ensued between the lords and tenants, the latter entering into a resolute combination to defend each other, "even by force, if no other course should be effectual," pursuant to the articles which they had sworn to at their meeting held at Staveley, by order of James Smith, high constable, "under colour of viewing a bridge." For this, and other "unlawful assemblies," several of the leaders were arraigned before the Star Chamber, which, however, acquitted the accused, and confirmed to the tenants their estates, as being held, not by border service only, but by the "general military tenure by which all other tenants in capite were obliged." Soon afterwards the tenants of many of the manors made compositions with their lords, for reducing the tenements to a fine certain; and others purchased their tenements to freehold. Charles II. granted the Richmond and Marquiss Fees, which comprise three-fourths of the barony, in jointure to his queen, Katharine of Braganza, and from her they received the name of the Queen's Lands, and not from Katharine Parr, queen of Henry VIII., for they never were possessed by her. When a rental was made of these fees in 1670, by Sir John Otway, deputy steward of the queen, the jury "set down the free and other dry rents of the Marquiss Fee at £20 17s. 4½d.; and of the Richmond Fee at £36 10s. 8^d. The other yearly rents they stated as follow:—

IN THE MARQUIS FEE.		£	s.	d.
Burgage Rents in Kendal	-	9	17	11
Customary and other Dry Rents.
Kendal and its vicinity	-	4	0	0
Grasmere	-	11	6	2
Langdale	-	5	4	11
Underbarrow	-	20	8	1
Staveley and Huggill	-	9	3	7 ¹ / ₂
Nether Graveship	-	10	16	3
Skalthwaite Rigg	-	12	5	0 ³ / ₄
Hay	-	13	3	3
Hutton-in-the-Hay	-	8	18	2 ¹ / ₂
Strickland Roger	-	13	14	11
Greenhead	-	10	16	10
Huggill	-	3	19	0
Crosthwaite	-	0	15	0
Total	-	£134	10	4 ¹ / ₂

IN THE RICHMOND FEE.		£	s.	d.
Customary and other Dry Rents.
Grasmere	-	11	11	3
Langdale	-	7	12	5 ¹ / ₂
Loughrigg	-	2	16	1
Ambleside	-	26	17	0
Undermill Beck	-	13	8	0
Troutbeck	-	27	0	10
Appletthwaite	-	24	10	10 ¹ / ₂
Fishing and ferry of Windermere	-	6	0	0
Crosthwaite and Lyth	-	19	3	7
New Hutton	-	10	9	9 ¹ / ₂
Casterton	-	12	9	4
Strickland, Ketel, and Helsington	-	3	10	10
Thornton, Westhouse, and Maysinghill	-	12	11	10
Total	-	£178	4	10 ¹ / ₂

After the decease of Queen Katharine these fees were granted to the Lowther family, who obtained a renewal of the lease from George III., so that the Earl of Lonsdale is the present lord.

The Lumley &c.

The Lumley Fee, containing nearly all the remaining third part of the ancient barony of Kendal was the portion of LUCY, third sister and co-heiress of the above-named Peter de Brus. She was married to Marmaduke de Thweng, lord of Kilton Castle and Thweng, with divers other manors in Yorkshire, Lancashire, and Westmoreland. They had a son, MARMADUKE DE THWENG, who in 1309, together with his cousin-german William de Ross, obtained a grant of a market and fair at Kirkby Kendal. He died in 1316, seised, as the inquisition finds, of a fourth part of the barony of Kendal. He was succeeded by his son,

WILLIAM DE THWENG, who in 1328 obtained a grant for a market at Staveley on Friday weekly, and a fair yearly on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Luke; and in 1335-6 he obtained a grant of free warren at Staveley. He died in 1340; and by the inquisition taken after his death, the Thweng share of the barony appears to have comprised lands and tenements in Kirkby in Kendal, Crosthwaite, Staveley, Sadgill, Huggill, Respton, Grasmere, and Langden. William de Thweng was succeeded by his brother,

ROBERT DE THWENG, parson of the church of Warton, who died in 1344, and was succeeded by his brother,

THOMAS DE THWENG, parson of the church of Beetham. This Thomas died in 1374, leaving three sisters co-heiress, the youngest of whom had no portion in Westmoreland; the other two sisters, Lucy and Margaret, had the Thweng share of the barony between them. Lucy, the eldest, was married to Marmaduke de Lumley, from whom the name of the Lumley Fee was derived. Her share of the barony comprised the manors of Helsington, Crosthwaite and Lyth, and a fourth part of the town of Kirkby in Kendal, together with the tithary of Sampool. This Marmaduke de Lumley seems to have been succeeded by RALPH DE LUMLEY; for in 1404-5 one fourth of the manor of Kirkby in Kendal, was taken into the king's hands by the death of Ralph de Lumley, Knt., and by reason of the minority of Thomas de Lumley, son and heir of the said Ralph; and it was also found that John de Lumley was brother to the said Ralph.

THOMAS DE LUMLEY, son and heir of Ralph, died with out issue, and was succeeded by JOHN DE LUMLEY, Knt. (his uncle), who died in 1422, seised of one-eighth part of the manor of Kirkby Kendal, Thomas, his son and heir, being then under age. By an inquisition of knights' fees in Westmoreland, in 1427-8, it was found that Thomas Lumley, then in ward to the king, son and heir of John Lumley, Knt., deceased, "held of the king in capite a moiety of those lands and tenements in Kendal which sometime before belonged to Thomas de Thweng, who was parson of the church of Beetham by the service of one-fourth part of one knight's fee; and that Walter Pennardine and John Ellerker held of the king in capite the other moiety, which formerly belonged to the said Thomas de Thweng, by the service of the eighth-part of one knight's fee; and that Thomas de Strickland, Knt., held the third part of a knight's fee of the said Thomas Lumley, in Helsington, Heversham, Burton, Lowther, Whale, Hackthorpe, and Strickland Ketel." In 1514-15, John Fleming, Esq., of Rydal, escheator for the king in the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, accounted that year in the exchequer for £115 17s. 7d. of the issues of the manors of Kirkby in Kendal, of which

GEORGE DE LUMLEY, Knt., was seised; and for £1,224 9s. 10¹/₂d. of the issues of the moiety of the barony or lordship of Kendal, (viz. the Richmond Fee) of which Henry VIII. was seised. Finally,

JOHN LORD LUMLEY, in 1531-2, exchanged his part of the barony with the king, Henry VIII., for certain lands in the south, and the said king granted the same, together with the Richmond Fee, to his natural son, the Duke of Richmond and Somerset, on whose death the same came again into the hands of the king, who, in 1544-5, granted the same to ALAN BRETHERTON, Esq.

MARGARET, the second daughter of Marmaduke de Thweng—also named—had a daughter named Matilda, who was married to John de Hotham, and brought to him by some conveyance the Thweng share of the barony, in Staveley and other places, that is the portion of the barony held by Walter Fitzmaurice and John Ellerker, above-mentioned. A descendant of this John de Hotham, in 1569-70, granted this moiety to Alan Bellingham, grandson of the Alan Bellingham above-named, who, in this manner became possessed of what has since been known as the Lumley Fee. By an inquisition taken after the death of the last-named Alan Bellingham, in 1577-8, it was found that he died seised of the manor of Over Staveley, and divers messuages and tenements, and other hereditaments in Over Staveley, Nether Staveley, Hugill, Sadgill, Respton (with the moiety of Respton mill), Fairbank, Grasmere, Langden, Potter Fell, Vow Platt, Ulthwaite, Radierhead, Sabergh, Crookfell, Westwood, and Roger Holme (an island in Windermere), with a fishery in the waters of Windermere, Skeleswater, and Grasmere. This Alan Bellingham had a son,

Sir JAMES BELLINGHAM, who had a son,

Sir Thomas Bellingham, who was created 14th Baronet.
 ALAN BELLINGHAM, Esq., who sold this Lumley Fee to Colonel James Graham, whose daughter and heiress married in 1708-9, HENRY BOWEN HOWARD, earl of Berkshire, and it is now possessed by the Hon. Lady Howard of Levens Hall.

LADARINA, the youngest sister of the last Peter de Brus, and wife of John de Bella-Aqua, in Yorkshire, had, as we have seen above, Kentmere assigned to her, and this was the only portion of Westmoreland she possessed. By her husband, Robert, she had two daughters, Sibilla, married to Milo de Stapleton; and Joan, married to Aucherus Fitz-Henry. In 1311-12 a partition was made in Chancery of their mother's inheritance between these two daughters, or their representatives, and by this agreement Kentmere came to the Stapletons, who continued its possessors till the reign of Charles I., as will be seen in the account of the manor at a subsequent page.

Kendal Ward.

THIS division of the county is bounded on the north by the East and West wards, on the north-west by a small part of Cumberland, on the west and south by Lancashire, and on the east by Fountainsdale Ward. It is about twenty-six miles in length, and varies from five to thirteen miles in breadth. It is the most interesting ward in the county, both in regard to its picturesque beauty and agricultural and commercial importance. The soil in its numerous dales is generally very fertile, and many of its inhabitants, particularly in and around Kendal, are employed in the manufacture of woollen, linen, and hosiery. It derives its name from the river Kent, which rises within the ward, as do also several smaller streams, all of which flow southward to Morecombe Bay. The beautiful lakes of Grasmere, Rydal, and Windermere, with several smaller sheets of water, are situated here. The ward is intersected by the Lancaster and Carlisle and the Kendal and Windermere railways, as also by a portion of the Lancaster Canal. It comprises the borough of Kendal and the market towns of Ambleside, Bowness, and Milnthorpe. The parishes in Kendal Ward are Betham, Grasmere, Haversham, Kendal, and Windermere. This ward is rated to the county rate in the sum of £141,947.

BETHAM PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by that Heversham; on the north-west by Cartmel, in Lancashire; on the west by the sea; on the south by the parish of Warton, in Lancashire; and on the east by Burton. It is a large mountainous and romantic district, situated at the south-western extremity of the county, and is intersected by the rivers Kent and Belo, with several minor streams. The inhabitants are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and attend the Kendal markets and those of Lancaster occasionally. The parish comprises the townships of Betham, Farleton, Haverbrack, Meathop, and Ulpha, and the chapelry of Witherslack.

BETHAM.

The area of Betham township is 7,101 acres, and its rateable value £5,078 12s. The population in 1801 was 668; in 1811, 748; in 1821, 830; in 1831, 855; in 1841, 845; and in 1851, 875. The township is remarkable for its salubrity and for the longevity of its inhabitants.

The manor of Betham is included in the Richmond Fee of the barony of Kendal. At the time of the conquest this manor was part of the possessions of Tostig, Earl of Northumberland, and when Domesday survey was taken it was held by Eruvin, the priest, under Roger de Poitou. It was subsequently the property of a family bearing the local name, which continued here for several generations, and several members of which represented Westmoreland in parliament. In 1310-11

Thomas de Betham obtained a charter for a market and fair at Betham; and in 1334 Ralph de Betham had a grant of free warren in Betham. Twelve years afterwards writs were directed to Ralph de Betham, and Thomas de Ross of Kendal Castle, to forward their prisoners from their castles to the Tower of London. In 1735 it was found by inquisition that Ralph de Betham, Kut., held of Joan de Coupland the manor of Betham, with its appurtenances, by homage, fealty, and the service of thirty-two shillings a year, as of her manor of Kirkby, in Kendal. We hear no more of the Betham family after the year 1425, in which Thomas de Betham was representative in parliament for Westmoreland. Tradition tells us that the Bethams forfeited the manor after the battle of Bosworth Field, and that it was then given to the Stauleys; but it is more probable that it was purchased by the latter family. In the 28th Charles II., (1676-7), a survey was made, and from it we learn that amongst the free rents then paid to Queen Catherine, the Earl of Derby stands charged with the annual payment of £2 13s. 4d. for Betham Park. The manor appears to have subsequently passed to the Cliffords, and was sold, in 1767, by Lord Clifford to Daniel Wilson, Esq., of Dallam Tower, from whom it has descended to the present lord, George Edward Wilson, Esq., who is the principal landowner. Much of the land still remains in the hands of other proprietors; several small estates have continued in the same families for several generations. Courts are seldom held in this manor, except at change of lord or death of tenant, when those who are not enfranchised pay certain fines.

Betham Hall, now in ruins, was formerly a large handsome building, erected for defence as well as ornament, and has often been called Betham Castle. The walls by which it was surrounded were loopholed. A portion of the chapel still remains. To the south of the hall are two large fish-ponds. The park was behind the hall.

Cappleside is a demesne in the manor of Betham, formerly belonging to the Prestons, from whom it passed by marriage to the Cliffords. In 1767 it was sold by Lord Clifford to Daniel Wilson, Esq., for £2,560. There was anciently a large hall here.

Within this manor are Helslack Tower and Arnside Tower, which seem to have been erected for the protection of the bay, as there are on the opposite side the remains of Broughton Tower and Bazin Tower, and in the centre of the bay, Peel Castle.

The village of Betham, which is neat and well built, is situated in the romantic vale of the Belo, a mile and a half south of Milnthorpe, on the road leading from Lancaster to Ulverstone. This road was formed about the year 1820, and is here carried over the river near the fall at Betham Mill. This fall is caused by a rock sixteen feet in perpendicular depth, crossing the river. In old records the river is called the Betha; and there is little doubt that from it the village derives its name. The market, for which Thomas de Betham obtained a grant from Edward II, has long been obsolete.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, which stands in the township of Haverbrack, on the bank of the Belo, is dedicated to St. Leoth, according to Mr. Machell, a respectable antiquary of the last century, but Brown Willis says to St. Michael. It was originally Saxon, and some parts of that architecture still remain. In 1834, while digging a grave on the north side of the nave, there were discovered at the base of one of the pillars, about a hundred coins of the reign of Edward the Confessor, William the Conqueror, and William Rufus, which appear to have been deposited in a large stone, about two feet high, set up against the pillar where the pulpit is placed. The church comprises nave, chancel, aisles, and tower containing three bells. On the south side of the chancel are two recumbent figures of stone, said to represent the last Thomas de Betham and his lady. He is represented in armour, with his sword by his side. The lady has her hands crossed upon her breast. These monumental effigies were defaced by Richard Sill, a trustee of the school during the time of the parliamentary wars, who headed a mob, composed of scholars, and some drunken soldiers belonging to the army commanded by Fairfax, and induced them to break the painted glass in the church windows and commit other acts of desecration. The only stained glass now in the church is a modern window of two lights, erected to the memory of John Burrow by his son. It contains figures of the Redeemer and Moses. The church contains the arms of Thomas, the first earl of Derby, and many others. There are mural monuments to various members of the Wilson, Hutton, and other families. The church of Betham and some lands at Haverbrack were given to the abbey of St. Mary at York by Ivo de Tailbois, and the church was afterwards appropriated to the same abbey. It was subsequently confirmed to Wetheral Priory, a cell of St. Mary's Abbey, by Gilbert, son of Roger Fitz-Reinfred and his wife Helwise, daughter and heiress of William de Lancaster. This church paid a pension of 40s. a year to the abbey. After the suppression of the religious houses, the rectory of the church continued in the crown till the reign of James I., who, in 1611, granted the same to Sir Francis Duckett, Knt., of Grayrigg, reserving the ancient rent and payment to the vicar. The great tithes were afterwards sold by his descendants to various parties; and the small tithes were purchased, in 1756, for the use of the vicar, but as the whole crown rent of £25 is now settled on them, he only derives from them about £11 10s. a year. The tithes have been commuted for a rent charge. The benefice is a vicarage in the patronage of the crown, and in the presentation (under the crown) of the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. It is valued in the King's Book at £13 7s. 6d., and was certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £13 6s. 8d. In 1777 the revenue of the vicarage amounted to £49; but it is now worth about £130, arising from £13 paid out of the rectory; £4 10s. out of the small tithes; the rent of three enclosures at Kellet, purchased by Mrs. Dorothy Wilson, in 1707; an estate at Priest Hutton, purchased with £200 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty; £100 given in 1722, by Edward Colston; £100 given by James French; £60 by the Rev. James Smith; and an estate at Yelland, purchased in 1731 with £200 given by Elizabeth Palmer, and £200 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty.

VICARS.—Edward Halstead, died 1612; Edward Fisher, 1612; George Bennison, 1642; John Breckbank, 1665; W. Jackson, 1670; James Smith, 1709; Daniel Wilson, 1734; William Hutton, 1762; Joseph Thexton, 1811; William Hutton (grandson of the above-named William Hutton), 1845.

There is a school for girls at Helslack Tower, under the patronage of Mrs. Wilson of Dallan Tower.

At a short distance from the church there formerly stood a chapel dedicated to St. John; near its site many human bones have been found from time to time. Some years ago an amber bead was discovered here, nearly as large as a shilling, on one side of which was a representation of the Crucifixion, on the right side a crescent, and on the left the rising sun; at the bottom was a figure of the Blessed Virgin, in an attitude of sorrow; on the reverse was the representation of a lamb, with cross and banner.

CHARITIES.

Free School.—There is in Betham a school of very ancient foundation, for which seven of the inhabitants of the parish stand as feoffees in trust. By a tablet hung up in the vestry it appears that the original endowment of the school arose from a subscription in the year 1500, and that it was subsequently augmented by different legacies and benefactors, and by another subscription which took place in 1020, amounting to £155. Of this sum £125 was laid out in the purchase of the tithes of wool and lamb in Haverbrack, and other parts of the parish of Betham. In 1814 all the tithes so purchased, except those in Haverbrack, were commuted for land under the authority of an enclosure act, and two allotments have been awarded by the commissioners. By will, dated January 23rd, 1794, Roland Burrow bequeathed £10; about 1804 John Smyth bequeathed £10; Agnes Cartmel gave £50; in 1813 Joshua Burrow gave £20; in 1817 James Evans gave £20; and £200 were given some years ago by John Y. Thexton, Esq. The fund arising from these sums, with the allotments above-mentioned, and the tithes of Haverbrack, forms the whole of the present endowment, amounting to about £40 a year, which is paid to the schoolmaster. The school-house was rebuilt in 1847 on the south-east side of the village, and is attended by about sixty children.

Joshua Burrow's Charity.—An entry in the parish book, dated February 13th, 1771, states that Joshua Burrow, aged ninety-seven, gave to the churchwardens of Betham the sum of 40s., the interest to be given in bread to the communicants at the parish church of Betham, on Michaelmas Day and Trinity Sunday.

Johnston's Charity.—There is also 1s. 8d. distributed in bread in like manner, on Christmas Day and Easter Sundays, being the interest of 40s. left for the purpose by Thomas Johnston.

Parish of Betham, exclusive of Witherslack.—Poor Stock.—The following several legacies and donations, amounting in the whole to £100, were given by different persons, as appears by an entry in the parish book:—1663, Gawen Hutton gave £3; 1073, Richard Dowker gave £10; 1683, Elizabeth Dickson bequeathed £1; 1695, Robert Waller and his wife gave £5; 1699, Mary Chamney bequeathed £10; 1700, Richard Hadwen gave £5; 1707, Anne Whiterigg bequeathed £10; 1718, Thomas Thomlinson gave £5; 1719, Richard Jackson gave £5; Thomas Johnston gave for bread £2; 1755, Grace Foxcroft gave £40; 1755, the parish and vicar gave £4: total, £100. The interest of this sum is divided amongst the different townships of the parish, exclusive of Witherslack, and is distributed chiefly amongst poor housekeepers.

Daniel Wilson's Charity.—The Rev. Daniel Wilson, by will, dated in 1785, left to the parish of Betham, exclusive of Witherslack, £100, to be disposed of in the best manner for the use of the poor, at the discretion of the minister and churchwardens.

John Smyth's Charity.—It appears by an entry in the parish book, dated 31st March, 1804, that John Smyth bequeathed to the vicar, churchwardens, and overseers of the parish of Betham £20, the interest to be distributed annually amongst the poor of the said parish. This money was carried to the parish account, and 15s. 2d. is regularly paid out of the poor rate and distributed amongst poor householders.

Townships of Betham and Haverbrack.—Hilton's Charity.—George Hilton, by will, in 1724, gave £20, the interest of which he directed should be divided amongst poor housekeepers of Betham and Haverbrack.

Township of Betham.—Rowland Burrow, by will, in 1794, left to the township of Betham £10, the interest to be divided amongst poor persons of the said township.

Lucy Hutton's Charity.—Lucy Hutton, by will, dated 1788, directed her trustees to pay to the hands of the vicar and churchwardens of Betham £100, the interest to be distributed by them amongst the poor people, inhabitants of Betham and Slacklead.

Division of Hale and Whasset.—John Lucas, by will, dated 1793, left £3, the interest of which he directed should be given to poor housekeepers of Hale and Whasset, in the parish of Betham.

In the vestry of the church is a good library, left for the use of the vicar and schoolmaster by the Rev. W. Hutton, grandfather of the present vicar.

The township of Betham extends along the south side of the estuary of the Kent to the headland called Arnside Point, beyond which the river is navigable for small vessels to the hamlet of Storth, which is in this township, two miles south-by-west of Milnthorpe Hall, another hamlet, one mile and a half south, and Whasset, another, two miles south-west of Milnthorpe, are also in Betham township, as are likewise Helslack, Slackhead, and Arnside. At the last-named place the river Kent is crossed by a bridge on the Lancaster and Ulverstone railway, which was opened for traffic in 1857. Passengers are set down here.

The residences in the township are Betham House, Mrs. Hutton; Ashton House, John Yeats Thexton, Esq.; Ash Meadow, Thomas Rodick, Esq.; Wood Close, Robert P. Rodick, Esq.; and Elmfield House, William Hodgson, Esq.

There are a paper and a corn-mill in the township.

Hutton of Overthwaite.

About the time of Henry VII. it appears that the Huttons of Overthwaite and the Huttons of Goldborough, in Yorkshire, branched from the ancient family of Hutton of Hutton Hall, Penrith, which derived from Adam de Hoton, living in the time of Edward I.¹

THOMAS HUTTON, Esq., of Overthwaite, in the parish of Betham, who died in 1588, at a very great age, left a son and successor, GEORGE HUTTON, Esq., of Overthwaite, who died in 1621, and was father of

THOMAS HUTTON, Esq., of Overthwaite, at whose decease, in 1650, the property devolved upon his son,

GEORGE HUTTON, Esq., of Overthwaite, who died in 1678, and had two sons,

I. THOMAS, his heir.

II. John, ancestor of the Rev. John Hutton, vicar of Barton, whose only daughter and heir, Agnes, was married to Capt. Johnson, of Mains Hall, co. Hereford.

The elder son,

THOMAS HUTTON, Esq., of Overthwaite, married Eleanor, daughter of William Tenant, Esq., of York, by Eleanor, his wife, daughter of Roger Crowle, Esq., by Eleanor, his wife, daughter of Edward Wilson, Esq., of Dallam Tower, and died in 1794, leaving a son,

¹ The last direct male heir of the Huttons of Hutton Hall, was Dr. Addison Hutton, who died in 1745. Sir Richard Hutton, a younger son of the Hutton family, was judge of the Common Pleas, temp. Henry VIII.

GEORGE HUTTON, Esq., of Overthwaite, who left at his decease, in 1736, two sons,

I. George, who died unmarried in 1802.

II. WILLIAM.

The latter,

The Rev. WILLIAM HUTTON, vicar of Betham, who built Capleside House, near Betham, and fixed his residence there. He married Lucy, third daughter and co-heir (by Mary, his wife, daughter of Oliver Marton, Esq., of Lancaster), of Rigby Molyneux, Esq., M.P. for Preston, only son of Thomas Molyneux, Esq., of Preston, by Mary, his wife, daughter of Gilbert Mundy, Esq., of Allestree, co. Derby, and grandson of Sir John Molyneux, Bart., of Teversall, by Lucy, his wife, daughter of Alexander Rigby, Esq., of Middleton, one of the barons of the Exchequer, and died in 1811, having had two sons,

I. Thomas Molyneux, who died unmarried on 29th May, 1795.

II. WILLIAM.

The latter,

WILLIAM HUTTON, Esq., of Overthwaite, was born 28th May, 1781; he married, 16th June, 1803, Catherine, daughter of Edward Pedder, Esq., of Bisham Lodge, and Preston, co. Lancaster, and had issue,

I. William, in holy orders, now vicar of Betham; married Margaret Thomas, daughter of James Bramall Tossy, Esq., of Lynt Regis, and has issue,

I. William James.

II. Catherine Mary.

III. Margaret Tossy.

IV. Lucy Elizabeth.

V. Frances Jane.

II. Edward.

III. Thomas, deceased.

IV. George, Royal Artillery, deceased.

V. Molyneux, deceased.

VI. James.

VII. Charles, M.D., married Henrietta, daughter of Dr. Seymour, of Charles-street, Belgrave Square.

VIII. Richard.

I. Margaret, married to the Rev. William Mason, A.M., vicar of Normanton.

II. Eleanor, married to William Braysay, Esq., of Bradford.

III. Catherine.

IV. Isabella Jane, married to the Rev. James Cookson, incumbent of Marton parsonage, near Blackpool.

Mr. Hutton died in 1853, and his widow now has the family property.

Arms.—Arg., on a fesse, sa., three bucks' heads, caboshed, or.

Crest.—Issuant from a tower, ppr. three arrows, sa.

FARLETON.

Farleton comprises 1,175 acres; its rateable value is £1,404 2s. 6d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 92; in 1811, 105; in 1821, 102; in 1831, 90;

I. Roger Crowle was eldest son of George Crowle, Esq., of Hull, by Eleanor, his wife, daughter of Lowther of Swillington.

in 1841, 118; and in 1851, 114. It is intersected by the Kendal and Lancaster canal.

Richard I. granted to Gilbert, son of Roger Fitz-Reinfred, and his heirs, four carucates of land in Farleton, re-leasing to him at the same time the rents of all his lands in Westmoreland and Kendal, and amongst the rest, the rents of the market of Kendal, the forest of Kendal, and the lands of Preston, Farleton, and Lupton. In 1375, at the same time that Ralph de Betham held the manor of Betham of Joan de Coupland, Nicholas de Haverington held of the said Ralph the manor of Farleton as of the manor of Betham. The Haveringtons seemed to have continued in possession of Farleton till the fall of Richard III., when Henry VII. granted the manor to the Stanleys. After this we find the manor of Farleton in the hands of the Huttons, one of whom, in 1693, sold the tenements to freehold, so that each landowner now possesses the manorial rights and privileges of his own property. The principal landowners are the executors of the late Rev. George Cartmel, the late William Cartmel, the late John Atkinson, the late Alderman Thompson, and the Rev. Jeffrey Hebden. The tithes of the township have been commuted for £95, which is paid to the corporation of Kendal, but varies according to the state of the market. George E. Wilson, Esq., of Dallam Tower, receives £1 14s. 4½d. in lieu of the hay tithes; and the executors of the late George and William Cartmel £5 8s. 2d. in lieu of lamb and wool tithes.

The village of Farleton is three miles east of Milnthorpe. Aikebank and Overthwaite are hamlets in this township.

Farleton Knot is a lofty scar of limestone rock, which rises above the village, and on its summit are no less than seven springs. Some stones found on this hill are said to possess musical properties.

Knot Cottage, the residence of Mrs. Cartmel, has been in the occupation of the family for centuries. The house occupied by Mr. Scott bears the date of 1656, and contains some beautifully-carved oak furniture of the same date.

Haverbrack.

The area of Haverbrack is 923 acres. Its population in 1801 was 92; in 1811, 105; in 1821, 127; in 1831, 120; in 1841, 117; and in 1851, 101. The greater portion of this township is included in the demesne attached to Dallam Tower. It comprises the parish church, a portion of the village of Betham, and a hamlet of its own name.

Haverbrack, like the other portions of the parish, belonged to the barons of Kendal, and seems to have been included in the manor of Betham. Lands here were given by Ivo de Tailbois to different religious houses. Margaret de Ross gave Haverbrack Hall and the demesne lands to Conishead Priory, to which they continued attached till 1545-6, when they were granted by Henry VIII. to William Thornburgh, to hold of the king, in capite, by the twentieth part of one knight's fee, and a yearly rent of 18s. 3d. By an inquisition taken in 1609, it is found that the said William Thornburgh died seized of the capital messuage called Dallam Tower, with sixty acres of land; six other messuages, with 100 acres of land and other property. Another part of Haverbrack belonged to the Prestons. The manor was subsequently purchased by three mining adventurers, who expected to find here a lead mine. It was afterwards sold to Henry Parker, whose successor, William Parker, Esq., sold it to Edward Wilson, Esq., an ancestor of the present proprietor, George Edward Wilson, Esq., besides whom Captain Atkinson has an estate here. Arbitrary fines are paid by such of the tenants as are not enfranchised.

The hamlet of Haverbrack is half a mile north-west of Betham. The Rev. John Hutton, late vicar of Kendal, and for many years fellow and tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, was a native of this township.

Dallam Tower, the seat of the lord of the manor, is situated near the confluence of the Kent and Belo. The original edifice was erected by William Thornburgh, Esq., out of the ruins of an old tower which formerly stood here, and from which the present structure derives its name. The present elegant mansion was erected in 1720 by Daniel Wilson, Esq., but has been much enlarged, improved, and ornamented by his successors. The park was planted about the same time, and has now a grove of fine old oaks, and abounds with deer.

Wilson of Dallam Tower.

This family has been of note in Westmoreland for several centuries past.

EDWARD WILSON, Esq., of Nether Levins, in that county, founded and endowed the grammar school of Heversham (in which parish Nether Levins is situate), about the reign of James I.

EDWARD WILSON, Esq., of Heversham Hall, son of Thomas Wilson of Kendal, (by Dorothy, his wife, daughter of Henry Fisher of Bradleyfield), and grandson of Thomas Wilson, Esq., of Staveley Hall, in Kendal, who died about 1624, married, 1stly, Jane, daughter of Gauen Brathwaite, Esq., of Ambleside, and by her had issue,

1. Edward.

1. Elizabeth, married to Philip, only son of Edward Sweetnam of Somerset, co. Clunet.

Mr. Wilson married, secondly, Dorothy, daughter of Richard Kirkley, of Kirkley Hall, in Furness, by whom he had issue,

- i. Roger, born in 1662, ancestor of William Wilson, Currier-Wilson, Esq., of Casteron Hall, formerly M.P. for Cockerthwaite.

Mr. Wilson died in July, 1707, aged eighty-nine, and was succeeded by his son, EDWARD WILSON, Esq., of Dallam Tower, who married Catherine, daughter and co-heir of Sir Daniel Fleming, Knt., of Rydal, co. Westmoreland, and left at his decease, 5th February, 1719-20, aged sixty-nine, a son and heir, DANIEL WILSON, Esq., of Dallam Tower, M.P. for Westmoreland and high sheriff of Lancashire, 1727. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Crowle, Esq., of Hull, and died 31st May, 1754, aged 74, having had issue,

- i. EDWARD, his heir.
- ii. George, colonel 1st Foot Guards, born 1724; married Anne Smyth, daughter and co-heir of Alan Harrison, Esq., and had a daughter, who died young.
- iii. Thomas, barrister-at-law.
- iv. Dorothy, married, 1839, to the Rev. William Fleming, archdeacon of Carlisle, only son of the Right Rev. Sir George Fleming, Bart, bishop of Carlisle.

The eldest son,

EDWARD WILSON, Esq., of Dallam Tower, married, 19th June, 1746, Dorothy, eldest daughter and co-heir of Sir William Fleming, Bart., of Rydal, and had issue,

- i. DANIEL, his heir.
- ii. William.
- iii. Edward.
- iv. Dorothy, married, Dec. 21st, 1773, to Richard Watson, D.D., bishop of Llandaff.
- v. Elizabeth.
- vi. Barbara, died unmarried.
- vii. Margaret, died unmarried.
- viii. Charlotte, married to Charles Gibson, Esq., of Quernmore Park.

Mr. Wilson died 1764, and was succeeded by his eldest son, DANIEL WILSON, Esq., of Dallam Tower, who married, firstly,

Beatrice, only daughter of Samuel Egerton, Esq., of Tatton Park, Cheshire, which lady died without issue, 1779; and secondly, 17th July, 1782, Sarah, only daughter and heir of Samuel Harper, Esq., of Heath, co. York, by whom he left at his decease, 11th November, 1824, aged 78, two daughters,

- i. Sarah, wife of George Smyth, Esq.
- ii. Anne, married, 8th June 1812, to Sir Robert Howe Bromley, Bart.

The elder daughter and co-heiress,

SARAH WILSON, married, as already stated, in 1811, George Smyth, Esq., lieutenant-colonel in the Guards, second son of the Right Hon. John Smyth of Heath Hall, co. York, M.P., by the Lady Georgina, his wife, eldest daughter of Augustus Henry Duke of Grafton. On his marriage, Colonel Smyth took the name and arms of Wilson. The issue was,

- i. GEORGE, son of Dallam Tower.
- ii. Charles Henry, in holy orders.
- iii. Frederick John, married.
- iv. Maria Laura, Mrs. Hare.
- v. Georgina, deceased.
- vi. Sarah Maria, deceased.
- vii. Frances, deceased.

Colonel Wilson died 3rd March, 1853, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

GEORGE EDWARD WILSON, Esq., of Dallam Tower, born 17th November, 1815; married 3rd March, 1842, Gertrude Mary, daughter of William Hutton, Esq., of Hutton Park, co. Lancaster, and has issue,

- i. George Crowle, born 23rd April, 1846.
- ii. Charles Henry, born 2nd December, 1847.
- iii. Edward Hugh, born 3rd February, 1849.
- iv. Gertrude Sophia.
- v. Emily Sarah.

Arms.—Arg., three wolves' heads, couped, sa., guttee de sang.

Crest.—A crescent, or, issuing flames of fire, ppr.

WITHERSLACK CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is separated into two divisions, called East and West Sides, by a long and lofty sear of mountain limestone. It comprises the townships of Witherslack, and Meathop and Ulpha, the population of which is almost entirely agricultural. There are a number of turf labourers.

WITHERSLACK.

The area of this township is 4,689 acres; its rateable value is £1,900 1s. 7d. The population in 1801 was 306; in 1811, 355; 1821, 477; in 1831, 488; in 1841, 489; and in 1851, 487.

The manor of Witherslack belonged to the Harrington family, one of whom, John de Harrington, in 1340, obtained a charter of free warren in this manor. On the attainder of the Harringtons after the battle of Bosworth Field, the manor was granted by Henry VII.

to Sir Thomas Broughton of Broughton Tower, and on his forfeiture, for taking part with Lambert Simnel, it was granted by the same monarch to Sir Thomas Stanley, first earl of Derby, to whose descendant, the present lord, it still belongs, though it was many years withheld by the Laybournes and Withams, the hall and demesne having been seized by Oliver Cromwell, who conveyed them to John Laybourne, Esq., of Cunswick, for £130. The earl holds a manor court yearly at the Derby Arms, on the second Tuesday after Whitsuntide.

The landowners are the Earl of Derby; J. B. Thornborrow, Esq.; and George E. Wilson, Esq. The hall, which is now occupied as a farm-house, was formerly the seat of the Laybournes, and had then a well-stocked deer park. The fishery in the river Belo belongs to the Earl of Derby, Mrs. Howard, and George E. Wilson, Esq.

Witherslack, Foulshaw, Low Wood, and Townend, are hamlets in this township, distant from two and a half to five miles north-west of Milnthorpe.

THE CHAPEL.

Witherslack chapel, dedicated to St. Paul, consists of a nave, chancel, and square tower with three bells. It was erected by Dr. John Barwick, dean of St. Paul's, who, in 1664, bequeathed the impropriate rectory of Lazouby, in Cumberland, for that purpose, and also for allowing a curate, who should teach the children of the chapelry gratis, the sum of £26, together with £4 a year for the repairs of the chapel, 40s. yearly to the vicar of Lazouby, and £10 a year for binding poor boys apprentices, or marrying deserving poor maids within the chapelry. To this bequest, his brother, Peter Barwick, M.D., physician in ordinary to Charles II., added the demesne and hall of Haresceugh, near Kirkoswald, in Cumberland. But these allowances, which were then worth little more than £40 a year, having been greatly augmented, in consequence of the increased value of property, now produce upwards of £400 per annum, and the trustees have been enabled to procure at different times augmentations to the chapel from Queen Anne's Bounty, and to give dowries with deserving brides, amounting sometimes to £30 or £40 each. In 1749 and 1759 it received two augmentations from Queen Anne's Bounty amounting to £400, to meet a subscription to the same amount contributed by the trustees of Dr. Barwick, the executors of Commissary Stratford, and the Rev. John Hunter, who was then curate and schoolmaster. The whole £800 was soon afterwards invested in property. The income of the curate is now worth about £90 a year. The trustees of Dr. John Barwick's Charity appoint the minister; formerly the vicar of Betham appointed, but he appears to have forfeited his claim by not having exercised the right for a period of about sixty years. At the east end of the chapel is a marble tablet raised in memory of Dr. John Barwick. There are also the arms of Dr. Barwick and the Earl of Derby. The rites of marriage, baptism, and burial are performed in this chapel. The registers commence about the year 1631.

INCUMBENTS.—John Hunter was minister in 1750; John Dawson, 1778; W. J. Woodcock, 1845; Thomas M. Postlethwaite, 1846.

The parsonage was erected in 1844, at a cost of about £500.

In addition to the boys' school founded by Dr. Barwick, the trustees, in 1824, erected a girls' school. The endowment of Dr. Barwick was both for the clergyman and schoolmaster—both offices being held together. The master is now allowed £65 a year; the mistress £40. Nearly 100 children are educated: fifty in the boys' school and fifty in the girls'.

CHARITIES.

Dean Barwick's Charity.—The particulars of this charity have been given in connection with the chapel. The annual income is about £400.

Simpson's Ground Estate.—It appears, by an endorsement upon an indenture, dated 14th March, 1755, that the following donations and legacies were given by different persons to the poor of Witherslack:—By — Brockbank, £5; Christopher Crossfield and Joseph Barson, £17; Robert Allinson, £3; Francis Bowes, £2; John Bowes, £10; Mary Chamney, £6 13s. 4d.; Robert Barwick, £60; John Wilson, £15; Francis Wilson, £10; unknown, £1 6s. 8d.: total, £130. With this sum lands were purchased in Cartmel parish, which bear the name of Simpson's Ground, the rental of which, amounting to £15 a year, is given to the poor of the township.

A small portion of a charity, arising from land in the county of Durham, falls to the poor of Witherslack and Meathop.

About a mile from Witherslack chapel is a spring, known as the Holy Well.

Halscut, the residence of John B. Wanklyn, Esq., is a handsome mansion at the foot of Yewbarrow Scar, erected in 1847, at a cost of £2,000. It commands picturesque views of the surrounding country. Fell End, said to be the birthplace of Dean Barwick, is now the seat of J. B. Thornborrow, Esq.

MEATHOP AND ULPIA.

This township, which includes Holme Island, in Morecambe Bay, comprises an area of 3,561 acres; and its rateable value is £810 17s. 6d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 90; in 1811, 79; in 1821, 82; in 1831, 86; in 1841, 87; and in 1851, 78. The manorial rights are possessed by the Earl of Derby, who holds courts at Witherslack annually in Whitweek. The landowners are J. B. Thornborrow, John Borrow, James Borrow, Margaret Borrow, Rev. E. Townley, Rev. William Hutton, and the executors of the late Robert Wright. There is a large quantity of bog in this township, from which the inhabitants obtain turf, the only fuel they use.

The hamlets of Meathop and Ulpha lie on the north side of the estuary of the Kent, from three to four miles west-by-south of Milnthorpe.

GRASMERE PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north and west by Cumberland, on the south by Lancashire, and on the east by the parish of Windermere and the chapelry of Patterdale. It comprises one of the most picturesque and beautiful districts in the region of the lakes, in which it occupies an almost central position. Grasmere, Rydal, Ilterwater, Easdale, Coldale, Blea, and Stickle, are all within its boundaries, as are also the rivers Brathay and Rotha, the falls of Stockgill, Dungeonmill, Rydal, and the Force, and the mountains of Fairbairn, Langside Blaes, and many others. At the south-western extremity is Wrynose, upon the summit of which the counties of Westmoreland, Cumberland, and Lancashire form a junction, at the Three Shire Stones. The parish abounds with slate. It comprises the townships of Grasmere, Ambleside, Great and Little Langdale, and Rydal and Leasingthorpe, whose united area is 23,100 acres. The inhabitants attend Kendal market.

GRASMERE.

The area of Grasmere township is 7,615 acres, and its rateable value £2,441. The population in 1801 was 270; in 1811, 265; in 1821, 324; in 1831, 345; and in 1851, 445.

The manor of Grasmere was formerly included in that of Windermere. It first appears as a distinct manor in the 14th Elizabeth (1571-2), when after the death of William Parr, marquis of Northampton, the inquisition finds that he died seized of the manor of Grasmere, and of divers messuages, lands, and tenements there. The manor is of the Richmond and marquis fees of Kendal barony, and is held under the Earl of Lonsdale by customary tenants, who pay a small fine on the change of lord or tenant, and heriots when widows come into possession. The landowners are John Green, sen., Thomas Dawson, James Fleming, George Patridge, Ralph H. Alcock, and James Y. Greenwood. The village of Grasmere is delightfully situated in a fertile and highly-cultivated vale, on the north side of the lake from which its name is derived, nearly four miles north-west-by-west of Ambleside. A sheep fair is held here on the first Tuesday in September. To the rear of the village is Helme Crag, a lofty eminence, rising like a wedge from the valley. From its summit an extensive and delightful prospect may be obtained.

THE CHURCH.

Grasmere church, dedicated to St. Oswald, consists of nave, with aisles, south porch, and chancel. The tower is square and embattled, and contains three bells. There is a stoup for holy water in the south aisle of the chancel, which was found lower down in the wall, covered with plaster. The doors are ornamented with old iron scroll work. The interior is dark and gloomy, occupied by oaken benches, and the floor strewn with rushes, which are renewed with much rejoicing every summer. A sepulchral brass commemorates three sisters of the Le Fleming family, and mural monuments various members of the Kearsley, Knott, and other families. The monument which first arrests the stranger's attention is a medallion portrait of the poet Wordsworth, accompanied by an inscription adapted from a dedication of Mr. Keble's. The simple and modest tombstone in the churchyard will please him better. At present it bears only the name of the poet—in his case an all-sufficient memorial; but it is understood that some dates and other particulars will be filled in hereafter. Beside him lie his daughter, and next to her her husband—whose first wife is next him on the other side. Some other children of Wordsworth, who died young, and one grandchild, are buried near. Close behind the family group lies Hartley Coleridge, at whose funeral the white-haired Wordsworth attended, not very long before his own death. This spot, under the yews, beside the gushing Rothay, and encircled by green mountains, is a fitting resting-place for the poet of the region. He chose it himself; and every one rejoices that he did. When the church of Kendal was appropriated to the abbey of St. Mary at York, Grasmere church, then a chapel of Keudal, was appointed to pay to the abbey £1 15s. 4d.; but it continued in the patronage of Ingelram de Gynes and Christian, his wife. In 1376 the living was valued at £10, and was in the patronage of Joan de Coupland. In the King's Book Grasmere is said to be worth £28 11s. 5½d. After the suppression of the monasteries, the patronage was given to the Bellinghams, one of whom, Alan de Bellingham, in 1573-4, sold it for £100 to William Fleming, Esq., of Rydal, from whom it has descended to Lady le Fleming, the present patron. The living is now worth about £148 a year. The tithes have been commuted. The parish register commences in 1570.

RECTORS.—Hugh Ashton, resigned in 1511; John Frost, 1511; William Holgill, 1524; — Ambrose occurs 1685; Thomas Jackson, 1803; Sir Richard le Fleming, 1823; Fletcher Fleming, 1857.

CHARITIES.

The School.—M. Ambrose, rector of Grasmere, in 1685 endowed the school with £50; Anthony Dawson also gave £7, the interest to be applied towards the support of a schoolmaster; and William Waters £80 for the same purpose. In 1812 Mrs. Dorothy Knott left £100 Navy Three-per-cents, for the education of five poor children of Grasmere school. These various sums have been invested and now produce £15 a year. The school-house is a neat commodious building, erected in 1854, at a cost of about £400. It possesses accommodation for 100 children, and has an average attendance of sixty-five. The trustees are the rector and seven sidesmen.

Poor Money.—In the return made to parliament in 1786, it is stated, amongst the charitable donations for the poor of Grasmere, that Edward Patridge, in 1740, left £5; John Watson, in 1752, £5; Edward Benson, in 1754, £6 13s. 4d.; unknown, £33 6s. 8d.: making in all £50. The interest of this money is generally given away on St. Thomas' Day amongst the poor of Grasmere township.

Holme's and Waters' Gift.—John Holme, in 1777, left by will, £200 to the poor of Grasmere. This will was never executed; but William Waters, brother-in-law of John Holme, paid the £200 to the intent that the charity should take effect after his own and his wife's death. This money is now out at interest, which is distributed at Lady Day, yearly, to poor persons not receiving parish relief.

This township contains numerous handsome residences, which impart a pleasing variety to the beautiful scenery of the neighbourhood.

AMBLESIDE ABOVE STOCK.

The township and chapelry of Ambleside extends into the parishes of Grasmere and Windermere, and will be found fully described in our account of the latter parish. The portion of the chapelry in Grasmere parish comprises 1,583 acres, and its rateable value is £2,847 16s. 3d. It contained in 1841, 531 inhabitants; and in 1851, 766, who are chiefly resident in the town or village of Ambleside. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the bobbin manufacture. The township is included in the Earl of Lonsdale's manor of Windermere. The landowners are James C. Wilson, Esq.; Richard L. Watson, Esq.; William Pratt, Esq.; the executors of the late Thomas Newton, Esq.; John Mackereth, Esq.; Benson Harrison, Esq.; and several small proprietors. Ambleside Hall, long the seat of the ancient family of Braithwaites, the progenitors of the Braithwaites of Warcop and Burnside, stood near the junction of the Keswick and Penrith roads.

LANGDALE CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises Great and Little Langdale, and the manor and demesne of Baysbrown. It is bounded on the north by the township of Grasmere, on the east by the joint township of Rydal and Loughrigg, on the south by Lancashire, and on the west by Cumberland.

The area of Langdale is 7,702 acres, and its rateable value £1,337. The population in 1801 was 300; in 1811, 297; in 1821, 317; in 1831, 314; in 1841, 442; and in 1851, 530; who are principally resident in the different hamlets. Agriculture is the chief employment; but about ninety of the inhabitants are engaged in the Elterwater gunpowder manufactory and the slate quarries.

In 1375-6 Joan de Coupland died seised of the manor of Windermere, with its members and appurtenances, and amongst the rest the hamlet of Langdale. In the 14th Elizabeth (1571-2) William Parr, marquiss of Northampton, died seised of the manor of Langdale, and of divers messuages and tenements in Langdale; and in the particulars of the dower assigned to his widow mention is made of Langdale, the total yearly rent of which is said to be £3 6s. 10d. When Queen Catherine's survey was made in 1677, the amount of customary rents arising from her lands here was £5 4s. 11d. Great Langdale is now held under the crown by the Earl of Lonsdale as part of the manor of Windermere.

Little Langdale was long held by the Penningtons of Muncaster, who sold most of the tenements to freehold about the year 1692. The rest of the lordship was afterwards purchased by the Philipsons of Calgarth Park.

Baysbrown, within Langdale chapelry, was given by William de Lancaster, baron of Kendal, to Conishead Priory, in Lancashire, but after the suppression of the monastic institutions, the chief part of the tenements was purchased by Gawen Braithwaite, and the demesne subsequently became the property of John Atkinson, Esq., of Cockermouth. It now belongs to Benson Harrison, Esq., of Ambleside.

The landowners are Benson Harrison, Esq.; R. L. Watson, Esq.; the Elterwater Gunpowder Company; the Rev. Fletcher Fleming; John Robinson, Esq.; and a number of small proprietors.

The village of Great Langdale is five miles west of Ambleside.

THE CHURCH.

Langdale church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a neat Gothic edifice, at the foot of Silverhow, erected in 1857, within the old chapel-yard, at a cost of £1,600, defrayed by John Robinson, Esq., of Elterwater Place, and Edward B. Wheatley, Esq., of High Close, Loughrigg. It comprises nave, chancel, and square embattled tower, in which is a peal of six bells. The church contains 300 sittings, the whole of which are free. The chancel is laid with encaustic tiles of various patterns. The ancient salary of the curate was £6 4s. 3d. a year, but since 1743 the living has been augmented from Queen Anne's Bounty with the sum of £806, with which four small estates have been purchased. In 1843 it received a further augmentation of £28 yearly; so that the living is now worth about £104 a year. All the rites of the Church of England are performed here. The patronage is vested in the rector of Grasmere for the time being.

INCUMBENTS.—Richard Steele, —; Thomas Jackson, —; William Jackson, his son, —; Daniel Green, —; Owen Lloyd, —; Stephen Birkett, —.

The parsonage is a commodious house, erected in 1845, at a cost of £400, one half of which was obtained from the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, the remainder being raised by local subscription.

The school was erected in 1824, by the Elterwater Gunpowder Company, in consideration of a piece of land having been given them for the use of their mill. It was endowed in 1854 by the late John Braithwaite, Esq., of Orrest Head, Windermere, with £1,000, the interest of which, with the pence of the children, is its only support. The average attendance of scholars is about fifty.

Elterwater village, in this township, is four and a half miles west of Ambleside. Elterwater lake is also in this township. The gunpowder works here were commenced in 1824. There are also three slate quarries.

Elterwater Hall and High Close are handsome residences.

Wasdale's Charity.—Robert Wasdale, by will, dated 12th January, 1655, gave £20 to the poor of the chapelry of Langdale, the interest to be divided amongst the poor on Easter Sunday.

Busk Rent Charge.—There is a rent charge of five shillings payable out of an estate called Busk, in Little Langdale, which has long been given to the poor.

Bridge End Charity.—By indenture, dated December 4th, 1746, Dorothy and Mary Benson, in consideration of £51 4s. poor stock, paid over by the churchwardens and overseers of Langdale, conveyed several closes of land, near Hall Garth, in Tibberthwaite, Lancashire, and sixteen cattlegates on Tibberthwaite Fell, with other appurtenances, upon trust, for the benefit of the poor of Langdale. In 1856 an act of parliament was obtained for the enclosure of Tibberthwaite Fell. John Robinson, Esq., of Elterwater Hall, purchased the sixteen cattlegates, &c., belonging to the poor of Langdale, for £200, which sum has been invested in one of the government funds. This charity is now worth about £13 a year, and the amount is divided amongst the poor, by the trustees, at Easter and Christmas in each year.

Brockbank's Gift.—John Brockbank gave £20, the interest to be divided amongst poor housekeepers of this township at Christmas.

Sawrey's Gift.—Miles Sawrey, by will, dated 17th March, 1774, bequeathed to trustees the sum of £20, the interest of which he directed should be distributed on the anniversary of the day of his decease amongst four poor widows of Langdale, of the Church of England, and not in receipt of parish relief.

RYDAL AND LITTLE HELWISS.

This township comprises an area of 5,200 acres, and its rateable value is £1,861 15s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 230; in 1811, 275; in 1821, 299; in 1831, 315; in 1841, 343; and in 1851, 388; who are chiefly resident in the village of Rydal and the hamlet of Loughrigg.

The manor of Rydal was granted to Roger de Lancaster by Margaret de Brus, widow of Robert de Ross of Wark, and sister and one of the co-heirs of Peter de Brus, who married Helwisse, sister and co-heir of the third William de Lancaster, baron of Kendal. This grant was confirmed by Edward I. in 1274. Roger de Lancaster had three sons—John, William, and Christopher, from the latter of whom came the Lancasters of Sockbridge. John, the eldest, died in 1315, without issue male, when the inheritance was transferred by entail to John de Lancaster, of Howgill Castle, the next heir male being son and heir of the second brother, William. This John de Lancaster of Howgill and Rydal died in 1351, leaving issue Sir William de Lancaster, whose grandson, Sir John de Lancaster, appears to have been living in 1427. He died without issue male, leaving four daughters, the second of whom, Isabel, became the wife of Sir Thomas le Fleming, Knt., of Coniston, with whom he had Rydal, and it has since continued to be held by his descendants, Lady le Fleming being the present possessor of the manorial rights and privileges. The principal landowners are Lady le Fleming; R. T. Branton, Esq.; Miss Cookson; and Edward Bury, Esq.

Rydal Hall stands in the midst of a park containing great numbers of forest trees. The celebrated waterfalls are within the park. The fall below the house is beheld from the window of an old summer-house. "Here," says Mason, the biographer of Gray, "nature has performed everything in little, which she usually executes on her larger scale; and, on that account, like the miniature painter, seems to have finished every part of it in a studied manner; not a little fragment of rock thrown into the basin,—not a single stem of brushwood that starts from its craggy sides, but has its picturesque meaning; and the little central stream, dashing down a cleft of the darkest coloured stone, produces an effect of light and shade beautiful beyond description."

Fleming of Rydal.

The first of this family on record is

Sir MICHAEL LE FLEMING, Knt., a kinsman of Baldwin, the fifth earl of Flouder, who being sent to assist William the Norman, Baldwin's brother-in-law, was some years afterwards employed by the successful monarch against the Scots upon the borders; for which, and other services, he obtained the custody of Glendon, the manor of Alkitham, and other lands in Furness, together with the castle of Carnarvon, the lordship and manor of Beckermot, and other estates in Cumberland. He died shortly after 1153, and was interred in the abbey church of Furness. His second son,

Sir RICHARD LE FLEMING, Knt., was the ancestor of the Flemings of Rydal. He died in the reign of King John, and was succeeded by his only son and heir,

Sir JOHN LE FLEMING, Knt., of Beckermot, who, by a deed without date, conveyed to his son Richard all his lands in Conpland. He also gave the patronage of the church of Arlecion and land in Great Beckermot to the abbey of Calder in 1244. He died in the reign of Henry III. and was buried in the abbey church of Calder. He was succeeded by his son and heir,

Sir RICHARD LE FLEMING, Knt., of Beckermot. This gentleman married Elizabeth, sister and heir of Adam de Uswick and John de Uswick, by which marriage he became lord of the manor of Coniston, in Lancashire. After this marriage the family removed to Coniston Hall and Carnarvon Castle, the old residence at Beckermot was allowed to fall into decay and ruin, the demesne lands being let to the customary tenants. Sir Richard was succeeded by his son and heir, JOHN LE FLEMING, Knt., of Coniston, who in 1299 took part in the expedition then made into Scotland. He had issue two sons, Rainerus and Hugh, the former of whom succeeded his father.

RAINERUS LE FLEMING, Knt., of Coniston, gave to the community of St. Mary's at York, two oxgangs of land in Rottington, and also one villen in the same town. This Rainerus appears to have been a royal purveyor in these parts, as he is known as Rainerus Dapifer. He left issue,

Sir JOHN LE FLEMING, Knt., of Coniston, who had issue two sons and a daughter. The eldest son,

WILLIAM LE FLEMING, of Coniston, died without issue either before his father or soon afterwards, for

Sir JOHN LE FLEMING, Knt., of Coniston, appears to have been heir to his father in 1333. By an inquisition taken at Ulverstone, after the death of this Sir John, it appears that he deceased in 1353, and that

Sir RICHARD LE FLEMING, Knt., of Coniston, was his son and heir. He had also another son, Robert le Fleming. Sir Richard married Catherine, daughter, or sister, of Sir John de Kirby, by whom he had issue three sons and a daughter. He died shortly after 1392, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir THOMAS LE FLEMING, Knt., of Coniston, who was twice married. By his first wife Margaret, daughter of William de Berdesly, he had no issue. His second wife was Isabel, daughter of Sir Thomas Laybourne, Knt., by whom he had issue two sons, Thomas and John. He died previous to 1418, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir THOMAS LE FLEMING, Knt., of Coniston, who married during his father's lifetime Isabel, daughter and co-heir of Sir John de Lancaster, of Rydal and Howgill Castle; this was the first introduction of the Le Flemings into Westmoreland, and Rydal henceforth became the chief seat of the Fleming family. Sir Thomas by his wife, Isabel, had issue, besides a younger son, William, a son and heir,

JOHN FLEMING, Esq., of Rydal, who married Joan, daughter of Broughton of Broughton Tower, and by her had issue JOHN, his heir. By a second wife, Anne, he had no children. He appears to have been dead in 1434, for in that year there was an award, whereby it was ordered that Anne, late wife of John Fleming, should enjoy for her dower lands at Cloughton, in Lonsdale. He was succeeded by his son,

JOHN FLEMING, Esq., of Rydal, who in 1514 was escheator for the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland. This gentleman married a daughter of Sir Hugh Lowther of Lowther, by whom he had issue six children, a son and five daughters. He died before 1532, and was buried in the church of Grasmere. He was succeeded by his son,

HUGH FLEMING, Esq., of Rydal, who was also escheator for the counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland in 1541. He married Joan, or Jane, daughter and co-heir of Sir Richard Hudleston of Milom, in Cumberland, by whom he had issue four sons and a daughter. He died in 1557. His eldest son,

ANTHONY FLEMING, Esq., of Rydal, was thrice married. His first wife was a daughter of Sir Geoffrey Middleton, Knt., of Middleton Hall, but by her he had no issue. His second wife was Elizabeth, daughter of William Hutton, Esq., of Hutton-in the Forest, and by her he had an only son, WILLIAM, who succeeded his grandfather. By his third wife, Jane, daughter of John Rignaden, Esq., by whom he had issue Thomas and Charles.

WILLIAM FLEMING, Esq., of Rydal, succeeded his grandfather. In 1555 this gentleman sold some tenements at Loughrigg into freehold. He was twice married. By his first wife, Margaret, daughter of Sir John Lamplugh, Knt., he had issue three daughters; by his second wife, Agnes, daughter of Robert Bindloss, Esq., beside four daughters, he had

- I. JOHN, his heir.
- II. Thomas, who died without issue.
- III. William, who died also without issue.
- IV. Daniel, who married Isabel, daughter of James Braithwaite, Esq., of Ambleside, by whom he had issue,

1. WILLIAM, who succeeded to the whole inheritance as heir at law.
2. John, who died without issue.
3. Thomas.
4. Joseph.
5. Daniel.
1. Agnes, married to Christopher Dudley, Esq., of Yanwath.
2. Dorothy, married to Andrew Hudleston, Esq., of Hutton John.
3. Mary, married to Thomas Brougham, Esq., of Scales Hall, in Cumberland.

v. Joseph, who died without issue.

On Mr. Fleming's decease he was succeeded by his eldest son, JOHN FLEMING, Esq., of Rydal, who was a justice of the peace for Westmoreland from 1609 until 1624, about which time he became a Catholic. In 1629 he procured a supersedeas for his recusancy, and an acquittance for his knighthood money; and in 1631 he obtained a license (being a Catholic) to travel above five miles from Rydal. In the same year he paid to the king for his recusancy after the rate of £30 a year; and two years after according to the proportion of £50 a year. This gentleman was thrice married. His first wife was Alice, eldest daughter of Sir Francis Duckett, Knt., of Grayrigg, but he had no issue by her. Bridget, daughter of Sir William Norris, Kat., of Speke, in Lincolnshire, his second wife, died also without issue. His third wife was Dorothy, daughter of Sir Thomas Strickland, Knt., of Sizergh, by whom he had issue a son and two daughters. He died in 1642, aged about sixty-eight, and was buried in Grasmere church, in the burying-place of the lords of Rydal. He gave by his will £2,000 each to his daughters for their portions.

WILLIAM FLEMING, the eldest son, was only fourteen years of age at the time of his father's demise; he died unmarried before he came of age, upon which his sisters' portions became augmented to £10,000, but the family estates went over to his uncle Daniel (see above) the next heir male, whose eldest son and heir,

WILLIAM FLEMING, Esq., thus became of Rydal. This gentleman, in 1642, had a major's commission from the Earl of Newcastle in a regiment of foot of which Sir Henry Fletcher of Carleton Hall, was lieutenant-colonel. He subsequently accepted a lieutenant-colonel's commission in a regiment of foot, but his services were not called into requisition. Mr. Fleming married Alice, daughter of Roger Kirkby, Esq., by whom he had issue,

- I. DANIEL, his heir.
- II. ROGER.
- III. William.

IV. John, who died young.

V. John, who was lost at sea.

VI. Alexander, a merchant at Newcastle.

I. Isabel.

He died at Coniston Hall in 1653, in the forty-fourth year of his age, and was buried in the chancel of the church of Grasmere. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

SIR DANIEL FLEMING, Knt., of Rydal Hall, co. Cumberland, M.P. for Cookermouth in the latter end of the 17th century; for which borough, his election being contested, the contest cost him £201. Sir Daniel, who was a distinguished antiquarian, married Barbara, eldest daughter of Sir Henry Fletcher, Bart., of Hutton, and had, with other issue,

- I. WILLIAM, } successive baronets.
- II. GEORGE, }
- III. Michael, a distinguished soldier, major in the army, and M.P. for Westmoreland; married Miss Dorothy Benson, and left issue.
- I. WILLIAM, who succeeded as third baronet.
1. Susan, married to Michael Knott, Esq., of Rydal.

IV. Roger, in holy orders, vicar of Brigham; married Margaret Moorhouse, and left an only son,

Daniel, land-surveyor, of Whitehaven, who married Mary, daughter of Joseph Dixon, of the same town, by whom he had, with other issue, a son

ROGER, father of Daniel, who inherited as fifth baronet.

RICHARD, present baronet.

Michael.

Barbara.

Isabella.

Sir Daniel Fleming died in 1700, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

WILLIAM FLEMING, Esq., of Rydal Hall, who represented the county of Westmoreland in parliament from 1696 to 1707, and was created a baronet 4th October, 1703, with remainder, in default of male issue, to the male descendants of his father. Sir William married Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Rowlandson, Esq., of Kendal, by whom he had three daughters,

- I. Dorothy, married to Edward Wilson, Esq.
- II. Barbara, married to Edward Parker, Esq.
- III. Catherine, married to Sir Peter Leicester, Bart.

Sir William dying thus without male issue, in 1736, the title devolved upon his brother,

Sir GEORGE, in holy orders, and lord bishop of Carlisle, to which see he was appointed 30th October, 1734. His lordship married Catherine, daughter of Robert Jefferson, Esq., and had issue,

- I. William, M.A., archdeacon of Carlisle; married in 1739, Dorothy, daughter of Daniel Wilson, Esq., of Dallam Tower, co. Westmoreland; and died in the lifetime of his father, leaving an only daughter, Catherine, married to Thomas Ayscough, Esq.
- I. Mary, married to Humphrey Senhouse, Esq., of Netherhall, in Cumberland.
- II. Barbara, died young.
- III. Catherine, married to Joseph Daere Appleby, Esq., of Kirklington.
- IV. Mildred, married to Edward Stanley, Esq., of Ponsonby Hall, co. Cumberland.

His lordship died 2nd July, 1747, but leaving no male issue, the title devolved upon his nephew,

Sir WILLIAM (refer to issue of Sir Daniel Fleming, father of the first baronet), who married Elizabeth, daughter of Christopher Petty, Esq., of Skipton-in-Craven, co. York, by whom he had issue,

1. MICHAEL, his successor.
2. Amelia, died unmarried.
3. Barbara, married to Edward Parker, of Brownsholm, co. York, and died 23rd April, 1813.
- III. Elizabeth, married to Andrew Hudleston, Esq., of Hutton John, co. Cumberland,
- IV. Dorothy, married to George Edward Stanley, Esq.

Sir William, from his veneration for antiquity, being desirous of restoring the original orthography of the family name, by re-adopting the particle "le," incorporated it with his son's Christian name at the baptismal font, which son succeeded at his decease, in 1756, as

Sir MICHAEL LE FLEMING, the twenty-third in succession from Sir Richard le Fleming, the progenitor of the family. Sir Michael married Diana, only daughter and heir of Thomas, 14th Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire, by whom he had an only daughter and heir, Anne Frederica Elizabeth, who was married to his successor (in 1806),

Sir DANIEL. (Refer to issue of Sir Daniel Fleming, father of the first baronet). This gentleman died without male issue in 1821, when the title devolved upon his brother,

Sir RICHARD FLEMING, of Rydal, co. Westmoreland; in holy orders, M.A.; born 4th November, 1791; succeeded his brother as sixth baronet, in 1827; married 4th September, 1825, Sarah, third daughter of the late W. B. Bradshaw, Esq., of Halton Hall, co. Lancaster, and has issue,

1. MICHAEL, born 6th April, 1828.
2. William, born 17th October, 1832.
3. Elizabeth Sarah Anne Bradshaw.
4. Isabella Maria.

Sir Richard is rector of Grasmere and Windermere in Westmoreland.

Creation.—4th October, 1705.

Arms.—Gn., a fret, arg.

Crest.—A serpent, nowed, holding in his mouth a garland of olives and vines, all proper.

Motto.—Pax, copie, sapientia.

The village of Rydal is placed in a narrow gorge, formed by the advance of Loughrigg Fell and Rydal Nab, near the lower extremity of Rydal water, one mile and a quarter from Ambleside.

THE CHAPEL.

Rydal chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome Gothic building, erected by Lady le Fleming in 1824, at a cost of £1,500, its hexagonal tower ornamented with pinnacles, is a beautiful object from various points. The same lady also endowed it with land worth £10 a year, and with money, which, added to an allotment from Queen Anne's Bounty, produces about £100 a year.

The living is in the patronage of Lady le Fleming, and incumbency of the Rev. Fletcher Fleming.

The school is supported by Lady le Fleming, who pays for the education of all the poor children in the neighbourhood.

CHARITIES.

Skelbrig School.—The sum of 7s. 6d. is paid out of an estate at Loughrigg Fold, for the benefit of Skelbrig school, in this township.

Mackreth's Gift.—This is a rent charge of 20s. a year on the estate of Clappersgate, in this township, supposed to have been charged by a person of the name of Mackreth, to be divided between the poor of Brailtry, in Lancashire, and of Rydal and Loughrigg.

Poor Money.—There is in this township a sum of £20, which is lent out upon the toils of the turnpike-road from Kendal to Ambleside, the interest of which, amounting to 20s., is carried to the general account of the poor rates.

A short distance from Rydal Hall is Rydal Mount, for many years the residence of Wordsworth; it stands on a projection of the hill called Nab Sear, and is approached by the road leading to the hall. It is, as Mrs. Hemans described it, a "lovely cottage-like building, almost hidden by a profusion of roses and ivy." The grounds, laid out in a great measure by the poet himself, though but of circumscribed dimensions, are so artfully while seeming to be so artlessly planned, as to appear of considerable extent. From a grassy mound in front, "commanding a view always so rich, and sometimes so brightly solemn, that one can well imagine its influence traceable in many of the poet's writings, you catch a gleam of Windermere over the grove tops: close at hand are Rydal Hall, and its ancient woods; right opposite the Loughrigg fells, ferny, rocky, and sylvan; and, to the right, Rydal mere, scarcely seen through embowering trees, while just below, the chapel lifts up its little tower."

Near to Rydal Mount is Glen Rothay, the seat and property of William Ball, Esq. Loughrigg lies between the rivers Brathay and Rothay, from which it rises boldly into a lofty and romantic fell, extending from half a mile to two miles west of Ambleside. It contains a tarn of twelve acres in extent, and commands fine views of Windermere, Rydal, and Elterwater Lakes. Fox How, the residence of the late Dr. Arnold, and Fox Ghyll, the seat of Hornby Roughsedge, Esq. are in this district, a short distance from Ambleside.

Roughsedge of Foxgryll.

EDWARD ROUGHSEGE, Esq., son of Robert Roughsedge, married Elizabeth Hankinson, and had, with three daughters, Anne, Catharine, and Jane), one son,

The Rev. ROBERT HANKINSON ROUGHSEGE, M.A., rector of Liverpool, who married, 1st November, 1773, Elizabeth, daughter of Joshua Waring, Esq., by Elizabeth Hampson, his wife, and had issue (besides HORSBY ROUGHSEGE, Esq., of Foxgryll), five other sons, all deceased—(Edward, the eldest, died 13th January, 1822, at Singapore, after a residence of twenty-seven years in India, in the military and political service of the East India Company)—and six daughters, viz.,

1. Ann, married to the Rev. William Black, rector of Blyden, Gloucester, and is deceased.
- II. Lydia, married to the Rev. Thomas Johnson, minister of St. Michael's Church, Liverpool, and is deceased.
- III. Mary, married to the Rev. James Gildart, of Finch House, near Liverpool, and is deceased.

IV. Catharine, died unmarried.

V. Elizabeth, married to the Rev. Thomas Henry Headcliff, vicar of Look, co. Stafford.

VI. Jane, married to James Alexander Crofters, Esq., of Warrington, co. Lancashire.

The Rev. R. H. Roughsedge died 28th September, 1829, and was succeeded by his son, HORSBY ROUGHSEGE, Esq., of Foxgryll, co. Westmoreland, J.P. and D.L.; born 12th July, 1782; married, 31st July, 1817, Margaret Elizabeth, second daughter of Richard Hodgson, Esq., of Westhouse, co. York, and had an only surviving child, Elizabeth, married, 10th August, 1841, to the Rev. Edward James Geoffrey Hurry, M.A., third son of the Rev. Geoffrey Hornby, rector of Bury, co. Lancaster.

Arms.—Vert, on a bend, arg.; cotised, erm., vert, between two covered cups, a lion, passant, guardant.

Crest.—A demi lion.

Motto.—Restra verba.

HEVERSHAM PARISH.

HEVERSHAM parish is bounded by the parishes of Kendal, Barton, and Bitham, and by a small part of Cartmel fells. It extends northwards from Milnthorpe to Crosthwaite a distance of about eight miles, and is about three miles in breadth. It is intersected by the rivers Kent and Belo, the Kendal and Lancaster canal, and the Lancaster and Carlisle railway, as well as by several small rivulets, which wind through picturesque valleys, between diversified fells, scars, crags, and fertile undulating grounds, studded with hamlets and farm-houses. The parish comprises the townships of Heversham-with-Milnthorpe, Crosthwaite and Lyth, Hincaster, Levens, Preston Richard, Sedgwick, and Stainton, whose united area is 19,749 acres.

HEVERSHAM WITH MILNTHORPE.

The area of this township is 2,880 acres, and its rateable value £6,081 2s. The population, in 1801, was 908; in 1811, 1,138; in 1821, 1,401; in 1831, 1,509; in 1841, 1,599; and in 1851, 1,534; who are chiefly engaged in agricultural pursuits, a small number are, however, employed in a small factory at Milnthorpe.

At the time of the Norman conquest, the manor of Heversham, or, at least, a part of it, was the property of Tostig Earl of Northumberland. When Domesday Survey was taken it was held by Roger de Poitou. It came afterwards to the barons of Kendal, and was given by the first William de Lancaster, in frank marriage with his daughter Agnes, to Alexander de Windsor, who, in 1279-80 obtained a grant of a market and fair at Heversham, but which appears to have been held at Milnthorpe, which seems to have been originally a parcel of the manor of Heversham. The greater portion of the manor appears to have been given at some subsequent period to the abbey of St. Mary at York. The Stricklands of Sizergh also occur as landowners here, for in 1306 Walter de Strickland had a grant of free warren in his lands in Heversham. After the suppression of the monasteries, King Philip and Queen Mary granted the manor of Heversham to Edward Moyses, Richard Foster, and Richard Bowskell, or Buskell, from one of whose descendants Jasper Buskell, the hall, demesne, and manor were purchased by Edwd. Wilson, Esq., of Nether Levens, from whom they have descended to the present proprietor, G. E. Wilson, Esq. Heversham Hall, now a farm-house, stands in a vale west of the village. Courts leet are occasionally held here by the lord of the manor. The Jasper Buskell above mentioned, besides what he sold to Edward Wilson, sold a part of the manor to Sir James Bellingham, of Upper Levens, the last of whose name sold the same to Colonel James Grahame: it is now held by the Hon. Mary Howard, who holds courts leet for the same at Milnthorpe.

The village of Heversham is pleasantly situated on the Kendal road, a mile and a quarter from Milnthorpe, and six miles south-by-west of the town of Kendal.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. Peter, or St. Mary, comprises nave, aisles, chancel, with two chapels (belonging to Upper Levens and Lower Levens) for aisles, and a western tower containing three bells. The architecture is of different ages, from oldest transition Norman to latest Perpendicular. The east window is filled with stained glass, Christ and the Four Evangelists being the principal figures. There is an ancient epitaph on one of the Bellingham family (1625), in Upper Levens chapel; also the arms of the same family. A fire occurred in 1601, which consumed the north aisle and all the old monuments. There are several mural tablets. Shortly after the conquest, the church of Heversham was granted, by Ivo de Tailbois, to the abbey of St. Mary at York, and afterwards confirmed to the abbot and convent. After the dissolution, Queen Mary, in 1553, granted the rectory and advowson to Trinity College, Cambridge, except the corn tithes of Crosthwaite, which had been previously granted by Edward VI. to John Southcoat and Henry Cheverton. The said college has still the patronage of the vicarage, which is valued in the King's Book at £36. 13s. 4d. At the enclosure of the commons in 1803, the tithes of the whole parish were commuted for an allotment of about 650 acres of land given to the vicarage, and an allotment of 663 acres, with the Plumgarth's estate in Strickland Ketel—purchased by such of the townships as had not common land—given to Trinity College in lieu of rectorial tithes. The value of the living is now about £555. The parish registers commence in 1600, and are continued to the present day. The churchwardens' book also commences at the same time.

VICARS.—Mr. Whitnell occurs 1605; Mr. Calvert, 1617; Mr. Cole, 1645; Mr. Tatham, 1694; Mr. Wallace, 1658; Mr. Biggs restored 1663; Mr. Milner, 1678; Mr. Ridley, 1686; Mr. Farmer, 1692; Mr. Williams, 1723; Mr. Murgatroyd, 1627; Mr. Smyth, 1734; Henry Wilson, 1757; George Lawson, 1767; R. W. Evans, 1842.

The vicarage is a gabled house, erected in 1844.

CHARITIES.

Some of the following charities extend over the whole parish, while others are confined to one or more townships, or divisions of townships:—

The Grammar School.—Heversham Grammar School was founded by Edward Wilson, Esq., in 1619, in order to increase, maintain, and continue religion, good learning, and discipline in the parish. It is endowed with twenty-six burgage messuages and tenements in Kendal, and a rent charge of £3 out of Dawson's Close, in Strickland Ketel. Being without a master from 1698 till 1737, the school was suffered to decay, but was rebuilt in the latter year by Richard Watson, bishop of Llandaff, and William Preston, bishop of Ferns, in Ireland, both of whom had received the rudiments of their education here. In 1788 Henry Wilson, then vicar of Heversham, in conjunction with the associates of Dr. Bray, founded a library in the school, and prevailed upon the inhabitants to subscribe £230 to purchase a dwelling-house for the master, with two fields and an allotment of moss land, so that the master's income from the school endowment is now upwards of £50 a year, having received an allotment of land at the enclosure. The school is open to all the boys of the parish free of charge, except for writing and arithmetic. The founder of the school endowed it with two exhibitions of £40 each,—one to Queen's College, Oxford, and the other to Trinity College, Cambridge. These exhibitions were withheld for many years, but were recovered in 1672, with £500 arrears and interest; they are called the Dallam Tower exhibitions, and are worth about £45 per annum, and are tenable for four years. At Magdalene College, Cambridge, are four Milner scholarships, of about £70 a year each, appropriated to scholars from the grammar schools of Heversham, Leeds, and Halifax. Heversham is also one of the twelve schools entitled to send a candidate for the Lady Elizabeth Hastings' exhibitions, now increased in number from five to ten, and worth from £75 to £90 a year each, and tenable for five years. There is also the Rigge exhibition of about £10 a year, at Queen's College, Oxford, connected with this school. The number of pupils at present is about sixty-five. The school is beautifully and healthfully situated on the side of the hill called Heversham Head, and commands a fine view of Morecambe Bay.

Woodhouse Estate, including Martindale's Charity.—In 1793 the Woodhouse estate was purchased for £350, being the amount of an ancient poor stock belonging to several townships of this parish, and of £84, the residuary legacy of Agnes Martindale, which latter is known by the name of the Martindale Money. This poor stock seems to have consisted of £95 apprentice money; 424 parish stock; £202 town stock; £12 left to the six poorest widows in Milnthorpe town; and £17 communion money. The rent of the Woodhouse estate is divided according to the money advanced; a proportionate share being set apart as Agnes Martindale's money, which, according to her will, is divided amongst the poor of Beathwaite Green, in Levens township, the town of Heversham, and the town of Milnthorpe. The proportion of the apprentice money is divided amongst all the townships of the parish, except Crosthwaite and Lyth, and the interest of the poor money is divided in a similar manner.

Bread Money.—There is in this parish the sum of £60, which has arisen from the accumulations of the communion money. £50 of it has been taken by the parish and applied in the repairs of the church; but interest at five per cent is allowed for it. The remaining £10 is out at interest. The interest of these two sums, together with the proportionate rent for the sum of £17 communion money, laid out in the purchase of the Woodhouse estate, as just mentioned, is added to the communion money, and given away in bread every Sunday.

Heversham and Levens.—Atkinson's Charity.—Thomas Atkinson, by will, in 1811, left £21 to the churchwardens, and directed that the interest should be given to the poor of Heversham and Levens.

Milnthorpe and Heversham.—Gibson's Charity.—Robert Gibson, by will, in 1701, left a rent charge of 40s. a year, which he directed should be given to some poor child of Milnthorpe and Heversham, when going out apprentice.

Heversham and Leasgill.—Johnson's Gift.—Robert Johnson, Esq., by will, dated 31st August, 1802, left £200 upon trust, directing the interest to be distributed in bread to the poor of Heversham and Leasgill only, without regard to whether they receive relief or not. The vicar receives a guinea from this charity for preaching a commemoration sermon on the first Sunday in the year.

For other charities see the different townships.

THE TOWN OF MINTHORPE.

Milnthorpe is a small market town forming a joint township with Heversham. It is situated on the north side of the river Belo, near the estuary of the Kent, seven miles and a half south-west of Kendal by road, and eight miles and a half by railway. The principal street runs from east to west, nearly parallel to the river, over which is a bridge of one arch. Milnthorpe is a member of the port of Lancaster, but vessels can seldom get nearer to it than Arnside or Haverbrack, so that the business done here, the only port in Westmoreland, is very trifling. There are a corn-mill and a paper-mill; some twine and sacking are made. The market was held on Friday, but has been discontinued. There are fairs for cattle and sheep on May 11th and October 17th. A cattle fair, established in 1849, is held every alternate Tuesday, at Milnthorpe station, about a mile from the town.

THE CHURCH.

- * Milnthorpe chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas, is a neat Gothic structure, erected in 1837 as a chapel-of-ease to the parish church, at a cost of about £1,200. It comprises nave, aisles, and embattled tower. The east window is partly filled with stained glass. There is a marble monument to the memory of Eleanor Blewert. The living is a curacy in the patronage of the vicar of Heversham. The chapel was endowed by the late Mrs. Richardson, of Kendal, with £1,000, which has been invested in land now worth £100 a year. The chapel includes within its jurisdiction the town of Milnthorpe and the hamlet of Ackenthwaite. The Rev. Nicholas Padwick is the first and present incumbent.

The Methodists have a chapel here.

The national school established here in 1819, is supported chiefly by subscription, and attended by about sixty children of both sexes. The late Daniel Wilson, of Dallam Tower, gave the site for the school.

About a quarter of a mile from Milnthorpe, in a healthy situation, is a workhouse of the Kendal union, with vagrant ward and infirmary. It was erected in 1813, at a cost of £4,990, in accordance with an act of parliament passed in the 22nd George III. It has apartments for 284 paupers, but the average number is only about 134. In connection with the workhouse is an extensive garden. (For the statistics of the union see Kendal.)

The hamlets of Ackenthwaite, Deepthwaite, Leasgill, Rowell, and Woodhouses, are all, except part of Leasgill, in the township of Heversham-with-Milnthorpe, distant from half a mile to two miles south of the latter.

Woodhouse, the seat and property of Mrs. Heslam, is a modern mansion, erected in 1856, at a cost of £1,200. There are many other good houses in this township.

Heversham Head, to the north-east of the church, commands a most extensive view of the country round about Farlon Knot, Morecambe Bay, the village of Lindale, Levens, the lake mountains, &c.

Richard Watson, bishop of Llandaff, was born in this parish. His father was master of the grammar school. On a monument erected to his memory by his son (as is supposed) he is described as "lude magister laud inutilis." William Preston, bishop of Ferns, was also a native of this parish. The two bishops were educated at the grammar school, and in the year 1737, at their joint expense, repaired the school, which had been suffered to fall into decay.

CROSTHWAITE AND LYTH CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is a picturesque and highly cultivated district, extending from four to eight miles north-north-west of Macclesport, and comprising the hamlets of Bowl and Bridge, Crosthwaite Church Town, Crosthwaite Green, How, Hattersley Head, Pool Bank, Raw, and Tarn Side, with a number of dispersed dwellings. It contains but one township.

The area of Crosthwaite and Lyth is 7,956 acres, and its estimated value £5,819. In 1801 it contained 200 inhabitants; in 1811, 606; in 1821, 781; in 1831, 721; in 1841, 717; and in 1851, 761; who are chiefly engaged in agriculture.

Crosthwaite and Lyth consist of part of the Richmond and Marquis Fees, and part of the Lumley Fee. When the inquisition of Queen Catherine's lands were taken in 1676, it was found that the township contained sixty-three tenements of the Richmond Fee, of the yearly customary rent of £19 3s. 7d.; and two tenements of the Marquis Fee, of the rent of 15s.; of the Lumley Fee there were about fifty tenements. The manorial rights are at present held by the Earl of Lonsdale and the Hon. Mary Howard, who hold courts leet here, but the greater number of the properties here are free. The landowners are John Wakefield, Esq.; Rev. Marsham Argles; Frank A. Argles, Esq.; and a number of freeholders.

THE CHURCH.

The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, stands near the small but pleasant village of Church Town, in the centre of the vale of Crosthwaite, which stretches in a westerly direction as far as Bowland Bridge, near Cartmell Fells. It was rebuilt, by the inhabitants, about forty years ago, and will accommodate about 300 persons. The original chapel was very ancient, but was not made parochial till the reign of Queen Mary, 1556, when the Bishop of Chester, in consideration of its great distance from the mother church, granted a license that "mass shall be celebrated in the said chapel, the canonical hours rehearsed, the bodies of the dead buried, and the sacraments administered by fit priests canonically ordained, having first been approved by the vicar of Heversham for the time being." About the year 1580 the inhabitants of the chapelry entered into an agreement with the rest of the parish to contribute towards the support of the mother church, and to pay 17s. yearly to the parish clerk. In 1620 Mr. William Gilpin built the chancel, and gave £50 for three bells for this chapel. The living is a perpetual curacy in the gift of the landowners. Since 1716 it has been augmented with £1,000 from Queen Anne's Bounty, £200 raised by subscription, and the interest of £400 of the £2,000 left in 1817 by Tobias Atkinson, who directed that the interest of £300 should be paid to a schoolmaster, and £10 yearly to each of six poor widows belonging to the chapelry above the age of fifty, and who had never received parochial relief. Of the chapel money £600 was laid out in the purchase of an estate at Dent, Yorkshire, and another in Little Langdale, and £600 still remains at interest in the Bounty Office. There is also a small cottage belonging to the curate, and an ancient yearly salary of £5 8s. 10d. paid by the inhabitants. The living is now worth about £113 per annum. The registers commence in 1600.

INCUMBENTS.—James Williams, —: James Strickland, —: John Dixon, 1830.

The parsonage is a plain building, erected in 1834.

CHARITIES.

School.—The earliest provision we can find for a school in this township is in the will of George Cocke, who in 1665 left £10 for the maintenance of a schoolmaster at Crosthwaite. He also gave £60, of which he directed the interest of £10 to be expended on the highways in Lyth Quarter; the remaining £50 to be expended in the erection of a school-house. Part of these sums appear to have been laid out in land, which now produces about £20 a year, and is received by the schoolmaster. The master also receives a portion of the rent of the Broad Oak estate, as hereafter mentioned. William Strickland, by will, dated May 24th, 1726, gave to the schoolmaster of Crosthwaite, for that part called Town End Quarter, £4 yearly for ever, on condition that the children of the said quarter should be taught free. He also gave two shillings yearly to some person appointed for whipping the dogs out of Crosthwaite church every Sunday. Tobias Atkinson, Esq., by deed, in 1817, directed his trustees to set apart £300 for rebuilding or repairing the school, or for the augmentation of the schoolmaster's salary. This sum was invested in Consols, and the dividend, £13 5s. 2d., is paid to the schoolmaster. The income of the school is now about £42; the average attendance sixty.

Cocke's Gift.—George Cocke, by will, dated 1661 December, 1665, devised his estates to trustees to be sold, and to pay thereout his legacies, and amongst others to the poor of Crosthwaite and Lyth £20.

Broad Oak Estate, including Dawson's, Thomas Robinson's, Burnes's, and Smart's Gifts.—There is an estate belonging to this township called Broad Oak, which appears by the book of accounts of this charity to have been purchased in 1732 for the sum of £520, which sum was made up of the following items:—Belonging to the curate of Crosthwaite, £153; to the schoolmaster, £70; to the poor of Crosthwaite and Lyth, £152; advanced by the trustees, £145; and it was agreed by the trustees that the rent should be divided annually, in proportion to the sums so laid out. In 1750 Thomas Robinson, one of the trustees, gave £3 for the purchase of bread for the poor; in 1757 Agnes Burnes gave £40, the interest to be given to the poor; and in the following year, 1758, Judith Suart gave £5 to the church stock. After the receipts of these various sums the rents of the estate became divisible in the following proportions:—The poor's share in respect of £207; the curate's share, £158; the school, £70; bread, £8. The total income of this charity is about £68 a year, which is divided in proportion to the sums given above.

William Robinson's Charity.—William Robinson, by will, in 1705, left an estate at Dowbiggin, in Sedbergh parish, known as Green Hollins, to the poor of Crosthwaite and Lyth, among whom the rent is distributed. Several children have been put out apprentices from the funds of this charity.

Mary Shippard's Charity.—Mary Shippard, by will, in 1790, left £30 upon trust, that the interest should be distributed in bread every fourth Sunday to such poor belonging to the township of Crosthwaite as should attend divine service.

Atkinson's Charity.—By indenture, dated February 6th, 1817, Tobias Atkinson gave £2,750 stock in the Three-per-cent Reduced Annuities, upon trust, for the augmentation of the incomes of the minister of Crosthwaite chapel and the master of the school at Crosthwaite, for the repair and enlargement of the school-house, and also for the payment of £10 10s. per annum each to six poor persons who should be housekeepers in Crosthwaite and Lyth.

HINCMASTER.

Hincaster is a small township, comprising 770 acres. Its population in 1801 was 102; in 1811, 124; in 1821, 120; in 1831, 156; in 1841, 136; and in 1851, 148.

The place is called Henneceastre in the Domesday Survey, hence it has been supposed to have derived its name from some Roman station or camp which formerly existed here. Richard I. granted to Gilbert, son of Roger Fitz-Reinfred, and his heirs, one carucate of land in Hincaster, to hold the same by knights' service. In the reign of Edward I. mention is made of Adam de Hincaster, who had a daughter, Avicia, married to Sir Thomas de Hellebeck, and brought with her divers lands into the Hellebeck family. She seems to have been the heiress of her family, as it does not occur after her time.

The hamlet of Hincaster is two and a quarter miles north-east of Milnthorpe. The soil in the township is various; limestone is abundant.

LEVENS CHAPELRY.

The boundary of Levens commences at the north-west at Helsington Nook, following the river Pool till it joins the Kent river (at the south) which is the boundary upwards to Ninezergh, then by Ninezergh Lane, Levens toll bar, Mabbins Hall Lane, High Barn, Levens Hall Park wall, to the Kent river again, and along it by the Force to Sedgwick Bridge, thence westward by the stream to the Strickland Arms Inn, on the Kendal turnpike road, and across Sizergh Fell, by the wood of Sizergh westward and northward till it reaches Brigsteer, and thence to Helsington Park, completing its course. This defines that part of the township attached to Levens church; Leasgill belongs to Heversham.

The area of Levens is 3,953 acres, and its rateable value £9,018 12s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 442; in 1811, 549; in 1821, 765; in 1831, 789; in 1841, 893; and in 1851, 938; who are dispersed over the township, with one small scattered village, and some hamlets. Agriculture and peat moss labour are the principal employments. The district is very healthy, and the labouring poor are generally employed; the wages average about twelve shillings a week to ordinary labourers. Peat moss labour is not favourable to domestic comfort or cleanliness; but intemperance is the prevailing evil, with its moral and social consequences. The soil is light limestone, or reclaimed peat moss and marsh land. Latterly there has been considerable improvement in husbandry. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs within half a mile of the township. Kendal is the market usually attended.

The first recorded possessor of Levens, or Lefunes, as it is called in Domesday, is Tostig Earl of Northumberland; but when Domesday Survey was taken it belonged to Roger de Poitou. In the reign of Henry II. it was held by Ketel, son of Uchtred; this Uchtred appears to have had large possessions in this part of the country; that which was afterwards called Preston Richard was at this time called Preston Uchtred. Ketel, son of Uchtred, in 1187, sold a moiety of Levens to Henry, son of Norman de Redeman, as appears from a fine passed in that year; and from that time Levens has continued divided, one part being called Upper Levens, the other Under or Nether Levens.

Upper Levens, as we have just seen, was granted to Henry, son of Norman de Redeman, whose family continued here for many generations, one of them filling the office of seneschal of Kendal, and others representing Westmoreland in parliament. Dr. Richard Redman was promoted by Edward IV. to the see of St. Asaph in 1468, and was made abbot of Shap in 1471. In 1495 he was translated to the see of Exeter, and in 1501 to that of Ely, but died in 1505. About the year 1490 Levens was sold by one of the Redmans to Alan Bellingham of Burneshead, who purchased Fawcett Forest of the crown, and in 1546 had a grant from Henry VIII. of that part of the barony of Kendal now called the Lumley Fee. He was treasurer of Berwick and deputy warden of the Marches. After a few generations a descendant of his, of the same name, and the last of the family at Levens, died about the year 1690, having wasted a vast estate, and sold Levens and the rest of his property in Westmoreland to Colonel James Graham, younger son of Sir Richard Graham of Netherby. The colonel married Dorothy, daughter of the Earl of Berkshire, and was member of parliament for Westmoreland from 1708 to 1722. He died without male issue, and his only daughter, Catherine, carried the estates in marriage to her cousin, Henry Bowes Howard, earl of Berkshire. Henry Howard, the twelfth earl of Suffolk and Berkshire, dying without issue, bequeathed his estates in Westmoreland to his mother, Lady Andover, and after her decease to his sister, Frances, whose husband, Richard Bagot, assumed the surname of Howard, and left an only daughter and heiress, the present Lady Mary Howard of Levens, who is proprietor of the manors of Levens, Milnthorpe, Heversham, Clawthorpe, Kendal, Chartley, Kirkland, Helsington, Crosthwaite and Lyth, Crook, Staveley-with-Ilugill, Skelsmergh, Longsleddale, Sadgill, Fawcett Forest, High House, Watisfield, and Garthorne. The landowners are George Wilson, Esq., of Dallam Tower; the Hon. Mrs. Howard; Thomas Strickland, Esq., Sizergh Hall; Colonel Brandroth; and John Yates, Esq.

Levens Hall, the seat of the Hon. Mrs. Howard, five miles south of Kendal, is a venerable mansion, in the Old English style, buried among lofty trees. The park, through which the river Kent winds betwixt bold and beautifully wooded banks, is separated by the turnpike road from the house. It is of considerable size, well stocked with deer, and contains a noble avenue of ancient oaks. The gardens, however, form the greatest attraction, being planned after the old French style by Mr. Beaumont, gardener to King James II., by whom it is said the gardens at Hampton Court were laid out. His portrait, with great propriety, is preserved in the hall. Trim alleys, bowling-greens, and wildernesses, fenced round by sight-proof thickets of beech, remind the beholder, by their antique appearance, of times "long, long ago." In one part, a great number of yews, hollies, laurels, and other evergreens, cut into an infinite variety of grotesque shapes, exhibit an interesting specimen of the Topiarian art, which, at one period, though not more than a mechanic craft, realised, in some measure, the effects of a fine art by the perfect skill of its execution.¹ This "curious-knotted garden," as may be imagined, harmonises well with the old hall, the interior of which also deserves more than a passing glance. It contains some exquisite specimens of elaborately carved oak—

⁶ The chambers carved so exquisitely,
Carved with figures strange and sweet,
All made out of the carver's brain."—Christabel.

The work in the library and drawing-room is exceedingly rich, as may be conceived from its having been estimated that, at the present rate of wages, its execution would cost £3,000. The carved chimney-piece in the library is an intricate piece of workmanship. The two jambs represent Hercules and Samson—the one armed with the ass's jaw-bone, the other, having a lion's skin for a covering, with a club. Above are emblematic representations in bold relief of the Seasons, the Elements, and the Five Senses; all of which are explained in these lines, cut in dark oak:—

"Thus the five senses stand portrayed here,
The elements four, and seasons of the year;
Samson supports the one side, as in rage,
The other, Hercules, in like equipage."

The large drawing-room contains a very pleasing portrait of the unfortunate Anna Boyleyn, and there is one of Henry VII. by John de Moulhouse. The study has a fine old Italian picture of the Holy Family. In the library is a full-length painting by Lely, of Colonel James Graham, a former owner of Levens, who was keeper of the privy purse to King James II., and brother of Graham of Netherby, first Viscount Preston. A fine picture of his wife, a Howard, hangs by his side, reminding us of Pope's couplet:—

¹ The quaint method of ornamenting gardens, so fashionable in the sixteenth century, though derived immediately from France, might be defended by the antiquity of the classical ages of antiquity. Making all allowances for their artificial formality, we cannot but regret their indurserminable construction. Few of any sort are being now left in this island. There was a garden near Paris so artificially embellished with Topiary work, that it contained a representation of Troy besieged, the two hosts, their several leaders, and all other objects in full proportion.

"Early, unacquainted with a smile,
The dog first yowled at the milk in the milk."

The daughter of this pair, a portrait of whom adorns the staircase, married her cousin, the Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire, thus bringing Levens into the Howard family. The bugle-horns, intermixed so profusely with the carved work, were the device of the Bellinghams, an ancient Westmoreland family, from whom Colonel Graham purchased Levens. The entrance-hall is decorated with pieces of ancient armour of various dates, and in the paneling are several bas-reliefs in wood from holy writ. One of the rooms is adorned with some pieces of tapestry, illustrative of a tale from an Italian poet. On the 12th of May, annually, the mayor and corporation of Kendal, after having proclaimed the fair at Milnthorpe, adjourn to the gardens at Levens, to witness the various athletic sports, bowling, leaping, &c., whilst several tables are placed in the open air, at which moroccoes (a very strong old ale peculiar to the place), radishes, and bread and butter are consumed by the visitors.

After a moiety of Levens was sold, as above, by Ketel, son of Uchtrede, it does not appear how long Ketel and his posterity continued in possession of the other moiety; probably not long, for in the next generation we find several persons of rank and note in this part of the county bearing the name of De Levens. After them came the Prestons, very likely by purchase. This family ended in daughters, one of whom brought Under Levens in marriage to Lord Montgomery, who sold it, about 1694, to Edward Wilson, Esq., of Dallam Tower, whose descendant, George Wilson, Esq., is the present lord of the manor. Nether Levens Hall is now a farm-house.

Levens township contains the large village of Beathwaite Green, four and a half miles south-by-west of Kendal; part of that of Brigsteer, three and a half miles south-south-west of the same place; and part of Leasgill, a mile and three quarters north-by-west of Milnthorpe. It also comprises the hamlets of Sizergh, Fell Side, Force Cottages, and Bridge Row.

THE CHAPEL.

Levens chapel, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is situated in the village of Beathwaite Green. It is a plain modern structure, erected in 1828, at a cost of nearly £3,000, and consists of nave, chancel, tower, and octagonal spire. The windows are lancet-shaped. The pulpit, reading desk, chancel rail, and gallery, are of oak,—all in good taste and keeping, though not of any particular style. The late Hon. F. G. Howard and Lady Howard defrayed the cost of the erection of the chapel, and also endowed the curacy with £200 a year, and £10 a year to the clerk. There are no tithes paid, as there has been a commutation effected; it took place at the enclosure of the common, about fifty years ago. The right of appointing the incumbent of Levens is with the Hon. Mrs. Howard. The register commences in 1823, when the Rev. W. Stephens, B.A., the first and present incumbent, was appointed.

The parsonage was erected by the Hon. Mrs. Howard, in 1828, at a cost of about £1,000.

There is a Methodist chapel at Beathwaite Green, erected about sixty years ago.

The schools, for boys, girls, and infants, are the property of Mrs. Howard, who erected them, provided houses for the master and mistress, and pays their salaries. The average attendance at these schools is about 120 children.

There are no vested charities in Levens; but it partakes in some of the parochial charities. There are two benevolent societies in Heversham—a friendly society and an oddfellows' society—of which many of the inhabitants of Levens are members. The incumbent has a provident society for supplying clothing, bedding, &c., to the members, who pay a small sum weekly. There is also a small village library.

Besides the hall this township comprises the following residences:—Heaves Lodge, Lieut.-col. Brandreth; Park Head, J. Yeates Yeates, Esq.; Hynning; Laurence House; and Levens Parsonage.

Sizergh Fell is the only hill in this township, notwithstanding the great variety of surface. The river Kent, rising in Kentmere and passing by Kendal, runs through Levens park to the sea; and, though a small stream, has much beauty in this part of its course. There is also a little stream called the Pool flowing from Crosthwaite to Morecambe Bay, and forming the western boundary of this township.

The only old custom still prevailing in this township is that of "peace-egging" at Easter.

POPULATION.

The area of this township is 1,760 acres; its rateable value is £2,457 1s. 6d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 296; in 1811, 377; in 1821, 348; in 1831, 355; in 1841, 357; and in 1851, 417: who are dispersed over the township, in the hamlets of Crooklands, Birkrigg Park, Endmoor, Milton Low Park, Storth End, and Row End, and several dwellings bearing different names, and distant from two to five miles north-east of Milnthorpe. Preston Richard is crossed by the Kendal canal, on which, at Crooklands, the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres has an extensive coal-wharf, and a range of coke ovens.

As far back as documentary history reaches, this manor appears to have been divided into two portions, known as Preston Richard and Preston Patrick. The Domesday record informs us that, at that period, Torfin had one part of Preston, and Roger de Poitou the other. From the reign of Henry II. to that of Edward III., both inclusive, a period of upwards of two centuries, there appears to have been a long succession of persons bearing the name of Richard de Preston, from one of whom there is little doubt the township derived its name, as previous to the first Richard de Preston it was known as Preston Uchtred, from another proprietor, who, as we have seen, held the whole manor of Levens. The other portion of Preston appears to have received its name of Preston Patrick from Patrick de Culwen, who possessed it in the reign of Henry II. In 1343 and 1353 Sir Richard Preston, Knt., represented Westmoreland in parliament; and in 1368 Richard Preston had a license from Edward III. to impark 500 acres of land. The manor subsequently came by marriage to the Prestons of Holker, who held it till the family failed in issue male, when Preston Richard was sold to Sir John Lowther, from whom nearly all the tenants purchased their enfranchisement in 1679. According to Machell, the Earl of Derby is lord paramount of this as well as the adjoining manor of Preston Patrick in Burton parish. The principal landowners are John Harrison, Esq.; Mrs. Vincent, Trinity College, Cambridge;

James Martindale, William Nelson, Miss Atkinson, and others. Near the old hall, which was the ancient manor house, is a farm still called the Deer Park; there is also another park at Birkrigg, where there is also a burial ground belonging to the Society of Friends.

The hamlet of Crooklands is three and a half miles north-east of Milnthorpe. Here is a bobbin factory. Endmoor is another hamlet four and a half miles north-east of the same town. Here is a school for children of both sexes, principally supported by the vicar of Heversham, who also provides books, papers, &c., for the scholars, about sixty of whom are in average attendance. Milton hamlet is three miles north-east-by-east of Milnthorpe.

Summerlands, in this township, the seat and property of John Harrison, Esq., is a handsome mansion, in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1846, at a cost of £8,500. It is surrounded by beautiful grounds, and commands extensive prospects of the surrounding country.

CHARITIES.

Miles Greenwood and Rowland Greenwood's Gifts.—Miles Greenwood, by will, dated 8th May, 1637, gave a house and its appurtenances to Miles Greenwood and his heirs, provided that a rent charge of 40s. should be paid out of the said house, namely, 20s. yearly, for ever, to the poor of the town of Grantham; and the other 20s. to be given yearly, for ever, to the poor people dwelling near Crooklands, in the township of Preston Richard, in the parish of Heversham, where he was born, upon St. Thomas's Day and Good Friday. By indenture, dated October, 1696, Rowland Greenwood, left £20 for the purchasing of another annuity of 20s., to be distributed in the same manner. It appears from the township book of Preston Richard, that this rent charge was received up to 1786, since which year it has not been received, so that it may now be considered as lost.

CROSSCRAKE CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises the townships of Sedgwick and Stainton.

SEDGWICK.

The area of Sedgwick township is 900 acres, and its rateable value £1,359 17s. 3½d. The population in 1801 was 161; in 1811, 175; in 1821, 184; in 1831, 204; in 1841, 210; and in 1851, 250; who are principally resident in the village. Agriculture is the chief employment of the inhabitants; a few, however, are engaged at the powder mills. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township. The manorial rights are possessed by Walter C. Strickland, Esq.; John Wakefield, Esq., and Edward Wilson, Esq., are the principal landowners.

The village of Sedgwick is three and a half miles south of Kendal. In the neighbourhood is a large powder mill, erected about ninety years ago, and worked by W. H. Wakefield and Co. Sedgwick House, the seat of John Wakefield, Esq., is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the river Kent, which is here crossed by a good stone bridge.

STANTON.

Stanton comprises 1,440 acres, and its rateable value is £2,243. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 385; in 1811, 395; in 1821, 357; in 1831, 384; in 1841, 365; and in 1851, 384; who are principally engaged in agriculture; a few being employed in a woollen-mill, a corn-mill, and a chemical works. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway and the Lancaster canal run through the township. When Domesday Survey was taken, this place belonged to Gillmichel, but soon afterwards came to the Flemings, and as early as the reign of Edward I. came to the Stricklands of Sizergh, one of whom, Sir Thomas Strickland, about the year 1674, sold the tenements to freehold. The manorial rights are held by Walter C. Strickland, Esq.; the landowners are Edward Wilson, Esq.; George Edward Wilson, Esq.; John Wakefield, Esq.; Richard Atkinson, and many other smaller proprietors.

This township extends from two and a half to five miles south-by-east of Kendal, and contains the hamlets of Stainton Row, Barrow's Green, part of Crosscrake, and Helm, with a number of scattered houses bearing different names.

CROSSCRAKE.

Crosscrake chapel is situated about three and a half miles south-by-east of Kendal. It is a neat edifice, rebuilt in 1773 by the help of a charity brief, and was greatly improved and enlarged in 1842, by Thomas Philipson, Esq., at a cost of £200. Crosscrake chapel was founded and endowed by Anselm de Furness, son of the first Michael de Fleming, about the time of Richard I.; and in the reign of Edward I. was granted by Sir William de Strickland, Knt., to the priory of Cartmell. After the suppression of the monastic institutions, the chapel went to decay, and in Mr. Machell's time served as a school. It continued in this state till 1757, when Bishop Keene, Dr. Stratford, and the curate subscribed £200 to obtain £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty. With these sums two estates were purchased, one at Dilliear, and the other at Killington. It was augmented in 1763 with £400 more obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, which was expended in land at Sebergham, and a yearly rent charge of 25s. in Garsdale, so that the curacy is now worth about £89 a year. There are no tithes. The vicar of Heversham is patron. The registers commence in 1755.

Parsonage.—Walter C. Strickland, Esq.; David R. Lawson, 1833; Frederick Toller, 1841; John Wallace, 1844.

The parsonage is a plain structure, erected in 1849, at a cost of about £500.

SCHOOLS.

Crosscrake School.—There is a school at Crosscrake, in this township, for the children of Stainton. It was built by the inhabitants and endowed with £5 a year, which arises from £100, given by Mr. Joseph Threlfall, for a schoolmaster to come and settle there. Mr. Threlfall also gave another £100, which, in consequence of law expenses, was reduced to £75. There is also £100, left by the late Thomas Philipson, to pay for three poor boys from Preston Richard township. The school was rebuilt in 1828; it is attended by about forty children.

John and Jane Gilpin's Gifts.—John Gilpin, by will, in 1744, left to the poor of the township of Stainton, the sum of £10; and Jane Gilpin, his sister, by will, in 1745, bequeathed £3 3s. to the poor of the same township.

A small beck, or rivulet, runs through this township and falls into the Belo.

The residences in the township are Hawthorn Hill, Colonel Thompson; Prospect House, Mr. John Taylor; High House, Miss Greenbow; Stainton House, Mr. William Park.

KENDAL PARISH.

THE parish of Kendal, or Kirkby in Kendal, is bounded by the parishes of Windermere, Grasmere, Shap, Orton, Sedburgh (in Yorkshire), Kirkby Lonsdale, Burton, and Heversham. It is the largest parish in the county, averaging ten miles in length, by the same in breadth, and forms a beautifully diversified region of towering fells and scars, and fertile and picturesque valleys and glens. It is well watered by the river Kent, and its numerous affluents. During the last half century most of the moors and commons have been cultivated, and fine crops are now raised where heath and moss once grew in wild luxuriance. Excellent limestone, well suited for building and other purposes, is found in various parts of the parish, and near Crook are veins of lead. The Lancaster and Carlisle, and the Kendal and Windermere railways run through the parish, as does also the Lancaster and Kendal canal. Kendal parish comprises upwards of fifty villages and hamlets, with fourteen chapels-of-ease, and includes the following twenty-six townships:—Kirkby in Kendal, Crook, Dillicar, Docker, Fawcett Forest, Grayrigg, Helsington, Hugill, Kentmere, Kirkland, Lamlbrig, Long Salsdale, Natland, Nether Graveship, Nether Stawley, New Hutton, Old Hutton and Holme Seades, Over Stawley, Patten, Sealthwaitegrigg Hay and Hutton-in-the-Hay, Selside-with-Whitwell, Shalsmergh, Strickland Ketel, Strickland Roger, Underbarrow and Bradley Field, Whinfell, and Winstor, whose united area is 68,800 acres. Kendal parish was formerly much larger, as it included the parishes of Grasmere and Windermere.

KENDAL.

The population of Kendal township in 1801 was 6,892; in 1811, 7,505; in 1821, 8,984; in 1831, 10,015; in 1841, 10,325; and in 1851, 10,377; who are principally resident in the town of Kendal. The return for the township of Kendal includes Skewbarrow, deemed extra-parochial, containing 13 persons in 1851; also the union workhouse and house of correction, containing 137 and 26 respectively in 1851. The Lancaster and Carlisle, and the Kendal and Windermere railways, as well as the Kendal and Lancaster canal, run through the township. The rateable value is £17,759.

The only vestige of the Romans in this township is a road which is supposed to have passed from the station at Watercrook, near Kendal, by Helsington, Laitheys, and Lane Head, thence across the common in the direction of Scout Scar, descending into Underbarrow by the depression between Underbarrow Scar and Cunswick Scar, and past Cunswick Hall in Underbarrow, to High-street in Kentmere. Near Cunswick Hall are the remains of what is supposed to have been a Roman station.

The ruins of Kendal Castle, of which only four broken towers, and the outer wall, surrounded by a deep fosse, remain, crown the summit of a steep elevation on the east side of the town. An account of the barony of Kendal and its various lords, with which the history of this castle is connected, will be found at page 811. It is not known when, or by whom, the castle was erected, but it is generally supposed to have been built in the earlier part of the thirteenth century. It was long the principal seat of the barons of Kendal, many of whom were born here. The castle appears to have become ruinous previous to 1671.

The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale; F. M. Yates, Esq.; William Wilson, Esq.; Edward Wilson, Esq.; the executors of the late William Thompson, Esq.; Messrs. W. Walker and Co.; Tobias Atkinson, Esq.; the Vicar of Kendal, and numerous other proprietors.

BOROUGH OF KENDAL.

Kendal, the largest and most important town in Westmoreland, the capital of the barony, deanery, and parish of its own name, a market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, and the seat of a poor-law union is situated on the banks of the river Kent, in 50° 20' north latitude, and 0° 44' west longitude. It is distant twenty-two miles south-west-by-south from Appleby, 262 miles north-west-by-north from London by road, and 250 by the London and North-Western, and the Lancaster and Carlisle railways. The borough of Kendal comprises the townships of Kendal and Kirkland, and part of the township of Nether Graveship. Its population in 1851 was 11,829, of whom 5,604 were males and 6,225 females, inhabiting 2,457 houses, 148 being uninhabited, and fourteen building.

The town consists of two principal streets, or rather of one, bearing two names, Highgate and Stricklandgate, the former being the principal street from the south. Lower-street, Finkle-street, Stramongate, and the market place are on the eastern side of the main street, while Allhallows Lane and other streets are on the western side. The streets are all well paved, and the houses are built of limestone from the fell on the west side of the town. Though ancient, Kendal has quite a modern appearance, as the majority of the old houses have been rebuilt, and many new streets and rows of houses have been erected during the last half century.

Of Kendal during the early periods of our history we possess but little information. The Roman station Galacum stood about a mile from the town, at the place now known as Watercrook, which will be found described in our account of Natland township at a subsequent page. Of Kendal during the Anglo-Saxon period nothing is recorded; but on the western side of the town, on a rocky hill opposite the castle, and at about the same elevation, is a circular mound of gravel and earth, round the base of which is a deep fosse, strengthened with two bastions on the east. It is known as Castle How Hill, or Castle Low Hill, and is of great antiquity. By some writers its origin is ascribed to the Anglo-Saxons; and it is said to be one of those hills called "Laws," where in ancient times justice was administered. We are more inclined to give it a Danish or Norwegian origin; and to consider it to have been one of the places in which the "Thing," the popular council or assembly of the Norsemen was held, where their laws were passed and their chiefs elected. In 1778 a handsome obelisk was erected on its summit, in commemoration of the revolution of 1688. To the Northmen we may also ascribe the name of the town itself, Kirkby Kendal, being the church town in the vale of the Kent; but whether the Saxons or Danes were the founders of the church we have now no means of ascertaining; probability is in favour of the former.

With the Norman Conquest came the grant of the barony of Kendal to Ivo de Tailbois, whose successors for several centuries made Kendal Castle their principal seat. In the time of Gilbert, the sixth baron, the Scots under Duncan Earl of Fife, entered and plundered the town of Kendal, broke open the church, and put all the inhabitants to the sword, sparing neither age nor sex. The town was again attacked in the time of Robert de Ross. At the battle of Flodden Field, in the reign of Henry VIII. the Kendal men, those

"The men of Kendal stout Were in the town and on the hill."

did good execution, and we are told,

"There was the best of Kendal bold
Who fierce will fight and never flee."

From this period we have little or nothing recorded of Kendal till 1598, when, as we learn from an inscription in Penrith church, the town was visited by the plague, which carried off 2,500 persons.

In 1617 James I. stayed here for a night while on his way to Scotland. In 1649, when Charles I. was beheaded, a body of Kendal men, headed by Sir Marmaduke Langdale, marched to besiege the castle of Appleby. In the "rising" of 1715 the adherents of the house of Stuart, under the command of Mr. Forster and the Earl of Derwentwater, passed through Kendal on their march to the south. In 1745 prince Charles Edward Stuart, with about 6,000 men, passed through Kendal, on the retreat, after his fruitless invasion of England. The other historical events connected with the town will be found in the account of the churches, public buildings, &c. of the town, described in the following pages.

The parish church of Kendal, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a fine structure, consisting of nave, chancel, four aisles, and a square tower containing a fine peal of ten bells. It will accommodate from two to three thousand persons. The church is supposed to occupy the site of a more ancient Saxon one, and was probably erected in the eleventh or twelfth centuries; but like the other old churches in England, it has since undergone considerable alterations. Originally it appears to have consisted of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, and tower; the two additional aisles having been added at a subsequent period. In Catholic times there would be several altars; the dedication of two are known, the one on the north of the high-altar was called our Lady's Altar, and that on the south St. Catherine's. The church contains three chapels, which belonged to the ancient families of Parr, Strickland, and Bellingham. The first-named chapel is in the north aisle, and beneath it rest the remains of several members of the family from whom it derives its name. The Strickland chapel is in the second aisle from the south, and contains several monuments to the memory of various members of the Strickland family. One of these is a raised tomb of black marble, resting on four pillars. Beneath the canopy is a figure of a boy, in alabaster, dressed in a loose gown. Bellingham's chapel, in the north aisle, is raised considerably above the rest of the aisle, and contains a monumental brass to the memory of Sir Alan Bellingham, besides other monuments. The church contains a number of mural tablets, &c., commemorating many families of the town and neighbourhood. This fine old church underwent a general restoration in 1850-52, and it is now one of the finest and most imposing ecclesiastical structures in the north of England. The restoration of the chancel was effected at the cost of the master and fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, the patrons of the living. The old low and unsightly chancel roof was removed and replaced with one of more elaborate design, and more in harmony with the general style of the building. It has also been raised to the original elevation. The centre gable of the chancel has also been entirely rebuilt, and with its pinnacles and enriched battlements has quite an imposing effect. In the interior the nave and chancel have been separated by a newly-constructed arch, with corbels, shields, tracery, &c. The chancel stalls are elaborately carved. A new east window of noble dimensions has been erected, and filled with stained glass, bearing various figures and emblematic devices. The restoration of the chancel had its effect upon the inhabitants of the town, who set to work to restore the nave, so that the good work might be complete. The result of this has been that the entire body of the church has been re-pewed with open seats on a consistent plan, and by this means 300 additional sittings have been gained. The fine west window has been restored, and the interesting doorway beneath, which had long been closed up as an entrance by the position of the organ in front, has been rebuilt, re-opened, and enlarged, so as to correspond in proportion and position with the window, and now presents a specimen of elegance and beauty in its masonry and carved ornaments not to be surpassed. From this entrance a good view of the interior may be obtained. The whole length of the edifice, 140 feet from east to west, opened out in one uninterrupted view. The organ has been removed from its place on the floor in the front of the western door, into the Bellingham chapel. It is a very fine instrument, and has recently been enlarged and improved by Messrs. Kirtland and Jardine, of Manchester, under the supervision of Mr. Scarisbrick, the organist. Some parts of the instrument are very old, and there seems to be great doubt whether that portion of it was originally built by Father Smith, or the Harrises; but the general opinion is in favour of the former. There are at present three manual key-boards, and one of pedals. The great and choir organs extend from C C to F in alt. (fifty-four notes). The swell extends from C to F in alt. (forty-two notes); and the pedals from C C C to D (twenty-nine notes). The great organ contains fourteen stops, the choir organ eight, the swell organ nine, and the pedal organ three. There are five couplers, five composition pedals; and the organ contains altogether upwards of 1,900 pipes. The accumulation of earth, rough-cast, &c., during the course of centuries, had altered the original elevation of the floor of the church to the extent of several feet, which destroyed the effect, and was the cause of dampness in the interior. This accumulation of earth has been removed, and the original level restored. The sixteen clerestory windows have been filled with stained glass, and the effect in the church is most pleasing. There are also commemoration windows of stained glass in the Bellingham chapel, the west end, and the Lady chapel, as well as in the baptistry, which is laid with encaustic tiles. The total cost of the restorations amounted to £6,400. Over the north-west door is a monument to the officers and men of the 55th, or Westmoreland Regiment, who fell during the Russian war. It is beautifully wrought in statuary marble, and of pyramidal form, with a deep base. On the centre of the base is a carved laurel wreath. The inside of this bears the names of Alma, Inkerman, and Sevastopol. In gold, flanking this centre piece, are circular scrolls, on the face of which the word "Westmoreland" is inscribed, and in the centre the numerals LV, all in gold. At the summit of the base is a beautifully sculptured group of weapons, &c. The colours of the regiment are fixed on each side of the monument. An inscription records that, "twelve officers, fifteen sergeants, and three hundred and sixty-four private soldiers of the 55th Regiment fell during the war with Russia, in Turkey and the Crimea, in the years 1854 and 1855."

In the Valor of Pope Nicholas, taken about the year 1291, the church of Kendal is stated to be divided into two mediocities, viz., "pars Gulielmi and pars Gualteri;" and it is said to be in the diocese of York. It was given by Ivo de Tailbois to the Abbey of St. Mary at York, and in 1301 was appropriated to that house. In 1321 the abbot and convent bound themselves and their successors to find and maintain a chantry in the church, at the altar of St. Mary, for one secular priest, and to allow him £5 for the performance of certain duties. Shortly after this period no less than seven chantries occur in connection with the church, amongst which are mentioned those of Our Lady, St. Anthony, St. Thomas à Becket, St. Christopher, and Trinity Guild. On the suppression of the religious houses the chantry priests were pensioned. The advowson of the vicarage was granted by Queen Mary to Trinity College, Cambridge, to which the patronage of the great titles still belong. The college appears to have become possessed of the patronage of the vicarage from the desire of Queen Mary to do something, if possible, for the good of the soul of her father, Henry VIII. The vicarage is valued in the King's Book at £99 5s.; it is now worth £521. In conformity with the provisions of Lord Blandford's Act, passed in 1856, the town of Kendal became divided into separate and distinct parishes for all ecclesiastical purposes, on the demise of the late vicar, in 1858. Under this new arrangement the district attached to the parish church comprises the whole of that portion of the borough not included in the two parishes of St. George and St. Thomas, the boundaries of which will be found at page 841.

VICARS.—Alan de Byneswale, — : William de Madestan, 1301; Roger de Kirlshy, 1411; Thomas Greenmoode, — : Thomas de Leynsbury, 1506; Richard Garsdale, 1442; John Bryan, 1439; William, abbot of St. Mary's, York, 1495; Thomas Maynes, —; James Pilkington, 1550; Nicholas Ashton, 1551; Ambrose Hetherington, 1562; Samuel Heron, 1591; Ralph Tyrer, 1592; Francis Gardner, 1627; Michael Stanford, 1674; Thomas Murgatroyd, 1683; William Crosby, 1699; Richard Cuthbert, 1734; Thomas Symonds, 1745; Henry Robinson, 1789; Matthew Marfitt, 1806; John Hudson, 1815; James W. Barnes, 1843; J. Cooper, 1868.

St. George's church, near Stramontgate Bridge, is a neat structure, in the Early English style, erected in 1841, at a cost of £4,000. It contains about 1,200 sittings, of which 878 are free and unappropriated. Under the provisions of Lord Blandford's Act, as mentioned above, St. George's became a parish church in 1858. Its district commences "at the north end of Miller Bridge, proceeds up the middle of Kent-street as far as Finkle-street, along the middle of Finkle-street into Highgate, up the middle of Highgate northerly, and proceeds in the same course down the middle of Stricklandgate as far as Sands Close, down the middle of Sands Close as far as the bank of the river Kent, and crossing that river, proceeds in a straight line to a bound stone placed on the north-east side of the road to Appleby, at the distance of 100 yards from the house and premises occupied by William Duxbury, and from such bound stone in a straight line to another bound stone on the southern side of the road to Sedbergh, at the eastern corner of the boundary of the common garden (now a cemetery), and from such latter bound stone in a straight line to the first bridge over the canal, crosses the bridge in a straight line to the east bank of the river Kent; it then proceeds along the bank as far as Miller Bridge, which it crosses to the point where the boundary first commenced." The original church of St. George was erected in 1754; the present structure was consecrated June 17th, 1841. The vicar of Kendal is patron. The living is endowed with £70 a year, arising from lands purchased in 1765 with £400 received from the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty and other sums. The total income is about £1,200 a year. The registers commence in 1841. The following have been the incumbents from 1842:—

INCUMBENTS.—W. J. Woodcock, 1842; M. J. Finch, 1844; J. B. Meredith, 1847; Edward Gabriel, 1866.

St. Thomas's Church is situated at the end of Stricklandgate. It is a Gothic structure, erected in 1837, at a cost of £3,000, defrayed by voluntary subscription, £1,000 being given by Mrs. Thomason Richardson, widow of Mr. Richardson, and last surviving child of James Dowker, Esq. She also gave the organ, and a further sum of £1,000 towards the endowment. The entrance to the church is at the east end. The west window is filled with stained glass. In 1858 a district was assigned to this church, which was made a parish church for all ecclesiastical purposes. The district commences "at the middle of Stricklandgate, opposite Entry Lane, proceeds down the middle of Stricklandgate as far as Sands Close, down the middle of Sands Close as far as the bank of the river Kent, follows along the west side of the river as far as the boundary of Kendal extends (being a little to the south of Aikrigg End), and follows that boundary to the Kendal and Ambleside turnpike road, then along the middle of that road to the top of Shaw's Brow, down the middle of Shaw's Brow to the north-west corner of the House of Correction, from thence along the Low Fell-side by Grandy Nook, to the top of Entry Lane, down the middle of Entry Lane to Stricklandgate, where it commenced. The living is in the patronage of certain trustees. The Rev. John A. La Trobe, the first and present incumbent, was appointed in 1839.

The Catholic church, situated on the New Road, is a handsome Gothic building, erected in 1837, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity and St. George; a statue of the latter ornaments the front of the edifice. The interior ornamentation of this church is very splendid. The chancel contains statues of the Redeemer, the Blessed Virgin, St. Mary Magdalen, and St. George; and is lighted by a beautifully stained-glass window, containing figures of St. Peter and St. Paul, and a number of emblematical devices. The altar and screen are well executed, and elaborately ornamented. The nave is lofty and spacious, with an open stained roof. There is a gallery at the west end containing a fine-toned organ, presented to the church by the late pastor, the Rev. Thomas Wilkinson, at a cost of £600; the same gentleman was the principal contributor towards the erection of the present church. There is a handsome font with an oak top, octagonal in form, and surmounted with a figure of St. Michael. Previous to the erection of the present church, the Catholics of Kendal had a chapel in a confined yard, on the east side of Stramontgate, built in 1793, on the site of an older building, which, for an uncertain number of years, had been used as a place of worship by them. The Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, the late pastor of this church, was one of the last students of the famous College of Douay, whence he was sent to Kendal as his first mission, and which he continued to hold till his decease, a period of about seventy years. During his incumbency he collected an extensive library of about 9,000 volumes, which he subsequently presented to Ushaw College, near Durham, to which place he was in the habit of going during the summer season, returning to Kendal for the winter. He deceased January 30th, 1857, aged ninety-four years, and was succeeded by the Rev. James Gibson, the present rector.

The Unitarian Chapel is in the neighbourhood of the market-place. It was erected in 1720, and contains about 200 sittings. The congregation was first formed here about the year 1709. The chapel possesses a small endowment, which includes the New Shambles, the Masons' Arms, and a house for the minister. Though the endowment is said to have been originally intended for Presbyterians, it has been confirmed to the present congregation by the Dissenters' Chapels Bill, passed some years ago. The Rev. Edward Hawkes, who was appointed in 1834, is the present minister.

The Independent Chapel is in Lowther-street. It was erected in 1782, and newly-fronted in 1828. The Independents of Kendal date their origin from about the year 1778, when they first met for worship in the Old Theatre, in the market-place, which continued to serve them as a chapel till the erection of the present building. The Rev. David Jones, minister, was appointed in 1826.

The United Presbyterians have a chapel in Wool Pack Yard, which formerly served as a theatre.

Zion Chapel (Congregational) is a neat commodious building, situated in the New Inn Yard, Highgate. It was erected in 1844, and has since been considerably enlarged by the erection of side galleries; it will now accommodate about 600 persons.

The Friends' Meeting House, in Stramongate, was erected in 1816, upon the site of a previous structure, which bore on its door the date 1688, and as the principles of the society were introduced into Kendal by George Fox, about 1645, it is more than probable that the building had been erected at the time to which the date referred. The present meeting house is a good-sized structure, capable of accommodating about 1,200 persons. There is a burial-ground attached.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, in Stricklandgate, was erected in 1808. Wesleyanism was introduced into Kendal in 1784, and for some time sermons were preached in the market-place. Shortly afterwards a society was organised, who assembled for worship in the Old Theatre, from which they removed to a room in Stricklandgate, and continued there till the erection of the present chapel.

Besides these places of worship, there are others belonging to the Plymouth Brethren, the Inghamites, the Primitive Methodists, and the Glassites.

ANCIENT RELIGIOUS HOUSES.

There appears to have been a chapel in ancient times at the head of Capper Lane (supposed to be a contraction of Chapel Lane). Some human bones have been discovered here in what is thought to have been the cemetery attached to the chapel.

On the west side of Kirkland is a house bearing the name of the "Anchorite House," and before the house is the "Anchorite Well." The name is supposed to have originated in the fact of an anchorite having resided here in olden time.

A chapel dedicated to All Saints formerly stood at the head of Allhallows, or All Saints' Lane, at the lower side of the field now known as Chapel Close, adjoining to which, on the north side, is an isolated cemetery, called the "Sepulchre."

Another ancient chapel, dedicated to St. Anne, formerly stood near Dockwra Hall. This chapel appears to have been a large structure, with a lofty tower, and was surrounded with a high wall, like the ancient manor houses of this and the adjoining county of Cumberland.

About a mile from the town, on the road leading to Appleby, there formerly stood a chapel, or hospital, dedicated to St. Leonard; its site is now known by the name of the Spittal Farm. This was a hospital for lepers. In the reign of Henry II. St. Leonard's Hospital, at Kendal, was given to the priory at Conishead, by William de Lancaster; and it continued attached to that house till the period of the Dissolution, when it was granted by Henry VIII. to Alan Bellingham and Alan Wilson, Esqs.; it was then worth £11 4s. 3d. a year. The Spittal estate now belongs to the Earl of Lonsdale.

SCHOOLS.

Besides the Free Grammar School, the Blue Coat School, the National Schools, the Friends' School, the British School, the Schools of Industry, and the Infant Schools, Kendal possesses the following:—

St. Thomas's School, a neat building, erected in 1841, is situated in Stricklandgate. It is attended by about 100 children.

St. George's National School, in William-street, was erected in 1854. It is under government inspection, has three pupil teachers, and is attended by about eighty children.

The Catholic School is held in the old chapel at the back of the present church.

The other schools will be found noticed in the accounts of the various charities.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS, &c.

The White Hall is a large edifice, with handsome stone fronts, looking into Lowther-street and Highgate. It was erected in 1825, from a design by the late

Mr. Webster, at a cost of £5,000. It is 118 feet long and 37 broad, having the principal entrance ornamented by a receding balcony, fronted with columns and pilasters of the Ionic order, supporting a pediment. A handsome circular lantern gives light to the billiard-room, besides which are a library, news-room, and elegant ball-room.

The Kendal Literary and Scientific Institution, Stricklandgate House, possesses a museum, library, &c., and has for its president Professor Sedgwick.

The Mechanics' Institute is held in the Oddfellows' Hall, High-street. It comprises a library of 1,800 volumes, news-room, lecture-room, and two class-rooms. It was established in 1821.

The Working Men's Library and Newsroom, in the market-place, was established in 1844, and is well supplied with periodicals, newspapers, &c. There are baths and wash-houses in connection with this institute.

There are also a Christian Institute, with a library of about 1,000 volumes, and a book club, in Stricklandgate.

The Chamber of Commerce, established in 1857, has its offices in Stricklandgate.

The Oddfellows' Hall, in Highgate, was erected in 1833. It contains a large room sufficiently commodious to hold 500 persons, besides the rooms occupied by the Mechanics' Institute, &c. The cost of the building, inclusive of some cottages, was about £800.

The town possesses two newspapers, the Kendal Mercury and the Westmoreland Gazette, published on Saturday mornings, the former advocating Whig and the latter Tory principles. The Mercury was established in 1811, and the Gazette in 1818. A newspaper called the Kendal Courant was established here prior to 1745, and a fortnightly magazine called the "Agreeable Miscellany," was issued in 1749, but neither of these had a long existence.

The Serpentine or Fell-side Walk, on the west side of the town, was formed in 1824, by about forty subscribers, who engaged at it the unemployed operatives during the stagnation of trade. The walks are beautifully shaded with trees.

SPRINGS AND FAIRS.

Kendal market, held on Saturday, was established by a charter, granted towards the close of the twelfth century by Richard I. to Roger Fitz-Reinfred, baron of Kendal, and confirmed by Edward II. and Edward III., and subsequently by Elizabeth. The same charter also empowered the holdings of two fairs yearly, on the eves, days, and morrows of the feasts of St. Mark, and Sts. Simon and Jude, but the fairs are now held annually on March 22nd, April 29th, and November 8th, for cattle; and November 9th for horses. There is also a fortnightly cattle fair, established in 1849. A hiring for servants is held on the Saturday before Whit-Sunday. About the end of the sixteenth century, Kendal market appears to have been one of the best for corn in the north of England, but it subsequently declined, and about seventy years ago was of little consequence. But a great change has taken place during the last half century, and the market is now abundantly supplied with grain and other farm produce. A new market-house was erected in 1850, on the east side of Stricklandgate.

TRADE AND MANUFACTURES.

Kendal is generally said to be the first place in England in which the manufacture of woollens was established by act of parliament. This took place as early as the fourteenth century, when John Kempe and other weavers, from Flanders, settled here at the express invitation of Edward III. The reasons which induced Kempe to settle here, are stated to have been the large numbers of sheep grazed in the neighbourhood, and the abundance of broom which grew on the surrounding wilds. At this time, and for long after, wool constituted thirteen-fourteenths of our exports, and foreigners sent us in return, woollen cloth, dyed and dressed, and a dyeing material wherewith to dye the small quantity of woollen woven at home. This dye was woad. Indigo was not then known as a dye, and woad was the only blue. Now, blue is one-half of green; and in the broom which grew near Kendal, Kempe and his successors had the other half—the yellow; hence arose the famous Kendal green, which was renowned for centuries, even to within a hundred years, when it was driven out by the Saxon green. This Kendal green was the first celebrated English colour. John Kempe was held in vivid remembrance in Kendal for several centuries; and at the last Kendal Guild, held in 1759, it is said that some of his descendants were present. The woollen trade of Kendal has been the subject of several special enactments, the first of which is dated in 1389. From various acts of parliament, passed during successive reigns, we learn that Kendal cloths—soon called Kendal cottons—were an article of commerce. The length and breadth of these "cottons" (supposed to mean "coatings") were settled by legislative acts; and corn, then forbidden to be imported was permitted to be brought to Kendal from Ireland. Within a century of John Kempe's settlement, his fabrics were originating at least one fair in the interior of the island. His woollens clothed a multitude of London people; and the Kendal men had no other idea than of carrying their ware to London. On one occasion, a Kendal clothier got wet—both he and his goods got wet—on his journey to London; and he stopped on the spot where since, as Stourbridge fair, more woollen goods have been sold there than at any other place in Europe. His cloth being wetted very much, he thought he had better sell it for what it would fetch, and go home. It fetched more than his London journey would have left him. He and some of his townsmen naturally came again, next year, with cloth in good condition. "So that," says Fuller, "within a few years, hither came a confluence of buyers, sellers, and lookers-on, which are the three principles of a fair."

From this time the Kendal manufactures spread over the length and breadth of the land. A local tradition relates how country weavers multiplied in every hamlet among the hills, and how fulling mills might be found on every favourable stream. But the time at length arrived when the woollen yarn was to be used for something else than Kendal cottons. In the reign of Henry VIII., silk stockings were heard of from abroad, and the king preferred knitted hose to the ordinary awkward cloth. It appears that the Kendal folk were not slow in taking a hint, for soon after this there was knitting of woollen hose proceeding in thousands of dwellings. This may seem like exaggeration; but if the local records be true, the quantity of stockings sold weekly at the Kendal market, a century ago, was about 3,000 pairs. The hosiers used to set out on their rounds at stated times; going to the principal markets to give out worsted, and to receive the finished goods. This amount of knitting may be more easily believed when we find that the number of pack-horses employed to carry out Kendal goods, before waggons were established, was above 300 per week.

Meantime the Kendal cottons were going beyond sea. They had lost favour at home before they were sent to clothe the negroes in Virginia. But the American war put a stop to the trade. Before the war was over, Yorkshire had got the start in regard to quality, owing to the introduction of improved machinery. The "cottons" descended in dignity—being used at last for horse-cloths, floor-cloths, and scouring-cloths. At last, the manufacture was admitted on all hands to have sunk below that of the linsey-woolsey (mixed linen and woollen), which had been rising for some years. Cotton fabrics were as yet scarcely heard of; almost all the Welsh, and multitudes of the Scotch and English working classes, were dressed in linsey-woolsey. Between three and four hundred weavers are at this day employed at Kendal in the manufacture of linsey-woolseys—all of the old patterns that were preferred hundreds of years ago. Change in abundance may be found side by side with this adherence to old custom. Railway rugs—a new article—are in great request, and the manufacture is increasing. So is that of trousering. The great manufacture of Kendal, however, is carpets, which was introduced into Kendal in 1822 by Messrs. Atkinson. The collective woollen manufacture employs about a third of the population of Kendal. The principal manufacturers are J. and J. Wilson, at Castle Mills; Messrs. Braitwaite and Co., Meal Bank Mills; Messrs. Simpson and Ireland, whose works are at Staveley; John Ireland and Sons, Low Mills; and Messrs. Whitwell and Co., Dockwray Hall Mills.

The town is also celebrated for its breweries, one of which, Messrs. William Whitwell and Co.'s, situate in Highgate, is very extensive; their stores, near the railway station, cover half an acre of ground. Tobacco and snuff are also manufactured here; and there are four tanneries.

In the seventeenth century the traders of Kendal felt the want of a currency of small value; and it was supplied partly by the trading companies and partly by individuals, in the form of various tokens, of which some eight or ten varieties are known, and may be inspected in the Museum of the Natural History Society in Kendal. The earliest in point of date is that of "Thomas Sandes, of Kendal," 1656. The obverse presents the figures of a teal and a wool-hook; and the reverse a wool-comb. In 1657 a farthing was issued under the name of the Mercers' Company. On one side it bears their arms, the Blessed Virgin's head. On the reverse are the arms of the town. Above the shield are the initials of Kirkby Kendal. The dies of this token, much worn, were found in 1803, among the ruins of the New Biggin, where the Cordwainers' Company had their hall, and they are now in the Kendal Museum. The last token which appears to have been issued is that of Richard Rowlandson of Grayrigg, in Kendal parish, in 1669. The device is described by Mr. Brockett as a pair of scales on a pedestal.

The tradesmen of Kendal were formerly enrolled in seven free companies, or guilds, viz., mercers, shearmen, cordwainers, tanners, skinner, tailors, and barbers. Each of these guilds was under the government of two wardens, who were elected yearly, and sworn to see the rules and orders of their respective companies duly observed. Up to 1750, a guild procession took place in Kendal every twenty-one years, similar to that held in Preston and others of the ancient manufacturing towns. The last of the free companies of Kendal was brought to an end about the beginning of the present century.

For banking purposes Kendal possesses the Kendal Bank, Highgate; Messrs. Wakefield, Crewdson, & Co.; Westmoreland Joint Stock Bank; and the Savings Bank.

GAS AND WATER WORKS.

The gas-works, situated in Park Lane, were constructed in 1826, at a cost of about £7,600, raised in shares of £20 each; and the town was first lighted with gas on the 25th July of the same year. There are two gasometers, capable of containing 36,000 cubic feet of gas.

The water-works were established in 1846, when the company was incorporated by act of parliament conjointly with the gas company, the joint number of shares amounting to 2,282, or 1,852 additional shares; the capital of the gas-works being 380 of £20 each. The reservoir is about a mile east of the town.

THE BURIAL BOARD.

The Kendal Burial Board, established on the 27th February, 1854, purchased land for the New Cemetery on the north and south sides of the road leading from Kirkland to Parkside, the properties respectively of John Wakefield, Esq., and the corporation of Kendal. The former plot, consisting of five acres and three roods, is set apart for the use of members of the Established Church, and the other portion, which contains two acres and two roods, is for the Dissenters. The high road forms the division between the two parts. The price of the land was £200 per statute acre. The corner stone of the chapel for the use of the Church of England portion of the burial ground was laid on the 28th November, 1854, by Mr. John Hudson, and was consecrated by the bishop of Carlisle on August 28rd; and the first interment took place on September 14th, 1855.

GOVERNMENT.

Kendal was first incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, who, by her charter, bearing date November 28th, 1575, vested the government of the town in one alderman, one recorder, twelve burgesses, and twenty-four assistants, under the style and title of "The Alderman and Burgesses of the Burgh of Kirkbie-in-Kendall, in the county of Westmorland." Kendal was governed in accordance with the provision of this charter till 1636, when Charles I. granted another charter which confirmed the previous one, and granted more ample privileges. By this charter the government of the borough became vested in one mayor, twelve aldermen, and twenty chief burgesses of the borough of Kirkby in Kendal, with a recorder, who was to be chosen by the mayor and aldermen, and to hold office during pleasure. Both these charters were surrendered to the crown in the latter part of the reign of Charles II., and a new one obtained which continued in force till the passing of the Municipal Corporations Reform Act in 1835, when the right of holding a separate court of quarter sessions in Kendal ceased. These quarter sessions were usually held before the mayor, recorder, or deputy recorder, and two senior aldermen, who were justices of the peace in right of their office. By the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Reform Act the corporation still retained its title of the Mayor, Alderman, and Burgesses of the Borough of Kirkby in Kendal, and consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors—the mayor being chosen from the council. For the election of councillors the borough was divided into three wards, viz., the East, West, and North wards, each of which is represented by six councillors. On the 21st August, 1848, the Health of Towns Act became law; and on July 19th, 1849, the General Board of Health in London made a provisional order for applying the same to Kendal, which was confirmed on the 1st of the following August. On the 21st of the same month a meeting of the council was held, and a committee, consisting of the whole body, appointed to consider the provisions of the act. The first meeting of the council as a local board of health took place on the 4th September, 1849. The Local Government Act received the royal assent on the 2nd August, 1858, and came into operation in this borough on the 1st of the following September. The following is a list of the aldermen and mayors of Kendal from its incorporation to the present time:—

ALDERMEN.

1576. Henry Wilson.	1599. Edward Wilkinson.
1577. Henry Fisher.	1600. Roger Dawson.
1578. Myles Fox.	1601. John Thwaites.
1579. Robert Jackson.	1602. John Smith.
1580. Christopher Bindloss.	1603. Robert Wilkinson.
1581. Myles Bracken.	1604. Francis Gibson.
1582. Edward Potter.	1605. Richard Steel.
1583. Henry Dixon.	1606. Nicholas Rowlandson.
1584. William Wilson.	1607. James Dixon.
1585. Thomas Potter.	1608. George Fleming.
1586. John Armer.	1609. Michael Rowlandson.
1587. Anthony Pearson.	1610. Thomas Wilson.
1588. James Wilson.	1611. Thomas Green.
1589. Henry Fleming.	1612. Edward Fisher.
1590. Edward Wilkinson.	1613. John Smith.
1591. Roger Dawson.	1614. Edward Wilkinson.
1592. William Swainson.	1615. Thomas Wilson.
1593. John Thwaites.	1616. James Dixon.
1594. William Wilson.	1617. John Robinson.
1595. John Smith.	1618. Thomas Sleddale.
1596. Edward Potter.	1619. Rowland Dawson.
1597. Henry Dixon.	1620. Stephen Newby.
1598. John Armer.	1621. Roland Dawson.

1622. Walter Beck.
1623. Michael Gibson.
1624. William Banks.
1625. James Cook.
1626. James Dixon.
1627. Henry Parks.
1628. James Rowlandson.
1629. Lawrence Parks.

1630. Robert Crossfield.
1631. Edward Fisher.
1632. James Bateman.
1633. Richard Forth.
1634. William Guy.
1635. Thomas Sheldale.
1636. Rowland Dawson.

MAYORS.

1637. Thomas Sheldale.
1638. Walter Beck.
1639. Edward Fisher.
1640. William Banks.
1641. Rowland Dawson.
1642. Lawrence Parks.
1643. Robert Crossfield.
1644. William Guy.
1645. Gervas Benson.
1646. Richard Prusser.
1647. Allan Gilpin.
1648. Thomas Sandys.
1649. John Archer.
1650. Giles Redman.
1651. Anthony Preston.
1652. John Towes.
1653. Edward Turner.
1654. James Cook.
1655. William Jennings.
1656. Robert Jackson.
1657. Thomas Fisher.
1658. John Washington.
1659. George Archer.
1660. William Potter.
1661. Richard Towes.
1662. Thomas Jackson.
1663. William Guy.
1664. John Park.
1665. Edward Turner.
1666. John Beck.
1667. Thomas Turner.
1668. John Towes.
1669. Thomas Jennings.
1670. Thomas Fisher.
1671. James Simpson.
1672. William Potter.
1673. Stephen Birkett.
1674. William Collinson.
1675. James Froughton.
1676. John Jefferson.
1677. Robert Kilner.
1678. William Guy.
1679. Thomas Jackson.
1680. Christopher Redman.
1681. Thomas Turner.
1682. James Cook.
1683. James Simpson.
1684. Robert Hutton.
1685. Lancelot Forth.
1686. Richard Washington.
1687. John Ingerson.
1688. Thomas Towes.
1689. William Wilson.
1690. John Garnet.
1691. Giles Redman.
1692. Joseph Symon.
1693. William Cook.
1694. Edward Fairbank.
1695. William Brownsvord.
1696. Christopher Redman.
1697. William Curwen.
1698. Jonathan Harrison.
1699. Edward Lowry.
1700. Thomas Middleton.
1701. Henry Cort.
1702. Joseph Dawson.

1703. Thomas Bowes.
1704. Robert Wilson.
1705. John Hadwen.
1706. Thomas Holme.
1707. John Archer, M.D.
1708. Robert Kilner.
1709. Lancelot Forth.
1710. Joseph Symson.
1711. William Cook.
1712. William Wilson.
1713. Richard Lowry.
1714. Henry Cort.
1715. Joseph Dawson.
1716. Thomas Rowlandson.
1717. Thomas Bowes.
1718. John Strickland.
1719. William Herbert.
1720. Thomas Winter.
1721. Edward Whitehead.
1722. John Hadwen.
1723. Thomas Holme.
1724. Bryan Philipson.
1725. Thomas Seabrick.
1726. Giles Redman.
1727. John Hodgson.
1728. William Hutton.
1729. Simon Moore.
1730. Thomas Scarisbrick.
1731. William Symson.
1732. John Miller.
1733. John Fairbank.
1734. Edmund Forster.
1735. Christopher Brown.
1736. James Baxter.
1737. John Holme.
1738. William Mackreth.
1739. James Shaw.
1740. James Fisher.
1741. Joseph Birkett.
1742. Thomas Holme.
1743. John Wade.
1744. John Hadwen.
1745. Jonathan Wilson.
1746. John Shaw.
1747. John Braithwaite.
1748. Francis Drinkell.
1749. Edmund Foster.
1750. Christopher Redman.
1751. Richard Sergeantson.
1752. Robert Ruson.
1753. William Gurnal.
1754. James Godmond.
1755. Thomas Kennedy.
1756. Thomas Holme.
1757. Wilson John Robinson.
1758. John Hadwen.
1759. John Shaw.
1760. Francis Drinkell.
1761. Christopher Redman.
1762. C. Redman, re-elected.
1763. Richard Fell.
1764. Thomas Wilson.
1765. Thomas Strickland.
1766. William Gurnal.
1767. James Godmond.
1768. Thomas Kennedy.

1769. Christopher Fenton.
1770. John Hadwen.
1771. William Baxter.
1772. Thomas Scarisbrick.
1773. William Ruson.
1774. Thomas Strickland.
1775. Christopher Fenton.
1776. Francis Drinkell.
1777. Thomas Miller.
1778. Jackson Harrison.
1779. William Baxter.
1780. Thomas Scarisbrick.
1781. Thomas Miller.
1782. Christopher Fenton.
1783. William Petty.
1784. Robert Harrison.
1785. Thomas Gandy.
1786. David Jackson.
1787. William Pennington.
1788. Jonathan Dawson.
1789. Joseph Swainson.
1790. Batty Hodgson.
1791. Thomas Dobson.
1792. Richard Braithwaite.
1793. William Petty.
1794. John Stuart.
1795. William Baxter.
1796. William Berry.
1797. Jackson Harrison.
1798. Robert Harrison.
1799. Christopher Wilson.
1800. Thomas Holme Maude.
1801. William Briggs, M.D.
1802. W. Briggs, M.D., re-elected.
1803. Thomas Hurd.
1804. William Pennington.
1805. Joseph Swainson.
1806. Thomas Harrison.
1807. Smith Wilson.
1808. John Stuart.
1809. Jonathan Hodgson.
1810. John Pearson.
1811. Henry Bradshaw.
1812. Thomas Dobson.
1813. William Berry.
1814. Thomas Holme Maude.

1815. Thomas Atkinson.
1816. Thomas Harrison.
1817. Smith Wilson.
1818. Jonathan Hodgson.
1819. John Pearson.
1820. Joseph Braithwaite.
1821. John Harrison.
1822. Benjamin Hunter.
1823. William Pennington.
1824. Francis Webster.
1825. Michael Braithwaite.
1826. George Foster.
1827. John Moffett.
1828. Thomas Harrison.
1829. Joseph Swainson.
1830. George Webster.
1831. Jonathan Hodgson.
1832. Isaac Wilson.
1833. Joseph Swainson.
1836. John Richards, (afterwards Yeates).
1836. John Wakefield.
1837. William Gellard.
1838. Thompson Hambliss.
1839. Richard Wilson.
1840. James Machel.
1841. John Wakefield.
1842. Richard Wilson.
1843. Samuel Whinery.
1844. Thompson Bindloss.
1845. Cornelius Nicholson.
1846. John Wakefield.
1847. James Machel.
1848. Samuel Whinery.
1849. George Braithwaite.
1850. Jacob G. J. Ireland.
1851. J. G. J. Ireland, re-elected.
1852. John Hudson.
1853. John J. Wilson.
1854. John Whitwell.
1855. William Longmire.
1856. John Whitwell.
1857. John J. Wilson.
1858. John Wakefield.
1859. J. Wakefield, re-elected.

From the report of the Charity Commissioners, it appears that the revenues of the corporation consist of quit-rents received from houses and lands, and a profit from the tolls, which they hold under a lease from the Earl of Lonsdale and the Hon. Mrs. Howard. The corporation are also owners of several wharves on the canal, which they formed in 1818, and for the construction of which they borrowed £7,000. They are also in possession of a sum of £1,640, in trust for the Blue Coat School; a sum of £2,000 in trust for the National School; and £210 for Dorothy Knott's Charity.

The Town Hall, or Moot Hall, stands at the south-west corner of the market-place. It is a plain but convenient structure for the purposes to which it is applied. It consists of a large court-room, and the other requisite apartments; and is surmounted by a square tower, which contains the town clock. The first Moot Hall, which stood on the site of the present building, was erected in 1592; the present structure was erected in 1759, but has since been enlarged and improved. Petty sessions are held at the Town Hall every Saturday.

The House of Correction, which stands at the north end of the town, and which serves for both the borough and county, was built in 1786, but has since been greatly enlarged, and a house for the governor erected.

The police establishment of Kendal consists of a sergeant and three police constables, under the supervision of the county superintendent.

PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION.

Previous to the passing of the reform bill, Kendal was unrepresented in the imperial parliament. By the provisions of that act, which received the royal assent on the 7th June, 1832, the borough became entitled to return one member to the House of Commons. We subjoin the succession of members from that period to the present time:—

- 1832. James Brougham, Esq., (died, 1834.)
- 1834. John F. Barham, Esq.
- 1835. John F. Barham, Esq.
- 1837. George W. Wood, Esq.
- 1841. George W. Wood, Esq., (died, 1843.)
- 1843. Henry Warburton, Esq.
- 1847. George Carr Glyn, Esq.
- 1852. George Carr Glyn, Esq.
- 1857. George Carr Glyn, Esq.
- 1859. George Carr Glyn, Esq.

The number of electors is 382.

POOR-LAW UNION.

Kendal Poor-law Union embraces five sub-districts, viz., Ambleside, comprising Grasmere, Langdale, Rydal and Loughrigg, Ambleside, Troutbeck, Appletwhaita, Undermilbeck, Crook, Huggill, Kentmere, Over Staveley, Nether Staveley; Grayrigg, including Fawcett Forest, Whinfell, Selside and Whitwell, Patton, Grayrigg, Dilcar, Lambrigg, Docker, Sealthwaiterrigg Hay and Hutton-in-the-Hay, Skelsmergh, Strickland Roger, Strickland Ketel, Long Sleddale, New Hutton, Old Hutton-with-Holmescales, Firbank; Kirkby Lonsdale, embracing Killington, Middleton, Barbon, Casterton, Kirkby Lonsdale, Mansergh, Lupton, Hutton Roof, Farleton, Burton-in-Kendal, Dalton (Lancashire), Holme, Preston Patrick, Preston Richard; Kendal, comprehending Natland, Kendal, Nether Graveship, Kirkland; Milnthorpe, containing Helsington, Underbarrow and Bradley Field, Crosthwaite and Lyth, Levens, Sedgwick, Stainton, Hincaster, Heversham-with-Milnthorpe, Haverbrack, Betham, Methop and Ulpha, Witherslack. The area of the union is 189,134 statute acres. Its population in 1851 was 36,572, of whom 18,046 were males and 18,526 females. The number of inhabited houses at the same period was 6,871; of uninhabited, 334; and 73 were in course of erection.

The following are under the management of the corporation trustees of charities and the vicar and school-master:—

Free Grammar School.—In an ancient book of records, called "The Corporation Register," the names of the founder of the Grammar School and of the benefactors to the same, with their gifts, are set down and recorded. From this it appears that Adam Pennyngton, of Boston, in Lincolnshire, by will, dated 20th March, 1525, devised £10, as a stipend, for the finding of a priest, being an able school-master, to teach a free school in the town of Kendal, to be paid out of lands in the county of Lincoln. The revenue of the school was further augmented in 1582, by the sum of £9 5s. 8d. paid by the receiver-general out of the revenues of Westmoreland, making £19 5s. 8d., but the master only receives £17 16s. 4d., £1 9s. 4d. being stopped for fees. John Machell, alderman, of London, directed by his will that £40 in money should be paid to the churchmasters of Kendal, and that they and their successors should lend out the same to poor young men of Kendal, from four years to four years, and in default of such application within one month after it came into their hands, he bequeathed the same to his brother Leonard Machell, or his heirs. The money was not lent out, and in consequence came to Lancelot Machell, son and heir of Leonard Machell, who by deed, dated October 1st, 1574, in consideration of £10 paid by the churchmasters, and also in consideration that the said churchmasters had employed £30, the residue of the said £40, in the purchase of a house in Highgate, Kendal, towards the erecting and maintaining a free grammar school, released to the said churchmasters all claim which he might have to the £40. Miles Phillipson, of Crook, by indenture, dated January 26th, 1588, gave a parcel of ground belonging to Abbot Hall, together with a house standing on the said ground, for the erection of a free school. The school was built by public subscription, and the corporation register contains entries of various donations, some of which were undoubtedly for building the school, and others towards the endowment of it. The following list is extracted from that ancient book, in which the name and subscription of each donor is entered:—

Nicholas Bateman, born in Underbarrow	£	s.	d.
Thomas Wilson, D.D., dean of Worcester, born in Patton	-	6	13 0
Bernard Gilpin, professor of divinity, and parson of Houghton, Durham, born in Kentmere	-	10	0 0
Agnes Robinson, widow, for an usher	-	5	0 0
Edward Swainson, of Kendal, tanner	-	10	0 0
Margaret Eskridge, widow of Charles Eskridge, of Kendal	-	10	0 0
Robert Bindloss, Esq., born in Helsington (towards the exhibition)	-	10	0 0
Katherine Lound, of London, widow, born in Whynfell	-	10	0 0
Hugh Hindlaye, of London, draper	-	10	0 0
Robert Sadler, of London, merchant, born in Kendal	-	10	0 0
John Robinson, of London, born in Kirkland	-	10	0 0
Robert Jackson, of London, born in Kendal	-	10	0 0
Thomas Wilson, professor of divinity, born in Grayrigg	-	10	0 0
Richard Fox, of Kendal, shearman	-	1	0 0
The wife of John Wharton	-	0	13 4
The Chamber gave, in consideration of the purchasing of the ground for the school-house	6	0	0
The Aldermen and Burgesses also subscribed, individually, in various sums	-	14	16 8
And the following sums were given by the inhabitants in the different streets, viz.:-
Soutergate (now Highgate)	-	4	8 2
Stricklandgate	-	7	3 1
Marketstead	-	1	1 10
Stramoungate	-	5	1 10
Making a total	-	£161	18 3

In addition to these pecuniary donations, it appears that Ambrose Earl, and Ann Countess of Warwick, gave towards the building "six fair oke tumber trees," and that, amongst the inhabitants, some gave balks of timber and planks, and others contributed by leading stones. It appears highly probable that part of the above fund was laid out in the purchase of burgrave rents, which are entered in the corporation books from the oldest dates to the present time, under the designation of "usher lands," and £6, their rent, is regularly paid to the schoolmaster. Dr. Airey left £40 a year, the interest to be given to the schoolmaster. George Fleming, in 1627, gave 20s. yearly, towards augmenting the salary of the master and usher. In 1680 Mr. Jackson gave to the school £100. These form the whole of the endowments of the school. The master receives for his stipend:—From the receiver-general, £17 10s. 4d.; from the corporation, as master's salary, £9 8s.; as usher's, £8; as interest on £40, £2; total, £37 4s. 4d. The schoolmaster receives from the pupils, yearly, a "cockpenny," which is understood to be entirely a voluntary payment. The corporation have always exercised the right of appointing the master.

The following are the regulations of the school:—

That the school shall be free to all boys resident in the parish of Kendal, for classics alone, excepting a voluntary payment of a cockpenny as aforetime at Shrovetide, and the payment of 5s. as entrance fee.

That in all cases where a boy shall request to be taught (in addition to classics) English, reading, writing, common arithmetic, the routine bookkeeping, geography, English grammar, and history, which branches of learning are considered to comprise a general commercial education, the master shall be authorised to charge 15s. per quarter.

That for mathematics (including mensuration) and all the higher branches of learning, the charge may be £1 5s. per quarter.

That no boy be admitted into the school under eight years of age.

That it be a regulation of this school, that no boy shall be required to learn the Church Catechism contrary to the declared wish of his parent or guardians.

That there shall be a committee of visitors appointed from time to time, by the corporation annually, to act in conjunction with the master, with powers to make such arrangements in the management of the school as they may deem necessary (always provided that such arrangements are in accordance with the regulations previously set forth.)

There are a great number of small exhibitions tenable at Oxford and Cambridge by pupils educated at this school, viz., an exhibition at Queen's College, founded by Dr. G. Fleming in 1627. Two exhibitions at the same college, founded by Mr. Jopson and Mr. Joseph Smith. Three exhibitions, at the same college, founded by Mr. Henry Wilson, to be paid out of the Farleton tithes. An exhibition, founded by Mr. Sands, tenable for seven years, by scholars nominated by the mayor and corporation of Kendal. An exhibition at Oxford, endowed by Mr. Henry Parke, in 1631. An exhibition at St. John's College, Cambridge, founded in 1674, by Thomas Braythwayte, Esq., of Ambleside.

Fleming's Charity.—George Fleming, in 1627, devised two closes, lying in the Lawnd, near Kendal, containing nine acres, to trustees, whom he directed to pay 40s. a year to poor scholars going forth from Kendal to Queen's College in Oxford; 40s. to poor people within Kendal; and 10s. a year for letting the lands and collecting the rents. He further bequeathed £10 towards the raising of a stock for a lecturer in Kendal church. The forty shillings are paid to the churchwardens for distribution on Good Friday.

Barrow's, Fisher's, Wilson's, Foard's, and Hag's Gifts for Lecturer.—Hugh Barrow, by will, devised out of his lands in Skelsmergh £100 for procuring a lecturer in Kendal church, in the afternoon, on every and every other Sunday; and the lands called Must Hill were charged with this payment. Edward Fisher bequeathed by will, towards the purpose of retaining a lecturer at Kendal church, the sum of £20. Henry Wilson, by will, in 1639, left to the mayor and corporation £50, to be invested in a rent-charge, and the proceeds devoted to a lecturer. Mr. Foard also left £10 for the same purpose. It also appears that John Hay left 6s. 8d. yearly out of lands in Kendal Park for a lecturer. For many years these lectureships have been paid to the vicar of Kendal, who receives annually from the corporation £15 12s., besides 6s. 8d. for Hay's gift, making together £15 18s. 8d.

Good Friday Dole.—There is a sum annually paid by the corporation to the churchwardens of the township of Kendal, to be distributed amongst the poor on Good Friday.

Pateman's and Duckett's Use Money.—A sum of 5s. 4d. is annually paid by the corporation to the churchwardens of Kendal, under this head, and applied in aid of the church-rate. It arises from £10 given by Nicholas Pateman, in 1692, and 40s., part of Alice Duckett's gift.

Wilson's Charity.—Organist.—Jennet Wilson, in 1698, left a close in Kendal Park, called Haverbrack, on trust, that the rent should be applied for the salary of an organist for the parish church.

Mrs. Banks' Gift.—Mrs. Banks, of Kendal, in 1709, left several small sums, secured on bonds, amounting altogether to £113 11s., which sum appears to have been increased to £125, by the interest due upon the said bonds. A part of this sum was lost, in 1733, by Richard Rowlandson, and the fund reduced to £45. In 1771 Thomas Holme, Esq., gave £5, by which benefaction the fund was raised to £50; and in 1798 this sum was laid out in £82 Stock Four-per-cents, and that amount now forms the whole property of this charity. The dividends, amounting to £2 7s. 4d. a year, are divided between six poor widows appointed by the trustees, the mayor, vicar, two senior aldermen, and schoolmaster of Kendal.

Archer's Charity.—John Archer, by will, dated May 14th, 1725, devised a parcel of ground, called Aikrigg, in Kendal Park, to the mayor, two senior aldermen, vicar, and schoolmaster of Kendal, and their successors, upon trust, that they should, every New Year's Day, apply one-half of the rents towards the support of the charity school in Kendal, and the other half in clothing six poor men and six poor women of Kendal. The property consists of a barn and four inclosures, called Aikrigg fields, situate to the south-east of the Castle, and are let for £37 yearly. The clerk of the parish is paid 30s. annually for collecting the rents.

Rev. W. Crosby's Charities.—The Rev. Wm. Crosby, in 1732, bequeathed to the mayor, recorder, two senior aldermen, and schoolmaster of Kendal for the time being, £60 in trust, to be paid to each new vicar within three months after his induction, towards the payment of first-fruits, such new vicar giving security that the sum be paid again, so as to be available, in a similar manner for his successor. To the same trustees, also, he bequeathed his library, for the use of the vicar and curate, and he further gave to the same trustees the annual payment of £3 issuing out of Sydenham tenement in Underbarrow, to be paid to the use of the Blue Coat charity boys. This charity is distributed as directed.

Organ Gallery Trust.—The rents of the pews in the gallery of the parish church of Kendal, amounting to about £32 a year, is appropriated by the trustees in augmenting the salary of the organist, in paying a salary to the singing master, and giving an annual treat to the singers, and such other matters connected with the church as the trustees think proper. This appropriation of the rents is made in pursuance of the faculty granted for the erection of the gallery, to the mayor, recorder, two senior aldermen, and vicar of Kendal.

Sleddall's Prayer Book and Bible Charity.—William Sleddall, by his will, dated August 11th, 1801, gave to the vicar of Kendal, the master of the grammar school, and the senior alderman of Kendal, £300 upon trust, to invest the same in the funds, or other proper security, and out of the dividends to retain to themselves 10s. 6d. each yearly for their trouble, and apply the residue in the purchase of books of common prayer of the Church of England, with the companion to the altar, and the singing psalms in the old version, like the Book of Common Prayer, and to distribute the same to poor housekeepers, who should be residents in Westmoreland, or in any of the parishes of Cartmel, Hawkshead, and Warton, in the county of Lancaster; or in the parish of Sedbergh, in the county of York; and to give ten common prayer-books to the gaol at Appleby, five to the House of Correction at Kendal, for the use of the prisoners, and twelve to the workhouse at Kendal, for the use of the poor. The same directions were given with respect to bibles, but there were to be two distributions of books of common prayer for one of bibles. The dividends arising from this charity amount to £14 16s. a year.

Miss Dowker's Hospital.—Dorothy Dowker, who died 15th May, 1831, by her will, proved 1st June, 1831, bequeathed £3,000 to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of Kendal, in trust, to place the same out in the Three-per-cent Consols, upon trust, that the mayor, two senior aldermen, and vicar for the time being, should nominate six females of good character, born in the Borough or town of Kendal, having attained the age of fifty years, without having been married, and whose situation in life should require some assistance; and should hire or provide a home or building in the said town for their reception, paying for the same not more than £45 a year; and she directed that they should pay the residue of the dividends (deducting all costs and expenses) equally amongst the said six females. The legacy above-mentioned was invested in the purchase of £3,242 12s. 9d. consols, in the name of the corporation, producing annual dividends to the amount of £97 5s. 6d. A neat and suitable almshouse was erected in 1833 on property in Highgate, belonging to the Blue Coat School, upon which the trustees of that charity laid out £400 from their funds. The trustees of Miss Dowker's Charity pay an annual rent of £40 to the trustees of the Blue Coat School, and keep the premises in repair. This charity has since been augmented by Miss Maria Wilson.

Thwaites' Charity.—Ann Thwaites bequeathed, 24th April, 1616, £10 to be lent to five poor tradesmen in Kendal, by the aldermen and constables after the rate of 1s. 6d. in the pound, amounting to 15s. yearly, which she directed should be bestowed in shirts for old people and young children of Kendal not being able to work.

Besides the charities already mentioned, the corporation, and the vicar and the schoolmaster of Kendal are jointly or severally interested in—Grayrigg School, Old Hutton School, Selside School, and in a poor stock belonging to Crosthwaite and Lyth townships.

The following are under the management of the charitable trustees:—

Saunders' Hospital and Blue Coat School.—The property recognised as the foundation of Saunders' Hospital is vested in the charity trustees, who are appointed in obedience to the requirements of the Municipal Corporation Reform Act, and consists of the following premises:—The hospital premises in Highgate, containing the master's house, school-house, and library, and dwellings for eight acres of land in Skelsmergh, called Eidge Bank, now let for £70 a year. The premises in Strickland Roger, called Baxter Holme, and a close there, called Kettle Croft, consisting of a dwelling-house, and about twenty-four acres of land, let for £40 a year. The moiety of a tenement called Wasdale Head, which has not been in the possession of the trustees for a great number of years. These several premises were conveyed by indenture, dated 6th September, 1670, by Thomas Saunders, to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of Kendal, to hold the same upon trust, to apply the rents and profits of the said premises, after payment of all necessary expenses, towards the maintenance, sustenance, and relief of eight poor widows; and also for the use of a schoolmaster there, to read prayers every morning and evening before the said widows, and also there to teach and instruct poor children in good literature until they should be fitted for the free school or elsewhere. The appointment of the schoolmaster is vested in the mayor, senior alderman, vicar, and schoolmaster. The appointment of widows, who are to be fifty-two years of age or upwards, is vested in the trustees, and they are ordered to be appointed in the following manner, viz.—“Three out of Strickland-gate, three out of Stramongate and Highgate, one out of Strickland Ketel and Strickland Roger, and one out of Skelsmergh and Patton.” The said indenture declared that “the widows should have each assigned to them convenient rooms and places in the hospital premises for their habitations, and also each a small plot of garden-ground behind the same, and should each receive 1s. every Saturday morning and 8d. on the eves of Ascension Day and Whit-Sunday, so as to make up their several allowances to four marks a piece per annum out of the revenues of the above premises; and should each have brought for them, in the week before Christmas, a good horse-load of wood by the tenants of the premises in Skelsmergh and Strickland Roger.” The widows now receive 1s. 6d. each per week, and besides having annually paid to them 8d. each on the eves of Ascension Day and Whit-Sunday, they receive 1s. 6d. each at Christmas in lieu of firewood. They also receive on the 5th days of February, May, August, and November, 29s. each; and on the 21st March, June, September, and December, 14s. 6d. each out of the proceeds of subsequent donations and bequests to the hospital. The said indenture further declares that the schoolmaster should have a school-house within the hospital premises, and the use of a chamber for his habitation, and should have the custody and care of the library, and the general supervision of the establishment, and that he and his successors should have all the residue of the said premises after the payment of all the allowances above-mentioned. The schoolmaster, amongst other duties, is required to teach all poor children to read and write gratis. The rental applicable to the master's salary is now about £110. The books left by the founder consist chiefly of the ancient fathers of the church and ecclesiastical historians, many of them scarce and valuable works. The books are not allowed to be taken out of the library. Thus far may be considered the original foundation of the hospital and school. The following gifts, besides several other handsome donations, have since been added, amongst which we may particularise the munificent donation of 500 guineas, a few years ago, from Mr. Edward Burrell, of Liverpool, banker, who received his education at this school.

Dawson's Gift.—consisting of a close of land, called Roundale, in Nantland, and two front dwelling-houses and back premises in Highgate, which were devised by will, dated March 8th, 1722, to the mayor, two senior aldermen, and vicar of Kendal, and their successors, upon trust, to dispose of the rents towards the advancement of the charity, and maintenance of the blue coat boys in Kendal. The premises in Highgate have been rebuilt, and are now used as Miss Dowker's Hospital, and a rent is regularly paid by that institution to the treasurer of Sandes' Hospital.

Woodburn's Gift.—Christopher Woodburn, by will, in 1723, charged certain premises in Highgate and All Hallow's Lane with the payment of 40s. each per year towards putting out four poor boys to be apprentices, to be paid to their masters, and 10s. each for finding them shirts and cravats at the commencement of their service; to be sons of freemen, and two of them to be educated at the charity school, and to be elected by the contributors and managers of the school, with the payment of 20s. annually to the master of the school. The sum of £10 is annually received by the treasurer of the charitable trustees out of the said premises, but the 20s. for a master has not been received for a considerable number of years.

Archer's Gift.—John Archer, by will, in 1725, devised to the mayor, two senior aldermen, vicar, and schoolmaster of Kendal, and their successors, a moiety of the rents of certain premises, called Aikrigg, in Kendal Park, to be applied to the maintenance of this school.

Crosby's Gift.—The Rev. William Crosby, in 1732, gave a rent charge of £3 annually, on Sydenham tenement, in Underbarrow, to the mayor, recorder, two senior aldermen, and schoolmaster, in trust, for the use of the Blue Coat Charity. This is regularly paid to the master of the school, and accounted for by him to the treasurer.

John Gibson's Gift.—An estate in Brigsteer, called Barrow House, now let for £16 a year, was conveyed by John Gibson, by indenture, dated 21st November, 1752, to the mayor, senior alderman, vicar, and schoolmaster, in trust, for the use of the charity boys then and thereafter to be educated in this school.

Herbert's Gift.—A close of land, called Martin Croft, in Gilling Grove, was devised by William Herbert, in 1765, to the mayor, vicar, and schoolmaster, for the use and benefit of the charity boys in Kendal.

Thomas Gibson's Gift.—Thomas Gibson, in 1777, charged certain premises called Ralphford Hall (now the Mason's Arms), in Stramontage, with the payment of £1 1s. annually to Sandes' Hospital.

In addition to the above, the following donations and bequests in money have been made at various times, which are advantageously invested; and the funds of the institution are further augmented by annual subscriptions in the town and neighbourhood:—

	£	s.	d.
1703 Mr. William Colverwell, for boys' school	50	0	0
— Rev. Mr. Beckwith	do.	5	0
— Rev. Mr. Jackson	do.	10	0
— Mr. Richard Isaac	do.	5	0
— Mrs. Gibson	do.	40	0
— Mr. Robert Simpson	do.	6	0
— Mr. Crossinbarrow	do.	16	0
1704 Thomas Hume	do.	40	0
1705 Mr. Gainsbury Stratford	do.	50	0
1706 Mrs. Anne Bunsow	do.	40	0
1708 Mr. Jacob Hoag	do.	5	0
1709 Mr. Barrington Gibson	do.	5	0
1709 A. P. P. and W. W.	do.	7	0
— The Company of Stramontage	do.	8	0
1783 Mr. Alderman Strickland	do.	20	0
1780 Mrs. Pamela Elkeray, for boys' school	50	0	0
1704 Mr. Thomas Elleray, for boys' school	50	0	0
1705 Mrs. Elizabeth Cock	do.	100	0
1709 Mr. Thomas Whitwell	do.	20	0
1800 Joseph Marrie, Esq.	do.	20	0
1808 Mr. Garnett Braithwaite	do.	21	0
1811 Mrs. Knott (annually)	do.	1	0
— John Walsfield, Esq.	do.	50	0
1812 Jane Emmerson, for widows	do.	25	12
1814 John Postrethwaite, Esq., for boys	do.	250	0
— Mr. William Sleddall	do.	100	0
1815 Miss Latchett	do.	10	0
1816 Mr. Joseph Swainson, for widows	do.	21	0
— Mrs. Cook	do.	21	0
1824 James Bateman, Esq., for boys	do.	50	0
1825 Mrs. Jackson Harrison	do.	800	1
1827 Mrs. Dorothy Matson	do.	100	0
1828 Miss Mary Robinson	do.	100	0
— Edward Burrell, Esq.	do.	500	0

There are in the boys' school forty-five scholars who are taught reading, writing, Latin, and mathematics. In 1789 it was determined to admit thirty girls to the benefits of this school, to be clothed in blue out of the proceeds of bequests and donations to the institution subsequent to the foundation; and the number has, since 1838, been increased to forty. These girls are now selected from the most deserving amongst the girls in the National School, and are instructed in reading, writing, arithmetic, and needlework. They are taught in the girls' national school-room, and attend the parish church regularly, with the other children in that institution.

Gilpin's Rents for the Poor.—It is stated in "Burn's History of Westmoreland," page 75, that "William Gilpin, steward to Alan Bellingham, of Levens, Esq., purchased of the said Alan Bellingham certain rents belonging to the chapel of St. Anne, of £3 7s. 8d. a year, at thirty years' purchase; and by his will, dated 1561, bequeathed the same to two Gilpins, his relations, and to others the nearest of his kindred, successively to distribute the same to the poor in Kendal, of his name and family, for ever." The rents arise out of the following premises:—

	£	s.	d.
1. Out of the White Hart Inn or coffee house	1	10	6
2. Out of a house and two shops in Butchers' Row adjoining the White Hart, the property of Mrs. Bradley, occupied by Thomas Riggs, draper, and John Taylor, tea dealer	1	9	2
3. Out of a shop and premises, the first house in Stricklandgate, the property of Mr. Thomas Robinson, grocer	0	8	0
	£3	7	8

These rents are regularly received and disposed of as directed.

Henry Park's Gift.—Henry Park bequeathed to the aldermen and burgesses of Kendal, in the year 1631, £74 upon trust, to bestow the yearly profit thereof in cloth for the poor about Martinmas.

John Towers's Gift.—John Towers, in 1677, gave to the chamber of Kendal £60, the yearly interest thereof to be distributed to the poor of Kendal on Good Friday.

James Simpson's Gift.—James Simpson, in 1687, left to the mayor and aldermen of Kendal, £60 upon trust, the interest thereof to be laid out in cloth for six aged men and six aged women of Kendal, free of the town, to make each of them a coat. James Simpson also left one-half of the residue of his real and personal estate for the benefit of the poor of Kendal.

Dr. Stratford's Gift.—It appears, by an entry in the corporation books, that, in 1755, a sum of £50 was received from Dr. Stratford, for which £2 interest is carried out.

Dorothy Knott's Gift.—Dorothy Knott, in the year 1810, purchased £99 17s. 6d. in the Navy Five-percents, in the names of the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, the proceeds to be applied to the following public charities of Kendal; and in 1812 she purchased another sum of £100 in the same stock, the interest to be paid half-yearly to the rector of Grasmere and the sidesmen, to be applied for the education of five poor children of Grasmere School. These two sums appear to have been sold out in 1831, and secured upon the corporation property. The interest, at four per cent, is distributed in the following manner:—Blue Coat School, Kendal, £1 1s.; Sunday schools, ditto, £1 1s.; Dispensary, ditto, £1 1s.; Lying-in Charity, ditto, the residue; to Grasmere School, £4 4s. The contributions to the different charities in Kendal are paid in August, and that to Grasmere School in February, annually.

National Schools.—The Boys' National School was founded by subscription, in 1817, and was endowed with the munificent sum of £2,000 by Matthew Pyper, Esq., of Whitehaven. The deed of endowment declares that the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of Kendal shall be trustees of the school. The said indenture also declares that the annual produce shall be applied to the payment of such salary or salaries to the masters or teachers of the said school as should from time to time be nominated by the said committee, in conformity to the rules of the National Society, provided such masters or teachers should not have any freehold or permanent interest, but should be displaced and removed from time to time by the said National Society, or by the said committee, as should be thought most for the benefit of the said school. The sum of £2,000 was invested in Five-per-cent. Stock, and on the reduction to Four-per-cent. Stock, the trustees sold it out, and carried the produce to the general account of the school, out of which £2,000 was placed in the hands of the corporation, and secured by mortgage upon their property; and they pay interest for it, at four per cent. per annum. The only permanent fund of the school, besides this, is the rent of part of the school premises, let off as garden ground, for about £3 a year, and the interest of the following small legacies and benefactions:—

	£	s.	d.
1820 Legacy of Miss Elizabeth Haygarth	40	0	0
1820 Benefaction by the corporation	1	0	0
1825 Benefaction by the National Society	70	0	0
1828 Legacy by Enoch Clark, Esq., Lancaster	20	0	0
1830 Benefaction by Alderman Branthwaite	5	5	0
1833 Legacy by Mrs. Elizabeth Harrison, Stricklandgate	20	0	0

The subscriptions and contributions amount to about £60 annually, and the school is conducted on the national system, under the management of the visitors and a committee of subscribers. There are about 100 scholars on the roll. Children are admitted at the age of five years and a half, and pay one penny per week for their education, and have books and all school requisites (except copy books) found them. The salary of the master is £50 per annum. Annexed to the boys' school is a commodious building, erected in 1823, by voluntary contributions, for a Girls' National School.

The management of the girls' school is under a committee of sixteen ladies, who are elected visitors at the annual meetings. The children are instructed in reading, writing, and the common rules of arithmetic, and also in knitting and sewing. Connected with this institution there is a clothing fund, raised by annual subscription, out of which the committee distribute annually to each of the children some useful article of apparel. The salary of the mistress is £30 per annum.

Wilson's Gift.—Rowland Wilson, Esq., by will, dated 5th February, 1650, left 52s. yearly, to be distributed in bread to the poor of Kendal, charged upon his estate at Grasgarth. Regularly paid.

Robinson's Gift.—John Robinson, of Lane Foot, in Strickland Ketel, left the sum of 52s. yearly, charged upon his estate called Green Riggs, in Underbarrow, for the same purpose. The date of this bequest is 1750. Regularly paid.

Bordley's Gift.—Mrs. Catherine Bordley, in 1811, left £100, the interest thereof to be given in bread to the poor. This money was invested in the purchase of £113 9s. 6d. stock in the Five-per-cent. Annuities, in the names of the vicar of Kendal and Edward Peddar, and produced at the time a dividend of £5 13s. 4d. yearly, but has since been reduced.

Sleddall's Gift.—William Sleddall, who died in 1813, by will, dated 11th August, 1801, left £130 to the churchwardens of Kendal, to be lent out at interest, or invested in the public funds, and 2s. weekly, laid out in the purchase of bread, to be on every Sunday divided amongst such of the poor people of Kendal attending divine service at the parish church as the churchwardens should think fit. This money was laid out in the purchase of £156 7s. 10d. stock in the Four-per-cents. and the clear interest received therefrom was at that time about £6 5s. yearly. The two last gifts of Bordley and Sleddall now realise only £9 12s. 8d. annually, owing to a reduction in interest. All these sums, amounting to £14 16s. 8d., are paid to the clerk, and laid out in bread, which is ordered by the churchwardens, and distributed by them every Sunday—one loaf to each person. The communion money has usually been added to the bread account and distributed with it. Generally, penny loaves are given, and occasionally, as the funds will allow, twopenny ones are distributed.

Elizabeth Rigg, of Newton Heath, Manchester (formerly Miss Baldwin, of Kendal), by deed, dated December, 1846, conveyed to Thompson Bindloss, Esq., Mr. John Hudson, bookseller, and Mr. Thomas Thexton, corn merchant, in trust, two dwelling-houses, situate on the south side of the Woolpack Yard, one-half the net rents of which to be distributed in bread to the poor every Sunday, at the parish church, and the other half to be given to the Ladies' Sick Poor Society; and if the subscriptions to this society should in any year not amount to £10 then the whole of the net rents to be distributed in bread to the poor. The gross rental of the property now amounts to £16 16s. annually, but owing to the recent date of this trust, no funds have yet been available.

The following are not connected with the corporation or charitable trustees:—

Ianson's Charity.—This charity is vested in twenty-seven feoffees, who were to be appointed by the alderman, vicar, and schoolmaster; and when sixteen of the said feoffees are dead, the property belonging to this charity is conveyed over by a new deed to such persons, inhabitants of Kendal, as the corporate officer named in lieu of the alderman, vicar, and schoolmaster appoint. The property consists of several burgrave rents, amounting to £2 16s. 10d. annually, viz.—

Miss Dyson	8	4
W. D. Crowson, Esq.	13	4
Old Fellows' Hall	8	0
Rev. Dean Carter	8	0
C. Wilson, Esq.	1	0
Miss Barton, Bowness (Property in Highgate)	6	0
Isaac Braithwaite, Esq.	3	6
New Inn Property, viz.—
Mrs. M. Nant	3	4
William Bowness	11	2
Joseph Clarke	3	7
	£2	16 10

And three closes of land situate in Park Castle lands, containing 8a. 3r. 39p., customary measure, let for £37 15s. annually. The sum of 3s. 4d. is ordered to be paid annually to the chamber of Kendal, and 3s. 4d. to the churchwardens for the repair of the church. Ten shillings are ordered to be paid to the clerk for collecting the rents; but this sum is now increased to 30s. Twenty shillings each are appointed to be given to six aged and poor men, of above the age of fifty years, of honest and good behaviour; and in want of duly qualified natives, the trustees may choose or elect one or more, if wanted, who have lived twenty years in the said burgh, the said men to be chosen by the trustees and the aldermen of Kendal, and the vicar and schoolmaster there, each of such men to have yearly paid to him 20s. on the 21st of December, at the porch of the parish church. The residue to be bestowed in cloth, linen and woollen, for shirts and coats, on the day and place aforesaid, to such other poor people of Kendal town, and in such manner as the said collector, with the consent of the said trustees, alderman, vicar, and schoolmaster, or the major part of them, should think fit. The trustees have the power to let the premises for terms not exceeding ten years.

Prissoe's Charity.—John Prissoe, on the 20th March, 1695, bequeathed to the mayor of the corporation of Kendal for the time being, Richard Washington and two others, aldermen, and John Robinson and two others, inhabitants of Kendal, £120 upon trust, to lay out upon land or upon good security, and to distribute the interest thereof to the poor of Kendal every Christmas Eve. He also gave £10 to defray the charges of purchasing land. Two fields in Church Fields, containing 2a. 3r. 20p. were purchased with a part of the money, and the residue (£15) is out at interest and produces 14s. annually. The land is let for £11 a year.

Sleddall's Green-Coat Charity.—William Sleddall, by will, dated 11th August, 1801, gave to John Stuart and William Berry, two of the senior aldermen of Kendal, and to such two persons as should, at his decease, be the two senior burgesses of Kendal, £525, upon trust, that they and their successors, to wit, should purchase Four-per-cent. Bank Annuities, or lend the same upon real or personal security, and apply the interest or dividends in the establishing and for ever supporting a Sunday school in Kirkby Kendal, for the instruction of thirty-five boys and twelve girls, the children of the poor people of Kirkby Kendal, to be nominated by the trustees; and for finding and providing a new green coat for each of the boys every year, and new hats once in two years; and for each of the girls a green gown every year, and green bonnets once in two years. Mr. Sleddall died in 1813, and this legacy was received by Mr. Stuart and Mr. Berry, and invested in the purchase of £625 18s. 7d. stock in the Four-per-cents., then at 83½, in their names, and the dividends arising therefrom amounted at that time to £25 0s. 8d. yearly: but the interest on the stock having been reduced, the dividend is only £22 10s. 10d. at this date. In 1843 the trustees found the management of the school so exceedingly defective, that they determined upon removing the children to the schools connected with St. Thomas' Church, under certain regulations, which are entered in the minute-book kept by the trustees; and the scholars were accordingly removed from the old school in Finkle-street, at Easter, in the same year. The trust is now efficiently managed according to the will of the donor.

Lord Wharton's Bible Charity.—The Vicar of Kendal receives thirty bibles yearly, with about thirty-six small books. An examination takes place, and the books are given to such poor children as pass the best examination.

Stephenson's Charity.—The property of this charity consists of the house and premises in Rainbow, in Kendal, and the house and shop adjoining. These premises are supposed to have been given by Robert Stephenson about the year 1716. The sum of six guineas, out of the rents, is given to the Catholic priest of Kendal, to be distributed at his discretion amongst poor Catholics on St. Thomas' Day. The remainder is given away to poor persons, not pensioners, in small sums from 1s. to 2s. 6d., on St. Thomas' Day. A part of these premises have lately been rebuilt out of money reserved from the rents, but the new buildings are now, it appears, clear, and the whole of the proceeds are again available for the purposes intended by the donor.

Lancaster's Charity.—Bryan Lancaster, by will, dated 8th day of 4th month, 1719, devised his estate at Kendal Park to certain trustees, for family purposes, which being fulfilled, he directed that on the 1st of January, £9 should be yearly distributed, namely, 20s. each to six poor men, and 10s. each to six poor women, they being legal inhabitants within the corporation of Kendal, without respect to what society or denomination or profession of religion they should go under, but chiefly with regard to their age and poverty. The rest and residue of the proceeds he gave to such charitable use as his trustees, together with four or six more approved faithful friends of the people called Quakers within the Kendal meeting, should in their discretion think fit. The above sum of £9 has been regularly distributed on New Year's day as far back as can be remembered, to poor men and women, settled inhabitants within the borough, and not members of the Society of Friends. The surplus rents are appropriated partly to the funds for relieving the poor amongst the Society of Friends, and partly to other charitable objects. The property belonging to this trust has a rental of about £280 per annum. It consists of the dwelling-house and land connected with the Friends' School, in Stramongate, the rental of which is £30 per annum; and of sixteen fields situated in Kendal Park, containing, with plantations, house and garden, about 80a. 2r. 35p., yielding about £175 per annum, together with five fields in Mint's Feet, measuring about 25a. 1r. 30p., and the rent of which is about £75. Four acres, however, of the last-mentioned land have been left at sundry times by different individuals for purposes connected with the Society of Friends only. In respect of these latter trusts, Lancaster's trustees pay out of their income about £14 yearly. There is likewise a field called Shaw's Parrock, which is the exclusive property of the Society of Friends.

Friend's School.—About seventy years since, "The Friends" in various parts of England built by subscription upon a portion of Bryan Lancaster's estate a school-house, in order that a good school should always be maintained in Kendal. The master for the time being has hitherto had the school-house and playground at a trifling rent. He must be a member of the Society of Friends, and is appointed by Lancaster's trustees in conjunction with the preparative meeting of Kendal.

British School.—This school was built in the year 1835, and opened in October of that year. The building cost £610, of which sum £485 was raised by voluntary subscription, and £125 was granted by the government commissioners for education. The trustees are appointed by the managing committee of the school. The school is open to children of all religious denominations, and is ably conducted on the Lancastrian system. The number of scholars on the books amounts at present to about 300, the only payment required being 3d. for writing and accounts, and 2d. for reading, per week.

Schools of Industry.—The schools of industry were established in 1799, and are supported by annual subscription. In 1799, John Postlethwaite, Esq. gave the sum of £25 12s. for the support of this institution; and in 1814, John Postlethwaite, Esq. left the sum of £250 for the same purpose. These sums, together with about £150, raised by voluntary subscription, which was required to complete the purchase, were laid out in suitable premises on the Kent side, in the year 1827, where the schools were, till lately, efficiently managed by a committee of subscribers; but it is to be regretted that, from the inadequacy of the funds, the trustees have been obliged to close the school for the present.

Infants' School.—This school was established by voluntary subscriptions from among the Society of Friends in the year 1830, and is mainly indebted for its continued support to the annual contributions of that society, added to a small weekly payment with each of the children. The school-house is a neat stone building, which stands near Stock Bridge, at the foot of Castle-street.

Miss Maria Wilson's Benefaction to Miss Dowker's Hospital.—Maria Wilson, of Kendal, in the county of Westmoreland, spinster, by indenture made 13th May, 1830, assigned and transferred unto trustees, the sum of £1,000 in the Three-per-cent. Consols. in trust, that they should receive the dividends and interest arising therefrom when and as the same should become due, and after thereout paying all expenses incident to the trust, should pay and divide the same or the residue of such dividends unto and equally between and amongst the six females for the time being in the hospital in Kendal founded by Dorothy Dowker, by her will bearing date the 22nd day of February, 1830. And it is declared and agreed, that the vicar for the time being of the said parish of Kendal should, ex officio, be a trustee under the said indenture.

The Dispensary.—The Dispensary is, perhaps, the most active and most useful charitable institution in the town. It was established by voluntary subscription in 1783, and continues to be supported in like manner, together with £80 per annum as an allowance from the township of Kendal, the interest of a legacy of £100 left by Mrs. Dorothy Dowker in 1831, Mrs. Knott's annuity of £1 1s., and the interest of the recent liberal donation of £500 made by James Gandy, Esq., of Heaves Lodge, in January, 1844. Mr. Gandy's munificent gift is at present invested in the Stockton and Darlington railroad, in the name of Mr. John Gandy, the treasurer of the Dispensary, Mr. W. D. Cressdon, and of the secretary, Mr. Samuel Marshall. The treasurer and secretary of the Dispensary, for the time being, are to be the permanent trustees, and the annual dividends are to be appropriated to the procuring nourishing diet, &c., for the patients of the Dispensary, under the superintendence of the apothecary of the institution. The institution is under the direction of a committee of twelve subscribers, appointed at the annual meeting held on the first Monday in each year. A resident apothecary is maintained, who is aided by a physician and several consulting surgeons; and efficient medical and surgical aid are thus secured to the poor, whose title is the production of a subscriber's ticket.

Whitehead's Gift.—Peter Whitehead, of Kirkland, by will, dated 3rd October, 1712, gave a burghage house in Kendal, and a house in Kirkland, and a bit of land called Little Roods, in Kirkland, to his sister for life, and he gave the house in Kirkland, after her death, to Bryan Lancaster, Elizabeth Walker, Thomas Crosby, and Robert Wharton, and their heirs in trust to sell the same; and out of the proceeds he gave £45 to the poor inhabitants legally settled in the township of Kirkland, which sum he directed the trustees above-named to pay over, after the decease of his said sister, to the trustees of the charity. And he directed the trustees to lay the same out at five per cent, and out of the interest to take 20s. annually and therewith buy cloth or kersey for coats for three poor men, inhabitants of and legally settled in Kirkland, and such as in their judgment should stand most in need, and to distribute the same on the feast of St. Peter and St. Paul. And to distribute the further sum of 20s. amongst the poor inhabitants of Kirkland, and especially to the ancient, the lame, and blind, widows and orphans, in sums not less than 1s. nor exceeding 1s. 6d., and the remaining 5s. to be divided amongst the trustees, and he directed that the coats should have the letters P. W. in red cloth upon the left arm. The interest of this money (£2 5s.) is given away annually on St. Peter's Day, nothing being reserved for the distributors. For a considerable period coats have ceased to be given away on account of the objection to wearing the letters, and, instead thereof, 7s. is given to each of the poor persons, towards furnishing a coat.

Poor Stock, Kirkland.—Anthony Yeates, Esq., held, until his death, the sum of £17, which was in the hands of his father, John Yeates, but of the particulars of which no account can now be obtained, except that the sum was originally £30, and in the hands of a person of Kendal who failed, and £17 was all that could be recovered from his estate. Mr. Yeates gave 17s. as interest of this money to the settled poor of Kirkland on All Saints' Day yearly, in sums of 1s. and 2s. each. Since the death of Mr. Yeates this charity has been distributed by the vicar, Edward Wilson, Esq., and Mr. Bindloss, who were appointed trustees after the death of Mr. A. Yeates. The money (£17), is in the hands of Mr. Reveley, one of the trustees of the late A. Yeates, Esq., and he pays the interest thereof regularly to the trustees of the charity.

Burgage Rents.—There are two burgage rents of 5s. 2d. and 10s. 4d., which, for at least eighty years, have been given away to the poor of Kirkland. How these payments arose cannot be clearly ascertained. The first is found charged upon premises on the east side of Kirkland, now belonging to Mr. Bindloss; and the other, viz. 10s. 4d., issues out of a house close adjoining the former premises, now belonging to the executors of the late John Thompson. These sums are regularly distributed to the poor of Kirkland, annually, by the churchwarden, and are entered by him in a book required by the Poor-law Commissioners to be kept for that purpose.

There are several other charities, but they are either lost or not now appropriated.

EMINENT PERSONS.

Amongst the eminent persons who were born or resided at Kendal, we may mention—

Katherine Parr, queen of Henry VIII., who was born at Kendal Castle, about the year 1510.

William Parr, marquiss of Northampton, brother of Queen Katherine, also born at Kendal Castle, in 1513.

Barnaby Potter, bishop of Carlisle, born at or near Kendal, in 1578.

Sir George Wharton, distinguished as an astronomer and mathematician, born at or near Kendal, in 1617.

Ephraim Chambers, compiler and publisher of the first encyclopedia, was born at Milton, near Herevsham, but educated at the Grammar School here.

John Wilson, a journeyman shoemaker of this town, distinguished for his knowledge of botany.

William Hudson, F.R.S., author of "Flora Anglica," and other works, born at Kendal about 1730.

Thomas Shaw, D.D., born at Kendal in 1693, was the author of several books of travel, particularly describing those portions of Asia and Africa in contiguity to the Red Sea.

Anthony Askew, M.D., born in 1722, well known as a collector of Greek MSS.

Sir Alan Chambre, one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas, was born here in 1740, died in 1823, and was buried at Kendal.

John Gough, a celebrated naturalist, was born here in 1757, and died in 1823. His contributions to the transactions of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society are very numerous.

John Dalton, the celebrated philosopher, was for some time a resident of Kendal.

NETHER GRAVESHIP.

The rateable value of this township is £2,554 8s. 8d. The population in 1801, was 37; in 1811, 43; in 1821, 76; in 1831, 312; in 1841, 323; and in 1851, 313. Nether Graveship lies on both sides of the Kent, and forms a populous suburb of the town of Kendal, from which it extends about a mile to the south. Collin Field, the old manor house, is now a farmstead. It was long the seat of the Chambre family, of whom it was purchased, in 1668, by Mr. George Sedgwick, secretary to the Countess of Pembroke, who gave him £200 towards the purchase. During the parliamentary wars, the Countess of Pembroke retired to this house for safety. The pictures which this house formerly contained have been removed to Park Head, the residence of John Y. Yeates, Esq. The landowners are Richard Wilson, Esq.; Edward Wilson, Esq.; Edward W. Wakefield, Esq.; the Earl of Lonsdale; the Hon. Mrs. Howard; F. M. Yeates, Esq.; Messrs. William Walker and Co., with many others. For a further account of this township, see Kendal.

KIRKLAND.

The township of Kirkland forms part of the borough and town of Kendal.

PATTON.

This township contained in 1801 77 inhabitants; in 1811, 81; in 1821, 89; in 1831, 71; in 1841, 66; and in 1851, 83. The rateable value is £783 16s.

Patton seems anciently to have belonged to a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed to the Bellinghams of Burneshead, from whom it was transferred in marriage to the Thornburghs of Meathop and Selside. In 1723 it was sold to trustees for the use of the tenants. A moiety of the lands in Patton appear to have belonged to the priory of Conishead, in Lancashire. The landowners are Arthur Shepherd, Esq.; John Simpson, Esq.; Messrs. Hubbard; Mrs. Harrison; and some small proprietors.

Patton is situated between the Mint and Sprint rivulets, and extends from two and a half, to four miles north-east of Kendal.

Shaw End is a fine mansion in this township, four miles north-east of Kendal, and the property of Arthur Shepherd, Esq.

There is a corn-mill here on the rivulet, which divides Patton from Selside-with-Whitwell.

SKELSMERGH.

The rateable value of this township is £3,513. The population in 1801 was, 247; in 1811, 220; in 1821, 258; in 1831, 263; in 1841, 293; and in 1851, 327. Agriculture is the principal employment.

Skelsmergh belonged to the Leybournes for upwards of four centuries, during which time their principal residence was at Cunswick. It was granted in the reign of Henry III. to Robert de Leybourne, by William de Lancaster the third. In 1301 Nicholas de Leybourne had a grant of free warren in Skelsmergh. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth the Leybournes suffered greatly in consequence of their attachment to the Catholic faith. They sold the manor to the Bellinghams of Levens, and Braithwaite of Burneshead, who enfranchised most of the tenants. But the hall and demesne continued to be held by the Leybournes till 1715, in which year they were forfeited. They were subsequently purchased by Thomas Crowley, Esq., and by him sold to Daniel Wilson, Esq., of Dallam Tower, whose descendant, George E. Wilson, Esq., is the present owner. The Hon. Mrs. Howard is the superior lady of the manor. The landowners are, George E. Wilson, Esq.; John Bateman, Esq.; Stephen Brunsell, Esq.; Rev. G. H. Swale; J. J. Rowlandson, Esq.; John A. Medcalf, Esq.; the trustees of Dodding Green, and others. The township of Skelsmergh extends from a mile and a quarter to four and a half miles north-east of Kendal. It contains the small hamlet of Garth Row, three miles north of Kendal, a number of dispersed dwellings, two corn-mills, a worsted mill, a bobbin mill, and a dyewood mill.

Mint House and Mint Cottage, are two neat houses in the vale of Mint, the former the property of John A. Medcalf, Esq., and the latter of Alexander W. Long, Esq. Oak Bank is the property and residence of Mr. Robert Seed. Dodding Green is an ancient house with a Catholic chapel attached, which was endowed about a century and a half ago with the adjoining house and estate. No service is performed here at present. Gillthwaite Rigg House is another residence in this township.

CHARITIES.

School.—There is no school in Skelsmergh, but the inhabitants have the privilege of sending four children to Selside School, and four children to Burneside school, to be taught free, on account of a bequest of £100 by Joseph Harling to each of these schools. The number of children is always kept full at each place.

Alice Duckett's Charity.—A full account of this charity will be found in the account of Kendal charities at page 847. The sum received by the overseers of this township is 24s. yearly, which is divided about May Day, annually, amongst poor householders.

Townships of Skelsmergh and Patton.—Stephenson's Gift.—There is a memorandum in the township book which states that there was due to the townships of Skelsmergh and Patton the sum of £2 annually, being a gift of Mr. Robert Stephenson to the said townships, out of Dodding Green estate. The sum of £40 is supposed to have been received many years ago, as Robert Stephenson's donation, and to have been laid out in the year 1775 in repairing the public roads. The surveyor of highways pays yearly, on account of this charity, £1 17s. 6d., to three or four poor persons not receiving parish relief.

Stephenson's Charity.—Dodding Green Dole.—The poor of Skelsmergh and Patton are entitled to 40s. annually, charged upon the Dodding Green tenement, the former receiving 26s., the latter 14s. This estate was conveyed, about the year 1716, by R. Stephenson, Esq., a Catholic, to trustees of the same religion, for charitable uses. The general object of this charity is stated to be for the support of a priest for the Catholics of Dodding Green and neighbourhood. The Catholic priest of Kendal is the present pastor of Dodding Green, and by him is the charity distributed amongst the poor of Skelsmergh and Patton, without distinction of creed.

CROOK CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry comprises an extensive mountainous district, containing several dispersed dwellings, bearing different names, and a small hamlet called Crook Mill, three and a quarter miles north-west of Kendal, but the chapelry extends to about six miles from that town. Lead and barytes are found here.

The rateable value of Crook is £1,433 15s. 7d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 179; in 1811, 176; in 1821, 227; in 1831, 246; in 1841, 257; and in 1851, 278; who are principally engaged in agricultural pursuits.

This manor is partly in the Marquis Fee and partly in the Lamley Fee of Kendal barony. In 1309 Simon de Knype held of William de Roos the fourth part of Crook, by the coruage of 5s. 11½d., and for pature of the foresters 6s. In 1572 part of the jointure of Helena, widow of William Parr, marquis of Northampton, was "the rent of Crook and improvements there, 15s. 7d. a year." In 1598 it was found that "in Crook seventeen messuages or tenements in the several tenures of divers customary tenants were holden by William Knype, gentleman, of the queen (Elizabeth), as of her barony of Kendal, by knight's service, viz., the fiftieth part of one knight's fee, and were worth by the year £4 18s. 4d." The manorial rights are vested in the Earl of Lonsdale and the Hon. Mrs. Howarth. The landowners are the trustees of the late Mr. Harrison; R. P. Davis, Esq.; Robert Birkett, Esq.; John Banks, Esq.; John Fell, Esq.; and Henry Birmingham, Esq. The commons were enclosed in 1823.

Crook Hall, anciently Thwatterden Hall, belonged for several generations to the Philipson family, a younger branch of which settled here, the other remaining at Calgarth. In 1681 Miles Philipson, Esq., of Crook Hall, representative of Westmoreland in parliament, was knighted by Charles I. He died without issue male, and his three daughters and co-heirs sold the estate to Major Pigeon, natural son of Charles II., whose daughter brought the estate in marriage to Ralph Day, Esq., who in 1777 was owner of the hall, which, like most of the old residences of the Westmoreland gentry, is now a farm-house.

THE CHAPEL.

Crook chapel is an ancient building, situated on an eminence, about the centre of the chapelry, and is supposed to be dedicated to St. Catherine. The tower contains one bell. The endowment of this chapel was formerly only £3 16s. 4d., but in 1751 and 1767, it was augmented with £400 from Queen Anne's Bounty, with which two estates were purchased, one at Stainton and the other at Crook. It also possesses another small estate in the latter township, given by an unknown donor. The income is now £77 a year. The patronage is vested in the vicar of Kendal. The registers commence in 1742. Part of Under Milbeck township is attached to this chapel.

INCUMBENTS.—Richard Theaker, 1554; Edward Rowlandson, 1757; Richard Brookbank, 1763; William Sandford, 1768; Robert Sandford, 1801; John Sedgwick, 1846.

Crook School, erected in 1852 by Robert Summercales, Esq., possesses a small endowment of £1 1s. 6d. a year, being the interest of £36 left by Mrs. Beckhouse. The average attendance is thirty-five.

In the township are the hamlets of Crook and How, a worsted-mill, a corn-mill, and a machine works.

GRAYRIGG CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry includes the township of Grayrigg, Dillicar, Docker, Lambrigg, Whinfell, and part of Patton.

GRAYRIGG.

The rateable value of this township is £2,586. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 199; in 1811, 208; in 1821, 329; in 1831, 242; in 1841, 264; and in 1851, 264; who are principally employed in agriculture. The township is generally clean; the soil poor and cold. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township.

The manor of Grayrigg belonged to the barons of Kendal, and was granted by the first William de Lancaster, in marriage with his daughter Agnes, to Alexander de Windsor, son and heir of William de Windsor, whose descendants held the manor for several generations. William de Windsor was knight of the shire in 1354, and sheriff of Cumberland in 1367 and the following year. The manor subsequently passed by marriage to the Duckets, who resided at Grayrigg Hall till Anthony Duckett, Esq., sold the manor, with Lambrigg and Docker, to Sir John Lowther, who, in 1695, enfranchised all the tenants except some few who were not able to purchase their enfranchisement. The Earl of Lonsdale is lord of the manor. Those tenants who have not been enfranchised have to give two, three, or four days' labour in reaping corn in the harvest, according to the size of the farms. The landowners are William Thompson, Esq.; Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson; the Earl of Lonsdale; Arthur Shepherd, Esq.; Thos. Atkinson, Esq.; with several smaller proprietors.

Grayrigg township comprises the small hamlets of Beckhouses, Chapelhouses, and a number of dispersed dwellings, four and a half miles north-east of Kendal.

CHURCH.

Grayrigg chapel, dedicated to St. John, is a modern Gothic structure, rebuilt in 1837, at a cost of about £1,100. Its ancient revenue was twenty nobles, but it was augmented in 1723 with £100 given by the Earl of Lonsdale, and £100 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty. It was again augmented in 1751 with £200 obtained from the latter source, and £200 given by William Rudd, William Stratford, and the Rev. John Haistwell, all of which sums were expended in the purchase of land at Dillicar and Whinfell. A further augmentation of £20 has been obtained from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and the rent charge in lieu of tithes is £269 10s. 9½d. The living is now worth about £100 a year. The incumbent is nominated by the vicar of Kendal. The right of appointment was contested by the parishioners about the year 1820, but it was decided in favour of the vicar.

Incumbent.—Robert Adamson. — John Haistwell, 1774; George Wilson, 1834.

The parsonage is a plain substantial house, erected by subscription in 1744, at an expense of about £500.

SCHOOLS.

The School.—The school was built by subscription in 1818, and now affords gratuitous education to thirty-three scholars belonging to the chapelry. It is endowed with eleven acres of land, purchased in 1723, with £30 left by Robert Adamson, and £400 in the Five-percents, given before 1807, by William Thompson, Leonard Barnard, Arthur Shepherd, and John Moser. There is also a school for girls, established in 1845. Its principal endowment consists of £10 a year, given by the trustees of the Quakers' Meeting House, which had stood at Beckhouses till about twenty years ago, and which was endowed with £100 left by John Dickenson. Both these schools are in connection with the Committee of Council on Education.

Poor Stock.—Richard Newby, in 1616, gave £10, the interest to be distributed to the poor of Grayrigg.

Stephenson's Charity.—Robert Stephenson, in 1711, settled an estate called Evetsykes, in the township of Whinfell, to charitable uses, and directed the rent to be distributed to the poor of Grayrigg, Whinfell, and Whitwell and Selside townships.

Thompson's Charity.—William Thompson, by will, dated in 1807, left £50 a year to be divided annually amongst five poor families for ever.

William Thompson, Esq., of Underley Hall, near Kirkby Lonsdale, lately deceased, was born at Grayrigg Head in this township. He was one of the aldermen of the city of London, president of Christ Hospital, and one of the members of parliament for Westmoreland.

POPULATION.

The rateable value of this township is £2,473 16s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 77; in 1811, 78; in 1821, 89; in 1831, 109; in 1841, 85; and in 1851, 135. The township, though in Grayrigg chapelry, and Kendal parish, is locally in Lonsdale Ward. It contains several scattered houses on the west side of the river Lune, eight miles north-east of Kendal, and is intersected by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway, which has a station at Lowgill. The landowners are Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson; Rev. Thomas Airey, the executors of the late William Thompson; Rev. W. C. Wilson; Rev. George Wilson; William Richardson, and others, who possess the manorial rights of their respective estates.

Beckfoot is a small hamlet in this township.

DOCKERS.

This township, which is surrounded by fells, contains a number of dispersed farm-houses and a few cottages, four miles north-east of Kendal. In 1801 it contained 65 inhabitants; in 1811, 78; in 1821, 89; in 1831, 95; in 1841, 82; and in 1851, 87. Agriculture is the only employment. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township. The rateable value is £1,303 18s.

The manor was granted to St. Peter's, subsequently called St. Leonard's Hospital, York, by the second William de Lancaster, which grant was confirmed by Gilbert, the seventh baron of Kendal, and also by Edward I.; the horses and dogs belonging to the said hospital being also suffered to range Gilbert's forest here. After the Dissolution, the manor was granted to Richard Washington, who conveyed it to the Ducketts of Grayrigg, by whom it was sold to the Lowthers in 1690, and it is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale.

who pays for it a quit-rent to the Duke of Leeds, whose ancestors purchased this and many other fee-farm rents of the crown in the reign of Charles II. The landowners are, the Earl of Lonsdale; Rev. N. Hurbersty; John Yeates, Esq.; Thomas Dawson, Esq.; William Farrer, Esq.; and others. Docker Hall now serves as a farm-house.

LAMBRIGG.

The rateable value of this township is £1,625 15s. 7d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 124; in 1811, 137; in 1821, 164; in 1831, 176; in 1841, 143; and in 1851, 153. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township, which consists of a number of dispersed houses four miles and a half east-north-east of Kendal, and contains a long and lofty fell, called Lambrigg Park.

In 1282 Thomas de Chenaye granted to Gilbert de Bronolmshead all his lands at Lambrigg, reserving to himself the park only. From the Burnesheads, or Bronolmsheads, Lambrigg was transferred by marriage to the Bellinghams, and from them in a similar manner to the Ducketts, one of whom, Anthony Duckett, Esq., sold it to Sir John Lowther, from whom it has descended to the Earl of Lonsdale, the present lord of the manor. Lambrigg is of the marquis fee, and was held of the king, in capite, by knights' service. Edward Wilson, Esq.; William Thompson, Esq.; Thomas Farrer, Esq.; John Brunskill, Esq.; and Mrs. Thompson, are the principal landowners.

Mosedale Hall, the seat and property of William Thompson, Esq., is a neat mansion in this township, comprising extensive views of the surrounding country.

Lambrigg is a neat Elizabethan structure, the residence of John Brunskill, Esq., erected in 1852.

WHINFELL.

Whinfell township is a picturesque district, lying between the Mint and Borrowdale Beck, from four and a half to six miles north-east-by-north of Kendal. It is all included in the chapelry of Grayrigg, with the exception of Guest Ford estate, which is in that of Old Hutton. The population in 1801 was 184; in 1811, 191; in 1821, 204; in 1831, 214; in 1841, 187; and in 1851, 181. The rateable value is £1,725.

The manor appears to have been divided into moieties at a very early period; and the Redmans, Stricklands, and Ducketts, occur as owners. In 1723 the manor was sold to the tenants, together with Selside, Skelsmergh, and Patton, for £1,040 8s. 4d., "with all royalties, deadlands, ponds, waifs, and estrays; paying thereout yearly, 9s. 11½d. to the king, and 1s. to the Lord Viscount Lonsdale." At the same time it was agreed that the fishery in Whinfell Tarn should remain among the tenants undivided. The landowners are Edward Riddell, Esq.; James Machell, Esq.; Richard Wilkinson, Esq.; Arthur Shepherd, Esq.; Edward Wilson, Esq.; the trustees of the late William Thompson, Esq.; the trustees of — Garnett, Esq.; the Rev. H. J. Swale; the Catholic Church, Kendal, and others.

Besides Whinfell Tarn, which covers twelve acres, there are in the township two other smaller tarns, Flat Tarn and Pig Tarn. Beacon Hill is a lofty eminence, crowned with a pile of stones, the remains of one of the old beacons.

CHARITIES.

Stephenson's Charity.—The poor of Whinfell are entitled to a sum of money annually, of the gift of Robert Stephenson.—(See Grayrigg.)

HELSEINGTON CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north by Underbarrow, on the west by Crosthwaite and Lyth, on the south by Levens, on the south-east by Sedgwick, on the east by Natland, and on the north-east by Nethergraveship. It includes part of the village of Brigsteer, and a number of scattered dwellings, extending from one and a half to four miles south of Kendal, on the west side of the river Kent. The commons were enclosed by an act passed in 1837-8, since which time no less than £15,000 have been expended in the drainage and improvement of the land.

The estimated area of the township is 3,072 acres, and the rateable value £2,535 4s. 3d. In 1801 it contained 230 inhabitants; in 1811, 229; in 1821, 268; in 1831, 296; in 1841, 310; and in 1851, 289; who are principally engaged in agriculture and in peat moss labour. The Roman road from Watercock to Underbarrow passes through part of this township.

The manor of Helsington is part of the Lumley Fee, and in 1341 was held by William de Thweng, at which time it appears that the rent of the free tenants and other tenants at will amounted to £15 0s. 8d. yearly. In the reign of Henry VIII. it was possessed by a family named Bindlose, from whom it was purchased by the Bellinghams, who sold it to Colonel Graham, and it now belongs to the Hon. Mrs. Howard. The landowners are Edward Wilson, Esq.; Geo. E. Wilson, Esq.; Walter C. Strickland, Esq.; Hon. Mrs. Howard, Richard Wilson, Esq.; and some smaller proprietors.

Sizergh Hall, the seat of the ancient family of Strickland is situate three and a half miles south of Kendal, at the foot of a hill facing the east. It is an antique fortified building, standing in an undulating park, delightfully sprinkled with wood. Only a small portion of the old towers remain; frequent additions and repairs have given an irregular but picturesque aspect to the whole pile. It contains a considerable collection of carved oak, tapestry, portraits, and armour. There is a portrait of Mary Queen of Scots, by Antonio More, excellently painted, and some portraits by Lely and Romney. One apartment is called the queen's chamber, from a tradition that Catherine Parr once lodged there. A portrait of Charles II., by Vandyke, was presented to the family by King James II.

Stricklands of Sizergh.

The first of the name of Strickland met with is in the reign of King John, when Gilbert Fitz-Reinfrid having been compelled, on account of his involvement with the rebellious barons, to give hostages, who were the sons, daughters, and heirs of the principal mesne lords holding under the barons of Kendal, including amongst them the son and heir of Sir Walter de Strickland. In the time of Hugh, bishop of Carlisle, who came to the see towards the beginning of the reign of King Henry III., this Sir Walter had license to keep a domestic chaplain in his family, within the parish of Morland, so as it should be of no prejudice to the mother church. Sir Walter Strickland granted to the church of St. Mary, York, and to the prior and monks of Wetheral (which was a cell of the said abbey) four acres of land in the territory of Strickland, moulder free. The great-great-grandson of this Sir Walter,

Sir Walter de Strickland was, in the 28th Edward I., with the king at the Siege of Chateau d., and, in the 1st and 6th of Edward II., was knight of the shire for Westmoreland. In the 9th of Edward III. Sir Walter obtained a grant to enclose his wood and demesne lands at Sizergh, and to make a park there, and to hold the same so enclosed to him and his heirs for ever. The great-grandson of this Sir Walter,

Sir Thomas de Strickland, entered into agreement with Henry V., dated 29th April, 1415, to serve the king in his wars in France during one year, and had the distinguished honour of bearing the banner of St. George at the ever-memorable battle of Agincourt. He was subsequently (7th Henry VI.) M.P. for Westmoreland. His son and heir,

Walter Strickland, Esq., appears to have been a zealous landowner, and of the family was stated to have, with that property, a considerable estate in the county of York, which he had inherited from his father, who was a knight of the shire service. This Walter Strickland was succeeded by his son,

Sir Thomas Strickland, Knt., who married Agnes Parre, daughter of William Parre, son of Sir Thomas Parre and his wife, Elizabeth, one of the three sisters and co-heirs of Henry Lord Fitz-Hugh, and was succeeded by his son,

Walter Strickland, Esq., who married Anne Parre, and was succeeded by his son,

Sir Walter Strickland, Knt., who married, 1stly, Agnes, daughter of Richard Redman, but had no issue; and 2ndly, Catherine, daughter and sole heir of Sir Ralph Newell of Thornton Briggs, co. York, by whom he had a son and successor.

Walter Strickland, Esq., of Sizergh and Thornton Briggs, co. Westmoreland, M.P. 5th Elizabeth. He married Alice, daughter of Nicholas Tempest, Esq., of Holm, co. Durham, and dying 1569, was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir Thomas Strickland, K.B., of Sizergh, M.P. co. Westmoreland 43rd Elizabeth and 1st King James. Sir Thomas married Elizabeth Symon of Bristol, and had a daughter, Alice, married to Sir William Webb, Knt., equerry to Prince Henry. He married, 2ndly, Margaret, daughter of Sir Nicholas Curwen, Knt., of Workington, by whom he had issue,

I. ROBERT, his successor.

II. Thomas,

111. Walter, from whom descended the Stricklands of Catterick, in Yorkshire.

11. Dorothy, third wife of John Fleming, Esq., of Rydal.

11. Margaret, second wife of George Preston, Esq., of Holker, Lancashire.

He died in 1615, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir ROBERT STRICKLAND, Knt., M.P., co. Westmoreland 21st King James I. He was a colonel in the army of Charles I. and commanded a troop of horse at the battle of Edgehill while his son, Sir Thomas Strickland, led a regiment of foot. Sir Thomas married Margaret, eldest daughter and co-heir of Sir William Alford of Bylton, co. York, by whom he had two sons,

I. THOMAS (Sir), his successor.

11. Walter, married Barbara Belyasse, fourth daughter of the Hon. Henry Belyasse, son and heir of Thomas Viscount Fauconberg, by whom he had a daughter.

Dorothy, married to William Grimstone, Esq.

Sir Robert dying in 1670, was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir THOMAS STRICKLAND, Knt., who was made a baronet by King Charles I. in person on the field at Edgehill, 23rd October, 1642. This gentleman represented the co. Westmoreland in 1661. He married, 1stly, Jane, daughter and co-heir of John Moseley, Esq., of Ulkelfe, co. York, by whom he had two surviving daughters,

1. Alice, married to Sir Walter Blunt, of Soddington.

11. Anne, married to John Middleton, Esq., of Stockill, co. York.

Sir Thomas married, 2ndly, Winifred, daughter and heiress of Sir Charles Trentham, Knt., of Rochester, co. Stafford, and had issue,

- i. WALTER, born May, 1695.
- ii. Robert, died unmarried.
- iii. Roger, who was page to the Prince of Conti, when he went from France, to be elected King of Poland. He died unmarried.
- iv. Thomas, in holy orders, Bishop of Nauru, died 1743.

Sir Thomas Strickland, who had been privy purse to King Charles II. was one of the privy council to King James II. and, following the fortunes of that monarch, died in France, 8th January, 1694. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

WALTER STRICKLAND, Esq., who married Anne, daughter of Gerard Salvin, Esq., of Croxdale, co. Durham, by whom he had issue,

- i. THOMAS, his successor, born 28th June, 1701.
- ii. Gerard, born 26th July, 1704; died 1st September, 1791; married, 18th, Miss Mary Bagual, and had, with two daughters,
- i. Gerard, born 4th October, 1741; married 15th April, 1779, Cecilia, relict of Charles Strickland, Esq., of Sizergh, and dying 23rd October, 1786, left issue,
- George, born 23rd October, 1789.
- Gerard, born 24th February, 1782.

Mr. Gerard Strickland, sen., married, 2ndly, Lady Gascoigne, relict of Sir Edward Gascoigne, Bart.

- i. Mary, died unmarried, 8th May, 1717.

Mr. Strickland was succeeded by his elder son,

THOMAS STRICKLAND, Esq., of Sizergh, born 20th June, 1701, who married, 18th, 2nd June, 1738, Mary, daughter of Simon Seroope, Esq., of Danby, by whom he had issue; and 2ndly, Mrs. Archer, widow of John Archer, Esq., of Oxenholme. He was succeeded at his decease by his eldest son,

WALTER STRICKLAND, Esq., of Sizergh, who married 4th June, 1758, Margaret, daughter of Michael James Messenger, Esq., of Fountain Abbey, co. York, but dying without issue in 1761, was succeeded by his brother,

CHARLES STRICKLAND, Esq., of Sizergh, who married 20th April, 1762 Cecilia, only daughter of William Towneley, Esq., of Towneley, co. Lancaster (by his wife, Cecilia, daughter and sole surviving heir of Ralph Standish, Esq., of Standish, in the same county, and the Lady Philippa Howard, second daughter of Henry Duke of Norfolk, and had issue,

- i. THOMAS, his successor.
- ii. William.
- iii. Charles, died 13th September, 1775.
- i. Mary, married 27th February, 1786, to Edward Stephenson, Esq., of Farley Hill, co. Derbs.

Mr. Strickland died 6th October, 1770, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS STRICKLAND, Esq., of Sizergh, who likewise, upon the decease of his uncle, Edward Towneley Standish of Standish, inherited the Standish estates, and assumed the surname of "Standish." He married 24th February, 1789, Anastasia, eldest daughter of Sir John Lawson, Bart., of Brough Hall, co. York, and had issue,

- i. CHARLES, who inherited the Standish estates, and continued the name of Standish.
- ii. THOMAS, of Sizergh.

- i. Anastasia, born 11th May, 1737, and died 22nd November, 1807.
- ii. Elizabeth, born 1st March, 1803, and died 17th September, 1843.
- iii. Monica, married in December, 1827, to Sir John Gerard, Bart., of Bryn.
- iv. Catherine, born 10th July, and died 19th March, 1808.

Mr. Strickland married, 2ndly, Catherine, daughter of Sir Robert Gerard of Bryn, co. Lancaster, but had no issue. He died 4th September, 1813, and was succeeded at Sizergh by his second son,

THOMAS STRICKLAND, Esq., born 15th March, 1790, who married, November, 1824, Mademoiselle Ida de Finguerlin Bisshengen, youngest daughter of the Baron Finguerlin, and by her (who married, 2ndly, the Comte de Ferenzac, and died in 1846) he left at his decease an only son, WALTER STRICKLAND, Esq., of Sizergh, co. Westmoreland, born 5th September, 1825.

Arms.—Sa., three escallops, within a bordure, engrailed, arg.

THE CHAPEL.

Helsington chapel, dedicated to St. John, is a neat building, erected by subscription in 1726, and endowed by John Jackson, of Holeslack, with the adjacent Scarhouse estate, and the "Chamber Tenement," on condition that the inhabitants should subscribe £100 towards obtaining an augmentation from Queen Anne's Bounty. The sum of £14 12s. was raised, and the remaining £58 8s. contributed by Mr. Matson, the curate, which sums, with £200 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty were expended in the purchase of Kirkbarrow Field, near Kirkland, and land in Rawnrigg, in Darbon. It was augmented in 1762 with £200, given by the Countess Dowager Gower, and a further sum of £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty. The Scarfoot estate at Underbarrow was purchased with these sums, and the annual revenue of the curacy is now worth about £125 per annum. The vicar of Kendal is patron. All the rites of the Church of England are performed here.

INCUMBENTS.—William Moody, 1700; William Hutton, 1801; James Muckalt, 1838; Charles Butler Harris, 1851.

The parsonage is a neat commodious house, erected in 1840, and enlarged in 1851.

Helsington School is a neat Gothic structure, erected by subscription in 1853, at a cost of £310, and possesses a small endowment of 13s. 4d. a year, arising from the rent of a shop at Kendal, left in 1739, by John Jackson, for the education of three poor children. The school is under inspection, and has an average attendance of about twenty scholars. The John Jackson mentioned above, by his will, devised to the clerk of Helsington a small parcel of ground called, Jack Parrock.

There are marble-mills and a powder-mill on the river Kent, in this township.

INGS CHAPELRY.

INGS chapelry comprises the greater portion of the township of Hugill and part of that of Nether Staveley.

HUGILL.

Hugill township is distant from six to seven miles north-west of Kendal, on the Ambleside road and the river Kent, and contains the small hamlets of Heights, Grassgarth, Ings, Reston, and Ulthwaite. The rateable value is £1,379 3s. 3d. The population in 1801 was 237; in 1811, 243; in 1821, 300; in 1831, 367; in 1841, 382; and in 1851, 413; who are chiefly employed in agriculture and bobbin turning. The Kendal and Windermere railway runs through the township. For an account of the manor see Staveley. The Earl of Lonsdale and the Hon. Mrs. Howard possess the manorial rights. The landowners are John H. Wilson, Esq.; the trustees of the late James Braithwaite, Esq.; Messrs. Jenkinson, Nathan Thompson, Thomas Brown, and others. Hugill Hall is now a farm-house.

Ings chapel, dedicated to St. Anne, is a neat edifice, rebuilt in 1743, by Robert Bateman, who endowed it with £12 a year, besides bequeathing £8 a year to the school, and £1,000 for the purchase of an estate, and the erection of eight cottages, for the reception of as many poor families. Mention is made of Ings chapel in 1655. There appears to have been a previous one at Grassgarth, in this township. The chapel was repaired, &c., in 1842, and now consists of nave, chancel, west gallery, and tower containing three bells. There is a marble tablet to the memory of the late James Braithwaite, Esq., of Hugill. The ancient revenue of Ings chapel was only £2 4s. 4d., to which £3 6s. 8d. was added by the king's auditor, and a further augmentation of £12 a year was left to it in 1665, by Rowland Wilson, Esq., on condition that the curate should give gratuitous instruction to the poor of the chapelry. The living has been since augmented with £200, given by Mrs. Mary Foster, and £600 obtained in three lots from Queen Anne's Bounty. The registers of the church from 1666 to 1841. The landowners are the patrons. The registers previous to the year 1813 have been lost.

Parsonage.—The parsonage, built by Robert Bateman, Esq., in 1743, is a neat residence near the chapel.

The school is endowed with the interest of £1,000 left by John Braithwaite, Esq., who died March 1st, 1854, and £50 per annum from Bateman's Charity, as below. The average number of scholars in attendance is thirty-five.

CHARITIES.

Bateman's Charity.—Mr. Bateman, who built the church, left certain moneys, which now realise about £100 a year, of which £50 a year is given to the poor of Hugill not in receipt of parish relief.

Rowland Wilson's Charity.—Rowland Wilson, by will, dated 1650, devised his lands at Grassgarth, in the parish of Kendal, subject to a yearly payment of £5 4s.; one-half of which sum he directed should be disposed of in bread at Kendal, and the remainder in bread at Hugill.

There are two bobbin-mills and a corn-mill in this township.

Ings Hall is now a farm-house.

KENTMERE CHAPELRY.

KENTMERE chapelry is bounded on the north by Patterdale, on the west by Garburne Fell, on the south by the chapelries of Ings and Staveley, and on the east by Long Side. It consists principally of a narrow vale, shut in by lofty fells, and is distant nine miles north-west-by-north of Kendal. It is watered by the river Kent, which rises a little to the north, and formed a lake, or more, which was drained off several years ago. A large reservoir, covering about eight acres of land, is situated here, which supplies, in dry weather, the mills on the river Kent.

The township of Kentmere contained in 1801 166 inhabitants; in 1811, 217; in 1821, 212; in 1831, 191; in 1841, 198; and in 1851, 193.

In the partition of the Brus estate amongst the four sisters and co-heirs of the last Peter le Brus, about 1282, Margaret, the eldest, had that which is now called the Marquis Fee; Agnes, the second, had no share in Westmoreland; Lucy, the third sister, had that which is now called the Lumley Fee; and Ladarina, the fourth, had Kentmere. This Ladarina was married to John de Bella-Aqua, and had issue two daughters, co-heiresses: Sibill, married to Miles de Stapleton; and Joan, married to Ancherus, son of Henry. Miles de Stapleton, by his wife, Sibill, had a son, Nicholas de Stapleton, between whom and Joan, his aunt, the inheritance was divided, and by this division Kentmere became the property of Nicholas. The manor continued to be held by the Stapletons till 1636, in which year it was sold by Gilbert Stapleton to Nicholas Fisher, Esq., of Stancbank Green, whose descendant, Henry Fisher, Esq., devised the manor to be sold, and it was purchased, in 1745, by Thomas Wilson of Kendal. The younger son of this last-named gentleman subsequently assumed the name of Fenwick. The manor was afterwards sold to the landowners. Kentmere Hall, now occupied by a farmer, stands at the foot of a huge and rugged mountain, and was formerly the residence of the ancient family of the Gilpins, one of whom, Bernard Gilpin, the "Apostle of the North," as he has been termed, was born here in 1517; and Dr. Airey, who was provost of Queen's College, Oxford, and who lived about the year 1560, was also a native of Kentmere.

THE CHAPEL.

Kentmere chapel is situated near the old hall, and is a small ancient building. The salary of the curate was formerly only £6 a year, arising from a rate of 2s. levied for every 13s. 4d. paid to the lord of the manor. The living was augmented before 1757, with £600, viz., £400 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, £100 given by the inhabitants, and £100 by the executors of Dr. Stratford. Of this money £200 was expended in the purchase of Bonnet-green estate, in Strickland Ketel, and the other £400 in the purchase of Patton-end estate, in Patton, so that its revenue now amounts to £70 a year.

CHARITIES.

Newton's Charity.—Robert Newton, by will, in 1769, bequeathed £60, the interest to be applied for the clothing of poor people in the township.

Poor Stock.—Henry Airey, by will, in 1708, gave to the poor of Kentmere £50, the interest to be distributed annually on the anniversary of his decease amongst the poor of the chapelry, with the exception of those of Wray West Quarter. William Birkett, by will, in 1785, left £40, in trust for the poor of Kentmere. These two legacies, with £30, the donor of which is unknown, make up the sum of £120, the interest of which is distributed on the first Sunday after Old Candlemas, yearly, to poor persons not receiving parish relief.

LONG SLEDDALE CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry embraces a wild and picturesque district, about three miles in breadth, and extending from five to eleven miles north of Kendal. It is intersected by the Sprint rivulet, which runs through a deep vale parallel with the road, till it unites with the Kent about half a mile below Burneside Hall.

The rateable value of this township is £1,150. The population in 1801 was 187; in 1811, 172; in 1821, 185; in 1831, 199; in 1841, 173; and in 1851, 170. Agriculture is the only employment.

Long Sleddale belonged to the ancient barons of Kendal, who granted "in fee divers tenements there to several persons," and finally granted the manor to the Thornburghs of Hamsfel and Selside, who sold it to the Bellinghams, from whom it was purchased by Colonel James Grabame, and is now held by the Hon. Mrs. Howard. The tenements have been from time to time, all or most of them, enfranchised. There does not appear to have been a manor-house here, the lords never being resident. When the Thornburghs held the manor, the tenants attended the court at Selside Hall. Uberry, or Yewbarrow Hall, was the most considerable house in the vale, and seems to have been the residence of a family bearing the name of Layburne; it is now a farm-house. The landowners are the Hon. Mrs. Howard, Richard Wilkinson, Esq.; Messrs. Henry and George Fothergill, Alexander W. Lodge, Rev. Robert Walker, Thomas Walker, Michael and John Mattinson, Robert Mattinson, and others.

THE CHAPEL.

Long Sleddale chapel stands near the centre of the vale. It is a small building, erected in 1712, when the burial-ground was also consecrated. The living has been several times augmented. In 1713 it received £80 from the heir and four daughters of Henry Holme; and in 1746, 1773, and 1775, three sums of money of £200 each from the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, and a subscription of £200, making altogether £800, laid out in the purchase of land in Long Sleddale, Selside, and Lambrigg, now let for about £50 a year. The total income of the living is £88. The vicar of Kendal is patron. The registers commence in 1670.

INCUMBENTS.—Matthew Monkhouse, 1747; Edward Greenwood, 1798; Robert Walker, 1845.

There is no parsonage.

In 1853 the Rev. Miles Walker, brother of the present incumbent, gave £300, on condition that the inhabitants of the township would raise a similar sum, and devote it to the education of the poor of the chapelry. The inhabitants subscribed £250, to which the master and fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, added £50, thus making up the amount required, which was invested in the Three-per-cent Consols, and now produces about £21 per annum. The Hon. Mrs. Howard also subscribes £10 a year for the education of poor children. A new school-house is much needed.

NATLAND CHAPELRY.

This is a small chapelry containing a township and village of its own name, and the Roman station of Galacum. It is bounded on the north by Nethergraveship, on the west by Helsington, and on the south and east by Stainton.

The area of Natland township is returned with that of the parish; its rateable value is £3,205. The population in 1801 was 205; in 1811, 188; in 1821, 244; in 1831, 236; in 1841, 251; and in 1851, 226; nearly two-thirds of whom reside in the village, the remainder in dispersed houses. Agriculture is the only employment. The soil here is rather sandy. The township is intersected by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway.

Of the Roman occupation of this part of Westmoreland we have abundant evidence at Watercrook, supposed to be the Galacum of the Notitia. According to Horsley, the station measured six chains from north to south, and eight from east to west, covering an area of about five acres. Altars, coins, urns, stones, and the remains of pottery, have been found here; and Horsley discovered a stone monument in the wall of a neighbouring barn, with an inscription to the memory of two freedmen. A Roman coin, of the Emperor Vespasian, was found in the neighbourhood of Watercrook a good many years ago. About a mile and a half from the station, on the summit of a high hill, called Helm, is a place called Castlesteads, supposed to have formed a summer station for the garrison of Galacum. The inner and outer vallons are still visible. Coneybeds, situated on Hay Fell, east of Kendal, is supposed to have been an exploratory station for Watercrook.

On the Norman invasion, Natland is conjectured to have become the habitation of the Nativi, or bondmen of Kendal Castle. The manor is included in the Marquis Fee, and has long been held by the Strickland family, Walter C. Strickland, Esq., of Sizergh, being the present lord. The landowners are the Rev. W. C. Wilson, George E. Wilson, Esq.; Edward Wilson, Esq.; Richard Wilson, Esq.; and W. D. Crewdson, Esq.

The village of Natland is two miles south of Kendal.

THE CHAPEL.

The chapel, dedicated to St. Mark, is a neat modern edifice, erected, near the site of a former chapel, in 1825, at a cost of £550, of which £300 was given by three individuals, and £100 by the Society for Building New Churches. In 1746, 1749, and 1754, the living was augmented with £600 from Queen Anne's Bounty; and in the latter year with £100 left by Archbishop Bolter, and £100 left by Bishop Stratford, making a total sum of £800, which was laid out in the purchase of land at Skelsmergh, Old Hutton, and Barbon. The two former estates now let for £53 a year, but the latter has been sold and the money invested in the funds. It has since received other augmentations, so that the benefice is now worth £113 a year, besides a residence. The tithe corn rent is paid to Trinity College, Cambridge, and the vicar of Kendal, the latter of whom is patron of the living. The registers commence in 1777.

INCUMBENTS.—WILLIAM TOWNSEN, GEORGE KENDAL, THOMAS BRIGGS, THOMAS THORNBARROW, THOMAS MACKERETH, and JOSEPH FAWCETT.

The parsonage is a plain building, purchased about twelve years ago.

The school for boys and girls is endowed with £40 a year from an estate in the chapelry.

CHARITIES.

Shippard's Charity.—Charles Shippard, by will, in 1779, left the sum of £180, upon trust, and directed that the interest should be divided amongst the poor of the chapelry. This sum was subsequently increased to £300, on account of which £4 a year is distributed as directed.

Shippard's Devise.—The same Charles Shippard, by his will, devised an estate called Crow Park, the rent of which he ordained should be applied for the education of the poor children of the township.

NEW HUTTON CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises the townships of New Hutton, Hay, and Hutton-in-the-Hay, which form a township with Scalthwaite Rigg.

NEW HUTTON.

New Hutton township contained, in 1801, 125 inhabitants; in 1811, 110; in 1821, 127; in 1831, 172; in 1841, 148; and in 1851, 157. The rateable value is £1,485 15s. 7½d.

Nicolson and Burn tells us, "that first there was only one general name of Hutton. The distinction between Old and New Hutton seems to have come in about the beginning of the reign of Edward I." For the descent of the manor, see Old Hutton. New Hutton is held under the Richmond Fee: the tenants possess the manorial rights of their own properties, and pay a quit rent to the Earl of Lonsdale, the lessee of the crown. The landowners are the executors of the late William Thompson, Esq.; Richard Simpson, Esq.; Messrs. John Y. Thexton, William Whitwell, John Sleddall, L. Watson; the Misses Harrison, and a number of small proprietors. The commons were enclosed in 1839.

The township contains the small hamlets of Borrans, Millholm, and Rawgreen, with several scattered dwellings, distant three miles and a half east-south-east of Kendal.

THE CHURCH.

New Hutton chapel, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a modern Gothic structure, erected in 1829, at a cost of about £500. It comprises nave, aisle, chancel, tower, and spire. The windows are lancet-shaped; those at the east end are partly stained. There are two mural tablets; one to the memory of the late William Sleddall and his wife; the other to the late Ralph Fisher, Esq. The chapel contains nearly 300 sittings, most of which are free. The living is worth about £80 a year, arising from an estate at Killington, purchased with £200 subscribed by the inhabitants, and £200 obtained from the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, and land at Grayrigg bought with an augmentation of £200 received in 1756; together with a grant of £13 a year from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, received in 1844. The vicar of Kendal is patron. The registers commence in 1741.

INCUMBENTS.—Samuel Simpson, Esq.; Simpson, Ralph W. Fisher, Francis Whalley, and Henry Scantler. The Rev. Samuel Simpson held the living for sixty-seven years, from 1741 till 1808, when he deceased, being upwards of ninety years of age.

New Hutton School possesses an endowment of five guineas a year, arising from a small enclosure in the township of Sedgwick, purchased with £40 left for education by Miles Tarn, in 1778; and £15 8s. 6d. given by the Rev. Samuel Simpson, the then incumbent, the rent of which is given to the schoolmaster. The average number of children in attendance is about twenty.

CHARITIES.

Walker's Charity.—William Walker, of Bendrigg, in Old Hutton, in 1639, left several messuages, charged with the following payments:—"To twelve poor householders dwelling within the lordship of Killington, to each 3s. 6d., 42s.; to four poor householders within the lordship of Firbank, each 2s. 6d., 10s.; to eight poor householders within the lordship of Old Hutton, each 3s. 4d., £1 6s. 8d.; to four poor householders within the lordship of New Hutton, each 3s. 4d., 13s. 4d.; and to four poor householders of Lambrigg, each 2s. 6d., 10s." The sum of 13s. 4d. is regularly distributed on account of this charity to four poor householders of this township.

Ward's Charity.—Thomas Ward, late of Norfolk, left by his will, dated February 15th, 1806, the sum of £300, the interest of which he directed should be distributed by the minister and overseers to the poor not in receipt of parish relief, belonging to and living in the three towns of Hutton, near Kendal. The said Thomas Ward also left £50 to the minister of New Hutton Chapelry, which was applied to the purchase of land for the benefit of the chapel.

SCALTHWAITE RIGG, HAY, AND HUTTON-IN-THE-HAY.

This township extends from Faircross Bank, in the suburb of Kendal, to three miles east of that town. Its rateable value is £4,280. The population in 1801 was 250; in 1811, 276; in 1821, 318; in 1831, 380; in 1841, 408; and in 1851, 466. The Lancaster and Carlisle railway runs through the township. The manorial rights are possessed by the Earl of Lonsdale, besides whom Ralph Fisher, Esq., the executors of the late William Thompson, Esq.; Edward Wilson, Esq.; William Sleddall, Esq.; William Edmondson, Esq.; Richard Dobinson, Esq., and others, are the landowners.

Scalthwaite Rigg is included in the parish of Kendal. It includes the village of Mealbank, which is pleasantly situated on the east bank of the Kent, two and a half miles north-east of Kendal, where there are a corn and snuff mills and a woollen manufactory. There is a neat school, erected by Messrs. Brithwaite and Co., in 1846, for the education of the children of their workpeople.

Sleddall Hall, now a farm house, belonging to Edward Wilson, Esq., was formerly the seat of the ancient family of Sleddall, one of whom was mayor of Kendal in 1656.

Hay is a hamlet about half a mile west of Hutton-in-the-Hay, which is a constabulary in the township, three miles east of Kendal. Both places are in New Hutton chapelry, and in the manor of Hay, which belongs to the Marquis Fee of Kendal barony. Nicolson and Baro say "Hay signifies a park or enclosure, and Hutton seems to have come from huts, which were erected in the hunting grounds and huts for the accommodation of the hunters; it is therefore evident that the huts within the park were called Hutton-in-the-Hay, to distinguish them from the huts in the open forest; and this distinction is supposed to have originated when the estates of William de Lancaster were divided between his co-heiresses, Helwise and Alicia."

Hill Top is a delightfully-situated mansion in the hamlet of Hay, and the residence of Dr. Fleming. Raw Head, an ancient mansion in Hutton-in-the-Hay, is the seat and property of William Sleddall, Esq.

OLD HUTTON AND HOLMESCALES CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises the township of Old Hutton and Holmescales, which contains the hamlets of Bridge End, Chapel Houses, Ewbank, Middleshaw, and Beekside, and extends from three and a half to five miles south-east of Kendal.

The population of this township in 1801 was 368; in 1811, 376; in 1821, 424; in 1831, 429; in 1841, of Old Hutton alone, 434; in 1851, 367; in 1841, of Holmescales alone, 54; in 1851, 44. The surface of the township is irregular, and the soil is generally of a light, sandy quality. The commons have been enclosed. Holmescales, though united with Old Hutton in poor's rate, and in the partition of common rights, is a hamlet to the extreme point easterly of Burton-in-Kendal, and belongs to that parish for ecclesiastical purposes. It is five miles south-east of Kendal, and possesses a bobbin mill. At Bridge End, which is five miles from Kendal, is a worsted manufactory; and at the beck side, about a quarter of a mile from the chapel, is a corn-mill.

The distinction between Old and New Hutton does not appear to be older than the reign of Edward I. About the time of Richard I., Gilbert, son of Roger Fitz-Reinfred, granted to Thomas, son of Gospatric, Holme, Preston, and Hutton, with the appurtenances to hold of him and his heirs by the service of the fourth part of one knight's fee. In the next generation, William de Lancaster granted and confirmed to Patrick, son of the said Thomas, son of Gospatric, and his heirs, the charter which Gilbert, son of Roger Fitz-Reinfred, father of the said William, granted to the said Thomas, of the lands in Kendal which he held of the said Gilbert, in Preston, Holme, and Hutton. In the 25th Edward I. John de Culwen granted and confirmed to Patrick de Culwen and his heirs all his lands at Old Hutton and Holmescales, with the mill and services of his free tenants there, except the wood of Hutton, and rendered for the same one penny of silver yearly at the Nativity of our Lord, for all services. And in the 7th Edward

III. Gilbert de Culwen, lord of Workington, re-leased and quitted claim to Thomas de Culwen, son of Patrick de Culwen, Knt., his uncle, all his lands of Old Hutton and Holmescales, in Kendal, with the mill and homages of the free tenants there; to hold to the said Thomas and the heir of his body, rendering to the said Gilbert and his heirs yearly one penny of silver as above. The manor of Old Hutton has long been enfranchised. From some escheats taken about the beginning of the reign of Charles I., the tenements in Old Hutton and Holmescales appear to have been held of the king as of his manor of Kirkby in Kendal called the Richmond Fee, in socage, by payment of certain rents.

Old Hutton chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was erected in 1628, rebuilt in 1699, and had a burial ground consecrated in 1822. It is a plain structure, without any architectural pretensions. The benefice, a curacy, in the patronage of the vicar of Kendal, has an ancient salary of £1 12s., a piece of land left by Henry Bateman, and £5 a year for an afternoon sermon, left by Thomas Robinson, in 1706; since which time it has been augmented with £600 of Queen Anne's Bounty, with £100 from Dr. Stratford's trustees, and £100 given by various benefactors, all laid out in land, so that its net income is now about £98 a year.

The parsonage is a neat and commodious structure, erected in 1831. It is about a mile from the chapel.

The Grammar School was founded by Edward Mather in 1613. It was rebuilt by the inhabitants in 1753, and possesses a yearly income of £19 11s. arising from three rent-charges, and from interest of money vested in the Navy Five-per-cents.

CHARITIES.

Walker's Charity.—The particulars of the foundation of this charity are given in our report of the charities in New Hutton. £1 6s. 8d. is annually added to the rents of Roger Ward's Charity, and disposed of with them at Whitsuntide, in the manner hereafter mentioned.

Roger Ward's Charity.—There is an estate at Old Hutton, supposed to have been given by Roger Ward, which produces about £20 a year. After deducting what is necessary for incidental expenses and repairs, the rent payable to the charity is distributed half-yearly amongst about thirty poor persons of the township of Hutton and Holmescales.

Robinson's Charity.—Thomas Robinson, of Greaves, in Old Hutton, by will, dated 1692, left £5 a year to the minister of Old Hutton, to preach an afternoon sermon every Sunday in the year, except the winter quarter. He also bequeathed £52 to be laid out upon lands for ever by the churchwardens and overseers, the produce to be laid out in penny loaves and given away every Sunday, to poor persons. He also left two brackendales, the one on Holmescales Common, the other in Preston Patrick, to be let by the churchwardens, and the rents divided among such poor housekeepers as should not receive aid from the parish.

Dawson's Charity.—Joseph Dawson, alderman, of Kendal, left £52, to be distributed weekly in bread.

Donor Unknown.—The township also possesses the sum of £22, which is applied to different purposes.

Division of Holmescales.—Hutton's Charity.—The division of Holmescales, though it forms a township jointly with Old Hutton, is itself in the parish of Burton. It is consequently entitled to a share of the rents of the Hinden estate, for an account of which see Burton-in-Kendal parish.

SELSIDE-WITH-WHITWELL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is situated between the Mint and Sprint rivulets, and extends from four and a half to six and a half miles north-by-east of Kendal.

This township contained in 1801 192 inhabitants; in 1811, 234; in 1821, 291; in 1831, 263; in 1841, 335; and in 1851, 284; who are principally resident in scattered farm-houses. The rateable value is £1,652 9s. 1d.

Selside and Whitwell, though separate divisions, form only one constableness, and seem to have been originally one manor. At what date they were first separated we have now no means of ascertaining. They subsequently became united in the ancient family of Thornburgh. The first account we have of Whitwell is in 1351, in which year we find that Gilbert de Burneshead held of William de Coucy the hamlet of Whitwell, by the service of cornage, wardship, and relief. The heiress of the Burneshead family married a Bellingham, and one of the daughters and co-heirs of the last Bellingham of Burneshead brought Whitwell in marriage to the Thornburghs. Of Selside we have no account previous to 1375, when Matthew de Redman held of Joan de Coupland divers tenements in Selside, but the manor appears to have been then held by the Thornburghs. This last-named family, which held Selside and Whitwell till it failed in issue male in 1774, produced a number of distinguished men, several of whom were knights of the shire for Westmoreland, in the reign of Edward III., Richard II., Henry IV., and Henry V. The Thornburghs sold off the manor by degrees, part to the tenants, part to the Wilsons, and part to the Bellinghams, so that a considerable portion of it now belongs to the Hon. Mrs. Howard. The landowners are Ralph Riddell, Esq.; Mrs. Fothergill; James Machell, Esq.; the executors of the late William Thompson, Esq.; and Arthur Shepherd, Esq.

Selside Hall, the ancient seat of the Thornburghs, and now the property of Ralph Riddell, Esq., serves as a farm-house.

Except the small hamlet of Gateside, which is five miles north-by-east of Kendal, the houses in this township are all scattered, and bear different names. The commons were enclosed in 1825.

THE CHAPEL.

The chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas, is a plain building, re-erected in 1838, at a cost of about £1,600, the whole of which was defrayed by subscription with the exception of £80 obtained from the church commissioners, and £50 given by Trinity College, Cambridge. The site for the building, together with the requisite stone and sand, were given by Mr. Riddell. The chapel will accommodate about 300 persons, and with the exception of five pews appropriated to Lowbridge House, Forest Hall, Selside Hall, Kit Cragg, and Northgate Side, are all free. In 1717, the curacy was certified at £8 6s., viz., £4 charged upon the estates of the inhabitants, £4 issuing out of land left by Miles Birkbeck, and 5s. interest of money left by Thos. Nelson. It was augmented in 1722 with two estates called Harrod and Stonegarth, in Whinfall, purchased with £200 of Queen Anne's Bounty, £100 given by Lady Moyer, £100 from the trustees of Dr. Stratford, and £100 given by the Rev. William Atkinson, all laid out in the purchase of Beckstones, afterwards exchanged for Browfoot estate, in Firbank. The total income of the living is £115. The landowners are the patrons. The chapel includes within its jurisdiction the township of Selside and Whitwell, the township of Fawcett Forest, part of Whinfall, two houses in Skelsmergh, and three houses in Strickland Roger. The register commences in 1752.

INCUMBENTS.—William Atkinson, 1752; Jacob Chambers, 1764; John Parker, 1773; Matthew Monckhouse, 1780; Thomas Airey, 1794; Henry Holme Airey, 1831.

The incumbent resides at Browfoot.

The school possesses an endowment of £59 a year, arising from a bequest made in 1730, by John Kitching, who gave an estate at Biggersbank, upon trust that the rents should be applied for the gratuitous education of the children of the township. Joseph Hailing, by will, in 1802, left £100 to this school, upon condition that four poor boys of Skelsmergh should be taught by the schoolmaster, free of expense, except only a cockpenny at Shrovetide, which is paid by all the scholars.

CHARITIES.

Poor's Land.—There is a small parcel of ground, about half an acre, commonly called the Poor Dole. It is not known how it came to the township, but the rent has been distributed, on St. Thomas' Day, together with the communion money, among the poor householders of the township, as long as can be remembered.

STAVELEY CHAPELRY.

This chapelry includes the township of Over Staveley, the chief part of Nether Staveley, and a part of Hugill.

The rateable value of Staveley township is £1,685 18s. In 1801 it contained 324 inhabitants; in 1811, 230; in 1821, 312; in 1831, 412; in 1841, 527; and in 1851, 732; who are principally resident in the village of Staveley, and many are employed at woollen and bobbin mills; the remainder are in agricultural districts. The Kendal and Windermere railway passes close to the township, and has a station at the village of Nether Staveley.

The manor of Staveley and Hugill is part of the Stephenson's Charity.—The poor of this township are entitled to a sum of money, annually, of the gift of Robert Stephenson, as described in the account of the township of Whinfall and Grayrigg.

Lowbridge House, the seat and property of Mrs. Fothergill, is a neat mansion, occupying a pleasant situation at the foot of Banisdale, six and a half miles north of Kendal. It was erected in 1837, and is Elizabethan in style.

Mozergh House, the residence of James Machell, Esq., is pleasantly situated four miles and a quarter north-by-east of Kendal. It was erected in 1835, and contains some ancient oak furniture, remarkable for the beauty of its carving.

FAWCETT FOREST.

This is an extensive but wild and mountainous district in the parishes of Kendal, Shap, and Orton, and in the chapelry of Selside, distant from five and a half to eight miles north of Kendal. Its population in 1801 was 81; in 1811, 61; in 1821, 54; in 1831, 61; in 1841, 66; and in 1851, 51. The rateable value is £116.

Fawcett Forest, anciently Fauside Forest, was given to the abbey of Byland by William de Lancaster I. After the suppression of the religious houses, it was purchased by Alan Bellingham, Esq., a younger son of the Bellinghams of Burneshead, who also purchased Helsington and Levens. The last of the Bellingham family sold Fawcett Forest, with other estates, to Colonel James Graham, from whom it has descended to the Hon. Mrs. Howard, besides whom George A. Geldard, Esq., is the principal landowner.

Forest Hall is the residence of Mr. William Wood, who farms the whole township. It partakes in some degree of the Elizabethan style.

Marquis Fee of Kendal barony. After the death of William de Thweng, in 1340, it was found by inquisition that he died seised of the park of Staveley, and of a fulling mill there, as also of the rents of free tenants and tenants at will at Staveley and at Hugill. Among the escheats in 1413 it is found that John Hotham, Kut., held the manor of Staveley. From this time till 1569 the Hothams held the manor; they sold it, or rather their part of it, in the latter year to the Bellinghams. In 1577, after the death of Alan Bellingham, Esq., it was found by inquisition that he died possessed of the manor of Staveley, and of "divers lands and tenements" in Over Staveley, Nether Staveley, and other places, and that he held the same of the queen by knight's service. In the same year it was found that William Gilpin held a part of the manor of Over Staveley. In 1595 it was found that Robert Bindloss, Esq., and James Bellingham, Esq., held of the queen (Elizabeth) as of her barony of Kendal, in free socage, and not in capite, in Nether Staveley, several messuages and tenements. In 1608 Rowland Philipson held Staveley by fealty and 12d. rent; and five years later we find Christopher Philipson holding "one capital messuage called Ashes, with twenty-one acres of land, in Staveley Godmoond (so called from Godmoond, who had estates there), of the king as of his manor of Kendal called the Marquis Fee, by the yearly rent of 16d. for all services." In 1676 there were held of Katharine, queen consort of Charles II., in Staveley and Hugill, of the Marquis Fee, "six freehold tenements of the yearly rent of 4s. 7d.; thirteen customary tenements of the yearly rent of £5 17s. 4½d.; fulling mills and lords' acres of the rent of £1 8s. 4d., and fifteen cottages of the rent of £1 13s. 4d. Four other tenements in Hugill, pay a free or dry rent of £3 19s. 9d.; Ulthwaite mill in Hugill, 1s. 2d." The Earl of Lonsdale and the Hon. Mrs. Howard are the present possessors of the manorial rights and privileges. The landowners are Edward Wilson, Esq.; John H. Wilson, Esq.; the executors of Abraham Banks, Esq.; Jas. Gandy, Esq.; R. B. Armstrong, Esq.; Benjamin Turton, Esq.; the trustees of the late Geo. Mounsey, Esq.; and others.

The village of Staveley is on the west side of the Kent, a little above the confluence of that river with the Gowan, four miles and a half north-west of Kendal. In the village are two extensive woollen mills, a corn mill, and two bobbin mills. Here is also a handsome hotel, called the Abbey, erected in 1844. It is finished and furnished in a superior manner, and is a great convenience to travellers. Staveley is very ancient. It was a prosperous village at a very early period. We find that as early as 1341, ten years after the establishment of the woollen manufacture at Kendal, there was a fulling mill here, which was worth 10s. a year. In 1329 (2nd Edward III.) a charter was obtained for a weekly market at Staveley, on Friday, and a fair yearly on the eve, day, and morrow of the feast of St. Luke, but they have long been obsolete. Two annual fairs are now held here on the Wednesday before Easter for cattle, and the 7th October for sheep.

THE CHAPEL.

The chapel, probably dedicated to St. Margaret, is an ancient but commodious structure, consisting of nave, chancel, and neat tower containing two bells. There are two mural monuments in the chancel, one of which commemorates George Jobson, the other is defaced. There are also neat marble tablets to the memory of Thomas F. de Lambert, Esq., and the Rev. Peter Strickland, and his only son Thomas. The ancient salary of this chapel was only £6 13s. 4d., to which Mr. Henry Nicolson added 10s. a year for a sermon on St. Thomas' Day. It has since been augmented with £200 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, £100 given by Lady Moyer, and £100 subscribed by the inhabitants, for which two small estates were purchased, one at Patton and the other at Natland; and in 1844 it received a further augmentation of £44 from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, so that the living is now worth about £120 a year. The vicar of Kendal nominated the present incumbent, but the payers of chapel salary nominated his predecessor. The registers commence in 1651.

INCUMBENTS.—George Myers, 1757; Peter Strickland, 1807; J. G. Ellery, 1837.

The parsonage occupies a pleasant situation on the side of Ravenscar, in the township of Hugill. It was erected in 1852, and is in the Elizabethan style.

The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have chapels in the village.

The school, which was rebuilt in 1841, possesses an endowment arising from the rents of Low Scroggs and Elphow estates, left in 1696, by George Jobson, for the education of poor children, about sixty of whom attend the school.

CHARITY.

Poor Stock.—There is the sum of £50, supposed to have been left by three persons of the names of Muckhold, Airey, and Woodburn. The interest is annually distributed on Easter Tuesday, amongst four or five poor householders having no parish relief.

NETHER STAVELEY.

The population of this township in 1801 was 131; in 1811, 155; in 1821, 189; in 1831, 190; in 1841, 201; and in 1851, 299. The rateable value is £2,044. The inhabitants are principally engaged in agriculture, but a few are employed in the bobbin manufacture. The Kendal and Windermere railway runs through the township, and has a station here. The manorial rights are possessed by the Hon. Mrs. Howard. The landowners are Richard de Lambert, Esq.; William Wakefield, Esq.; Thomas Atkinson, Esq.; Richard Wilson, Esq.: the trustees of the late J. G. Roberts, Esq.; P. Hubbersty, Esq.: and some smaller proprietors.

This township extends from three and a half to about seven miles north-west of Kendal. The houses are all scattered except a few near Gowan Bridge, where it adjoins the village of Over Staveley and the river Kent.

Common Head, the property and residence of Robert de Lambert, Esq., is a handsome structure, pleasantly situated at the foot of a hill bearing the same name, and commanding extensive views of the surrounding country.

BURNESIDE CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry includes the townships of Strickland Ketel and Strickland Roger.

The manor of Burneside, anciently Burneshead, appears to have been possessed by a family bearing the local name, but only one of them is recorded, Gilbert de Burneshead, who occurs in 1282. The family seems to have ended in a daughter, Margaret, who became the wife of Richard de Bellingham, one of a Northumberland family, who thereupon came to reside at Burneside. From the Bellinghams the manor was purchased by Sir Thomas Clifford, whose son-in-law (as it is supposed) sold it to — Machell, of Kendal, from whom it was bought by Robert Braithwaite, Esq., of Ambleside. The Braithwaites continued to hold the manor till the middle of the eighteenth century, when Richard Braithwaite, Esq., sold it to Thomas Shepherd, Esq., who sold the estates to the tenants, and the manor to the Lowthers, so that the Earl of Lonsdale is the present lord. Burneside Hall, the ancient manor-house, has long been in ruins, but a portion of it is now occupied as a farmstead. It stands in the township of Strickland Roger.

The village of Burneside is situated on both sides of the Kent, which is here crossed by a good bridge, two miles north-by-west of Kendal, in the townships of Strickland Ketel and Strickland Roger. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and derives its name from burn, a brook or stream, in allusion to the river flowing through it.

Burneside chapel, dedication unknown, is a neat Gothic structure, with a spiral tower, erected in 1826, near the site of a much older chapel, at a cost of about £1,300, of which £900 was raised by subscription, £100 obtained from government, and the remainder from a rate levied upon the occupiers of land. John Bateman, Esq., built the spire, ornamented the interior of the chapel, and gave a painted window. The chapel contains a neat marble tablet to the memory of James Bateman, Esq., of Tolson Hall. In the time of Charles I. the living was augmented with five marks (£3 6s. 8d.)

a year, out of an estate at Nether Staveley, left by Messrs. Robert and Rowland Kitchin. Since then it has received an augmentation of 20s. a year out of an estate at Strickland Ketel, left by Mr. Thos. Atkinson; £400 in two lots, from Queen Anne's Bounty, to meet subscriptions and benefactions to the same amount, of which £100 was given by the executors of Dr. Stratford. This money was expended in 1757 in the purchase of an estate at Skelsmergh, and another at Dent, in Yorkshire, the latter of which now produces about £16 a year. The total income of the living is about £120 per annum. The curate is elected by the landowners paying chapel salary, and approved of by the vicar of Kendal. The registers commence in 1717.

Incumbents.—William Smith, 1717; William Burton, 1777; John Jackson, 1781; Henry Cook, 1811; William Robinson, 1815; George London, 1854.

The parsonage is a neat Elizabethan structure, erected in 1856, on ground given by John Bateman, Esq., at a cost of about £600, of which £100 was given by the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty.

Burneside School possesses an ancient school-stock of £20, together with the following bequests:—Alan Fisher, of Huddlow, in Strickland Roger, by will, in 1781, gave the sum of £600 in trust, directing that the interest should be applied in the purchase of plate for the communion service of Burneside chapel, and the making of an additional room to the school-house; and for furnishing this additional room he left his books and other things; and he declared his will to be, that if the school and chapel should be united, or, during such time as the master of the school should be curate of the chapel, that six poor children of Strickland Roger should be taught gratis; but that none should be taught gratis during such time as the chapel and school should be divided. And he further directed his trustees to pay yearly to a poor widow belonging to Strickland Roger, with not less than two children, the sum of £4, by half-yearly payments; and he further ordered that out of the profits, his trustees should pay yearly to the churchwardens of Strickland Roger £2 12s., to be laid out in bread at a shilling a week; and he directed that the residue of the yearly interest of the £600 should be given to the schoolmaster at Burneside for the time being. Joseph Harling, by will, in November, 1802, gave £100 to the trustees of Burneside School, upon condition that they should permit the master of the said school to receive the interest; in consideration of which the trustees and the master were to permit the churchwardens and the overseers of the township of Skelsmergh, to send to Burneside School four poor boys of their township yearly, to be taught reading, writing, and accounts, without paying any quarterage, except a cockpenny at Shrovetide. These two bequests, with the school-stock of £20, were laid out in the purchase of £810 Stock five per cent. producing a yearly dividend of £10 10s., which is distributed as directed. A new school-house was erected in 1855. The school is under the management of four trustees, viz., the incumbent, George A. Geldard, Esq., Thomas Harrison, Esq., and Stephen Brunskill, Esq.

CHARITY.

Great Satturey Estate.—Robert and Rowland Kitchin's Charity.—By indenture, dated July 23rd, 1812, it is recited that a close called Great Satturey had been purchased for £80, and another called Lamb Parrock for £40, and that for £18 some meadow ground, called the Broad Ing, all which closes were purchased with money given by Mr. Robert Kitchin; and that part thereof given by Rowland Kitchin, for and to the use of a lecturer, curate, minister, and schoolmaster at Burneside chapel, and to the poor people of the said chapelry. These lands produce about £29 10s. a year, out of which the minister receives £3 6s. 8d., and the remainder (after deducting incidental expenses) is divided between the two townships of Strickland Ketel and Strickland Roger, and is given away at Christmas to poor persons not receiving parish relief.

STRICKLAND KETEL.

The population of this township in 1801 was 269; in 1811, 310; in 1821, 390; in 1831, 386; in 1841, 466; and in 1851, 409. The rateable value is £3,010 17s. 6d. Agriculture is the principal employment.

"Strickland," say Nicolson and Burn, "anciently was always written Stirkland, being no other than the pasture ground of the stirks or steers, and other young cattle. At what precise time the Stirkland was divided into moieties, and so denominated from the several owners, hath not appeared to us. It seems to have been about the reign of King Henry I., in the time of Ketel, son of Eldred, son of Ivo de Tailbois, first baron of Kendal. Roger de Lancaster, bastard brother of William de Lancaster, had large possessions given to him by his said brother, but he had not Strickland Roger, for that continued in the legitimate line; therefore, Strickland Roger had not its name from him, but from some other probably before his time. The family de Stirkland, which finally settled at Sizergb, had not their name from the Stirkland of which we now speak, but from Stirkland (which in after times was divided into Great and Little Stirkland) in the bottom of Westmoreland. They had indeed certain tenements in Stirkland Ketel, holden under the lords of the manor, but they were never lords of the manor themselves. By an inquisition after the death of Joan de Coupland, in the 49th Edward III., it is found that she held of the crown the hamlet of Stirkland Ketel, as parcel of the manor of Wyandermere; and that others held divers lands there of her, as parcel of the manor of Kirkby in Kendal. In the 9th Henry VIII., Sir Thomas Parr, by his will, devised to his wife for life, the manor of Strykeland Rogers, being of that which was afterwards called the Marquis Fee. And in the 14th Elizabeth, William Parr, marquis of Northampton, died seised thereof, and the same was assigned to his widow for dower." The Earl of Lonsdale is now lord of both these manors, except a small part which belongs to the Hon. Mrs. Howard. The landowners are James Cropper, Esq.; Geo. A. Geldard, Esq.; John Gandy, Esq.; Allen Chambers, Esq.; Rowland A. Standish, Esq.; Henry Bermingham, Esq.; the trustees of the late William Thompson, Esq.; John Bateman, Esq.; William Wakefield, Esq.; Trinity College, Cambridge; Messrs. Harrison and Evans, and others. The commons were enclosed in 1821.

Strickland Ketel township contains the chapel and part of the village of Burneside, with the small hamlets of Aikrigg End, Bonning Yeat, Cowen Head, Low Green Hill, Plungarths, and Sparrowwair, besides many detached dwellings from one to four miles north-north-west of Kendal. The residences in this township are Aikrigg End, G. A. Geldard, Esq.; Ellergreen, James Cropper, Esq.; Tolson Hall, William Whitwell, Esq.; Plungarths, William Wakefield, Esq. Near Tolson Hall is an obelisk, erected by James Bateman, Esq., in commemoration of the battle of Waterloo.

CHARITIES.

School.—William Newby, of Strickland Ketel, in 1744, left £60 upon trust, that the interest should be applied for the education of six poor children of Strickland Ketel. This charity appears to have been lost.

Poor Stock.—There is belonging to this township the sum of £67 0s. 3d., poor stock, the interest of which is given away at Easter amongst the poor of the township.

STRICKLAND ROGER.

The rateable value of this township is £1,978 16s. 2d. In 1801 it contained 250 inhabitants; in 1811, 302; in 1821, 341; in 1831, 326; in 1841, 412; and in 1851, 361; who are principally resident in the village of Burneside. Agriculture is the chief employment, but a good many are employed in the paper mills of James Cropper, Esq. The Kendal and Windermere railway passes through the township. The account of the manor is given with Strickland Ketel. The land-owners are James Cropper, Esq.; George A. Geldard, Esq.; J. Cropper, Esq.; Mrs. Fothergill; Mrs. Harrison; John Brunskill, Esq.; Messrs. George Dickinson, Wilson, and others. This township contains part of the village of Burneside, a number of dispersed dwellings, and extends from two to six miles north of Kendal. It is bounded by the river Sprint and Petter Fell. On the former is a woollen mill, and near the latter is the hamlet of Garnet Bridge, six miles north from Kendal, where there is a corn-mill, and also a bobbin manufactory. At Burneside is a school for girls and infants, partly supported by James Cropper, Esq., and attended by about sixty children. There is a paper mill at Burneside, in this township.

Godmond Hall, a farm-house, occupies the site of an ancient hall, or tower, four miles north-by-west of Kendal.

CHARITIES.

Atkinson's Gift.—Thomas Atkinson, of Coppackhow, in Skelsmergh, by will, in 1715, charged a messuage and tenement in Strickland Ketel with the payment of 20s. yearly for ever, to be distributed among the poor of Strickland Roger on St. Thomas' Day.

Poor's Dole.—There is a parcel of ground in Strickland Ketel, the rent of which has always been distributed to the poor of the township of Strickland Roger.

Poor Stock.—This consists of two several sums of £40 and £11, the interest of which is distributed among the poor.

UNDERBARROW CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises Underbarrow alone, though Underbarrow and Bradley Field form one township. Bradley Field is attached to the mother church of Kendal.

The rateable value of this township is £3,855. Its population in 1801 was 376; in 1811, 340; in 1821, 504; in 1831, 526; in 1841, 515; and in 1851, 505; who are resident in houses dispersed over the township. Agriculture is the only employment.

Underbarrow has its name from its situation under the barrow, hill, or sear, which extends from north to south all along in this division. Bradley Field consists of a few scattered houses about two miles west-south-west of Kendal, and took its name from a family of the name of Bradley, which came from Bradley, in Lancashire. This family ended in three co-heiresses, one of whom became the wife of William Leybourne, Esq., of Cuswick Hall, in this township, an ancient Westmoreland family, who possessed the manor till 1715, when John de Leybourne joined the Earl of Derwentwater in his attempt to restore the house of Stuart to the English throne. In consequence of his share in this "rising" the estates of John de Leybourne became forfeited to the crown; they were afterwards purchased by Thomas Crowle, and are now the property of the Earl of Lonsdale; besides whom, the executors of the late William Thompson, Esq.; Miss Newby; Thomas

H. Bateman, Esq.; the Hon. Mrs. Howard; George Kirkby, Esq.; Samuel Whener, Esq.; — Riddle, Esq.; Allen Chambers, Esq., and others, are the land-owners. Underbarrow is part of the Marquis Fee and part of the Lumley Fee.

THE CHAPEL.

Underbarrow chapel, dedication unknown, is a small plain building, re-erected in 1708 by the inhabitants of Underbarrow alone, for Bradley Field is not included in its jurisdiction, being attached to the parish church. In 1732 the curacy was endowed with the High Bendrigg estate, in Killington, purchased with £200 of Queen Anne's Bounty, and £200 given by Colonel Graham and Lady Moyer. It has also a rent-charge of 30s. out of a field in the same township; and a small estate near the chapel, called Chapel House, out of which 35s. a year is paid to the poor in consideration of £35 poor stock having been included in the purchase money. The present value of the living is about £100 a year. The vicar of Kendal is patron. The registers commence in 1735.

INCUMBENTS.—W. Lupton, 1745; John Jackson, 1762; Thomas Hervey, 1769; Thomas Hervey, jun., 1806; Robert Taylor, 1821; John Graves, 1838.

The parsonage is a plain cottage, a little north of the chapel.

There is a small Methodist chapel in this township.

Underbarrow school is attended by about thirty children.

CHARITIES.

Besides the Chapel House estate, mentioned above, this township possesses the following charities:—

Baldwinson's Charity.—William Baldwinson, previous to 1699, charged certain lands called The Broom, or Old Close, with the payment of £1, to be distributed to the poor on St. Thomas's Day, and of £1 10s., to be paid yearly to the curate on the same day.

Starnthwaite's Charity.—There is a parcel of ground called Mintsfeet, the rent of which is applicable to charitable purposes in this township. The land is supposed to have been given by Peter Starnthwaite. The rent is disposed of, with the other charity money, on St. Thomas's Day, as above-mentioned, to the poor of Underbarrow and Bradley Field not receiving parish relief.

The residences in the township are Tullythwaite House, George Kirkby, Esq.; Thorns, Richard Wilson, Esq.; Blake Bank Cottage, Samuel Whinery, Esq.; High Crag, Henry Kirkby, Esq.; Larch House, John Hudson, Esq.

WINSTER CHAPELRY.

This chapelry contains a small hamlet, eight miles west of Kendal, and forms a joint township with Undermillbeck, in Windermere parish. Part of Cartmel Fells, being far distant from the mother church in Lancashire, pays to the curate of this chapelry, which was anciently included in that of Crook, but has been a distinct chapelry for a number of years.

Winster was formerly held of the Philipsons of Calgarth, in Applethwaite. The last Philipson of that place left four daughters, co-heirs, who sold the manor in 1717 to John Taylor and Miles Birket, both of Winster, who conveyed it to the several tenants respectively, subject only to the payment of a free rent to the crown. A lead mine was opened here in 1848, but proved to be unprofitable.

THE CHAPEL.

Winster chapel, dedication unknown, is a small edifice, with low tower, containing one bell. The burial ground was consecrated in 1721. The curate's original income was £3 19s., but it has been several times augmented, viz., in 1617 with land given by a Mr. Knipe, and exchanged in 1801 with William Birkett for £118 and the Garnett House estate in Winster; in 1720 with an estate in Cartmel Fells, purchased with £200 of Queen Anne's Bounty; in 1760 with an estate in Dent, Yorkshire, purchased with £200 of the same bounty, £100 left by Dr. Stratford, and £100 subscribed; and in 1820 with the Hole estate in Crook, purchased with £900, of which sum £400 was obtained in 1801 and 1815 from Queen Anne's Bounty, £300 from a parliamentary grant, £83 by subscription, and the remainder was the before-mentioned £118, so that the benefice is now worth £20 a year. The vicar of Kendal is patron. The registers commence in 1720.

INCUMBENTS.—John Hudson, 1720; Richard Harrison, 1758; William Elleray, 1789; Robert Rigg, 1803; John Long, 1821; William Noble, 1842; Charles Buller Harris, 1847; Frederick Howlett, 1851; William Adamson, 1856.

The school is a small, neat building, and is attended by about thirty children.

High Mill House, the residence of Piers F. Legh, Esq., is pleasantly situated in a secluded vale, near the source of the river Winster.

On the river Winster, which divides the chapelry from Lancashire, are two corn mills.

WINDERMERE PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by that of Grasmere, on the west and south-west by Lancashire, and on the east by that of Kendal. It is about ten miles in length and three in breadth, and is a highly interesting district, deriving its name from the lake of Windermere. It comprises the townships of Undermillbeck, Applethwaite, Troutbeck, and Ambleside-below-Stock, whose united area is 17,130.

UNDERMILLBECK.

The area of this township is 3,925 acres, and its rateable value £1,898 17s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 500; in 1811, 600; in 1821, 689; in 1831, 854; in 1841, 1,033; in 1851, 1,421; who principally reside in the village of Bowness. Winsten, in Kendal parish, is a joint township with Undermillbeck.

The manor of Undermillbeck, more commonly known as the manor of Windermere, was anciently of considerable extent; for after the death of Joan de Coup-land, it was found that she died seised of Windermere, "with its members and appurtenances; to wit, the hamlets of Langden, Loughbrige, Grismer, Hamelside, Troutbeck, Applethwaite, Crosthwaite, Stirkland Ketel, and Hoton." It is of the Richmond Fee. In the 4th Edward III. Christian de Lindsey obtained a charter of free warren in Windermere; and in the 14th year of the same king William de Coucy obtained a like charter of free warren there. On a survey of the Queen's lands, in the 28th Charles II., it was found that in Undermillbeck there were eighty-one tenements of the Richmond Fee, of the yearly rent in the whole of £13 8s. The Earl of Lonsdale is the present proprietor of the manorial rights and privileges. The landowners are the Rev. Thomas Stainforth; Thomas Ulcock, Esq.; Rev. E. P. Stock; Rev. T. Fleming; Rev. George Coventry; the executors of Thomas Garnett, Esq.; John Gandy, Esq.; John Birkett, Esq.; the executors of the late Baroness de Sternberg; the executors of *Garnett and Kew; Rev. Isaac Benson; Richard Wilson; and various other owners.

Bowness, the chief village in this parish, is charmingly situated on the edge of a large bay of Windermere, five and a half miles south-by-east of Ambleside, nine miles west-north-west of Kendal, and two from the terminus of the Kendal and Windermere railway. From its admirable position it is much frequented by tourists, for whose accommodation it possesses two hotels, the Royal and Crown. A circulating library was established here in 1848, and a mechanics' institution in 1851. A short distance north of the town is the Windermere Hydropathic Establishment, one of the most attractive in the kingdom. In 1858 a constabulary station and magistrates' room were erected. A small market for flesh is held on Wednesday. A fair, held on the 18th of October, has long been obsolete. Bowness can lay claim to considerable antiquity, having been known as a town or village in Saxon times; and in the Melrose Chronicle it is mentioned as the place where, in 791, Eldred, a thane, slew Elf and Edwin, the sons of Elfwald. Bowness is the port of Windermere, and during the summer months is rather a bustling place.

The parish church, a venerable and spacious structure, dedicated to St. Martin, is situated in the centre of the village of Bowness. Seen from the lake, it has a beautiful and picturesque effect. Of the date of its foundation nothing is known with certainty. In ancient times the parish, like that of Grasmere, was a chapelry only in the parish of Kendal; but, through length of time, and little or no communication with the mother church, by reason of the distance, it acquired the reputation of a distinct parish. It is, nevertheless, stated that in token of submission to the mother church, the rector of Windermere pays to this day an annual pension of 13s. 4d. to the vicar of Kendal. The church consists of an embattled square tower, carrying a peal of three bells, into which a low recessed arched doorway, not now used, gives access on the western part; a vestry, of modern addition, at the west end of the aisle; a nave with north and south aisles; a porch at the south side, through which it is the principal entrance into the church; a narrow arched door is near the east end of the same aisle, and a door of a like design near the west end of the north aisle. The south aisle is lighted by four square stone-mullioned windows, while the windows in the north aisle are five in number. There is a clerestory with six windows. The east window is of the latest Perpendicular, and divided by plain stone mullions into seven lights. It is said to have belonged to Furness Abbey. Numerous fragments of its stained glass are still visible. In the interior, the arches dividing the nave from the aisles are pointed, covered with coats of plaister and white-wash. The roof, which is open to the framing, is of oak, black through age, and covered on the outside with lead. In the church is kept, chained to a seat underneath the reading desk, a copy of Erasmus's "Paraphrase on the New Testament." There is also a copy of Jewel's "Defence of the Apologie of the Church of England." The font, which stands near the principal entrance, is of pale red sandstone, octagonal in form, ornamented with some rude sculpture. On the walls, especially in the chancel, are many neat and handsome tablets, commemorative of individuals connected by birth or property with the surrounding country,—over two or three of them, funeral hatchments are suspended. One of these monuments is to the late Dr. Watson, bishop of Llandaff. There are also several mortuary brasses, but none of any particular interest. At the appropriation of the church of Kendal to the abbey of St. Mary at York, by Ivo de Taillois, the patronage of Wynandermere chapel, as it was called, was excepted. In the reign of Edward III. the patronage was in Ingelram de Guisnes and his wife, Christian, who were grantees of the crown, subject to a pension of 33s. 4d. payable to the said abbey. It appears to have become subsequently vested in Joan de Coupland, as by an inquisition, taken in 49th Edward III., after her death, it was found that she held by grant of the king, during his life, the advowson of Wynandermere, then valued at 100s. The patronage afterwards reverted to and remained in the crown till the seventh year of Queen Elizabeth, when it was granted to William Herbert and John Jenkins, to hold of the queen in free socage by fealty as of the manor of East Greenwich. After several mesne conveyances, it was in the last century purchased by Sir William Fleming, of Rydal, and is now exercised by Lady le Fleming. In 1535 the living was valued in the King's Book at £24 6s. 8d.; it was subsequently certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £78. The tithes of the parish have been commuted for a yearly rent-charge of £87. The rector has a "prescription of so much a boat, in lieu of all the tithes of fish caught in the lake, which is divided into twelve fisheries." The parsonage has upwards of fifty acres of glebe, reaching from the house to the waterside, now let at about £153 a year. The total income is about £253 a year. The registers commence in 1670.

RECTORS.—William Barton occurs 1750; G. B. Barton, 1754; Giles Moore, 1766; William Barton, 1780; Sir Richard Fleming, 1824; Edward P. Stuck, 1857.

The rectory is an ancient house, which, in Nicolson and Burn's time, was known as The Hall, there being then no other gentleman's house in the village of Bowness.

The Wesleyans and Christian Brethren have chapels here.

Bowness Free School, for the boys of Undermillbeck and Applethwaite townships, is endowed with £50 a year, arising from an estate purchased in the early part of last century with £200 subscribed by the inhabitants of those townships. The school-house is a handsome building, occupying a pleasant and healthful situation on an eminence a little east of Bowness. It was erected in 1836 by the late John Bolton, Esq., of Storr's Hall, who died in 1837, and was interred in Bowness churchyard, where a handsome tablet is raised to his memory. The late John Braithwaite, Esq., of Orrest Head, left £2,000 to the trustees of this school, the annual proceeds to be applied as an exhibition at St. John's College, Cambridge, tenable for four years, by a youth born in Applethwaite or Undermillbeck, educated two years in the said school, and nominated by a majority of the trustees. He also bequeathed £200 to the same school, one half of the interest of which he directed should be applied towards the salary of a second master for the boys, and the remainder towards the salary of a schoolmistress. He also left £1,000 in trust for the school of Great and Little Langdale, £1,000 for Troutbeck, £1,000 for Birthwaite, and £1,000 for Ings.

CHARITIES.

Borwick's Charity.—Knipe's Gift.—Francis Borwick, in 1638, gave £100, the interest to be applied in putting out poor children apprentices, or for the help of poor scholars, or for the poor. This money was subsequently vested in land. In 1679 William Knipe gave £5 for the use of the poor of Applethwaite and Undermillbeck. The proceeds of this charity are divided amongst the poor of the parish.

The following charities belong to the township of Undermillbeck:—

Thomas Dixon's Gift.—Thomas Dixon, Esq., in 1730, gave a rent charge of 20s. to the poor of this township.

Shaw's and Robert Dixon's Gift.—Mr. Shaw and Robert Dixon gave £14 to the poor of Undermillbeck. The date of 1731 is given to these donations in Burn's "History of Westmoreland." This, together with other charity money, is secured upon the tolls of the turnpike road from Kendal to Ambleside, and the interest is distributed at Easter with Borwick's money and the communion money.

Collinson's, Richard Dixon's, and Kirkby's Gift.—Thomas Collinson, of Cleabarrow, gave £5 to the poor of Undermillbeck. Richard Dixon, Esq., gave £17 10s. for the same purpose; and John Kirkby, Esq., gave £5. The interest of the two first sums to be distributed in bread, and the third sum in money, on St. Thomas' Day.

Belman's Gift.—Edward Belman, Esq., gave 5s. yearly, charged upon his estate in Undermillbeck, to be distributed in wheaten bread on St. Thomas' Day.

Otley's Gift.—John Otley, Esq., left a legacy to the poor of Undermillbeck amounting to £32 6s. 10d.

Garnett's Charity.—Anthony Garnett, by will, in 1774, bequeathed £60 to the churchwardens and overseers, upon trust, that they should lay out the yearly interest in white bread, a proportionable part thereof to be divided every Sunday in the parish church, after service, amongst poor householders.

Satterthwaite's Charity.—James Satterthwaite, who died in 1800, by his will, left £100, the yearly interest of which he directed should be divided at Bowness church, amongst the poor of the township of Undermillbeck. The interest is divided on St. Thomas' Day, with Otley's money mentioned above.

The villas in the neighbourhood of Bowness are Holly Hill, Frederick Clowes, Esq.; The Craig, Mrs. Harrison; Ferny Green, Mrs. Greaves; Burneside, G. A. Aufrère, Esq.; Bellsfield, Baroness A. Sternberg; Storr's Hall, Rev. Thomas Stainforth; Quarry How, Thomas Ullock, Esq.

Undermillbeck township comprises also the hamlets of Cleabarrow, a mile and a half east-by-south; Matson Grand, one mile west; and Lindeth, a mile and a half south-south-east.

AMBLESIDE CHAPELRY.

THE chapelry and township of Ambleside is partly in the parishes of Grassmere and Windermere, in the former of which the chapel is situated. Its total area is 3,244 acres. Its population in 1801 was 538; in 1811, 624; in 1821, 838; in 1831, 1,095; in 1841, 1281; and in 1851, 1,592.

The portion of the chapelry in this parish comprises 1,661 acres. Its population was not returned separately previous to 1841, when it was 730; and in 1851, 826; who are chiefly resident in the village of Ambleside. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the bobbin manufacture. The township of Ambleside is included in the Earl of Lonsdale's manor of Windermere.

THE TOWN OF AMBLESIDE.

The small market town of Ambleside is situated in a beautiful valley near the upper end of Windermere, and on the left bank of the little river Rothay, fourteen miles north-west from Kendal, and about 276 north-west-by-north of London. It is built in pleasing irregularity on the side of a hill, commanding prospects of the vale, the parks of Rydal, Brathay, and Windermere, amongst which the various outlets and approaches wind interestingly, detaining the visitor at every step by new combinations and unexpected beauties. From its central situation, the town is frequently made the head quarters of tourists for a considerable time, as within the compass of seven miles are the following lakes:—Windermere, Esthwaite Water, Elter Water, Coniston, Rydal Water, Grassmere, and Ulleswater. It was formerly the site of a Roman station; ruined walls and traces of fortifications are discernible, and armour and coins have been found. This station, which is supposed to be the Alone of the Notitia, was connected with both north and south by means of the great Roman roads which ran through the country. Most of the old houses in the town have been rebuilt or altered, so that the town now wears a modern appearance. "In 1650 the Keeper of the Liberties of England granted to the Countess of Pembroke that within the village of Ambleside there shall be a market weekly on Wednesday, and two fairs yearly (now held on the Wednesday in Whit Week and on the 29th of October), with the courts incident thereto." In 1688

James II. granted a similar charter, in which nine trustees are incorporated with power to collect tolls, &c. Another fair, for sheep, is now held on the 13th of October. A branch of the Ulverstone Savings Bank is kept at the National School; there is also a branch of the Kendal Bank. Petty sessions are held at Ambleside every Wednesday, in the Town Hall, erected in 1858 for a county court, on the site of the old market house. The old market cross is still in existence in the village. The ancient custom of rush-bearing is still observed here.

CHURCHES.

Ambleside possesses two churches, the old and the new. The old church, which stands at the north end of the town, was rebuilt in 1812, by a rate levied on the landowners of the chapelry and township. It was made parochial by the bishop of Chester, in 1675, and endowed by the principal inhabitants with a yearly salary of £14 (afterwards reduced to £12 4s. 11d.), which they voluntarily charged upon their estates. The living has been since augmented with an estate purchased in 1758, at Grayrigg, with £800, of which £400 was given by the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty in 1726 and 1746, £100 by the executors of Dr. Stratford, £30 by Sir William le Fleming, and £30 by the Rev. Isaac Knipe, the remaining £40 being chapel stock. It has since received a parliamentary grant of £400, and £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty, and another grant of £678 18s. 6d. in 1846; so that the living is now worth about £80 a year. Lady le Fleming is the patroness. Service has been discontinued in this church since the opening of the new one.

INCUMBENTS.—John Wilson, 1787; John Dawes, 1791; John Knipe occurs about 1792; Isaac Credalld, 1792; John Dawes, 1811; Samuel J. Fell, 1846.

St. Mary's Church, opened for service in 1854, is in the Early English style, and comprises nave, aisles, chancel, tower, and spire, with a peal of bells. It contains 959 sittings, of which 500 are free and unappropriated, in consequence of a grant having been received from the Church Building Society. The pulpit and font are of stone. Most of the windows are filled with stained glass. The east window, the gift of Benson Harrison, Esq., is of five lights, and contains figures of St. Paul and the four Evangelists. There are several memorial windows, one of which is to the memory of the poet Wordsworth and his sister Dorothy.

There is a Wesleyan chapel at the west end of the town.

Ambleside School possesses an endowment arising from a bequest made by John Kelsick, who, by will, dated December 14th, 1721, left to trustees all his lands and tenements in Ambleside, of the yearly rent of £1 3s. 11½d., upon trust, to apply the rents and profits towards the support of a schoolmaster for the town of Ambleside. The property is now worth £150 a year, and the school is attended by about eighty boys.

The National School is in the management of a committee of ladies and the incumbent, and is principally supported by subscription, and an annual collection made in the church on "Rush-bearing Sunday."

There is also an infant school.

CHARITIES.

Jackson's Gift.—Robert Jackson, in 1638, charged his estate at Ambleside with the payment of £3 a year to the churchwarden and overseer of Ambleside, to distribute out of the same every Sunday at the chapel, 1s. in bread to the poor.

Braithwaite's Gift.—Thomas Braithwaite, in 1670, gave certain lands to his sister, charged with the payment (amongst other things) of £50 to the use of eight or ten of the poorest householders born in Ambleside. This money is secured on the tolls of the turnpike road from Ambleside to Kendal; and the interest is given away on Christmas Eve to ten or twelve poor people of Ambleside, not in receipt of parish relief.

Mackereth's Charity.—Mr. George Mackereth gave £100, the interest whereof is to be laid out on the feast of St. Martin, yearly, in clothes for the poor of Ambleside. This money is secured on the tolls of the turnpike road leading from Ambleside to Kendal, and the interest is disposed of as mentioned in Mr. Braithwaite's charity.

APPLETHWAITE CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises the whole lake of Windermere, and a great part of the parish lying north of Bowness, and east of Troutbeck.

The area of this township is 6,231 acres; its rateable value £4,099 13s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 343; in 1811, 350; in 1821, 417; in 1831, 429; in 1841, 436; and in 1851, 664.

Applethwaite is of the Richmond Fee of the barony of Kendal, and on the survey made of the queen's lands in the 28th Charles II., it appeared that in Applethwaite there were sixty-two tenants, of the yearly lord's rent in the whole of £24 10s. 10½d. Applethwaite manor is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale.

Calgarth, formerly written Calgarth, is an ancient house and tenement, long the seat of the Philipsons, descended from a younger son of the Northumberland family De Threlwall, or Thirlwall, and who settled here about the middle of the sixteenth century. The family ended in daughters, when the estate was sold; it is now, together with St. Mary's Holme and Greenfield, the property of Richard L. Watson, Esq.; besides whom the Earl of Bradford; John Wilson, Esq.; John Robinson, Esq.; the executors of the late John Braithwaite; Rev. Fletcher Fleming, and others, are the landowners. The commons were enclosed by act of parliament passed in 1830.

Calgarth Hall, whose style of building was such as prevailed in these parts in the reign of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, at one time must have been a fine place to behold. Though greatly injured, it is still picturesque; but it has known its troubles, and, having been for a long period in the possession of farmers, for whose accommodation the useful but inelegant offices of a modern farmery have been erected with part of the materials, it has been deprived of all its pride, and the integrity of its appearance lost in the additions and alterations of later days. So great indeed has been the curtailment of its original proportions, that it is impossible to make out what its precise form has been. It is said to have been designed somewhat after the manner of the venerable halls at Levens andSizergh. If this be true, the destruction that has reduced an edifice, which, even so late as 1774, Dr. Burn, the learned historian of Westmoreland, states was "a fair old building," to its present condition, has indeed been complete. What is now called the kitchen, and the room over it, are the only portions of the interior existing from which a judgment may be formed of the care and finish applied to its internal decoration. In the former, which appears to have been one of the principal apartments, the armorial achievements of the Philipsons, or Phillisons, as the name seems sometimes to have been formerly spelled, crested with the fine ostrich plumes of their house, and surmounted with their motto, "Fide non Fraude," together with the bearings of Wyvill impaling Canes, into which families the owners of Calgarth intermarried, are represented in stucco over the fire-place, by the coarse skill of some provincial artificer of yore, and still serve to connect their names with the place itself. The window likewise retains some fragments of its former display of heraldic honours, for, "glowing with gem-like radiancy in the light of the sun's brilliancy," the arms of the early Lords of the place, impaling those of Wyvill, and the device of the Briggs, another Westmoreland family, with whom the Philipsons were also, matrimonially connected, yet appear in their proper blazon. The windows formerly bore other armorial cognizances of the family and their alliances, but they have long since disappeared, the only remaining ones being those just alluded to. In the same window, underneath the emblazonry, is this inscription, likewise on painted glass:—

EDMUND PHILLIPSON
AN. UNO MILLE LXXV.
SIG. STE. WILLE. RES. PIES.
T. IN. ANNO. 1699.
— SEE. 1793.
— MORT. 1579.

The room over the kitchen has been nobly ornamented after the fashion of the day, and it still retains, in its dilapidated oak-work and richly-adorned ceiling, choice, though rude ornaments of its ancient splendour. It has a dark polished oak floor, and is wainscoted on three sides with the same tough wood; which, white and bleached with age, is elaborately carved in small and regular intersecting panels, inlaid with scroll work and tracery, and surmounted by an embattled cornice. In this wainscot two or three doors indicate the entrances to other rooms, whose approaches are walled up, the rooms themselves having been long since destroyed. The ceiling is flat, and formed into compartments by heavy intersected moulded ribs, the intermediate spaces being covered with ornamented work of the most grotesque figures and designs. So late as 1789, when Clarke wrote his "Survey of the Lakes," there was remaining over the fire-place, in what was then called the dining-room, two devices remarkably well carved in oak. One exhibited Sampson asleep upon Delilah's lap, while the Philistines were cutting off his hair; the other was a representation of Jephtha, after his rash vow, meeting his daughter. In the room then designated the parlour, there were also upon the ceiling several devices modelled in stucco, in which the figure of the wyverne, the crest of the ancient family of Wyvill, was frequently repeated. And even down to so recent a period as 1820 the walls of one of the rooms were covered with various paintings in fresco or distemper of the Blessed Virgin and other saints.

History of Calgarth Park.

The Calgarth estate was purchased from the family of SANDYS, by DR. THOMAS WATSON, the celebrated Bishop of Llandaff (born at Havant, Westmoreland, 1737), who added greatly to the natural beauties of the place by elevating it with a new and elegant mansion. His lordship, who married Dorothy, sister of Daniel Wilson, Esq., of Dallam Tower, died at Calgarth in 1816, and was succeeded by his grandson, Richard Luther Watson, Esq., the present proprietor, who is son of the late Charles Luther Watson, Esq., lieutenant-colonel 3rd Dragoon Guards.

ROBERT LUTHER WATSON, Esq., of Calgarth Park, high sheriff of Westmoreland in 1857, born 1811; married, 1842, Louisa Anne Cole, and has four daughters,

- I. Louisa.
- II. Elizabeth.
- III. Margaret.
- IV. Rosa.

"The village of Windermere," says Miss Martineau, "is like nothing to be seen anywhere else. The new buildings (and all are new) are of the dark grey stone of the region, and are for the most part of a mediæval style of architecture. The Rev. J. A. Addison, late of Windermere, had a passion for ecclesiastical architecture, and his example has been a good deal followed. There is the little church of St. Mary, and there are the schools belonging to it, with their steep roofs of curiously-shaped slate, and there is St. Mary's Abbey (new, in spite of an antique name), and St. Mary's Cottage. And there is the new college of St. Mary, standing in a fine position between the main road and a descent to the lake. This college, which may be distinguished by its square tower, was originally intended as a place of education for the sons of the clergy, but having proved unsuccessful in that form, is now established on an entirely new basis. It is under the management of G. Hall Puckle, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge, and B. A. Irving, M.A., of Emmanuel College, Cambridge." The number of boys at present is 120.

THE CHAPEL.

Windermere chapel, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, is a neat Early English structure, consecrated August 8th, 1856. It comprises nave, aisle, and chancel, and contains 450 sittings, one-third of which are free and unappropriated. The east window is of three lights, and filled with stained glass representing the Crucifixion and other passages in the life of the Redeemer. The total cost of church and school amounted to £2,000. The north aisle was erected at the cost of John Gandy, Esq., and the south at that of the late John Braithwaite, Esq. The living is in the patronage of the bishop of the diocese, and is worth about £170 a year. The Rev. Charles C. Lowndes, the present incumbent, was appointed in 1856.

The Independents have a chapel near Troutbeck Bridge, erected in 1857, at a cost of £550, upon land given by R. H. Fell, Esq.

The national school possesses an endowment of £1,000, left by the late John Braithwaite, Esq., in 1856, the proceeds to be devoted towards the schoolmaster's salary, or otherwise for the benefit of the school, according to the discretion of the trustees. The school is attended by about eighty children.

CHARITIES.

Roger Park's Gift.—There is the sum of 18s. received from the treasurer of the tolls of the turnpike road between Kendal and Ambleside, as the interest of £20 poors' money, left by Roger Park. The interest of this money is given away on St. Thomas' Day, to the poor of Appletthwaite, with the other charity money, as hereafter mentioned.

Thomas Dixon's Gift.—Thomas Dixon, in 1730, gave £1 yearly out of his estate at Fallbarrow to the poor of Appletthwaite.

John Wilson's Gift.—John Wilson, by will, dated May 25th. 1798, bequeathed to the churchwardens and overseers of the township of Appletthwaite, £30, the interest thereof to be distributed yearly, as follows:—5s. in wheat bread and the remainder in money, to be divided amongst the poor of the township.

Brown's Gift.—Josiah Brown, in 1801, left £50 to the poor of Appletthwaite, to be given in bread. The money is given away in bread every Sunday.

At Mislett, an estate in this township, is a burial ground belonging to the Society of Friends, who had also a meeting house, now converted into a dwelling.

TROUTBECK CHAPELRY.

TROUTBECK chapelry occupies a picturesque vale, watered by a stream which rises at the foot of High-street, and flows southward to Windermere.

The area of Troutbeck is 5,322 acres, and its rateable value is £2,339 10s. In 1801 it contained 310 inhabitants; in 1811, 333; in 1821, 335; in 1831, 349; in 1841, 299; and in 1851, 369.

The singular valley of Troutbeck was once a wooded basin, where the terrified Britons took refuge from the Romans, while the latter were making their great road from Kendal to Penrith. The road actually ran along the very ridge of the Troutbeck hills. After the Romans and Saxons were gone, the valley was a great park, and the inhabitants were virtually serfs, in danger of the gallows (which had a hill to itself named after it to this day) at the will and pleasure of the one great man. In course of time—that is, a great many centuries ago—the valley was disparted, and divided among the inhabitants—only one very large estate being left, the new park, containing 2,000 acres. This was the estate given by Charles I. to Huddleston Phillipson for his services in the civil wars. Troutbeck is included in the Richmond Fee of Kendal barony, and in 28th Charles II. contained forty-eight tenements, of the yearly value of £27 0s. 10d. The Earl of Lonsdale possesses the manorial rights. The landowners are Richard L. Watson, Esq.; Henry Birmingham, Esq.; Admiral Wilson; Samuel Taylor, Esq.; and others. The valley now contains a string of hamlets:—Town End, Town Head, High Green, Cray, and High Fold; and its farmsteads and out-buildings show some of the most curious specimens of ancient edifices that are to be seen in the district.

THE CHAPEL.

Troutbeck chapel, which stands near the centre of the township, is dedicated to St. James. It is a small edifice, with tower and one bell, and will seat about 126 persons. It was consecrated in 1562 for the use of the inhabitants of Troutbeck and Appletthwaite, and was repaired in 1828. The curacy is in the gift of the rector of Windermere. In 1748, 1756, and 1773 its ancient revenue was augmented with certain sums from Queen Anne's Bounty, amounting to £600, which, with £200 given by the Dowager Countess Gower, was expended in the purchase of estates in Yorkshire; one in Dent, and the other at Marthwaite Foot, near Sedbergh. In 1826 the living received another gift from Queen Anne's Bounty amounting to £400, and previously with various donations amounting to £75 vested in the Ambleside Turnpike Trust, so that the living is now worth about £50 a year. The registers commence in 1585.

INCUMBENTS.—William Thompson, 1750; Robert Lambert, 1792; John Fleming, 1799; William Sewell, 1827.

CHARITIES.

School.—By articles of agreement, bearing date July 29th, 1639, we learn that a school was erected by the inhabitants, and 100 marks was subscribed towards the support of the schoolmaster. The sum of £107 11s. was subsequently contributed, making a total school stock of £175. In 1856 John Braithwaite, Esq., left £1,000 to this school, which is attended by about thirty children.

Birkett's Charity.—William Birkett, by will, dated December 16th, 1785, bequeathed the sum of £50, on trust, that the interest should be distributed among the poor of the township.

Mrs. Freeman's Charity.—Mrs. Freeman, in 1837, left £100 to the poor of the township.

The residences in the township are Ecclerigg, R. L. Watson, Esq.; Abbotsholme, Samuel Taylor, Esq.

Lonsdale Ward.

LONSDALE Ward is bounded on the north and west by Kendal Ward, on the south by Lancaster, and on the east by Yorkshire. It is the smallest of the wards of Westmoreland, and is about fourteen miles in length. Its greatest breadth at the southern part is about eight miles; but its average width for more than seven miles is not more than one mile and a half. The river Lune runs through the entire length of the ward from north to south, and from it the name of the district is derived. The soil here is generally a rich mould, producing excellent crops of corn, grass, and vegetables. Lonsdale Ward comprises the parish of Kirkby Lonsdale, the greater part of that of Burton-in-Kendal, and the township of Dillicar in Grayrigg chapelry, Kendal parish.

BURTON-IN-KENDAL PARISH.

THIS parish is bounded on the north by Kendal parish, on the west by those of Betham and Heversham, on the south by that of Warton in Lancashire, and on the east by Kirkby Lonsdale. It comprises a long, narrow, and irregularly formed tract of country extending into two of the Westmoreland wards, and into the hundred of South Lonsdale in Lancashire. The parish comprises the townships of Burton, Dalton, Preston Patrick, and Holme. Holmescales, a hamlet in Old Hutton township, for ecclesiastical purposes, is considered to belong to this parish.

BURTON-IN-KENDAL.

The area of this township is 1,437 acres, and its rateable value £3,886 18s. 1d. The population in 1801 was 548; in 1811, 574; in 1821, 673; in 1831, 733; in 1841, 796; and in 1851, 791; who are principally resident in the village or town of Burton. Burton is mostly in the Marquis Fee. Richard I. granted to Gilbert son of Roger Fitz-Reinfred two carucates of land in Burton, and four carucates in Preston and Holme. The manor seems to have been then or soon after granted to a family who assumed the local name, one of whom, Roger de Burton, represented the county of Westmoreland in parliament in 1297, after which year we hear no more of the De Burtons. The manor came subsequently to the Harringtons, for in 1488, after the attainder of Sir James Harrington, the inquisition finds that he was seised of a moiety of the manor of Burton-in-Kendal. This manor appears to have been some time after in the hands of the Middletons of Leighton, whose heir female was married to Oldfield, who sold the manor to Thomas Benison, Esq., of Hornby, whose daughter and heir carried the same in marriage to John Fenwick, Esq., of Borrow Hall, whose brother and heir, Thomas Fenwick, Esq., in pursuance of an act of parliament for that purpose, sold the same to Thomas Pearson, Esq., who was succeeded in 1782 by Miss Pearson, and in 1790 by W. Atkinson, Esq., who, dying in 1826, left it to his wife as tenant for life. Mrs. Atkinson deceased in July, 1850, when the manor came to Bryan Walter Atkinson, Esq., the present lord, besides whom the Earl of Lonsdale, Mrs. Williams, and Allen Jackson Sewell, Esq., are the principal proprietors. Courts baron are held annually in the town. The township was enclosed in 1815.

THE TOWN OF BURTON-IN-KENDAL.

The market town of Burton-in-Kendal is situated close to the border of Lancashire, in 54° 11' north latitude, 0° 42' west longitude. It is distant thirty-four miles south-south-west from Appleby, 251 miles north-west-by-north from London by road, and 243 miles by railway via Lancaster. Burton is a small but neat and regularly built town. The market-place is a spacious area, with good houses and shops; a stone cross stands in the centre of it. The market, which is held on Tuesday, was established in 1661, and in the course of the following century had become the most extensive corn market in the county; but shortly after the opening of the Kendal and Lancaster canal, in 1819, the market began to decline, and is now of comparative unimportance. Two fairs were established at the same time as the market, and are held, one on the 23rd of April, and the other on Whitsun Monday. The linen and canvas manufacture employ some of the inhabitants, but the trade of the town is inconsiderable in amount. The salubrity of the climate has induced many respectable families to select Burton as a place of residence. The scenery in the neighbourhood of the town is very interesting. In 1777 the inhabitants expended considerable sums in draining a large tract of marshy and mossy ground on the west side of the town. Trunks of large oak and fir trees were found embedded in the moss.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church, dedicated to St. James, is an ancient but plain edifice, consisting of nave, aisle, chancel, and square tower containing six good bells. It was thoroughly repaired and restored in 1844, at a cost of about £1,000. There are two chapels, which serve as places of sepulture for the families residing at Dalton and Preston Halls. The pulpit and reading-desk are of oak, curiously carved, and bear the date 1607. On the chapel belonging to Preston Hall is the inscription—"Gloria Deo in Excelsis, J. F. F., 1634;" and inside that of Dalton Hall are the words—"Soli Deo Glorie P. S., Fundator, 1628." The church contains a number of monuments to members of the Parkinson, Lucas, Cotton, Atkinson, and Waller families. This church, with many others, was given by Ivo de Tailbois, first baron of Kendal, to the abbey of St. Mary at York, and was confirmed to that house by his successor, Gilbert, son of Roger Fitz-Reinfred, about the year 1200. In 1359 it was appropriated to the abbey, a pension of 40s. a year being reserved to the archdeacon of Richmond, 3s. 4d. to the archbishop of York, and 3s. 4d. to the dean and chapter of York. In 1460 the vicar's revenue was £20 a year, arising from a house and garden called Kirk Butts, with all small tithes, oblations, and mortuaries; but out of his income he had to repair the chancel, find candles for the use of the church, and pay £10 3s. 4d. to the monastery. After the suppression of the religious houses, the rectory and advowson of the vicarage were granted by Queen Elizabeth to the Earl of Lincoln and C. Gough, Esq., "with reservation of a rent to the crown of £9 7s. 8d.; to the schoolmaster of Kendal, £9 6s. 8d.; to the curate of Hugill, £3 6s. 8d.; and to the bishop of Chester, £2." The great tithes afterwards belonged to the Prestons of Preston Patrick, whose two heiresses carried them in marriage, about the middle of the 17th century, to the lords Montgomery and Clifford; the former having for his share the tithes of Burton, Holme, and Dalton, which were subsequently purchased by Colonel Charteris, of Hornby Castle; and the latter having the tithes of Preston Patrick and Holmscales, which, about the year 1770, were sold to Mrs. Gibson of Lancaster. B. W. Atkinson is the present improprator, having purchased the tithes. Shortly after the dissolution the advowson of the vicarage appears to have been in the hands of the Middletons of Leighton, in Lancashire, the last of whom, Sir George Middleton, Bart., had a daughter and heiress, Mary, who by marriage brought the same to the Oldfields of Somerforth, in Cheshire, who sold the same, together with the manor of Burton and demesne of Claythorpe Hall, to Mr. Benison of Hornby, from whose daughter it was purchased by Mrs. Hutton of Kirkby Lonsdale, who in her turn sold it to Mr. Lancaster of Sedgfield, in the county of Durham. It was afterwards bought by Mr. Thomas Hutton of Kirkby Lonsdale and Mr. Jeffrey Tenant of Bentham, in Yorkshire, but subsequently passed with the heiress of the Hutton family to John Johnstone, Esq. It was next possessed by the Rev. C. Simeon, whose trustees are the present patrons. The vicarage is valued in the King's Book at £15 17s. 3½d. It was certified at £30 6s. 8d. in 1725, in which year it received an augmentation of £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty, and £200 from the executrix of Lady Moyer, and other donors, which sums were laid out in the purchase of a house and estate for the vicar, the ancient house and glebe called Kirk Butts having been taken possession of by one of the lords of the manor. In 1772 it was augmented with an estate at Yealand Conyers, in Lancashire, purchased with £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty; £100 given by the Rev. John Hutton, then vicar; and £100 given by the Countess Dowager Gower. On the enclosure of the commons in 1815, the tithes of the parish were commuted for an allotment of land for Burton, Holme, and Dalton; and the sum of £1,400 for Preston Patrick, and £420 for Holmscales.

VICARS.—John Thornton, 1655; Gerard Brown, 1662; John Ormerod, 1669; J. Usherwood, 1691; Thomas Darbon, 1692; John Benison, 1724; John Hutton, 1764; Bryan Walker, 1806; Robert Morewood, 1842.

The vicarage is a neat building, erected by the present vicar in 1844, at a cost of £900. It stands on a gentle eminence south-east of the church.

There is a Friends' meeting house in the town, but no congregation, the last member dying in 1858.

The national school is a large commodious building, erected by subscription in 1817, on land given by John Hutton, Esq., ancestor of one of the vicars. It is under government inspection.

CHARITIES.

John Hutton's Charity.—John Hutton, of Hindon, in the parish of Cockfield, Durham, gave 20s. a year, for ever, to the poor of Cockfield parish, and 40s. per annum to the poor of the parish of Burton-in-Kendal; and after leaving other legacies to his relations, he gave the remainder of his estate at Hindon to the free school at Burton, on condition that the master should be a master of arts, of either Oxford or Cambridge, who should officiate as curate at Preston Patrick chapel. The latter of these conditions not being practicable, the proceeds of this charity have been given to the poor of this parish and that of Betham.

Grammar School.—There is in the town of Burton a school of ancient foundation. The earliest endowment is an old school stock amounting to £117, the origin of which is unknown, and the following benefactions have been subsequently bequeathed to it:—Robert Lucas, by will, in 1754, left £10, the interest to be paid to the schoolmaster. Rowland Burrow, of Holme, by will, in 1794, left a similar sum for the same purpose. John Lucas, by will, in 1793, left the interest of £40 for the education of two poor boys of the township of Holme. The school also possessed £20 a year from Parkinson's Charity, now lost. The school has not been in existence for several years.

Townships of Burton, Holme, and Dalton.—John Parkinson's Charity.—John Parkinson, by will, in 1795, left £800 on trust, the interest of which he directed should be distributed in the following manner: £20 yearly to the schoolmaster at Burton for the education of twenty poor boys; £7 yearly to a schoolmistress for the education of fourteen poor girls; to three trustees £1 ls. each for their trouble; and to the churchwardens £1. This charity has been lost in consequence of the bankruptcy of the person in whose hands the money had been placed.

Wilson's Charity.—Elizabeth Wilson, in 1731, left the interest of £10 to the vicar of Burton.

John Lucas's Charity for a Sermon.—The John Lucas mentioned above, left the interest of £12 for the preaching of a sermon in the parish church of Burton. This charity was also lost with Parkinson's Charity.

Township of Burton.—Poor Stock.—There is the sum of £40, which has existed for at least 160 years by the name of poor stock, and the interest of which is carried to the poor rates.

John Lucas's Charity.—John Lucas above-mentioned bequeathed the sum of £5, on trust, the interest to be distributed to poor housekeepers in the township of Burton.

Heron Sike and Clawthorp are hamlets in this township; the latter is about a mile north-north-east of Burton. Clawthorp Hall has long been a farm-house.

DALTON.

Dalton township, which is one mile east-by-south of Burton, is to the south of Lonsdale, in Lancashire. Its area is 2,135 acres, and rateable value £1,923. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 73; in 1811, —; in 1821, 151; in 1831, 131; in 1841, 155; and in 1851, 100. The soil here is a good loam. The manorial rights are held by Edmund George Hornby, Esq.; besides whom Bryan W. Atkinson, Esq.; Rev. Edward G. Kendal; Edmund Tatham, Esq., are the principal landowners.

Dalton Hall, the seat of the lord of the manor, is a handsome mansion, erected in 1812, commanding extensive views of the surrounding country.

Hornby of Dalton Hall.

The family of Hornby was settled in the Fylde country, in the north of Lancashire, from a very early period.

JOHANNES DE HORNBY was receiver-general of the duchy rents under John of Gaunt; and the records in the duchy office give the seals of the arms such as they have been ever since they were borne by their descendants. In the reign of James I. HUGH DE HORNBY, Esq., of Bankfield, in Fylde, was rated to find service and men of arms. He was ruined by the civil wars, and sold Bankfield to the Harrisons. His son,

GEORGE HORNBY, followed the profession of the law, and settled at Poulton-in-the-Fylde, where he acquired considerable property. He was the father of

EDMUND HORNBY, Esq., who married Dorothy, daughter of Geoffrey Rishton, of Anley, co. Lancaster, M.P. for Preston, and sister of Edward Rishton, Esq., of Anley, of good Lancashire descent. She died 1722. This Edmund Hornby left issue by Dorothy, his wife,

1. GEORGE.

2. George, in holy orders, rector of Whittington, died without issue.

3. Anne, wife of Edmund Cole, of Beaumont, near Lancaster, by whom she had a daughter, Dorothy, wife of Butler of Kirkland.

Edmund Hornby had other issue, who died young. The eldest son,

GEORGE HORNBY, Esq., of Poulton and Seale Hall, near Lancaster, married Susannah, daughter and heir of Edward Sherdley, of Kirkham, by Ellen, his wife, daughter and co-heir of John Veale, Esq., of Whinney Heyes, in Fylde, and Susannah

Rishton, his wife, and left issue two sons, Geoffrey, who died without issue, and

EDMUND HORNBY, Esq., of Poulton and Seale Hall, born October, 1728, married Margaret, second daughter of John Winkley, Esq., of Preston, by his wife, Elizabeth Starkie, of Hantroyde, co. Lancaster. By her (with three daughters, Margaret, died 1815; Susan, died 1799; and Dorothy, died young), he had issue, GEORGEY HORNBY, only son and heir, some time colonel of a regiment of Lancashire militia; he afterwards took orders and was rector of Winwick, Lancaster, 1782. He married, 25th April, 1772, Lucy, daughter of James Lord Strange, and sister of Edward, 12th Earl of Derby, and had issue seven sons and six daughters,

I. EDMUND, his heir.

II. James John, in holy orders, rector of Winwick, married, 1st July, 1818, youngest daughter and co-heir of Robert Vernon Atterton, Esq., of Atterton, by Harriet, his wife, daughter and co-heir of Peter Lee, Esq., of Lyme; and 2ndly, Catherine, daughter of — Boyle, Esq.; and died leaving issue.

III. Geoffrey, in holy orders, rector of Bury, Lancashire, married the Hon. Georgiana Byng, sister of the late Lord Torrington, and has issue.

IV. Edward Thomas Stanley, in holy orders, died unmarried.

V. PHILIP (Sir), K.C.B., of Little Green.

VI. George, in holy orders.

VII. Charles, Lieut.-col. Scots Fusilier Guards, now in holy orders.

VIII. Lucy, married to Rev. H. W. Champney, rector of Badsworth. IX. Charlotte, married June 30th, 1788, to Edward Lord Stanley, late Earl of Derby, and died in 1817.

X. Georgiana.

XI. Frances Susannah.

XII. Louisa.

XIII. Henrietta Elizabeth.

Mr. Hornby died July 31st, 1812, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

EDMUND HORNBY, Esq., of Dalton Hall, J.P. and D.L., high sheriff in 1828; born June 17th, 1773; married, August 22nd, 1796, Lady Charlotte Stanley, daughter of Edward, 12th Earl of Derby, and has one son,

Edmund George, late M.P. for Warrington, born 16th November, 1799, married January 30th, 1837, Sarah, daughter of Thomas Yates, Esq., of Irwell House, in Lancashire, first cousin to Sir Robert Peel, and has,

1. Elizabeth Sarah.

2. Lucy Francesca.

Arms.—Or, a chevron, between three bugle horns, sa.

Crest.—A bugle horn.

HOLME AND HOLMESCALES.

The area of this township is 1,616 acres. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 226; in 1811, 283; in 1821, 420; in 1831, 649; in 1841, 952; and in 1851, 1,154; who principally reside in the village of Holme.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor was part of the possession of Torsin, but subsequently came to the crown. It was granted by Richard I. to Gilbert, the seventh baron of Kendal, who granted it to Thomas, son of Gospatrick, to whose son, Patrick, it was confirmed by William de Lancaster. It came afterwards to the Tunsdals and Prestons, and in 1717 was conveyed, with other adjacent manors, to the family of Charteris, but has since been purchased by the Wilsons of Dallam Tower, the present owners. Holme Park was formerly three miles in circumference, and well stocked with deer. George E. Wilson, Esq., and the Hon. Mrs. Howard, are the principal landowners.

Holme is a large village on the Lancaster and Kendal canal, two miles north-by-west of Burton, and contains some well-built houses and cottages. The linen manufacture which formerly existed here has been discontinued for some time.

THE CHAPEL.

Holme chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a remarkably neat building, in the Early English style, situated in the village. It was erected by subscription in 1839, and consists of nave, chancel, and tower containing one bell. In 1845 it was endowed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners with £107 a year, and is a curacy in the patronage of the vicar of Burton. The living is now worth £120 a year. The registers commence in 1839.

INCUMBENTS.—John Wild, 1839; M. H. Maxwell, 1842; F. B. Asbley, 1844; Samuel Moon, 1845.

The parsonage is a neat commodious building, near the chapel.

The National School for boys and girls was erected by subscription in 1844, aided by a grant from the National Society. The average number of children in attendance is twenty-eight.

CHARITIES.

John Lucas's Charity for Bread.—John Lucas, by will, in 1793, left the interest of £60 for the purchase of bread, to be distributed amongst poor housekeepers of Holme.

John Lucas's Charity for poor Housekeepers.—The same John Lucas left the interest of £10 for the poor housekeepers of Holme.

Burrow's and Smallshaw's Charities.—Roland Burrow, by will, in 1794, left £10, the interest of which he directed should be divided among the poor of this township. Jacob Smallshaw also left £10 for the same purpose.

PRESTON PATRICK CHAPELRY.

PRESTON PATRICK is a large chapelry and township, containing the small hamlets of Gatebeck, Goose Green, Milhues, and Nook, with a number of dispersed dwellings extending from four to six miles north-by-east of Burton, on the east side of the river Belu.

The area of Preston Patrick is 3,580 acres; its rateable value £2,858 13s. 11d. The population in 1801 was 335; in 1811, 373; in 1821, 398; in 1831, 418; in 1841, 484; and in 1851, 514; who are principally engaged in agriculture; a few, however, are employed in a powder works, a bleach works, and a bobbin mill.

The manor of Preston Patrick received its name from Patricius de Culwen, ancestor of the Curwens of Workington, and grandson of Thomas, son of Gospatric, who gave lands and possessions to the abbey of Preston about the year 1119, which abbey was afterwards removed to Shap. After the dissolution of the monasteries, the lands here belonging to Shap Abbey came into the hands of the crown, and were granted by James I. to Philip Lord Wharton, in whose posterity they continued till the Duke of Wharton sold them to Robert Lowther, Esq., from whom they have descended to the Earl of Lonsdale, the present lord of the manor. The landowners are John Wakefield, Esq.; Christopher Wilson, Esq.; the heirs of the late William Thompson, Esq.; the Earl of Lonsdale; John Atkinson, Esq.; and several smaller proprietors. Preston Hall is now used as a farm-house.

THE CHAPEL.

Preston Patrick chapel, dedicated to St. Gregory, is a neat Gothic structure, rebuilt in 1852, and consists of nave, chancel, aisles, and tower. It stands on an eminence in the centre of what was formerly a park. There seems to have been a chapel in this township as early as the twelfth century; the present one was endowed with parochial privileges in 1781. The patronage is vested in the owners of property in the township charged with the chapel salary. In 1722 the living was augmented with an estate at Nook, purchased with £200 obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, and £240 given by James Graham, Esq., Sir John Mawson, and the inhabitants. It was also augmented in 1773, with fifteen acres of land at Houghgill, in Yorkshire, purchased with £200 of Queen Anne's Bounty, and £200 given by the Countess Dowager Gower; and in 1810, with rather more than two acres of land at Bentham, in Yorkshire, purchased with an additional £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty. The ancient salary of £3 6s. 8d. is paid out of the tenements in the chapelry. The entire income is now £77 7s. 8d. The chapel contains a few mural monuments.

ISCEMENTERS.—J. Tinkler, died 1790; Joseph Thexton, 1790; Samuel Scott, 1811; Jeffrey Hebden, 1829.

The parsonage, situated in the hamlet of Nook, is a plain modern building, erected in 1837, at a cost of about £400, of which £200 was obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, and the remainder by subscription.

Nook and Gatebeck are hamlets in this township. The principal residences are Lune Head, William Talbot, Esq.; Long Croft, the Misses Talbot; Moss Side, John Atkinson, Esq.; and Challen Hall, W. H. Wakefield, Esq.

This township is divided from that of Preston Richard by a small rivulet, on which are extensive powder works. There are also bleach-mills, two corn-mills, and a bobbin mill.

CHARITIES.

School.—Preston Patrick School was erected in 1780, and on the enclosure of the common in 1814 an allotment of twenty acres of land was assigned to it, which now produces about £10 a year, applied in part payment for the tuition of ten poor children. The average attendance is about thirty-five. There is another school at Gatebeck, partly supported by subscription.

Poor Parock.—There is a small piece of ground, containing about a rood, called the "Poor Parrock," the rents of which have always been distributed to the poor in charity. This land was sold to the canal company, and the interest amounts to £1 a year.

Elizabeth Wilson's Charity.—Elizabeth Wilson, by will, dated 1731, bequeathed the interest of £5 to be paid yearly to two old women in Preston Patrick, on Good Friday, for ever.

Lord Wharton's Charity.—The lordship of Preston Patrick is entitled, conjointly with the lordships of Langdale, Tebay, and Brethendale, in the parish of Orton, in this county, to thirty bibles, and a proportionate number of religious tracts. Four bibles annually are transmitted to the curate of Preston Patrick, and distributed by him amongst poor children resident there.

Story's Charity.—William Story, by will, in 1730, left £10 to poor householders of this township; and some unknown person gave £5 for the like purpose.

KIRKBY LONSDALE PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by those of Sadlergh and Kendal, on the west by Kendal and Burton, on the south by Burton and Lancashire, and on the east by Yorkshire. It comprises the greater portion of Lonsdale Ward, and is about ten miles in length and from four to six in breadth. It is a picturesque and highly interesting district, intersected by the Lune, which here assumes the character of a fine river, and flows through a fruitful and well-cultivated valley. It is divided into the chapelry and townships of Kirkby Lonsdale, Burton, Casterton, Firbank, Hutton Roof, Killington, Lupton, Mansergh, and Middleton, whose united area is 35,569 acres.

KIRKBY LONSDALE.

The area of this township is 3,098 acres, and its rateable value £7,001 4s. 3d. The population in 1801 was 1,283; in 1811, 1,368; in 1821, 1,643; in 1831, 1,686; in 1841, 1,929; and in 1851, 1,675; who reside principally in the town. Agriculture is the principal employment. The soil here is a fertile loam.

The manor of Kirkby Lonsdale was given by Ivo de Tailbois to the abbey of St. Mary at York, to which it continued annexed till the period of the dissolution, when it was taken possession of by the crown. In 1557 it was sold by Queen Mary to Thomas Carus, Esq., of the Middle Temple, and afterwards one of the justices of King's Bench, with the demesne, water mills, and several other lands and tenements in the neighbourhood, to hold of the crown, in capite, by the service of the fortieth part of a knight's fee. The Carus family sold this manor, in 1586, to William Thornburgh and Thomas Curwen, from whom it passed to the Prestons of Holker, who sold it to Sir John Lowther, ancestor of the present possessor, the Earl of Lonsdale, who has the tolls and control of the market and fair at Kirkby, and holds a court leet and view of frank pledge annually in October. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale; Rev. W. C. Wilson; A. B. Tomlinson, Esq.; Robert Abbott, Esq.; John Robinson, Esq.; Mr. Thompson, and the trustees of the late James Coates, Esq., with several smaller proprietors.

THE TOWN OF KIRKBY LONSDALE.

Kirkby Lonsdale (that is, the church town in the dale or valley of Lon or Lune) is on the right bank of the Lune, fifteen and a half miles north-east from Lancaster, and eleven and a half miles south-west from Kendal. The market-place is in the centre of the town; the streets are lighted and well paved. The houses are well built of freestone and roofed with slate. Until some few years ago a carpet and blanket manufactory was carried on here, and gave employment to a number of the inhabitants, many of whom were also employed in weaving coarse linen cloth, gingham, and calicoes. On the north side of the present vicarage is the remains of what is considered to have been a Roman camp or station. It has been surrounded on all sides except the east by a fosse, the Lune protecting the eastern side. The situation of this camp is much higher than that of the surrounding country. A Roman road passed through the adjoining township a short distance to the east. There is little doubt that the town dates its origin from the Anglo-Saxon times. Its name is Danish or Norwegian, given to it by the Northmen when they settled in this part of the country. A charter for a market and fair was granted in 1227. The market day is Thursday. The fair is held on the eve, day, and day after the feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin. Other fairs are held on Maunday Thursday, Ascension Day, and that day week, the 5th of October, and 21st of December. The bridge which crosses the Lune a short distance east of the town is very ancient, and for its curious workmanship is perhaps unique in the north of England. The date of its erection is not known, but it appears to have existed before 1275, as in that year a grant of pontage was made for its repair. This ancient structure is built of white freestone, so truly squared and well executed that the joints are scarcely perceptible. It consists of three strong and lofty semi-circular arches, turned and ribbed with the utmost exactness, about fifty-one feet span, supported by massive piers, and is, according to some, of Roman workmanship. At its east end is a stone bearing the date 1633. The mills in this neighbourhood are singularly situated on a steep declivity, and one above another, so as to receive in turns the fall of water from a brook, in its descent into the valley, from a small lake of twelve acres and a half, called Ferry Bank Tarn, and distant three miles north-north-west of the town.

THE CHURCH.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, stands in a spacious burial-ground near the edge of a steep bank rising from the river Lune, and is reached by a flight of forty-six steps. It is a large Norman structure, 120 feet in length by 102 in breadth, and is supposed to have been erected shortly after the Conquest, with the exception of a portion of the eastern end, which appears to have been added subsequently. Much of the ancient character of the church was destroyed in 1809, when the leaden roof, battlements, pinnacles, and clerestory were removed, and the church covered with blue slate. Its interior has fared no better than the exterior. The stalls and rood screen have been removed, and the delicate and elaborate workmanship of the capitals of the columns covered with plaster. The pulpit and reading-desk are of oak, beautifully carved; the former bears the date 1612. The tower, which was rebuilt from the first story in 1705, is large, square, and embattled, and contains six good bells, hung in 1826, when the old bells were sold. In Machel's time the porch at the east end of the church contained the remains of a finely executed alabaster monument, supposed to represent one of the Middletons and his lady. The church contains mural monuments to the memory of the late Wm. Thompson, Esq. (alderman of London and M.P. for the county of Westmoreland), William Sturgeon, the electrician, and many others. There is also a memorial window of stained glass, commemorating the late Mrs. Moore. In the year 1486 a chantry was founded in this church by William Middleton, who endowed it with seven marks a year out of lands in Garsdale, in Sedburgh parish. The church of Kirkby Lonsdale was given by Ivo de Tailbois along with the manor to St. Mary's Abbey at York. After the suppression of the monastic institutions, the impropriation and advowson of the vicarage were granted in 1553 by Queen Mary to Trinity College, Cambridge, to which they still belong. In 1535 the vicarage was valued at £20 15s. 5d.; it was subsequently certified to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty at £49 13s. 8d. It is now worth £550 a year, arising from vicarial tithes and glebe lands. The registers commence in 1530.

VICARS.—John Applegarth, 1556; John Williamson, 1591; — Adams, 1616; Thomas Adamson, 1617; Henry Park, —; Samuel Sackville, 1623; Charles Jones, 1637; Geo. Buchanan, 1640; George Bateman, 1640; Henry Hoyle, 1661; Hiram Waterhouse, 1670; John Briggs, 1676; Tobias Croft, 1730; Marwood Place, 1766; Joseph Sharp, 1793; John H. Fisher, 1831. We find that Edward Tatham and John Hollinson were also vicars for a short time.

The vicarage is a large commodious structure, situated on the north side of the church. It has been much improved by the present vicar.

The Wesleyans, Independents, and Sandemanians have each a place of worship here.

On the east of the churchyard is a small building called Abbot's Hall; there is also a place here called the Dean's Biggin, or Buidling, both of which are supposed to have belonged to the abbey of St. Mary, and to have been the seat of the rural deanery of Kirkby Lonsdale.

Kirkby Lonsdale Grammar School was founded in 1591 by letters patent of Queen Elizabeth, and put under the control of twenty-four feoffees, or governors, having previously been endowed with £100 by Mr. Godshalle, and £100 subscribed by the inhabitants, in consideration of which sums John Tennant granted to the governors a rent charge of £20 a year, out of the manors of Bedale and Scotton, in Yorkshire. Lady Curwen, heiress of the Carus family, gave the school site, and also certain parcels of land near the Biggins, which, with an allotment given at the enclosure, is now worth about £25 per annum. This sum, together with of £20, the rent charge is paid to the master. The endowment of the school was augmented by a legacy of £120, bequeathed by Henry Wilson in 1638, for the use of an usher, and also £400 secured on the tithes of Tarleton, for exhibitions for seven poor scholars, four of them from this school, and three from Kendal School, to Queen's College, Oxford, the said scholars to be natives of Cumberland or Westmoreland. The school is partially entitled to the benefit of three scholarships at Christ's College, Cambridge, founded by Thomas Wilson, by will, dated August 9th, 1626; and to three other scholarships at the same college, founded by the will of Thomas Otway, bishop of Ossory, who died in 1692. The governors or feoffees, are the vicar for the time being, and some of the magistrates of the neighbourhood. The school is lofty and spacious. There are seven boarders, twenty day scholars, and six foundation boys. The Rev. Thomas Croft, M.A., is head-master.

The National School is a handsome Elizabethan structure, erected in 1851, at a cost of £1,000, towards which a government grant of £455 was obtained, the remainder being defrayed by subscription. The site was given by the Rev. Carus Wilson; and the sum of £200 was raised towards an endowment fund, which is vested in railway debentures. There are separate schools for boys and girls, which are conducted by a master, mistress, and three pupil teachers.

Kirkby Lonsdale possesses a monthly paper, called the Kirkby Lonsdale Press, established in 1858. There is also a book club, containing about 6,000 volumes, which was established in 1794, and is supported by subscription.

The Town Hall was erected by a joint stock company in 1854, at a cost of £2,000. It is a large and handsome building; the lower portion serves as a market house, while the upper is used as a mechanics' institution, which was established in 1855, and comprises a news-room, reading and class-rooms, and a library of 1,000 volumes, with a spacious lecture-room, in which the meetings of the county court are held. Petty sessions for Lonsdale Ward are held every Thursday.

The Savings Bank occupies a commodious building in the market-place. It was established in 1818, and is open every Thursday.

CHARITIES.

Poor Stock, including Henry Wilson's and other Charities.—Henry Wilson, by will, dated 1638, bequeathed £350 to be bestowed on some rent charge or otherwise, and out of the yearly profit, to elect out of the said lordship two poor boys, each to have £10 for placing them apprentices in London; and also to one poor maid yearly chosen by his trustees to be placed out at London. He also bequeathed to his trustees £50 upon trust, that the same should be a stock for ever, and that the profits thereof should be bestowed upon twenty quarters of coals, or more, for the people dwelling within the lordship of Kirkby Lonsdale, on the feast of St. Andrew yearly. He also bequeathed to the trustees £100 upon trust, to bestow the same upon lands, or a rent charge; the yearly income thereof to be given at Christmas and Easter, by equal portions, to the poorest old men and women, and children within the town and lordship aforesaid. John Jagger, of London, in the year 1714, gave £50 for the use of the poor of this parish, the interest to be distributed on Christmas Day. The interest of the stock is now given away at Christmas and Easter, with the other charity money of the township.

Casterton Rent Charge.—By a deed-poll, dated July 30th, 1676, certain premises in Casterton, in this parish, called the Field Barn grounds, were conveyed to Edward Wilson, Esq., of Dallam Tower, in fee, except a rent charge of 40s., heretofore payable to the poor of Kirkby Lonsdale. This rent charge is regularly paid, and is given away with the other charity money as above described.

Borrett's Charity.—John Borrett, by will, dated 1738, left £5 a year to be distributed amongst twenty poor persons not in receipt of parish relief.

Redman's Gift.—Elizabeth Redman, by will, dated 1756, gave £50 to be put out at interest, and the produce to be applied in the purchase of bibles and "The Whole Duty of Man," which she directed should be distributed to poor boys of Kirkby Lonsdale township.

Preston's Charity.—Richard Preston, by will, in 1802, gave £100 to the churchwardens of Kirkby Lonsdale, to place out at interest, and apply the produce for the benefit and general use of the poor of the parish.

About half a mile north of the town is Underley Park, the elegant mansion of Mrs. Thompson, widow of the late William Thompson, Esq., M.P. for Westmoreland and alderman of London. It stands in a spacious park, and was formerly the property of the Nowells, a Lancashire family, one of whom, Arthur Nowell, Esq., rebuilt it in 1828, in the Gothic style prevalent in the reign of James I.

Luneville, the property of the Rev. William Carus, is pleasantly situated above the river, about a quarter of a mile east of the town. It was erected in 1815 by Roger Carus, Esq.

The other residences are Cressbrook, Humphrey A. Gregg, Esq.; Springfield, the Rev. Thomas Croft; Luneville, John Cartmell, Esq.; The Biggins, A. B. Tomlinson, Esq.

High Biggins, Low Biggins, Keartswick, and Tarnside are hamlets in this township.

LUPTON.

The area of this township is 3,439 acres, and its rateable value £2,859. In 1851 it contained 150 inhabitants; in 1811, 152; in 1821, 221; in 1831, 282; in 1841, 285; and in 1851, 269. The soil here is a fine fertile loam.

The manor of Lupton, called in Domesday Survey Lupetun, belonged to the barons of Kendal, and was held under them by the Redmans of Levens, until the reign of Henry VII. It came afterwards to the Bellinghams, Huttons, and Musgraves, but is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale. The landowners are Robert Lamplugh Gregg, Esq.; W. R. Gregg, Esq.; H. A. Gregg, Esq.; William G. Bell, Esq.; the trustees of the late William Thompson, Esq.; Edward Wilson, Esq.; R. H. Richardson, Esq.; and Mrs. Pickard.

Lupton Row, Lupton Smithy, and Cow Brow, are hamlets in this township, from two and a half to four miles west of Kirkby Lonsdale. There is a corn-mill on Lupton Beck.

Box Tree, the property of W. G. Bell, Esq., is a handsome house, with a square embattled tower.

BARBON CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry comprises only the township of Barbon, which includes the village of that name, and the hamlets of High and Low Beckfoot, with numerous dispersed residences.

The area of Barbon township is 4,204 acres, and its rateable value £2,320. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 242; in 1811, 254; in 1821, 348; in 1831, 318; in 1841, 315; and in 1851, 322; whose principal employment is agriculture. Kirkby Lonsdale and Kendal are the markets attended. A Roman road appears to have passed through this township. Some time ago a large stone, marked with a cross, and other emblems, was found in a field here; it now stands on the summit of a hill near to the spot where it was discovered.

Barbon and Mansergh are said to have been originally one manor, which was subsequently divided for convenience' sake, in consequence of their being situated on opposite sides of the river Lune. Be this as it may, they formed two manors when Domesday Survey was made. In that record it is stated that Tostig Earl of Northumberland held Barbon, or Bereburne, as it was then written. It appears to have afterwards come to a family bearing the local name, one of whom Robert de Bereburne, Kut., occurs as a witness to the grant of Skelsmergh by William de Lancaster to Robert de Leyburne. In the reign of Edward I. and Edward II. others of the name occur. In 1344 the manor of Barbon and divers lands in Middleton were conveyed to Roger Lassels, or Lascelles, and Eleanor his wife, but by whom does not appear in consequence of the illegible condition of the record. Mention is made only of two more members of this family in connection with Barbon, both of whom occur in the reign of Edward III. From this time we hear no more of the manor till 1580, in which year we find it held by the Vaughans, from whom it was purchased about the beginning of the following century by the Middletons, who sold it to the Shuttleworths, who have since continued its possessors; Sir John P. Kay Shuttleworth, Bart., being the present lord of the manor, besides whom Joseph Gibson, Esq., the executors of the late William Thompson, Esq., Trinity College, Cambridge, and others, are the landowners.

The village of Barbon is pleasantly situated on the east side of the Lune, three and a half miles north-by-east of Kirkby Lonsdale.

THE CHAPEL.

Barbon chapel is a plain structure, rebuilt in 1815, partly by subscription and partly by a rate levied on the inhabitants of the chapelry. Previous to 1738 the chapel salary was only £2 10s., but in that year it was augmented with £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty, and donations of the inhabitants, with which an estate was purchased at High Beck Foot. It has since received three lots of the same bounty, and several donations, with which three other estates have been purchased,—one at Over Kellet, in Lancashire, in 1758; and two at Kirkthwaite, in Dent, Yorkshire, in 1772 and 1808. The estate last mentioned is for the joint benefit of the curacies of Barbon and Old and New Hutton. The curate of Barbon has also one-third of the rent of Tarndale Close, purchased with £46 15s., of which £31 8s. 4d. was poor stock; and the interest of £210 in the Kirkby Lonsdale Savings Bank, obtained by the sale of land left by John Garnett in 1721, is equally divided between the curate and the schoolmaster. The living is in the patronage of the vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale, and worth £92 12s. 6d. a year, £10 of which is given by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The register of baptisms commences in 1813, that of marriages in 1839, and that of burials in 1848.

INCUMBENTS.—Harling Richardson was curate in 1813; P. J. Williams, 1830; John A. Addison, 1840; Benjamin Hopkins, 1842.

There is a small school attached to the chapel.

CHARITIES.

Garnett's Charity.—John Garnett, by will, dated March 15th, 1721, devised a close called Laddera, containing about five acres, to trustees, directing that one half the yearly rents should be given to the poor of Barbon, and the other half to the schoolmaster for teaching four poor children of the township, born in wedlock. The close above-mentioned was afterwards sold for £105, the interest of which is distributed as directed.

Tarndales.—In 1733 a close called Tarndales was purchased for £46 15s. 6d., of which £31 8s. 4d. belonged to the poor of Barbon, and the remaining £15 11s. 8d. to the curate. The rent of this land is divided between the poor and the incumbent of Barbon, in proportion to the sums named above.

Poor's Rent.—In 1741 a close called the Hole Close was purchased for £70, said to be the chapel or school money of Barbon. It now produces 9s. a year, which is given to the poor.

Margaret Hawden's Gift.—Margaret Hawden, in 1758, left £10 to the poor of this township. The interest is given away with the other money at Easter.

High and Low Beckfoot are hamlets in this township. Whelprigg, the residence of Joseph Gibson, Esq., is a handsome mansion in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1834 by the present owner. It is situated on a fine eminence about a mile north-east of Kirkby Lonsdale.

Gibson of Whelprigg.

This family is derived from

JAMES GIBSON, Esq., son of JOSEPH GIBSON, Esq., by Miss Glover, his wife, who married Mary Wilson, and had four sons and two daughters. Of the former,

WILLIAM GIBSON, married in 1763, MARGARET ROBINSON, of Ragnaden, and had with other issue, who died young.

1. JOSEPH GIBSON, Esq., of Whelprigg.

2. MARY, died in 1780.

3. MARGARET.

4. HENRIETTA, married to B. P. GIBSON, Esq., of Lancaster.

Mr. Gibson was succeeded by his son, JOSEPH GIBSON, Esq., of Whelprigg, J.P., born July 29th, 1805; married April 24th, 1841, Anne, third daughter of Reginald Remington, Esq., of Crowtrees, Melling, co. Lancaster, and has one daughter,

1. CATHERINE.

Assets.—W., three stories rising, 11 ft.

Cost.—A stock rising, 1 ft.

CASTERTON CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded by Lancashire, Barlton, and the river Lune, and contains the hamlets of High and Low Casterton, with a number of dispersed dwellings.

The area of the township is 4,230 acres, and its rateable value is £3,227 18s. 2d. It contained in 1801, 266 inhabitants; in 1811, 278; in 1821, 277; in 1831, 302; in 1841, 623; and in 1851, 576; whose chief employment is agriculture. A chapel is supposed to have formerly stood at a place called Chapel Head Close, near St. Columb's, to which saint it is probable the chapel was dedicated.

Casterton and Hutton Roof, though separated by the river, were originally one manor; but they have long been separate and distinct. The earliest recorded possessor of Casterton is Ingelram de Gynes, by cornage, wardship, and relief. In 1375, after the death of Joan de Coup-land, it was found by inquisition that she died seised of the manor of Casterton. It has since shared the fate of the Richmond Fee of the barony of Kendal, and is now held by the Earl of Lonsdale, beside whom, the Rev. W. C. Wilson; Joseph Gibson, Esq.; George E. Wilson, Esq.; the executors of the late Thomas Robinson, Esq.; the executors of the late Francis Pearson, Esq.; and others are the landowners.

The hamlets of High and Low Casterton are about a mile and a half north-north-east of Kirkby Lonsdale.

THE CHAPEL.

The chapel, a neat Gothic structure, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected by subscription in 1833, at a cost of £700, exclusive of the site, stone, and lime, which were given by the Rev. W. C. Wilson. It comprises nave and chancel, with lancet windows, those at the east end being partly stained. The sittings, 550 in number, are all free. At the west end of the chapel is a gallery, containing a fine-toned organ. The living, a curacy in the patronage of the vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale, is worth £80 a year.

INCUMBENTS.—William Carus Wilson, 1833; Henry Shepherd, 1856.

The parsonage is a neat structure, erected in 1837 at a cost of £850, defrayed by the Rev. W. C. Wilson, aided by subscriptions.

Here is a school for the education of the daughters of poor clergymen, instituted by the Rev. W. C. Wilson, in 1824, at Cowan Bridge,¹ but removed to this place in 1833; there is also a preparatory school for the younger girls. A school for training servants was instituted by the gentleman just named at Whittington, in 1837; it is now held here. There are at present (1859) 100 clergymen's daughters and teachers in the school, and twenty-six younger girls in the preparatory school.

Casterton National or Parochial School is under government inspection, and attended by about fifty children.

CHARITY.

Poor Land.—There are some lands in this township, the rents of which are applied to the use of the poor.

¹ See Mrs. Gaskell's "Life of Charlotte Brontë."

They produce about £11 a year, which is given away to poor persons half yearly, on St. Thomas' Day and Holy Thursday.

Casterton Hall, the seat and property of the Rev. Carus Wilson, is a fine mansion, situated on a gentle eminence about a mile east-by-north of Kirkby Lonsdale.

Casterton Old Hall, in which the Earl of Lonsdale holds his courts, has been partly rebuilt.

Norwood Cottage and the Grange are neat residences in this township.

FIRBANK CHAPELRY.

This chapelry, anciently called Frithblank, is a wild mountainous district, on the west side of the Lune, which here forms the boundary of Yorkshire.

The township of Firbank comprises an area of 3,017 acres, and its rateable value is £1,583 12s. 1d. In 1801 it contained 190 inhabitants; in 1811, 219; in 1821, 209; in 1831, 190; in 1841, 199; and in 1851, 233. Agriculture is the only employment.

Firbank and Killington were anciently one manor; its history will be found under Killington township. The tenants are all freehold, the manorial rights having been purchased from the mesne lords by the tenants, who therefore hold immediately of the crown as of the Marquis Fee of the barony of Kendal, by the yearly free rent of 6s. 8d.; this rent is now paid to the crown's lessee, the Earl of Lonsdale, besides whom, Lady le Fleming, Miss Upton, and the executors of the late William Thompson, Esq., are the landowners.

Firbank is about three miles west of Sedbergh, and ten miles north of Kirkby Lonsdale.

THE CHAPEL.

Firbank chapel is a small structure, rebuilt in 1742, when thirty additional sittings were added to the accommodation possessed by the old chapel. The windows are lancet-shaped, and there is a small turret with one bell. The chapel was endowed by Anthony Wood, with an estate in Lambrigg, together with the sum of £50, and has since received £800 of Queen Anne's Bounty, both of which sums have been laid out in the purchase of land at Firbank, Kentmere, Strickland Ketel, and Strickland Roger. The living, a curacy, in the patronage of the vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale, is now worth about £78 a year.

INCUMBENTS.—John Waistell, 1741; Christopher Mason, 1801; John Garnett, 1808; Dr. Robinson, 1845; William Clark, 1849.

The parsonage is a small old house much in need of rebuilding.

The school is attended by about twenty children.

CHARITIES.

Walker's Gift.—The poor of the township are entitled to 10s. yearly, by the will of William Walker. (See New Hutton, Kendal parish.) This sum is distributed about May Day to poor persons not receiving parochial relief.

Poor Stock.—There is also belonging to this township, a poor stock of £37, the interest of which is given away with the above charity.

HUTTON ROOF CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises a romantic district bordering upon Lancashire and Farleton Knot, and possesses several limestone, blueflag, and millstone quarries, most of which are on Hutton Roof Crag.

The area of Hutton Roof is 2,635 acres; its rateable value is £2,174 7s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 179; in 1811, 231; in 1821, 257; in 1831, 351; in 1841, 319; and in 1851, 343; who are engaged in agriculture, and at the stone quarries.

Hutton Roof and Casterton were originally one manor, but have been separate since the commencement of authentic records. The first mention of Hutton Roof occurs in 1351, in which year it was held of William de Coucy by John de Hutton Roof, by the service of cornage, wardship, and relief. In 1375 it was found by inquisition that Hugh de Moresby then held Hutton Roof of Joan de Coupland, by homage, fealty, and the service of 8s. a year; and that Simon de Heversham held of her divers tenements there, of the yearly rent of 3s. 4d. In Hutton Roof there was anciently a park (and there is at present a house known as Park House), which in the reign of Henry VI. belonged to Judge Carus. It was afterwards purchased by the Bellinghams and Prestons, and finally by Colonel Francis Charteris, and is now the property of W. E. Wilson, Esq. There is one field of about six acres, the manorial rights of which belong to the Earl of Lonsdale, and which pays heriots at the death of the lord or change of tenant. With this exception the township is free, paying a quit rent to the Earl of Lonsdale, the lessee of the crown. The landowners are the Earl of Lonsdale; William R. Gregg, Esq.; Humphrey A. Gregg, Esq.; John Brailley, Esq.; Robert Burrow, Esq.; the executors of the late William Thompson, Esq.; and others. A portion of this township was held in Catholic times by the abbey of St. Mary at York, to which it was given by Ivo de Tailbois. The commons were enclosed in 1815.

This township comprises the village of Hutton Roof, and a hamlet called Newbiggin, with several scattered houses, from two and a half to four miles west-by-south of Kirkby Lonsdale.

THE CHAPEL.

The chapel is of very ancient foundation, and its original income was twelve nobles. The present small chapel, built in 1757, is endowed with three estates, purchased by Queen Anne's Bounty and benefactors.

The benefice, a curacy, in the patronage of the vicar of the parish, is now worth £85 a year. The registers commence in 1796.

Incumbents.—William S. Laidwick, 1796; John Johnson, 1799; J. H. F. Kestel, 1842; Richard Holman, 1847; William Norris Pempier, 1858.

The parsonage is a commodious structure, erected in 1849, at a cost of £600, defrayed by subscription and a grant from Queen Anne's Bounty.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in this township.

There is a school, erected in 1852 by the late incumbent; it is attended by about thirty-five children.

CHURCHES.

School.—There is a school at Hutton Roof, which in 1773 was endowed by Thomas Chamney with £100. This endowment has been lost, and the only income of the school is £9 a year from the slate quarries.

Poor's Land.—There is a field in the township, containing about an acre of land, the rent of which is given to the poor.

KILLINGTON CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises a mountainous district, including the hamlets of Killington Hall, Beekside, Fellside, and Hallbeck, with a number of detached houses, from five to seven miles north of Kirkby Lonsdale.

Killington contains 4,875 acres, and its rateable value is £2,100 6s. 3d. In 1801 it contained 314 inhabitants; in 1811, 252; in 1821, 335; in 1831, 302; in 1841, 301; and in 1851, 275.

Killington and Firbank form one manor, and, in ancient times, a chapelry. The first possessor of the manor on record is William de Pickering, who held it in the reign of Henry III., under Peter de Brus, rendering for the same, yearly, a pair of gilt spurs, or sixpence, at the feast of Pentecost, and doing service for the twentieth part of one knight's fee. Thomas de Pickering, son of William, in 1303 obtained a grant of free warren in his estates at Killington and Milthope, from Edward I. James Pickering, another of this family, was knight of the shire for Westmoreland in 1362 and 1365; and in the reign of Richard II. the same county was twice represented by Sir James Pickering, Knt. Sir Christopher Pickering, the last of his name and family who held Killington, had an only daughter, Anne, who brought the manor in marriage to John Vaughan, Esq., whose son, Francis Vaughan, sold it to the tenants, who are therefore free, paying a quit rent of 6s. 8d. a year to the Earl of Lonsdale, the lessee of the crown. The landowners are George E. Wilson, Esq.; Miss Upton; the executors of the late William Thompson, Esq., and a number of small proprietors. Killington Hall, the old manor-house, has long served as a farmstead.

THE CHAPEL.

Killington chapel is an old building, and has a small bell turret containing two bells. It contains mural monuments to the memory of members of the Morland and Cooke families, and also to the Rev. J. Goodier. As above stated, this township was anciently included in the chapelry of Firbank; but about 1585, on the petition of the inhabitants of both townships to the bishop, they obtained a license to have a curate and chapel, with parochial privileges. The living, a curacy, in the patronage of the vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale, is worth £80 7s. 9d. a year, arising from £13 17s. ancient salary, 20s. yearly out of Lord's Holme, 20s. yearly out of Bendrigg estate in Old Hutton, left by William Walker; an estate in Killington, purchased with £300 of Queen Anne's Bounty, and the chapel stock; an estate in Dent, purchased in 1754 with £200 more of the same bounty, and £200 left by Dr. Stratford; and the interest of £55, viz., £40 left by Thomas Hebblethwaite, £10 by Hugh Bowman, and £5 by Jacob Morland, Esq. The registers commence in 1619.

INCUMBENTS.—William Slater, 1730; William Pearson, 1779; William Moore, 1801; Robert Wilkinson, 1844.

Killington School was founded in 1670, and possesses an endowment of £9 4s. 6d. a year, arising from an ancient stock of £82, of which £40 was given by Thomas Hebblethwaite, Esq.; £20 by Thomas Sharp, and £5 by Jacob Morland, Esq. There is also a field called Moss Butts, the rent of which is appropriated to the school. On the enclosure of Killington Common an allotment was made to the school, in right of Moss Butts, to which the landowners added about twelve acres more. The school is attended by about twenty children.

CHARITIES.

Hebblethwaite's Charity.—There is in Firbank an estate, consisting of about fifteen acres, belonging to the poor of Killington.

Poor House Field.—There is also another estate, situate in Killington, called the Poor House Field, the rent of which is always given to the poor.

Walker's Gift.—The poor of this township are entitled to the sum of £2 annually, by the will of William Walker; for the particulars of which see our account of New Hutton, in the parish of Kendal.

Poor Stock, &c.—There are three sums of £11 15s., £10, and £18 15s. 6d. respectively, belonging to the poor of this township, the interest of which is added to William Walker's Charity, and distributed with it at Candlemas, to poor persons not receiving parish relief.

Richardson's Gift.—Robert Richardson, in 1810, gave £20 to be placed out at interest, and the produce given annually to six poor householders.

MANSERGH CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is a wild district containing about twenty scattered dwellings and the village of Old Town, about three miles north-by-west of Kirkby Lonsdale.

The township comprises an area of 2,568 acres; its rateable value is £2,131. In 1801 it contained 134 inhabitants; in 1811, 188; in 1821, 157; in 1831, 232; in 1841, 232; and in 1851, 216; who are chiefly engaged in agriculture.

Mansergh and Barbon formed originally one manor; but were deemed separate as early as the Domesday Survey, when Mansergh was held by Torfin. It subsequently became the property of a family bearing the local name; one of whom, Thomas de Mansergh, purchased lands in Barbon in 1318. In 1383 John de Mansergh represented Westmoreland in parliament. During this time Rigmaden Hall, supposed to have been the ancient manor-house, appears to have been held by the family of De Rigmaden, which has been assumed, and not without reason, to be the same family as the De Mansergh; who, probably, assumed the name of their residence. After the Rigmadens, this place became the property of the Warda, who held it for a considerable period, and had possessions also in Killington, Firbank, and other places. The last of this family, Henry Ward, sold the same to Mr. Thomas Godsvalve, who occurs as lord of the manor in 1664. He was succeeded in 1733, by his son, Thomas Godsvalve, who died in 1750, when the estates passed to his daughter, the wife of the Rev. Thomas Maudesley. In 1781 Miss Mary Wilkinson and Mrs. Margaret Robinson were joint possessors of the manor. In 1788 John Satterthwaite occurs as lord of the manor. It was sold by his devisees in trust, in the year 1825, to the late Christopher Wilson, Esq., and by him was devised, in 1845, to Edward Wilson, Esq., the present lord. After the purchase of the manor by the late Edward Wilson, he made Rigmaden his residence; and the present owner has resided there since the decease of his father. The landowners are Edward Wilson, Esq.; Robert Baynes Armstrong, Esq.; Mrs. Thompson; John Addison, Esq., and several small proprietors. Courts are held when required.

Rigmaden, the seat of the lord of the manor, is a handsome mansion, delightfully situated on an eminence, four miles north of Kirkby Lonsdale, and commands extensive prospects of the vale of the Lune. It was erected in 1825, by the late Christopher Wilson, and contains some fine paintings.

THE CHAPEL.

Mansergh chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was erected in 1726, by Jacob Dawson, on his estate at Nether Hall, the inhabitants paying for their seats, and subscribing with Mr. Dawson £120, to which Oliver Martin added £80; and the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty £200. The latter afterwards made two more grants of £200 each; Lady Gower, £100; and the curate, in 1777, £100. These sums, amounting to £1,000, were laid out in the purchase of estates at Old Hutton, Dent, and Casterton. The living is in the patronage of the vicar of the parish, and is now worth about £85 a year.

MIDDLETON CHAPELRY.

THIS chapelry is bounded on the north and north-west by the river Rother, which divides it from Yorkshire, on the west by the Lune, on the south by the township of Barbon, and on the east by Yorkshire. It contains a number of detached houses, and the small hamlet of Middleton Head, seven miles north-by-east of Kirkby Lonsdale, and three and a half miles south-west of Sedburgh.

The area of Middleton is 7,503 acres; its rateable value £3,507. The population in 1801 was 303; in 1811, 293; in 1821, 322; in 1831, 286; in 1841, 275; and in 1851, 275; who are principally engaged in agriculture. On the west side of Middleton Hall a small tumulus is visible; there is another in a field on the east side, and a large one at a place called Fellside, near where the old Roman road passes through the township.

The manor of Middleton is part of the ancient barony of Kendal, and seems to have been given, with divers other possessions, by Ketel, third baron of Kendal, to his son Orme, father of Gospatric. Orme subsequently exchanged this manor with his cousin, William de Lancaster, for the manors of Workington and Lamplugh, in Cumberland, reserving to himself and his heirs, the homage of Middleton, and a quit-rent of 6d. yearly, or a pair of gilt spurs. Middleton was subsequently granted to the Prestons, who, in their turn, sub-granted it to others, amongst whom the Kennet family occurs. Whether this family of Kennet afterwards assumed the name of Middleton or not, we are not informed, but shortly afterwards we find the Middletons holding the manor, and it continued in their possession for no less than ten generations, and then ended in two daughters. In the reign of James I. John Middleton, Esq., enfranchised the tenants, so that the manor is now held under the Earl of Lonsdale, as lessee of the crown, by the payment of a small quit-rent. The landowners are William Moore, Esq.; Mrs. Upton; Joseph Gibson, Esq.; Thomas Fawcett, Esq.; Lady le Fleming; Messrs. Gibson and Jenkinson, and others. Middleton Hall, the ancient manor-house, and a building of great strength, now serves as a farmstead.

INFORMANTS.—Wm. Sedgwick; F. Gerrill; J. R. Wadson.

The school, which stands near the chapel, was erected in 1839, at the sole expense of the late Mr. Wilson, who also contributed £20 a year to the master's salary, a payment which is still continued by his son.

James Moore's Gift.—The only charity in this township is five shillings a year, left by James Moore, for the poor of the township.

Grimeshill, the residence and property of William Moore, Esq., stands in a pleasant situation, on the eastern bank of the Lune, and commands beautiful views of the vale and surrounding country.

Floor of Grimeshill.

The family is derived from

WILLIAM MARY, Esq., of Grimeshill, J.P., and D.L., colonel of the Westmoreland Militia, born October 1st, 1754, son of John Moore, Esq., of Grimeshill, J.P., colonel of the Westmoreland Militia, by Anne, his wife, daughter of William Dickenson, Esq., of Archolme; was grandson of Giles Moore, Esq., D.L., (the son of John Moore, of Grimeshill, who died 1701) by Mary, his wife, second daughter and co-heir of JOHN MIDDLETON, Esq., the last male descendant of the MIDDLETONS OF MIDDLETON HALL. He married June 10th, 1779, Mary, daughter of William Palmer, Esq., of Whitehaven, and by her, who died June 3rd, 1811, left without other issue, all of whom died without issue) a son and heir, JOHN, Lieut.-colonel of the Westmoreland Local Militia, born February 10th, 1781; married, November 4th, 1807, Eliza, daughter of Richard Guthrie, Esq., of Kintyre House, and died during the lifetime of his father, leaving issue.

1. WILLIAM, succeeded to his grandfather.

1. Mary, married, September 5th, 1883, the Rev. William Lister Isaac, of Pirton and Croome, Worcestershire, and has issue.

Colonel Moore died January 22nd, 1832, aged 77, and was succeeded by his grandson.

WILLIAM MOORE, Esq., of Grimeshill, J.P., born May 19th, 1809; married May 9th, 1833, Elizabeth, second daughter of Thomas Fawcett, Esq., of Gate House, Dent, Yorkshire, and had issue.

1. WILLIAM MILDENHALL, born May 16th, 1834, captain 6th Royal Lancashire Militia, late lieutenant 15th Foot.

11 John Hebbelmann, born July 5th, 1886, lieutenant H.E.I.C.S., Madras.

III. Thomas George Carus, an officer in the army, born August 6th, 1858.

1. Eliza Mary Charlotte.

Mr. Moore served the office of high-sheriff of the county in 1850.

Arms.—Quarterly: first and fourth, or, on a chev. poan, beneath three Moors' heads in profile, couped at the neck, ppr., wreathed about the temples, arg. and sa., a pheon of the field, for Moore; second and third, gu., a fesse, between three mullets in chief, and as many crosses crosslet in base, arg., for Cragg.

Crest.—A swan, wings elevated, arg., charged on the breast with a pheon, sa., in front of blurs, ppr.

Motto.—Animus regis.

THE CHAPEL.

Middleton chapel, dedicated to the Holy Ghost, was rebuilt in 1813, on the site of a previous chapel, which was erected in 1634, on a piece of land given for that purpose by Dr. Bainbridge, who also gave forty shillings towards its erection, a considerable sum in those days. In 1635 it was consecrated, in 1671 made parochial, and in 1712 the burial ground was enlarged by land given by Giles Moore, Esq. The present edifice is a plain unpretending structure, capable of accommodating about 120 persons. A mural tablet commemorates Anne, wife of John Moore, Esq., of Grimeshill, who died in 1772. The curacy is in the gift of the vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale. It is endowed with two small estates in Middleton, and one in Garside, purchased with £106 ancient chapel stock; £600 of Queen Anne's Bounty, given in 1750, 1756, and 1791; £100 left by Dr. Stratford, in 1756; £100 left by Mrs. Pyncombe; and £100 given by a late curate; and is now worth £116 per annum.

INCUMBENTS.—William Garnett, 1724; John Knipe, 1784; John A. Addison, 1838; J. H. Abbott, 1840.

A new parsonage is now (1859) in course of erection.

CHARITIES.

The School.—There is a school near the chapel, which possesses an endowment of £8 a year, arising from one-third of the interest of £60 given by John Moore; the interest of £10 given by Giles Moore, of Borwens, in 1762; and the interest of £11 secured upon the tolls of the Sedbergh turnpike road.

John Moore's Charity.—John Moore, of Grimeshill, nearly two centuries ago, gave £60, the interest of which he directed should be divided yearly at Christmas and Easter, between the curate, schoolmaster, and poor of Middleton.

Bainbridge's Gift.—John Bainbridge gave £10, the interest to be yearly applied to buy Bibles and Common Prayer Books to be given to the poor children of this chapelry.

Baylie's Gift.—John Baylie, in 1712, left a field in Middleton, called Long Barrows, to the poor of Middleton, and directed that the rent should be divided at Christmas and Easter.

Jeffery Hawden's Gift.—Jeffery Hawden, in 1721, gave £10, the interest thereof to be given yearly to poor widows of the township.

Poors' Land.—This is a part of the field called Carradice Field, or Nichol Field; the rent has always been applied to the poor.

John Hawden's Gift.—John Hawden, brother of Jeffery Hawden, in 1747, gave £10, the interest to be distributed to the poor on Good Friday, in bread.

Margaret Hawden's Gift.—Margaret Hawden, widow of John Hawden, gave £10, the interest to be laid out about Whitsuntide in clothes for some poor children of the township, who should be most in need.

Giles Moore's Gift.—Giles Moore, of Borwens, in 1762, gave £20, the interest of which he directed should be distributed yearly to poor householders. He also gave £10, the interest to be applied towards placing poor children of Middleton apprentices.

Besides Grimeshill and Middleton Hall, this township comprises Hawkin Hall, built by Dr. Bainbridge in the reign of Charles I.; Beckside, in which was born Sir John Otway; and Abbey, a building belonging to Cockersand Abbey. These are now farm-houses.

INDEX OF PLACES.

[illegible]

Helsington	Page 766.	Kelso	Page 241.	Langton	Page 732.	Monk Hill	Page 348.
Helson	776.	Kelsick	246.	Lange Dale	765.	Monkhouse Hill	260.
Hensingham	137.	Kelton	140.	Langda	764.	Monsard	299.
Hendley	167.	Kelthick	765.	Laversale	760.	Mossley	419.
Heron Style	884.	Kendal	768.	Lazby	767.	Mossy	2.
Hesket in the Forest	756.	Kendmere	863.	Layth Ward	761.	Mosdale, or Mosedale	810.
Hesket Newmarket	225.	Kenset Barony	841.	Lazby	761.	Mosdale	325.
Hesket	235.	Kirkstall Ward	246.	Levens	763.	Mosser	315.
Hesket, Upper and Nether	736.	Keswick	769.	Levington Barony	683.	Mosses Hill	316.
Hesket, North	366.	Killington	865.	Lockholme	764.	Mosser, Low	316.
Hesket, Nether	368.	Killington Hall	767.	Longholme	760.	Mossy, or Mossy, Hall	736.
Hewthorn	868.	Kilnsey	493.	Longmarton	756.	Mossy, Low	736.
Hewthorn	824.	Kilnwater	688.	Longport	763.	Mumps Hall	673.
Hewthwaite	10.	Kings Marnon	863.	Longdales	508.	Muncester, or Muncaster	481.
High Beggs	883.	Kirk's Mosdale	887.	Long St. Hall	684.	Muncester	551.
High Hol	80.	Kirby Thore	759.	Longston	736.	Murrah	544.
High Street	3, 40, 51.	Kirby Stephen	741.	Lowda Quarter	732.	Murton	402.
High Crosby	1.	Kirkstall	151.	Lowda	732.	Murton (West)	723.
High Green	880.	Kirk's Quarter	87.	Lowwood	228.	Muriwaite	768.
High Head	166.	Kirk's Quarter	570.	Lowtham	236.	Musgrave, Great	758.
High Hill	339.	Kirk-Andrews-upon-Ek	884.	Lund	402.	Musgrave, Little	748.
High Stables	366.	Kirk-Andrews-upon-Eden	159.	Lupton	402.	Nately	735.
High Stables	366.	Kirkcubbin	733.	Magna (Carveran)	3.	Nately	735.
Hilton	723.	Kirkcubbin	733.	Magna, Wray	3.	Nately	692.
Hilbeck	723.	Kirkcubbin	733.	Malay (see Langrigg and	732.	Nately	692.
Hincaster	833.	Kirkcubbin	733.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Hol	724.	Kirkcubbin	733.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Holborn Hill	407.	Kirkland	367.	Man, Isle of	20.	Nately	692.
Holme and Holmescales	885.	Kirkland	143.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Holme Low	238.	Kirkland	769.	Man, Isle of	20.	Nately	692.
Holme East Waver	236.	Kirkland	806.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Holme St. Cuthbert's	235.	Kirkland and Blencarn	506.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Holy Trinity, Carlisle, Ec-	145.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Dissected District	145.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Holme, Caltrium	326.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Holme, Caltrium	326.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Holme Head	148.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Holmes	698.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Holme Abbey	229.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Horne	641.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Houghton	183.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Howrigg	218.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Howrigg	688.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Howrigg	725.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Howbound	518.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
How	878.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
How Hill	518.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
How	784.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Howton	784.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Hudson	803.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Hudon	803.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Huntingdon	13.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Hunsdon and Winkill	503.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Hutton John	547.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Hutton Roof	549.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.
Hutton Roof	549.	Kirkhouse	675.	Malden	732.	Nately	692.</

	Page		Page		Page
Westward	202.	Whinnow	259.	Winder	484.
Wessoe	554.	Whitham	495.	Wincles	483.
Wetheral	188.	Whitfield	298.	Winstall	503.
Wetheral	178.	Whitbeck	197.	Winster	541.
Wetsledale	810.	Whitby	152.	Winderwath	790.
Whale	799.	Whitby	255.	Windermere	874.
Whiston	717.	Whitby Loos	391.	Winton	748.
Whitton	19.	Whitby	392.	Witherslack	794.
Whitby Castle	5.	Whitby	393.	Witherslack	821.
Whitehaven	866.	Wiggobby	175.	Widdowdale	572.
Whitby	446.	Whitby	394.	Woodside	789.
Whittingham	104.	Whitby	395.	Woodthorpe	186.
Whitmoor	872.	Widder	192.	Woodhouses	176.
Whinnah	402.	Winder	782.	Woodhouses	831.

INDEX OF FAMILIES.

	Page		Page		Page
Aglinby, of Nunbury	566.	Gibson, of Whelprigg	891.	Marshall, of Patterdale	782.
Askew, of Glenridding	783.	Gillbanks, of Whitefield	246.	Marshall family	341.
Atkinson, of Rampsbeck and Merland	809.	Gillsland, Lords of	657.	Macchell, of Crackenthorpe	722.
		Graham, of Edmond Castle	878.	Moore, of Grimeshill	895.
		Graham, of Ketherby	638.	Musgrave, of Musgrave, Hartley, and
		Greystoke, Lords of	539.	Lidhall	534.
Darvis, of Laming Hall	217.
Blamire, of Thackwood and the Oaks	521.	Harrison, of Winscales and Stainburn	482.	Parker, of Patteril Green	561.
Blencowe, of Blencow	545.	Hartley, of Gillfoot	389.	Penningtons, of Muncaster	400.
Blankinson, of Kilbeck	733.	Hasell, of Dalemain	539.	Ponsonby, of Ponsonby and Hale	392.
Boyville, lords of Millom	404.	Helbeck, of Hilbeck	733.	Pkyringes, of Moresby	417.
Bradyall family	166.	Hodgson, of Houghton House	184.
Brisco, of Crofton	253.	Hopes, of Brampton Crofts	757.	Richmond, of Catterlen	583.
Brougham family	786.	Hornby, of Dalton Hall	884.	Robertson-Walker, of Gilgarran	376.
Browne, of Tallaunt	295.	Hoskins, of Higham	311.	Rothery, of Littlethorpe & Greta Hall	345.
		Howard, of Corby	544.	Roughsedge, of Foxghyll	829.
		Howard, of Hutton Hall	541.
Carleton, of Carleton	591.	Hudleston, of Hutton John	298.	Salkeld family	202.
Carlisle family	608.	Hudleston, lords of Millom	404.	Salmond, of Waterfoot	530.
Christian, of Unerigg	357.	Hutton, of Overthwaite	819.	Senhouse, of Nether Hall	326.
Cliffords	719.			Skelton, of Papcastle	293.
Crackenhorpe, of Newbiggin	759.			Spedding, of Summergrove	438.
Cutwens, of Workington	422.			Stanley, of Dalegarth and Ponsonby	423.
				Stanthorpe, of Stanthorpe	861.
Dacre family	524.
Dacres, barons of Greystoke	540.	James, of Barrock and West Auckland	561.	Patterson	712.
Denton, of Warnell	240.
Derwentwater family	339.	Kendal Barony, Lords of	811.	Vane, of Hutton Hall	563.
Dixon, of Knolls	189.			Vaux, of Catterlen	582.
Dykes, of Dykesfield, &c.	283.	Lamplugh, of Lamplugh	400.	Veteriponts	709.
		Lawsons, of Brayton	206.
Egremont, Lords of	381.	Lewthwaite, of Broadgate	409.	Warwick, of Warwick	187.
		Lowther family	796.	Watson, of Calgarth Park	879.
Featherstonhaugh, of Kirkcubald	573.	Lutwidge, of Helmsdale	598.	Watts, of Hawkesdale	164.
Featherstonhaugh, of Stafield	573.			Westmoreland Barony, Lords of	709.
Fenton, of Casterigg	347.	Monsey family	413.	Whartons, of Wharton	747.
Ferguson, of Harker Lodge	178.	Mounsey, of Castletown	177.	Whiston, of Ballan Tower	840.
Fleming, of Rydal	826.	Musgrave, of Hayton	267.
Fletcher, of Clea Hall	267.
Fletcher, of Cockerhmouth and Hutton	562.
Fletchers, of Moresby	418.

APPENDIX.

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS.

Page 78.

CUMBERLAND IRON ORE AND COAL.

The following statistics of coal and iron ore produced in and shipped from Whitehaven and neighbouring ports during the year 1858, are taken from the Mineral Statistics of Great Britain and Ireland (just published), by Robert Hunt, Esq., F.R.S., Keeper of Mining Records, and printed by order of the lords commissioners of Her Majesty's treasury:—

HEMATITE IRON MINES, NEAR WHITEHAVEN, IN 1858.

Names of Mines.	Names of Owners.
Agnes Pit	Fletcher, Miller, and Co.
Birks	H. Attwood and Son.
Bigrigg Moor, &c. .. .	S. and J. Lindow.
Bigrigg	A. Hill.
Bigrigg	Wilson, Peile, and Co.
Crosgarth	A. Hill.
Cleator	T. Ainsworth and Co.
Eskett	R. Barker.
Eskett	D. and J. H. Robinson,
	Barker, and W. Thoburn.
Friarington Parks .. .	Do. do.
High House	S. W. Smith and Co.
Jack Trees	S. and J. Lindow.
Knockmorton	Thomas Carmichael.
Langborne	Lord Lonsdale.
Parkside	Fisher, Dees, Fletcher, and Musgrave.
Todholes	John Stirling,
Woodend	H. Attwood and Son.
Salter	Nicholson and Co.
Yatehouse	Fletcher, Miller, and Co.

566,107 tons of Hematite were produced from those mines.

HEMATITE IRON ORE SENT FROM THE WHITEHAVEN DISTRICT IN THE YEAR 1858.

Quantity shipped at Whitehaven and at Workington..	Tons.	C.	s.	d.
Quantity sent from Whitehaven out of the district..	55,919	31,372	0	0
Quantity used at Iron Works at Cleator Moor, Workington, &c.	67,248	86,986	8	0
Total of the Whitehaven district.	331,544	182,359	4	0
Alston Moor—Brown Hematite	17,094	1,129	2	0
	348,638	183,478	0	0

THE QUANTITY OF COAL PRODUCED AND SHIPPED IN CUMBERLAND FOR 1859.

	Tons.
Shipped from Maryport .. .	300,229
Shipped from Workington .. .	137,733
Shipped from Harrington .. .	2,005
Shipped from Whitehaven .. .	187,020
Total .. .	626,987
Coals for land sent by Railway—
Coals used at iron furnaces .. .	78,450
Coals used at collieries and iron mines .. .	3,700
Coals for local consumption at manufactories in principal towns .. .	215,000
Total produce for Cumberland ..	920,137

THE ROMAN REMAINS RECENTLY DISCOVERED AT CARLISLE.

In February of the present year, 1860, a large stone was discovered while making the excavations for the new premises for the Carlisle Journal, English-street, Carlisle. The slab is of a large size, 5 feet 3 inches long and a foot thick. Unfortunately the upper portion is gone. The stone has suffered from that vengeance, on the part of the Caledonians, on the occasion of a successful onslaught, which so many of the relics of Rome in these parts bear marks of. That part of the inscription, which no doubt told of the occasion of its being cut, is lost; but there can be little doubt that it was to commemorate the erection of some building of importance, probably a temple. The names of the chief officials engaged in the work are also lost, with the exception of the fragments of four letters. Notwithstanding those ravages the stone is of great value, and that part of the inscription that is left gives us information which we did not possess before.

The inscription is thus read by Dr. Bruce:—

LVCA[NUS]
 PRÆF[ECTUS] ALAE AVGVSTAE
 PETRINAE TOR[QUAT]E M[ILITARI]S CIVIVM ROMANORVM
 DE DEDICAVIT[O] (DE DEDICAVIT).

(This temple) was dedicated to —, by Lucanus (?) the Prefect of the Petriana Cavalry, surnamed the Augustan, entitled to wear the torque, consisting of a thousand men, all Roman citizens. The notices which we have previously had of the Ala Petriana have been very scanty. Its name occurs on the Rivingal rescript, along with other troops then in Britain, under the charge of Aulus Platorius Nepos. This rescript belongs to the eighth tribuneship of Hadrian, answering to A.D. 124. In Camden's day a stone—which was lost before Horsley's time—had an inscription, which has been thus read by Horsley:—

GADVNVS
VIRIVS, TRIBVNI
IN[TER]VENI[ENT]IS ALI[QU]I[BUS] COH[ORT]IB[US]
MILITIB[US]
E[RE]GIVNTVM TROPHAEVM

Ulpian Trajanus Martius, a veteran of the Petriana cavalry, caused this to be erected to (the memory of) Gadunus. This stone was found at Old Penrith. Last summer, a carving upon the side of an old limestone quarry at Banksburn, near Lancroost, was discovered, which also mentions the Ala Petriana. The inscription may be read:—

JVNIVS BRATVS
DECVRIO ALI[QU]I[BUS] COH[ORT]IB[US]

Junius Bratus, a decurion (commander of ten men) of the Petriana cavalry

Lastly, we have in the Notitia list, after the mention of the Tribune of the first Ælian Cohort of Dacians at Amboglanna, the following entry:—

TROPHAEVM ALI[QU]I[BUS] COH[ORT]IB[US]

From this circumstance it has been inferred that Walton House, the station next west from Amboglanna, is the Petriana of the Notitia. Unfortunately we have met with no stony record of the Ala Petriana at Walton House, though we have three of the Second Cohort of the Tungri, and one of the Fourth Cohort of the Gauls. By comparing the stones found at the various stations with the Notitia list, the names of the stations on the Wall between Wallsend and Birdoswald have been ascertained with certainty; westward of this, all is involved in comparative doubt. Had this stone been found at Walton House it would have gone far to confirm the reasonings of antiquaries that this was Petriana. In all probability this ala had not then taken up its position upon the Wall. The Wall at the time this slab was cut was probably only in the process of erection. The letters are clearly cut and well formed; no ligatures are introduced; even the letters composing the dipthongs are not tied together. The style of the lettering indicates an early date, probably not later than the Rivingal rescript in the time of Hadrian. If, as seems probable from the size and character of the slab, it was attached to a building erected by the Prefect of the Ala, we may infer that this body of troops were at this time resident in Roman Carlisle. Had the inscription occurred on an altar, it might have been made when they were only resting there for a brief space. This account of the stone is abridged from a paper read by Dr. C. Bruce before the Newcastle Society of Antiquaries. Other antiquities have also been discovered, among which are a most perfect specimen of a Roman hand lamp, and a small male figure, carved in white sandstone.

Page 172.

KIRKBAMPTON PARISH.

Drainage: Great improvement has been effected by draining. The ground is for the most part undulating, and running horizontally along the slopes there are, generally, between the superficial and vegetable earth and the clay, at a greater or less depth below it, bands of comparatively loose subsoil, alternating laterally with dense bars impervious to moisture. These bars cause the vegetable earth resting upon them to be more impregnated with water than the vegetable earth resting upon the looser subsoils, and the earlier attempts to drain the soil here being made at a time when the different qualities of subsoils were imperfectly understood, the drains were made underneath what appeared the wettest parts of the surface of the ground, viz., along the dense bars. Such drains were of course of very little use. In or about the year 1800, however, the late Mr. Thomas Hodgson, of Kirkbampton, having accidentally carried a drain up the ascent in one of his fields, and so cut through one of such dense bars therein transversely, observed that the drain so cut was much more effective than the drains he had previously made in the then usual manner, and he, and afterwards his neighbours, acting upon his discovery, introduced the present more effectual and more remunerative system of drainage, which has so largely benefited the parish and neighbourhood.

The moiety spoken of in the account of the church (p. 173) is only a moiety of the tithes of one township, viz., Bampton Little. The rector has had a modus and now has rent charges for the other townships, of which no one else had or has any portion.

KENDAL

In the list of mayors of Kendal at page 846, the following are omitted:—1834, George Forest; 1835, Joseph Swainson.

The receipts and expenditure for the Kendal Poor-law Union for the year ending Lady Day, 1859, were as follow:—

RECEIPTS.—From poor rates, £12,776 7s.; receipts in aid of poor rates, £1,000 4s.; total receipts, £13,806 11s.

EXPENDITURE.—Connected with Relief of the Poor: In maintenance, £5,018 4s.; out-relief, £5,101; maintenance of lunatics, £247 1s.; salaries and ratings of officers, £1,276 11s.; other expenses of or immediately connected with relief, £786 12s.; total relief to the poor, £9,490 8s.—Unconnected with Relief to the Poor: Costs of proceedings at law or in equity, £289 17s.; payments for or towards the county, hundred, or borough rate or police rate, £2,368 4s.; constables' expenses, and cost of proceedings before justices, £136 12s.; payments on account of the registration act, viz. fees to clerk and registrar, money for register offices, books, and forms, £113 3s.; vaccination fees, £63 16s.; expenses allowed in respect of parliamentary or municipal registration, and cost of jury lists, £57 1s. Partly Con- nected and partly Unconnected with Relief to the Poor: Money expended for all other purposes, £930 12s.; total expenditure, £13,884 10s.

Page 376.—The sale of the estates at Frisington, belonging to the late Baroness de Sternberg, has taken place at Whitehaven. The Frisington Parks estate was bought for £9,120, by Mr. S. Lindow, of Cleator; and the Birks estate was purchased by Mr. J. Dixon, of Rheda, the price being £8,200.

Page 10, 2nd column, lines 26 and 27, for "Conventional," read "Conventual."

Page 12, line 5th from bottom, for "1153," read "1135."

Page 17, line 19, for "Haworth," read "Naworth."

Page 580, for "1,971 acres," read "971 acres."

DA
670
C9W5

Whellan, William
The history and topography of the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

ACCOMPANIED BY PHASE BOX

Not wanted in RESC E4 4/86

